They then presented their findings to the conference as a whole. When the conference was over, the prospective students were paired up with students on campus and stayed overnight. After seeing the nightlife at the University, the students attended Open House on Saturday.

"In a nutshell, this weekend hopes to welcome students who want to have a conversation about diversity and think outside the box," Johnson said. "We welcome students who not only want to use their education to make a living, but an impact on society."

Students may register online, providing their hometown, number of guests and intended major so Admissions can work to meet their interests. Admissions encourages students to register, but the staff plans for many walk-ins.

Ellyn Ercolano—The Bucknellian

Freas Hall, shown above, is home to the University's admissions department. Besides handling all applications and interviews, the admissions department also hosts all open houses, designed to give prospectives a glimpse of the University and college life.

Making this Thanksgiving a meaningful holiday for all

By Rajaa Qadri
Writer

It is that time of year. A time abundant with turkeys and pumpkins. A time when we get to see our long-lost cousins. A time when we go home and enjoy a feast. A time that is heartwarming and simply wonderful. Thanksgiving.

Most of us cherish our Thanksgiving memories above those of all other holidays, since the holiday has so much to offer. Turkey, pumpkin pie and cranberry sauce. Uncles, aunts and cousins, family gathered around grandparents, dads and uncles watching football, little kids running around and getting on our nerves, kisses and hugs. It is a day to truly cherish.

But how do most of us actually view Thanksgiving? Is it really a day to give thanks? Is it just another family gathering, or does it offer something more? Is it a chance for us to be thankful for all the blessings we have in our life?

"On Thanksgiving, it is crucial that we are able to get together and thank God for all his wonderful blessings and things that we sometimes take for granted," Candace DePass '10 said. "It is not very often that we take that time and all get together, so it is important that we utilize it."

A glance at Thanksgiving's history helps explain its true purpose . The first Thanksgiving was celebrated in 1621. According to the Web site www.wilstar.com, the pilgrims who sailed to the United States on the Mayflower were originally members of the English Separatist Church. They had fled their homes in England and sailed to Holland to escape religious persecution. While they had more freedom of religion there, they were disappointed with the Netherlands on the whole. Looking for a better life, the Separatists migrated to what is today the United States.

The pilgrims set ground at Plymouth Rock in Massachusetts on Dec. 11, 1620. According to www.wilstar.com, "their first winter was devastating. At the beginning of the following fall, the pilgrims had lost 46 of the original 102 who sailed on the Mayflower. But the harvest of 1621 was a bountiful one. The remaining colonists decided to celebrate with a feast including 91 Indians who had helped the pilgrims survive their first year. It is believed that the pilgrims would not have made it through the year without the help of the natives. The feast was more of a traditional English harvest festival than a true 'thanksgiving' observance. It lasted three days."

Thanksgiving is not just a time to get together with family. It is also a time to help and to give, to bring people together and above all, as the name suggests, to give thanks for all the blessings we have in this take-it-for-granted society.

The colonies did not set an official day for Thanksgiving until October 1777. George Washington declared Thanksgiving a national holiday in 1789.

Since 1789, every U.S. family has been celebrating Thanksgiving on the same day, and it has turned into a beloved holiday. This tradition has always been strange to foreigners. Even here at the University, a lot of international students have no idea what Thanksgiving is. It is important for them to understand the tradition of Thanksgiving, and for the native students it is important to understand the international students' needs.

"Thanksgiving for me, as an international student, started off being another American holiday, kind of like July 4th, but as I spent more time in the U.S., and had the wonderful opportunity to spend Thanksgiving with a family here, I realized that while it was mostly celebrated in North America, it really was just a great time for families to spend some time together. I am glad I got a chance to celebrate it too," Tejal Raichura '09 said.

Thanksgiving is not just a time to get together with family. It is also a time to help and to give, to bring people together and above all, as the name suggests, to give thanks for all the blessings we have in this take-it-for-granted society.

Do not just give thanks for the biggest achievements but also for the little things. For starters, be thankful for the food put on your table every day and for your health while keeping in mind those who are not as healthy. Give thanks for your cozy bed and thank the wonderful people who are around us on whom we can count.

This Thanksgiving, while enjoying a wonderful time with your cousins and eating delicious food, do not forget to give thanks for everything you may have taken for granted over the year.

Reaching out to those less fortunate

University students fulfill Christmas wishes through The Giving Tree

By Katie Steele
Contributing Writer

The holiday spirit is spreading across campus early this year as students, faculty and staff participate in the Giving Tree community service project, sponsored by the Office of Community and Volunteer Services, by purchasing gifts for needy children and adults in local communities.

A tree set up in the Elaine Langone Center bears paper tags detailing the gender, name, age and desired gift of a child or an adult in need.

The instructions on the tags tell participants to buy the gift, wrap it (the Bookstore carries wrapping paper) and either return it to the table by the Giving Tree between 11 a.m. and 1 p.m. on Nov. 27 or return it to room 211 in the Langone Center. Gifts are distributed to various organizations on Dec. 3, when the project ends.

The simple gift requests are items most people take for granted, like clothes, shoes and CDs. Bonnie P., 50, wants a phone card and Eugene K., 57, wants cologne, aftershave and body spray.

Many of the requests do not require a trip off campus. Sweat suits and novelty T-shirts, for example, are sold in the campus bookstore.

Other gifts can be purchased in Market Street stores such as CVS and Brushstrokes Gallery Art Supplies.

If students need transportation off campus to buy gifts, they can utilize the weekly shuttles to Wal-Mart on Friday nights and to the Susquehanna Valley Mall on Saturdays.

Students worried about the cost involved should consider getting together with friends to buy a gift. If members of a sports team, residence hall or Greek organization want to give George, 12, a very special holiday season, they can get together and buy him a few gifts. He is not very picky: he asked for "anything."

For many adults and children, these will be the only gifts they will receive during the holiday season.

Undoubtedly, they will appreciate your gifts. It can be stressful for families during the holidays if they do not have the resources to do anything special. Imagine the look of relief, excitement and gratitude on a mother's face as she watches her young son open an unexpected gift.

Molly Lewis '07 is the student chairperson for the Giving Tree.

"In the holiday season, it is sometimes easy to forget about those less fortunate than us, and I think it is a great way to promote giving and assistance to [such people] in the local communities," Lewis said. "It is such a great project and, when it's all over, everyone who participates in the Bucknell community will be able to know that he or she put a smile on someone's face this holiday season."

According to Amy Badal, assistant dean of students, who assists with the project, students, faculty and staff donated over 1,500 gifts worth $23,000 last year. She expects the project to be just as successful this year.

"Approximately 600 local community members will benefit from the gift drive this year. Thirteen agencies will be served, including Union County Community Services Center, Children's Choice, ... The Salvation Army, Milton YMCA, ... Danville State Hospital and Essex Place," Badal said.

Badal said participants have been very generous in the past.

"The program emphasizes the spirit of giving," Badal said. "Bucknell students, faculty and staff ... often purchase more items for an individual than the gift requested."

The annual Giving Tree project demonstrates the University's involvement in the community and its commitment to assisting neighboring districts. It also strengthens the University's relationship with nearby volunteer organizations.

Most importantly, the project provides members of the University community with a simple way to use their time and resources to make a positive impact.

Ellyn Ercolano—The Bucknellian

The Giving Tree, located by the downhill entrance of the Elaine Langone Center, is "decorated" with tags of local people's names and their christmas wishes. Students can take a tag and make a less fortunate's person's wishes come true for the holidays.

Chefs whip up delicious dishes in this year's Greek competition

By Sam Kantor
Contributing Writer

If you attended the Greek Iron Chef competition Sunday at the Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity house, you witnessed an exciting, and quite delicious, event.

For those of you who are unfamiliar with the idea of the Food Network's "Iron Chef," it is a cooking contest among chefs to make the most mouth-watering meal they can muster.

The Greek Iron Chef competition, only in its second year at the University, already established itself as a tradition worth keeping on campus.

"We had nine fraternity chefs cooking, as well as Public Safety making homemade donuts," said Leah Gittelman '08, community service and philanthropy chair for the Panhellenic Council. "For the fraternities that unfortunately do not have chefs, as well as the sororities, they actively participated by donating the salads, desserts and paper products."

David Quinn '08, the Interfraternity Council (IFC) community service chair, shed light on the improvements since last year's competition.

"We solved our biggest problem from last year, which was having enough food for everyone who paid for a ticket," Quinn said.

According to David Myers '07, the vice president (external) for the IFC and also a member of Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity, 1,029 tickets were sold.

Gittelman said the event was very popular.

"From the start of the event at 5 p.m. we had people lining up at the door waiting to come in," Gittelman said. "We had a continuous flow of people throughout the night until we closed the doors at 7:15 p.m. I think the event was a wonderful success."

Quinn agreed.

"I even heard someone call the event 'legit,'" Quinn said. "I felt that everyone had a good time."

Let us not forget this was a serious competition. So who brought home the bacon? The supper supremacist was Bob Hayes, Sigma Alpha Epsilon's chef.

"[He won] with his shrimp scampi pasta and chicken pot pie," Quinn said. "However, Public Safety's donuts were definitely the most talked about dish of the night."

"It was truly a communal event and students dropped their particular Greek or non-Greek affiliations to come together and dine in a unique experience."
—David Myers '07

These were not the only dishes lucky attendees feasted on.

"The dishes ranged from Chicken Bongo and crab cakes to cannoli and roasted pork," Myers said.

Myers said he will treasure many memories from the experience.

"I think that one of the most memorable moments ... was when I looked around the packed dining room ... and saw Greeks of all different organizations and other member of the Bucknell community intermingling," Myers said. "It was truly a communal event and students dropped their particular Greek or non-Greek affiliations to come together and dine in a unique experience."

According to those who attended, the best part about the event was not actually the food, but the cause it benefitted. Karen Landis, assistant director of fraternity and sorority affairs and the advisor for the event, explained the Million Penny Project and said just how significantly the Greek Iron Chef Competition helped its current community service organization, a soup kitchen in Milton called Community Harvest.

"The Million Penny Project is a commitment of our Greeks from year to year to raise $10,000 to benefit a local community service organization," Landis said. "After expenses, [the Greek Iron Chef Competition] raised approximately $3,500. ... It was really great to see so many different organizations come together to enjoy a fun night while raising money for such a great cause."

Gittelman, thrilled with the competition's success, said she would change only a few aspects of the event for next year.

"I'd like to see the rest of the Bucknell Community involved," Gittelman said. "We seemed to draw the majority of the Greek community, but I'd love to see non-Greeks at the event to show them all the good we are doing."

The Greek Iron Chef competition gets As across the board. Not only was it a night of fun, but also a chance to help the community. Throughout the night, the words "huge success" were said multiple times to describe the event.

So if for some reason you were too busy to attend the memorable event, make sure you find the time next year. You will not be disappointed, and neither will your appetite.

One chance left to write this semester.
Write for Feats in issue 12!
E-mail jjf018@

Another tantalizing edition brought to you by ...

Ms. Love and the Bubble

Dear Ms. O,

My boyfriend and I have great sexual chemistry but have decided not to have sex until we are both ready. So I can only get him off by oral sex, which he enjoys.

However, when he pleasures me orally, it feels good but doesn't get me off. I tell him how good it feels, and we are a very open couple and feel comfortable telling each other what we want. But I don't know what to tell him so I can have an orgasm, since he is the first guy I've been very intimate with and don't know much in that area. He even feels self-conscious about his abilities despite my approval of his efforts, so to speak.

The only time I can sometimes get off is through dry sex because the clitoris is being stimulated in a different way than when he gives me oral sex or tries to finger me.

Any tips on how to improve our sex life and how to pleasure each other?

- Get Me Off Gal

Dear Get Me Off Gal,

First, let me say, the fact that you can get off during dry sex speaks very well for your orgasming abilities. So don't give up.

It's good that you two can discuss your sex life openly and that you know your limits. It will help in this process of discovery. And as you've found out, you can still be intimate without engaging in intercourse.

Here's a few tips to help get you on your way to oral ecstasy.

The first suggestion is the most important one: stop stressing. If you spend the entire time focusing on trying to reach climax; it probably won't happen. And if you feel the pressure to do so, you'll only stress yourself out.

Keep in mind that it's likely it will take more time to get you off than it will take to get him off.

You need to relax and be able to get lost in the sensation. You need to focus on the moment, what feels good, what turns you on, and truly get into the sexual act. If you're obsessing over the end result, you can't enjoy the ... uh ... ride.

Of course this tactic is much easier said than done.

Start by explaining to him that it's not all about the orgasm—you should enjoy the entire experience. However, both of you want to discover the way to get you off. It will take some exploration.

Masturbation can be a very useful tool. If you think about it, no one knows how to get you off better than you do.

You can tell exactly which spots to hit, how fast or slow to go, and just generally what feels good. You are in control. So try a little self-experimentation the next few times your hands wander down below, and pay attention to what works for you. That way, you will know what you want and can integrate it into your sexual partnership.

Once you get a sense of what it takes to get you off, you can tell or even show your guy. A little guidance never hurts. He will probably love it since he's so eager to use his talents to get you to orgasm.

Try to get him to duplicate the way you move your hands when you masturbate. If he can hit the same spots at the same speed, there's potential. Also, if you don't know exactly what will do it for you, but something he's doing feels really good, let him know. Communication is key.

Another outlet to try is pleasuring each other simultaneously. This way you'll both have a task at hand to focus on, which takes away the immediate pressure of getting you to orgasm.

You can enjoy the sensations you are receiving while at the same time focusing on pleasuring your man. He can do the same for you, and you can both take your time enjoying the experience.

It may take you two some time to get your orgasms down. Don't give up.

Besides, you can have a lot of fun while you're figuring it all out.

Just remember, practice makes perfect.

~Ms. O

E-mail me your questions at MsOintheBubble@yahoo.com or send them through campus mail to Ms. O, The Bucknellian, C-3952. All authors of questions will remain anonymous.

South Asian Students Association celebrates culture

By Mallory Coup
Contributing Writer

Larison Dining Hall was transformed into a multicultural experience full of exploding flavors and a spicy blend of cuisine and dance on Nov. 4.

The event, hosted by the South Asian Students Association (SASA), was intended to allow students with connections to various South Asian countries to show off their beautifully colored traditional dresses and to give their audience a taste of the beauty of their culture.

The event showcased a unique blend of savory dishes, native dances and even included information about each country in the region. It was catered by India Pavilion and featured dishes such as Tandoori Chicken and Saag Paneer. For dessert, the audience enjoyed Gulab Jamun, a mixture of milky dough served hot, as they sat back and watched the "stick dance," displaying the more humorous side of South Asian dance.

Despite the impressive turnout for the dinner, there are still many people who do not know what kind of cultural events SASA and other cultural organizations offer the University campus. Besides the dinner, SASA also presents a fashion show every year.

"The event is something that I will enjoy going to for the next couple years. I love seeing what kinds of things students with a more international focus put together," faculty member Maureen Merluzzi said.

The majority of the audience consisted of faculty or administration and a handful of students. However, this does not seem to be a result of lack of interest. Since the event does diverge from the more mainstream events on campus, it may be harder to spread awareness and grab students' attention to attend. Students may not realize how strong diversity is on this campus already without highly publicizing these kinds of multicultural events.

"When I walked into Larison, I had no idea that there was such a strong South Asian cultural presence on campus. I wish I would have known about this event last year," said Stephanie Rosen '09.

Both SASA and the Bucknell African Students Association (BASA) have held dinners within the past month, featuring delicious cuisine and a much more valuable cultural experience than Bostwick Cafeteria. Hopefully, with the stress for diversity on the University's campus increasing, students might take a second look at what students have to offer already.

Rajaa Qadri—The Bucknellian

Vibrant traditional garments were donned by members of SASA during its annual dinner, held Nov. 4 in Larison Dining Hall. These brightly-colored robes accentuated the traditional dances and added to the colorful decorations at the dinner.

Illustration by Brianna DelValle—The Bucknellian

Traditions, camaraderie bring Pakistani student closer to home

By Rajaa Qadri
Writer

Coming to Bucknell, the biggest fear I had was missing home too much. Originally from Pakistan and having lived in the Washington metropolitan area for as long as I have lived in the U.S., I had always been surrounded with people of my community and those I could relate to.

For those of you who do not know, the Washington metropolitan area is very diverse in terms of ethnicity and backgrounds. My high school was a fairly varied school where you could find people from almost all types of backgrounds.

In addition to celebrating all the U.S. cultural events, I have always been very enthusiastic in celebrating my own religious and cultural occasions. I remember every year being all excited about the Eid-ul-Fitr, the end of Ramadan celebration, then going out with Indian friends to celebrate Diwali. Coming to the University and knowing about the homogonous student body it is composed of, I thought it was the end of my celebrations and all I would do from then on was to call and talk to my family and friends on such occasions.

I was told there are certain religious and cultural organizations on campus, but considering the lack of diversity that I had been told of, I never had much expectation from any such organization. Half-heartedly, I decided to join the South Asian Students Association (SASA).

With a total of 15 students in the organization, I did not expect anything extravagant organized by it. I learned that SASA organizes an annual dinner with good Indian food and some cultural dances.

At the meetings, we started discussing about how can we get started with the preparations of the event and before I knew it, I was enthusiastically planning for the dances and giving my opinions about what should be on the menu for the dinner.

Along with arranging the food and a slide show presentation of all the South Asian countries the students represent on campus, we prepared three dances: one classical Indian dance, performed by women in traditional Indian clothes, "Bhangra" dance, performed by the SASA men, and "dandia," a popular stick dance in the state of Gujarat on the western side of India, performed by both the men and women.

We practiced a lot for the dances so that we can produce something special and unique. I was surprised to see the willingness and enthusiasm during the practices among not only the South Asian students but also from the U.S., Chinese, Japanese and Turkish students who are in the organization.

The dance practices not only gave us an opportunity to learn and share about our culture more but also helped us get to know each other better. I formed good friendships with the other members that I would not have been able to form without having joined this club. I am sure this is true with other members as well.

Being the DJ for the boys when they were practicing for their dance was a very interesting and fun experience for me. I must admire the boys for taking the dance from the beginning stages of pathetic steps thrown in together to the end product of perfect synchronization.

In the final days of the practices, the boys presented their dance to the girls and vice versa. Getting all the fun feedback from each side helped us know each other better and the experience turned out not just a preparation for a cultural event but also served as building bridges among dissimilar mind sets and different types of people.

On the day of the event, we started the preparations at 8 a.m. in the morning, decorating Larison Dining Hall, arranging tables for the guests and rehearsing for the dances.

As the event started, we greeted the guests dressed in our traditional gowns.

I was surprised to see so many different types of people showing up.

After dinner, the first performance was by the girls. The boys performed Bhangra after the girls' dance, getting the audience involved as well. Everyone cheered for the "Bhangra Boys." After the Dandiya, we had an open dance floor, inviting all the guests to come and join us in the different types of Indian dances.

Unlike other times when I have celebrated my traditions, teaching other people how to dance and discussing different aspects of my culture was much more exciting and mutually beneficial for all of us, not only for me but also for the other South Asian students as well.

"It was encouraging to see a packed Larison Dining Hall filled with students, faculty and staff who all supported making the event a great success, just like all the other years. Celebrating such a festival, even though I'm thousands of miles away from home, reduces that distance by a great amount. I am glad Bucknell's community is so welcoming and accepting," said Abhay Agarwal '10.

"Celebrating such a festival, even though I'm thousands of miles away from home, reduces that distance by a great amount. I am glad Bucknell's community is so welcoming and accepting."
—Abhay Agarwal '10

Rajaa Qadri—The Bucknellian

SASA members dressed in their traditional gowns for their annual dinner and show on Nov. 4. Audience members learned all about the South Asian countries as they feasted on traditional foods picked by the members of SASA.

Rajaa Qadri—The Bucknellian

Tugce Ersoz '10, Rajaa Qadri '10 and Palwasha Siddiqi take a break during the SASA dinner on Nov. 4. Traditional dances from members' countries were performed to show the University community specific aspects of their culture.

Rajaa Qadri—The Bucknellian

After weeks of hard training, the boys have mastered their moves and are seen relaxing after a successful performance. The "Bhangra Boys" earned their name when they performed a traditional Indian dance at the SASA dinner.

The Bucknellian

BUCKNELL UNIVERSITY. LEWISBURG, PENNSYLVANIA

Volume 138, Number 12 | Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue | www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

The Bucknellian celebrates 110 years

MONDAY, JANUARY 21, 1918

WAR CLAIMS FIRST OF BUCKNELL'S SONS

SGT. REGINALD S. NEWBERRY DIES AT CAMP.

SUCCUMBS TO PNEUMONIA AT ALLENTOWN CAMP

Was Member of Ambulance Unit Formed at Bucknell Last Spring. —Belonged to the Sigma Chi Fraternity.

Sergeant Reginald S. Newberry, Bucknell Unit, Section 524, United States Ambulance Camp, died on Sunday night, January 13, at the Allentown hospital, a victim of pneumonia.

Sergeant Newberry was a member of the class of 1917, in the civil engineering course. He had about determined to accept an offer to enter the oriental service of the Standard Oil Company and go to China, when the call came for volunteers and he enlisted in the ambulance corps.

Sergeant Newberry married Miss Ethelwynne Thorp, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. A. Thorp, of Massaquoa, N. J., last October at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. George C. Newberry, at Point Pleasant, N. J. Two weeks ago the bride came to Allentown to remain until he departed overseas, stopping at a home near the camp.

Sergt. Newberry was taken sick Monday, January 7 and on Tuesday morning was admitted to the camp infirmary. Pneumonia developing rapidly he was that afternoon removed to the Allentown hospital. The origin of his illness was a cold he caught when he marched without any coat thru a driving rain on a hike, home from Retzwood and it fell to his lot to go on guard immediately for the entire night without any chance to change his wet clothes. The camp sent the body home with an escort which attend-

NEW STADIUM WILL BE STARTED IMMEDIATELY

CONTRACTORS ARE ALREADY ENGAGED TO BEGIN THE WORK.

GYM WILL BE STARTED ALSO

Will Include Baseball, Cage, Track And Other Modern Facilities.

The decision to provide adequate athletic equipment has been awaited for years by those Bucknellians, who recognized this long standing need. A great wave of approbation will greet the announcement, that the Athletic Council in conjunction with a committee of Trustees, have approved general plans, for the erection of a fine stadium, and a new gymnasium, in the near wuture.

These improvements will be located on Seventh Street, between the Lewisburg Cemetery, and the back road. The plans call for foot-ball, and baseball fields, a twenty foot track, with a two twenty yards straight away, and tennis courts, for intercollegiate contests; stands with sufficient seating capacity o meet our present needs, and ample provision for our future growth; dressing rooms showers tank indoor

Appeared February 6, 1922

The Orange and Blue.

BUCKNELL UNIVERSITY.

VOL. I. LEWISBURG, PA., TUESDAY, MARCH 9, 1897. No. 1.

THE JUNIOR BALL.

The Class of '98 of Bucknell Hold a Successful Dance.

When the class of '98, leaving behind them those mellow Sophomore days, was launched into the Junior year, by diligence in study probably the first question that agitated the minds of the various members was the one relative to a Junior Ball. Although much opposition to the maintenance of this precedent, established by '97, was manifest, yet the dancing portion of the class undertook to meet it in every honorable way and, if possible, arrest that fallacious idea that a Junior Ball is an infringement upon the moral atmosphere which so auspiciously surrounds our own Bucknell.

It is unpleasant as well as unfitting that we recount the many remarks thrown in the way of the movement to impede its progress and arrest its culmination. For in social circles at Bucknell, the Junior Ball has proven itself to be the leading event and mark the most important epoch in the social life of every class of this institution. This fact, however, was clearly evidenced on Feb. 25, when the Armory, filled with merriment and delight, was the scene of the long-looked for Junior Ball, arranged under the direction of Chas. W. Clement, David Hayes Elliott, Levi T. Fetzer, Simon W. Gilpin, Walter L. Hill, Andrew A. Leiser, Jr., Bruce H. Trimmer and Geo. T. Ritter.

The [illegible] were present, Mrs. [illegible] ed and continued until 2 a. m., when the orchestra rendered, in waltz time, "Home Sweet Home" and all returned to their respective abodes, realizing that an enjoyable time had been experienced on the occasion of the Junior Ball. The Lettan and Chappell orchestra of Williamsport, which has grown into such favor among the society people of Lewisburg and the University, furnished the music and it is needless to comment upon the perfection of their various renderings as their merits can be attested by anyone who has ever danced to their music.

There were, in all, over 60 couples present. The following from out of town were in attendance: From Philadelphia, Messrs. Smith, Wilkinson and Robb; from Reading, Mr. Ermentrout; from State College, Messrs. Biester, Teas and Albert; from Halls, Mr. Slifer; from Pittsburg, Miss Eggert; from Danville, Mr. Deen and Mr. Kelly; from Williamsport, Miss Housteu, Messrs. Koser and Furst; from Shamokin, Miss John; from Bloomsburg, Miss Reber; from Sunbury, Misses Wolverton, Reed, Thatcher and Bloom, Messrs. Fegley and Wolverton; from Milton, Misses Datesman, (2) Misses McCleery (2), John Smith, Mr. Datesman; from Watsontown, Misses Montgomery Dunkle, Messinger, Leiser (2), Morgan, and Godchild; from Bradford, Mr. Wagner.

BUCKNELL TALENT IN DEMAND.

The Once a Famous Athl[illegible] Other [illegible]

STATE COLLEGE DEFEATED.

Our Team Adds Another Jewel to its Crown of Achievements.

The first of a series of championship games between State College and Bucknell University resulted in the defeat of the former last Friday evening, in the Tustin gymnasium, the score being 24 to 4. The gymnasium was tastily decorated with orange and blue bunting and also with the colors of State College—blue and white. The audience was large, considering the inclement weather and also the slushy condition of the pavements and campus. The game was called at 7.55 with the following line up:

State		Bucknell
Lockwood	Defense	Catterall
Pearse		Bevan
Clinton	Centre	Weymouth
Stephenson	Attack	Mulkie
Fulton		Smith

Halves-20 minutes.

OFFICIALS.

Referee—A. R. Garner, Bucknell.

Umpire—Dr. Newton, U. P., '94.

The game opened with lively playing and four minutes after the game had been called, Bevan made a goal, followed in rapid succession with two more goals made by Smith and Bevan. During the first half Bevan made two goals, Smith three and Wey[illegible] Fulton, of State [illegible] goal in the first [illegible]

PI BETA PHI RECEPTION.

A Pan Hellenic Reception at the Home of Dr. William Leiser.

Pennsylvania Beta chapter of the Pi Beta Phi fraternity entertained the members of different secret organizations of Bucknell, at the cosy home of Dr. William Leiser, on last Friday evening.

Mrs. Leiser received, assisted by Mrs. Lincoln Hully and Miss Allen. The drawing rooms were tastefully decorated with the emblems of the fraternities, while the colors of Pi Beta Phi, blue and wine, were conspicuous everywhere.

The fraternities having representation during the evening were, Phi Kappa Psi, Sigma Chi, Phi Gamma Delta, Sigma Alpha Epsilon, and Kappa Sigma. The men who represented State College in the basket ball game, early in the evening, were also entertained. The refreshments were exceptionally elaborate and well prepared. During the evening selections were rendered by the musical organizations of the different fraternities interspersed with college and fraternity yells, which added greatly to the enjoyment of the evening.

Too much credit cannot be given to the ladies of Pi Beta Phi for the manner in which they entertained the Greek letter boys.

At twelve o'clock the guests took their departure, having many kindly rememberances of an enjoyable evening passed at a Pan H[illegible]

By Catherine Heverling
Editor-in-Chief

In 1897, when the first issue of the University's student newspaper rolled off the presses, it looked a lot different from what you hold in your hands today.

The newspaper was originally called The Orange and Blue until it was renamed The Bucknellian in 1915. It began as a weekly broadsheet, as it is today, but the paper spent some time in the '50s, '60s and '70s as a tabloid and was printed twice weekly on Tuesdays and Fridays.

In its 110-year history, The Bucknellian reported the effects of local and national events on the University.

In 1936 The Bucknellian published a special issue covering the flood that inundated the area in March of that year. Lewisburg and the campus community saw history repeat itself again and again, during Hurricane Agnes in 1972, the flood of 1996 and when Hurricane Ivan rained on campus in 2004 (see page A8).

In addition to reporting the news, The Bucknellian acted as a forum for opinion. Bucknellian photographers captured moments of rebellion and demonstration, such as bra burnings and sit-ins against the draft in past decades (see A4-5). The Bucknellian also lent its pages to student opinion articles during national events like the Watergate scandal and the O.J. Simpson trial.

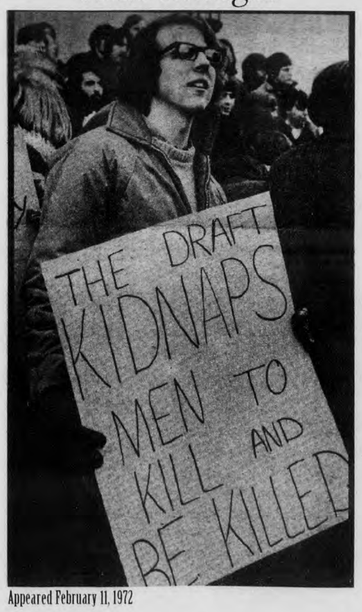
The definition of appropriate content has evolved in . In the 1950s, for example, the paper published "Girl of the Week" (below), a popular column in which a fraternity honored a female student based on "personality, good looks and frequent appearances at house functions." The paper also announced pinnings, engagements and weddings in a column called "Slightly Personal" (below) into the '50s.

Similar to our current column "Ms. O: Love and the Bubble," students wrote in to The Bucknellian with their sex-related inquiries in a column called "The Doctor's Bag" (see A6) in the 1960s.

While The Bucknellian strove to be a consistent source of news, opin-

See CELEBRATE page B2

Draft reform brings vital changes



Appeared February 11, 1972

Slightly Personal

by Mollie Edwards

GIRL OF THE WEEK

June Burns is wearing the Theta Xi pin of John Baker, Amherst College, Mass.....Betsy Conklin is pinned to Dave Ackerheim, Sigma Alpha Epsilon.....Joan MacBain is wearing the Phi Gamma Delta pin of Bob Irwin.....Helen Harrison is pinned to Dick Brooks, Sigma Alpha Epsilon.....Betty Quick is wearing the Kappa Sigma pin of Bunker Hill of Lehigh .....Bobbie Levin is wearing the Sigma Alpha Mu pin of Temple.....Marianne Ettinger '49 is pinned to Ed Thomas.

Edwards

RING ON HER FINGER

The Rev. Mr. and Mrs. McDonald of Rochester, N. Y. announce the en[illegible] daughter, Jean '50 to Charles Cantine '50.

Mrs. David Philby of Poughkipsee, N. Y. announces the engagement of her daughter, Dorris to Alton Marshall '50 of Trenton, N. J.

AWAY FOR THE WEEKEND

June Burns spent the weekend at Amherst College, Mass.....Rose Hostetler attended her brother's wedding in Cleveland, Ohio.

INITIATIONS

Delta Zeta sorority initiated Doris Fetts and Betty Hudson, Saturday, October 21.

SEEN ON CAMPUS

Mr. and Mrs. John Lose.....Betsy Koch '50.....Janet Mardaga '50..... Liz Bryant '50.....Patricia Cooke '48 .....Mr. and Mrs. Bob Hunter..... Hatch Arnold '49 ..... Mr. and Mrs. Richard Atherly ..... Mr. and Mrs. Howie Bullock.....Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Ziegler ..... Mr. and Mrs. Irv Williams '50.....Jean Bailey '50..... Mr. and Mrs. Cliff Gross ..... Jane Kreider '50.....

Appeared November 2, 1950.

Freshman Girls Are Restricted

Dating Rules Are Changed to Reduce Privileges of Fresh Women

Dating rules for freshmen women have been changed, it was announced last night at Women's Student Government meeting, to allow them to date during the week only to movies on the hill, artist course productions, and student church.

Freshman may date at the following times:

Weekdays, morning and afternoon until 6 p. m., and Sunday until 5 p. m. This will include Chapel.

Friday and Saturday nights until 10 p. m., unless there is a special function or a permission is taken.

During the week for movies on the hill, artist course productions, and student church, not including interest groups. One half-hour's time will be allowed the girl to return from each of these affairs.

It has been felt by upperclassmen, the administration, and the freshmen themselves that the allowed number of dates on week nights was too great, Betty Naumann, president of W. S. G. A., announced. It was believed, she added, that there has been too much child of elephants from scholarship to social activities.

Appeared March 9, 1939.

Rosemary Clooney, Columbia Recording Artist, To Be Senior Centennial Ball Extra Attraction

Rosemary Clooney, beautiful Columbia recording star and former featured vocalist of Tony Pastor will bring her "soft, effortless and sultry" style as described by LOOK magazine, to the "Senior Centennial Ball" March 31.

With her currently popular versions of "The Kid's A Dreamer", backed with "Why Don't You Haul Off And Love Me" Rosemary has climbed steadily on the popular vocalist list and is the added attraction promised by the dance committee, it was announced today.

In the third annual disc jockey poll in Billboard Magazine, Rosemary Clooney was voted the number one female band vocalist in the country.

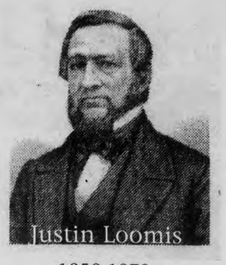
From the recent Ed Sullivan's "Toast of the Town" television show where she appeared as guest star, she hopped into other guest appearances recently including the "Camel Caravan" with VVaughn Monroe, the "Arthur Godfrey Radio Show" and others.

Quoting Buddy Williams' former boss, the late Glenn Miller, "Buddy Williams is one of the greatest arrangers, and musical minds in America", completes the report from the Centennial Committee this week.

Appeared March 16, 1950

Stephen Taylor

Prior to 1851

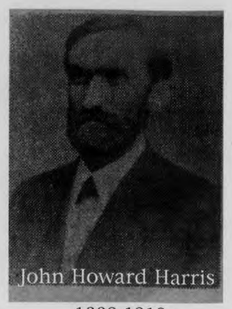


Justin Loomis

1858-1879

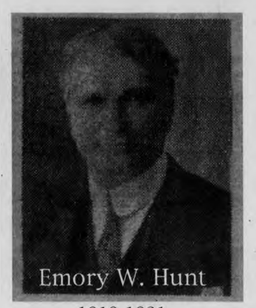
David Jayne Hill

1879-1888



John Howard Harris

1889-1919



Emory W. Hunt

1919-1931

Homer P. Rainey

1931-1935

Arnaud C. Marts

* 1935-1938

1938-1945

Herbert L. Spencer

1945-1949

Documenting the highs and lows of University history

Bucknellian prints last issue

Lack of editor forces newspaper to close

1983

By Julie Eliason

The editorial board of The Bucknellian voted unanimously to close the newspaper at its meeting last Sunday evening, primarily because no one had applied for the position of editor. The closing due to lack of an editor will be the first in the paper's history.

Nancy Campbell '85, editor, said, "I cannot blame students for not wanting to undertake the responsibilities and repercussions an editor undertakes. There is truly no incentive other than the intangible, which may or may not make up for the academic and personal losses the hours and pressures editing the Bucknellian takes."

The Bucknellian editor spends upwards of 50 hours each week working on the paper, according to Campbell. In addition, the editor carries a full course load and receives neither college credit nor financial compensation at present.

This has not always been the case. [...] The paper had difficulty finding an editor because for many years editors were elected because of their fraternity affiliations rather than academic and professional qualifications.

In 1925, to combat that problem, the University Board of Trustees declared The Bucknellian the laboratory for the journalism division then in operation on campus.

Bucknell offered several journalism courses at that time. In addition to such courses, the trustees provided small scholarships for those students holding major editorial positions.

Monetary rewards probably ended following World War II, according to University President Dennis O'Brien. Many schools including Bucknell, switched from awarding merit-based scholarships to giving money based on financial need.

Campbell said, "Other universities and colleges have systems whereby the editor of the college press receives a semester's scholarship, takes no classes in addition to the editorship or is paid a salary. These practices do not detract from the academic worth of such schools. Why Bucknell cannot establish something for Bucknellian, as this will upgrade its quality and keep it high."

> "I am advocating an infusion of academics into The Bucknellian, as this will upgrade its quality and keep it high."
> —Nancy Campbell '85, former Editor-in-Chief of The Bucknellian

Academic administrators have been considering her proposal, according to John Dunlop, dean of student life and adviser to The Bucknellian. Dunlop stresses, however, that "what we are trying to do now is to simply devise a stopgap measure" to keep the paper going.

"It would be a one-time kind of thing to save the paper and explore how we might meet future needs." Dunlop feels that "if the paper cannot resume operation, it will be a significant loss to the University."

The University faculty and administration read the paper in large numbers, according to Dunlop, who notes that the newspaper is the "only medium of communication open to all three levels of the University."

Dunlop "thinks it's a real shame that the paper has to 'close down.' He points out that The Bucknellian has a sufficient staff and a good staff."

Campbell said that "upperlevel staff members, primarily section editors, should also be given at least one course credit, again, under several faculty members. Section editors put in at least 30-40 hours each week and are in much the same predicament as the editor. The editor simply has to take more time to coordinate efforts."

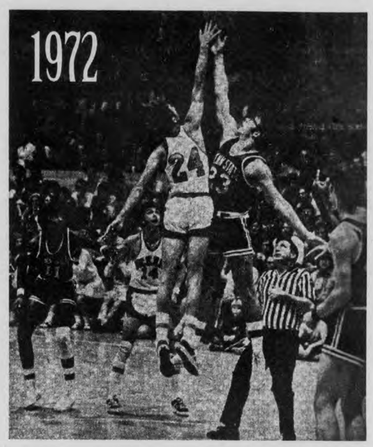
The paper did shut down for a period of two weeks in the fall of 1981, but the problem then was lack of staff, not lack of an editor.

Campbell stresses that her experience editing The Bucknellian has not been negative. "I am simply very disappointed there there is no one to take my place and that the administration has let things come to a crisis point before taking any action."

Campbell feels that "if the paper is to survive, it must be the students it asks the most from is beyond me."

Steven Medoff '84, former editor of The Bucknellian, said that "Bucknell can support a high-quality student newspaper, but the University has to be willing to help." He said that the "biggest responsibility for the paper's problems lies with the University." He feels at least two course credits should be given for the editorship, as it is a full-time job.

Campbell has proposed a two credit course plan monitored by several faculty members: "I am not advocating just giving the editor credits and not treating The Bucknellian academically. I am advocating an infusion of academics into The



Format altered to eliminate dirty rushing

1978

By Betsy Berger

The Interfraternity Council of Bucknell University began their 1978 Rush activities Thursday, September 14. Several aspects of this year's schedule reflect the I.F.C.'s reassessment of previous years' schedules and objectives.

Foremost among the changes in the schedules from previous years is the initial formal rush date. This year formal rush began two weeks prior to the initial rush date of last year. This alteration in the schedule reflects the IFC's belief that all freshman men should be able to participate in fraternity functions within a relatively short time following the start of the fall school term. According to Jim Henkelman, president of the IFC, this participation in fraternity activities would help eliminate possible stereotyping of the fraternities by freshmen and "dirty rushing" by fraternity members.

Other aspects of the 1978 rush schedule resulted from the IFC's belief that freshman men should be able to visit each of Bucknell's fourteen fraternities, for equal periods of time, during formal rush. Last year, as in previous years, downhill fraternities began their formal rush a week earlier than did the uphill fraternities in order to compensate for the inconvenience of downhill fraternities' locations. According to Henkelman, however, this compensation did not appear to create an equitable system in the long run. Therefore, this year formal rush began on the same day for both uphill and downhill fraternities, shortening formal rush by one week.

In order to further facilitate this equitable system and scheduling, the fraternities have been organized into four geographical groups. Each freshman men's hall group is scheduled to visit a geographical group of four different fraternities each night, during the four nights of formal rush, for approximately one half hour. In addition, all freshman men are encouraged to visit as many fraternities as they wish during informal rush, which begins Friday, September 29.

Hours policies highlight student-trustee parleys

By Kim Scheppele

Topics of discussion for the Sunday morning trustee-student meetings have been determined.

The topics and questions were submitted by those students selected to meet with the trustees and are divided according to the three group areas which are academic affairs, non-academic aspects of campus life and governance.

1971

The group dealing with academic affairs will discuss the present grade structure and alternatives such as a pass-fail system...

Altering the size of the University will be considered, taking into account academic reputation of the University and recruitment of faculty.

Enlarging the school of engineering and revision of the engineering curriculum to permit more electives will be studied...

Other topics include the desirability of a Black Studies Program and sensitivity to the black experience on the part of the University community, and the possibility of beginning a work/study program for credit toward a degree by working on The Bucknellian, Cap and Dagger, WVBU, etc.

Topics to be discussed by the group dealing with non-academic aspects of campus life will originate from a definition of what this area includes and will branch out to incorporate the role of the residence hall in education as well as the pros and cons of co-residential living and open visitation hours...

Inflation – The battle to make ends meet

By Bob Owen

University costs have risen about as much as everything else has.

Student wages will on the whole increase to reflect the new minimum wage law (presently vetoed, but expected to pass eventually). This means about $1.80 for night clerks and other similar positions, and $2.00 for other minor functionaries.

1973

Coal for heat and generating is rising in price. Gasoline for University vehicles has climbed. Food services will cost about 15 per cent more, not all of these increases were anticipated.

In some cases, the University is being forced into buying higher grades of products because lower-priced lines are being discontinued due to the scarcity of raw materials.

Now the big news. The University has a three-month supply of toilet tissue. After that, there is no guarantee of delivery due to the scarcity of pulp. Please take appropriate measures.

Faculty salaries are not expected to jump above anticipated levels. Recent increases to returning faculty (including merit raises) will come in at about 8 per cent. This is not across-the-board, but it will put Bucknell in a much better comparative position with faculty salaries at our frame-of-reference institutions (where Bucknell has never ranked very high).

Will charges rise? You bet your life they will. Nothing is more certain than death, taxes, and annual prices increases at private universities.

Long-range forecasts had made provisions for up to 3 per cent annual inflation which would manifest itself in an annual increased charge of $180 a year for the next five years (the breakdown being $130 for tuition and $50 for room and board). With a much larger increase seemingly anticipated in board costs, there doesn't appear to be a way to stay within these predictions.

What alternatives are there to increased charges? Not too many for Bucknell.

One alternative is to increase the size of the student body. In my opinion, it'll never happen. Aside from the attendant problems of housing (more mods), feeding (the cafeteria is now operating at capacity), and increased class loads for professors, the University has committed itself to a maximum size of 3000 undergraduates and 200 graduates students. The additional fees that more students would bring in would not be worth the problems that an enlarged student body would cause.

Could the University tap its reserves?

John Zeller, Vice President for Administration and Finance, stated, "Bucknell does not set anything aside in its budget for depreciation, but uses monies left in the general fund at the end of the year for capital repair and improvements." So much for the reserve idea.

Increased endowments? This appears to be the brightest prospect for the University. Last year, $100,00 was budgeted for the Alumni Fund and $130,000 was collected. This year $150,000 is expected.

However, corporate giving depends on the stock market, which means a dim outlook for an increase of funds from that source. Federal aid to the University will not materialize. And state aid is not possible under present Pennsylvania policies. Trying to change the latter policy is a continuing University pastime.

No plans are currently being discussed to curtail drastically any programs or attempt to hold the line on charges. Mr. Zeller remarked, "I consider our budget to be a 'tight' one."

"New programs and expenditures will necessarily come at the expense of ones already budgeted," the Vice President added.

Some expenditures are out of the University's hands, such as the increase of interest charges on the University Center loan from 7 per cent to 9 3/4 per cent.

In the long run, Bucknell must face many questions. Can we ever look forward to stabilized tuition and fees? Will we price ourselves out of the market as students opt for publicly-subsidized universities? Or face a student body of declining ability? Can the University's financial aid keep pace with tuition rises? Should the college keep our tangential activities because they contribute to the community, or should they be abandoned? Should every activity "pay its own way" or are some worth subsidy from general fees.

And finally, are University community members willing to undertake fundamental changes in their view of what a university should provide, or will they choose to let the cost of a Bucknell education rise forever?

Of interest to preppies

1978

By Harriet Staley

September 1977—the month I discovered that I was a particular breed of Homo sapiens. For the first time (to my knowledge) I was branded with a label, which would follow me throughout the remainder of my days at Bucknell. It has taken me a full year at this place to admit, without fear, shame, and bewilderment that I must, indeed, belong to the phylum known as "preppie" or "preppy" (we are not listed in Webster's.)

Now that I've sorted out my values and tastes, and achieved my true identity, let me explain to the rest of Bucknell's students body, perhaps particularly the freshman class, how to deal with this peculiar earmark, seemingly unique to some Northeastern colleges. The primary idea to keep in mind is not to be offended. I, myself, was anguished, fidning my attire worthy of remark, it having varied very little during the eighteen years before. After all, calling me a preppie seemed to be a comment on my family, friends, my entire upbringing and way of life, none of which I had ever considered unusual. Suddenly, my shoes, pants, shirts, hair and even my striped belts were categorized, and I found only my underwear unclassified (still open to debate, I guess).

I contemplated a change of image early in the game, but bagged that idea out of stubbornness. Next, I considered discoloring the soles of my topsiders, discarding all straightlegged pants, amputating all alligators, and styling my hair. These I also decided against, out of laziness.

All through the Fall semester, I lived in discomfort until I returned home for Thanksgiving. Gathered with my high school buddies at a local bar, I found, to my amazement and tremendous relief, that we were all preppies at our respective schools. I wasn't unique, after all! The overall consensus of my hometown contemporaries was to hold fast to our traditions and to keep our heads above our collars. I certainly planned to institute a new attitude at Bucknell. Once I returned to Lewisburg, I sat down to make a list of the guidelines, designed to remind myself of my resolution and to share with my roommate, who had also acquired my title (ain't it funny how freshmen get paired off!). For those who may be in a similar dilemma, here they are:

Don't deny your unextravagant and conservative leanings by claiming you never went to prep school, and you even supported McGovern in '72. Of course it's true, but no one will ever believe you.

Don't burn all your clothes—they serve the purposes common to all vestments—and just as well.

Don't curse out your mother for how she dressed you all your life. Remember, she's a preppie too, and doesn't know any better.

Don't be intimidated by those who do not dress as you do. They must learn to accept your breed.

Don't transfer. You will never find a school with more of us.

Don't avoid other preppies. Most are very nice, like you.

Learn to take pride in your preppiness, and ignore critic. Bright greens, yellows, and pinks are fine colors.

Lastly, remember you are a threatened species. Only you can eventually perpetuate the breed. Above all, keep your L.L. Bean catalogue up to date, and begin to stock up on turtlenecks and crewnecked sweaters. Your fellow preppies will be with you all the way!

Bucknell ranked first by college presidents

1983

By Stephen J. Allocco

Bucknell University is the number one "comprehensive university" in the east. According to a recently published survey in U.S. News and World Report, the University ranked highest among 368 top undergraduate institutions east of the Mississippi.

Comprehensive schools were characterized by the magazine as offering "professional programs such as engineering and business administration along with liberal arts curricula."

Bucknell outranked Wake Forest University (N.C.), Furman University (S.C.), De Pauw University (Ind.), Skidmore College (N.Y.), University of Richmond (Va.) and James Madison University (Va.), ordered respectively.

The magazine asked over 1,300 college presidents to choose the best quality undergraduate schools across the country among five different categories.

Over 35 percent of the 662 responding to the poll chose Bucknell as one of the top five comprehensive universities in the Eastern United States.

It can't do laundry or find you a date, but it can help you find more time for both.

The new Apple® Macintosh® Classic® II computer makes it easier for you to juggle classes, activities, projects, and term papers—and still find time for what makes college life real life.

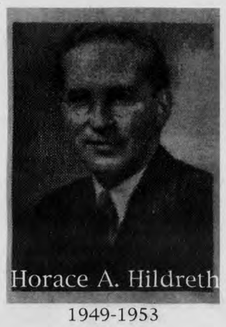
It's a complete and affordable Macintosh Classic system that's ready to help you get your work finished fast. It's a snap to set up and use. It has a powerful 68030 microprocessor, which means you can run even the most sophisticated applications with ease. And its internal Apple SuperDrive™ disk drive reads from and writes to Macintosh and MS-DOS formatted disks—allowing you to exchange information easily with almost any other kind of computer.

In addition to its built-in capabilities, the Macintosh Classic II can be equipped with up to 10 megabytes of RAM, so you'll be able to run several applications at once and work with large amounts of data.

If you already own a Macintosh Classic, and want the speed and flexibility of a Macintosh Classic II, ask us about an upgrade—it can be installed in just minutes and it's affordable.

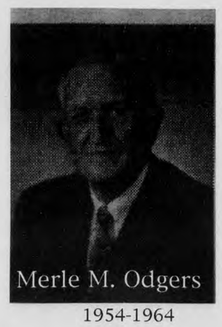
To put more time on your side, consider putting a Macintosh Classic II on your desk. See us for a demonstration today, and while you're in, be sure to ask us for details about the Apple Computer Loan. It'll be time well spent.

Introducing the Macintosh Classic II.



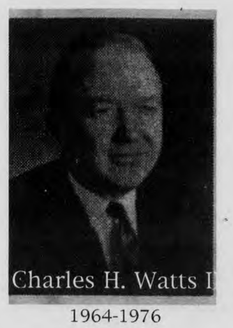
Horace A. Hildreth

1949-1953



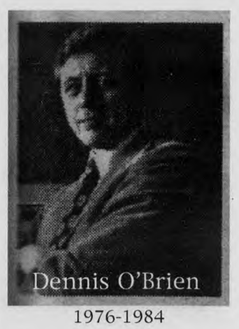
Merle M. Odgers

1954-1964



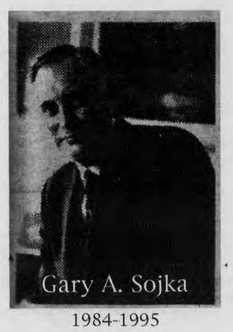
Charles H. Watts I

1964-1976



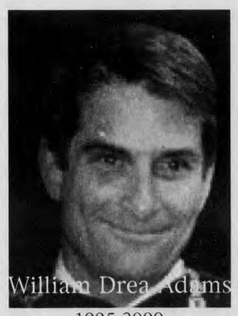
Dennis O'Brien

1976-1984



Gary A. Sojka

1984-1995

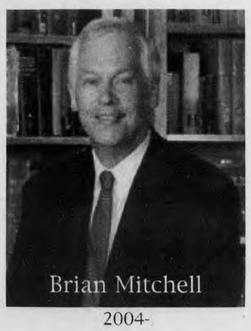


William Drea Adams

1995-2000

Steffen H. Rogers

2000-2004



Brian Mitchell

2004-

Students stand up and sit in

Recounting the University community's reactions to historic events through the years

1969

Press Button

O

To End War

On October 15th, students and faculty all over America will leave their classes for 1 day to ring doorbells and talk to their fellow Americans about the madness of Vietnam.

Anti-Draft Week

1970

Remember, in November, the crosses in the quad? Then as now the quad seems a very peaceful place. The crosses are no longer there. Now, they are four months closer to the backs of hundreds of seniors.

After over thirty years the deadly dice of the draft are still being rolled. Of course, come June, many will gamble on the deferment game. Some will win. Some lose. The stakes are for keeps, pardon the cliché.

The government dictates our choices, manipulates our future, plays games of death with...guess who? Just, perhaps, this is a cliché. And, does it ever bother you that, at least tacitly, you approve (or acquiesce, it's all the same) to the deaths of thousands?

Apparently, we, as they, are expendable. We are told this is in the "national interest." Can we permit ourselves to wonder: who is the nation? This "game" it seems is for those who agree to being coerced into playing Russian roulette in the "national interest." Just where did the concept of inalienable human and civil rights go. I wonder.

There are others who also wonder. As part of their continuing efforts to end the war in Vietnam and abolish conscription the New Mobe is coordinating a national anti-draft week March 16-22. Lewisburg Resist has planned workshops for the 16, 17 and 18 and a demonstration for the 19 to focus on the draft and related issues. (Schedule follows.) Think we're trying to save the world? No, just lives. We would like to listen. Come.

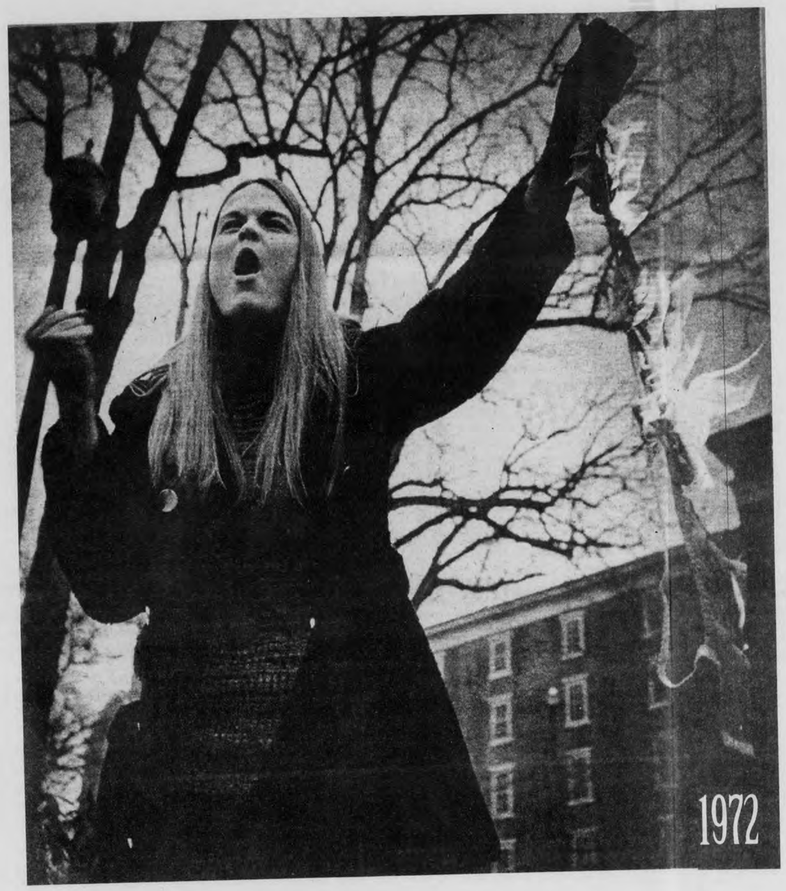
Mon., March 16
7:30 Vaughan Lit Aud.
History of the draft, lottery, alternatives, nonviolent national defense

Tues., March 17
3:30 Coleman 103B
Information and counseling on deferments, Canada, Prisons
7:30 Coleman 101A
Panel discussion on the ideologies behind different choices
Coleman 202A
Workshop in nonviolence
Coleman 202B
Women in relation to the draft

Wed., March 18
7:30 Coleman 101A Prison, Political Prisoners
Coleman 101B Legal issues of the draft and resistance
Coleman 202A Counseling on deferments and alternatives
Coleman 202B Emigration to other countries
9:00 (place to be announced)
Discussion of political action here and elsewhere pertaining to the draft and related issues.

Thurs., March 19
2:00 Demonstration against the draft
Meet at Marts Hall, walk from there to the draft board on Fifth St.

Speakers: Individuals who feel so inclined may publicly express their feelings at that time.



1972

Speak Out

For almost nine months O. J. Simpson has been on trial for the murders of Nicole Brown Simpson and Ronald Goldman. It took less than four hours for the jury to evaluate the case and acquit him. The Bucknellian asked some students for their opinion: What do you make of the verdict in the murder trial of O.J. Simpson?

O.J. is guilty. I think it sucks he got off because he killed his wife. This is a mockery of the American Judicial System. I'm now ashamed to be an American.

—Jennifer Grady '98

It's been going on for so long that I really, really don't care. I figured he'd get off and I don't know what's going to happen, but I have a feeling something bad is going to happen to O.J. Someone is going to shoot him or something.

I wasn't convinced fully that he was guilty but on the other side of the spectrum, I wasn't convinced that he was innocent either.

—Joel Mack '98

I wasn't surprised by the verdict, but I was also surprised by it. If I could have guessed I would have thought he'd be found guilty but I guess the verdict found a reasonable doubt.

I wasn't surprised because I could see equally from where they found a reasonable doubt from. The DNA testing and the planting of evidence were useful ploys used by the defense.

—Dwayne Myers '97

I feel it was a miscarriage of the justice system. The defense played the racial cards in that the jury decided the verdict on the basis of race issue rather than the evidence against O.J.

—Jeff Ongley '96

1995

College: A time for drug experimentation?

1992

By Susan Smith

Ah, yes— that mellow, numb, squinty-eyed feeling. Almost half of the student population that The Bucknellian surveyed has experienced it at least once in their young lives. And it wasn't alcohol that made them feel so free, but instead, drugs.

Of the experimenters and regular users of illegal substances, all have tried marijuana. Thirty percent of the curious have tried mushrooms, and 15% have dropped acid. No one reported use of crack, cocaine, or heroin.

Curiosity, not peer pressure, was the reason that most students decided to try drugs for the first time. As one freshman female remembered, "They (drugs) were available. I figured I should try it once and see what all the fuss is about." Another "scientist" wanted "to see what would happen to his body." After the initial high, many continued to use drugs because as one junior male said, "It feels good."

Reasons for not experimenting or indulging including athletics, waste of money, lack of desire, fear of harm to the body, and lack of availability of the drugs. One sophomore female abstained from drug use because she "didn't want to end up like a lot of (her) friends." Another female has not tried drugs because she is "content with drinking and having fun that way."

While no one admitted to being presently addicted to drugs, 17% of the users did voice a fear of becoming addicted in the future.

One-third feared being caught and the consequences that they would in turn face. One freshman male worries about being caught because, as he said, "the smell (of marijuana) gets all over the place"

Addiction nor the risk of stiff penalties will deter 27% of users from giving up their "habit" after college graduation.

The majority of users probably won't smoke marijuana or use other drugs after life at Bucknell because as one senior male said, "It's not a daily or even weekly occurrence now." Less than five percent of drug users take them on a daily basis.

Ten percent use drugs once a week or on the weekends. The majority of the users just take drugs on special or random occasions.

This usage pattern could steam from the majority of students' belief that marijuana is harmful to their bodies— more harmful than alcohol. Fifteen percent feel that the two substances are equally as damaging, while 25% believe that drinking alcohol is more dangerous than smoking "pot." One senior male thinks drinking alcohol is more harmfl because "you di more often." Another senior male feels that the two substances are equally harmful because "they both kill brain cells." He feels, though, that "we have a lot to spare."

Are these typical college responses?

Given that college historically has been has been the place to experiment with drugs and the fact that in 1990, 75% of high school seniors admitted to having tried marijuana, Bucknell's statistics do not seem abnormally high or low. Whether they are worrisome depends entirely upon your personal beliefs.

Editor's note: Elizabeth Danneberg, Joyce Dollinger, Lisa Lipari, Colleen Rush, and Susan Smith conducted 60 random telephone surveys from Feb. 24-26 to gather information for this article.

1970s

Death and Birth on the Moon

1970

By: David Weinberger

OK. We've landed on the moon. All of us sat in our living rooms and watched the late night television special from the moon and were suitably impressed. Our technology awed us. But for a moment, our technology was nothing and we stood in true awe.

Our amazement at the moon landing was more than just pride in accomplishment. The first words spoken on the moon were overly dramatic. They disturbed us because they seemed too staged. The theatrics were on a different plane than our amazement and for that reason they disturbed us. The theatrics wanted to bring us back to the theatrical plane. They almost made the moon landing into just another television special, and for a moment we did not want this to happen.

For a moment we transcended the unreality of the television screen and felt the moon landing as something real. We could honestly believe that we were not watching just another science fiction movie. The first words spoken were out of a science fiction movie and upset us because we did not want to be told what we were watching was not real.

In a matter of days, and perhaps hours or minutes or seconds, however, we accepted the landing and were content to read the television reviews of it, commenting on which performer on the moon was better. We became content to settle into anger at the launch because of the money it cost. We became content to analyze the landing in domestic and international political terms. But what about that moment when the moon landing was real, and we all know that it was?

A few hundred years ago, the world was convinced that the earth was flat. It had boundaries. Boundaries between countries seemed like a natural outgrowth of the boundaries of the earth. One country could be better situated than another on a flat earth. A country could be at its center.

When the earth was found to be round the idea that one country could be considered better because of its location was lessened. On a globe, everything is equalized. There is no one right perspective on a globe. Everything has to be considered in relation to everything else. There are no absolutes on a globe, as there are on a flat earth when the earth's boundaries are supreme. The idea of a globe is also limiting, more than the conception of a flat earth because a globe is self-enclosed. One can move forever and not make any progress. Why, you can walk 25,000 miles and end where you started from!

When we watched men on the moon and saw the earth from the moon, the third dimension was added. Both a globe and a flat earth are two-dimensional. We figure everything in terms of maps, flat maps. But pictures from the moon made the earth stand out in relief. The flat earth map we use to figure out the globe became absurd. The flat earth map that shows Alaska totally separated from Russia and the U.S.A. in the center is no longer convenient because in that one moment from the moon we saw how little difference there is between a flat earth and a globular earth. The true earth is three-dimensional, it exists in space.

The earth exists in space. It has such alien thought that we quickly let it pass and now are back thumbing through our atlases when we want to better understand the earth.

But for a minute we understood. We watched the earth from the moon and waved into the sky while watching our TV's to see if we could see ourselves. And we couldn't! And we looked to see the blue line that distinguishes the United States from Mexico, and we couldn't see that either. The only borders we could see were the edge of the moon and the edge of the earth. But those borders were no longer borders because we had just surpassed them by putting two humans on the moon. When you have access to and from a cell it is no longer a cell.

For once the meaning of being a world citizen was graphically illustrated and proven. But beyond that, with men or another planet we were no longer even earth citizens but citizens of the universe. We connected with the three-dimensions of infinite space. We were part of something infinite, and it is from this belief, feeling, faith, we felt spiritually renewed.

The technology awed us, but our conquest seemed nothing compared to the infinity we were touching. Our highest technical achievement seemed to be insignificant. Technological man was insignificant.

But the moon landing did not only humble us. For while out technology seemed small in that moment of connection with the infinite man became important. Man became part of the infinite and important because of that. Man had meaning outside himself. But that meaning was unrelated to our technology. It was spiritual. Man's humanity was humble, but the part of him that touched the infinite was exalted.

Campus "sit-in" 1970

In May 1970, Bucknell students staged a peaceful demonstration in the academic quad. The University cancelled classes for one week (May 5-9).

Local Watergate reaction tapped

1973

By Matt Stevenson

"It's so unbelievably bizarre even the worst enemies of the President could not have dreamed it up."

Reactions in Lewisburg like this one demonstrated a growing disbelief over recent disclosures in the Watergate investigation. These statements and others came in the wake of President Nixon's nationwide address attempting to clarify his position in the scandal.

At Spratt House, headquarters for ROTC, Captain Frederick Skripka discussed the speech from a military point of view. While he felt that Nixon's present status seemed to remove any personal guilt, he also pointed out that "in the Army the commander is always responsible. In the Navy the captain is accountable for the actions of his crew."

Like many others interviewed, Skripka was skeptical of the "high sources" which continue to leak to the press, notably the New York Times and The Washington Post, however, if evidence in court pointed directly to Nixon, he favored necessary action by Congress.

"The Presidency makes no man God," he said.

Two students questioned gleefully labeled Nixon as the mastermind of the espionage and spoke bluntly of impeachment. When reminded that a conviction would place Vice President Spiro Agnew in the Oval Office, they rationalized, "At least he'll tell you the truth. He's more honest."

They moderated their position slightly by calling for another election within six months.

Judy Deyo, faculty wife and graduate student, spoke of Nixon and his overall effects on the Presidency.

"Nixon fits the negative image of a politician that many Americans maintain," she commented. "He should not be exonerated from actions made in his name, nor should he hide behind the office. One function of the Presidency is to provide moral leadership."

The developments in the Watergate do not dominate the conversation of all despite their front page coverage. Many did not care or take the time to examine the relevance. One man, delivering beer to the Lewisburg Inn put it simply, "Politics to me is out."

"If another election were held tomorrow, would Nixon get your vote?" was directed to a middle aged woman near Weis Market.

"Sure, he hasn't done anything wrong," she said. "It's a matter for the courts to decide."

"You've got to understand one thing," said a retired businessman whose political memory stretched to Teapot Dome, the oil scandal under Harding. "every President has had his problems. Nixon's one of the best I can remember. He's just a victim of circumstances, of the whole system. The press has blown this thing way out of proportion."

Bob Jennings, a McGovern coordinator last fall, saw Watergate as a Catch-22.

"Clearly, Mr. Nixon is an astute politician," he said. "There are two possibilities. One is that he had prior knowledge to the plans and how they were to be funded. If this is the case impeachment proceedings would be a foregone conclusion.

"The alternative is that Nixon knew nothing of the break-in and the subsequent cover up by high officials. If this is the case, he is probably the most inept administrator since Harding. Either way he is to blame."

Marriage statistics

Forty-four per cent of all married alumnae are married to Bucknell men!

Forty-four per cent of all living and married Bucknell women are currently married to Bucknell men, indicated a survey done during January by the alumni relations office.

Of the 6,745 living alumnae, for which information is available, 59.1 per cent are married; this statistic, however, does not include the number of widows or divorcees.

Approximately 26 per cent of all living alumnae are married to Bucknell men. However, because graduating classes in recent years have been larger than in the past, the number of single women is larger, which tends to inflate the statistic.

The alumni office is presently conducting additional studies of alumnae marriages, including more detailed information about widows and divorcees. The study is tentatively scheduled to be released during September.

Frericks accepts newly-created gay/lesbian/bisexual advisorship

1992

By Micki Hamilton

Matthew Frericks has accepted the part-time position as Advisor for Gay, Lesbian, and Bisexual Students.

A reception attended by students and faculty in the Traditional Reading Room of Ellen Betrand Library welcomed Frericks to Bucknell.

The Gay/Lesbian/Bisexual Task Force, co-chaired by Barbara Shailor, acting vice president for student services, and Marilyn Mumford, professor of English, had been searching for someone to fill this position for three months.

Prior to Wednesday, the University did not have a specific administrator who was in charge of making the campus atmosphere more inclusive of gay, lesbian, and bisexual students.

Frericks hopes to change the exclusivity of homosexual students on campus as well as other areas of contention. A 1988 graduate from Miami University in Oxford, Ohio, Frericks said, "The biggest role will be support and advocacy for the gay/lesbian/bisexual students."

The advisor plans to promote awareness through educational programming and to foster a more supportive atmosphere in hopes of making the Bucknell community more tolerant and understanding of homosexual students.

Frericks hopes to change the exclusivity of homosexual students on campus as well as other areas of contention.

Another goal for Frericks is to "help coordinate different existing groups on campus like FLAG, the men's awareness group, the faculty, etc." so that each group can collectively work towards a common goal. This way each separate group will not be duplicating any work towards creating more tolerance on campus.

Frericks found out about the position from an article in The Daily Item. In the article, the Task Force outlined the gay, lesbian, bisexual atmosphere on campus and recommended hiring an advisor for four to five hours a week. In response to the article, Frericks called Shailor and later met with her for an interview.

Frericks was hired to work only four to five hours a week but is willing to put in more time. As of now, Frerick's position is not clearly defined. Liz Shaw '94, treasurer of FLAG, said, "I think this is only a preliminary step towards a full time position."

The new gay/lesbian/bisexual advisor commented that his motivation to accept this position started in college. As a junior at Miami University, he struggled with confronting his sexual orientation and had no one to talk to about it.

Frericks said, "Looking back, remembering how hard that was, has been a motivation."

As a result, Frericks wants to make the coming out process easier for other homosexual students. He wants to be a role mole for homosexuals and "help them be accepted for who they are."

The Doctor's Bag

1970

By Arnold Werner
C 1970 CPS

QUESTION: I have a problem which is of some concern to me. The instruction booklet that came with my diaphragm says that each time you have intercourse you must insert another applicator full of spermicidal cream. I anticipate spending a long weekend with my boyfriend soon, and it strikes me that there might arise a serious, if not messy, situation if most of the weekend is spent in bed as I anticipate. Can you offer any reasonable suggestions or solutions to this problem? I will not take birth control pills because they make me throw up every time I brush my teeth. Nor will I consider any other method of birth control.

ANSWER: In this land of leisure and plenty, I should have known that it was only a matter of time before I received a letter like yours. Your problem clearly boils down to a matter of timing. A diaphragm should be inserted within two hours of having intercourse and should be left in place for at least six hours following intercourse. The instruction booklet you have is essentially correct although intercourse occurring twice in succession shortly after insertion of the diaphragm should not cause any difficulty. Judicial behavior suggests an additional application of spermicidal cream (without removing the diaphragm!) before intercourse occurs again. If you want to try a fourth time, you have your choice of using more cream or having your boyfriend use a condom.

Many people make the mistake of not pacing themselves properly on a long weekend. Careful scheduling of sleep, eating, attendance to other physiological functions and cautious amounts of sun and exercise usually permit requisite six-hour post-intercourse intervals to occur so that a pit stop for diaphragm change and refueling can take place.

CAMPUS
The Spot For Great ENTERTAINMENT
FRIDAY-SATURDAY DECEMBER 10-
SIDNEY POITIER and BARBARA McNAIR
"THE ORGANIZATION"
GP COLOR United Artists
SHOWS 7:00 & 9:0
FINAL EXAM EXTRA SPECIAL
AN UNFORGETABLE FILM FESTIVAL
7 SHOWS IN 7 NIGHTS
SHOWS 7:00 & 9:0
Sunday
"The Beatles Yellow Submarine"
COLOR United Artists
SHOWS 7:00 & 9:00
Monday
where the heads of all nations meet
"ALICE'S RESTAURANT"
ARLO GUTHRIE COLOR by DeLuxe United Artists
SHOWS 7:00 & 9:00
DUSTIN HOFFMAN and JOHN VOIGHT
Tuesday
NOW RATED R "MIDNIGHT COWBOY"
R COLOR by DeLuxe United Artists
ONE EVE. SHOW—7:45
CANTIFLAS and DAVID NEVIN
Wed.
Michael Todd's "AROUND THE WORLD IN 80 DAYS" TECHNICOLOR
SHOWS 7:00 & 9:00
RITA TUSHINGHAM
Thursday "THE KNACK"
SHOWS 7:00 & 9:05
ALBERT FINNEY and HUGH GRIFFITH
Friday "TOM JONES" in color
FEATURES 6:30 — 9:00
WINNER OF 10 ACADEMY AWARDS
Saturday
WEST SIDE STORY

How to get great sex

By Bud J. Frye

1992

Men are tough but sensitive, they know what they want and they always get it. The more sexual conquests a man successfully completes, the bigger a stud he becomes. Women are soft, indecisive, and if they regard sex in the way men do, they are all sluts. If you believe this, I've got a bridge to sell you.

Women have been oppressed in more ways than men can ever imagine. They've had to adapt themselves to suit a male-dominated world, but there comes a time when someone has to draw the line. The women of this campus have been forced to accept the inconsiderate treatment of course refers to sex.

That's right, SEX, the final frontier. It is a battle that has been waged between men and women since the dawn of time. In the old days all it took was a club and a good swing and you were set.

But today's woman is different. Today's woman is smart. It takes more than a whack across the head to get her now. In this modern age of technology, the handy club is obsolete. Today's man has to be smarter, quicker, more upwardly mobile, and he has to use stealth. Today's man needs a RAP.

The idea of the perfect rap has evolved over the centuries to the point that there are now different types of rap: the long-term rap, the short-term rap, the "let's go back to my room and talk" rap, the "Hi, my parents are rich" rap (How does that work?!?), the "we can still be friends" rap, the "I'm just a struggling college student and I just want to find myself" rap, and of course, the forever popular "Hi, I'm really drunk, do I know you?" rap. These are the chemical weapons of battle, and they are systematically doing away with good sex as we know it.

Romance is a thing of the past. Forget about the candlelight, the soft music, and the bottle of wine for two. Today romance means a lot of beers, a strobe light, and whatever music it happens to be fun to "go at it" to.

Here at Bucknell, even the concept of a date has been driven to extinction, and ladies, the best part about it is that it is all because of men.

As time passed the women of the world evolved positively, and the men somehow regressed back to the stick. Instead of just hitting women over the head, we tested ourselves to see how little we could get away with.

But there is a solution. There is one way that romance can make a comeback, and that is a complete and total role reversal.

Ladies, take control of the situation and be the men that we can't be. Instead of letting men lay the rap, the women of this campus should take the bull by the horns, be aggressive, and go for it. You've been treated like pieces of meat long enough.

From now on if you want something (or someone), go for it (or him) like a pit-bull with a purpose. Be forceful, be bold, but be sure to get what you want and don't take any crap. Lay down the law and teach men a thing or two about how it should be done. It's time for the men to sit down and let the women take over.

Forget about your egos guys, it's for an outstanding cause — good sex.

A PROFESSIONAL ABORTION
that is safe legal & inexpensive can be set up on an outpatient basis by calling
The Problem Pregnancy Educational Service, Inc.
215-722-5360
24 hours—7 days for professional, confidential and caring help.

TASTEE FREEZ
Open 12 noon to 11 p.m.
CONES 15' 25' 35'
SHAKES 35' 45'
BANANA SPLITS 60'
SUNDAES 35' 45' 55'
Try a Shake at Break
Route 15, between the traffic lights

Voices from the closet

Five gay men tell what its like to be the same, but different at Bucknell

1992

The Bucknellian asked a member of the Bucknell Gay Men's Support Group to lead a question session about being gay at Bucknell.

The Bucknellian: What is it like to be gay at a conservative school like Bucknell?

Sam: You can check out anybody you want to without anybody knowing.

J.C.: For me it has been very positive. All my friends have been supportive and open. Even guys I know who belong to groups like sports teams and fraternities have been cool. I take both positive and negative feedback since this is a new experience for a lot of people.

Bill: Word. I hate those Bible-thumpers who feel they have a right to quote me into my grave.

Ed: Lots of people have stereotypes. Yet it saddens me to know that few people are willing to challenge their ideas.

Chris: For me, I guess I fell that it sucks sometimes, that I feel limited socially. But I've also found that it's kind of special. Being different isn't always bad.

The Bucknellian: What has been your most difficult time at Bucknell?

Chris: For me the most difficult thing was the first time I came out. Saying the "G"-word and not knowing what to expect was scary.

Sam: The most difficult thing is always hiding books and papers under my bed when someone knocks at the door. Or having to censor every conversation on the phone.

Bill: Once I was using the Macs in Dana Engineering when some guy started to ask questions: "Are you a faggot?" Only after I asked him if he wanted to go outside so that I could kick his ass in did he stop. I guess a lot of people think you can push men like us around.

J.C.: I live in fear of being assaulted.

Ed: For me the most difficult thing was to accept myself for who I am.

Mike: I'm tired of hiding my wonderful relationship with my boyfriend. We've dated for two and a half years.

The Bucknellian: How does Bucknell change your options?

J.C.: I feel as if I don't do anything anymore. I hate most parties. I hate to watch women get used.

Chris: Well, my original thought on marriage and family are out.

Sam: I still have problems trusting people. Being labeled is a difficult thing. Not being able to read people. Putting some friends in awkward positions because they know and others don't.

Bill: I wake up angry every morning and I don't know why.

The Bucknellian: What is your worst fear at Bucknell?

Sam: Being alone.

Ed: Losing my best friend. If he found out that I was gay he'd hate me.

J.C.: Being assaulted again. I was a victim of assault as a sophomore and I would never want to live through that again. I'd rather die.

Chris: Knowing that on campus that there is a gay student like me living in fear and self hate. When I know that I could help.

Mike: Graduating and going into the working world. Straights don't have to fear of being fired or getting health insurance or finding housing. But if you're gay that's the reality.

Bill: Telling my parents and my family. Being rejected by them and not being able to come back to school.

Dating in 'the bubble'

BU sexuality: a liberal trend

1972

By Brenda Troxell

Are Bucknell students as sexually active as those in other Universities? Are we a "virgin" campus? How many Bucknell girls get abortions anyway?

The campus has enough need to warrant the establishment of the Office of Human Sexuality (OHS) to handle referrals and to do para-professional counseling. They operate every night from nine until ten in a new location — just inside the front entrance of the old Bison...

What justifies a sexuality office at Bucknell? Last semester, a study was made by a group of undergraduates, Ray Allen, Linda Bohrer, Kathleen Marinari, Robert Rubenfeld, Susan Siedenburg, and Steve Tom, entitled "Sexual Behavior and Attitudes at a Small Liberal Arts University."

Just under one-fifth of the undergraduates here were sampled, and the result was a trend toward liberality on the campus. Bucknell rates as a "non-virgin" campus, with 50.5 percent of the sample having engaged in sexual intercourse.

Seventy-four percent of the freshman males and females come here as virgins. By the time they are sophomores, approximately 40 percent of the males are virgins and 60 percent of the females are virgins.

The female experiences a big drop by the time she is a junior — only 46 percent retain virgin status. 30 percent of the men and 40 percent of the women leave the University virginal.

Who are these people? A typical Bucknellian in this sample is from a suburban or rural area (89 percent) whose family income is greater then $15,000 (68 percent) and he is protestant (50 percent) and unattached (67 percent)...

Of the five colleges at which data was collected, San Francisco State University, Brown University, Bryn Mawr, University of Illinois, and University of Alabama, Bucknell attains a high placement in the realm of premarital sex...

First intercourse among Bucknell students most often (63 percent) takes place with a steady date. Only 2 percent of the sample had their first intercourse with a prostitute, although 4.7 percent claimed it to be with a stranger. In 20 percent of the cases, intercourse was not repeated.

25 percent of the students, however, claim to have had intercourse ten or more times and are still engaging in it.

The first experience most often takes place between the ages of 17 and 19 (74 percent). Most of the students (45 percent) have only had one partner, but it was quite interesting to note that 10 percent had six or more partners.

Very few people on this campus (8 percent) said the pre-marital sex should not take place in any relationship. 49 percent classified it as belonging to a "special" relationship, but 43 percent approved it for any relationship.

A bit of a double standard does exist here because 40 percent of the students would prefer that their spouse be a virgin, while 4 percent said that he or she had to be a virgin.

The survey also covered such areas as oral-genital contact, masturbation, abortion, and cohabitation among students.

In answer to the question as to whether the respondent or his or her partner had ever had an abortion, 5 percent answered yes.

For the females who had intercourse, the figure rises to an astounding 11 percent, which explains why fear of pregnancy was the largest deterrent to intercourse among non-virgins (guilt was most often the reason for virgins).

This means that at least one in twenty girls had an abortion sometime in her college career, which must show a serious lack of knowledge about birth control methods.

While 23 percent of the sample claim to masturbate daily, 41 percent say they never do it. The medical profession has proved that it doesn't cause blindness and that it may actually be good for you. These figures were considerably lower than expected. In addition, once men or women have had sexual intercourse, they masturbate more often.

Oral-genital sex is illegal, but 89 percent of the campus approves of this act. There is also a gap between the approval and the frequency of the act itself.

19 percent claim to frequently stimulate their partner, but 23 percent never have and never intend to. 17 percent are frequently being stimulated by their partner, but 17 percent claim they will never permit that.

Among virgins, it is not a very popular pastime.

Homo sapiens Bucknellensis: The sociology of sexual rituals

By Marc Demarest

1983

Unbeknownst to most Bucknellians, an eminent sociologist has, for the past few weeks, been documenting our social behavior for a soon-to-be-published report. The following are excerpts from that report.

"In observing the mating habits of the subspecies Homo sapiens Bucknellensis, one is immediately struck by the predominant role alcohol plays in their rather odd mating habits. Not only does alcohol appear to be the deciding factor in both the female's and the male's willingness to participate in the brief courtship ritual, but it indeed provides the focal point for the weekly rituals at which the courtship ritual is practiced."

"The use of alcohol in the courtship ritual and subsequent mating seems to serve two purposes: (1) it allows both parties to escape the rigid social stigma which each sex subgroup attaches to the other for engaging in sexual activity, and (2) allows each participant to largely escape responsibility for their behavior during the more public ritual."

"The aforementioned stigmatization does not occur intrasexually, that is within each sex. In fact, each sex tends to score its members on their mating, based on rather arbitrary and often amusing criteria."

"The sexual motivations of the subspecies seem to be of a primarily self-gratifying nature, reinforcing the conclusions of earlier studies (McElspits and Toegroth, 1960; Bigglespred, 1974) that the subspecies in question exhibits primarily self-centered behavior in all activities and areas of endeavor. Each sex seems concerned only with completing the act to its own satisfaction; both males and females seem at a loss to exhibit the more human emotions associated with the sexual act: compassion, tenderness, consideration, etc."

"Other interesting phenomena associated with the mating habits of the subspecies include the limitation of the courtship ritual and mating almost exclusively to weekends, after the traditional ritual ceremonies. Little weekday sexual activity has been recorded; hence, weekend rituals provide invaluable information as to courtship displays, patterns of behavior and methods of approach."

Other interesting phenomena associated with the mating habits of the subspecies include the limitation of the courtship ritual and mating almost exclusively to weekends.

"Overall, it appears that economic values traditionally associated with this subspecies (ostentatious displays, pleasing outward appearance, conspicuous decorations, etc.) also assert themselves in the selection process prior to the courtship. Although no preening has been observed or documented, one can assume that the societal standards governing appearance are rigidly adhered to, even by those whose interest or chances of participating in the ritual are small."

"Rarely do the mating rituals and sexual acts described lead to even tenuous relationships between male and female participants. This can be related to either the sexes' tendency to devalue the opposite sex as anything other than an object for one's own gratification, or to the overwhelmingly dominant role the courtship ritual itself plays in the subspecies' social existence."

Additionally, it appears that some kind of intrasexual ranking does occur in the more elite social groups, based solely on the number of times a member of the group can complete the ritual with a different partner. In these cases, there is evidence that actual tallies are kept, and that these tallies gauge an individual's esteem in the eyes of others of that group (see Batsbreth, 1968, for a similar study on Kimodo dragons)."

"What relationships do exist within the subspecies do appear to be fairly stable, but most exhibit an intensity explained by the primarily hostile social environment in which Bucknellensis must exist, and by the inhumane nature of the rituals themselves."

A relationship allows both members exemption from the obligatory aspects of the courtship ritual, and eases tension in general.

But often it does not sufficiently alleviate the intrasexual pressure to participate in the courtship ritual outside the relationship, and the participation of a member of a relationship in the courtship ritual and mating is viewed as a source of great delight to the subspecies. Often, members of both sexes will encourage such an illicit mating for their own amusement."

"In this case, there is a curious disregard to the subspecies' own codes of behavior, as traditional rules of conduct are either forgotten, or suspended by some tacit agreement, solely for the thrill of scandal, and the reinforcement of intrasexual bonds within groups—the 'secret sharer' syndrome."

"Another possible explanation for the lack of stable relationships within Bucknellensis may be the inability of an individual to find a partner whose blind dedication to the rituals can be compromised with the promise of a relationship. Often, potential relationships deteriorate when one member feels that the excitement to be gained from a potential partner is not as great as that present in the courtship ritual."

"Overall, the courtship and mating habits of homo sapiens Bucknellensis must be observed to be adequately appreciated. Perhaps the subspecies' isolation and dedication to socioeconomic myths account for the lack of more human qualities in their sexual behavior."

"There is little to indicate, however, that either sex within the subspecies perceives its sexual behavior to be diametrically opposed to the sexual ideas propagated by the species homo sapiens, and in fact, the sexual behavior of Bucknellensis may be adequate proof that the sexual myths shared by members of that species may well be no more than mere moral platitudes for assuaging conscience."

Can we let this man print these slanderous statements? I think not. After all, they make us seem like little more than apes.

When you know it's for keeps
You can choose Keepsake with complete confidence, because the famous Keepsake Guarantee gives written proof of a perfect engagement diamond of precise cut and superb color. There is no finer diamond ring.
Keepsake®
REGISTERED DIAMOND RINGS
Rings from $100 to $10,000
Trade Mark Reg. A. H. Pond Co.
HOW TO PLAN YOUR ENGAGEMENT AND WEDDING
Send new 20 pg. booklet, "Planning Your Engagement and Wedding" plus full color folder and 44 pg. Bride's Book gift offer all for only 25¢.
Name
Address
City Co.
State Zip
KEEPSAKE DIAMOND RINGS, BOX 90, SYRACUSE, N.Y. 1320

High water marks University history

Activities at Standstill as Floods Eclipse '89 Mark; Frat Houses, Girls' Dorms Damaged; No Fatalities
Bursting over its banks to eclipse all known records, the Susquehanna inundated Lewisburg and the lower campus Wednesday and Thursday.
All college activities were brought to a standstill by the rushing waters, which drove many from their homes.
At its crest Thursday at 7 a. m. the flood was 20 inches above the mark of 1889, the previous high.
During the crisis the University supplied power to the entire community. An amateur
SENIOR BALL POSTPONED
Although, as the Bucknellian goes to press, Tommy Dorsey has not been contacted by authorities, the Senior Ball will definitely, not be held tonight.
Virtually all roads leading to the College are under flood waters. Telephone connections could not be made to determine the whereabouts of the band scheduled for the Ball.
Entry to the Dining Hall, scene of the dance, could be made only by boat, yesterday.
There is a possibility of the Ball being held later in the month, dependent upon availability of a band.
1936
ALLEY
1972
1996
As the Susquehanna River rose higher and higher from the heavy rain and melting snow two weekends ago, its waters spilled over into the streets of Lewisburg. Basements were flooded, cars were submerged, and many people lost their homes and their possessions. What began as a simple downpour became a horrible catastrophe, as well as an awesome sight to see.
PRIVATE PARKING
2004

December 1, 2006

The Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

Volume 138, Number 12 | Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue | www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

A semester in review

Take a look at this fall's most memorable moments, including the memorial service on Sept. 11.

See page B6

University to promote good sportsmanship

Illustration by Ryan Winn

By Amanda Sidman
Staff Writer

The Department of Athletics and Recreation has instituted the "Bison Good Sports!" campaign, which John Hardt, director of athletics and recreation, said is a sportsmanship-awareness program designed to promote a positive environment and appropriate fan conduct at all Bison sporting events.

The Sojka Psychos, Bison basketball's biggest fans, may have to tone down their traditions of screaming, sign-holding and orange-wearing, which have continued throughout the season, even at away games.

The department plans to curtail the growing amount of rowdy and somewhat inappropriate cheers heard at sporting events, hoping to promote the University's values.

"Bucknell aims to set a national standard for excellence in academics and athletics," Hardt said. "This standard is reflected in such successes as our outstanding graduation rate among student-athletes and our 12 Patriot League President's Cup championships."

The program will be carried out through notices, a new "Bison Good Sports!" logo and a radio spot, which Hardt said is "in the works."

"One of the objectives of the campaign is to recognize and thank our students and fans for [their] tremendous energy and positive enthusiasm" Hardt said.

Hardt, on behalf of his department, said while the attendance and passion of the Bison fans are greatly appreciated, it is important to represent the University well at sporting events.

"'Bison Good Sports!' reminds us of the important role that great fans play in college athletics today," Hardt said. "We hope that our fans will continue to join our Bison players, coaches and staff in helping all spectators find creative and ingenious ways to positively support our Bucknell student-athletes."

Hardt also said students will see much more of the program as the year progresses. As the Bison face the University of Northern Iowa Saturday, Hardt and the Department of Athletics and Recreation urge the Sojka Psychos to support their team in a positive manner.

Bison fans were nationally recognized for their school spirit last basketball season. At last year's basketball game vs. Villanova, 4,433 Sojka Psychos and 60 media personnel crowded into the Pavilion. The Bison made headlines across the media not only for their close loss to the No. 4-ranked team, but for the spirit of the Bison fans.

Villanova coach Jay Wright, a former Bison, said in the Daily Item, "I've coached in games where there are 30,000 fans and I can still yell across the court and get [my team's] attention. I wanted to call a play after [the Bison] scored right before the end of the [first] half and they couldn't hear me. This place has a great effect on you."

Kyle Whelliston for ESPN.com also described the atmosphere.

"Sojka Pavilion erupted into a solid box of contained white noise — the deafening static like that between stations, amplified four-thousandfold," Whelliston said.

Guard John Griffin '08 said at both home and away games the players greatly appreciate their fans.

"It is awesome to see the support of our fans, especially when we're playing an away game and can see the orange in the stands. And it has a great effect on the other team," Griffin said.

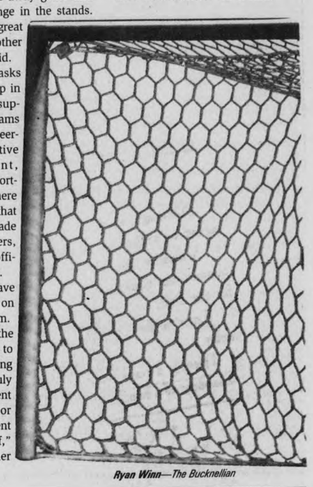
"Bucknell asks for our fans' help in keeping their support of our teams positive and cheering with positive encouragement, rather than supporting an atmosphere of intimidation that attempts to degrade opposing players, teams, and officals" Hardt said.

Students have mixed feelings on the new program.

"I feel like the school is trying to control something that does not truly pose a detriment to the game or the environment in Sojka itself," Andy Kummer '08 said.

Kirk Klett '07 offered a similar sentiment.

"It's a shame that program might come at the cost of the student's enthusiasm," Klett said.



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Olympic gold medalist urges students to strive for achievement

By Wes Kinter
Writer

Olympic gold medalist, Billy Mills, spoke about the importance of values and perceptions in the present and future world in a talk on Tuesday in the Weis Center for the Performing Arts. He described the impact his past experiences had on his life and the necessity of inner strength in preparation for a changing world.

Mills said a responsibility exists for people to be virtuous and strong in the face of adversity, but also that world wide perceptions regarding mediocrity exist that mislead and confuse.

"The greatest challenge facing the world today is perceptions," Mills said.

Mills, raised on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation in South Dakota, ran on an athletic scholarship at the University of Kansas. In 1958 and 1959 he was an All-American in cross country, winning the individual title in the Big Eight cross country tournament in 1960.

After serving as a lieutenant in the United States Marine Corps, Mills qualified for the 1964 Summer Olympics for the 10,000-

See MILLS page B2

Engineering department to host fair

Students create projects to demonstrate science concepts

By Evan Unger
News Editor

The University is hosting a Science and Engineering Fair at 7-9 p.m. Monday in the Terrace Room. The fair, organized by the engineering department, targets middle and high school teachers, as well as scout leaders, club advisers and home-schoolers.

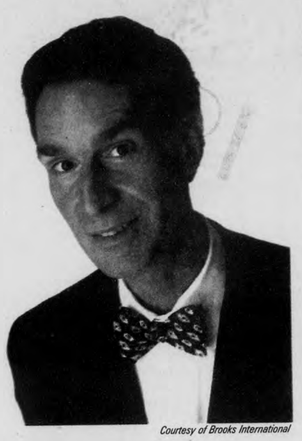
Over 190 students from Engineering 100 were required to create a "gizmo" that will demonstrate engineering and science concepts. Teachers will be able to take students' projects with them at the end of the fair to use in their classrooms. University student-teachers also may obtain "gizmos."

The goal of the fair is to make middle and high school students aware of engineering.

"The U.S. is facing a shortage of engineers," said Margot Vigeant, associate professor of chemical engineering. "We need to increase the number of people studying engineering and to increase engineering enrollment. The problem is, while teachers are trained in science and math, they do not typically have engineering experience."

See FAIR page B2

Bill Nye to speak at the Weis Center



Courtesy of Brooks International

Bill Nye, known as the "Science Guy," will be speaking about protecting the environment at 8pm in Weis Center on January 30. Nye, an accomplished scientist and mechanical engineer, created the Emmy-award winning show "Bill Nye the Science Guy," which lasted for six seasons.

The lecture will be free and open to the public. Students will have priority seating.

Biomedical Engineering students present research

By Jeremy O'Sullivan
Writer

In October, four University students presented their undergraduate research at the Biomedical Engineering Society's Annual Fall Meeting in Chicago.

The University's biomedical engineering program is only three years old but already receives national recognition.

"It was really interesting to see how many people were interested in the research I presented on my poster," said Erica Andreozzi '07, who presented both a poster on research she did at the University and a talk on a summer research program at Clemson University. "Also, it was really cool to see the research done by other undergraduate students during their summer programs when I presented my podium talk."

Adhira Sunkara '08 also presented her research at the conference.

"It was amazing to see the vast variety of research projects that the undergrad students presented," Sunkara said. "The research I did was a simulation study of heart diseases using a very newly developed program called Cardio Wave."

According to Joseph Tranquillo, assistant professor of biomedical and electrical engineering, engineering students are "helping chip away" at larger research questions in addition to their research.

"My research at Bucknell definitely stimulated interest from professionals working on similar projects who I anticipate will take some ideas from my poster and try them back in their own labs," Andreozzi said.

Not only is their undergraduate research an opportunity to contribute to global health and medical research, but the experience also rewards students for the countless hours and sleepless nights they spend working in labs.

"The most valuable part was being able to present the research I did this summer and to see that people were interested in what was being done at the undergraduate level," Sunkara said.

Andreozzi said the most valuable part of the experience was "becoming more familiar with giving presentations and learning how to improve my communication skills with people from all sorts of academic backgrounds."

The students gained many other benefits from presenting their research, such as learning about all the sub-fields of biomedical engineering and networking with employers and graduate school representatives.

While presenting research is most common for those who have earned doctoral degrees, contributing to the global knowledge pool an as an undergraduate is no small feat.

INSIDE THIS ISSUE

OPINIONS
The Bucknellian staff questions why the University's student journalists have no place in academics.

B4

DIVERSIONS
Check out the editors' top picks for best holiday songs to get you in the spirit this season.
C4

DIVERSIONS
A&E writer Sarah Novello '08 reviews the latest James Bond film, 'Casino Royale.'

C2

SPORTS
The Bison defeated Colgate 31-28 to secure a winning season.
D1

Public Safety Log

Thursday, November 16

ASSIST AGENCY—Carey House: Assisted Lewisburg Police Department officer returning an intoxicated student.

ASSIST AGENCY—Public Safety Office: Fugitive surrendered to Public Safety officer.

Friday, November 17

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—Roberts Hall: Unknown person(s) discharged a fire extinguisher.

FIRE ALARM—Carey House: Caused by cooking.

FIRE ALARM—The Mods: Caused by cooking.

FIRE ALARM—Langone Center: Cause unknown.

SUSPICIOUS ACTIVITY—Rear of Sunflower Day Care: Vehicle driving on grass behind Sunflower Day Care.

WELFARE CHECK/DRUG VIOLATION—James Alley and Sigma Alpha Epsilon Fraternity: Welfare check in James Alley and drug violation at Sigma Alpha Epsilon Fraternity.

Saturday, November 18

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Trax Hall: Broken window in exterior door.

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Harris Hall: Students cited for underage consumption of alcohol.

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—McDonnell Hall: Student cited for underage consumption of alcohol.

ASSIST OTHER AGENCY—Routes 15 and 45 Intersection: Student urinating in public at the intersection.

MEDICAL ASSIST—Swartz Hall: Dehydrated student did not require medical care.

THEFT OF SERVICES—Christy Mathewson-Memorial Stadium: An employee placed personal trash in the dumpster at the Stadium.

ALARM-FIRE—Silbermann Hall: Caused by cooking.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Swartz Hall: Broken window in the stairwell between the second and third floors of "C" wing.

Sunday, November 19

DRUG VIOLATION—Smith Hall: Students cited for drug use.

FIRE ALARM—The Mods: Caused by cooking.

PROPERTY-LOST—Unknown: Student reported losing his cell phone at an unknown location on campus.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Bucknell Hall: Student transported by ambulance to Evangelical Hospital emergency room for treatment.

FIRE ALARM—Vedder Hall: Fire alarm caused by burned food.

Monday, November 20

ARSON—Vedder Hall: Papers on a bulletin board were burnt. Minor damage.

THEFT—Gerhard Fieldhouse: Student reported an unknown person took her bike from a bike rack.

Tuesday, November 21

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Sigma Phi Epsilon: A Public Safety officer discovered an Emergency Phone blue light broken off the top of the phone. Report filed.

Friday, November 24

ALARM-INTRUSION—Golf Course: Cause unknown.

Saturday, November 25

ALARM-FIRE—Smith Hall: Caused by cooking.

Sunday, November 26

SUSPICIOUS ACTIVITY—Malesardi Hall: Student received a suspicious phone call.

THEFT, LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—McDonnell Hall: Christmas tree taken from a student's room and two students cited for underage consumption.

Tuesday, November 28

FIRE ALARM—The Mods: Fire alarm caused by burnt food.

Olympic gold medalist urges students to strive for achievement

MILLS From page B1

meter run and marathon events. In the 10,000-meter run, he went on to earn a gold medal in what is considered "the greatest upset in Olympic history," according to USA Track and Field.

"That moment was magical for me," Mills said. "It truly felt as though I had wings on my feet."

Mills also spoke of his childhood and when he first learned about the Olympics.

"When I was nine years old, I read a book on the ancient Olympics that said 'Olympians are chosen by the gods,'" Mills said. "In that same book, Socrates wrote that with achievement comes honor, and with honor comes responsibility."

He described the necessity of responsibility in the average person's life, stating that 'average' is only a perception and striving to achieve is where true greatness lies.

He also listed the four virtues needed to succeed: bravery, fortitude, generosity and wisdom. Mills said through bravery and fortitude, success could be achieved, allowing for wisdom and generosity to be realized and given back.

Mills said that in this "rapidly changing world" we must prepare to make an emotional investment in our beliefs.

"Values are, and always will be, sacred," Mills said.

Mills returned to the idea of perceptions by describing the adversity he faced as a Native American. Mills was orphaned at age 12 and slept in a car for months, Mills proudly explained the strength he found in himself to continue.

"Responsibility through accountability," Mills said.

Mills' remarkable finish in the 1964 event, following a diagnosis of hypoglycemia in 1963, was the first and only victory by an American in the 10-kilometer run.

But Mills said the achievement itself is "not what I took from sports: I took the journey, not the destination."

Following the speech was a short video documenting Mills' achievement alongside fellow American athletes, such as Jesse Owens, who supported Mills' theme of responsibility: "Everybody should have a dream."

Students found Mills' lecture enjoyable.

"He's an absolutely amazing athlete and has overcome so many odds, but he's still so down to Earth," Kate Ballantine '07 said.

According to Conrad Moore '10, Mills' talk was sincere as well.

"Many assertions are generally political or religious in nature, but his proposal seemed more genuine," Moore said.

Mills is an accomplished humanitarian, author, public speaker and spokesperson for the organization Running Strong for American Indian Youth.

First year engineers create 'gizmos' to educate middle school students

Enginnering 100 final project reaches out to the community

FAIR From page B1

The brand-new fair is the final project for Engineering 100. In this introductory course, students are exposed to three different concentrations in three-week blocks during the semester. The students were divided into 50 teams, with members of different blocks joined together.

"Students learned about [concepts] that they missed [from other group members] and then were able to apply [them] for the community," Vigeant said.

Unlike most projects, the judges of the designs will be outside the Univeristy.

"The fair will give students an opportunity to gain real world design experience with well defined constraints and criteria," said Ron Ziemian, professor of civil engineering.

The project also allows students to give back to the local community.

"In the last few years, Engineering 100 students have worked on projects that have an impact on the community. From the day they arrive, we try to make them good little engineering citizens," said Ziemian.

Projects covered a wide variety of topics. One group created a Rube Goldberg machine that operated with lever and pulleys. Another project demonstrated the use of different gears on a model car.

First-year Kevin Cooper-Smith's group created a demonstration that uses paper airplanes to teach middle schoolers physics concepts such as drag, thrust and lift.

"We choose paper airplanes because we thought students in middle school would find them entertaining and educational," Cooper-Smith said.

The projects, which had to cost less than $20 to create, are linked to Pennsylvania state academic standards, which dictate what concepts middle school students need to learn.

The fair is open to the public.

More than a century of student journalism

CELEBRATE From page A1

on and advice, there have been times over the past 110 years when this was not always easy.

One alumnus and former staff writer submitted a letter to the editor in 1936 in which he recalled "when Professor Theiss and I used to pour hot water in the radiator on his old Model T Ford and then take off to fight the snow drifts in Mifflinburg, where The Bucknellian was printed. It always struck me as somewhat of a miracle when we reached Mifflinburg."

In 1987 the newspaper was typeset in the offices of the Milton Standard Printing Company after articles were saved on disk and delivered. That staff sought a $20,000 loan to upgrade newsroom technology so editors could use desktop publishing software to design the paper themselves.

Because of the efforts of past editors, the current staff uses Quark Express software to design all of its pages in the newsroom before sending them electronically to be printed at the Daily Item in Sunbury.

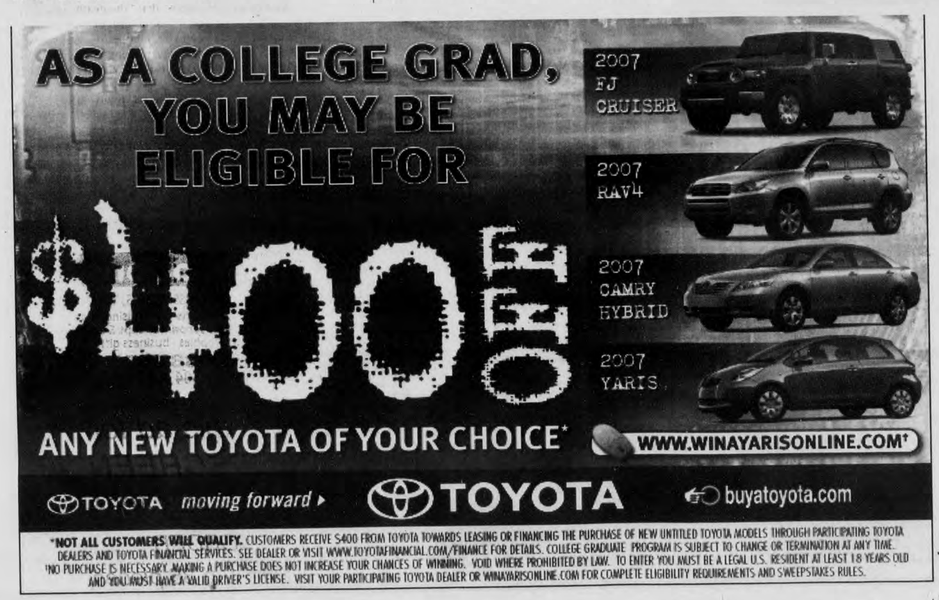
Publishing a student newspaper at a university without a journalism program has been a constant challenge for staff members. Students volunteer long hours — without pay or course credit — while trying to maintain academic excellence.

The effects of this became most apparent in 1983, when The Bucknellian printed its "last issue" because no one was willing take on the responsibility of editor.

The Bucknellian saw a thriving succession of editors and staff members in recent years, and despite hardships, the paper managed to survive 110 years documenting University history in its pages.

"Writing is a struggle against silence."
—Carlos Fuentes

Write for News
email etu001@



AS A COLLEGE GRAD, YOU MAY BE ELIGIBLE FOR
$400 OFF
2007 FJ CRUISER
2007 RAV4
2007 CAMRY HYBRID
2007 YARIS
ANY NEW TOYOTA OF YOUR CHOICE*
WWW.WINAYARISONLINE.COM†
TOYOTA moving forward
TOYOTA
buyatoyota.com
*NOT ALL CUSTOMERS WILL QUALIFY. CUSTOMERS RECEIVE $400 FROM TOYOTA TOWARDS LEASING OR FINANCING THE PURCHASE OF NEW UNTITLED TOYOTA MODELS THROUGH PARTICIPATING TOYOTA DEALERS AND TOYOTA FINANCIAL SERVICES. SEE DEALER OR VISIT WWW.TOYOTAFINANCIAL.COM/FINANCE FOR DETAILS. COLLEGE GRADUATE PROGRAM IS SUBJECT TO CHANGE OR TERMINATION AT ANY TIME. †NO PURCHASE IS NECESSARY. MAKING A PURCHASE DOES NOT INCREASE YOUR CHANCES OF WINNING. VOID WHERE PROHIBITED BY LAW. TO ENTER YOU MUST BE A LEGAL U.S. RESIDENT AT LEAST 18 YEARS OLD AND YOU MUST HAVE A VALID DRIVER'S LICENSE. VISIT YOUR PARTICIPATING TOYOTA DEALER OR WINAYARISONLINE.COM FOR COMPLETE ELIGIBILITY REQUIREMENTS AND SWEEPSTAKES RULES.

Thanks so much to our writers!

—the news editors

Nancy's Nu-Wave Salon
look your best
10% Discount with Student ID
524-2315
www.nancysnuwave.com
Main Street (Rte 45) - Mantandon

Chia Yi Hou '07 participates in world ultimate club championship

Courtesy of Chou Yi Hou

7 Express huddles before their game in the world ultimate club championship in Perth, Australia. Chou Yi Hou '07 has been playing ultimate Frisbee since junior year of high school.

NILANJANA SAHA
News Editor

When Chia Yi Hou '07 arrived in Perth, the largest city on the western coast of Australia, she found herself surrounded by 2,000 Frisbee players from all over the world eager to participate in the world ultimate club championship.

The tournament, hosted by the World Flying Disc Federation (WFDF), took place Nov. 11-18. Teams from 17 different countries traveled to Perth to participate in the tournament. Hou's team, 7 Express, was one of 13 from United States that participated.

"The whole idea behind playing ultimate is the spirit of the game. The games are self-officiated and often there are no referees. The ultimate community is very warm and friendly," Hou said.

Hou has been playing for 7 Express since her junior year of high school. This New York City-based team was named after the number seven subway that connects Manhattan and Queens.

In the 80s and 90s, the train carried ultimate players from all over the city to Flushing Meadows-Corona Park, where most practices and games were held. The name of the team serves as a symbol of ultimate history as well as the "express" style of the seven players who are on the field during the game.

The team was created in 2000, reuniting members from high school ultimate Frisbee teams.

"It is different playing in NY City than here at Bucknell," Hou said. "There is no available field space and since the team is co-ed, there are completely different roles to adapt to."

Her team qualified for the tournament by playing well in the past and accepting a bid in early spring. Teams competed in one of the four divisions: women's, open, co-ed or masters, which is for members 35 and older.

The main idea of the tournament is to allow ultimate Frisbee players from different parts of the world to come together, Hou said. Participants even brought gifts for the teams they played against.

"Even though you are competing against other teams, it is really nice to hang out with them after the games," Hou said.

During the eight-day tournament, the teams also had an opportunity to visit some of the tourist attractions near Perth.

Hou has been a member of the Peace Frogs, the women's club ultimate Frisbee team at the University, since her first year on campus.

"Members of the ultimate team here have been my friends and my family," Hou said.

Although the Peace Frogs are a club team, members practice four to five days a week, including winter training.

"Being a Peace Frog has been an experience I would not trade for the world. I have made life-long friends while falling in love with a sport I never would have otherwise," Allison Schuessler '07 said.

The team participates in four tournaments in the fall and about six during the spring semester.

"At each tournament, we play about six to eight games in two days against teams from all over the northeast," Hou said. The team also travels to a tournament in Georgia every year.

"Playing ultimate Frisbee is a great way to get off campus and compete with other schools. We get to play teams from all over in a competitive and supporting atmosphere," Lucy Conklin '08 said.

Hou plans to continue playing ultimate Frisbee after she graduates. According to Hou, 7 Express hopes to travel to the Ultimate Players Association nationals someday.

"It is the most prestigious annual tournament there is and it would be amazing if we could get there," Hou said.

Courtesy of Chou Yi Hou

Chou Yi Hou '07 and two members of her team relax after their ultimate Frisbee game. Hou's team, 7 Express traveled to Perth, Australia to participate in the world ultimate club championship.

News Briefs

Honeybees trained to detect explosives

According to CNN.com, scientists at the Los Alamos National Laboratory in New Mexico trained honeybees to sniff out and recognize explosives in anything, including cars, roadside bombs and belt bombs used by suicide bombers.

Researchers said the honeybees stick out their proboscises, the tubes used to suck nectar from flowers, when they detect explosives. The program, dubbed the Stealthy Insect Sensor Project, trained bees by rewarding them with sugar water when they successfully recognized smells from dynamite, C-4 plastic explosives and even grains from howitzers used in improvised explosives in Iraq.

"We are very excited at the success of our research as it could have far-reaching implications for both defense and homeland security," research scientist Tim Haarmann said.

The bees could be placed in shoebox sized, hand-held detectors and used in airport security and roadside security checks. The findings were published on Monday.

Fire kills Missouri student

Officials believe an early morning fire in a fraternity house killed a student from the University of Missouri's St. Louis campus.

The fire reportedly broke out around 3:45 a.m. on Wednesday. There were three students living in the off-campus Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity house, and only two escaped when the fire broke out.

University spokesman Bob Samples told CNN.com that the victim has not been identified, but they believe it to be the third resident of the house. There were no other injuries and authorities started investigating the cause of the fire.

They ruled out arson. "We want to find out how it happened and work from there," Samples said according to the Associated Press. The fraternity has another house near the campus with four residents.

US places sanction on luxury items

In an attempt to get North Korea's attention and cooperation the United States placed a ban on the sale of luxury items to the country. The ban is aimed at making it more difficult for Kim Jong Il to obtain some of his favorite products.

According to the Associated Press, these include iPods, Rolex watches, artwork, expensive cars and cognac, one of the leader's favorite drinks.

The United States has the United Nation's cooperation in the sanction, which is the first of its kind to ban specific goods not related to military or defense and to specifically annoy one particular foreign leader.

"It's a new concept; it's kind of creative," said William Reinsch, a former senior Commerce Department official.

The United States recognized that Kim Jong Il would be able to obtain these items through the black market and it would be difficult to enforce the ban. Other member countries of the United Nations are also developing their own lists of banned exports to North Korea.

Former Russian spy poisoned in Britain

On Nov. 23, Alexander Litvinenko, former Russian spy, died in a London hospital from radiation poisoning resulting from large amount of polonium 210 present in his body.

Traces of the poison were found in his home and in a restaurant he visited the day he became sick. British health officials reported that Litvinenko had to have eaten, inhaled or received the poison through a wound.

British officials told The Washington Post that such an incident is unprecedented in Britain, and has created tension between the British and Russian governments.

The Washington Post reported that "the death provoked accusations that Russia continues to use Cold War-style tactics to eliminate critics abroad." Litvinenko was an outspoken critic of the Russian government and, from his deathbed, he accused Russian President Vladimir Putin of poisoning him.

The Russian government denied its involvement in his death.

Domino's Pizza
Proud Sponsor of Bucknell
Lewisburg (570) 524-9000
1722 Market St.
Hours: Sun-Thurs 11am - 1 am/Fri-Sat 11am - 3am
MANIC MONDAY $7.99 LARGE 1-TOPPING PIZZA - DELIVERED!
2xTUESDAY BUY ANY LARGE PIZZA AT REGULAR MENU PRICE & RECEIVE A 2ND OF EQUAL VALUE FOR FREE
HOT BROWNIES FREE OVEN BAKED BROWNIES
DOUBLE DEAL $12.99 2 MEDIUMS $14.99 2 LARGES
ORDER ONLINE WWW.DOMINOS.COM

$250 CASH
Sign on BONUS
Call for details
3 & 4 Bedroom Houses
CLOSE TO CAMPUS
WHIRLPOOL
WASHER / DRYER
DISHWASHER
STOVE & FRIG
Newly renovated houses
available 2006/2007
570-524-5714 / 570-412-4831
or 570-524-5745 /
570-490-2922

Igniting Creative Ideas
On Fire Promotions
by trautman associates, inc.
promotional products · fundraising items
embroidered & screenprinted caps & apparel
awards · trophies · business gifts
800-538-8009
Lewisburg Showroom 434 Market 570-522-8009
www.onfirepromotions.com
Bring in this ad for one FREE SCREEN!!!
GOOD ON ANY APPAREL ORDER
(minimum 36 pieces)

The Bucknellian
Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue
Volume 138, Number 12
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu
http://www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Editor-in-Chief
Catherine Heverling '07

Associate Editor of Content
Jamie Jacobson '08

Associate Editor of Layout
Rina Van Orden '08

Business Manager
Jared Napolitano '08

Senior Editor
Drew Larson '08

News Editors
Evan Unger '09
Nilanjana Saha '09
Michelle Laxer '09

Opinions Editors
Hallie Stebbins '08
Michael Dippery '08

Sports Editors
Matthew Saylor '08
Barbara Perlman '09
Brian Mulligan '08

Features Editors
Julia Fuchs '09
Brianna DelValle '10

Arts & Entertainment Editors
Kimberly Kane '08
Lily Beauvilliers '09

Photography Editors
Ryan Winn '08
Ellyn Ercolano '09

Chief Copy Editors
Kathleen Conti '08
Greg Hamilton '08

Advertising Managers
Meredith Reighard '07
Kat Wallis '07
Katie Casteel '08
Emily Senko '08

Office Manager
Kate Wood '07

Circulation Manager
Adam Kahler '07

Cartoonist
Juliana Su '09

Adviser
James F. Lee

Op-Ed Policy

The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editor- in- chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 600 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

Publishing Information

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

Subscription Information

Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Bucknell University, Box C- 3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print office.

Advertising Policy

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577- 1085. Copyright © 2006 The Bucknellian

The Bucknellian EDITORIAL

Journalism essential to liberal arts education

A liberal arts education is supposed to produce a well-rounded student. A liberal arts student is supposed to have the skills to analyze literature, identify types of geologic strata and paint with watercolors.

Perhaps those are lofty ambitions; however, what a liberal arts education should offer to its pupils is a wide array of courses in many different fields. Here at the University, we have math majors, engineers, English buffs, management teams and even students of neuroscience. But what we don't have is a journalism program.

In fact, after perusing the course catalogue it is obvious that students interested in journalism and communications only have two classes to choose from. The exact reasons as to why no journalism department currently exists are unclear. What is clear is that by looking through 110 years worth of The Bucknellian's yellowed pages-- or even just this one issue-- there is student interest in such a department.

Not every English major wants to focus on creative writing or medieval literature. What about a student passionate about the mass media or news writing? Or a photographer who not only wants to learn how to develop black-and-white photos in the darkroom, but also write articles to accompany them?

U.S. News and World Report recently named Princeton University, Harvard University and Yale University as the top three universities in the country. As the University strives to implement its Strategic Plan and improve academically, it should consider that all three of these institutions invite students to enroll in journalism programs.

Just like the Plan for the University, a new department would have to be carefully constructed, but the University might not have to look far for advice. Maybe Leslie Moonves '71, President and CEO of CBS Corporation could give us some pointers. Or Bill Saporito '76, editor-at-large of Time Magazine and former editor of The Bucknellian, could suggest how we might cultivate the talent of the University's young journalists.

Perhaps the administration has not created a journalism department because they think having graduates in the communications field won't bring as much prestige or recognition to the University as the next stem-cell researcher or biomedical engineer. Alumni such as Moonves and Saporito have proven otherwise. Besides, the recognition of our successful alumni would not exist if it were not for the journalists that tell their stories.

It is time for the University's aspiring journalists to be recognized as well and be given the opportunity to develop their skills and explore a true liberal arts education.

Letters to the Editor

New student group urges Darfur activism

To the Editor:

Most Americans cannot even fathom what it is like to be completely unsafe in their own country. Although the terrorist attacks that took place on Sept. 11 were horrific and terrible, the shock that American citizens experienced that day does not compare to the fear that is alive every day in the hearts and minds of Darfurians in Sudan. Two million citizens of Darfur, who have witnessed the slaughter of nearly 400,000 fellow Sudanese, have been violently displaced and uprooted from their homeland by their nation's government and its proxy militias. University students, I urge you to please learn about what is taking place in Darfur today. It is a conflict that our generation has the responsibility to take action against.

Students from The Catalyst, Students for Fair Trade, the Conservatives Club, Global and Social Justice Residential Colleges and other campus organizations have met to discuss the implementation of a student-led awareness and activism campaign to encourage students to take a stand against the genocide in Darfur. (If you would like to be a part of this group, please contact Amy Bruno '09 at asb024@.) Over the next few weeks and throughout the spring semester, we will provide programs and other venues to educate you about the conflict and how you can take action against it. Please participate and support both our efforts and the people of Darfur. This is a global crisis that your children will ask about. When they ask about what you did to stop the genocide in Darfur, what will you say?

Keep your eyes open for campus e-mails and informational flyers.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

Amy Bruno '09
Brian Thiede '09
The Darfur Awareness/Activism Committee

Volunteer Services thanks participating students

To the Editor:

On behalf of the Office of Volunteer Services, I would like to thank all those who contributed to the Turkey and Trimmings Holiday Basket program. This year, University students, faculty, staff, administration and local residents combined to make 96 baskets. Through the campus community's extreme generosity, we were able to deliver all of these Thanksgiving surprises to local families.

Thank you for helping to make this program a success. We, in addition to the 96 local families, appreciate your help and warmth during the Thanksgiving holiday.

Sincerely,

Jenna Camann '07

Much thanks for Habitat support

To the Editor:

Recently, the Executive Board of Habitat for Humanity had the privilege to meet with the spouses of the University trustees to discuss the continual work of the chapter on campus and in the surrounding community. After introductions and a brief lunch at Gabriel's, we gave our guests a tour of the build site in New Berlin where University students have been helping construct a new home for a local family throughout the semester.

By the end of the afternoon, our guests were extremely enthused and supportive of what the chapter and the campus community have been accomplishing. With the help of a few generous spouses, an impromptu fundraiser was set up at the trustee reception later that evening, where we collected donations, helping to bring our fundraising total for the semester to over $6,000.

Thank you to all of the trustees, students, faculty and staff who have helped us achieve our goals: to complete the University's second sponsored Habitat house by December and to begin fundraising for our next home. Our semester would not have been so successful without the support on campus and from the local community.

Thank you again for all your much needed help.

Sincerely,

The Bucknell University Habitat for Humanity Executive Board

"Great minds discuss ideas; Average minds discuss events; Small minds discuss people."
– Eleanor Roosevelt

Write for Opinions

E-mail
hstebbin@

New scheduling system shows misconception of priorities

Extracurricular activities are helpful, but students are here to learn

By Robin Stevenson
Contributing Writer

If you are an avid Bucknellian reader, you noticed the article on the front page of the Nov. 17 issue with the uncontroversial headline, "Pilot program looks to improve athlete registration." If you did not read it, let me sum it up for you. This semester, the University launched a "pilot program" that allowed athletes to register for classes before the rest of their classmates. The ethics of such an "experiment" are questionable. What is more important is the message the administration is sending to the student body with such a program.

At this point you may be thinking, as I was, "Hey, what is so special about athletes that they should register for classes before me?" After much thought, my answer remains: nothing.

According to the University Web site, the logic behind this program allows students "involved in numerous activities to have a balance [between] academics and the many things Bucknell offers."

It seems the purpose of this is to allow those who are very involved to select a class schedule that does not conflict with their extracurricular activities. By doing this, the University is losing sight of its main purpose: to be a place of learning—not just academic learning, but also a place to learn life's responsibilities, such as time management. Extracurricular activities are clearly valuable, and I am sure most people are involved in at least one they deeply care about. But they are what their name implies: extra.

Whether you are involved in athletics, student government, a campus job, a Greek organization or other activities, they are supposed to take a backseat to your academic obligation. There should be no need to schedule classes around these things; they are not as important as your classes. Remember, we are all students first, even if we are student-athletes.

The amount of discretion the University can exercise comes into question with a program like this. Apparently the pilot is most "convenient" for athletes. But if this program comes into full effect, what kind of criteria would be used to select those with the privilege of choosing their classes first? So far it seems varsity athletes are important enough; what about Greeks? They are very dedicated to their organizations, and they certainly give a lot back to the University through community service. Maybe not as much as the basketball teams in terms of prestige, but they still offer something.

What about students with jobs on campus? If the University cannot manage to meet a student's financial need, and he or she has to work two jobs just so he or she can pay tuition, does that take any kind of priority? Perhaps unfathomable in this sea of popped collars, but true—I know students like this. For some campus jobs, students put in over 30 hours a week—is this time commitment enough to qualify them for preferential scheduling? They have to schedule work around those silly, inconvenient classes, or they cannot study here at all, so why should they not have first dibs for the most convenient class times? If I never had a Friday class, I could work more hours, and more tuition can be paid.

What about people who hold executive positions in clubs? They donate a lot of time, too. What if someone is involved in all of these things at the same time? Where is the cutoff? Whose extracurricular activities are important enough to warrant special treatment?

The University is losing sight of its main purpose: to be a place of learning—not just academic learning, but also a place to learn life's responsibilities, such as time management.

The article suggested that certain majors should get preference as well. With all of these vitally important extras, how do we organize them all into an early scheduling bracket? Quite an ambitious task for the University—I would not want to be the administrator who has to tell a student (or a student's parent) that being Bucknell Student Government president or third string on the football team is important enough for special scheduling, but being president of a fraternity or a dedicated member of Activities and Campus Events is just not good enough. But at least we will all know which activities are the most important to the administration.

And what about students who know their limits and do not overbook themselves in extras—who are here to learn and know they need more study time, so they only take on activities with small time commitments? Well, it seems that these students, who managed to be mature about the amount of overload they can handle and still get their work done, get punished by scheduling after everyone else. Too bad, Sally Studious—you will have to wait until every varsity athlete in your class has picked up all those conveniently timed seminars before you can pick something you would really like to take.

But this plan's major flaw is not in its application, it is in the principle. The idea that the University would so openly place athletics, or any extracurricular activity, above a student's academics proves that the administration has its priorities in the wrong order, and that it is encouraging students to misplace theirs as well. The administration should set an example by supporting a system that puts academics first. But it seems that your academics are not the University's priority. At least now that you know where the University stands on your education, you have time to hit the (brand new) gym before next semester: we will all need to pick up a varsity sport if we want to stay enrolled at all.

My Favorite Mistake

No Academy Award for annoying moviegoers

By Michael Dippery
Opinions Editor

It is not often I go to the movie theater, mainly because I do not want to spend a gazillion dollars to see a movie I do not really want to see, and most of the stuff coming out this holiday is stuff I do not want to see. So it was a rare, cherished occasion that I traveled to the theater over Thanksgiving Break.

Naturally, I went to see the new James Bond film, "Casino Royale." Having been a huge Bond fan since I was a kid (and I got hooked on the books before the movies), I make it a point to see every new Bond film when it opens. As you can imagine, I was pretty excited by this Bond film.

I eagerly waited in an unusually long line for my ticket. (I guess a lot of people really, really wanted to see "Happy Feet.") I was not sure what to expect from "Casino Royale." I had not read many reviews, and I was anxious to see if Daniel Craig could fill Bond's shoes (he did, by the way). I was also excited to see how "Casino Royale" stacked up to other beloved Bond films.

The movie was great—but the movie experience was not. I had the misfortune of sitting directly in front of a bunch of immature high school kids. Clearly they were under the mistaken assumption that they were brilliant, because they took any and all opportunities to make what they obviously thought were witty comments about the film. Mostly they were making rude catcalls and other suggestive remarks about the women in the film—who are, admittedly, in the film primarily as sex symbols, but they are high-class sex symbols, for God's sake, and you cannot just go making catcalls at them.

And they were not merely making these comments amongst themselves — no, these guys were such in-demand comedians that they had to make their "jokes" heard by everyone in the theater.

Then, of course, they had the nerve to make a critical comment every time someone's cell phone went off — which happened several times during the film. In fact, another kid behind me, unaffiliated with the previously mentioned hucksters, spent most of the movie talking to someone (his girlfriend, I gathered) on his cell phone.

Back in the day, we did not make crude comments in movie theaters. We knew better. Our parents had actually taught us some manners.

We did not talk on cell phones, either. We probably did not even have cell phones. That is the problem with the youth of today — they get cell phones when they are 13, but no training in manners.

I swear, these days, kids think they can just do anything and get away with it. There is no respect for the hard-working citizen who is trying to relax by spending his hard-earned cash on a highly anticipated film.

I blame MTV.

I certainly made no mistake in seeing Craig in "Casino Royale"—but I did make a mistake assuming I would have a peaceful movie-watching experience. Let this be a lesson to you, before you start to have kids: nothing is peaceful when upstart high school kids are involved.

Olympic medal winner an inspiring role model

Gold medalist overcame adversity in race to success

By Christy Totten
Staff Writer

You may have heard that every passion has its destiny, but what you may not know is that the man who first coined this phrase spoke at the Weis Center on Tuesday evening. His name is Billy Mills, the legendary runner who pulled, arguably, the greatest Olympic upset to date when he won the gold in the 1964 Tokyo 10,000-meter race.

Mills grew up on an Oglala Sioux Indian reservation in South Dakota. He was orphaned at the age of 12 and was left to battle through an adolescence plagued by poverty. Despite the obstacles, he became a very successful collegiate distance runner at the University of Kansas.

I had to pick my jaw up off the ground after watching the video of Billy's famed Olympic race, which was projected on the big screen. Mills found the strength to win that race by digging deeper into his physical being and mental psyche than any man or woman had ever dared to do before him. He was not a well-known runner entering the race and was nowhere close to being considered a threat to some of the other top runners in the field, one of whom was the world record holder. There is always something redeeming about an underdog walking away with the victory. The spectator thinks, "hey if he can do it, I can too!" I was not around in 1964 to watch the race, but I am pretty sure the people who did see it witnessed something they never forgot.

For the majority of his life, Mills did not have parents to shield him from the horrible reality of racism. His talk was not focused on the "woe is me" side of his life, but Mills did tell one particularly painful story. When he was a junior at the University of Kansas, he ran his third stellar national cross country race in a row, placing high enough to garner the coveted All-American status.

After the race, the chosen few were gathered by cameramen and race officials to be photographed. It was at this point that Billy Mills, the "darker skinned one," was asked to step out of the picture.

The more I listened to Mills speak about his experiences and his resulting self-empowerment, the more I found myself tuning him out. It wasn't that he was not interesting; he was a great speaker. He had the audience completely engaged with his enthusiasm. But for me, my mind was going crazy trying to fathom the injustices he suffered. How can people be so ignorant? It's an age-old question, but one that is now more real than ever for me. Billy Mills is both an honest family man and a gold medal winner, and yet he still finds himself falling victim to stereotypes. If people cannot see past stereotypes in a man like Billy Mills, is there any hope of getting rid of our ignorance where race is concerned?

How is it that people can be so ignorant? Billy Mills is both an honest family man and a gold medal winner, and yet he still finds himself falling victim to societal stereotypes.

Billy Mills said that every passion has its destiny, but I've noticed that passion in adults seems to be a rare trait. This is all the more reason why a man like Billy Mills should be respected. Despite his disadvantages, he had the courage to work harder than anybody ever had before him. For this reason I cannot give up on the hope that society will eventually overcome the discrimination that threatens to run rampant today.

Thanks to our writers and readers who shared their opinion with us this semester.

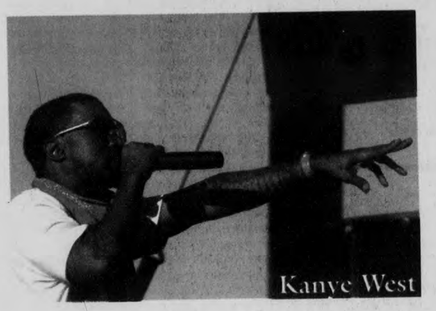
Looking to advertise within the Bucknell Community?

Contact our advertising department now if you would like to advertise next semester.

Contact The Bucknellian Business Department today to get an Advertising Guide by calling 570-577-1085 or e-mailing bucknellianads@bucknell.edu.

Semester in Review

The University welcomed the new Director of Public Safety, Jason Friedberg, at the beginning of the Fall semester. One of his main goals is to improve the relationship between officers and students by making officers more approachable and visible on campus.



Sigma Phi Epsilon Fraternity was victimized in a string of vandalism incidents on campus. Brothers found racial slurs and derogatory terms spray-painted on the outside of their house. Two cars in front of the house were also vandalized. Public Safety had to rely on student cooperation and anonymous tips in its attempt to catch the vandals. No arrests were made.

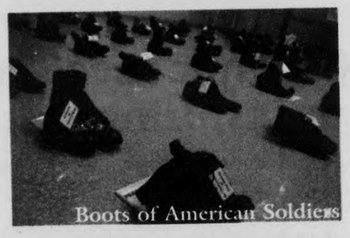
Looking back at the biggest news stories of the semester...

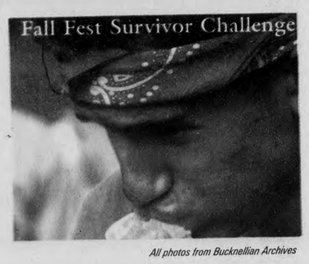
Delta Upsilon fraternity returned to the University and recruited enough men to recolonize this fall. The chapter was removed from campus in Fall 2003 for numerous violations. Theta Chi fraternity returned last fall after a five-year hiatus and brothers recruited enough members to move back into their on-campus house this semester. Both organizations spent the semester establishing their images on campus.

The University brought three major guests to campus this semester: author Joyce Carol Oates, rapper Kanye West and comedian Lewis Black. Oates was this year's recipient of the Janet Weis Fellow in Contemporary Letters, West performed at the Fall Concert and Black was the main entertainer for Homecoming Weekend.

Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice canceled a scheduled discussion at the University. The Office of Communications received word Rice would not be able to attend the discussion and quickly sent out an e-mail to the campus community, alumni, parents and the media. The likely cause of Rice's cancellation was the announcement that the North Korean government successfully tested a nuclear device.

Beginning in the summer, the University began to reorganize the administration in order to fulfill the changes dictated in the Strategic Plan. Provost Mary DeCredico e- mailed the campus community in July announcing that Gerald Commerford was replacing Richard Ferraro as Dean of Students. The e-mail made no mention of the whereabouts of Ferraro. New additions to the administration include Jason Friedberg, the new Public Safety Director and Pete Mackey, the new Chief Office of Communications.





All photos from Bucknellian Archives

The Bucknellian
DIVERSIONS
December 1, 2006

NEPA's Next Top Model

Oluchi Onyewuchi '08 is one of the Top 5 in this version of "America's Top Model"
See page C7

Looking for some holiday cheer?

Look no further than our two-page holiday spread, featuring photos of the campus community decked out for the holidays, including Brubanker's (left). Hold our mistletoe-clad pages over your head as an excuse to steal a few holiday kisses, or check out our seasonal movie and music recommendations. Don't forget to take a peak at Mer's advice for finding gifts and having fun this holiday season! It all starts on page D4.

Staying healthy from finals to New Years

Sleep and success— a vital connection

By Rajaa Qadri
Writer

Don't you just hate the sound of the alarm clock in the morning?

I bet many of you throw away your alarm clocks just to get a few more minutes of sleep and are eventually awakened by your roommate. If you happen to live in a single, you may be late for class or, on a not-so-lucky day, miss your class entirely. I even know people who sleep straight through their alarm clocks. This is one reason why almost all students hate early morning classes.

So, is it just because it is early that we cannot seem to wake up or is it because we did not get enough sleep the night before?

One reason could be that after a long day we go to bed at 3 a.m. and set our alarm to wake us up at 7:30 a.m. for an 8 o'clock class. Sometimes we get in the habit of staying up till 3 in the morning without realizing it.

According to a survey conducted by Brown University Health Services, college students are among the most sleep-deprived people in the country. According to a 2001 study, only 11 percent of college students have good sleep quality, and 73 percent have occasional sleep problems. The same study found that 18 percent of college men and 30 percent of college women reported suffering from insomnia within the past three months.

We cannot always blame students for not getting enough sleep.

A rigorous study schedule and part-time, sometimes even full-time, jobs contribute to sleep deprivation. When exams approach, it gets worse as students may be faced with do-or-die situations.

According to an article by Nick Dennis of Polytechnic Online, "Nothing can substitute hours of studying in preparation for a test, but getting enough sleep and eating a good diet also play significant roles in your performance. For starters, we should all be getting eight hours of sleep a night, as it is the optimal time our body needs to recharge. But, even I cannot remember the last time I got eight hours of sleep. It can be guaranteed, however, that pulling an all-nighter the night before the test will probably hurt you more than it will help. So study in advance so you can get that good night's sleep—you will feel charged in the morning and much less stressed."

Sleep deprivation has more harmful long term effects than most people think. Lack of sleep can weakens our immune system and causes tension, irritability, depression and confusion. These mood changes may also result from irregular sleeping patterns, including sleeping in on the weekends. Wonder why your friend has been so cranky the past few days? Sleep depravation may be the reason.

For those of you who do not know, it is a well documented fact that students who regularly get a good night's sleep perform significantly better in studies than sleep deprived students.

So what should we do to get the sleep we need?

The key to good sleep is relaxation. Try not to indulge yourself in many activities in the evening. Avoid listening to loud music and dancing.

See SLEEPING page C3

Keeping active this holiday season

By Genna Jerrard
Writer

What is the first thing that comes to mind when you think of the holiday season? OK, what is the first thing that comes to mind besides presents? FOOD.

Every Thanksgiving and Christmas we are surrounded by delicious food. There are appetizers, meats, side dishes and specialties from many ethnicities—not to mention every dessert imaginable. So how do we maintain a healthy lifestyle when we have decadent treats tempting us from every angle?

The key is to set personal goals for yourself and try your best to abide by them.

This Thanksgiving was no different from past years for my family. We are Italian, so if every other day of the year is centered around food, you can only imagine how important food is on Thanksgiving and Christmas. But after another year of rolling away from the Thanksgiving table (yes, rolling), I decided it may be a good idea to set better goals for Christmas.

If you have tried dieting during November or December, you know it is a lost cause. But hey, dieting is for January, right? So if you plan to start a strict diet over the holidays, you may as well throw in the towel right now.

Even if I had the discipline to make it to January following my diet, I would not want to do it. A large chunk of the celebration would be missing if we really restricted ourselves. That is not justification for you to go crazy; there are ways to enjoy everything the holiday season has to offer without going so overboard that you will regret your overindulgence.

One of the most important changes that will promote a healthier holiday lifestyle is your mindset. The holidays should not be primarily about food, but a time of celebration with friends and family.

Something else you could do is help prepare the food for the holidays. If your family makes its own staple dishes every year, help out with the cooking. I look forward to making food even more than eating it because it allows me to spend lots of time with my mother and my grandmother in the kitchen.

Put on some Christmas music or movies in the background and get to work. Besides promoting family bonding, cooking allows you to see just how much work goes into making those holiday specialties. You will appreciate the food much more when it is finally presented for eating, and you will take your time enjoying it rather than stuffing yourself.

When making food choices over the holidays, do so wisely. Just because it is the holiday season does not mean your calorie count suddenly disappears.

"I try to maintain a healthy balance of foods during the celebrations, as well as try to fill up on healthier foods," Megan Brown '08 said.

Try to eat foods made from unprocessed ingredients. The rule I try to live by is to eat foods that are as close to their natural states as possible. Try to stay away from anything breaded or fried, as these items will add excess fat and calories. If you eat them, try to do so in moderation. And if you are already full, do not add to your discomfort by eating more.

Finally—you knew it was coming—try to reintroduce yourself to the gym if you feel as though you are in danger of gaining weight. It will not only help justify eating that third dessert, but it will also help you keep yourself active during those days that can be lazy and sluggish.

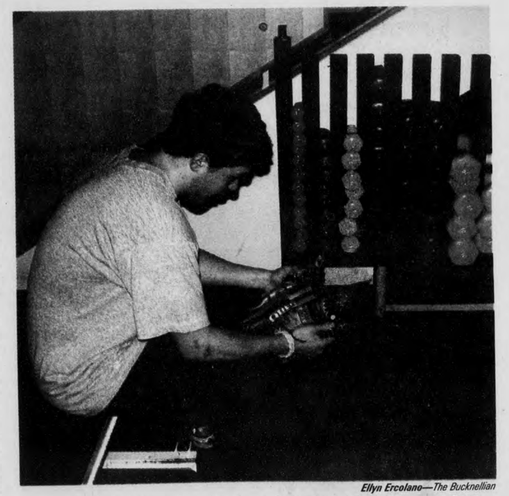
"I run track for the University, so during the holidays running really motivates me to get out and stay in shape," Tony Cillo '10 said.

Other students agree that going to the gym is a great way to ward off the holiday pounds.

"I really enjoy swimming, so I try to swim twice a day whenever I can," Carlyn Donley '07 said.

Any form of physical activity is beneficial and does not have to include the gym to be considered exercise. Just get out and do whatever you enjoy so it does not seem like a chore.

It is likely most of us will eat a little too much over the holidays, but by keeping these suggestions in mind it is possible to maintain a healthy lifestyle over the break. Just remember to enjoy everything that makes the holidays so special while savoring those culinary treats in moderation.



Ellyn Ercolano—The Bucknellian

With all the food within arm's reach at home during the holidays, it is easy to forget about fitness and splurge on all the goodness. The winter break forces students to make the choice between gorging themselves and staying healthy and fit.

Another tantalizing edition brought to you by ...

Ms. Love and the Bubble

Dear Ms. O,

My parents are your typical middle-aged folks. However, when I'm at home, I've noticed they have sex a lot—several times a week. Of course, I've never actually seen them, but trust me, the signs are there.

On the one hand, I think that it's great that a middle-aged couple is in a happy marriage and still have a chance to "get it on" on a regular basis. Unlike most young people, I'm not disgusted by the thought of others—even my parents—having sex. Sex is natural and should be celebrated, not viewed as something disgusting. Given that many marriages are plagued by unhappiness, I applaud my parents for celebrating their love as often as they want.

On the other hand, I must admit to being a bit disheartened by the fact that my parents have sex more often than I do. Come on—shouldn't young people be having sex more often than their parents, since they can be a bit more wild and probably find it more enjoyable?

What are your thoughts on parents having sex on a frequent basis?

— Sexually Frustrated Son

Dear Sexually Frustrated Son,

You're right, it is great that your parents still "get it on."

Think about it. Don't you want to be having sex when you're their age too? Parents have the same desires and needs that we do, and those feelings don't just disappear. They're human, after all.

Sex is an important aspect of a healthy marriage, and it's also an enjoyable pastime. Your parents have to have something to do with their time now that you're away at college.

It may make you feel uncomfortable that it seems your parents are having sex more often than you are, but you have plenty of time to get your sex life going.

I've heard it said that sex only gets better as you get older. It makes sense — the more you do it, the more you know about it. You're able to be more comfortable with your sexuality, try more things, and even have a deeper connection with your partner.

Your parents have a much deeper relationship than you have now and have experienced years of life together. It takes a long time to get to that point and is a very different place in life from where you are now.

One good thing about your parents' active sex life is that it sets a good example for you. You have seen that love and sex can be kept alive throughout life, and it will remind you to do the same when you get older.

However, these are your parents we're talking about, and associating them with sex is sometimes not easy to stomach.

If you're at home and you think they are involved in private activities, try distracting yourself with a book or some television, and if need be, turn up the stereo. If you need to, leave the house and go do something fun and relaxing. But odds are your parents don't want to make their sexual escapades too obvious to you and won't engage in anything too scarring when you're around.

As for young people having more sex than their parents, don't always count on that. People reach their sexual peaks at different ages and experience different levels of sensuality. Lots of sex can happen at any point in life.

You may try more things when you're younger or engage in "wild" behavior such as sex in public places or in contortionist positions. But to be honest, (you may not want to think about this), you don't know what's going on behind your parents' closed door.

And you probably don't want to know.

Just hope that that's you in 30 years.

~Ms. O

E-mail me your questions at MsOintheBubble@yahoo.com or send them through campus mail to Ms. O, The Bucknellian, C-3952. All authors of questions will remain anonymous.

"Turn your Power ON and Add LIFE to your Years!"

MORRISON'S ADVANCED CHIROPRACTIC CARE

Michael D. Morrison D.C.
1205 W Market Street
Lewisburg, PA 17837
Office: 570-523-1221

A Healthy Spine Equals a Healthy YOU!

Bucknell Students may receive a free exam and x-rays (if needed) with mention of this advertisement.

British characters light up the screen

By Sarah Novello
Staff Writer

❖ Movie Review

Courtesy of imbd.com

James Bond (Daniel Craig) crawling through the sands of the Bahamas. Because "Casino Royale" is a prequel, this Bond is more prone to acts of physical prowess.

There are many rules about how to be a good child, but one of my favorites is the following: if my Dad or Mom pays, then I'm in.

It is this rule, and that I was not involved in the Thanksgiving dinner conversation about "The Queen," which brought me to the cinema twice this break.

Dad's pick was the new James Bond movie, "Casino Royale." He grew up watching James Bond movies and they are the only films that he would ever see in the theater without my mother. He piled my three brothers and me into his sedan, and off we went. In total, the tickets cost over $45, and about 20 minutes into the film, my normally frugal father leaned over and whispered something along the lines of "it was worth the $45." All five of us left the theater satisfied.

"Casino Royale" marks the introduction of Daniel Craig as James Bond. He has improved upon his predecessor's portrayal of the charming character.

Craig is a much more physical Bond than Pierce Brosnan. The screen is no longer packed with gadgets and super technology. In this movie, the writers replaced guns with fists and chase scenes in sports cars with chase scenes on foot. This made the film more thrilling than the previous Bond movies. Do not fear – the classic Bond cars, shootouts and women all made appearances, just in more sophisticated ways.

Since the film begins when Bond receives his "double O" status, it is appropriate that Craig's Bond is slightly more reckless and unpredictable than previous ones. The character is younger and has not discovered himself yet.

For example, when the bartender asks if Bond wants his martini shaken or stirred, he replies, "Does it look like I give a damn?"

This fresher character makes the film stand out from its earlier installments. In most of the other films, Bond is given an assignment and does it. Along the way he kills nearly everyone he meets. Except, of course, the gorgeous yet un-tamed woman who falls in love with him.

"Casino Royale" barely follows this pattern. It focuses on how Bond became the man who appears in all of the other Bond films.

"I think he was the best James Bond since Sean Connery," said my dad, who is much more of a James Bond aficionado than myself. "I really liked the Bond girl. She was very well-proportioned," he said, which naturally inspired a quick kick from my mother.

"She was better looking than your Queen," my Dad said.

I typically do not like spy/action movies because character development is often replaced with explosions and gadgets. In "Casino Royale," Craig's portrayal of Bond holds strong and audiences are drawn by his wit, not his gun skills. The last line of the film is suitably "Bond, James Bond," followed immediately by the theme song. It lets the audience know that this next stream of Bond films will be spectacular.

My mother wanted to see "The Queen" since her sister and (British) mother were raving about it all week. She is not an avid moviegoer and is embarrassed when Dad falls asleep at the cinema. She knew that he would not enjoy the film, so I was invited. Now that is love.

"The Queen" is the story of the relations between Prime Minister Tony Blair (Michael Sheen) and Queen Elizabeth II (Helen Mirren) as they cope with the public's reaction to Princess Diana's death. It is an interesting and generally unseen side of British politics which portrays the Queen's personality in a seemingly honest light. If it is an accurate representation, then it explains most of her actions during her 53-year reign.

"I just wonder if the Queen has seen it," my mom said. "And if she has, what does she think?"

"The Queen was at the premiere of 'Casino Royale,'" my youngest brother said. "She gets to go to all of them for free since she knighted James Bond."

Mom's pick was not the "cooler" of the two movies in my family's eyes. While she tried to tell me what she thought of "The Queen," the rest of my family kept interjecting about the awesome car in "Casino Royale."

"The Queen" is a docudrama, and thus lacked action and a significant storyline. It could easily be a History Channel segment. It feels very British in that it is clear, impartial and unexciting. Do not mistake this assessment as negative – it is a good film that depends on the character's interactions and acting rather than on blood and sex.

Mirren is fantastic. She validates why the Queen seems so private and cold. The British admire and respect their Queen. Mirren's spectacular performance will only strengthen these feelings.

"The film put a real human face to the Queen," my Mom said. "I thought Helen Mirren was great. I thought it was well-casted. It was enjoyable and lovely. I just really enjoyed it from an anglophile point of view."

While "The Queen" is far from a smash hit among American audiences, it is well done. Mirren will certainly be in the Oscar race next March.

Both "Casino Royale" and "The Queen" are enjoyable, but they definitely attract different crowds. Both Mom and Dad Novello were happy with their movie choices. I recommend both films, but "The Queen" will appeal only to certain people. Going home for Thanksgiving break turned out to be a useful way to see movies for free. Hopefully winter break will provide similar financial benefits.

Facing mortality with cinematic grace

Ferrell breaks out of his typical role in this comedy/drama/romance

By Kimberly Kane
Arts and Entertainment Editor

❖ Movie Review

Photo Credit

Harold Crick (Will Ferrell) inspecting his toothbrush for signs of an unseen narrator he hears in his head. Crick is an uncharacteristically serious character for Ferrell.

Mortality, fate and the importance of art. It sounds more like the title of a Foundation Seminar than the key ingredients of "Stranger than Fiction," the latest film starring comedian Will Ferrell. Yet in the midst of these heady topics lies a stunningly beautiful and moving film.

Ferrell has been one of the premiere comedic actors in recent years, but this film showcases his true talent in a serious role. In this film, Ferrell plays Harold Crick, an Internal Revenue Service (IRS) agent who lives with minimal human interaction and even less furniture. Crick's orderly life is interrupted one day by the voice of a British woman narrating his everyday routine and his thoughts.

The initial scenes of narration are hilarious, as Crick tries to discover the source of the voice. These are the only times in which Ferrell's dramatic performance wavers. His frantic shouting at his toothbrush and showerhead in search of the narrator are the only glimpses of Ferrell's manic comedy as we know it.

One ordinary afternoon, Crick overhears the British narrator mention his "imminent death." He consults a psychologist, played by Linda Hunt, who suggests he might be schizophrenic. Crick insists the voice is not talking to him, but rather about him, "accurately, and with a better vocabulary."

Crick ultimately seeks the aid of Professor Jules Hilbert (Dustin Hoffman). Hilbert works with Crick to discover he is the main character in a novel being written by a mysterious author. Hilbert assigns Crick the task of finding out whether he is living in a tragedy or a comedy.

"If it's a tragedy, you die. If it's a comedy, you get hitched," Hilbert said.

Enter Ana Pascal (Maggie Gyllenhaal), an anti-establishment baker who is trying to make the world a better place through cookies and tax fraud. Pascal refuses to pay the portion of her taxes that goes to military defense (much like Henry David Thoreau), which brings Crick to her door to audit her.

Opposites clash and eventually attract as Crick, who realizes he will soon die, pursues Pascal. Beneath her tough façade and thrift store fashions, she is delicate and sweet, and she falls for him after he brings her a box of "flours"—various ingredients for her baking.

Crick embraces his dwindling life in other ways. After his apartment is accidentally demolished, he moves in with his buddy Dave (the hilarious Tony Hale of "Arrested Development"), learns to play guitar and quits the IRS.

Forced to face his own mortality, Crick makes seemingly small changes, but his life becomes more meaningful and beautiful every day. It is impossible to watch the film and not wonder about your own death and what you would do with your last days on Earth.

As his life gets better, Crick knows he does not want to die. Hilbert realizes Karen Eiffel (Emma Thompson), a reclusive author who writes brilliant books in which the hero always dies, is writing Crick's story.

Eiffel has been working on "Death and Taxes," the book about Crick's life, for 10 years, but cannot figure out how to kill the main character. Her publisher sends over an assistant, Penny Escher (Queen Latifah), to help kill Crick. Escher's real purpose, arguably, is to ask questions so the audience gets the necessary information.

Escher is serene and competent, unlike Eiffel, who is an eccentric, bedraggled, chain smoker. Eiffel's artistic struggle becomes infinitely more difficult when Crick finds her and begs her not to kill him. Seeing a supposedly fictional character come to life forces the audience to ponder the importance of literature. What is more important, Crick's life or Eiffel's brilliant novel? What role do artists and their art play in our lives? Eiffel not only influenced Hilbert, who once taught a seminar on her novels, but controls Crick's life, as well.

The end of the movie is tense and intriguing. Crick's life is in Eiffel's hands once she figures out a poetic death for him, and it is not easy to decide if the movie is a tragedy or a comedy.

"Stranger than Fiction" is heartbreaking, hopeful and hilarious. The characters are warm and irresistible, the plot is fascinating and the chemistry between Ferrell and Gyllenhaal is surprisingly genuine and believable. See this film, and see it with someone you love; preferably someone who will not mind if you shed a few tears.

The moral of the story: reflections on NaNoWriMo

By Sarah Novello
Writer

Thursday was the final day of novel writing month. It was also the day I completed my novel. If you see me walking around campus, my head is in the clouds, even though my energy level is below zero.

Sure, I may be behind on my schoolwork, my friends may think I am a lunatic and I may have missed a few deadlines for study abroad paperwork, but five years from now I will remember that I wrote a novel, not that I was so busy figuring out plot difficulties that I showered with my socks on.

Since I began this novel, I have thought about nothing but that giant Word document lurking on my desktop. Now that it is over, I am sad to go back to the real world. I know that this sounds corny and that it may be hard to appreciate, but I have done so much this month. I have put myself in the mindset of characters ranging from an elevator installer who dreams all day to a 6-year-old aspiring pole dancer.

It will be strange for me to go from thinking about these characters all day to thinking about the thousands of papers that I have to write before finals week is over. But, now that I can type faster, I should finish the papers quickly.

I suppose Chris Baty, the founder of NaNoWriMo, best understands the satisfied sadness that comes at the end of week four.

"There's also a certain bewilderment that comes with setting an impossible goal, working like mad and then looking up to discover that you are on the verge of achieving it," Baty said on nanowrimo.org in his weekly pep talk. "Winning NaNoWriMo is something that you'll remember for the rest of your life, but winning means ending, and it's a little sad to accept the fact that the focus, productivity and imaginative mayhem of these last days will go away soon."

Of course, I am planning to reread and edit my novel over winter break, but I doubt I will; I would rather continue making up quirky people. When I sit down to read it, new characters will pop into my head and I will go right back to my laptop keyboard (which I broke from noveling so fiercely) and start pounding away. As I said, it is corny, but I am really sorry that November is one of the shorter months.

Out of the six students who started off the month with noveling aspirations, two were still planning to reach the 50,000-word mark before midnight on Thursday. Partly because I have been rubbing my word count in her face, my roommate, Caitlin Mawhinney '08, is also planning to finish her novel. The last time I checked she still had 17,000 words to go.

Mawhinney knows it will take a lot of determination to catch up, but plenty have done it before – other NaNoWriMo winners have written more than 45,000 words on Nov. 30.

"I am behind and I have a lot of homework, but I really want to sit down and finish this project," Mawhinney said.

She knows I will ridicule her for the rest of her life if she does not.

"Parts of it are so bad that I ignore that they are in there," Mawhinney said. "But in general, I think it is pretty funny and ridiculous."

I learned that if you sit down and force yourself to write, brilliant things will eventually happen. If they do not happen within the contents of your novel, they will happen in your mind. It is just incredible to know that in the 50,000 words of this one Word document is me. I do not have any control over what I write – it is just whatever comes to me.

Illustration by Juliana Su

If a psychologist sat down with my novel and read through it a few times, after his or her initial shock of how ridiculous it is, he or she could pull my exact personality from the pages. It is there even though I have not intentionally put it there, and I have no idea what it is. Each writer's perception of the "meaning of life" is found in his or her words, and I still cannot get over that. I have grown to love writing so much more this month because I have discovered that the words control themselves and I am their muse.

I warned you about the sappiness. I just wrote 50,000 words in 30 days – I am allowed to get a little philosophical.

Let the countdown begin. The kickoff for NaNoWriMo 2007 is only 335 days away. Hopefully that will give me enough time to regain a moderate amount of sanity. Oh, and if you are crazy enough to want to read the entire Novello November Novel, it will be gathering dust in my public space until next year when it will be joined by another literary work of art.

SLEEPING From page C1

Avoid caffeine at all costs if you want to get to bed at a reasonable hour. Also avoid long naps in the afternoon. Napping for 30 minutes is proved to refresh the mind but long naps actually make a person feel drowsy and interfere with a good night's sleep.

Make sure your room is quiet and dark and your bed is comfortable. Let your roommate know that you NEED to sleep. Try to create a bedtime routine. Go to bed at the same time every night. Exercise regularly. Physical activity during the day helps one relax and fall into a deep sleep, but avoid exercising at night as it makes one alert.

"Time management comes into play when a student tries to get enough sleep. It is important for the student to realize that if you procrastinate your work, it cuts into much needed sleep time" Patti Le Sesne '10 said.

If you are unable to sleep, do not toss and turn in bed for more than 30 minutes. Get up and do something relaxing such as reading, it will help you calm down and sleep. Drinking a cup of warm milk or herbal tea also helps relax one's body and mind.

"Sleeping at a reasonable hour is very important for staying healthy and being alert in class. I try my best to get to bed by 11 p.m. so that I can be attentive the next day. I see students sleeping in classes because they haven't gotten enough sleep the night before and I can't help but wonder how much they are missing and how bad it is for their health" Cristina Sacco '10 said.

Exams are approaching quickly so make sure you do not pull all-nighters as it can harm you instead of help. Study when it is time to study and sleep when it is bed time.

All the best!

Dear Feats and A&E writers,

Thank you for your valuable input and fantastic articles this semester. Without you, the paper would not be what it is.

Sincerely,
Julia and Kim

The Sigmund and Claire Weis Center for the Performing Arts
PRESENTS

Turtle Island Quartet
A Solstice Celebration: The Festival of Lights
America's premiere jazz string quartet
"Stands tradition on its civilized ear." – People Magazine
Saturday, December 2, 2006
8 p.m.
coming to the Weis Center
The Paper Bag Players
Saturday, December 9, 1 p.m.
Through the generosity of Janet Weis, this performance is free to the community.
Bucknell University, Lewisburg, Pennsylvania
Tickets and Information: 570-577-1000
www.bucknell.edu/WeisCenter/

Street Smart | World Class

GRADUATE PROGRAM IN Public Policy at Johns Hopkins

Earn a Master of Arts in Public Policy at a world-class institution that pairs practical experience with access to the top minds in public policy. Tackle the big questions in small classes, where professors know who you are and help you to achieve your goals.

Make a decision that could change the world.

For more information or an application, call 410-516-4167 or e-mail mpp@jhu.edu. Online, visit us at www.jhu.edu/ips/mpp. Applications for Fall 2007 admission are due January 15, 2007.

Deck the dorms with boughs of holly... 'tis the end of the se- mester (finally!)

Mer Cares

Now that classes are coming to a close, it is time to start getting excited for the holidays. Since this is my final column of the semester, here are some ideas for the holidays and the winter months.

If you stroll through downtown Lewisburg, the stores are crowded with people scrambling to buy gifts. While the holiday season can be stressful, try to enjoy Lewisburg's atmosphere. The sparkling lights in the trees and the people in the quaint little shops and restaurants can really lift your spirits. You need a break every now and then and maybe getting a little exercise is just the thing to boost your holiday spirit.

If you are looking for ideas for gifts, have friends and relatives make wish lists. If they are over the age of 10, maybe suggest they make a list on Amazon.com. If you like the hustle and bustle of the mall around the holidays then more power to you. But if you like a less hectic atmosphere, try shopping online. Just make sure you order ahead of time to allow for shipping, since it may be a tad longer around the holidays.

For that special loved one, maybe get him or her a watch or other piece of jewelry. If you are not quite there in your relationship, think about tickets for a sporting event, cologne/perfume or a DVD of his or her favorite TV show.

If you are really short on time, the perfect gift is always a gift certificate (not the most thoughtful option but the easiest). If you need a gift for your siblings, always ask. They will usually tell you exactly what they want or need.

It is always a bit harder to shop for your parents. At least in my family, my parents always play the "We just want good grades and you to not fight with your sisters" card. But to show you care, just get them a little something, be it a new tie or martini glass for your father or a nice pair of leather gloves for your mother. They will appreciate the time you took to get them a gift.

Now that the gifts are done, let us get down to winter activities.

For the skiing and snowboarding experts, the East Coast provides slightly icy terrain to practice on while the West Coast supplies heavy amounts of snow to dig your equipment into. Some popular places on the East Coast are Seven Springs, Wisp and Snowshoe Mountain. On the West Coast, many students favor Alta, Aspen, Vail, Sun Valley and Mammoth Mountain. Skiing and snowboarding are great ways to spend time with friends and family.

If you are the romantic type, perhaps going ice skating with a loved one is more your style. If you are in New York City at any point during the winter season, you absolutely must go to Rockefeller Center. A huge tree is set up with beautiful lights everywhere and the atmosphere is almost intoxicating. With holiday music playing and people bustling around the rink with their mittens and scarves, you could not ask for a better photo op.

If you enjoy the serene and calming atmosphere of winter, maybe take a hike through the woods. Snowy trees with the occasional bird hopping from branch to branch is a quiet and magical sight.

No matter what day it is or how much snow accumulates outside your door, try to get out of the house.

This is the time when you can finally see your friends who go to different schools and spend some "quality time" with your parents. You could take your little brother out to a movie, play dolls with your sister or go shopping with your mother on the weekend.

Maybe you could plan a "Secret Santa" with your close friends and have a big get-together after the holidays and exchange gifts. If you're utterly and completely bored, go visit your friend out in California for a few days (it's a nice break from the cold weather if you are from the East Coast) or perhaps take that six hour road trip and drive from Maryland up to New York and surprise your boyfriend or girlfriend. Either way, have a great holiday season and remember to spend it with the ones you cherish the most.

Love,
Mer

Please send questions regarding any topic to marc001@bucknell.edu with subject line reading "advice" or you may send a letter via campus mail to box number C1099. I look forward to hearing from you!

Downtown for the holidays

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Clockwise starting from top-left—1) Downtown houses decorated with garlands and lights shortly after Thanksgiving. 2) W.L. Donehower's, a sporting goods store located on Market Street, shines bright for the Holiday season. 3) A tree in Huffenagle park decked out for Christmas. 4) Shops on Market Street, including the Wardrobe, glow with the holiday spirit.

New movie picks and pans

LINDSAY CARTER
Senior Writer

❖ MOVIE REVIEW

Courtesy of amazon.com

"The Nativity Story" and "The Holiday" are both in theaters. The former tells the traditional Christmas tale while the latter fills the more light-hearted chick flick nitch.

December is a time for family, food and, of course, films. With all that free time on your hands you could see every movie at the theater. But if movies are gifts, this list of movies being released this month should help to distinguish the socks from the brand new cars.

In "The Nativity Story," arriving in theaters today, Keisha Castle-Hughes is Mary and Oscar Isaac is Joseph. The young couple is about to get married when Mary becomes pregnant. She claims she is still a virgin and an angel told her she is pregnant with God's son. The couple deals with the disdain of family and friends who do not believe the incredible story, and Jesus is born nine months later. The filmmakers' goal was to make this film as authentic and realistic as possible.

"The Nativity Story" was filmed in the village of Matera, Italy, the same location in which "The Passion of the Christ" was filmed, since Bethlehem and Nazareth have become more modern and developed cities. With a rating of PG, families will enjoy a traditional, religious Christmas movie about the origin and meaning behind the holiday.

If you are going with friends rather than family, "Van Wilder Deux: The Rise of Taj" is also released today. You know what kind of crude humor you are in store for if you saw "Van Wilder," so do not expect this to be a sentimental holiday movie. Kal Penn plays Taj, who travels to Oxford University because he wants to make these English students lighten up and act like fun-loving, partying college students. Naturally, this movie is rated R.

You might be surprised to learn that out of all the movies already released, not one has the standard title "The Holiday." In this movie, scheduled to be released on Friday, Cameron Diaz is Amanda Woods and Kate Winslet is Iris Simpkins. These women, living in different parts of the world, both run into trouble and, after meeting online, decide to switch houses for the Christmas holiday. Simpkins is from London and Woods is from Los Angeles, and the swap is full of culture shocks and life-altering experiences. This holiday changes their lives, as they find love and romance where they least expect it. Jude Law and Jack Black also appear in the film. This fun but rather predictable chick flick is rated PG-13.

You might not expect Lewis Black to be associated with the letters "PG," but in "Unaccompanied Minors," due to be released on Friday, Warner Bros. makes this happen. Left alone in a fictional Chicago airport on Christmas Eve, six children create a party of their own when they are snowed in for the holiday. While their parents worry, they have the time of their lives, creating quite a ruckus. Bring the little siblings to watch this light-hearted, silly family movie, in which Wilmer Valderrama also stars.

"Arthur and the Invisibles," set for a limited release beginning Dec. 15, stars a number of celebrities known for more than just acting in this animated fantasy by Luc Besson. It is a story of courage and friendship in which Freddie Highmore plays Arthur, whose grandfather disappears, and who tries to keep real estate developers from buying his family's home.

To do this, he must track ancient clues left by his grandfather in order to discover a secret, magical world full of miniscule people. In this land Arthur must work together with a beautiful princess, voiced by Madonna, as well as with a small army to protect this magical land from an evil wizard, voiced by David Bowie. It sounds ridiculous, and anyone who watched "The Labyrinth" knows that with David Bowie in this role, it probably is.

Dec. 20 marks the release of "Charlotte's Web," a film based on the book by E.B. White. Dakota Fanning plays Fern, who raises the runt of the litter, Wilbur, into a terrific pig. As Wilbur moves into a new barn, he begins a second friendship with the most unlikely of creatures: a spider named Charlotte. Their bond inspires the animals around them to come together as a family. When the word gets out that Wilbur's days are numbered, Charlotte begins writing messages in her web to save her friend's neck. This version stars the voices of Julia Roberts, Oprah Winfrey, Steve Buscemi and Kathy Bates, as well as other big actors, playing the barnyard crew.

Due in theaters on Dec. 22 is "The Good Shepherd," directed by (and starring) Robert De Niro. Matt Damon plays Edward Wilson, a Yale student recruited to join the secret society Skull and Bones, a brotherhood and breeding ground for future leaders of the world. Wilson sincerely believes in American values, so he becomes a prime candidate for a career in intelligence. He is recruited to work for the OSS, which existed before the CIA, during World War II.

As the Cold War commences, Wilson becomes less optimistic and his experience teaches him that nothing is as it seems. Wilson is one of the best operatives in the agency, as the OSS accepts his techniques as standard operating procedure. With a cast including Angelina Jolie, Joe Pesci and Alec Baldwin, and a long list of others, "The Good Shepherd" is a drama about devotion to America.

In the futuristic drama "Children of Men," due out Dec. 25, one pregnant woman holds the key to survival for the entire human race. The film is based on a science-fiction novel by P.D. James in which humans have become infertile and face extinction. A disheartened official (Clive Owen) teams up with a woman from his past (Julianne Moore) to take the pregnant woman to a secret group in charge of learning how to re-establish the world's population and ensure human fertility. It is perhaps not the most cheery of films, and not as festive as one might expect from a Christmas release, but an interesting concept for the right time.

Holiday releases do not necessarily mean holiday movies, but that means there is something for everyone in theaters this winter vacation.

Holiday music for every occasion

BY KIMBERLY KANE
Arts & Entertainment Editor

One of the best things about the holiday season is the music. It is also one of the worst things. As much as you may love that 24-hour holiday music station on the radio, you can only listen to Vanessa Williams sing "Do You Hear What I Hear?" so many times.

If the long lines, traffic jams or your grandmother's Manheim Steamroller tape get you down, try downloading these holiday tunes to your iPod or burning them to a CD. Just do not try to pass it off as a gift to anyone—even you are not that cheap.

Best Songs for the Family Party

The best part about Christmas music is that it is generally harmless and will not offend your grandfather. But there is a lot of music out there that could put everyone to sleep. These songs are guaranteed to please everyone in the family:

"Santa Claus is Comin' to Town" by Bruce Springsteen. Before you learned to love The Boss, you learned to love the Claus. The only thing that beats Springsteen's insane rambling at the beginning of the song is how soulfully he belts this caroling classic. Keep the digital camera on hand for when your mom starts singing along after a couple glasses of eggnog.

"Blue Christmas" by Elvis Presley. I inherited a lot of things from my dad, and one of the most valuable is an appreciation for the King. Elvis' bluesy rendition of the song is undoubtedly the best.

Courtesy of google images

"Christmas Wrapping" by The Waitresses. This bouncy and clever hit is from the same girls who brought you classic '80s songs like "I Know What Boys Want." Play this song to remind your 30-something aunt how much fun she used to be before she had kids.

Best Songs for Shopping

Put these tunes onto your iPod, slip in your earbuds and avoid awkward conversation with the dozens of people in line ahead of you.

"Christmas (Baby Please Come Home)." You have a couple of options for this song. I recommend the upbeat U2 version for louder, busier stores where you desperately need to drown out a salesman saying "Sorry, we're out of Wiis." There is also a gorgeous version by Death Cab for Cutie which is more mellow and appropriate for browsing through Barnes and Noble.

"Happy Xmas (War is Over)" by John Lennon and Yoko Ono. This masterpiece from our two favorite hippies is sure to calm you down when the crowds become too much. The lyrics will warm your heart, especially when the chorus of children sings along.

"Last Christmas" by Wham! Back when George Michael was famous for his music, and not his personal life, he and Andrew Ridgeley made this hit. It has one of the catchiest hooks of any Christmas song. You might look a little crazy singing along, but who doesn't get nuts around the holiday season?

Best Songs For Quality Time with Friends

Christmas is not only a time for family, but also for old friends. Whether you are getting together for your annual Yankee Swap or driving to the mall, these songs are the best to crank up, let loose and remember the old days.

"All I Want For Christmas Is You" by Mariah Carey. Every girl knows the words to this song. She also will sing it at the top of her lungs and will think she sounds amazing. Embrace this. Just make sure the windows are rolled up.

*"Merry Christmas, Happy Holidays" by NSYNC. Most students will remember this song from their middle school days. You may feel funny breaking out your *NSYNC CDs any other time of the year, but it is allowed at Christmastime. The sugary sweet lyrics are perfect for the holiday season. Plus, we all know this was when Justin Timberlake was at his hottest.

"The Hanukkah Song" by Adam Sandler. It does not matter if it is Part I, II or III, your friends love this song, no matter what religion. And if you are Jewish, it is always fun to insert your name instead of Courtney Love's.

Bucknellian music favs

The editors of the Bucknellian share a few of their favorite holiday tunes.

Rina Van Orden (Associate Editor of Layout)

"Yule Shoot Your Eye Out" by Fall Out Boy. Sure it's not the cheeriest song, but sometimes you need a song like this for the holidays. They lyrics speak volumes.

"The Christmas Song" by Nat King Cole. This song is classic to Christmas. The second this song comes on, it instantly puts you in the Christmas spirit. No December is complete without it.

Matt Saylor (Sport Editor)

"Christmas Don't Be Late" by Alvin and the Chipmunks. It's a great mix of humor and the impatience that so many children (and chipmunks) experience waiting for Christmas.

"You're a Mean One, Mr. Grinch" from "The Grinch." Children from one to 92 know the lyrics to this one. Not even a thirty-and-a-half foot pole can keep you from loving this song.

Lily Beauvilliers (A&E Editor)

"Last Christmas" by Jimmy Eat World. Christmas can be way too happy. A little chill, emo heartbreak and retribution stirs the pot.

"Grandma Got Run Over By A Reindeer" by Elmo and Patsy. I chose this because whenever I hear it, I think of my dad singing HIS version of the lyrics and giggle.

Jared Napolitano (Business Manager)

"Carol of the Bells." Because it reminds me of Home Alone, a great and hilarious movie from my childhood.

Evan Unger (News Editor)

"Hanukkah Song Part Two" by Adam Sandler. I like this song because I am half Jewish and Courtney Love is too. Put us together, what a funky, bad ass Jew.

Barbara Perlman (Sports Editor)

"Christmas is All Around" by Billy Mack in "Love Actually." I particularly "enjoy the moment when [he tries] to squeeze an extra syllable into the fourth line...'if you really love Christmas, come on and let it snow.'"

Counting down to the holidays, one day at a time

BY LIZA BANHALMI
Contributing Writer

We all know that Mother's Day is in May and Father's Day is in June — but when is Kid's Day? The second Sunday of December is International Children's Day, when broadcasters "tune in to kids, " according to http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/UNICEF. This day was initiated by the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) and the International Academy of Television Arts and Sciences.

Due to the excitement and zeal of holidays such as Christmas, Hanukkah and Kwanzaa, many smaller holidays are not recognized. Here is a little insight into other "unknown" holidays in December.

Some fun and random holidays in December are: Bathtub Party Day, Dec. 5; Put on Your Own Shoes Day, Dec. 6; National Chocolate-Covered Anything Day, Dec. 16; and Hamburger Day on the 21st.

Some fun and random holidays in December are: Bathtub Party Day, Dec. 5; Put on Your Own Shoes Day, Dec. 6; National Chocolate-Covered Anything Day, Dec. 16; and Hamburger Day on the 21st.

While Christmas is the major holiday for Christians, many other holidays in December go hand and hand with it. Dec. 4 is Santa's List Day, when Santa decides who is "naughty or nice," and who is going to get presents or coal. The true Santa Claus, St. Nicholas, is honored on Dec. 6, the anniversary of his death.

St. Nicholas was a wealthy young boy, and when his parents died he took the words of Jesus to heart ("sell what you own and give the money to the poor"). He used his money to help the poor and sick. St. Nicholas' giving evolved over the generations and transformed into the present-bringing Santa that is known today.

Dec. 12 is Poinsettia Day, in honor of the red flower that symbolizes Christmas. In a Mexican folk story, a poor Spanish girl had nothing to bring to church on Christmas day, so she picked up some plants on the side of the road. When she entered the church, the green leaves on the plants turned into the brilliant red flowers known as Poinsettias today.

Dec. 19 is Go Caroling Day, while Dec. 21 is Humbug Day in a tribute to the bad-spirited Ebenezer Scrooge from "A Christmas Carol."

On a more serious note, Dec. 1 is World AIDS Awareness Day, when many people wear red or a red ribbon — the international symbol of AIDS awareness. Dec. 7 is Pearl Harbor Day in remembrance of the Japanese attacks on Hawaii. Dec. 10 is Human Rights Day, commemorating when the United Nations General Assembly adopted the Universal Declaration of Human Rights in 1948.

Dec. 15 marks the ratification of the Bill of Rights that occurred in 1791. This day did not become official until President Franklin D. Roosevelt declared it so on its 150th anniversary in 1941.

For Muslims, the major holiday in December is Eid-Ul-Adha, which is also known as the Festival of Sacrifice. It begins on the 10th day of the Islamic month of Hajj and lasts for four days. The 10 days before the festival are for religious prayer and recitation, while during the festival there is prayer and sacrificing but no fasting.

Other holidays include Bicarbonate of Soda Day on Dec. 31, Games Day on the 20th, National Lemon Cupcake Day on the 15th and National Cotton Candy Day on Dec. 7. The origins of many of these holidays are unknown, but they are still marked on many calendars. Regardless of where they are from, they are still excuses to celebrate.

University reaches out to neighbors

Donations to the United Way "Neighbors Helping Neighbors" campaign to benefit 22 non-profit agencies

By Ali Burack
Writer

This year the University has shown its support for the local community by supporting the United Way campaign "Neighbors Helping Neighbors."

The "Union County United Way is a county-wide effort, supporting 22 non-profit health and human services agencies" that provide programs and services for those in need in the local community, according to http://web5.bucknell.edu/UnitedWay/index.shtm.

The funds raised by the campaign support organizations like Habitat for Humanity, the Donald Heiter Community Center, Big Brothers/Big Sisters, American Red Cross and many other organizations (a full list can be found at http://web5.bucknell.edu/United Way/UWAgency.html). The money helps to support new reading programs, the purchase of food and equipment, and the building of shelters in Union County.

"This is always a great way for students, faculty and staff to join together to show how much we truly care about our community," said Kristin Stetler, associate director of alumni marketing and communications. "I am constantly amazed by how generous our University community is."

By participating in this campaign the University helps to fuel local organizations. The University is not just about bettering its own campus by building new facilities and renovating old ones to make the campus more aesthetically appealing. By engaging in this campaign the University hopes to build stronger relationships with local organizations.

"I am constantly amazed by how generous our University community is."
—Kristin Stetler, associate director of alumni marketing and communications*

On the University Web site Thida Soe said there is a "strong sense of community" at the University. This campaign exemplifies that the community not only includes campus life and organizations but also extends to the local community.

University students participate in service activities at the local community house as well as book drives and the Lewisburg "Thaw Out," during which students help local businesses make the transition from winter to spring.

Many student groups engage in relationships with the organizations benefiting from this campaign. Campus participation in "Neighbors Helping Neighbors" is pertinent to the survival of these non-profit groups.

To assist fundraising efforts on campus, four faculty members became campus representatives for the campaign: Paula Cogan, director of International Student Services; Richard McGinnis, professor of civil and environmental engineering; Madeline Prah, transportation coordinator; and Stetler.

"Bucknell is honored to be part of this campaign," McGinnis said. "We like to remember that supporting locally strengthens nationally."

These representatives helped to spur efforts on campus, which resulted in students, faculty, staff and retirees raising almost $41,000.

This donation made the University a top contributor to the United Way of Union County, helping it fulfill its goal of $235,000.

Students, with 5% participating, raised $363 and the faculty, with 15% participating, raised $10589. The University administration can be credited with the largest donation of $29,635, according to http://web5.bucknell.edu/UnitedWay/index.shtm

The campaign will help the University become a respected component of the local community.

Ataris rock out to dwindling Uptown crowd

Students only interested in the hit "The Boys of Summer" left early, missing out on some amazing music

By Jared Napolitano
Business Manager

❖ Concert Review

It has been a wild 10-year ride for Kristopher Roe and his alternative rock group, The Ataris, from Anderson, Ind. This ride brought them to Lewisburg on Nov. 18, when the band performed for an audience that filled Uptown to capacity.

The set list included an array of songs from the band's six full-length albums. Despite the emotional and vibrant performance from Roe and his new crew, the crowd dissipated with every song that was not the Don Henley cover "The Boys of Summer," the most well-known but least original track on the band's 2003 album, "So Long, Astoria." This record, which sold almost 1 million copies, was the first and last that The Ataris produced with mainstream label Columbia Records.

The Ataris rocked out and did not disappoint. The band's persistent touring until its first overhaul in late 2003 characterized its Indie reputation and fueled several of its own lyrics.

Opening with "Summer Wind Was Always Our Song," one of the band's biggest hits from "End is Forever" (2001), Roe and the six other band members blended the song's older lyrics with a newer sound that included pianos, the cello and the mellotron.

The Ataris also played tracks off its first full-length album, "Blue Skies, Broken Hearts ... Next 12 Exits" (1999), which essentially put the band on the map. The band played "1.15.96" and an acoustic version of the favorite "San Dimas High School Football Rules," the story about "a high school that you know doesn't exist." Roe occasionally prefaced the songs with their histories and inspirations, most often those of personal relationships, storytelling of past memories and of locations and individuals left behind.

The band played personal favorites such as "I.O.U. One Galaxy," "Road Signs and Rock Songs" and "Fast Times at Drop-Out High," a track describing Roe's high-school experience in a "small Indiana town."

The band engaged the more recent listeners of their music with tracks from "So Long, Astoria," such as "Unopened Letter to the World," "In This Diary," the title track "So Long, Astoria" and another personal favorite, "The Hero Dies in This One." As always, Roe maintained an elevated level of emotion behind his lyrics, but unanswered chants for "The Boys of Summer" resulted in a dwindling crowd towards the end of the show.

All [of the songs from the new album "Welcome the Night"] indicated a harder, more mature and alternative sound, in contrast to the younger punk sound that characterized the Ataris in the past.

In promotion of its new album to be released on Feb. 20, the band played a few new tracks from "Welcome the Night," for which production began in 2004. The album was delayed in part due to a record label switch. The Ataris requested to be released from their contract with Columbia Records (which they joined after leaving Kung Fu Records) and recently signed with another Indie producer, Sanctuary Records Group.

According to the band on their MySpace page, nearly everyone who worked on "So Long, Astoria" at Columbia was fired or quit.

"We did not want to put ourselves in a typical artist/label arrangement again," the band said on its MySpace page. "[Now we] control our own destiny."

Such comments, in addition to those of Roe after the concert (he said they would not play "that" song), hint at the fact that the release of "The Boys of Summer" was not only a big mistake but also something the band did not want to do.

The Ataris played "The Cheyenne Line," "Secret Handshakes" and "Not Capable of Love," three tracks from "Welcome the Night." All indicated a harder, more mature and alternative sound, in contrast to the younger punk sound that characterized The Ataris in the past. But the new sound is a decision of the band itself, not the influence of a major record label.

After closing with "So Long, Astoria," Roe came out by himself and asked what the audience wanted to hear. Upon request, Roe played "Boxcar," one of the band's first tracks from "Anywhere but Here" (1997), to an audience of about 25.

The band returns to the road, trying to regain popularity after nearly a four-year gap in album releases.

Roe, now 29 years old, remains the constant of The Ataris. He and the reconstructed crew emanate passionate and adrenaline-pumping lyrics and blend them with a powerful, guitar-led sound display, as they did at Uptown.

Image courtesy of myspace.com

The Ataris playing a concert in Nottingham, U.K. this year. The band is currently touring to promote their new album, to be released on the indie label Sanctuary Records Group.

BRYNWOOD Rentals
535 Inc.
In Lewisburg Since 1969
Your search begins..... and ends here.
Professional 24/7 Maintenance Staff
Apartments (furnished & unfurnished)
Houses for professionals students families
Rental Garages Also Available
Office & Retail Space
300—3,000 sq ft
brynwoodrentals.com
611 Market Street, Lewisburg
ph: 570.524.2121 x 3

ACNE?
TAKE CONTROL OF YOUR ACNE...NOW!

Blue Light Treatments Are:
*Simple
*Affordable
*Effective- They Work!
Bucknell Students Only...
Call before December 1st for a FREE consultation and receive a FREE Blue Light Treatment ($175.00)
CENTER FOR SKIN HEALTH
Ernest Normington, M.D., FACS
210 JPM Road in Lewisburg (570) 524-7777 www.drnormington.com

A Model Student

© The CW WS

Photo courtesy of Oluchi Onyewuchi

University student one of top 5 in model competition

By Deidre Carlin
Writer

Lights, make-up, great outfits, everyone's attention focused on you.

Most people only dream of walking down a catwalk.

Oluchi Onyewuchi '08 actually got to experience it.

Onyewuchi made it into the Top Five in Northeastern Pennsylvania's version of the hit show "America's Next Top Model," appropriately called "NEPA's Top Model."

Onyewuchi said she found out about the auditions by watching "America's Next Top Model" on television. Onyewuchi and her friend were looking for something different to do the weekend of the audition and decided to drive to Scranton, Pa. to watch.

The auditions took place at The Mall at Steamtown. On Oct. 7, a crowd of potential contestants was narrowed down to 14. After that first cut, the top five women were chosen.

Originally, Onyewuchi said she had no intention of participating in the modeling competition.

"I walk to the bathroom. That's my catwalk," Onyewuchi said.

Once Onyewuchi arrived at the auditions, she decided to try her luck.

"I scanned [the other girls] and I thought, 'I can do this,'" Onyewuchi said.

Contestants were required to walk down the catwalk in front of a group of judges from a modeling agency. According to Onyewuchi, after aspiring contestants walked down the catwalk, the judges asked their name and what they wanted to do.

Because Onyewuchi did not take the audition seriously at first, she nearly left before the judges announced the top 14. Fortunately she stayed and heard her name called.

Contestants enjoyed many unique experiences as a result of being in the competition. The participants who made it into the Top Five participated in exclusive photo shoots with two studios.

Fellow University student Paula Gomes '07 helped Onyewuchi select clothes for the photo shoots, since the contestants were responsible for providing the attire themselves.

Onyewuchi said at one studio the contestants were challenged to reach into a box and take pictures with the lizards, tarantulas and snakes that were inside. Taking this challenge head-on, Onyewuchi decided to take a picture with a tarantula.

Contestants also got the opportunity to meet Adrianne Curry, the winner of "America's Next Top Model." A model from Milan, Italy, also gave the contestants some information about the modeling industry.

Onyewuchi experienced what most girls can only dream about.

"We got to ride in a white catered limo, eat catered food and have our hair and makeup done," Onyewuchi said.

Onyewuchi, as well as the four other girls who made it to the Top Five, are featured in small segments on the CW, the former WB, during the commercial breaks of "America's Next Top Model." Onyewuchi was featured during the popular television show on Nov. 15.

The videos on the contestants are quite short and as a result you only see a snippet of what they actually did, Onyewuchi said. Videos, as well as small biographies and pictures of all the models, can be viewed on the show's official Web site at http://www.nepatoday.com/model2/sponsors.htm.

"[At times] it was kind of stressful, and you have to remember that it's just for fun."
-Oluchi Onyewuchi '08

Participants who made it to the Top Five were allowed to keep six of their favorite shots from a modeling session with Guy Cali Associates. The winner of the show gets to keep 10 of her favorite photographs from the shoot.

As a part of the competition, participants were put in touch with agents who will help them submit their photographs if they want to continue in the modeling industry.

"I was surprised I even was in the top 14—some of the girls had done beauty pageants [before]," Onyewuchi said. "[At times] it was kind of stressful, and you have to remember that it's just for fun."

"Actually seeing [Onyewuchi] on TV was amazing. She looked gorgeous and definitely gave the other girls a run for their money," Meghana Pai '08 said.

Pai said Onyewuchi had a great attitude throughout the entire competition.

"Oluchi could have easily gotten stressed out during the entire process, what with her course load and having to run back and forth to filming for 'NEPA's Top Model' and everything, but she kept her cool," Pai said. "She got her schoolwork done, modeling done and stayed grounded—all with a smile on her face,".

Onyewuchi said the shoots were long but fun.

"All of the other girls had done [modeling] before, so they weren't sure I'd get the hang of it at first," Onyewuchi said.

Judging by her success and the quality of the pictures, she picked it up quickly.

Onyewuchi, originally from Nigeria, has lived in the suburbs of Baltimore for most of her life. She has four siblings and played volleyball and track in high school.

At the University, she has written for The Bucknellian, plays club volleyball and participates in poetry readings. She is an English and economics major.

Onyewuchi loves traveling and said her favorite trip was her visit to Tunisia the summer before her first year at the University, which was her first trip to North Africa. Although she is not going to Africa this spring, she will be studying abroad in Nottingham, England.

Onyewuchi said she thinks it would be interesting to model seriously because it is so different from school work.

"[Breaking into the industry will be difficult because] I don't really know how to approach it and I'd definitely need a lot of support and advice somehow," Onyewuchi said.

Onyewuchi emphasized that her education is important to her and the agent with which she has been paired agrees with her.

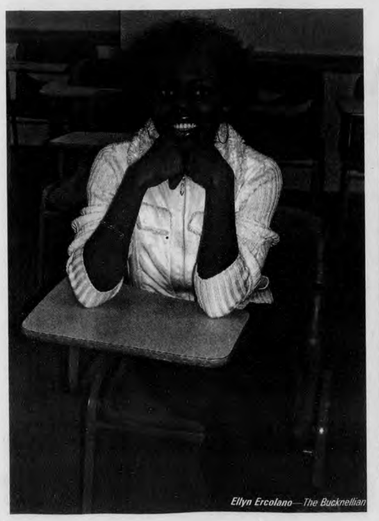
A bubbly personality is the best way to describe Onyewuchi. She glows when you talk to her, and has a personality and attitude you would think would bring her great success in the industry.

Onyewuchi said not everyone can be successful because "you have to be kind of freaky for this industry—especially if you want to be in high fashion."

Onyewuchi does not regret trying out for this competition.

"It's nice to take chances; it can brighten your life," Onyewuchi said.

Laughing, she said, "it's nice to see yourself on TV, I'm not going to lie."



Ellyn Ercolano—The Bucknellian

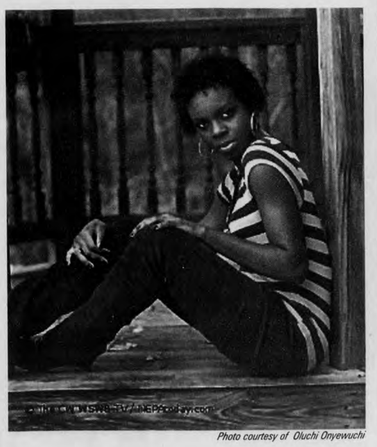


Photo courtesy of Oluchi Onyewuchi

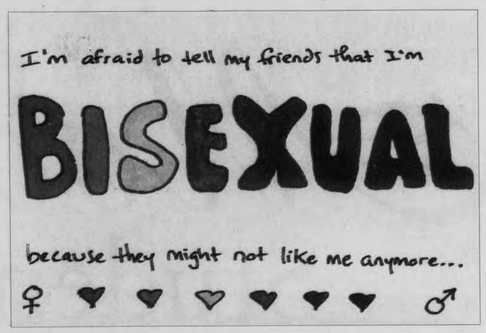
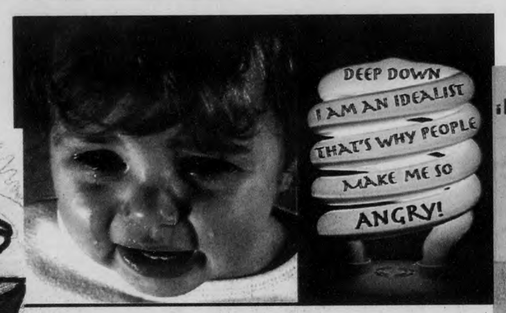
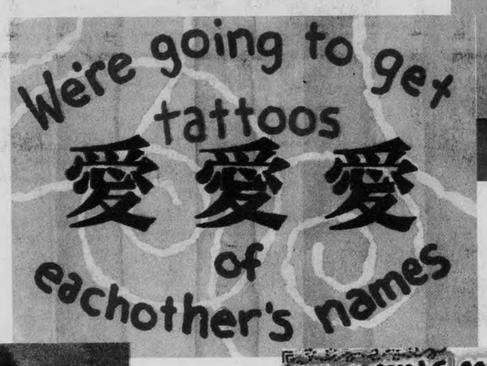
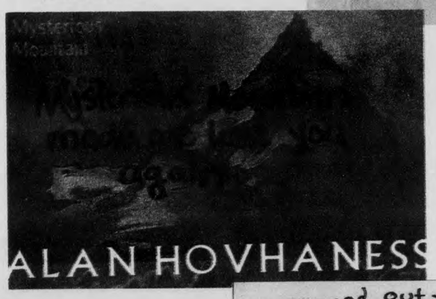
Ellyn Ercolano—The Bucknellian

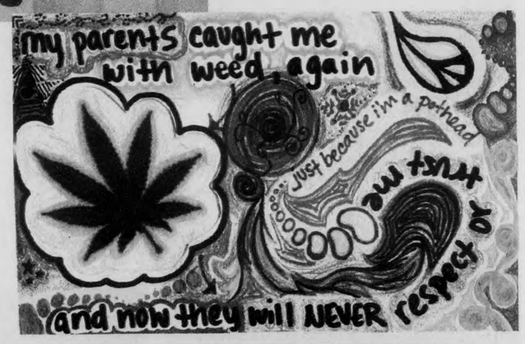
BUCKNELL SECRETS



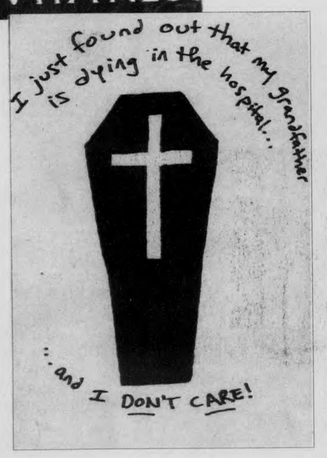


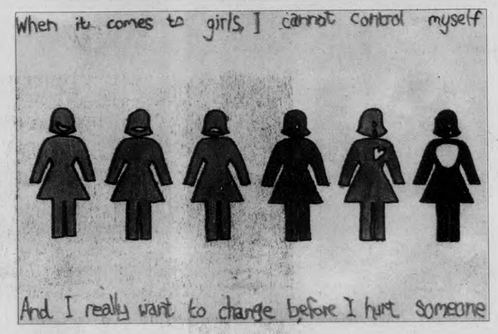






Members of the University community took the time to design a postcard and reveal their deepest secrets. Now they are printed here for all to see... Post your thoughts on facebook.com in the "Bucknell Secrets" group.





YOUR SECRETS ARE OUT

The Bucknellian
SPORTS
December 1, 2006

Block party

Get to know Hope Foster, the star center/forward of the women's basketball team.

See page D6

Bison complete turnaround season

Football defeats Colgate 31-28, securing a winning season after last year's injury-plagued 1-10 campaign

By Matthew Saylor
Sports Editor

With its 31-28 win over the Colgate Raiders, the Bison football team finished its impressive turnaround season. The team improved its record from just one win in 2005 to six this year, finishing the season with a 6-5 record. A 3-3 record in conference play tied them for fourth in the Patriot League.

Bucknell 31
Colgate 28

"If we hadn't won today I still would have been happy with the season," said Tim Landis, the Bob Odell head football coach. "We have a very young team, and to go to five wins is awesome, but we had a chance to have a winning season and we capitalized on that today."

The Bison came into the game having alternated between wins and losses for the entire season, and needing a win to finish with a record of .500 or better for the third time in four years.

The Orange and Blue defense set the tone early for the Bison, forcing the Raiders (4-7, 3-3) to punt on their first two possessions while not allowing a first down. The Bison offense took advantage, rushing to an early 10-0 lead.

On their first drive, the Bison drove down the field with passes from Marcello Trigg '10 to Cale Cadman '10 for 11 yards and to A.J. Kizekai '10 for 29 more yards. Both plays were third down conversions. Kizekai then broke free for another nine yards, this time on the ground. His run coupled with a 5-yard face mask penalty to place the Orange and Blue in the red zone. Unfortunately, two sacks by the Raiders stalled the drive and the Bison had to settle for a 42-yard field goal by Will Carney '09, his longest of the season.

The offense found the end zone on its second drive and extended the Bison lead to 10-0, as Josh DeStefano '08 scored his third rushing touchdown of the season on a 2-yard plunge. He was set up nicely by Peter Kaufman '07, who obtained first downs on the drive on both a 10-yard run and a 26-yard reception.

DeStefano, the team's leading rusher for the season, was named Second Team All-Patriot League for his efforts, as were defensive back Matt Palermo '07 and offensive linemen Stefan Niemczyk '07 and Joel Hoffer '07. Linebacker Dorian Petersen '07 was the only member of the Bison to receive first team honors, leading the Bison with 102 tackles for the year.

Colgate's offense finally found its rhythm and scored its first points of the game on a 6-yard touchdown run by quarterback Mike Saraceno, cutting the Bison lead to 10-7.

Carney missed a 35-yard field goal on the next Bison drive. The momentum switched to the Raiders as they capitalized on the miss with a 1-yard run by fullback Eric Tupta. Colgate took a 21-10 lead into halftime thanks to a great catch in the end zone by first-year wide receiver Ty Henry off a tipped pass from Saraceno. Colgate running back Jordan Scott dominated the first half, keeping the ball in the Raiders' hands by rushing 18 times for 130 yards and eight of the team's 14 first downs.

The Bison came out with a renewed spirit in the second half as Trigg drove down the field, punctuating the drive with a 1-yard touchdown run and cutting the Raiders lead to 21-17.

The Orange and Blue defense forced a three-and-out and the Raiders punt traveled only 13 yards, giving the Bison offense great field position. The Bison quickly took advantage of the Colgate misplay as Trigg threaded a 27-yard touchdown pass over the middle to Richard Simpson '07. This gave the Bison a 24-21 lead, one that they would not be relinquished.

The Bison scored their final touchdown of the day in an unusual fashion. Offensive lineman Chad Glasser '08 fell on top of a Trigg fumble in the end zone. Trigg broke free on a long run, but coughed up the ball inside the Raiders 5-yard line, sending it and a host of players from both teams into the end zone.

"I didn't keep the ball all tucked up like the coaching staff tells me to all the time," Trigg said. "Luckily we were able to jump on it."

Scott ran for a touchdown for the final score of the day, but was held to only 54 rushing yards in the second half after his explosive beginning to the afternoon.

Kizekai led the team in both rushing and receiving yards with 84 and 99, respectively. Nolan Applegate '09 had an excellent day returning punts, gaining 81 yards on just four returns. He finished the season with 281 total punt return yards, tying him for third in University history for punt return yards in a single season.

"He's returned the ball well all year," Landis said. "We were able to get great field position today, and Nolan was a big part of that."

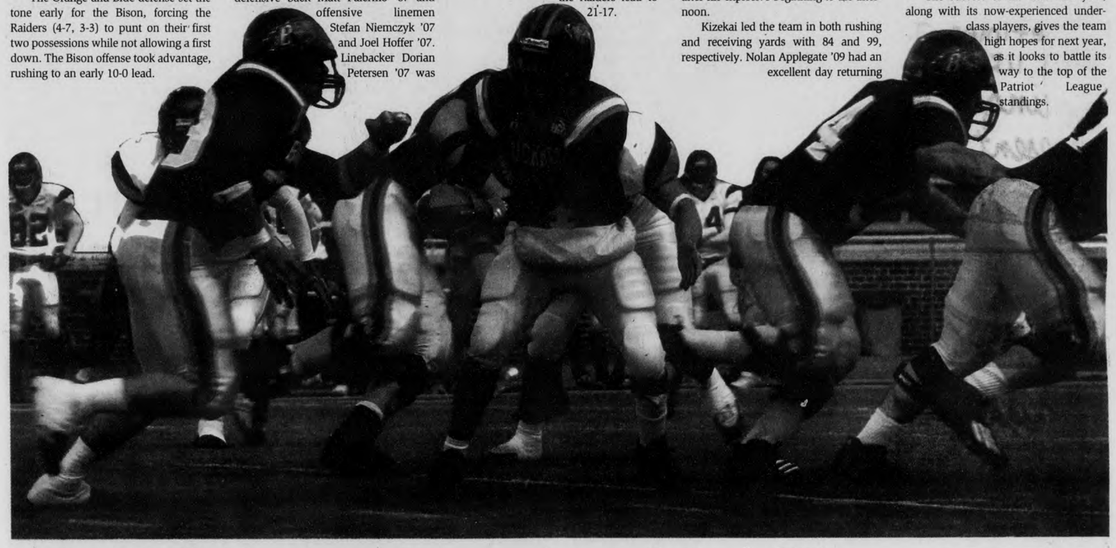
Trigg completed nine of his 10 passes for 185 yards and a touchdown and ran for an additional 73 yards and a touchdown. Trigg suffered a lot of hard hits, but got up after every play.

"I'm a little sore," Trigg said. following the game. "It's worth it though. We wanted to win and send the seniors out right."

There are only 15 members of the senior class, and Landis is looking forward to the bulk of the team returning next season.

"We will have 75 players coming back and have a great looking recruiting class for next year," Landis said.

The success of the team this year, along with its now-experienced underclass players, gives the team high hopes for next year, as it looks to battle its way to the top of the Patriot League standings.



Vball falls in championship

By Ellis Hudes
Writer

After a strong regular season and an emotional semifinal win over Army in the Patriot League Tournament, the volleyball team fell to American 3-0 in the championship match. The Eagles clinched their sixth consecutive title, proving that they are still masters of the Patriot League, and received an automatic bid to the NCAA Tournament. American finished the season with an overall record of 25-6, including a perfect 14-0 mark in league play. The Bison meanwhile concluded a successful 20-12 season. This is the fifth time in program history the team reached the 20-win mark.

American 3
Bucknell 0

"The season was better than anything I could've imagined," Rachel Freeman '10 said. "The team chemistry was so vibrant it could be felt and our talent on the court was better than I had ever played with in my entire life. The loss against American was tough but looking back on the season, we did some pretty awesome things."

Both teams came out strong at the outset of this championship match until American broke a 9-9 tie with a 6-0 run. The Bison kept it close but could not regain the edge, eventually dropping the first game 30-22. In the second game, American immediately opened up a seven point lead on its way to a 30-21 win. Despite trailing 2-0 the Orange and Blue played their most inspired game, matching the Eagles through the midway point of the third frame. The Eagles then used a final 8-3 run to separate themselves from the Bison and capture the match and title with a 30-20 victory.

Jenna Henderson '08 tallied eight kills and seven digs while Emilie Hardinge '09 and Amanda Grossmann '07 added six kills each. Grossmann also had four block assists. Jennie Smith '07 led the team with five block assists. Shannon Pitsch '09 posted 20 assists and three service aces for the match. Rachel Freeman '10 had eight digs, followed closely by Kristen Sydlowski '07 with seven digs. Both Sydlowski and Pitsch represented the Bison on the Patriot League All-Tournament Team.

"Some things were beyond our control in the match, but we maximized our potential and didn't make any excuses for coming up short against a great team," Head Coach Cindy Opalski said.

The Orange and Blue advanced to the championship match by the defeating second seeded Army Black Knights who ended their season 21-8. Game one was a scrap with each team fighting to gain the upper hand. The Bison, down 28-27, capitalized on an Army error and used solid offensive execution to take the first game 30-28. The team picked up its play in game two with an overwhelming 16-5 run en route to a 30-18 win.

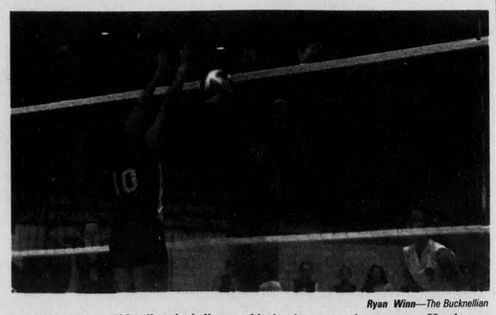
Bucknell 3
Army 1

Army responded in the third game by stealing it on a crucial run, but the Bison took control early in game four and never looked back, clinching the match with a 30-26 win.

Hardinge posted a team-best 16 kills and Pitsch had 45 assists, 18 digs and three block assists. Henderson had an impressive match as she contributed 15 kills, four service aces, nine digs and two block assists. Sarah Groman '07 chipped in with 11 kills, five blocks and a .360 hitting percentage. Smith had eight kills and five blocks. Sydlowski added 27 digs and Freeman had 11 of her own.

Opalski looked back on what made the season so amazing.

"At the beginning we knew we needed terrific leadership from the senior class, outstanding contributions from our personnel, and just to play some terrific volleyball down the stretch. We developed the mindset of a champion by the end," Opalski said.



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Jenna Henderson '08 spikes the ball past a blocker in a recent home game. Henderson finished the season with a team leading 403 kills, averaging 3.88 kills per game.

Bison runners compete with nation's best

By Brian Mulligan
Sports Editor

RUNNER PROFILE:

Matt Forys '07

How can you round out a great senior cross country campaign? I think Matt Forys '07 can answer that question.

The senior from Howell, N.J., traveled to Terre Haute, Ind., to compete at the NCAA National Championship, the top national cross country competition on Nov. 20. He placed 75th out of a field of 250 runners in 32 minutes 19 seconds on a muddy 10-kilometer course at Indiana State University. In the final mile and a half, Forys moved up 20 spots to grab 75th place and was only 20 seconds away from being an All-American.

"It was amazing to line up with the top runners in the nation. To see how many talented athletes were in the race and to be able to compete with them was an honor. The whole experience was unreal and having Leanna [Nastase '07] there made it even better," Forys said.

Forys was the top runner for the men's team at each meet this season and placed third at the Patriot League Championship, where he was named First Team All-Patriot League. He also finished fifth at the Mid-Atlantic Regional Championship to qualify for the national meet and earned a spot on the USTFCCCA All-Regional team. Forys wrapped up his senior cross country season with many accolades and left a lasting impression on the Bison program.

"To finish in the top 75 in the country is a great honor," Head Coach Kevin Donner said. "Matt has progressed very well over the past four years to get to this point. We are very proud of him."

RUNNER PROFILE:

Leanna Nastase '07

Leanna Nastase '07 is a leader and role model for the women's cross country team. She recently competed at the NCAA National Championship in Terre Haute, Ind., placing 94th out of 253 runners. She crossed the finish line in 22:06

See RUN page D3

Women's basketball splits four

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Kristina Collymore '08 drives down the lane in the Bison's game against Cornell. Collymore started at point guard against the Big Red, but has come the bench in the other six games this season.

By Matthew Saylor
Sports Editor

It may only be the first day of December, but it has already been a busy season for the women's basketball team.

Thursday's game against St. Bonaventure marked the end of a two-week stretch during which the Bison played five games. That stretch included games at No. 17 Michigan State and the Caribbean Classic, a post-Thanksgiving jaunt to Cancun, Mexico to play Monmouth and Richmond. The Bison also played Cornell at home on Nov. 20. The team's record stands at 4-3 as of Wednesday (Thursday's game ended past The Bucknellian's publishing deadline), and the Bison are now more than halfway through their out-of-conference schedule.

On Nov. 17, the Orange and Blue traveled to East Lansing, Mich., to face the Spartans, arguably the toughest foe the Bison will face this season. Michigan State returned three of its starters from last year's team that won 24 games and advanced to the Sweet 16 in the NCAA Tournament, where it lost to national runner-up Duke University. This year's team features the addition of 6-9 first-year center Allyssa DeHaan, the tallest player in the Big Ten conference.

Michigan State 68
Bucknell 51

DeHaan did not disappoint, scoring a game-high 15 points in the first game of her career to go along with six rebounds and three blocks, leading the Spartans to a 68-51 victory.

The Bison led the game 18-17 with 10 minutes and 38 seconds remaining in the first half, thanks to four early three-point field goals, two by Lindsey Hollobaugh '07 and one each by Amanda Brown '09 and Jacquie Seawright '07. That was the only time the Bison led, as the Spartans went on an 18-7 run to close out the half.

The Orange and Blue were able to cut the lead to 37-29 thanks to buckets by Hollobaugh and Hope Foster '08 to start the second half, but a 10-0 run by Michigan State put the game out of reach.

Hollobaugh finished the game with a team-high 14 points and Kesha Champion '08 added 10 points while tying a career-high with eight rebounds. It was the play of Foster that was the story of the game for the Bison. Held to a season-low six points and missing seven of her nine shots while being guarded by DeHaan, Foster ruled over the defensive end of the court. Snatching 10 rebounds, seven defensive, Foster set a new University single-game record with 11 blocks. This broke the record that Foster had established just one week before when she had eight blocks against Hampton.

"I was happy with the effort, not with the outcome," Head Coach Kathy Fedorjaka said at the press conference following the game. "Our goal wasn't to compete. It was to come out on top. But 11 blocks from Hope was a tremendous effort."

The Bison returned home three days later to play host to Cornell. Foster paced the team in the first half, scoring 10 of the team's 34 points and helping the Orange and Blue to a 34-26 halftime lead.

Bucknell 73
Cornell 59

The second half saw the Big Red get to within three points on a couple of occasions, but the Bison went on a 20-9 run over the last 8:25 of the game to secure the 73-59 victory. Lauren Schober '09 scored 14 of her team-high 16 points in the second half.

"I think in the first half we went to Hope strong, so in the second half they [the Big Red defenders] began to sag which is my cue to start shooting," Schober said. "We have so many threats on our team it's hard for teams to defend us. If you leave any of us open, then you're bound to get beat."

The Orange and Blue made all six of their three-pointers in the second half, two each from Schober, Hollobaugh and Seawright, after missing all six attempts in the first half. The team also made 19 of its 24 free throw attempts.

Schober had six rebounds, six assists and three steals with her 16 points. Foster added 14 points, six rebounds and six blocks, while Hollobaugh scored 15 points and grabbed six rebounds. Champion added 10 points, four assists and two steals, without committing a turnover in 35 minutes of play primarily at the point guard spot.

As the University enjoyed its Thanksgiving vacation, the Orange and Blue traveled to Cancun for some sun and basketball. The Bison split their two games in Mexico, defeating Monmouth 67-53, while falling 58-40 to Richmond.

Foster scored the first seven points for the squad against Monmouth, and the Bison led the game from the 18:05 mark of the first half. She finished with 19 points and nine rebounds. Hollobaugh scored 13 points, Seawright had nine off the bench and Andrea Wright '08 established personal bests with seven points and seven rebounds.

The Bison struggled all night against the Richmond Spiders, shooting 26.1 percent in the first half and just 32.6 percent for the game. Foster scored 13 points and blocked five shots, and Seawright added 10 points off the bench. Those were the only two Bison to score more than seven points against the stingy Spider defense.

Richmond 58
Bucknell 40

Despite the back-and-forth success so far this season , the Bison appear pleased with how they have played so far, but know they have more work to do.

"Throughout the first few games of the season, it's been great knowing that any five of us can get on the court and get the job done," Foster said. "We need everyone to be effective in order for us to have great success and so far I am confident in my teammates that we can all get it done."

The Bison host Marist Saturday at Sojka Pavilion before traveling to Delaware State on Tuesday night. The team is then off until Dec. 16 due to final exams.

Bison continue to show improvement

Both the men's and women's swimming and diving teams finish runner-up in meet at Kinney Natatorium

By Barbara Perlman
Sports Editor

The men's and women's swimming and diving teams hosted Binghamton, Old Dominion, Towson and Rider at the Bucknell Trial/Finals Invitational. Both the men and women showed their prowess, coming out with two second place finishes. Only 12 points separated the men, who scored 818, and winner Binghamton. The women also continued to show their strength scoring 968.5 points, falling short of Towson who took the meet with 1,131.5 points.

"The team did amazingly well at the invite," Captain Matt Crandell '07 said. "We improved from our last place finish last year to second this year...[and] individually, we had a ton of personal best which is amazing for this time of year."

The women consistently showed their strength throughout the two-day meet. Laura Goeller '07 took the top spot in the 200-yard back, which was a one-two-three sweep for the Bison, with Abigail Paules '10 clinching second, and Lauren Russell '10 placing third. The Bison went on to take second and third in the 400-yard IM with Goeller touching for the second spot with a time of 4:25.77 and Nikki Woodward '07 taking the third spot with a time of 4:37.76.

Kelly Morris '09 also continued to dominate, taking the runner-up spot in the 200-yard breast with a time of 2:26.20, good for fifth best in Bison history. Other Bison to place included Megan Mongan '10 who placed third in the 100-yard free and Katherine Munson '07 who took the third spot in the 100-yard fly with a time of 58.78.

The relay team of Courtney Warren '10, Morris, Munson and Rebecca Scheffter '07 was impressive in the 200-yard medley relay, taking second with a time of 1:48.90.

The women divers also performed well, with Lauren Thomas '08 placing second in the three-meter with a score of 213.30 and Rebecca Bersani '10 taking fourth with a score of 210.10.

The men's team showed their speed and talent at the invitational as well. Bradford Bennett '08 took the runner-up spot in the 200-yard breast with a time of 2:09.24, good for seventh best in Bison history. The Orange and Blue also took second in the 500-yard free as Luke Trafton '10 touched in at 4:45.94. John Peterman '08 and Theo Leriotis '08 placed fourth in the 100-yard free and 400-yard IM, respectively.

The relay team of Mark Kawczenski '09, Crandell, Bennett and Peterman took second in the 200-yard medley with a time of 1:35.66. Diver Jeffrey Manning also continued to excel as he took third in the three-meter with a score of 234.30.

The team is optimistic about the direction in which their season appears to be going.

"We are working really hard and every meet we get a little bit faster than the last meet," Morris said.

Crandell agreed as he reflects on the meet and looks towards training over winter break.

"I think a lot of people...are fighting off colds and injuries, so to be swimming as fast as we are considering our current physical condition is very impressive," Crandell said. "[When we] return to campus on Dec. 27...everyone to be rested and focused on our intense training...the harder we work during training camp the faster we'll swim come February."

The Orange and Blue hit the pool again at 12 p.m. on Sunday, hosting UMBC in Kinney Natatorium.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

A swimmer drives through the water in the Bucknell Trial/Finals Invitational last weekend. Both the women's and men's teams finished second overall.

DOES YOUR CAR NEED SERVICED?

Our Service Department has $25,000 in new upgrades, including a new alignment rack, brake lathe, tire machine, and hundreds of hours of training for the techs. We now offer shuttle service to and from work or home. We have become a complete service center that can perform any work on any model, from an oil change to engine replacement.

Lewisburg Ford
Oil Change w/Multi-Point Inspection
$19.95 Excludes Diesels. Must present coupon at time of service. Expires 12/31/06

Lewisburg Ford
Oil Change/Tire Rotation w/Multi-Point Inspection
$34.95 Must present coupon at time of service. Expires 12/31/06

Lewisburg Ford
2265 Old Turnpike Rd. (Route 45 West)
Across From Brookpark Farm
Call Today! (570) 524-7267
Visit us on the web at www.lewisburgford.com

COLDWELL BANKER
PENN ONE REAL ESTATE
Thank You, Bucknell!!
For thirty years of calling Bucknell and Lewisburg home.
Susan Warner-Mills, Sales Associate
Competence, Integrity, Service
524-7500; swm@coldwellbanker.com

Nancy's Nu-Wave Salon
look your best
October Special
Free Paraffin Dip with Pedicure or Manicure
Main Street (Rte 45) Montandon
524-2315
www.nancysnuwave.com

CatmanDo
Handyman Services
Specializing in small home repair jobs:
Custom Carpentry
Painting
Light construction
Greg H Mathias
570-524-4724
Free Estimates Fully insured

Villager GMAC Real Estate
521 N. Derr Dr. Lewisburg, PA 17837
570-523-3244
CALL US FOR THE LARGEST SELECTION OF RENTALS IN TOWN
1-5 Bedroom Units
Houses or Apartments for 2007/2008 and 2008/2009
A few choice units for 06/07 left!
Call Linda or Duska or e-mail us at linda-treese@villagerrealty.com or duska_rishel@yahoo.com for a complete list of our rentals.

Bison win two straight

Men's basketball rebounds from tough start, beating Yale and St. Francis

By Marcus Mateer & Matthew Saylor
Senior Writer & Sports Editor

While most University students anticipated and recovered from Thanksgiving feasts, the men's basketball team battled tough competition on the road, splitting four games. The Bison (2-4) defeated St. Francis (Pa.) 60-56 and Yale University 72-57, while falling to St. Joseph's University 63-53 and Pennsylvania State University 63-60 in overtime.

The Orange and Blue fought their way to a tough comeback victory on Wednesday against the Red Flash, trailing by as many as 15 points in the first half and 13 in the second. The Bison trailed St. Francis by 10 at intermission, scoring 22 points while making only seven of 24 field goals (29.2 percent) and six of 10 free throws, while the Red Flash made 11 of their 21 shots (52.4 percent).

"I don't think we came out to play in the first half," Co-captain Abe Badmus '07 said. "The defensive intensity was not there. As captains, we [Donald Brown '07, Chris McNaughton '07 and I] need to get these guys ready to play, as well as ourselves."

Head Coach Pat Flannery '80 agreed with Badmus' assessment of the slow start.

"We came out flat as a pancake," Flannery said. "We needed to have resiliency and heart to come back."

The Bison found that intensity to start the second half, going on a 12-2 run to tie the game at 34 after only five minutes. Brown scored eight of those points, including the conversion of two old-fashioned three-point plays – a two-point field goal and a free throw.

Bucknell 60
St Francis (Pa) 56

For the next 12 minutes the Orange and Blue found themselves within striking distance of St. Francis, but never took the lead. With 2 minutes and 55 seconds left in the game, they found themselves staring at an eight-point deficit.

That is when the team showed its resiliency and heart, a hallmark of the program for the past few seasons. Brown hit another three-point play and John Griffin '08 connected on a natural three-pointer off of a St. Francis turnover to cut the lead to two. The Red Flash hit a pair of free throws, but the Bison would not be denied as Jason Vegotsky '09 hit another three to cut the lead to one with 1:24 to play. Yet another St. Francis turnover gave the Orange and Blue the opportunity to take the lead, and McNaughton converted on a short hook shot with 39 seconds left to play.

Badmus tipped a pass at the other end of the court and Griffin came up with the steal, forcing the Red Flash to foul. Badmus made one of two free throws to stretch the lead to two, but St. Francis had another opportunity to win the game if it was able to hit a three. Fortunately for the Bison, Devin Sweetney's three point attempt was off the mark, and Badmus sank two free throws with just 2.6 seconds left to give the Orange and Blue the four-point victory.

"This is definitely a big win for us as a team," Griffin said. "The first four games we played this year we were in the same situations. It is a good character win for us."

Brown led the Bison with 14 points, eight rebounds, two assists, two blocks and two steals. Vegotsky scored 11 points off the bench, converting on four of his five field goals and two three-pointers. Badmus had 10 points, three assists, two steals and just one turnover.

The Orange and Blue made 52.0 percent of their shots in the second half, compared to just 22.7 percent for the Red Flash, a complete reversal of how the game started. After having only three assists and committing 10 turnovers in the first half, the Bison had seven assists and just six turnovers in the second frame.

The Bison snapped their four-game losing streak to start the season with the win at Yale (1-3). Brown turned in his best scoring performance of the year with 16 points. Three other Bison scored double figures, with Justin Castleberry '09 turning in an excellent performance with 11 points off the bench,

Bucknell 72
Yale 57

Following a back-and-forth first half, the Orange and Blue blew open the game by outscoring the Bulldogs 41-28 in the second half. Excellent free throw shooting iced the game down the stretch.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Donald Brown '07 moves past a Wake Forest defender at the last home game. The Bison will play UNI at 1 p.m. Saturday.

Early in the second period, Yale climbed within three on a trey by Eric Flato. The Orange and Blue responded by going on a 10-0 run over the next five minutes. The run was capped with a three-point play by Brown, and the game was firmly in the hands of the Bison.

A pair of dunks by Brown, both fed by Badmus, helped maintain the lead. Yale continued to hang around, as Flato hit another three to sneak within nine points. Griffin awoke from a 4-for-26 slump to nail a three despite getting hacked. He converted the free throw and the Bulldogs could not recover.

"I was trying to be aggressive to help the team," Brown said. "Tonight, I just got it in my mind to go out and do it."

In State College, Pa., the Bison had to fight back from a 13 point deficit to tie at the end of regulation. Darren Mastropaolo '08 and Vegotsky paced the Bison with 12 points each, while Penn State (3-1) was led by Danny Morrissey's 21 points. Foul trouble, a recurring problem this season, hampered the Orange and Blue's efforts. Both McNaughton and Brown fouled out.

Penn State 63
Bucknell 60

The first half was difficult for the Bison. After jumping out to a 7-2 lead, the lid was shut on the basket. The Orange and Blue went 0-for-11 from three-point range in the half, and the Nittany Lions went on a 22-8 run. Andrew Morrison '08, whose jumper at the end of regulation spun out, tipped in a buzzer beater just before the half to cut the Penn State lead to seven.

"I didn't like the way we ended the first half," Flannery said. "We felt like, down seven at halftime, we were in good shape, especially since, again, we were in foul trouble."

Out of the half, a pair of Morrissey treys pushed the Nittany Lion lead to 13 points. The Bison hung around until Vegotsky exploded. Held scoreless in the second half, the guard scored nine during a 13-0 run that gave the Bison a one-point lead with 3:16 left to play. The run was halted when McNaughton was called for his fifth foul. The two from the charity stripe made the score 53-52, Penn State.

Soon after, Griffin hit his only three of the day to push the Bison lead to two. He was forced to foul with eight ticks left, allowing Penn State to send the game into overtime. .

In overtime, Badmus struck first with a layup. Free throw shooting helped the home team, as Penn State went 4-4 from the line, while the Bison went 2-4. Badmus' miss with 15 seconds remaining left the score tied at 60. Penn State fed it into the post, but solid defense by Mastropaolo forced the dish to the corner. Mike Walker drained the fade-away three to end the game.

Against undefeated Saint Joseph's, the Bison hoped to continue the winning tradition from the past few seasons of the cross-state match-up. The Hawks avenged the losses from the previous two seasons by fending off a late Orange and Blue run. Both McNaughton (14 points) and Mastropaolo (13 points) had strong performances during the loss.

Saint Joseph's defense was formidable. The Orange and Blue shot only 38.5 percent from the field and 20.0 percent from three-point range. The poor shooting led to a 13-point deficit at halftime.

Saint Josephs 63
Bucknell 53

In the second half, a pair of layups by Brown and a tip-in by Mastropaolo cut the lead to seven points. The Hawks responded with a 10-4 run of their own to extend the lead back to 13 points.

Five straight points by Morrison sparked a Bison comeback. Six Mastropaolo points and a Griffin three-pointer helped the Orange and Blue move within six at 53-47. Badmus then hit a jumper to pull within four points, but that was as close as the Bison would get. Solid free throw shooting by the Hawks and sloppy closing play by the Bison would seal the deal.

The Bison take on Northern Iowa (4-1) at 1 p.m Saturday at Sojka Pavilion, in a rematch from last year's ESPN BracketBusters match-up.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

John Griffin '08 sizes up a defender in a recent game. Griffin is averaging 8.8 points and 2.3 rebounds per game.

Wrestling grapples with top-ranked opponents

By Kyle Barndollar
Writer

Bison wrestling continued its promising start to the program's first season since 2001 on Nov. 18 at the Navy Classic. Andy Rendos '10 took first place in his weight class as the Bison finished fourth out of 13 teams in Annapolis. The Bison followed the tournament with a 36-6 loss to Army on Nov. 21 and a 1-3 record in the Hoosier Duals at Indiana University on Saturday. Despite defeating Appalachian State 32-12, the Bison fell to IU 44-3, to Oregon 23-19 and to Ohio 26-13.

Rendos went 4-0 at the Navy Classic, defeating opponents from winner Navy as well as Delaware State, Bloomsburg and Davidson to capture first place in the 165-pound weight division. Eric Lapotsky '10 also performed strongly, with pins against Ed Backus of Binghamton and Michael Bianco of Duquesne and an impressive win over Harry Zander from George Mason. Lapotsky's only loss came from the first place wrestler in the 197 division, Jared Villers of West Virginia. Lapotsky's 3-1 record was good enough to place him second in his weight class.

In the 157 class, Brantley Hooks '10 won third place for the tournament. Hooks won four decisions: two over wrestlers from Binghamton, one over Shaun Smith of Liberty and the other overJoshua McGregor of Delaware. Hooks' only defeat came at the hands of top-seeded Navy's John Jarred, 7-3.

"I thought we wrestled well as a team," Lapotsky said after the match.

Army visited Lewisburg for the Bison's first home match of the season. The Black Knights spoiled the occasion with a decisive 36-6 win. The Orange and Blue's lone win came from Rendos, who pinned Army's John Drew in 2:11.

The Bison traveled to Indiana University over Thanksgiving weekend with a 2-2 record in their duals, but left Bloomington at 3-5.

The Bison led Oregon heading into the final heavyweight match between George Hingson '10 and the Ducks' Chris Dearmon. Hingson, who was bothered by multiple injuries, was pinned in 2:53 to seal the heartbreaking loss. The match saw major victories in the 149-pound division from Michael Guttilla '10 who defeated Zack Frasier 18-5 and Hooks beat Brian Cantrell 13-2. At 125, David Marble '10 defeated Joey Lucas by technical fall 22-6. Lapotsky pinned Chris Robertson in 34 seconds.

Lapotsky, undefeated Saturday at 4-0, provided the Bison with their only victory in their 44-3 loss to nationally ranked Indiana; Lapotsky defeated Justin Curran 6-3.

Rendos continued his strong season against Ohio with a major decision over Ryan Knapp 15-2. Hooks took down Dan Fladda 7-2. Lapotsky pinned Larry Reichard in a 26-13 loss to the Bobcats.

The Bison claimed a win over Appalachian State 32-12. Both Greg Hart '10, at 125, and heavyweight Sean LoCurto '10 won major decisions in the dual, 18-7 and 11-3, respectively. At 141, Zach Galligan '10 and Lapotsky pinned their competition and Rendos beat Tommy Hutchinson 6-1. Hooks collected a forfeit win and Gutilla defeated Zach Martin 12-9 to round out the weekend for the Bison.

"Although we would have liked to come out of there with some more wins, it was definitely a fantastic experience getting the opportunity to wrestle against some other conferences and different wrestling styles," Lapotsky said after his undefeated performance at the Hoosier Duals.

The Bison will host Princeton and Binghamton on Saturday, as they look to even out their duals record for this season.

RUN From page D1

on the difficult 6-kilometer course.

"[She had] a very strong senior year with her three-best races being the last three: the Patriot Leagues, Mid-Atlantics and Nationals. She beat a lot of strong runners at Nationals," Donner said.

Over the course of the season, Nastase placed first at the Patriot League championship, helping boost the women's team to its second straight title. She was part of the First Team All-Patriot League and the USTFCCCA All-Regional Team. She was the top runner for the Orange and Blue in five of the six regular season competitions. Nastase joins some of the Bison's best runners and vaulted the women's team to a new level of achievement.

Nastase reflected on her past four years in the cross country program.

"I'm very fortunate to be on this team. It has been a great experience. The hard work and determination of my teammates has inspired me a lot," Nastase said. "I train with these girls every day, so I could never compete as well as I did without them."

Summer Breeze Stables (Est. 1973)
10 minutes from Campus
Riding Lessons for all levels
Certified Professional Trainer
Large indoor and Outdoor Arenas
Boarding, Training and Showing
Call 570-412-0771 for an appointment

Real Smoked BBQ! Beef Brisket, Pork, Chicken, Ribs! Sandwiches, Wraps, Salads, Platters!
NO RESERVATIONS NEEDED! Call in for TAKEOUT!
SKEETERS PIT BBQ
ON THE BLUFF OVERLOOKING THE SCENIC SUSQUEHANNA RIVER
AT THE INTERSECTION OF ROUTES 11 & 15 SHAMOKIN DAM
570-743-7727
Daily 11:00am - 10:00pm
Sundays till 9:00pm
www.skeetersBBQ.com

Create Color with Clear Vision LOGICS.
The choice for clean, clear, pure tone color. Haircolor with maximum versatility.
Infinite creativity.
Call for an appointment today.
Joseph Carroll Salon
HAIR CARE FOR THE ENTIRE FAMILY
431 Market Street, Lewisburg
524-0790
Open Tuesday–Saturday Walk-ins when time permits www.matrix.com SALON BEAUTIFUL ENJOY! MATRIX

You don't need a line to pick up

The Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

Saylor Says: Best of the Fall

By Matthew Saylor
Sports Editor

With this being the final issue of the semester, it is time to look back at some of the highlights from the past three months.

1. Saturday, Sept. 2 – The football team opened the season with a dramatic 31-28 overtime victory over Duquesne at Christy Mathewson-Memorial Stadium. Terrance Wilson '08 scored on a 15-yard touchdown run to tie the game on the final play of regulation. A field goal by Will Carney '09 won the game for the Bison in overtime.

2. Saturday, Sept. 9 – The men's water polo team defeated both Gannon and No. 20 Johns Hopkins at Kinney Natatorium, opening its season by winning five of its first six games. The Bison scored 33 goals over the two games, compared to the 22 by its opponents. They were led by seven goals apiece from Kyle Roslyn '08 and Jason Rechel '08.

3. Sunday, Sept. 10 – The men's golf team won the Colgate Invitational by three strokes. Charles Waddell '07 and Keita Aoki '08 finished in a tie for second in the individual standings. The team closed out the fall season by winning the Mount St. Mary's Invitational on Oct. 29 and prepares to defend its Patriot League Championship in the spring.

4. Sunday, Oct. 1 – The women's golf team won its first ever tournament title, defeating Lehigh by one stroke to win the Bucknell Fall Classic. Teri Schlang '07 shot a 76-75 to win the individual title — only the second individual title in the program's nine years.

5. Friday, Oct. 20 – The volleyball team defeated league rival Army 3-2 in front of over 800 spectators at a rockin' Davis Gym. The team finished the year 20-12 (10-4) before losing to American University in the Patriot League Championship game. Kristen Sydlowski '07 set a new Patriot League single-season record with 612 digs, and Shannon Pitsch '09 established a new University single-season record with 1,199 assists.

6. Saturday, Oct. 21 – The women's rowing team won the varsity four event at the Head of the Charles, finishing less than two seconds ahead of runner-up Penn State, but at least 25 seconds ahead of everyone else in the field of 22. The varsity four also won at the Head of the Genesee.

7. Wednesday, Oct. 25 – The field hockey team upset No. 18 Villanova at Graham Field, its first victory over a ranked opponent. Emily Hutchison '09 and Katie Urosevich '07 scored for the Bison in the 2-0 victory, while Emily Groendyke '07 had 10 saves for her second shutout of the season.

8. Saturday, Oct. 28 – The women's cross country team won its second consecutive Patriot League title, while men's cross country finished third. Leanna Nastase '07 captured the individual title, while Matt Forys '07 finished third on the men's side. Both seniors competed at the 2006 NCAA National Championships.

9. Sunday, Oct. 29 – The women's soccer team upset undefeated No.14 Navy 2-1 to clinch a share of the Patriot League regular season title. This was the 12th and final win of the season for the Bison, tying the program record.

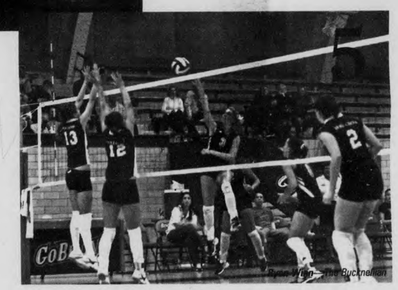
10. Sunday, Nov. 5 – The men's soccer team won the Patriot League Tournament and advanced to the NCAA Tournament with upset wins over No. 14 Lehigh and Lafayette, both via penalty kicks. The Bison defeated George Mason 1-0 in overtime in the first round of the NCAA Tournament, before ending its season with a loss to No. 4 Virginia.

11. Friday, Nov. 10 – The women's basketball team opened the season with an 85-77 home win over the Hampton Pirates. Lindsey Hollobaugh '07 scored 22 points and Hope Foster '08 added 20 points and 16 rebounds, along with a University-record eight blocked shots. Foster would break her own record and tie the Patriot League record with 11 blocks against No. 17 Michigan State exactly one week later.

12. Saturday, Nov. 11 – The wrestling team won two of its first three matches in its first competition since its reinstatement. The team had not competed since 2002.

13. Tuesday, Nov. 14 – The men's basketball team lost 86-83 in overtime against Wake Forest, the first ACC team to play the Bison in Lewisburg. A crowd of 4,330 watched the game at Sojka Pavilion — the second highest attendance in the arena's history. Abe Badmus '07, Rob Thomas '08, Donald Brown '07, Jason Vegotsky '09, Darren Mastropaolo '08 and Andrew Morrison '08 all scored in double figures for the Bison, with Thomas, Mastropaolo and Morrison all achieving new career highs.

Daniel Stern—The Bucknellian



Daniel Stern—The Bucknellian

Cross country closes out season

Women's team places second at ECAC championship, while men take fourth spot at IC4A in Bronx, N.Y.

By Brian Mulligan
Sports Editor

The women's and men's cross country teams traveled to Bronx, N.Y., to compete in the ECAC/IC4A championship, wrapping up their fall campaign. The women's team placed second out of 18 teams, beating out Binghamton, Army and Towson. Molly Pritz '10 led the Bison with an eighth-place finish overall in 18 minutes 52 seconds.

"Our women ran a fantastic race," Head Coach Kevin Donner said. "Last year, we finished 12th. Molly Pritz ended a great freshman year to earn All-East Honors. We use this meet as a developmental meet and allowed non-varsity athletes to compete against varsity programs from other schools. Our athletes competed very well."

Kim Hassett '09 was next to finish for the Orange and Blue, crossing the finish line in 19:19 to take 19th place. Jennifer Grant '08 finished the 5-kilometer race in 19:20, good enough for 21st place. The top five for the Bison was rounded out by Offeibea Hanson-Hall '08 and Molly Harms '07, placing 32nd and 43rd respectively.

"From the beginning of the season, it was evident that our team was set to do big things, but the fact that they actually became a reality was what made it so special," Hanson-Hall said. "It was hard work and team work with the will of each individual to do better that helped us to have such an outstanding season."

> "From the beginning of the season, it was evident that our team was set to do big things, but the fact that they actually became a reality was what made it so special."
> — Offeibea Hanson-Hall '08

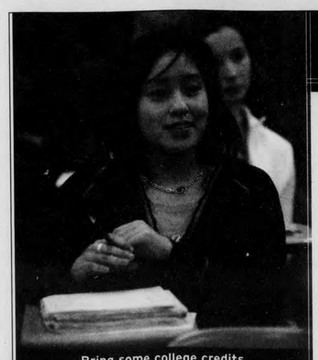
The men's team finished fourth out of 19 teams on the 5-mile course behind Fordham, Binghamton and Army. The Bison beat out Monmouth in the top five. Joe Foley '09 was the first to finish for the Orange and Blue at 12th.

"Our men also competed very well. We were 13th in the same meet last year," Donner said. "Joe Foley finished a great freshman year with All-East Honors. We hope to see him be a consistent varsity athlete next year.'

Andrew Huebner '10, William Holleran '08 and Sean Egan '07 finished within eight seconds of each other to finish 30th, 35th and 38th respectively. Derrin Pierret '07 rounded out the scorers for the Bison at the championship, finishing in 27:36.

The ECAC/IC4A championship marked the end of the team season for the Bison. The women won the Patriot League championship for the second year, while the men stunned the league with a better than expected third-place finish. The Bison also sent Matt Forys '07 and Leanna Nastase '07 to the NCAA National Championship in Terre Haute, Ind.

The team will now enter the indoor season, starting at 10 a.m. Saturday at the Bison Opener in the Gerhard Fieldhouse.



Fairfield University
Jesuit. Personal. Powerful.

Winter Intersession Courses
Put your winter break to good use!

Earn 3-Credits in One or Four Weeks
One Week Sessions: January 3 – 9, 2007
Four Week Online Sessions: January 2 – 31, 2007

Subject areas:
Art History* · Applied Ethics* · American Studies · Business · Economics · Ethics · History · Italian · Literature · Math* · Management* · Music · Politics* · Psychology* · Religious Studies* · Sociology · Studio Arts · Writing*
(* Courses also available in online format!)

More course & registration info at:
www.fairfield.edu/ucwisbu
Register by Phone: (203) 254-4288
Registration deadline is Dec. 20, 2006

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE AT Fairfield UNIVERSITY
Jesuit. Personal. Powerful.
Fairfield, Connecticut

A Bucknell Tradition Since 1968

bull run inn

Open 7 days a week:
Mon. – Sat. 11:30 a.m.—2 a.m. and Sunday 11:30 a.m. – midnight

605 Market St., downtown Lewisburg
ph: (570) 524-2572
www.bullruninn.com
(check for current features and events)

Now serving
SUNDAY BRUNCH
Menu Available 11:30 a.m.—2 p.m.

POP QUIZ
Tuesday's—9—11 p.m.
Specials—Prizes—Giveaways

Monday Night Football @ 9 p.m.

'Whose house? Hope's house!'

Junior center/forward Hope Foster anchors the Orange and Blue defense with frequent block parties

By Jared Napolitano
Business Manager

Hope Foster '08 commands presence on the basketball court. Sports experts, columnists and analysts use this phrase to describe players who stand out above the rest, and it certainly fits for Foster.

Only seven games into her third season on the women's basketball team, No. 21's all-around game reached new heights in her quest to bring success to a team on the upswing.

Foster already tallied 41 blocks and 112 points and currently leads the team in field goals, rebounds, blocks and points. She averages almost 36 minutes per contest and shoots a scorching 89 percent from the free throw line.

Foster continues to dazzle spectators even after a phenomenal first two years on the team. She received a First Team All-Rookie honor in her first season and a First Team All-League selection as a sophomore.

"I go out there every day and continue to work hard," Foster said. "I do my best and continually try to keep getting better."

While her defensive skills have been sharp since first stepping on the court in the 2004-2005 season, Foster's offensive game came around greatly in the early part of the 2006-2007 season. With a 16.0 point-per-game average accompanied by an above-average 57.1 percent field goal percentage, Foster has certainly made offensive strides since last season.

"In the off-season I really decided that I wanted to score more. I saw offensive rebounding as a great way to do this," Foster said. "I want to be a consistent option on the low block and help benefit the team whatever way I can."

Perhaps the most fascinating statistic of this season is Foster's block total. Through a little more than two seasons, the 6-2 center/forward from Washington, D.C. already owns the University career blocks record (currently at 208). The Patriot League record is held by Holy Cross' Kathy Courtney. Foster averages 3.45 blocks per game for her career, meaning the league record is a strong possibility.

"It's definitely achievable. I'd love to hold the record," Foster said.

The Bison's defense became a powerful force ever since Foster has minded the paint. So far this year, opponents made only 35.9 percent of their shots and posted 61.6 points per contest. Foster's 5.9 blocks and 9.0 boards per outing are a major factor in the Bison's ability to shut down opponents defensively, but Foster maintains a modest and team-first approach.

"A lot of our success on defense can be attributed to our coaching," Foster said. "There's a big emphasis on rebounding and a definite attitude to stop the other team and force them to play to our pace."

On her astounding block statistics, Foster described the act as "my thing to do."

"I love to do it," Foster said. "It helps out the team and gives us a momentum boost. I really want to send [the ball] back."

In addition to the stifling defense led by Foster, the women's basketball team can credit their 4-3 mark to an experienced squad returning all five starters from last year.

"It helps a lot that we don't have to start from scratch," Foster said. "We're very familiar with each other and each starter knows what the other one is doing. We have good chemistry."

The squad defeated Hampton, Columbia, Cornell and Monmouth, while its three losses were against No. 12 Michigan State and Atlantic 10 opponents St. Joseph's and Richmond.

"We see every game as winnable. We believe we are good enough to be 7-0," Foster said. "We are always able to come back and continue to fight when we're down."

Foster, who already won two Patriot League Player of the Week accolades this season, views Tim Duncan, Michelle Kwan, Tiger Woods, Muhammad Ali and Michael Jordan as role models. Out of this bunch, she respects Duncan the most for his classy and consistent play and attitude both on and off the court.

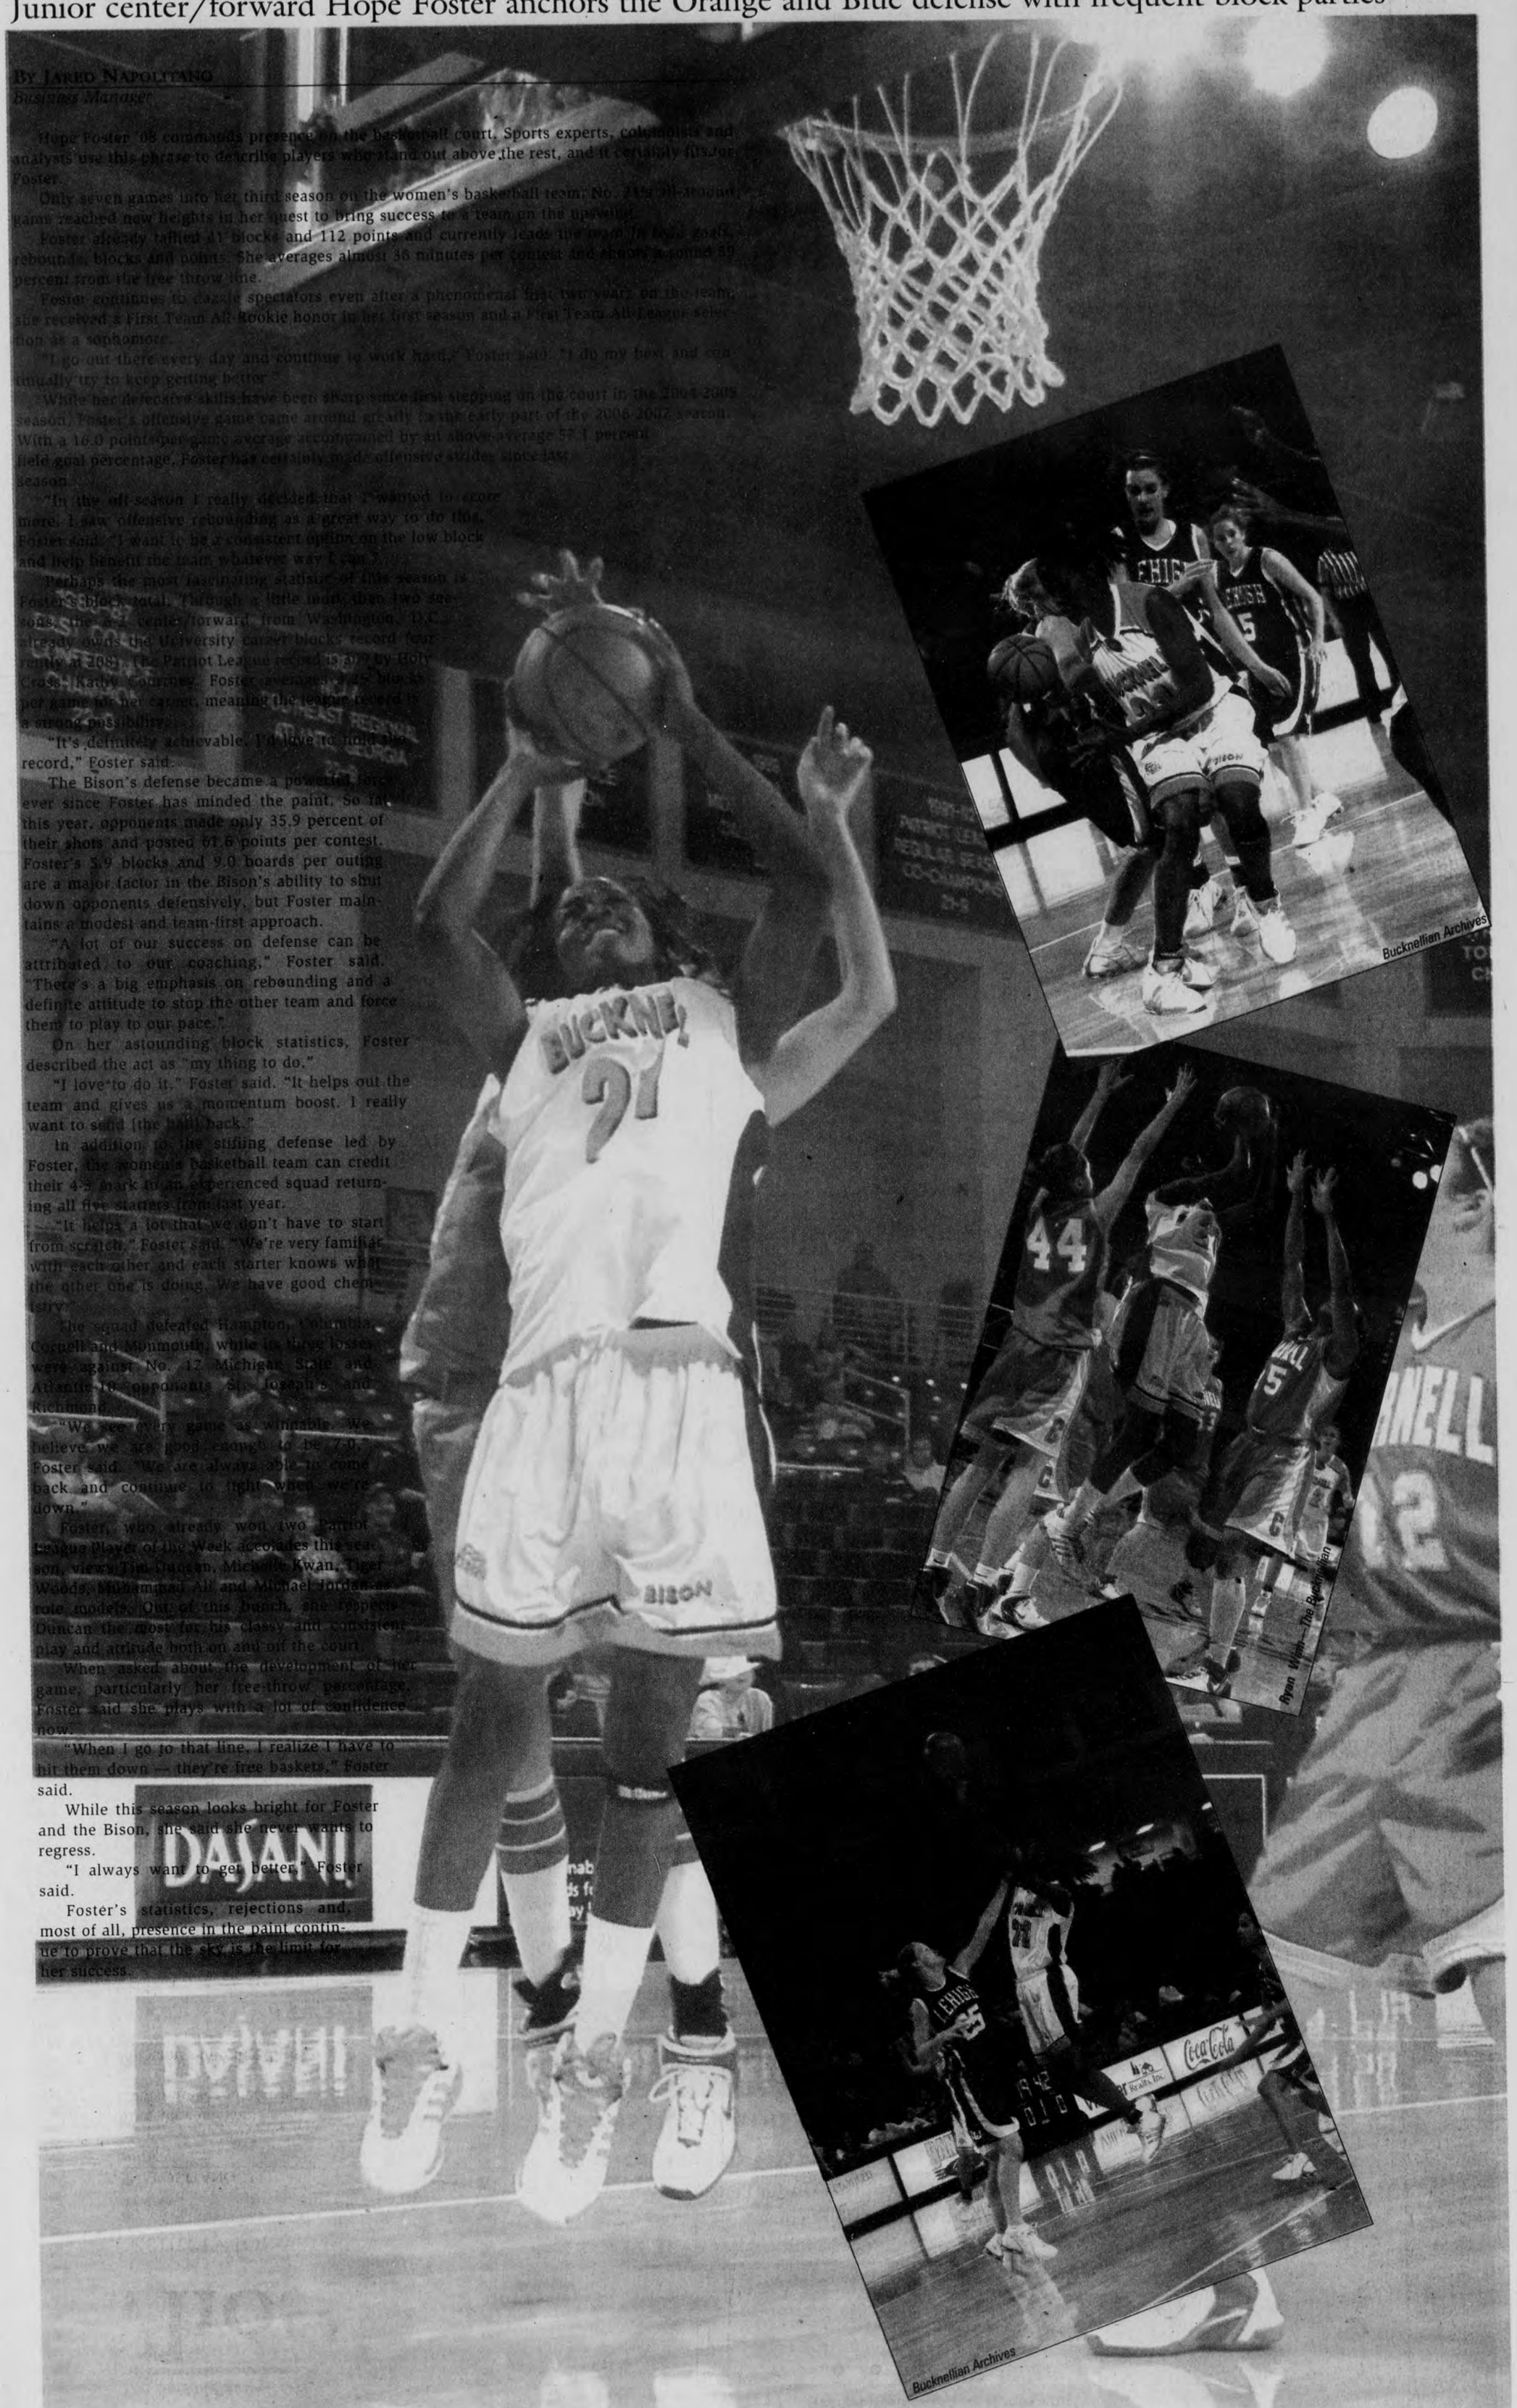
When asked about the development of her game, particularly her free-throw percentage, Foster said she plays with a lot of confidence now.

"When I go to that line, I realize I have to hit them down — they're free baskets," Foster said.

While this season looks bright for Foster and the Bison, she said she never wants to regress.

"I always want to get better," Foster said.

Foster's statistics, rejections and, most of all, presence in the paint continue to prove that the sky is the limit for her success.



The Bucknellian

January 26, 2007

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

Volume 139, Number 1 | Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue | www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Time for a change

Writer Erica Schiffres '10 asks students and the University president what they resolved to do for the new year.

See page A8

VP of ISR leaves after 29 years

By Carly Whitehead
Writer

Gene Spencer '76, associate vice president for Information Services and Resources (ISR) is leaving the University after 29 years of service in the consulting industry.

"I'm in my early 50s and I think that if I wait five years it might be too late for me to leave," Spencer said. "This is a great time for the campus to think about what they would look for with someone new in this position."

Spencer began his career in 1977 as a senior analyst, writing systems on the University's mainframe computer. In 1992, he was promoted to co-director of Computer and Communication Services, the precursor to ISR. He was a member of the leadership team to help start ISR in 1997. Spencer became associate vice president of ISR in 2002.

"[The University and the surrounding area] has been a wonderful place to work and raise a family" Spencer said.

During his years at the University, he applied for and received offers for jobs at other institutions.

"As I compared each to what we were doing at Bucknell, I decided that there were challenges here worth tackling and a community of colleagues that were unmatched elsewhere," Spencer said.

Spencer's departure from the University comes at a transitional time in his life and for the University.

Spencer said that in the future, he may accept a similar role at the University. For now, he will not leave the area and will base his consulting work in Danville, which he called "a great community."

"Gene Spencer gave 29 years of his outstanding career to Bucknell, and earned great admiration across those many years of service for his decency, work ethic, vision and drive. Both as an alumnus and by virtue of his ser-

See SPENCER page A2

Spring concert headliner:

Goo Goo Dolls

Reuters Photo Archive

The Goo Goo Dolls will headline the spring concert on March 24, with alternative rock band Augustana performing the opening act. See page B10 for the full story.

Emergency preparedness program debuts today

By Michelle Laxer
News Editor

Members of the campus community now have the opportunity to help their fellow Bucknellians were the University to experience a major emergency.

Today marks the formal introduction of the Got Skills? Program, the newest addition to the current Emergency Preparedness and Crisis Management Plan.

The program asks students, faculty and staff to register with the program if they are trained or certified in any emergency response skills and "would be willing to offer them in the event they are needed," according to the Got Skills? Web site.

The University is interested in a range of skills, from basic first aid and CPR to the more advanced EMT or firefighter training. In the event of an emergency, skilled members of the community may be asked to offer assistance in managing or controlling the situation.

"We want to give people with these skills the opportunity to volunteer and help each other," said Chief Communications Officer Pete Mackey.

As of today, students, faculty and staff may register their emergency skills on the Got Skills? Web site, located at www.bucknell.edu/got-skills. When registering, students, faculty and staff must indicate whether they are trained or certified.

The Web site also offers definitions and explanations of all the listed skills.

All information entered upon registration is confidential and those who register will only be contacted if needed in an emergency.

"We've been going to a variety of student groups to promote this," said Jason Friedberg, director of Public

See GOT SKILLS page A3

Student loan rates to be cut in half by 2012

By Brian Mulligan
Sports Editor

The U.S. House of Representatives passed the College Student Relief Act of 2007 in a 356-71 vote on Jan. 17. The new act will make college more affordable and accessible to high school graduates by cutting interest rates on subsidized Stafford student loans from the current 6.8 percent to 3.4 percent over a five-year period. This move was part of the "first 100 hours initiative" taken by the newly Democratic Congress.

Granted that the bill passes in the Senate, the first cut in interest rates will take place on July 1, 2007, decreasing the rate to 6.12 percent. The bill will impose no new cost to taxpayers and is created to make the system of borrowing for college more efficient.

Rep. George Miller, D-Calif., chairman of the House Committee on Education and Labor, believes that this is the first step towards making college more affordable for the U.S. middle class.

"How to pay for a college has become a primary concern for students and families across this country–a concern that Congress must urgently address as part of our goal of strengthening America's middle class," Miller said in a prepared release. "This legislation will be a vital first step towards helping lower college costs for millions of low- and middle-income students, while keeping our promises to taxpayers to maintain responsible spending."

The cost of college has been outpacing inflation. The cost of attending a private college has skyrocketed by 52 percent, adjusted for inflation, since the 1991-92 academic year, according to the College Board.

The rising cost of colleges has been at the epicenter of the argument. When the Class of 2007 arrived at the University, its tuition with room and board was approximately $36,000, according to CollegeToolkit.com. The estimated cost for the 2006-07 academic year is $43,368, according to the University Web site. The comprehensive fee has increased 20 percent since the Class of 2007 arrived on campus less than four years ago.

The cut will affect only the subsidized Stafford loan program. The Stafford loan program is the government's largest loan program for college students that are based on need and are not paid back until after graduation.

As a result of the increas-

See LOANS page A3

Bob Woodward to speak at this year's commencement

By Nilanjana Saha
Features Editor

Bob Woodward, an award-winning journalist and author, will speak to the Class of 2007 at the 157th Commencement on May 20.

Currently the assistant managing editor of The Washington Post, Woodward established himself as one of the pre-eminent journalists after he, along with Carl Bernstein, exposed the Watergate scandal surrounding the Nixon administration in 1972.

"[Woodward's] work has challenged the concept of power in our democratic system," said Loren Fishkind, president of the senior class.

After graduating from Yale in 1965, Woodward served in the Navy for four years. He began working at the Post in 1971 and since then has published more than 10 No. 1, best-selling works of nonfiction.

"Woodward is an extremely accomplished journalist. He is widely thought of across his profession and he has maintained his national stature," Chief Communications Officer Pete Mackey said.

Woodward's contribution to investigative journalism throughout the last three decades, especially during the disclosure of the Watergate scandal and the aftermath of the Sept. 11 attacks, helped the Post win the Pulitzer Prize twice.

Last May, the officers of the Class of 2007 were asked to submit a wish list of potential speakers.

"We all agreed that we wanted people on the list whose names were recognizable, that made a difference by his or her actions and that could deliver a powerful message," Fishkind said.

According to Mackey, timing and availability was also a significant factor in choosing a speaker for commencement.

Woodward was informed of the student interest in having him as a speaker and his willingness to come speak at the University is indicative of the University's favorable reputation, Mackey said.

"[Woodward] would be someone who would be able to speak about important, contemporary issues and in these times, he would be a great speaker for students and parents at graduation," Mackey said.

In recent years, Woodward was awarded the Gerald R. Ford prize for distinguished reporting and published a trilogy about the Bush administration and the war in Iraq.

See WOODWARD page A2

INSIDE THIS ISSUE

OPINIONS

Will a Stafford loan interest rate decrease really make college cheaper?

A4

A&E

A&E examines the make-up of "Dirt," FX's newest drama.

B9

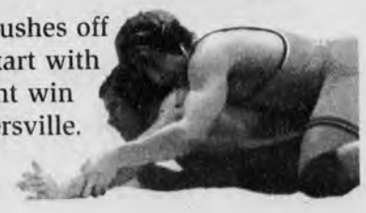
FEATURES

Summer Rozzi '08 narrates her adventures through Ecuador this break.

A10

SPORTS

Wrestling pushes off to a great start with their recent win over Millersville.



B2

Public Safety Log

Friday, January 12

INTRUSION ALARM—Marts Hall: CLOSED: Unknown Cause.

INTRUSION ALARM—Swartz Hall: CLOSED: Employee activated.

Sunday, January 14

FIRE ALARM—Kappa Delta Rho Fraternity: CLOSED: Alarm caused by cleaning.

Tuesday, January 16

ALCOHOL VIOLATION UNREGISTERED PARTY—Kappa Delta Rho Fraternity: CLOSED: Charges filed for an unregistered party at Kappa Delta Rho fraternity.

THEFT—Sigma Alpha Epsilon: OPEN: Bicycle stolen from a bike rack.

FIRE ALARM—Bucknell West Mod 11: CLOSED: Caused by cooking.

DISORDERLY CONDUCT—Sigma Chi Fraternity: OPEN: Unauthorized use of fireplace. Charges Pending.

Wednesday, January 17

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Elaine Langone Center-Bison: CLOSED: Employee transported to Evangelical Hospital for treatment.

BURGLARY—Smith Hall: OPEN: Projector stolen from room.

Thursday, January 18

FIRE ALARM—Lambda Chi Alpha: CLOSED: Alarm caused by cleaning.

HARASSMENT/PHONE—Gateway Malisardi: OPEN: Students received several messages via phone.

THEFT—Kinney Pool: OPEN: Boots taken from the locker room.

Friday, January 19

THEFT— On Campus: OPEN: Cell phone stolen.

THEFT—Elaine Langone Center: OPEN: Black wool coat reported missing.

Saturday, January 20

FIRE ALARM—Bucknell West Mod 5: CLOSED: Caused by cooking.

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Larison Hall: CLOSED: Two students cited for underage consumption.

FIRE ALARM—Kappa Delta Rho: CLOSED: Student cited for a candle violation.

VEHICLE ACCIDENT—Smith Hall Parking Lot: CLOSED: Minor vehicle accident with no injuries.

Sunday, January 21

ASSIST OTHER AGENCY—35 South Seventh Street: CLOSED: Assist Lewisburg Police domestic.

FIRE ALARM—Gateway Silberman Room 240: CLOSED: Caused by cooking.

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—BUWT Mod 12: CLOSED: Caused by cooking. Students tampered with the fire alarm system.

Monday, January 22

FIRE ALARM—Sigma Alpha Epsilon: CLOSED: Caused by cooking.

INTRUSION ALARM—Bertrand Library Computer Room: CLOSED: Employee activated.

Tuesday, January 23

INTRUSION ALARM—West Field Press Box: CLOSED: Caused by employee.

Wednesday, January 24

INTRUSION ALARM—Bertand Library: CLOSED: Student departed the building through an alarmed door.

FIRE ALARM—Kappa Sigma: CLOSED: Cause unknown.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT: Langone Center: CLOSED: Student transported to Evangelical Hospital for treatment.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Smith Hall Parking Lot: OPEN: Antenna broken off vehicle. Under investigation.

Spencer leaves the University

SPENCER From page A1

vice to Bucknell, Gene will always be appreciated warmly as a Bucknellian, and we know he will have continued success," said Provost Mary DeCredico.

Spencer will be greatly missed on campus.

"It has been my pleasure to have had the opportunity to work with Gene Spencer. His contributions at Bucknell have been significant," said Jeannie Zappe, the interim co-director for ISR. "He will be missed by many, and I wish him all the best."

Spencer earned an undergraduate degree in math from the University and was president of the Kappa Delta Rho fraternity during his years as a student. In 1992, he earned a master's degree in business administration from the University. He has remained involved in Greek life on campus, and was awarded the Paul Pigman Memorial Award at the 2004 Fraternity and Sorority Awards for his role as a member of Council of Greek Life (COGL). He served as committee chair of COGL for two years.

Spencer has valued his time at the University.

"There is a collaborative environment here that I will miss," Spencer said.

Spencer's final day is Jan. 31, 2007.

"As I compared each to what we were doing at Bucknell, I decided that there were challenges here worth tackling and a community of colleagues that were unmatched elsewhere."

—Gene Spencer,
vice president of ISR

Commencement speaker announced

WOODWARD From page A1

The Class of 2007 seems enthusiastic about having Woodward as the speaker.

"I have received positive feedback and as I walk around campus everyone seems excited to welcome Bob Woodward to Bucknell as our commencement speaker," Fishkind said. "I am sure his message will be very meaningful to all of us as we look to pursue our own destination."

Remembering President Ford's visit

By Jeremy O'Sullivan
Writer

As Americans mourn the death of former U.S. President Gerald Ford, who died Dec. 26, 2006, the University community should remember that after his formal career ended, Ford paid a visit to campus on April 28, 1978.

"I was there!" said Provost Mary DeCredico '81. "I was a freshman, it was spring semester and there was a lottery system but because I was enrolled in the Introduction to American Politics course I got to attend."

Ford's campus visit consisted of a short brunch for distinguished University guests followed by three split lectures oriented around various political interests and academic subjects. The former president's first two lectures titled "Are Political Parties Dead?" and "The Role of the President Today," were focused around advanced political science students and their professors, but his last lecture of the day called "Energy, Environment, and the Economy" was presented to 460 economics, engineering, and geology students. The president even entertained questions from students and faculty after his speeches.

"He was talking about American politics and the political system," said DeCredico, recollecting her experience of the former president's speech delivered in Rooke Chapel. "I can still see myself sitting in the pew and he was sitting in the pulpit."

Associate Vice-President for Academic Affairs Lois Huffines recalls that when she was chair of the linguistics department she was able to attend the breakfast and able to meet the former president.

"I remember thinking how short he was because the then university president Dennis O'Brien was so tall," said Huffines.

"To be a freshman here and have the President of the United States coming…and then because you're taking a government class you get to go and hear him… that was some pretty heavy stuff," said Decredico. "It was exciting…my classmates were thinking wow it doesn't get any better than this."

Digging through the Bucknellian achieves, the Bucknellian staff was able to find a copy of the original May 5, 1978 issue, which covers the President's visit in detail.

At one point during his speech, Ford was asked if he would run in the 1980 election after losing to Jimmy Carter in 1976.

"Whether I do run depends a lot on what kind of job Mr. Carter has done," Ford said.

Ford eventually did not seek re-election.

Ford's speech addressed many current hot topic issues of the decade. For instance, he attacked the War Powers Act of 1973, which required the President to gain approval from Congress for military operations within 60 days of authorizing troops.

"This encroachment on the role of the President as Commander-in Chief is an impractical exercise of Congressional prerogative," said Ford.

Another also discussed the nation's energy policy and the use of nuclear fuel.

"I believe that nuclear power is going to be a significant contributor to our total energy production. Environmentally, it is the cleanest of any power source, and it is safe as well. I've heard of no major power plant failures that affected a nuclear employee," said Ford.

Interestingly, Ford made these comments less than year before the Three Mile Island nuclear disaster of Pennsylvania in 1979 and eight years before the Chernobyl disaster in the Ukraine in 1986.

All American flags are being flown at half-staff until today.

Bucknellian Archives

Former President Gerald Ford speaks at the University in 1978. Ford discussed current events and political policies of the day.

Professor emeritus dies at age 75

Hans Veening taught chemistry for 39 years at the University

By Rachel Freeman
Contributing Writer

Hans Veening, an emeritus professor of chemistry, passed away on Dec. 27. He is survived by his wife of 49 years, Betty.

Veening was born in the Netherlands in 1931 and received his bachelor's degree from Hope College in 1953. He went on to receive his master's degree and Ph.D. in chemistry from Purdue University six years later. He began his career at the University in 1958 and became the chair of the chemistry department. He retired in 1997.

Veening was an inspiration to many. Through his research and dedication to his students, he demonstrated high standards and hard work.

"[Veening] emphasized precision and held himself to the same standards he held his students and colleagues," said Tim Strein, professor and current chair of the chemistry department. "It was not hard to work hard around him because he was such a great role model."

This inspiration resonated with other faculty members who worked with Veening. Barry Maxwell, former vice president of finances, remembers Veening as a "strong advocate of teaching" with "high integrity."

While at the University, Veening's research was primarily concerned with analytic chemistry and specifically liquid chromatography. Veening did work with artificial kidneys by attempting to discover what fluids and toxin the kidney releases.

Veening's personality was exemplified by the first lecture he ever gave as a professor.

"He was in the Olin Auditorium and was using meters that measure current and voltage. He was trying to demonstrate electric charge, so he filled a balloon with oxygen and hydrogen. This led to an explosion. The explosion was so loud that it broke the glass on the meter. He was convinced he was going to be fired," Strein said.

Veening was an inspiration to many. Through his research and dedication to his students, he demonstrated high standards and hard work.

Robert Slonaker, emeritus professor of chemical engineering, recalls that even after they both retired from the University, they would talk for hours. The two lived blocks away from each other.

"If Hans came by and I was outdoors, Emily [the dog] had a very impatient period of time to put up with as Hans and I had long conversations," Slonaker said.

Veening was part of a group called the "Billy Owens Club." The group meets every month and consists of retired faculty of the University.

"It was a nice opportunity to get together with people we knew while we were at Bucknell," Maxwell said.

Veening maintained close relations with the campus community after retiring and was always concerned with raising money to allow students to do research.

"[Veening] truly made a significant difference at Bucknell," Maxwell said.

Slonaker said that both he and the University community will miss Veening.

"I will miss Hans, and I know that I have lots of company," Slonaker said.

Summer 2007 in Paris
A multitude of undergraduate, credit-bearing courses
- Two 5-week Sessions
- Fast Track Intensives
- French Immersions

www.aup.edu

THE AMERICAN UNIVERSITY OF PARIS knowledge, perspective, understanding

$250 CASH
Sign on BONUS
Call for details
3 & 4 Bedroom Houses
CLOSE TO CAMPUS
WHIRLPOOL
WASHER / DRYER
DISHWASHER
STOVE & FRIG

Newly renovated houses available 2006/2007
570-524-5714 / 570-412-4831
or 570-524-5745 /
570-490-2922

The Bucknellian shuffles staff

As The Bucknellian's executive administration sails off in different directions, three new executive editors pick up the reins.

Andrew Larson '08 will serve as editor-in-chief; Matt Saylor '08, who has been sports editor for three semesters, takes over as associate editor of content and Lily Beauvilliers '09, who has been arts and entertainment layout editor for three semesters, takes over as associate editor of layout.

Catherine Heverling '07, the previous editor-in-chief, slides into a role as senior editor during her second semester of senior year. Jamie Jacobson '08, the previous associate editor of content, is traveling the world on a Semester at Sea voyage and Rina Van Orden '08, the previous associate editor of layout, is studying abroad in Rome.

Larson, entering his sixth semester at The Bucknellian, has seen the newspaper from many different angles as a copy editor, news editor and, last spring, associate editor of content. He also has experience working at several daily newspapers.

Saylor, during his tenure in the sports department, expanded the breadth of The Bucknellian's athletics coverage, moved writers into a successful beat system, sent a reporter to Dallas to cover the men's basketball team's first- and second-round games in the 2006 NCAA Tournament and set high standards for his entire staff. He has a perfect track record for attending men's and women's basketball games and also enjoys following the women's volleyball team.

Beauvilliers, in her arts and entertainment role, designed exceptional layouts, using graphics and various text schemes to turn each page into its own story. One highlight was her back-page design for a story on Misleading Trails, an art exhibit at the Samek Art Gallery, which led readers, via squiggly lines, on a circuitous tour through some of the gallery's paintings.

The Bucknellian also welcomes three new editors to its staff: Janna Shapiro '08, arts and entertainment assigning editor, replaces Kim Kane '08; Genna Jerrard '10, arts and entertainment layout editor, replaces Beauvilliers and Shannon Pitsch '09 climbs aboard in sports.

Barbara Perlman '09 replaces Saylor as sports assigning editor and Brian Mulligan '08 takes on a larger role as sports layout editor. Pitsch, who plays on the volleyball team, will provide general assistance.

Also, there were two editorial swaps: Michael Dippery '08, the new opinions assigning editor, switched roles with Hallie Stebbins '08, the new opinions layout editor. Nilanjana Saha '09, the new features assigning editor, switched with Julia Fuchs '09, who moves to news layout.

The Bucknellian also welcomes seven new copy editors to its staff: Molly Clay (grad), Sarah Cheong '10, Kristina DiFranco '08, Chessa Forer '07, Lauren Hall '10, Anna Juan '08 and Kelly Malloy '10.

University expands emergency preparedness plan for students

GOT SKILLS From page A1

Safety. Both Friedberg and Mackey said the program was met with "overwhelming enthusiasm" from the students.

The next phase of the project is Want Skills?, which will allow members of the University community to take on-campus classes in certain emergency response techniques and skills.

Classes available will depend on how many and what kind of classes Public Safety can reasonably manage.

Once the Want Skills? portion is implemented, students, faculty and staff can indicate an interest in the available classes on the Got Skills? Web site. A deadline for the program has not yet been determined.

The idea for the Got Skills? Program arose during a review of the University's Emergency Preparedness and Crisis Management Plan in the late summer and early fall.

The program is to supplement to the University's existing on-campus and local emergency and crisis management procedures.

"We want to be as prepared as possible so we need to gather this information in advance," said Mackey.

At the beginning of last semester, faculty and staff were offered training for the Community Emergency Response Team (CERT). This program is another step in updating the current emergency preparedness and crisis management plan.

"We were looking for faculty and staff who wanted to be trainers. We want a core training group for CERT on campus," Friedberg said.

Currently, there are six University staff members who have been through CERT training and they will assist in Union County Emergency Management training for the University and Lewisburg.

The end result should be a University CERT group whose members are knowledgeable in basic emergency procedures and can recognize basic situations that present danger to the campus and Lewisburg community, such as identifying fallen live electrical wires or the smell of natural gas.

"[With CERT] we, the University, have the opportunity to give back to the community," Friedberg said.

All throughout next week, the Got Skills? Program will be promoted intensely throughout campus.

From 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. on Wednesday, computers will be setup on the Uphill side of the Elaine Langone Center so anyone can register throughout the day.

"People on campus care about this institution and there is a real sense of community," Mackey said. "[The program] gives them the chance to look out for family and friends."

Courtesy of the Office of Communications

Congress seeks to aid college students

LOANS From page A1

ing college costs, students are also leaving college deep in debt.

According to the research done by AllianceBernstein Investments, a financial planning firm, for the 1,508 college graduates ages 21 to 35, the average amount of debt each had was $29,000 and 39 percent of those with debt claimed that it would take them more than 10 years to pay off their students loans.

"Large amounts of college debt put graduates in a hole that can take years, even decades from which to emerge," said Richard A. Davies, senior managing director at AllianceBernstein Investments. "Funding a college education isn't just about those four years; it's about a young adult's ability to start a family, buy a house and ultimately event to one day retire."

News Briefs

BSG class of '08 interim elections

Bucknell Student Government is holding elections to fill vacancies left by juniors studying abroad this semester. Candidates' campaigns began on Wednesday, Jan. 24 and will end with an all-day election on Tuesday, Jan. 30. The candidates are:
-President: Andrew King
-Vice President: Kelly Walker, Connie Low, Sarah Simmons
-Representative: Emily Chiodo, Connie Low, Sarah Simmons, Katie Metzler, Erin Price, Jessie Wilburn

China launches secret missile test

On Tuesday, China confirmed that it conducted a missile test that sent a guided missile into space with the intent to destroy one of its own satellites as part of the country's anti-satellite technology tests. U.S. monitors detected the test on Jan. 11, but the Chinese government refused to confirm its actions. "The U.S. and other international governments now have been informed about the secret test through diplomatic channels," Foreign Ministry Spokesman Liu Jianchao told The Washington Post. The test is a concern because U.S. satellites could be vulnerable to an attack. Debris from satellite explosions may also pose a threat to U.S. satellites in space. According to The Post, the actions of the Chinese contradict their efforts and proclamations of avoiding an arms race in space.

Man's best friend gets own beer

Terrie Berenden, a Dutch pet shop owner, created a nonalcoholic beer for dogs made from beef extract and malt. According to CNN.com, she is working with a local brewery to make and bottle the beer. It is branded as Kwispelbier, kwispel being the Dutch word for wagging a tail. The idea struck Berenden after her annual hunting trip in Austria. "At the end of the day we sit on the veranda and drink a beer. So we thought, my dog also has earned it," she told CNN.com. The beer was introduced to the market last week and it is fit for human consumption. It is being advertised as "a beer for your best friend."

Sword makes yearbook cut

On Friday, Jan. 19, Rhode Island's Education Commissioner Peter McWalters ordered Portsmouth High School to publish the school yearbook with the picture of a student holding a sword in his senior portrait. Patrick Agin, 17, is a medieval enthusiast and dressed in chain mail and held a sword over his shoulder for his senior portrait to express his interests. "School officials said the picture violated a zero-tolerance policy on weapons and rejected the picture for the yearbook," The Washington Post reported. During the ruling, school officials offered to publish the photo only if it was part of a paid yearbook advertisement. Hearing Officer Paul Pontarelli wrote in his ruling that the school authorities could regulate what was published in the yearbook, but they acted "unreasonably" in regards to Agin's photo.

Amber alert on MySpace

Starting Tuesday, MySpace, a social networking website, will begin to issue online Amber alerts to its users. These alerts inform users of missing children in their neighborhood. MySpace and the National Center for Missing & Exploited Children are working together to distribute appropriate alerts based on the zip code to which the account is registered, reported CNN.com. Alerts are compiled and created by local law enforcement agencies. Alerts appear on profiles as small text boxes. "The user can click on the box for more information, including a photo of the missing child and a description of the suspect," CNN.com said. These alerts are named after Amber Hagerman, who was killed in Texas in 1996 when she was 9 years old.

Bucknell University proudly inaugurates the new
Janet Weis cabaret jazz series
Wednesday, January 31
8:00 p.m. – Free
The Natalie Davis Rooke Recital Hall
in the Sigfried Weis Music Building

jazz vocalist extraordinaire
ROSEANNA VITRO
Allen Farnham, piano
Dean Johnson, bass
Tim Horner, drums coming events

Wednesday, February 28
Pianist & composer
Steve Rudolph & friends - a mini cabaret jazz festival
Wednesday, March 28
Acclaimed pop-jazz vocalist
Ann Hampton Callaway

The Janet Weis Cabaret Jazz Series is made possible by funding from the Weis family with additional support from the Degenstein Foundation.
Bucknell

Igniting Creative Ideas
On Fire Promotions
by trautman associates, inc.
promotional products · fundraising items
embroidered & screenprinted caps & apparel
awards · trophies · business gifts
800-538-8009
Lewisburg Showroom 434 Market 570-522-8009
www.onfirepromotions.com
Bring in this ad for one FREE SCREEN!!!
GOOD ON ANY APPAREL ORDER
(minimum 36 pieces)

Recycle this newspaper!

DOES YOUR CAR NEED SERVICED?
Our Service Department has $25,000 in new upgrades, including a new alignment rack, brake lathe, tire machine, and hundreds of hours of training for the techs. We now offer shuttle service to and from work or home. We have become a complete service center that can perform any work on any model, from an oil change to engine replacement.

Lewisburg Ford
Oil Change
w/Multi-Point Inspection
$19.95 Excludes Diesels. Most present coupon at time of service. Expires 12/31/06.

Lewisburg Ford
Oil Change/Tire Rotation
w/Multi-Point Inspection
$34.95 Most present coupon at time of service. Expires 12/31/06.

Lewisburg Ford
2265 Old Turnpike Rd.
(Route 45 West)
Across From Brookpark Farm
Call Today! (570) 524-7267
Visit us on the web at www.lewisburgford.com

The Bucknellian
Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue
Volume 139, Number 1
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu
http://www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Editor-in-Chief
Andrew Larson '08

Associate Editor of Content
Matt Saylor '08

Associate Editor of Layout
Lily Beauvilliers '09

Business Manager
Jared Napolitano '08

Senior Editor
Catie Heverling '07

News Editors
Evan Unger '09
Julia Fuchs '09
Michelle Laxer '09

Opinions Editors
Michael Dippery '08
Hallie Stebbins '08

Sports Editors
Barbara Perlman '09
Brian Mulligan '08
Shannon Pitsch '09

Features Editors
Nilanjana Saha '09
Brianna DelValle '10

Arts & Entertainment Editors
Janna Shapiro '08
Genna Jerrard '10

Photography Editors
Ryan Winn '08
Ellyn Ercolano '09

Advertising Managers
Meredith Reighard '07
Katie Casteel '08

Office Manager
Kate Wood '07

Circulation Manager
Adam Kahler '07

Cartoonist
Juliana Su '09

Adviser
James F. Lee

Op-Ed Policy

The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editor-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 600 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

Publishing Information

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

Subscription Information

Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Bucknell University, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print office.

Advertising Policy

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577-1085. Copyright © 2007 The Bucknellian

The Bucknellian
Editorial

Student loans bill an unlikely solution

Last Wednesday, the House of Representatives overwhelmingly threw its support towards a bill that would gradually reduce the interest rate on subsidized Stafford loans from 6.8 percent to 3.4 percent over a five-year period.

The type of loan is available to students whose families earn $26,000-$68,000 a year.

There is no question that in today's tight job market, a college education is more important than ever before. But rising tuitions are making attending college less affordable.

At the University, the comprehensive fee rose 20 percent over the last four years, dwarfing the rate of inflation, which was about 9 percent over the same period.

Even the price of public universities is skyrocketing. At the University of Connecticut, tuition, fees and room and board are slated to increase 13.2 percent over the next two years, to $18,616 for the 2008-09 academic year.

In today's day and age, college needs to be more accessible to students. But is lowering the interest rate on Stafford loans really the panacea?

Cutting interest rates on loans does nothing to make college more affordable today, since savings don't occur until repayment begins. If Congress really wanted to enable impoverished students to attend college, it would need to increase grants and tax credits in relation to tuition.

Students are graduating with twice the debt they had a decade ago, according to the U.S. Public Interest Research Group. When a student graduates miles deep in debt, that is a problem in and of itself irrespective of the interest rate on repaying it. This legislation does nothing to address soaring student debt, and in fact encourages more of it.

It's nice to see Congress is trying to expand the privilege of a college education to people without the financial means to pursue it on their own.

A person with a college degree, on average, earns $1 million more in his or her lifetime than a person without one. A college education is a step towards lifting people out of poverty.

Of course it's prudent for the government to pursue options to lower the cost of college, but it shouldn't blindly pass rushed measures like this one, railroaded through during Democrats' "first 100 hours."

A hastily crafted answer to a problem that doesn't accomplish its goal diverts attention away from finding a viable solution.

When members of the Senate face the bill, they owe it more careful scrutiny.

Letters to the Editor

Ms. O's column disgraceful

To the Editor:

I am writing to you in response to the so-called "feature," called "Ms. O, Love and the Bubble," which appeared in the Nov. 17 issue of the Bucknellian, "Ms. O, Love and the Bubble.". Prior to reading this "feature," which was placed on the next to last page, I read most of the other articles in the newspaper with much interest. However, after reading "Love and the Bubble," my interest quickly turned into disgust. I am shocked that your staff permits such inappropriate and indecent columns in The Bucknellian. This filth is an exceedingly negative reflection on the newspaper, the University and on the town of Lewisburg. The picture at the top of the column is also very offensive, as it shows a man removing a woman's bra. Simply put, this type of material is pornography, therefore, at least in part, you are a pornographer.

In the same issue was a letter to the editor from a woman, which was headlined, "Cheering Fans Fuel School Spirit." She wrote that while attending a collegiate football game in Lewisburg between Bucknell and Fordham, the student body began a chant, "Fordham Socks." The chant was banned by the "Bison Good Sports" program for being inappropriate and unsportsmanlike. Although I am a sports enthusiast on various levels and can identify with the excitement of being a fan, I appreciate the stand taken by this body of Bucknell in attempting to support the dignity of its opponents. This was a moral act of grace, virtue and common decency.

It is quite alarming that the standards of the campus newspaper are so widely different from that of the sports program. The Bucknellian is circulated in a broad area of this region and is perhaps read most by people who do not have any association with the Bucknell University. I am certain I speak for a very large group who read this newspaper, and for those who do not read it any longer due to "Ms. O's" tainted "feature." The University, The Bucknellian and our community would be served well if you would remove this trash from the newspaper.

Sincerely,

Hal B. E. Terry
Lewisburg

Pelosi criticism unfounded

By Christy Totten
Staff Writer

The election of Nancy Pelosi as Speaker of the House is the first step in reaching the many necessary changes facing our country. Beyond making history as the first woman, Californian and Italian-American to hold the position, Pelosi represents in her personal life the values necessary to restore some of the patriotism and support that has diminished in this post-Sept. 11, terrorist- threatened world. These values were highlighted in the four-day proceedings that took place surrounding Pelosi's formal induction as Speaker of the House.

The swearing in of Pelosi in early January received much criticism, mainly from conservatives, for being too much party and not enough business (www.csnews.com). This making of history was marked with four days of festivity, mainly concerts, church services and fund-raising activities. The events began in Pelosi's hometown of Baltimore, MD continued through to her alma mater Trinity College, and ended with a personal escort by her grandchildren into the House chamber to formally accept the gavel. It has been said that those four days were all about Nancy, Nancy, Nancy, and was really a Democratic manipulation of the media to make their new poster-woman seem more "personable" (www.csnews.com). Conservatives also suggested these four days could have been better spent reiterating to the public that Pelosi's time in office would be effectively spent listening and carrying out the business of the people. Call me crazy, but this seems like a harried platform upon which to bestow criticism.

I will start from day one of the proceedings which Nancy spent in Baltimore, attending a formal meeting for the re-naming of a street, "Via Nancy D'Alesandro Pelosi Street," in her honor. She then visited the renowned St. Leo Roman Catholic Church, and had dinner with her family at an Italian restaurant. What better way to live through example her promises to fight for families in legislature? She has told America her plans to increase educational opportunities, protect workers and promote health care, and by living out these values in her own life she gives validity to her promises (speaker.house.gov).

The next day Nancy attended morning Mass at her high school alma matter in Washington, D.C. Following this, she attended a social gathering for female politicians and supporters. What better way to give promise to her plan for making college tuition tax-deductible, expanding Pell grants, and cutting school loan interest rates than to visit the American youth in the University setting? Sure, part of the idea is to make Pelosi personable and likeable, but is that not supposed to be in the job description of politicians? Pelosi was not being manipulative by doing these things, but was simply showing that she too is a caring human being.

Later that evening Pelosi was honored at a dinner served at the Italian Embassy where a performer sang "I Left My Heart in San Francisco," a song paying tribute to Pelosi's ties to California, where she raised her family and worked as a congresswoman. By appealing to her heritage and recognizing her roots, Pelosi gives credit to her promise to help improve American security both at home in an economic sense, and overseas.

The final straw of this spectacle, critics suggest, was the escort Pelosi received from her grandchildren on her way into the House chamber to accept the gavel. When the necessary formalities were finished, she invited the children up to touch the gavel. This was a perfect metaphor for Pelosi's entire platform: what we do now affects the world in which our children grow up, and for that reason we need to make it as safe and prosperous as possible for all.

Critics labeled Pelosi and the proceedings surrounding her induction as Speaker of the House as a public spectacle, as if this were a bad thing (www.csnews.com). By being shown their human side, Americans were given a success story to believe and toward which they could aspire. Anything that does this, especially in this time of war, is absolutely necessary and should be embraced.

Write for Ops

email mdippery@

Success in Iraq conflict unlikely

By Ben Sirolly
Contributing Writer

"Cut and run" or "stay the course"? Will either of these strategies lead to success, and what would that success look like in Iraq? Though definitions vary widely as to how that success would appear, I believe that we must ensure that Iraq is stable and self-governing before we leave. I say this not because I think America has some philosophical or moral obligation to the state of Iraq (although I do feel that way). Instead, I say this because I want to see American servicemen and women at home with their families. I believe that if we withdraw troops today thousands of our soldiers will be kept from home for years, or perhaps decades, to come. This may seem counterintuitive, but in the possibility that Iraq's neighbors, Syria, Iran, Saudi Arabia, Kuwait and perhaps even Turkey and Jordan invade Iraq when we leave, I cannot imagine that America would stand idly by. We would step in to prevent Iraq from being carved up and divided by force. We would swiftly re-deploy in Iraq, but this time we would be fighting not only the Iraqi people, but the entire Arab world.

If America leaves Iraq, its neighbors have the justification and motivation, derived from a mix of history, politics and national security, to invade. First and foremost, an Iraq in chaos and civil war, a state very likely if America leaves, is a threat to each of these nations' security. Conflict in Iraq might lead to increased tension or even violence in the surrounding countries. This spillover of the conflict is reason enough for neighboring countries to invade Iraq in order to bring peace through force as a means of self defense.

Though self-defense may be a publicly justifiable reason, self-interest presents a much more compelling argument for why the surrounding nations might invade. An invasion of Iraq by its less democratic neighbors could quickly quell any movements towards democracy within their own nations. Also, Iraq has a history of territorial conflict with most of its neighbors, and those without a history of conflict stand to gain from an invasion into Iraq.

On the eastern front, Iran has long fought for disputed territory in Iraq. A war raged from 1980 to 1988 between the two nations. Today a tattered, unorganized and under-trained Iraqi army would quickly fall to the more powerful Iranian forces making a land grab.

In the south, Kuwait has interests in acquiring more Iraqi oil fields for its own, evidenced by the Kuwaiti slant-drilling into Iraqi territory at the start of the first Gulf War. Further evidence of Kuwaiti interest in acquiring Iraqi territory came in a 2005 Associated Press story in which Kuwait admitted that it has been allowing its citizens to slowly move into Iraq's southern territory.

In the southwest, Saudi Arabia has recently expressed an interest in intervening in Iraq with force. Saudi Arabia is primarily Sunni Muslim, and according to Al Jazeera, the Saudi government is prepared to intervene militarily in order to protect the Sunnis. In the case of a civil war between the Sunnis and Shiites, Saudi Arabia may be quick to back the Sunnis and claim itself de-facto ruler of Sunni-controlled territory.

The northern border with Turkey is problematic because the Kurds have long expressed their desire to obtain sovereignty apart from Iraq. A move towards sovereignty could lead to a destabilization of the internal politics of Turkey because of the Kurdish sentiment for secession in that nation as well. Instead of risking destabilization, Turkey might be tempted to incorporate the Kurdish region into their borders. In any case, the Kurds have been itching for an opportunity to leave Iraq, which would remove yet another chunk of land from the newly created Iraq.

In the northeast, Syria has consistently expressed interest in Iraq and is blamed with being a major source of foreign insurgents. Also, Syria demonstrated in Lebanon that it is not afraid of military land grabs and that it has high aspirations of power in the Middle East. These factors suggest that Syria would take the opportunity to attain a piece of Iraqi territory if given the chance.

Though this discussion of Iraq's neighbors has been quick, it is but a small piece of the larger body of evidence suggesting the possibility of an invasion into Iraq by its neighbors. These same nations that could one day carve up Iraq might today offer its only hope for stability and self-governance.

Recently, Syria has publicly expressed a strong interest in assisting the United States. In a Washington Post article in December, the Syrian Foreign Minister described America and the region as being at a "crossroads" and said, "Either we go for stability, or the region will fall, and religious civil wars and the extremists behind them will take over." The Syrian government, he said, wants "to be part of a regional dialogue that, in our opinion, serves American interests in the region." Our relationship with Syria is at a pivotal point, and they are offering us a helping hand in leading Iraq to peace.

We can use Syria, Saudi Arabia, Turkey, Jordan and Kuwait, all potential or current allies, to spearhead an Arab coalition to address the sectarian violence in Iraq. These nations would likely be able to lure Iran into their coalition, creating an Arab coalition, guided in part by the United States, which would be able to bring both the Shiites and Sunnis in Iraq to the negotiation table.

At this point, Iraq cannot be controlled with more troops. The only possibility for peace lies in a long process of active negotiations between the military, religious and political groups. Like Northern Ireland, Bosnia and so many other intercultural, inter-religious conflicts, the tensions in Iraq may take years to subside but they must be addressed nevertheless.

If we stay the course, our efforts in Iraq will almost certainly be in vain. If America works together with its Arab partners, we might be able to foster and grow an Iraqi democracy in a stable, peaceful environment. It is not much, but a regional approach may be our last, best shot at bringing peace and stability to the Middle East in the foreseeable future.

Greek life a benefit to University

By Lauren Berninger
Writer

The University Greek system is constantly under attack from students, parents, faculty and administrators. The stereotypes often coupled with fraternity and sorority life sometimes overpower the positive aspects associated with it.

From personal experiences within the Greek system, as well as speaking with a number of sorority women over the past few days, it is my opinion that Greek life on this campus has had a positive impact on the University as a whole.

The most common stereotype connected with Greek life is that it is a constant party environment where no one does anything academic or philanthropic. While this may be an exaggeration of the actual stereotype, the truth is that this notion is entirely incorrect.

Students involved in the Greek system work just as diligently as anyone on campus. Sororities and fraternities must meet certain GPA requirements to stay on campus. Many Greek organizations strive to surpass these requirements and succeed in doing so.

For example, according to the spring 2006 Greek statistics the overall Greek GPA for fall 2005 was higher than those not involved. The Greek system as a whole received a 3.39 GPA compared to the total campus average of 3.34. In addition, the sorority average GPA was a 3.52, significantly higher than that of the non-female Greeks, which was a 3.42. This further proves that Greek organizations do not hinder academic excellence but encourage it.

It is also important to note that much of Greek life is devoted to philanthropy and most fraternities and sororities go above and beyond the requirements of the University. Fraternities, as of spring 2006, spent $43,905 for philanthropy purposes while sororities funded $27,846. Furthermore, sororities recorded 6,006 hours of community service and fraternities added 4,492 hours.

"Many of Bucknell's community and philanthropy events stem from Bucknell Greek life and do great things for the outside community," said Margo Grant '08, a member of Pi Beta Phi sorority.

In addition to academics and philanthropy comes another positive facet of the Greek system: leadership. Officers within each sorority and fraternity as well as those in higher positions on the Interfraternity and Panhellenic Councils emerge as future leaders. Many Greek organizations bring in outside people to hold workshops on leadership and excellence.

"Sorority life has allowed me to expand my leadership capabilities not only in my chapter but also on campus. Our chapter often brings in people to hold workshops on leadership and other skills, which helps us to prepare for future careers," said Colby Giulino '08, a member of Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority.

"Being a member of a sorority has allowed me to grow as a person and expand my comfort zone by taking new leadership positions," said Katie Keller '08, a member of Kappa Alpha Theta sorority.

One of the most important aspects of Greek life is that it builds lasting friendships. It allows men and women to make countless acquaintances, making the campus a smaller place.

"I met a lot of new people I would have never known, like my three new roommates this semester," said Jackie Martin '09, a member of Delta Gamma sorority.

"I felt welcomed right away when I came to Bucknell. Sorority life provided an immediate support system for me that I would not have gotten otherwise," said Kathleen Horrigan '09, a member of Pi Beta Phi sorority and a recent transfer to the University.

"When in a sorority, you know that there are at least 100 girls who will support you in everything you do," said Emily Mancusi '08, a member of Kappa Alpha Theta sorority.

Ica Morales '09, a member of Delta Gamma sorority, views her sorority as a family away from home.

"I know in my experiences, my sisters have shown dedication and warmth to me especially during personal difficulties. Though I was hesitant in becoming Greek, joining a sorority has been one of my best decisions ever," Morales said. "I not only adopted great values, but also a community; a family here at Bucknell and nationwide. Who wouldn't want that?"

While certain elements of the Greek system have often been viewed negatively, people neglect to realize all of the positive aspects of the Greek system. There is nothing wrong with not being Greek or not agreeing with the organization, but it is important to realize that there are a lot of positives that, unfortunately, go unnoticed. It is without a doubt that Greek life is capable of not only enhancing the University experience for students, but also giving students confidence in whatever future endeavors they may pursue.

Bringing in the new year with hope

By Rajaa Qadri
Contributing Writer

A brand-new year is here and some good things have already happened. We have all survived another semester and are ready to deal with the next one, hoping to do a better job than before.

I was reflecting on 2006, and it was quite a year. We made choices that were regretful and some that we applauded. We had some moments when we laughed like there was no tomorrow and times when we felt we were a lone leaf fluttering in the wind on a bare tree, clinging for life. Sometimes we give people a reason for a better tomorrow, and sometimes our words and actions cut through their hearts.

However, we got through the year. It is over and it is time to wrap it up in tissue and relegate it to the back of the cupboard along with all the other memories. We need to look with renewed hope and optimism at the coming year.

I wonder about 2007: What will it hold for me? Will I have good days or bad days? Will it be ruled by my so-called fate or will I be able to make a difference in my life and in others'? I was trying to chalk out some resolutions for the coming year. We all do that at the beginning of the year and seldom keep them. For me, it is such a ritual that I perform at the beginning of every year but for me, I do not even remember what my resolutions are by the end of February.

"It's always the case at New Year: assuming that everything will be different, we make promises such as catching up with old friends, fixing broken hearts, but once the year settles in, we just pass by our promises and resolutions. I know I do that at times and so do a lot of my friends," Tugce Ersoz '10 said.

Come to think of it, nothing really changes with the new year, only that we are more enthusiastic about our studies, jobs and lives in the beginning, and then the same routine settles in. But if we look at life as a whole, it is still what it is. The sun still rises from the east and sets in the west, and the seasons change. Oceans surge on. Existence fails to cease and the world keeps turning.

Then what changes? Do we change or try to change? The question is, do we have to change? The new year brings a new start. It could be the time to reflect back and learn from the past mistakes and cherish the wonderful memories, or it can be just another day when you wake up at 8 a.m. and drag yourself to class.

I have been humming the song "Better Days" by the Goo Goo Dolls a lot lately. You must have heard it:

"And you ask me what I want this year
And I try to make this kind and clear /
Just a chance that maybe we'll find better days / 'Cause I don't need boxes wrapped in strings / And desire and love and empty things / Just a chance that maybe we'll find better days"

The song kind of explains it all: all the rush, celebration and resolutions that we make in the new year are because we are all looking for better days—days that will bring us success and joy.

I look at my life from the roads I walk today and feel it changing and moving in a better direction. I cannot always find reasons for the things that happen, yet I learn from them and look forward to many smiles, laughter, joy, decisions and choices, forked roads and destinations, friendships and love in the year 2007. Do you?

The F Word
On Abortion

By Lenore R. Flower
Contributing Writer

We've all heard it before. "He's pro-choice? Baby killer!" or "She's pro-life? What a fascist!" I know many people who make it a rule never to discuss this topic in public and still others who are no longer on speaking terms with friends who did not share their views.

Unfortunately, with so many strong feelings and emotions polarizing individuals on the topic of abortion, it's impossible to discuss the issue in a calm and rational manner. The result of this stagnant thought-pool is that, by speaking only from a moral standpoint about the rights of the unborn child or a woman's right to choose, we tend to overlook many of the pragmatic issues that cause abortion to remain a necessary evil for many in our society. Until we can address the societal problems that cause women to seek abortions, they will remain necessary.

Abortion was illegal in our country from 1965 until 1973. While the number of women from all backgrounds who died from abortions skyrocketed, the number of women desperate for a way to escape the socially and economically crippling nature of single motherhood remained the same. I have heard vehement pro-life advocates state that they would rather have a woman who wanted an abortion die in a back alley than live after aborting her child. I would like to suggest that before we denounce women willing to risk their lives in order to avoid having a child, we should first consider why they would feel the need to make such a choice.

Part of the reason why some women decide to terminate a pregnancy is due to the potentially extreme economic burden of raising a child alone. The 16-year-old who gets pregnant sometimes faces the choice between having an abortion or being disowned by parents who refuse to raise their baby's baby. Whether they are supported by their parents or not, women in high school and college are forced to choose between an education that will give them the opportunity to support a family in the future or raising a child now, before they may be emotionally or economically prepared for it. While it is many women's dream to have a child of their own, ending their education early will force them into a lower-income position that often cannot support one person, let alone their son or daughter.

For a woman already in the business world, an unexpected child can, and generally will, transfer her to the mommy track—the equivalent of career kryptonite. Madame Careerwoman will then receive six weeks to give birth and begin to raise the child before returning to work and being forced to put the child in the hands of a nursery or daycare. With little chance of moving up in the workplace, the possibility of a raise seems slim and children are costly enough without the daily expenses of a nursery.

If she is extremely lucky, she will have a supportive, loving family that can help her with the newborn child and expenses. If her family is like many families today who still are ashamed of a child born out of wedlock, the woman and child will struggle considerably.

Despite the fact that many of the women in these situations would love to raise a family, their hands are tied by a society that condemns women seeking abortions but offers few alternatives. How can we end abortion? We could start by removing the economic hardship that comes with being a single parent by instating universal daycare so that women can still have their child and continue their education or work without the extreme cost that comes with childcare. The U.S. government could also ensure the enforcement of court-ordered child support, as an estimated $10 billion of owed support is not paid every year, according to www.FindLaw.com.

In addition, we could remove the arbitrary 60-month limit on welfare so that women who may have needed to go on welfare before, or are unable to work during their pregnancy (or who are not receiving their owed child support) can remain at home to care for their child until he or she is ready for elementary school. As the U.S. federal deficit is already considerable, removing many women's economic need for abortion seems impossible.

Another way we can decrease the need for abortions is to remove the still-prevalent, negative stigma that comes with bearing a child out of wedlock. Pregnant high-school students are often labeled "slut" or "trailer trash." If they are members of the National Honor Society or attend a private school, they may be kicked out of such institutions for dishonorable behavior.

By removing these negative attitudes, women will not be forced to chose between nine months of humiliation and social torment and the emotional trauma that may come with an abortion. Only when the negative social stigma is removed from pre-marital pregnancy will adoption be a realistic option for all single mothers.

Even if the social stigma was removed from teenage and other pre-marital pregnancies, every woman that would otherwise have an abortion might give their child up for adoption, and we would have to expand our adoption and foster care systems to make room for over a million children each year. According to www.dhhs.gov, if every aborted child was put up for adoption there would be a 25 percent increase in the total number of infants born each year in the United States. In 2000 and 2001, adoption agencies and foster care systems were able to place approximately 127,000 children in homes each year, 15 percent of which were foreign adoptions, according to www.childwelfare.gov. Turning aborted births into adoptable babies would displace 1.2 million children and every one of them would need a home.

Because the United States' foster care system is already underfunded and overstretched, we would need to greatly increase funding to provide for orphanages and foster care systems for the yearly influx of newborn children. According to www.beliefnet.com, when Romania banned abortion in 1966 the national birth rate doubled, and an already overcrowded, underfunded orphanage system became incapable of providing the children with even basic essentials, such as food, healthy human interaction or even clean bedclothes.

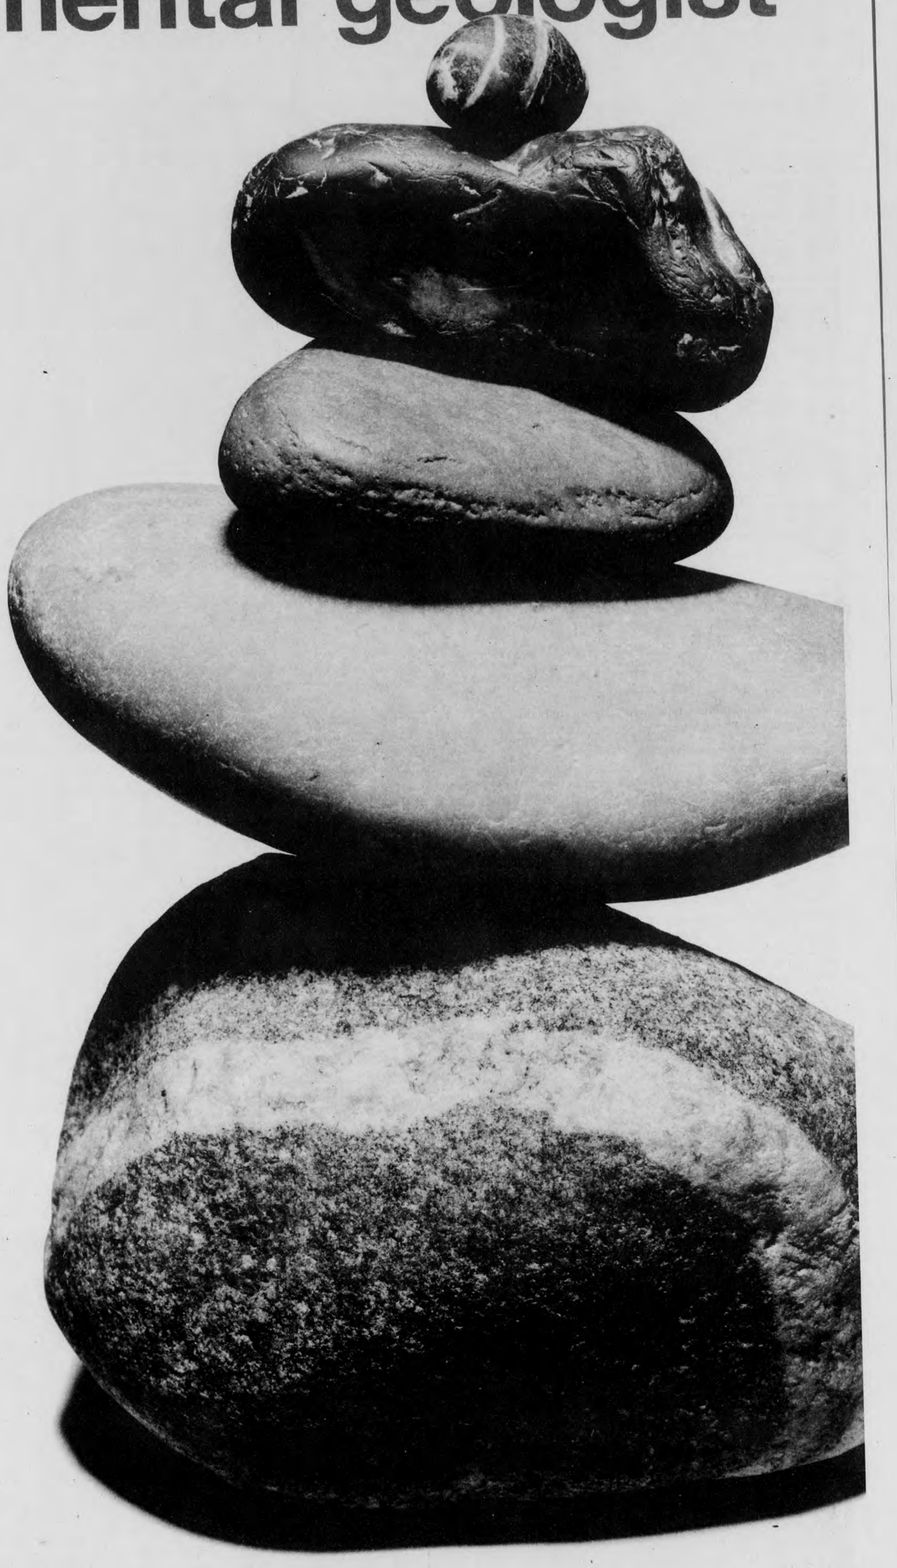
While the impact of a ban on abortion in the United States would hopefully not be as extreme, it seems impossible to me that a 25 percent increase in the national birthrate would not take a toll on the children who are already waiting for a home in the adoption and foster care systems. As with universal daycare and a more flexible welfare system, the United States' current financial situation cannot provide for such a massive increase in funding for the U.S. foster care system, nor can it realistically find good homes for 1.2 million children every year.

Before the United States can even consider ending its dependency on abortion, we need to first face the reality that there is more to the issue than just ethics. For many women, abortion is an emotionally and physically painful experience that they choose because they feel they have no other option. As long as we remain incapable of giving women the economic and social support they need to provide for their children, women will continue to have abortions, whether the procedure remains legal or not.

Campfire queen
Cycling champion
Sentimental geologist*

Learn more about Marjon Walrod and tell us more about you. Visit pwc.com/bringit.

Your life. You can bring it with you.



*connectedthinking

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

© 2006 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (a Delaware limited liability partnership) or, as the context requires, the PricewaterhouseCoopers global network or other member firms of the network, each of which is a separate and independent legal entity. *connectedthinking is a trademark of PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (US). We are proud to be an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer.

Finding the perfect job on campus

With all the jobs available to students, how do you decide? Here's an in-depth look at five interesting positions

By Samantha Kantor
Contributing Writer

Getting a job on campus seems like a daunting task only because there is such a wide variety of jobs to choose from.

Many jobs are not only geared toward providing a service for the University, but also toward allowing students to truly enjoy the experience of working on campus.

The following campus jobs are currently available:

1. Women's Resource Center Assistant/Newsletter Manager: This job sounds appealing, for those who have an interest in writing for a publication. It entails column writing, newsletter layout and the recruitment of additional writers to the staff.

The employee would be in charge of printing and mailing the publication, as well as promoting the Women's Resource Center to the surrounding community.

It is reserved for one work-study student and the salary is $8 per hour.

2. Web Site Photographer: The University Web site is strewn with pictures of campus attractions taken by actual students.

The pictures need to be artistic and appropriate, and can be transferred through e-mail from the photographer to the Web site design team.

One work-study student is needed for this photography position, and the salary is $8 per hour.

3. Graphic Designer for Campus Theatre: This job entails designing and creating newsletters, brochures and other publicity tools for the events taking place in the campus theater.

For those who have an interest in arts and entertainment, this job was made for you. One work-study student is needed for this position, and the salary is $8 per hour.

For those who aren't work-study students, there are still interesting options.

4. Art Model: This job sounded intriguing from the get-go, but you may be wondering what exactly one would be required to model. Art models can either model with or without clothes on.

Either way the modeling is very professional, as is the art work, and it is only done in the presence of art students and an art professor.

The art department did not give a specific number of students needed to fill this position, so apply at will. The salary is $15 per hour, and both work-study and non-work-study students are eligible.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Sara Jenks '10 labels envelopes at the Women's Resource Center. The assistant position is reserved for work study students only and pays $8 per hour.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Eric Oswald '08, a teaching assistant for a thermodynamics course is helping Toby Cressman '09, left, and Daniel Zvara '09, right. Teaching assistant positions are paid and students can work from seven to 30 hours a week.

Many jobs are not only geared toward providing a service for the University, but also toward allowing students to truly enjoy the experience of working on campus.

5. Samek Art Gallery Assistant: This job does not require applicants to have a strong interest in art, but it is a plus to have one. The job entails interacting with visitors in the gallery and being there to answer questions.

Both work-study and non-work-study students are eligible, and the salary is $6.75 per hour.

The University relies heavily on students' enthusiasm for participating in the campus community.

There is nothing better than feeling that you've done your part to make the University a little better or more efficient.

For more information on jobs on campus, including contact numbers and e-mail addresses, visit the "Working on Campus" channel on the myBucknell homepage.

Hopefully you'll find a job you love and you'll do your part to contribute to the University.

RUCKUS®

FREE MUSIC
FOR ALL COLLEGE STUDENTS

Unlimited Access to Over
2 Million Tracks and Growing.

Why Sign Up? What you'll get from Ruckus:

Free unlimited download access to a library of over 2 Million songs.

Downloading albums in less than a minute.

New music every week, programmed playlists and album reviews.

Exclusive artist and music label spotlights, interviews and photos.

The ability to create and share your own playlists with your friends.

Internet Street Cred'.

And most importantly, it's 100% Free for all College Students!

Music Media Mayhem™

WWW.RUCKUS.COM

Mer Cares

Dear Mer:

I'm a sophomore and I'm interested in studying abroad. It would be such an amazing experience to live in another country and this is probably the only opportunity I'll have to take part in another culture. After I graduate I know I'll be able to travel to other countries to visit, but I'll never be able to spend three or four months there. The problem is that I'm really involved in activities at school. I can't just pack up and say goodbye to all my leadership positions here on campus. Plus, I really love Bucknell. I only have two and a half years left here and I don't want to shorten that time even more. What is your advice for me?

—Foreign Appeal

Dear Foreign Appeal:

This seems to be a popular dilemma among many sophomores as the second year winds down and the pressure to decide to study abroad heightens. Unfortunately, what it all comes down to is that you are going to need to sacrifice something in the end, and while it may be difficult, you will reap rewards with either decision you make. I might even suggest making a pro-con list, which could possibly help you make this hard decision.

If your major or career choice requires a high proficiency in a foreign language, it may be beneficial to go to another country.

One option is to study abroad during a summer because you can go back to school in the fall and stay active in your leadership positions. This way, you don't have to miss any instruction at the University, classes you are interested in taking or clubs you want to be involved in.

The opportunity to immerse yourself in another culture is best enjoyed during your college years because it is more difficult to find time after graduating if you decide to pursue an advanced degree. You need to weigh your options because while you gain leadership qualities through extracurricular activities on campus, you can also gain quite a bit from living in another country for a few months—both of which can help you when you begin to start your career.

Love,
Mer

Dear Mer:

I've just recently discovered my girlfriend of a year has been unfaithful to me. The past few days have been a horrendous mixture of fights, tears and recriminations. She says she still loves me, and I still love her, but everyone I know is telling me to just walk away. Should I throw it all away? Is there any hope for us?

—Tousled and Torn

Dear Tousled and Torn:

There are a few factors to consider here and it's good that you are trying to confront everything head on. First, did you find out on your own or did your partner fill you in on her infidelity? That alone could be the deciding factor, because if she was sneaky and never confessed the truth, then there is no reason for you to think that you two have a future together, unless you want a messy, no-strings attached type of relationship, which can be quite unfulfilling. If it was the latter and she told you what she did, her regrets and why she even cheated in the first place, it might be worth saving your relationship.

You may need to really delve into your relationship because in all likelihood, you had communication problems. I am sure she never meant to hurt you, but you two did not work through your issues and she didn't know who to turn to. Communication is a big problem in relationships and when two people don't communicate, you begin to conceal little doubts, worries and problems. Soon it builds and blows up into a mess that you could have dealt with early on and resolved.

Infidelity doesn't have to spell the end for a relationship. Some partners have affairs because they want to end their relationship. For the most part, an affair is a wake-up call to show dissatisfaction with the current situation and lines of communication are not open to say or do something about it.

While the news of the affair may be shocking, sit your partner down and try to communicate openly without screaming, blaming one another or making rash decisions. What needs to change so infidelity will never occur again? It will be hard the first couple of months, but if you mean so much to each other and you invest enough time and effort into resolving your problems, then the relationship is worth saving.

Love,
Mer

Please send questions regarding any topic to marc001@bucknell.edu with subject line reading "advice" or you may send a letter via campus mail to box number C1099. I look forward to hearing from you!

"Turn your Power ON and Add LIFE to your Years!"

MORRISON'S ADVANCED CHIROPRACTIC CARE

Michael D. Morrison D.C.
1205 W Market Street
Lewisburg, PA 17837
Office: 570-523-1221

A Healthy Spine Equals a Healthy YOU!

Bucknell Students may receive a free exam and x-rays (if needed) with mention of this advertisement.

Resolutions for the new year

Farm tools to flossing: Students set goals for 2007

By Erica Schiffres
Contributing Writer

My last hours of 2006 were a flurry of carefree celebration and excitement, while my first hours of 2007 were encumbered with thoughts of how to start fresh and hold to lofty resolutions. For me, this will be the year I become organized, stop losing my belongings, and keep deadlines—much to my editor's delight. More urgently, I know I need to start remembering facts and obligations better. I need to consistently recall acquaintances' and new friends' names, to retrieve my laundry in a timely fashion, to note where I put my keys, and sometimes, my head.

The celebration of the new year is the oldest of all holidays. It was first observed in ancient Babylon about 4,000 years ago. The most popular resolution of these early Babylonians was to return borrowed farm equipment.

The most popular resolution for Bucknellians of the 21st century hardly involves returning borrowed farm tools. But many of them have equally colorful, albeit unconventional, resolutions to strive for self-improvement.

Many students want to eat healthier and get in shape. Others want to quit smoking, be more punctual, develop better sleeping habits or improve in school.

Emily Lind '10 resolves to floss her teeth more, while Austin Winter '10 plans to stop drinking.

On the other hand, Chet Eimstad '10 said his resolution for 2007 is to not shave.

"Maybe not the whole year, but I want to see how long I can go," Eimstad said.

Many want to improve their interactions with others.

"[My] resolution is to offend fewer people with sarcasm," Kaela Cashman '10 said.

Although University President Brian Mitchell said that he hasn't thought about his resolutions too deeply, he wants to improve time management.

"I found myself pulled in numerous directions this fall. Bucknell is a university that behaves like a small college, which is a strength. It sometimes forces me into a situation where no matter how involved or active you are, it's never quite enough," Mitchell said.

If you haven't committed to any new goals, now is a good a time to set some. Remember, life will not go according to plan if you have no plan.

His second resolution is to increase the amount and quality of the time that he spends with students.

"It's the most interesting and attractive part of this job for me," Mitchell said.

Many students simply refuse to make resolutions at all. Blaire Hettrick '10 hasn't made a resolution since fifth grade because she never keeps them.

There are tricks to help keep resolutions. You could create clear short-term goals that are easier to achieve than vague, long-term ones.

As much as we would all like to be healthier, more attractive and more successful, we need to be patient with our goals. If you haven't committed to any new goals, now is a good a time to set some. Remember, life will not go according to plan if you have no plan. It may be comforting to know that according to a University of Washington survey, 63 percent keep their resolutions at least for the first two months.

So here's to 2007! May your resolutions bring you much love, laughter, success and happiness.

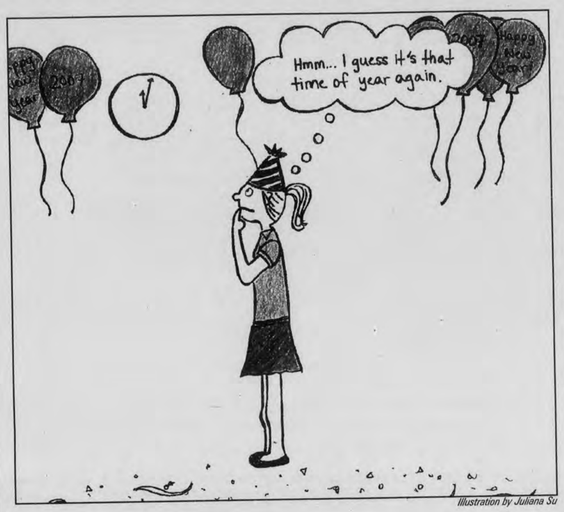

Illustration by Juliana Su

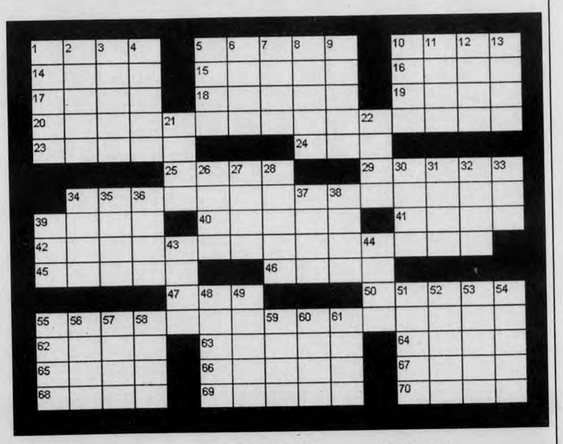
The Bucknellian Crossword



Across

1. Raises the stakes
5. Greek letter
10. Red planet
14. TV Hit American ___
15. NBA Shaq
16. Pennsylvania Town
17. Number of Supreme Court Justices
18. Game creator
19. Political Help
20. Easily
23. Vampire killer
24. Affirmative answer
25. "Put __ on it"
29. Praises
34. Easy
39. Morrison or Braxton
40. Summer camp transportation
41. Being (Lat.)
42. Easy
45. VW Variety
46. Alone
47. Tiny Tim and others
50. Type of cheese
55. Easily
62. Muscle soreness
63. Lacrosse company
64. Pray for
65. Check-out line chocolate
66. Farm fixtures
67. Sports station
68. Fire enthusiast
69. Sugary
70. "New" beginnings?

Down

1. Connects
2. Moron
3. Prima __
4. Smooth
5. Soccer score
6. Against
7. Average
9. Insult: "Get __" (2 wds.)
10. Lunch or Dinner
11. Dry
12. Be a passenger
13. Initial tournament ranking
21. Decorative jewelry piece
22. Norwegian capital
26. "Method of __" (memory enhancement technique
27. "Be there __ instant" (2 wds.)
28. Car door mishaps
30. Geometric term
31. Stalin nation
32. Student furniture
33. Dallas to Houston dir.
34. "Battle Hymn of the Republic" creator
35. "It happened __ least one occasion"
36. Cheerful speaking tone
37. NYC district
38. Command to stay close
39. __ Mahal
43. OJ trial witness
44. Small body of water
48. "Miami Vice" character
49. Scarecrow stuffing
51. Very pale
52. Selected
53. Large African mammal
54. Uncorks
55. Hornet
56. Distasteful
57. Norse mythological figure
58. Knight in shining armor
59. Employ
60. Frank or Rice
61. Recline

Answers will appear in next week's issue.

"Easy Does It"
ByVo Crosswords

EXTERN Experiences

Deliveries, surgery and Pap smears

Student gets a glimpse inside the OR of an ob-gyn

By Meredith Chambers
Writer

When I first came to the University and decided to pursue pre-medicine, I thought I knew what I was getting into. But until I fully immersed myself in the daily life of a doctor, I didn't completely understand what the career entailed.

This fall, the Career Development Center introduced a new externship program, providing sophomores with an opportunity to shadow a sponsor around his or her workplace for two days during winter break.

I was ecstatic when I was matched with my first choice: working alongside an obstetrician and gynecologist (ob-gyn). I shadowed Elizabeth Garreau '82, at her practice called Women's Health Associates in Fairfax, Va.

Garreau specializes in general obstetrics and gynecology as well as menopause/hormones, fibroids and management of abnormal Pap smears. Garreau majored in biology with a minor in French and women's studies.

On my first day of shadowing Garreau, we saw 27 patients in eight hours with barely a lunch break in between. Patients came in for well-women exams to pregnancy check-ups. Sonograms and regular monthly and weekly checkups were scheduled to test for diabetes and other things, such as where the baby's head was inside the uterus.

We also saw patients who had gynecological problems, such as possibly cancerous fibroids lining their uterus and abnormal menstruation. She also saw menopausal women as well as those who wanted to know more about different types of birth control.

[Garreau] sacrifices a lot to be with her patients, which is the most touching thing I've learned from this experience.

Garreau met with expectant patients who were over 35 years old and had to have consultations to discuss possible genetic problems that may be associated with their babies. Some women had to have bloodwork done to make sure they were, in fact, pregnant and also to check for sexually transmitted infections such as chlamydia and gonorrhea.

Garreau induced a woman into labor and broke her water that first day because it is easier for some patients to know when they are going to have the baby if they are overdue, or if their husbands and families are only going to be there for a specific amount of time.

After 38 weeks of pregnancy, the baby is considered mature so it is safe to induce labor or to have a caesarean if the baby is likely to be large. After inducing labor, the woman can go to the hospital and be given the hormone Pitocin to increase the strength or duration of contractions.

The second day of my externship was even more exciting than the first day. I met Garreau at the Inova Fairfax Hospital in the Women and Children's Center.

We both donned hospital scrubs and did rounds. We visited women she had delivered and performed surgery on, as well as some women in labor who had come in that morning. She even took me to the Neonatal Intensive Care Unit where I was able to see many babies, under three pounds, who spend months in the hospital until they are big enough to go home.

That morning, Garreau had an ablation scheduled for a pre-menopausal woman who was having heavy bleeding in her uterus. Garreau used a small camera to take pictures of the woman's uterus and then used an electrical current to char the inside of her lining.

After the surgery, we rushed back to the office to meet with more patients. During our lunch break went back to the hospital to check on her patients in labor to see if their cervixes were dilated far enough.

Then, we came back to the office until the hospital called and said one of the patients was ready to deliver. The expectant mother smoothly delivered a baby boy.

While there was quite a bit of blood, it thankfully didn't make me too queasy, when the doctor showed me the uterus, cervix and placenta which the baby had been living in for the past nine months. The nurse even allowed me to help her during the newborn baby check-up.

As we saw the last of the patients, the hospital called and said that the other patient in labor had not dilated at all in the past couple hours, and Garreau quickly decided she needed to perform a C-section as the mother was experiencing back pain. We waited until an operating room was available and then delivered another baby boy.

It was even more interesting because the doctor allowed me to water the incision to open up the uterus and retrieve the baby.

Garreau said that while she is not always on call for her expecting patients in the evenings or on weekends, she tries her best to deliver the babies because it is more rewarding to help her own patients than allow the on-call doctor to do so.

Garreau is only on call every couple weekends. She sacrifices a lot to be with her patients, which is the most touching thing I've learned from this experience. It has increased my passion to be a doctor and to help those in need.

Experience of a lifetime: a taste of the NY Times

By Katie Steele
Contributing Writer

As part of the new career development program, I traveled to New York City for an externship with The New York Times.

I shadowed Karen List, an alumna of the University and the director of sports marketing and media industry relations in the advertising department. She has been working with The New York Times Company for over 10 years.

I met List on my first day. After telling her about my interest in journalism and communications, she told me about the world of advertising and gave me a tour of the building. It was fascinating to see the work behind producing a national daily newspaper.

Entering the newsroom, List pointed out a framed original of the first issue of The New York Times, published in 1851. On the top of the newspaper, which is one page, it says, "Price: one penny." In over 150 years, the price of the newspaper has only gone up 99 cents for a weekday issue.

Walking through the newsroom, I was most surprised by the relaxed and friendly environment. The journalists, dressed casually, sat at their desks, calmly typing and reading through material. It was only around 12 p.m., probably before the rush to finish articles, but I still had expected it to be more frantic and fast-paced.

We walked down a hallway that honors journalists who have been awarded the Pulitzer Prize. I recognized many of the journalists, such as Thomas Friedman, Anna Quindlen and Nan Robertson.

My experience at The New York Times was invaluable. I got a glimpse of life after college, learned about the importance of the University alumni network and got a chance to see The New York Times' office in its last few months, as the company will be moving to a new office later this year.

The plaque dedicated to Nan Robertson was particularly fascinating. She won the Pulitzer Prize in 1983 for an article featured in The New York Times Magazine on her struggle with toxic shock syndrome.

On our tour, I was lucky enough to see Arthur Sulzberger Jr., the current chairman of The New York Times Company and the current publisher of The New York Times.

I also saw Janet Robinson, the president and chief executive officer of The New York Times Company, in the cafeteria.

On the second morning of my externship, I attended a breakfast conference co-hosted by Advertising Women of New York and The New York Times Media Group. There, Tony Spring, the young and enthusiastic senior executive vice president of Bloomingdale's, spoke about his vision for expanding the company's advertising tactics.

One of the most important things I learned about The New York Times is that it is not just a daily newspaper. It is a leading media company.

According to the company's Web site, in addition to publishing The New York Times daily newspaper it publishes The International Herald Tribune, The Boston Globe and 15 other daily newspapers. The company also owns nine television stations, two radio stations and has about 35 Web sites.

What surprised me most about my experience at The New York Times was the separation of the advertising and editorial departments.

The company acknowledges this distinction as "church and state." The newspaper would not survive without the hard work of employees in both departments, but they rarely interact. This separation is important in upholding the company's ethics and its promise to deliver accurate, high-quality, unbiased news.

For example, if the advertising department sells an advertisement to Maybelline to introduce a new lipstick, the editorial department would not know about it.

The advertisements and the layout are put together on two separate computers. It would be unethical for a journalist reviewing the product to write a critique because of the company's partnership.

My experience at The New York Times was invaluable. I got a glimpse of life after college, learned about the importance of the University alumni network and got a chance to see The New York Times' office in its last few months, as the company will be moving to a new office later this year.

List left me with words of encouragement. She told me to be persistent, keep in touch with personal contacts and references and follow every lead in my job search.

Write for features.

email ns022@

BROOKPARK STATION Cafe

"Casual dining with a gourmet flair"

Fresh Sushi & Vegetarian Items
Catering & Takeout Platters

Book Your Graduation Party!

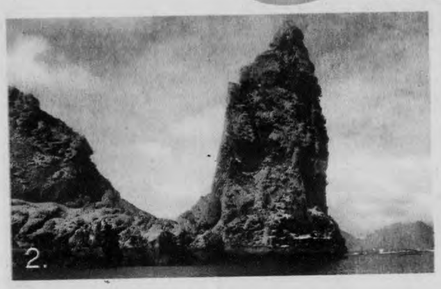
B.Y.O.B.

Wireless Internet

Mon-Sat 8:00-8:00 Sun 8:00-2:00

1 MILE WEST OF TOWN ON RT. 45
542-FOOD (3663)

A Journey to the Center of the World



Unfolding Ecuador's natural treasures

By Summer Rozzi
Contributing Writer

After thousands of pictures and breathtaking moments, I have returned from four months full of activities that most people only dream of doing. Living on a boat in the Galapagos Islands, spending a month secluded in the Amazon Rainforest or hiking up active volcanoes, my time in Ecuador can be summarized as the experience of a lifetime.

With four very different geographic regions encompassed within Ecuador—the rugged peaks of the Andes, lush vegetation of the Amazon, humid beaches of the coast and the ever-so-mystical Galapagos Islands—studying ecology in Ecuador is like a dream come true for anyone with a fascination for the natural world. I was fortunate enough to be a part of the Boston University Tropical Ecology Program, based in Quito, Ecuador, with in-depth studies planned for each of these regions. Every few weeks I traveled with my group, consisting of 15 American students, a professor and a professor's assistant, to a new region of Ecuador, living and learning about all it has to offer.

I began my adventures in the Andes with a home stay in Quito, the capital, located in the middle of the Andes at an elevation of approximately 9,000 feet. The city spans a great length, sitting snugly in a valley between two rows of tall mountain peaks, creating gorgeous views from nearly any location throughout the city. With Ecuador straddling the equator, and Quito only a short drive away, I had to venture to "la mitad del mundo" for my own personal experience. Standing in both the northern and southern hemispheres at the same time, I witnessed the true wonders of the Coriolis Effect, watching water change directions as it ran down a drain, and standing an egg on its end.

My educational adventures quickly took off as I traveled to the coast of Ecuador, spending two weeks living in a cabana along the beach. During this time the sandy shores and rocky outcrops were my classroom, with lectures given to us as we watched waves pound the beach. From there, I continued to the Galapagos Islands, living for a week on a boat with my classmates and professor, traveling from island to island throughout the archipelago, experiencing a place I have for so long only dreamed about visiting. All my expectations for this great natural wonder were met and exceeded as I spent my mornings hiking across these isolated volcanic islands, my afternoons snorkeling with sea lions, penguins, sharks and countless fish and my evenings enjoying the sun setting above the great Pacific. I walked along shores covered with sunbathing sea lions, hardly fazed by my presence, and was approached by a number of other animals including boobies, albatrosses and iguanas. The experience proved so many of the things I learned about these islands prior to my experience to be true.

I spent my final month secluded in the Amazon Rainforest of eastern Ecuador, studying at the Tiputini Biodiversity Station. Because of its remote location our only communication with the outside world came once a week when supplies were brought in from the small rainforest town of Coca, six hours away by boat and truck.

Photos courtesy of Summer Rozzi

Rozzi with her host family in "la mitad del mundo." She spent time living on the Galapagos Islands and in the Amazon.

The seclusion of this area made the experience all the more meaningful. The station is recorded as having the most species in one place on the planet, giving me an amazing opportunity to study tropical ecology in the most diverse forms. I spent countless hours hiking through the rainforest observing the incredible natural beauty that so many people only read about in National Geographic or watch on the Discovery Channel.

The phrase "Common things are rare, and rare things common" was lived first-hand each day as I came upon plants and animals I had never seen before, many of which I never saw again. We were warned before leaving for the rainforest that we would never be in silence. This true; every moment of every day was filled with the calls of birds, insects, frogs and monkeys. The combinations of sounds changed throughout the day, seeming to come to life even more as the sun went down.

Each day I would venture onto the trail system surrounding the station just to enjoy the natural beauty all around me, but also in hopes of stumbling upon some magnificent rainforest animals, such as jaguars or giant anteaters. While disappointed I never ran into of these great creatures, I am also somewhat relieved because I never did quite understand what you are supposed to do if you stumble upon a jaguar while wandering through the rainforest (besides whipping out your camera for a picture, of course).

The station is located along its namesake, the Tiputini River. I found relief daily from the high temperatures and dense humidity by swimming. With visibility at barely 3 centimeters, I swam with a mind blind to all the many creatures I knew lived within the depths. On my many boat floats down the river, I witnessed caimans, snakes and turtles making their way into and across the water. Along the river I also witnessed pink river dolphins swimming upstream and spent a day fishing, only to catch piranhas!

My adventures throughout Ecuador brought to life so many ideas I had floating through my mind. My very unique abroad experience encompassed not only the cultural aspects of Ecuador, but also gave me the opportunity to investigate the natural world in ways that otherwise would not have been possible. Each day abroad was like living a dream, and now that I have returned to my real life, I am glad to find any excuse to make it back.

All photos courtesy of Summer Rozzi

Summer Rozzi '08 spent a semester exploring Ecuador's natural life. After her home stay in Quito, Rozzi traveled to the Galapagos Islands and did research in the heart of the Amazon forest. 1. Woolly monkey suspended in the canopy. 2. Pinnacle rock in the bay of Bartolome Island. 3. Rozzi with a giant tortoise at the Charles Darwin research station in Santa Cruz. 4. Nazca Booby on Genovesa Island. 5. Sunbathing marine iguanas on Española Island. 6. Jumping spider

The Bucknellian

Sports

January 26, 2007

Volume 139, Number 1 | Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue | www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Opening act

Can Augustana shine under the Goo Goo Dolls headline?

See page B10

Bison crush the competition

Women's basketball heads into Saturday's showdown against Army with first place in the PL on the line

By Matt Saylor
Associate Editor of Content

The Bison women's basketball team won two consecutive games this past week, winning at Colgate and at home against Lehigh. The wins place the Orange and Blue (13-8, 5-1) in a tie with Army at the top of the Patriot League standings, heading into tomorrow afternoon's pivotal match-up at Sojka Pavilion.

Tuesday night's 64-37 win over the Mountain Hawks featured contributions from an array of players. The Bison were forced to step-up their games when Captain Lindsey Hollobaugh '07 reaggravated a knee injury she suffered the previous week at Lafayette, which subsequently kept her out of the previous game at Colgate. Hollobaugh was carried off the floor with 16 minutes and 14 seconds left in the first half and the game tied at four. Luckily for the Orange and Blue, Hollobaugh only suffered a muscle spasm that caused her sprained knee to lock up. Though she did not play for the remainder of the game, it is expected that Hollobaugh will try to play Saturday.

Bucknell 64
Lehigh 37

"I was proud of our kids for staying focused on the job at hand, Sometimes things are out of the control of coaches and players, but you have to deal with it."
—Kathy Fedorjaka, head coach

Jacquie Seawright '07 entered the game for Hollobaugh and sparked the Bison with her spirited play, scoring eight points and grabbing six rebounds in the half. The team entered the locker room with a 32-18 lead.

"Lindsey means a lot to me personally and to the team," Seawright said. "She brings so much to the team, and we just tried to fill that hole."

Hope Foster '08 scored 12 of her 14 points in the second half, and the Bison never let up its pressure on the Mountain Hawks, forcing them into 23 turnovers on the night.

"We had to keep pushing and pressing for a full 40 minutes," Amanda Brown '09 said.

Brown continued her stretch of terrific play with a game-high 20 points, including four three-pointers. Seawright finished with 13 points and seven rebounds, and Lauren Schober '09 and Kesha Champion '08 combined for 12 points, 10 rebounds, six assists and six steals.

"I was proud of our kids for staying focused on the job at hand," Head Coach Kathy Fedorjaka said, referring to the team's play after the injury to Hollobaugh. "Sometimes things are out of the control of coaches and players, but you have to deal with it."

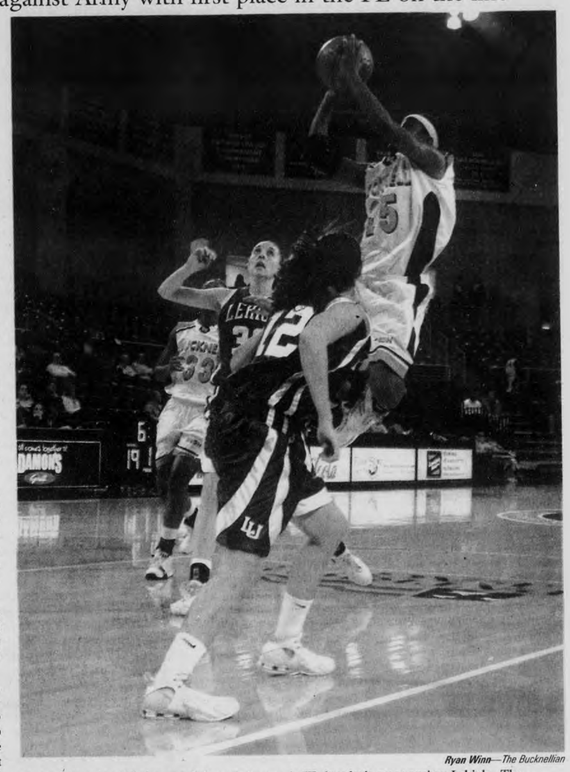
The Bison had little difficulty against the Raiders in the 74-48 victory. Colgate (2-18, 1-4) was unable to keep up with the Orange and Blue in the second half, as the Bison went on a 15-0 run early after the intermission and outscored the Raiders by 18 after a more closely played first half.

Bucknell 74
Colgate 48

Seawright, starting in place of Hollobaugh, stuffed the stat sheet, scoring 16 points to go along with six rebounds, three assists, three steals and a block. Schober also had 16 points to go with five boards. Brown had an excellent floor game, notching a career-high seven assists to go along with only one turnover, while scoring 15 points in 36 efficient minutes.

There were also strong contributions from the bench with Andrea Wright '08 scoring seven points, and Le'Le' LeSeur '10 tying her career-high with seven rebounds in only 15 minutes of action.

The Orange and Blue will host Army (18-3, 5-1) tomorrow at 4 p.m. in an eagerly anticipated meeting between the teams expected to battle for the league title. The Bison split two games against last year's Patriot League Tournament champions, losing at West Point by one point, but winning by 13 in the game at Sojka.



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Kesha Champion '08 shoots a fade-away jumper in Wednesday's game against Lehigh. The women's team is currently tied with Army for the Patriot League lead.

Bison step off on the right foot

Men's and women's track break records and qualify for championship competitions over first three meets

By Brian Mulligan
Sports Editor

Even though the weather has finally cooled down, the Bison have heated up the track. The men's and women's indoor track and field teams hosted the Bucknell Heptagonal last Saturday in Gerhard Fieldhouse.

Both teams have posted numerous IC4A and ECAC qualifying performances during the first three meets of the year, all held at Gerhard Fieldhouse. Kerry Boyle '09 has set a precedent for the men's team with a slew of new records and qualifications.

"We would have liked to see a little more competition on the women's side. We have some quality people and depth in all the events and it really showed," Head Coach Kevin Donner said. "I was pleased with the men because we were not at full strength and we still won. Our depth really paid off in this type of meet and we had a number of athletes really step up."

In the heptagonal, Boyle took first in both the 200- and 400-meter dashes in 22.43 seconds and 48.35 seconds respectively. His performance in the 400 earned him an IC4A spot and set a Gerhard Fieldhouse record, while his 200 was the fourth best by a Bison.

Tyler Hoffman '07 also qualified for the IC4A championship in the 35-pound weight throw with a 61 feet, 1.5 inch toss and won the event, while Jason Inzana '10 posted a first place finish in the pole vault, clearing a height of 14 feet, 3.25 inches.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

The Bison produced a one, two, three finish in the 500 with Brian Mooney '08 leading the way in 1:06.50. Teammates Kevin McLeod '09 and Sam Boyd '10 finished the race in 1:06.88 and 1:07.42 respectively. In the mile run, Matt Forys '07 translated his outstanding cross country campaign onto the track to qualify for the IC4A championship with a second place finish in 4:12.49.

Wallace Campbell '08 and Andrew Corral '08 finished second and third, respectively in the 3,000-meter run. Campbell posted a time of 8:32.76, while Corral finished just five seconds behind his teammate in 8:37.92.

A 23 feet, 5.5 inch jump was good enough for an IC4A qualification and second place finish for Kyle Anthony '10. McLeod, Sean Coyne '09, Baxter Gregory '10 and Boyle teamed up to win the 4x400 meter relay in 3:21.70.

The men's team won the meet with a total of 161 points, while Shippensburg (132) and St.Francis (110) took second and third, respectively.

On the women's side, Catherine Trentacoste '07 had a standout meeting with a first-place finish in the 55-meter hurdles and second-place finish in the 200. Her performance in the hurdles earned her a spot in the ECAC championship.

"The meet went well this weekend," Trentacoste said. "We had a few people set personal bests and many ladies moved up on the 10-list for the Patriot League."

Marjorie Grap '07 had a great outing in the 20-pound weight throw, spanning a distance of 62 feet, 7.75 inches to meet an NCAA ECAC championship, while teammate Kalle James-Wintjen '10 took home first place honors in the 200 meter dash in 26.21 seconds.

The Bison produced two one-two finishes in both the 500 meter dash and one-mile run. Mariel Fink '07 and Jenny Dalzell '09 finished the 500 in 1:18.27 and 1:18.66 respectively, while Jenny Stevens '07 and Leanna Nastase '07 crossed the finish line 5:08.31 and 5:10.80 respectively.

The women dominated the meet, scoring 256 points compared to second-place St. Francis's 90 points.

The Orange and Blue had two meets prior to the Heptagonal, The Gulden Relays and the Bison Opener. On the men's side, Boyle was named Runner MVP of the Gulden Relays for his IC4A qualifying performance in the 500 meter and for his showing in the school record setting sprint medley, consisting of Boyle, Matt Johnson '08, MacLeod and Mooney.

The women also had a fantastic showing at the Gulden Relays. Grap was named the Field MVP of the Gulden Relays, with a record breaking showing in the 20-pound weight throw. The Orange and Blue also broke the school record in the sprint medley. The team was made up of Trentacoste, Chessa Forer '07, Sawko and James-Wintjen.

"I feel the season has gone extremely well for both the team and myself," Grap said. "A lot of the team is stepping up early which is a great indicator to the other Patriot League teams that we're back and stronger than ever."

"I feel the season has gone extremely well for both the team and myself. A lot of the team is stepping up early which is a great indicator to the other Patriot League teams that we're back and stronger than ever."
—Marjorie Grap '07

At the Bison Opener, Anthony stole the spotlight on the men's side at the first meet of the season with IC4A qualifying first place finishes in the long jump and triple jump, while Grap, Buczko and Nina Reinhardt '07 grabbed first place finishes for the women.

The Bison will be back in action this weekend at the Bison Open and Multi in Gerhard Fieldhouse today at 4 p.m and a small team will be sent to Penn State National Invitational meet in University Park, Pa.

Swimming struggles at Columbia

By Barbara Perlman
Sports Editor

While most students avoid the winter weather by nestling in their dorms, the university's swimming and diving teams have been braving the cold, as they continue to make a splash in the Patriot League. Starting mid-winter break for training camp, the Bison have been working tirelessly in hopes of enjoying continued success.

"Spending winter break at Bucknell was definitely something that helped bring the team closer together," Co-Captain Katherine Munson '07 said. "We not only trained together, but ate together…hung out together at night, [and] welcomed in the New Year at 9:30 with sparkling cider (since we had practice in the morning). It was a great bonding experience."

This team unity and spirit was evident in the men's victory over Colgate 224-75, and the women's huge win over Army 215-85 and close loss to Colgate 158-142 on Jan. 13.

The success from the meet with Army and Colgate did not carry over in the team's most recent meet at Columbia University. The Lions proved to be too mighty for the Bison, defeating the men 150-92 and the women 187.5-109.5.

The men got off to a slow start, as the 400-yard medley team of Mark Kawczenski '09, Bradford Bennett '08, Matt Crandell '07 and Grant Steadman '08 placed fourth in the first event of the day. The Bison would pick up steam with Steadman's second place finish in the 50 free and a three-four-five finish in the 200 IM.

Michael Deighan '09 went on to take first in the 200 breast with a time of 2:09.78. First-place finishes were also recorded by John Peterman '08 in the 100 free and Patrick Stummer '09 in the 500 free. Two more Bison would join Steadman as runner-ups in their respective races as Crandell placed second in the 200 fly and David Iselin '10 in the 200 back. The Orange and Blue would continue to rack up points with six fourth place finishes.

The men continued to impress on the boards as the Bison went two-three in the one-meter with Matt Traver '10 scoring 248.25 and Jeffrey Manning '09 scoring 233.63 points. Traver and Manning claimed the second and third spots again in the three-meter, with Manning claiming the runner-up spot with 251.55 and Traver with 232.88, good for third.

The women also struggled against Columbia, though they too enjoyed some impressive finishes. Nikki Woodward '07 claimed the first place in the 500 free with a time of 2:07.10, and the Bison swept the one through four spots in the 200 IM, as Megan Mongan '10, Lauren Russell '10, Woodward and Laura Goeller '07 took first, second, third and fourth respectively.

Kelly Morris '09, Courtney Warren '10 and Rebecca Scheffter '07 each took two second-place finishes apiece. The 400 free relay team of Warren, Kirsten Skroski '08, Susan Horstmann '09 and Scheffter would place second in their event with a time of 2:14.09.

Led by Eliza Massie '10, the first-year divers showed their athleticism. Massie placed first in the one-meter with a personal-best of 252, second best in Bison history. She went on to claim second in the three-meter with a score of 245. Rebecca Bersani '10 and Allison FitzPatrick '10 also impressed as Bersani took third in the one-meter with 222 and fourth in the three-meter, while FitzPatrick achieved another personal-best with 221 in the one-meter, good for seventh in the Bison record books.

After this rough loss, the Bison still look towards the Patriot League Championships with optimism.

"At this stage in the season, we just have to keep focused on our goal, which is to win another Patriot League Championship," Morris said.

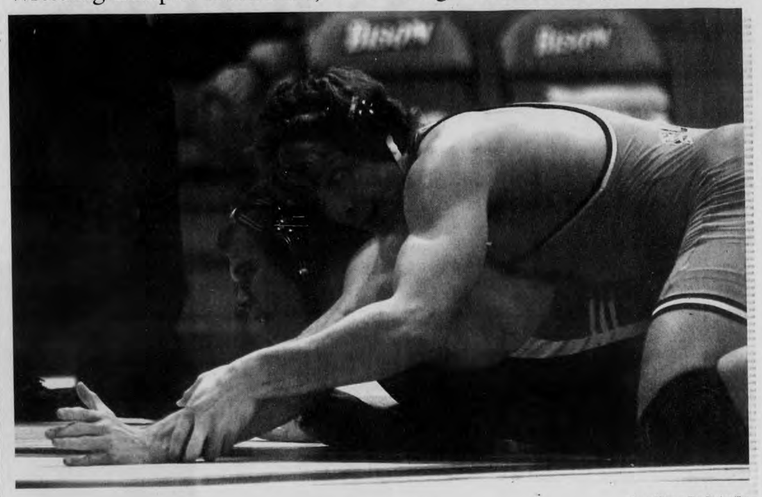
Munson also continues to be positive, looking at the team's unity as a measure of success to come.

"In order to continue the success that we have had the last four years at Patriots, we need to come together as a team and all be at our best at the same time," Munson said.

The Bison face rival Lehigh on Saturday at 2 p.m. in Kinney Natatorium.

Bison split two over weekend

Wrestling tramples Millersville, while losing heartbreaker against Liberty



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Eric Lapotsky '10 prepares to pin Liberty's Rory Bosek last Saturday. Lapotsky notched his team-leading 15th pin in the match against Liberty and has helped lead the team to its 9-8 record.

By Kyle Barndollar
Writer

The wrestling team split its two matches Friday at Davis Gym, crushing Millersvile 34-3 and falling in a disappointing loss to Liberty 25-24. The dual was the first home competition since Dec. 2 for the Bison, who are now 9-8 on the season. The Bison also went 2-2 in scored matches over winter break, falling to both Bloomsburg and Brown, 31-12 and 24-12, respectively, while defeating Delaware State 36-6 and Boston University 28-9.

Late in the match, Millersvile provided little competition for the Bison, who racked up two pins, one major decision and only one loss in the match's 10 bouts. In the 133-lb class, David Marble '10 beat John Lester 15-6. The 197-pound Eric Lapotsky '10 pinned Keith McDonald in three minutes and 21 seconds and Andy Rendos '10 pinned Gary Price in the 165-pound weight class. Rendos is currently ranked 19th in the nation and moved his individual record to 24-3. Lapotsky advanced to 20-4 on the day and gained his 15th pin to move into fifth place on the University's all-time pins in a season list.

Bucknell 34
Millersville 3

Also winning decisions against Millersville were Greg Hart '10 at 125 and Jack Conroy '10 at 149. Hart took down Mike Acedo-Malaney 11-9 while Conroy beat Nick Foley 7-2. Brantley Hooks '10 won a decision over Jarett Hostetter 9-6 in the 157-pound division and 174-pounder Shane Riccio '10 edged John Heleniak 5-4. At 184 pounds, George Mann '10 defeated Steve Funk 3-2 while Sean LoCurto '10 outwrestled Mike Langor in his heavyweight bout for a 9-8 win.

The Bison's defeat came earlier on Friday in a tear-jerking, one point loss to Liberty. After falling behind early in his match, Rendos pinned Chad Porter in just under five minutes, erasing a 4-1 deficit. Riccio then scored another pin over Jonathan Campbell to give the Bison a 12-0 lead. Another pin by Lapotsky over Liberty's Rory Bosek would stretch the Bison's lead to 18-3. After Marble's opponent had to withdraw due to injury, the lead was 24-12, and one win would likely seal the victory for the Orange and Blue.

Liberty 25
Bucknell 24

Wins by Liberty's Tim Harner and Aaron Kelly over Zach Galligan '10 and Conroy brought the match to 24-22, heading into finale at 157 between Hooks and Shaun Smith. Hooks would fall 5-4 in a close, hard fought match, and the Bison went down 25-24.

The Bison will host Wagner in its next match Saturday and James Madison travels to Davis Gym on Feb. 2 to round out the home schedule. The Bison will then face conference opponents and powerhouse Navy on Feb. 10 and Columbia and Harvard on Feb. 17 to round out EIWA regular-season competition. The Bison look to pose a threat in the NCAA Championships with Lapotsky and Rendos beating just about anyone they face, and most others, including Hart, Marble and Hooks, performing at high levels and hoping to qualify for the tournament.

Do you watch ESPN? Do you love the Bison?

Write for Sports

Contact blp004@

New York University
China • Czech Republic • England • France • Germany • Ghana • Italy • Spain

Monday afternoon.
- Sit through slide presentation in art history class.
- Pick up pint of Ben & Jerry's.

6 months from Monday.
- Tour the Uffizi Gallery with art historian.
- Have homemade gelato on the Ponte Vecchio.

apply now and experience florence

NYU StudyAbroad. Be there.

www.nyu.edu/abroad/worldwide

WEEKEND SCHEDULE

Friday

MEN'S TRACK & FIELD - Penn State National Invitational, 1:30 p.m., University Park, Pa.
WOMEN'S TRACK & FIELD - Penn State National Invitational, 5 p.m., University Park, Pa.
WOMEN'S TRACK & FIELD - Bison Open and Multi, 4 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
MEN'S TRACK & FIELD - Bison Open and Multi, 4 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
WOMEN'S TENNIS - Cornell Invitational, TBA, Ithaca, N.Y.

Saturday

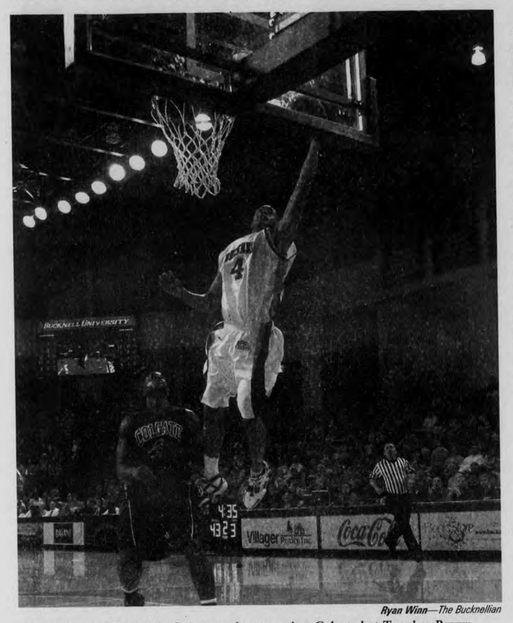
MEN'S BASKETBALL - Army, 7 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
WOMEN'S BASKETBALL - Army, 4 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
WOMEN'S TRACK & FIELD - Penn State National Invitational, 9 a.m., University Park, Pa.
MEN'S TRACK & FIELD - Penn State National Invitational, 10 a.m., University Park, Pa.
MEN'S TRACK & FIELD - Bison Open and Multi, 10 a.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
WOMEN'S TRACK & FIELD - Bison Open and Multi, 10 a.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
WRESTLING- Wagner, 1 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
WOMEN'S SWIM & DIVE - Lehigh, 2 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
MEN'S SWIM & DIVE - Lehigh, 2 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
WOMEN TENNIS - Cornell Invitational, TBA, Ithaca, N.Y.

Sunday

WOMEN'S TENNIS - Cornell Invitational, TBA, Ithaca, N.Y.

Bison defeat Colgate and Lehigh

Men's basketball strengthens its second-place hold in PL standings



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Donald Brown '07 goes up for an easy lay-up against Colgate last Tuesday. Brown boasts a .600 shooting percentage and leads the team with 12.1 points a game.

By Marcus Mateer
Senior Writer

Two games over the past week have solidified Bucknell's position as second in the Patriot League. Lehigh and Colgate both fell at Sojka Pavilion, frustrated by the Bison defense. Colgate had no scorers in double figures in the 50-36 loss Saturday. Lehigh fared little better on Tuesday, falling 62-44 in front of 3,107 attendees.

The Mountain Hawks were limited to 31.5 percent shooting and 20 percent from behind the arc. Lehigh's top two scorers were limited to a combined 12 points. The only source of offense came from freshman Marquis Hall, who ended the game with 18 points.

Bucknell 62
Lehigh 44

Bucknell's offense came from the starters. With the exception of five points from Darren Mastropaolo '08, all of the Bison points were from the five who began the game. Chris McNaughton '07 and Donald Brown '07 led the Orange and Blue with 15 points each, and the center also added 11 boards for a double-double.

"I think I'm playing with a little more intensity than I have in some of the games early this season," McNaughton said. "Coach is always talking to me and trying to get me moving around a little more and part of that is on the offensive glass. You can do so much damage there. Get a couple easy points and it gets you mentally going."

Lehigh hung with the Bison for a little over five minutes. At the 14:19 mark in the first half, Brown gave the home team the permanent lead with a layup. Three-point shooting extended the lead, with Jason Vegotsky '09 hitting three treys in the half. The Mountain Hawks made the mistake of leaving McNaughton open from long range and he knocked down his second three of the season. The Bison headed into the locker-room at halftime shooting 60 percent from behind the arc and up by 16.

Lehigh would only climb as close as nine points, early in the second half. A Brown layup and an Abe Badmus '07 three bookended an 8-0 run in response. Tough-pressure defense would prevent any serious Mountain Hawk runs for the remainder of the game.

As with Lehigh, the Bison defensive scheme proved too much to handle for Colgate. The Raiders were held to six field goals a half and 26.7 percent shooting. Jon Simon, Colgate's leading scorer, coming off a 28-point performance against Lehigh, was held to just eight points. In addition, no Colgate player scored in double-figures.

Bucknell 50
Colgate 36

The Bison offense, while efficiently shooting, was careless with the ball. Bucknell shot 47.2 percent for the game, while turning it over 20 times. Both McNaughton and Brown contributed, as they combined for 23 points, making 50 percent of their field goals, but committing eight turnovers.

Turnovers marred the initial minutes of the contest, as five of the first six Bison possessions ended without a shot and Colgate with the ball. The Raiders jumped out to a 6-0 lead before a layup by McNaughton (12 points, 7 rebounds) at the 15:04 mark finally got the Orange and Blue on the board. A bucket by Brown (11 points, 6 rebounds, 5 assists) and two John Griffin '08 free throws tied the game, which see-sawed back and forth until the 4:46 mark. Bucknell, down by two, would go on a 15-4 run to end the half.

"It's always tough playing Colgate. You know that it's going to be a physical game," McNaughton said. "We did a real good job of playing physical ourselves. I think we took it to them and they couldn't play with us for 40 minutes."

The Bison would again come out jittery to begin the half. Colgate took advantage and trimmed the nine-point halftime lead to three in the first 5:02 of the second period. Bucknell would settle down and go on a 10-1 run to put the game out of reach. The Raiders would not get within double-digits again.

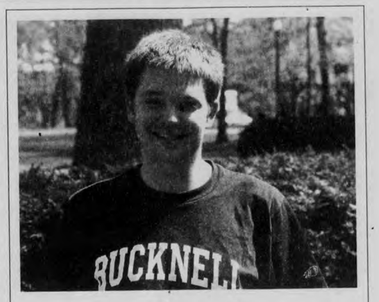
"I really liked what our upperclassmen did tonight," Head Coach Pat Flannery '80 said. "I thought they turned that game around. Certainly defensively we weren't giving them a whole lot of looks."

In addition to the play by the seniors, Stephen Tyree '10 contributed 14 quality minutes during the game. He snagged four boards and had a pair of assists, but the greatest contribution was on the defensive end. Tyree guarded tough and tight and was one reason why Colgate went 0-14 from behind the arc, including at least four airballs.

The next men's basketball contest comes in a double-header with the women's team on Saturday, Jan. 27 against Army. The women's game begins at 4 p.m. at Sojka, with the men following at 7 p.m.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Abe Badmus '07 drives against a Lehigh player last Saturday. The Bison have won 30 straight league games at home.



Saylor Says

By Matt Saylor
Associate Editor of Content

On Dec. 2, the men's basketball team hosted Northern Iowa in a rematch of last year's ESPN BracketBuster, a game that saw the Panthers win 65-61 in double overtime. This year featured another close game, and the Panthers again came out on top, 57-48. The listed attendance for that game was 4,011, but that appears to be based on tickets sold and not those who were actually there; large chunks of the student sections were empty, which the media attending the game found to be of high interest. Was the low turnout because the team was off to a 2-4 start? What could possibly justify such a turnout for only the second home game of the season after the overtime thriller against Wake Forest?

Head Coach Pat Flannery '80 and starting guard John Griffin '08 were asked about the lack of students at such an important game. Neither of them had an explanation for the sudden disappearance of the most important part of its fan base, with Griffin saying the team only can be concerned with "going out and playing for each other."

It was hard for me to respond that day when asked, "Where are your fellow students?"

I came up with as many excuses as I could: exams were approaching, other athletic teams were at their own events, there was a live feed of the game people could watch around campus, events such as candlelight services, awards banquets and music recitals were happening all weekend. The students will be back, I said, trying to convey that this surely must be a one-time event.

I unfortunately had to agree with those who said if the students wanted to be there, then they would be there. Yes, it was a rough start to a season, especially considering the success the team has had over the past two seasons. Yet, this was only the seventh game of the season and just the second at home due to the unwillingness of other teams to travel to Lewisburg and risk coming away with a loss. The team was still finding its rotation, playing its toughest out-of-conference schedule in recent memory and adjusting to life without Kevin Bettencourt '06 and Charles Lee '06, the co-captains from the previous two campaigns. New roles had to be taken on and an identity had to be formed.

The first home game following winter break was Saturday against Colgate and the student sections filled up once again, more than the game against Northern Iowa, but still with an occasional gap that would not have been there this time last season.

Tuesday night's affair against Lehigh, a game where the Bison looked as sharp and poised as they have all year, saw attendance at 3,107. This is the lowest-attended game since Dec. 17, 2005 when the Orange and Blue hosted Division III Haverford, a game that took place over winter break. This was a key league game, and the Bison's win gave the team second place in league play, one game behind Holy Cross.

The fans were loud and disruptive, but the atmosphere was a little different with at least 800 less bodies in the arena than has been the norm for league play over the last year.

This year's record is not what it has been in the past, but that should not change anything. Many of the faces are still there that have led us to such great success—Chris McNaughton '07, Donald Brown '07, Abe Badmus '07, Griffin, Darren Mastropaolo '08 and Jason Vegotsky '09. This year new players are emerging such as Justin Castleberry '09, Rob Thomas '08, Patrick Behan '10 and Stephen Tyree '10. Let them know that we still care.

The team needs our support as much now as it did before. This group still has a nice run left in it, and the team has the pieces to be a contender for years to come. Each year may not be as magical as what the last two have been, but there is no reason we should no longer give that support that helped contribute to that magic.

WWW.TOYOTALIVEWEB.COM

AS A COLLEGE GRAD, YOU MAY BE ELIGIBLE FOR

$400 CASH

ANY NEW TOYOTA OF YOUR CHOICE*

2007 FJ CRUISER
2007 COROLLA
2007 YARIS

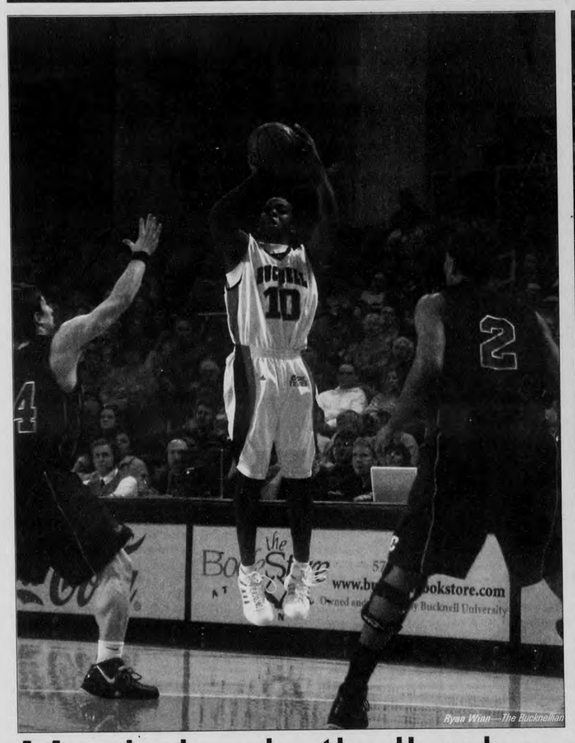
TOYOTA moving forward ▸ TOYOTA buyatoyota.com

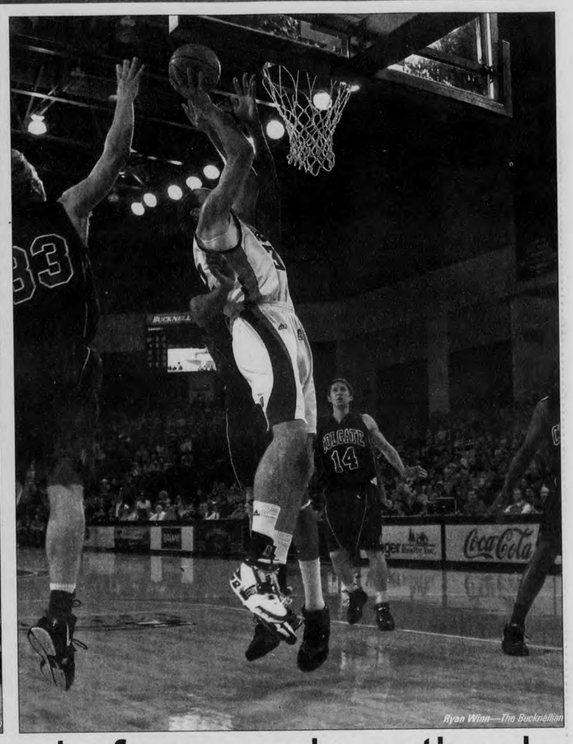
*NOT ALL CUSTOMERS WILL QUALIFY. CUSTOMERS RECEIVE $400 FROM TOYOTA TOWARDS LEASING OR FINANCING THE PURCHASE OF NEW UNTITLED TOYOTA MODELS THROUGH PARTICIPATING TOYOTA DEALERS AND TOYOTA FINANCIAL SERVICES. SEE DEALER OR VISIT WWW.TOYOTAFINANCIAL.COM/FINANCE FOR DETAILS. COLLEGE GRADUATE PROGRAM IS SUBJECT TO CHANGE OR TERMINATION AT ANY TIME.

Write for Sports

Contact blp004@

Nancy's Nu-Wave Salon
look your best
Wax Specials
Eye Brow $7
Upper Lip $5
Chin $10
Armpits $25
Full Legs $35
Knees Down $25
Under Arms $20
Back $25
Main Street (Rte 45) Mantandon
524-2315
www.nancysnuwave.com





Men's basketball rebounds from early setback

The Orange and Blue bounce back from tough loss to Northern Iowa, going 7-3 over winter stretch

By Marcus Mateer
Senior Writer

While students rested over break, the men's basketball team kept busy. After falling to Northern Iowa on Dec. 2, the team went 7-3 to climb to 10-8 overall. Included in that stretch were four Patriot League games, in which the Bison went 3-1 to tie for second in the league. Forward Donald Brown '07 was a major offensive factor during the 8-3 stretch, averaging 14.2 points per game. Reserve Justin Castleberry '09 added a surprising 7.2 points per game, leading the team with 16 in a losing effort at Holy Cross.

The series of 12 games began with a tough loss to Northern Iowa 57-48 in the rematch of last year's Bracket Buster in Cedar Falls, Iowa. In what would be a recurrent theme in the Orange and Blue's losses, an opposing shooter simply gets a hot hand. Brooks McKowen's second half performance iced the game. His three treys killed Bison runs and his clutch free-throws down the stretch put it away.

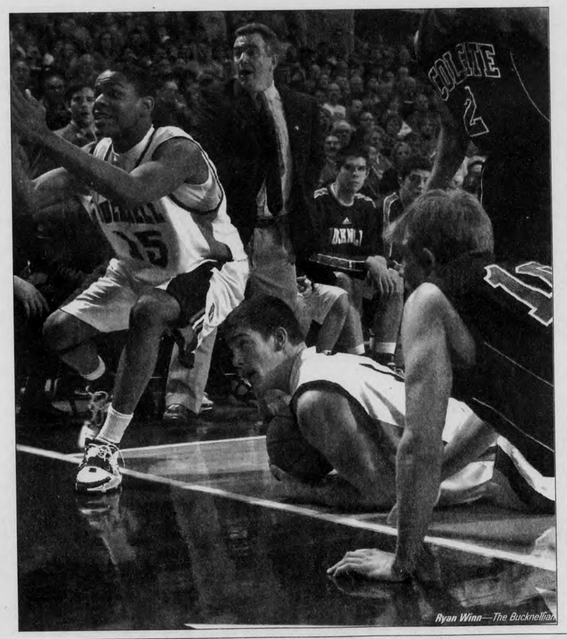
Less than 24 hours later, the Bison traveled to Washington, D.C., to face a George Mason team that had made the Final Four a year ago. The Bison were not impressed. Recognizing the need for additional offense, Head Coach Pat Flannery '80 started guard Jason Vegotsky '09 in place of forward Darren Mastropaolo '08. Mastropaolo provided an excellent boost off the bench defensively, and Vegotsky's increased playing time helped spring John Griffin '08 free. Griffin scored 13 points, shooting nearly 50 percent from behind the arc. George Mason had no answer for Brown either, as his 16 points on perfect shooting from the field attested in the 60-57 victory.

After a break for finals, the Orange and Blue returned to action at Cornell. The Bison came out flat, and Cornell raced out on a 21-0 run for a 17 point first half lead. The gap was trimmed to 13 at the half. The Bison hung around for the majority of the second half until the 4:24 mark. An eight point Cornell lead dissolved when a jumper by Rob Thomas '08 sparked a 12-0 Bison run to end the game. A critical three by Vegotsky gave the Orange and Blue the lead for good with only 42 seconds left. The final score ended up at 70-66, with Brown's 14 pacing the Bison to Flannery's 300th career victory.

Vegotsky followed up that game-winner with another at Xavier. With 1:25 left, he nailed another three for a 68-67 final score. The Musketeers had a difficult time figuring out the Bison defense in the first half, only shooting 33.4 percent from the field. In the second half, the home team made a run to erase a 10 point Bison lead en route to taking a three point lead. A three by Griffin, followed by a Xavier basket, set up Vegotsky's heroics.

There would be no last-second heroics at Texas Tech. The Bison hung with the Red Raiders, trailing by only three with 16:45 left to play. Then, eight points by Jarrius Jackson during a critical 17-0 run gave Bobby Knight's team a 20 point lead. The lead would prove insurmountable for the Bison. Griffin paced the Orange and Blue with 16, as Knight tied the NCAA record for wins by a head coach with a final of 72-60.

In the first round of the Pepsi Marist Classic in Poughkeepsie, N.Y., the Bison fell in a disappointing loss to Central Arkansas, 50-48. Fernando Johnson and Durrell Nevels loomed large in the paint for the Bears by blocking a combined six shots. The strong inside presence limited McNaughton to 1-4 shooting and Brown to 2-7 from the field. The Bears shot 47 percent from three-point range, with the majority coming from contested shots late in the shot clock. In the end, the difference in the game came from the hot hand of Central Arkansas's Marcus Pillow, who hit four treys to hold off a late Orange and Blue run.



The Bison bounced back from the close defeat to drop Northern Illinois 77-59 in the consolation game. The Huskies never led, falling behind by as much as 24 in the second half. Brown was simply electric, leading the Bison with 20 points. The team shot 51.9 percent from the field and led by 17 at the half. McNaughton had an excellent game from the post, going 5-10 for 15 points.

The Bison finally returned to the friendly confines of Sojka Pavilion and responded with an easy victory over Navy 59-51. Brown led the home team with 15 and both McNaughton and Griffin scored in double figures. Navy's Greg Sprink scored 18, but no other Midshipman would score more than eight. The Bison never trailed in the second half.

In another game where the Orange and Blue would not relinquish a second half lead, they defeated American 66-60 at Sojka. In this case, the Bison would have to turn away a late Eagle run that trimmed the lead to one with 3:53 remaining. Mastropaolo hit two big free throws to push the gap back to three and two baskets by McNaughton put the Bison up by a comfortable seven. Mastropaolo had 11 points off the bench on a big day for the big men. Brown, McNaughton and Mastropaolo had a combined 41 points.

The bench would play a big role in keeping the Bison in the game against Holy Cross. The Bison would get 24 from Mastropaolo and Castleberry. The Crusaders jumped out to a seven-point lead and would never trail in the contest. Five straight points by Castleberry sliced the gap to one with 57 seconds left to play. Solid Holy Cross free-throw shooting iced the game down the stretch, pushing the final score to 65-60.

The Orange and Blue would rebound at Lafayette, overcoming a 10-point first-half deficit to win 67-61. Brown again led the Bison in scoring with 19, with Vegotsky adding 18. Vegotsky was perfect from the line, as free-throws provided the final 14 Bison points. The Leopards tied the game with 2:30 on the clock, but the perfect shooting from the charity stripe iced the game.

MEN'S SCHEDULE

ARMY AT BUCKNELL
SATURDAY JAN. 27
7 P.M.

BUCKNELL AT COLGATE
TUESDAY JAN. 30
7 P.M.

BUCKNELL AT NAVY (ESPNU)
FRIDAY FEB. 2
9 P.M.

BUCKNELL AT AMERICAN
TUESDAY FEB. 6
TBA

HOLY CROSS AT BUCKNELL (ESPNU)
FRIDAY FEB. 9
7 P.M.

LAFAYETTE AT BUCKNELL
WEDNESDAY FEB. 14
7 P.M.

ESPN BRACKETBUSTERS
SATURDAY FEB. 17
TBA

BUCKNELL AT LEHIGH
WEDNESDAY FEB. 21
7 P.M.

BUCKNELL AT ARMY
SATURDAY FEB. 24
1 P.M.

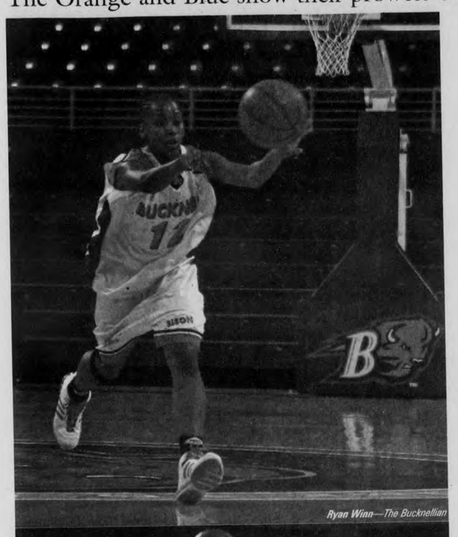
PL TOURNAMENT QUARTERFINALS
WEDNESDAY FEB. 28
TBA

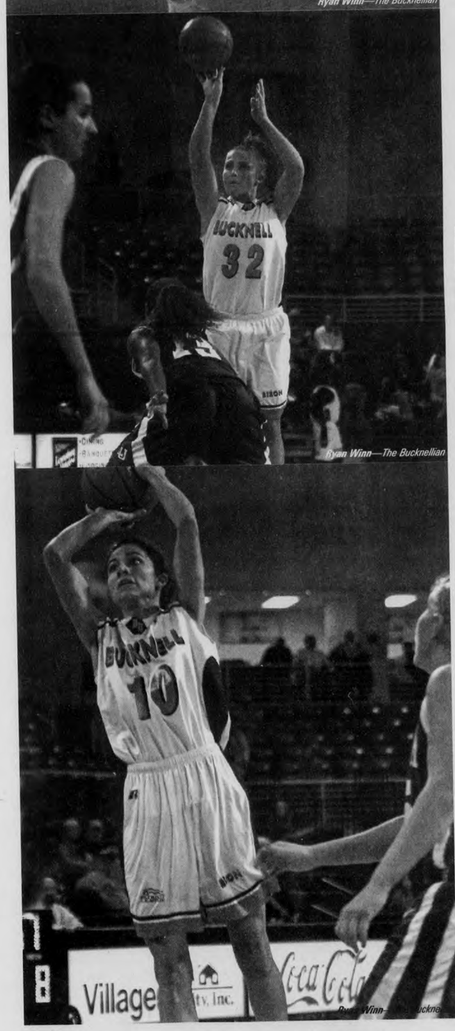
PL TOURNAMENT SEMIFINALS
SUNDAY MARCH 4
TBA

PL CHAMPIONSHIP GAME (ESPN)
FRIDAY MARCH
TBA

Women's basketball shines over break

The Orange and Blue show their prowess over winter break, topping Binghampton and Delaware State





By Matt Saylor & Ellis Hudes
Associate Editor of Content & Senior Writer

The women's basketball team went 7-5 over the stretch from Nov. 30 to Jan. 16, including 3-1 in Patriot League play.

The Bison kicked off this run with a hard-fought 54-48 home win against St. Bonaventure. The team scored eight of the game's final 10 points over the last two minutes and 18 seconds of the game. This was keyed by a quick layup by Captain Lindsey Hollobaugh '07 out of a timeout called by Head Coach Kathy Fedorjaka, breaking a 46-46 tie. Amanda Brown '09 added a jumper and made three out of four free throws in the final 30 seconds to help seal the win. Brown scored a team-high 14 points. Hope Foster '08 added 13 points and 11 rebounds, while Jacquie Seawright '07 added 11 points off the bench, including three three-pointers in the first half.

The Orange and Blue played its most disappointing game of the season Dec. 2 against Marist at Sojka Pavilion, losing 57-38. The team committed 17 turnovers and shot a dismal 26.9 percent from the field.

"I was embarrassed by the effort we put forth," Fedorjaka said after the game.

Fedorjaka responded by making line-up changes in the following game at Delaware State, starting Kristina Collymore '08 and Ashton Sprouse '08 in favor of Brown and Lauren Schober '09. The team responded with a 53-42 win. Foster, playing all 40 minutes, scored 12 points to go along with 12 rebounds and three blocks. Hollobaugh scored 11 points and Seawright scored 10. The team out-rebounded the Hornets 44-32.

The team then had 11 days off for exams before returning to action Dec. 16 at Coppin State. The Bison showed their rust, committing a season-high 26 turnovers in a 64-50 loss. The Orange and Blue led by one at halftime, but was unable to stop the Eagles on the offensive end as they shot 51.6 percent in the second half. Foster had team-highs with 18 points and 8 boards.

The Bison's only overtime game of the year was a 65-64 home win against Binghamton on Dec. 19. Hollobaugh hit the game-winner, a layup, with just 4.7 seconds to go in overtime. Seawright had 16 points, five rebounds and six steals, while Brown scored a game-high 19 points off the bench. Foster had her usual steady game with 13 points, eight rebounds and four blocks in 42 minutes of action.

In the Orange and Blue's last game before Christmas, they defeated Siena College 79-67 in Loudonville, N.Y. The team led 45-21 at halftime and held on for the 12-point win. Kesha Champion '08 led a balanced Bison attack with 17 points, six boards and four steals. Brown scored 15 points, as did Hollobaugh, who also had seven rebounds. Schober added 12 points and three steals.

The Bison lost their final game of 2006, 69-51 at Buffalo. Hollobaugh had 18 points and seven rebounds in the losing effort.

In the final outing of conference play for the Orange and Blue, the team lost 45-44 to Iona as the Gaels hit two free throws with 0.8 seconds left to win the game. Once again, Hollobaugh carried the offensive load, scoring 18 points, compared to only 26 for the rest of the team. The Gaels grabbed 47 rebounds, compared to only 28 for the Bison.

Saturday, Jan. 6 marked the start of Patriot League play and the Bison got off to a good start with a 67-47 home win over Navy. Brown tied her career high with 22 points, including four three-pointers, and Schober added a season-high 19 points. The team committed only eight turnovers in the win.

Four nights later, Foster dominated the next game against American in a 70-62 win. She scored 19 points, making five of seven field goals and all nine of her free throw attempts. She had 14 rebounds and two steals. Brown chipped in with 10 points.

The Bison avenged last season's Patriot League Tournament semifinal loss to Holy Cross with a 63-50 win in Worcester, Mass. Hollobaugh scored 19 points and grabbed a career-high 12 rebounds, while Brown scored 20 points and notched four steals.

The Orange and Blue's first conference loss came in Easton, Pa., at the hands of Lafayette. The Leopards had three players score at least 16 points in their 68-63 victory. Hollobaugh left the game in the second half due to a knee injury that changed the tide of the game. Brown scored 18 points, while Foster had 14.

Le'Le' LeSeur '10 contributed a team and career-high seven rebounds in 26 minutes off the bench.

Women's Schedule

Army at Bucknell
Saturday Jan. 20
7 p.m.

Bucknell at Navy
Saturday Feb. 3
1 p.m.

Bucknell at American
Tuesday Feb. 6
5:30 p.m.

Holy Cross at Bucknell(ESPNU)
Friday Feb. 9
4:30 p.m.

Lafayette at Bucknell
Tuesday Feb. 13
7 p.m.

Colgate at Bucknell
Saturday Feb. 17
4 p.m.

Bucknell at Lehigh
Tuesday Feb. 20
7 p.m.

Bucknell at Army
Saturday Feb. 24
3:15 p.m.

Patriot League Tournament (Annapolis, Md.)

Quarterfinals
Saturday March 3
TBA

Semifinals
Sunday March 4
TBA

Championship
Wednesday March 7
TBA

What was your New Year's resolution?

It was probably to start writing for sports

Write for Sports
blp004@

SWM, 24, Bucknell Alum '05, seeks willing and eager undergrad for connection, discovery and exploration through a shared music experience.
TO APPLY: RUCKUS.COM

CANCUN, ACAPULCO, NEGRIL, MOBAY, NASSAU, S. PADRE, FLORIDA, CRUISES, AND MORE!
JOIN THE PARTY!
SPRING BREAK 2007
STS STUDENT TRAVEL SERVICES
STS Flight Finder™
Save Hundreds on Spring Break Packages!!!
Search airfares to Mexico and the Caribbean and save up to $300 per person. Best Deals Guaranteed!
1.800.648.4849
www.ststravel.com

COLDWELL BANKER
PENN ONE REAL ESTATE

Thank You, Bucknell!!

For thirty years of calling Bucknell and Lewisburg home.

Susan Warner-Mills, Sales Associate
Competence, Integrity, Service

524-7500; swm@coldwellbanker.com

A MATCH MADE IN HEAVEN
THIS MVP IS NEVER WITHOUT HIS MVP.

PATRIOT LEAGUE MOST VALUABLE PLAYER CHARLES LEE &
BUCKNELL'S MOST VALUABLE PAPER, THE BUCKNELLIAN

Take a time out once a week and go one-on-one with The Bucknellian to stay up to date with all of the action happening on campus.

Enclose this form and a check (made out to The Bucknellian) and mail it to:

The Bucknellian, Bucknell University C3952, 701 Moore Avenue, Lewisburg, PA 17837

Name _____ __ ONE YEAR: receive 24 issues each week for the academic year for only $45, a $15 savings!

Address _____

_____

Phone _____ __ ONE SEMESTER: receive 12 issues during the fall or spring semester for $30. Please specify semester: _____

E-mail _____

For more information, contact The Bucknellian at 570-577-1520 or 570-577-1085 or e-mail bucknellian@bucknell.edu.

Undergrads gone global: Sydney

By Ana Fullmer
Contributing Writer

For those of you planning to spend some time Sydney-side, get ready for a week in an exotic city with a sophisticated nightlife and a flair for the dramatic.

Don't expect to see any kangaroos or emus running around, though. Sydney surprises many visitors with its energetic, urban atmosphere. The city boasts its own Chinatown, Little Italy and the largest Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual and Transgender festival in the world: the Sydney Gay & Lesbian Mardi Gras.

> Oftentimes the most happening place in Sydney is recognizable only by an imposing man in a suit, armed with a headset and a clipboard, denying entrance to pouting Sienna Miller look-alikes.

People post advertisements for various parties, such as the "Sleaze Ball," and activities open to all Sydney-siders and visitors. Mardi Gras culminates on March 3 with a fantastic parade through the streets. The parade features hundreds of "Dykes on Bikes," "Bears," and out and proud members of the Sydney Fire Brigade and Police Force dancing the night away. Try to get to Hyde Park early to see the spectacle and bring your glitter and a healthy sense of adventure.

If you need housing on a budget then try a Youth Hostel Association hostel, which will usually cost under 30 AUD (the Australian dollar) a night and keep you out of the seedier places. The hostel culture of Sydney allows you to meet travelers from all over the world, but is also a great way to pick up a scorching case of bed bugs, so it's a good idea to bring your own sheets.

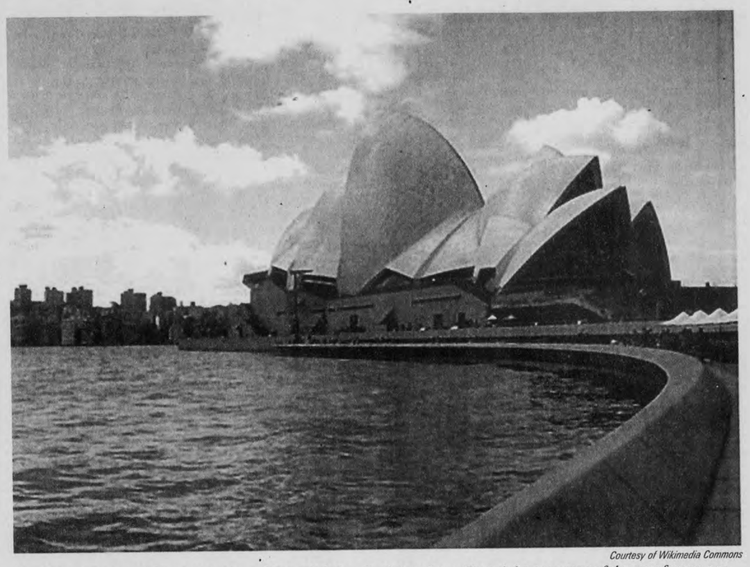
Once you are settled in you'll want to spend your first day soaking up the sights. Head to George Street, which is home to shops, clubs and bars, in addition to a two-story McDonalds Café with a vaulted gold ceiling.

George Street will also take you to the harbor, the gateway to the Sydney Aquarium, as well as the Sydney Opera House. Maps are available everywhere to lead tourists to where they want to go and away from the more dangerous neighborhoods.

The best bet for traveling around the city is buying a "Day Tripper" ticket. For 12 AUD it allows you all-day access to trains, buses and ferries, which otherwise can get very expensive. If you are saving up for the nightlife, a day at Bondi Beach is a great way to relax and check out the surfers. Bondi is famous for its good waves and beautiful blondes, but the tide can be dangerous for inexperienced swimmers. Unsuspecting tourists could find themselves on the next episode of "Bondi 911."

When it's time to change out of the bathing suit, Sydney has everything the night owl could want. If you are single and looking to mingle, head to the "Uni Club" at Sydney University to meet up with local students and enjoy cocktails that won't break the bank. As for the rest of the city, be prepared to kiss your multi-colored cash goodbye and turn your lips to the 7 AUD draft beer.

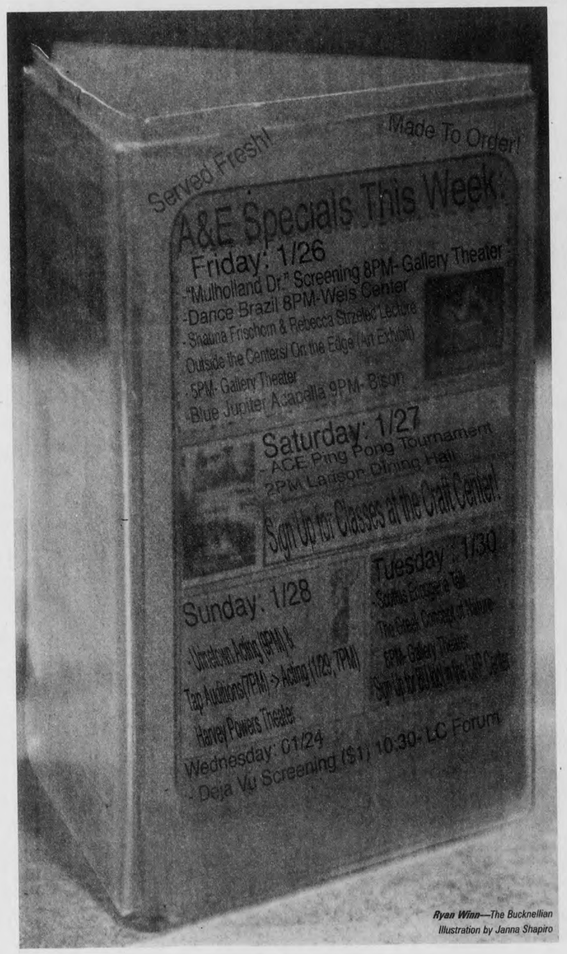
It is also important to note that the very best clubs do not have signs or windows. Oftentimes the most happening place in Sydney is recognizable only by an imposing man in a suit, armed with a headset and a clipboard, denying entrance to pouting Sienna Miller look-alikes. But never fear—the bouncers at Sydney's own version of the New York City celebrity haunt "Bungalow 8" tend to like Americans, often mistaking well-dressed college kids for movie stars. But if you're willing to brave the confused paparazzi as well as the 12-hour plane ride, Sydney will prove to be one "bonzer" of a good time.



Courtesy of Wikimedia Commons

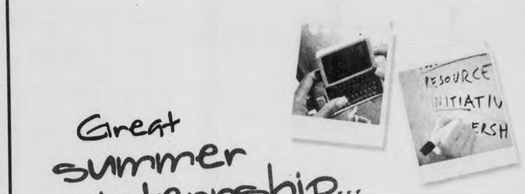
In addition to its beautiful and distinctive architectural design, the Sydney Opera House is home to some of the most famous performing arts in the world. Along with various other tourist attractions and a rich and dynamic Aussie culture, Sydney continues to be one of the foremost cities to visit if you're planning to travel.

What's Cooking on Campus



Served Fresh!
Made To Order!
A&E Specials This Week
Friday: 1/26
"Mulholland Dr." Screening 8PM- Gallery Theater
-Dance Brazil 8PM-Weis Center
-Shauna Frisbom & Rebecca Sinzelle Lecture
-Outside the Centers! On the Edge (Art Exhibit)
5PM- Gallery Theater
-Blue Jupiter: Acapella 9PM- Bison
Saturday: 1/27
-ACE Ping Pong Tournament
2PM Larson Dining Hall
Sign up for Classes at the Orbit Center!
Sunday: 1/28
Tuesday: 1/30
Wednesday: 01/24
-Deja Vu Screening ($1) 10:30- LC Forum

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian
Illustration by Janna Shapiro



Great summer internship... minus the paper cuts.

FINANCIAL FELLOWSHIP PROGRAM 2007

Get paid to learn from financial industry leaders and gain real world business experience.

The MetLife & New England Financial 2007 Financial Fellowship Program

Be one of only 100 college students from across the United States chosen for this paid summer internship.

We're seeking exceptional students like Casey Derbyshire from Bucknell University, who participated in the 2006 Financial Fellowship Program. Here's your chance to get real-world experience.

Apply Now!
www.FFPmetlife.com/news

LD# L0701BG26(exp0108)ENT-LD
MetLife and New England Financial are equal opportunity employers.

MetLife®

SUMMER INTERNSHIP

SPOILER ALERT!

By Matt Saylor
Associate Editor of Content

As the 2006-2007 television season begins its second half and with February sweeps right around the corner, here is a look at the key storylines for some of your favorite shows. Look here for weekly updates on what has happened and—for all of you spoiler junkies out there—what to expect on some of the biggest shows on television. Note that all of this information is as of Tuesday.

"Grey's Anatomy" – The Golden Globe winner for Best TV Drama is facing just as much off-screen drama as what the medical staff is going through at Seattle Grace Hospital. Isaiah Washington's comment at the Golden Globes that he did not refer to fellow cast mate T.R. Knight by a homosexual slur was not only ill-timed, but more unfortunately, untrue. ABC is deciding how it wants to handle the situation, with there being a possibility that Washington will just be fired from the show. This will put the show in a difficult situation with all of its February episodes already shot, and big reveals for many characters, including Washington's Dr. Burke, in the works.

There is another rumor circulating that it may in fact be Knight who will leave the show. This would be a devastating blow to the show and its fans, as Dr. George O'Malley is arguably the most popular character.

A plotline to look forward to is how O'Malley deals with the death of his father (guest star George Dzundza) and what it means for his relationship with Dr. Torres (Sara Ramirez). Will Dr. Yang (Sandra Oh) and Dr. Burke be able to reconcile their relationship, as Dr. Grey (Ellen Pompeo) and Dr. Shepherd (Patrick Dempsey) contemplate what their own future holds? Dr. Webber (James Pickens Jr.) announces his retirement as chief, but will he stay away for long? Will Dr. Montgomery (Kate Walsh) and Dr. Karev (Justin Chambers) become the show's newest "it couple?" With all of the sex that occurs on the show, isn't it time for someone to become pregnant, with perhaps a marriage proposal looming for a (separate) couple as well?

"24" – Did anyone anticipate that Graham (Paul McCrane) would be Jack Bauer's brother (Kiefer Sutherland)? The start of another long day for Bauer has come with a lot of twists and turns and it is still only morning. It is not easy to return to the country after being tortured for almost two years in a Chinese prison, be asked to sacrifice yourself in order for your government to negotiate with a terrorist, kill your friend and cohort Curtis (Roger Cross) to protect another terrorist (Alexander Siddig) who is helping your country, quit your job, witness a nuclear explosion, take back your job and then find out that your brother and estranged father (James Cromwell) are aiding terrorists themselves. It also doesn't help that President Wayne Palmer (D.B. Woodside) is unsure of what to do and scared to act, and Chief of Staff Tom Lennox (Peter MacNicol) is essentially running the show.

Look for Palmer trying to find some strength as the season continues and for there to be a growing divide in the White House. Bauer will have to deal with family issues, past and present, as he tries to save the world again while dealing with inner turmoil brewing inside of him from his time in China.

"The Office" – Wedding bells are in the air as Phyllis (Phyllis Smith) ties the knot with Bob Vance of Vance Refrigeration (Robert Shafer). The episode scheduled to air on Feb. 1, "Ben Franklin," will take a look at the pre-wedding parties (with some imaginative planning from Steve Carell's Michael Scott), while the following week will see the ceremony itself.

Karen (Rashida Jones) will have to deal with Jim (John Krasinksi) revealing that he still does have feelings for Pam (Jenna Fischer). It appears that Karen will be sticking around for awhile though. Things will not be easy for Jim as Pam will start to spend more time with ex-fiancé Roy (David Denman).

The romances between Dwight and Angela (Rainn Wilson and Angela Kinsey), Michael and Jan (Melora Hardin) and Ryan and Kelly (B.J. Novak and Mindy Kaling) will also take center stage. Is it possible that one of those couples might be expecting? Tune in to find out.

"E.R." – The most recent new episode of the show left us with multiple cliffhangers. Dr. Pratt (Mekhi Phifer) is in jail for dispensing medicine illegally. While he will get out of prison, he will have to face the consequences and may lose his license.

Sam Taggart (Linda Cardelinni) was about to get busy with fellow nurse Ben Parker (guest star Kip Pardue), when son Alex (Dominic C. Janes) set the apartment ablaze. Alex will be eager to pass the blame onto someone else, but will Sam buy what he is selling?

It appeared as if things were improving for Dr. Gates (John Stamos), but a medical emergency to ex-sleeping buddy Meg (guest star Paula Malcomson) will turn his life upside down. It won't help that love interest Dr. Rasgotra (Parminder Nagra) still has some feelings for Dr. Barnett (Shane West).

Dr. Lockhart (Maura Tierney) and Dr. Kovac (Goran Visnjic) have not had the easiest of times this season, with the premature birth of their son and the lawsuit Kovac faced with ex-patient Curtis Ames (guest star Forest Whitaker). Ames wants revenge and shows up at the end of the most recent episode inside their apartment where he now has Lockhart and baby Joe held at gunpoint. Kovac is the one he really wants, and once he takes him captive he will let mother and son go. You will have to watch to find out what happens next.

Finally, a tip of the hat to Laura Innes who has departed the show after playing Dr. Kerry Weaver since 1995. Innes will be around to direct some episodes and producers have left it open for her to make possible guest appearances in the future.

Look to this column in the future for information regarding these shows and more, including the return of "Lost" and "Scrubs."

Courtesy of Wikimedia Commons

loses ground

By Megan McWhinney
Contributing Writer

❖ TV Review

Earlier this month FX debuted its latest dramatic series, "Dirt." Joining other popular shows, such as "The Shield," "Rescue Me" and "Nip/Tuck," "Dirt" is another boundary-pushing effort from a network already packed with critically acclaimed programs garnering attention from audiences not only for their engaging drama, but also for their racy storylines.

This show benefited from an aggressive advertising campaign unlike anything in recent history. Teaser ads began months before the premiere and paved the way for FX's second highest-rated debut in network history. FX is banking on the formula that worked well for "Nip/Tuck": an exposé of the seedy underbelly of American obsessions mixed with a healthy dose of meaning.

The biggest draw for the show is "Friends" alumna Courteney Cox. Cox headlines the show and is the only recognizable face in the cast. Her character, the ruthless Lucy Spiller, is a jarring departure from the neurotic but loveable Monica who won over American hearts for a decade.

"Dirt" tells the story of Dirt and Now magazines, comparable to the real-life National Enquirer and People, respectively. The show portrays the cutthroat world of celebrity gossip rags and the exploitation of the American megastar, from their demi-god status to their invasive, paparazzi-driven humiliation.

Cox's character runs both magazines and wields her power to make or break celebrities' careers with a Cheshire-cat grin. She blackmails the rich and famous with threats of releasing pictures of illicit trysts in exchange for Hollywood insider information.

Like many avid "Nip/Tuck" and "Friends" fans, I couldn't wait to see the show. However, I was sorely disappointed. What could have been a genuine examination of the gossip-rag industry became a rant against its evils at the hands of its fictive executive producers.

While the show portrays the gossip magazines as shameless and petty, it crosses the line of reality by showing a picture of a dead celebrity (clearly taken illegally) on the front page of a magazine. That would never happen.

Another issue was the storylines. Not only were they unconvincing, but they also bordered on uncomfortable due to the lack of empathy the audience is allowed to feel for the main characters. I didn't want them to succeed in ruining another person's life.

Cox's performance leaves much to be desired. Firstly, the constant glamour shots are tiring at best. Cox is beautiful; we get it. But beauty doesn't help the character. Making Spiller less gorgeous and more intimidating would be beneficial. The lines Cox delivers, while cruel and cutting, are obvious and uninspired in their delivery. Meryl Streep blew our socks off in "The Devil Wears Prada," but even a teaspoon of her talent could mean a major improvement in the show.

The concepts in the show are scattered and confused. Instead of developing one really juicy scandal and working from it, there are roughly four at any given time. Stacked on top of each other, the viewer is overloaded, as if Angelina killed Brad, Lindsay Lohan shot a sex tape and Derek Jeter knocked up Hilary Duff all in one issue. True to FX's form, "Dirt" is a show so racy you forget it's cable. Nudity, profanity and drug use are presented so often for shock value that they detract from the story.

The sets are also over the top. Spiller's office and bedroom look like a set from "Bedazzled"—everything is red satin and black leather. A dungeon vault attached to her office shares the villain motif; it has a wall-sized painting of naked bodies twisting among hellfire in a Last Judgment scene, beating the audience over the head with the über-apparent idea that she ruins lives.

Finally, the sin-and-salvation metaphors are tiresome. A pregnant star won't consider an abortion because she's "so totally Catholic." A failing actor runs the gamut of the deadly sins: envy, greed, wrath, pride, etc. The characters are tormented by guilt until they reap the benefits of their actions, but all are judged by the all-powerful Spiller.

In press conferences after the show's debut the president of FX promised the show would improve after the fifth episode. I could barely get through the pilot, so I think it's a long shot. Final word: "Dirt" needs to clean up its act.

Courtesy of Wikimedia Commons

Courteney Cox as Lucy Spiller, a ruthless editor from fictitious celebrity gossip magazine "Dirt and Now." In the show, Cox's character is responsible for wielding numerous shameless and backhanded acts in order to exploit the lives of celebrities for her own benefit.

The Show portrays the cutthroat world of celebrity gossip rags and the exploitation of the American megastar, from their demi-god status to their invasive, paparazzi driven humiliation.

Think you can do better?
Bring it on!

Write for A & E.

E-mail jshapiro@

2007 Oscar Nods: Do you Agree?

Best Picture:

"Babel"
"The Departed"
"Letters From Iwo Jima"
"The Queen"
"Little Miss Sunshine"

Actor in a Leading Role:

Leonardo DiCaprio, "Blood Diamond"
Ryan Gosling, "Half Nelson"
Peter O'Toole, "Venus"
Will Smith, "The Pursuit of Happyness"
Forest Whitaker, "The Last King of Scotland"

Actress in a Leading Role:

Penélope Cruz, "Volver"
Judi Dench, "Notes on a Scandal"
Helen Mirren, "The Queen"
Meryl Streep, "The Devil Wears Prada"
Kate Winslet, "Little Children"

Actor in a Supporting Role:

Alan Arkin, "Little Miss Sunshine"
Jackie Earle Haley, "Little Children"
Djimon Hounsou, "Blood Diamond"
Eddie Murphy, "Dreamgirls"
Mark Wahlberg, "The Departed"

Actress in a Supporting Role:

Adriana Barraza, "Babel"
Cate Blanchett, "Notes on a Scandal"
Abigail Breslin, "Little Miss Sunshine"
Jennifer Hudson, "Dreamgirls"
Rinko Kikuchi, "Babel"

Best Directing:

"Babel"
"The Departed"
"Letters From Iwo Jima"
"The Queen"
"United 93"

Best picture nomination? In their dreams.

By Erik Zager
Contributing Writer

❖ Movie Review

When I walked into the theater to see "Dreamgirls," I expected to see a movie that would be heavy on entertainment and light on thinking. From start to finish, "Dreamgirls" delivers exactly what I hoped for: a movie adaptation of a Broadway show that is packed with glitz, glamour and songs that make you want to stand up and applaud the screen. It also gave me exactly what I expected as far as a simple plot with a predictable story and relatively two-dimensional characters. If you are looking for a thinker, go see "The Departed." If you are looking to be thoroughly entertained, while saving brainpower for your physics problems, go see "Dreamgirls."

The movie starts out with a talent show that immediately reveals the underhanded workings of the music business that the Dreamettes (the heroines of the story, played by Beyoncé Knowles, Jennifer Hudson and Anika Noni Rose) are about to enter. They are forced to take a backup singer position to Jimmy Early (Eddie Murphy), much to the protest of the strong-willed, full-bodied lead singer, Effie White (Hudson). Eventually, the Dreams, as they come to be known, get their big break. Unfortunately, the girls' new manager decides that Effie does not fit the right body image for the lead singer, despite being by far the most talented. Deena Jones (Knowles) is forced into the lead.

I must admit, I am not a big fan of Knowles. How anyone could actually do worse as a sidekick to Austin Powers than Heather Graham, I will never know. She managed to pull off the role of Deena, a pretty singer without a distinguished voice that is popularized purely through skillful management and advertising, very well. Murphy also did a wonderful job portraying an entertainer who was once high on the charts but is falling slowly into oblivion, grasping to hold on to the vestiges of successful career. Murphy and Knowles must have had a difficult time playing roles so far from their life experience.

Courtesy of imdb.com

The Dreams perform with their new lead singer, Deena Jones (Beyonce Knowles). "Dreamgirls" led the pack in Academy Award nominations, picking up eight, but were snubbed in the "Best Picture" category.

As the Dreams become more and more successful, things begin to fall apart and betrayal runs rampant. The film showcases exhilarating songs loaded with emotion. Characters pour their hearts out in verse. Supporting characters even chime in from time to time. Jamie Foxx shows that his singing ability in "Ray" was not "just a fluke." In fact, the film doesn't leave you bored for a single moment, packing a song into every space and ensuring that no one reaches for their watch. Now in a world of movies like "The Good Shepherd," "The Departed" and "Casino Royale," "Dreamgirls" broke from the new three hour norm and ended in a tidy 2 hours and 5 minutes, without dragging its feet endlessly, making you yearn for the exits and the bathrooms.

I left the theater quite pleased with my movie-going experience. "Dreamgirls" would make a good, entertaining, non-offensive date movie and is a perfect flick to see with parents if they just happen to drop in for a visit, since they might not fit in with the weekend party scene. If you are thinking about simply waiting until it comes out on DVD, make sure you have a good sound system in order to fully appreciate Hudson's knock-out voice. All in all, I felt that "Dreamgirls" earned the praise it received at the Golden Globes (it took home supporting actor awards for Murphy and Hudson and won the award for best musical or comedy), but come time for awards that actually matter, like the Oscars, it might be slightly easier to forget about this dream.

Courtesy of imdb.com

The Dreamettes sing back-up for Jimmy Early (Eddie Murphy). This scene is one of the cinematography highlights of the movie musical.

By Ana Fullmer
Contributing Writer

While most students spent their winter break blissfully hiding from the world in mountain-view ski chateaus or demanding another mojito from their new domestic, Hollywood spent its December and January working hard to provide us with new trends for the spring semester. You can spot them anywhere, from the Ashley Olsen "Lincoln Park After Dark" nail-polish to the Scarlett Johansson black headband.

In mess-at-life news, PerezHilton.com reports that actress Lindsay Lohan has ended her four-day rehab stint at the Wonderland treatment center in Los Angeles. The child-actress turned Betty Ford Candidate of the Year has been under intense criticism from Hollywood for her unprofessional on-set behavior and abusive language towards strippers. If you couple that with her puffy face, at age 20 Lohan faces a dried-up career. Interestingly enough, some celebrity bloggers are refusing to run pictures of Lohan coming or going from Alcoholics Anonymous meetings, citing that all the mayhem caused by the paparazzi will discourage her from getting better. Homegirl can't handle her sauce. No one here in the 5-7-0 was surprised that her attempts to convince people she wasn't boozing by carrying a "water" bottle failed. Do you think she prefers Bankers Club or Vladmir? She should stick with whatever is on sale.

Speaking of sales, if anyone spots a copy of "He's Just Not That into You" at the bookstore, it seems actress and former it-girl Cameron Diaz has lost hers. According to reports, the "There's Something About Mary" star was spotted throwing herself at her ex-boyfriend Justin Timberlake before, during and after last week's Golden Globe Awards. People.com reveals that while amicable during the InStyle after party, things got heated after the devastated dumpee trailed Timberlake to the roof of the Beverly Hilton. After seeing him chatting with Jessica Biel, Diaz flew into a jealous rage that would make a freshman girl blush. Unfortunately for her, the master plan and red lipstick didn't do the trick, and Timberlake left with his mother.

Mommies seemed to be all the rage this winter, with glowing, lovely ladies such as Heidi Klum and Gwen Stefani toting their beautiful children and equally beautiful husbands around Tinseltown. Another mommy and daddy I love, Posh Spice and David Beckham, are soon to join their ranks in the Hollywood Hills. On Jan. 11, The New York Times reported that the futbol legend agreed to a five-year deal with the Los Angeles Galaxy of Major League Soccer. It is yet to be seen if the United States will embrace the sport like the rest of the world, but it is certain that they will embrace Posh's figure and Beck's perfect hair. I'm salivating already.

As for all the other stars you pretend not to care about but secretly Google when you're supposed to be researching for that group project, they've been busy too. Dlisted.com posted that Paris Hilton was given 36 months of probation, a $390 fine and an order to attend an alcohol education program in response to her September driving under the influence charges. Mandy Moore is dating D.J A.M., who used to date Nicole Richie, who is dating Joel Madden, who used to date Hilary Duff. Angelina Jolie continues to save the world and look amazing on the arm of Hottie McHotterson, Brad Pitt. So sums up the break in review, and while this particular Mexican's mojito-serving days are over, I'll do my best to serve you with updates on what is going on in Hollywood, the only other place where Monday is the new Saturday and two almonds are a full meal.

The Sigmund and Claire Weis Center for the Performing Arts
PRESENTS

The dancers and musicians of DanceBrazil
Jelon Veira, founder & artistic director of the Capoeira Foundation & DanceBrazil
Friday, January 26, 2007
8 p.m.

coming to the Weis Center
Nathaniel Dett Chorale
Friday, February 2, 8 p.m.

Hungarian Symphony Orchestra with Paavali Jumppanen, piano soloist
Friday, February 9, 8 p.m.

Bucknell University, Lewisburg, Pennsylvania
Tickets and Information: 570-577-1000
www.bucknell.edu/WeisCenter/

Bucknell Concert Committee's spring pick consistent with progression towards bigger and bigger acts

By Lily Beauvilliers
Associate Editor of Layout

Get out your calendars, check the date, cancel all plans and tell all your home friends that for one Saturday, they must visit the University. We thought Ben Folds was huge, we thought Kanye was unbeatable, but the Bucknell Concert Committee (BCC) proved us wrong. Announcing the spring 2007 concert headliner—the Goo Goo Dolls!

On Saturday, March 24 the Goo Goo Dolls will play at Sojka Pavilion with opener Augustana. Doors open at 7 p.m. and the show starts at 8 p.m. The BCC expects a lot of excitement for the group, and rightfully so.

"The Goo Goo Dolls have been on top of student surveys for a long time," Associate Dean of Students Kari Conrad said. "We've put in bids in the past, but due to tour schedules it hasn't worked out."

The tour follows the release of their eighth album, "Let Love Live," last April. New hit "Give a Little Bit" peaked at 37th on the Billboard Hot 100 according to www.allmusic.com and has received occasional WVBU airplay.

The Goo Goo Dolls broke out on the music scene with the release of their sixth album, "A Boy Named Goo" in 1995. But superstardom emerged with "Dizzy Up the Girl," released in 1998 and featuring the megahit "Iris." "Iris" first appeared in the movie "City of Angels" but went on to achieve fame of its own, including 18 weeks as No. 1 on Billboard's airplay charts, according to www.allmusic.com.

"We [the BCC] thought the Goo Goo Dolls would appeal to a wide variety of students," BCC Chair of Production Alessandro Zanelli '07 said. "We had Kanye, and we wanted to increase the diversity by getting a rock band."

"In the past ... students have approached the committee saying that they had never heard of the performer for a given concert," BCC Chair of Marketing Lauren Brian '07 said. "We feel that this is certainly not the case with the Goo Goo Dolls, who I'm sure every student on campus has at least heard of."

Last semester, rumor had it that the University would be unable to afford a spring concert after a name as big as Kanye West. Dean Conrad laid that one to rest.

"The Concert Committee was looking into not doing a spring show, but due to routing, we were able to get an affordable price [for the Goo Goo Dolls]," Conrad said. She also cited Kanye tickets selling out and aid from Bucknell Student Government as helpful factors.

Zanelli explained why he is excited for the concert:

"The Goo Goo Dolls don't have a message like Kanye West. Their music is more about just having a good time," he said. "It was a unanimous decision and we're expecting another sold-out show."

On the Web site www.googoodolls.com, the band encourages attendees to bring canned food to concerts, to be dropped off outside of the venue. The food will be donated to USA Harvest, a group dedicated to stopping hunger in the United States.

Although their music may not be edgy, the Goo Goo Dolls still have something they stand for.

On the Web site www.googoodolls.com, the band encourages attendees to bring canned food to concerts, to be dropped off outside of the venue. The food will be donated to USA Harvest, a group dedicated to stopping hunger in the United States.

"Better Days" from their newest album was written in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina.

"Right now, I feel as though there's a huge amount of unfairness going on in this country and it's really starting to annoy me," John Rezeznik, the band's lead singer, said according to www.vh1.com. "I know I'm not an authority on it, but I just wanted to speak my piece."

The song became the theme for Katrina Relief when CNN used it during reports on the damage.

Lyrics like, "I don't need boxes wrapped in a string/And desire and love and empty things/Just a chance that maybe we'll find better days" seem to speak against uncaring American consumerism, encouraging people to look to the future for hope.

So what can you expect from a Goo Goo Dolls performance?

"I have seen the Goo Goo Dolls in concert before and it was one of the best performances I have been to," Brian said. "They have so many hits and their music is enjoyable to listen to, whether you are a fan or not."

Students are encouraged to buy tickets quickly since the show is likely to sell out. Tickets go on sale for students on Feb. 5 at noon and for the general public on Feb. 7 at 11 a.m. There is no limit to the number of tickets a person may purchase.

Tickets are $25 for students and $30 for the public and can be purchased at the Campus Box Office in person or by calling (570) 577-1000 or online at www.bucknell.edu/BoxOffice.

Opening act Augustana: Not a shining star

By Ryan Freilino
Contributing Writer

❖ CD Review

Augustana's new album "All the Stars and Boulevards" sounds like a hybrid of the Fray and your classic emo band. These guys use a solid mix of electric guitar, piano and vocals. Their tone seems hard to pinpoint, probably because there is no real distinguishing sound on this album. Like most of you, I had heard Augustana's hit single "Boston" before I opened the album. When I put it on, I expected to hear slightly sentimental tunes, but instead I heard a package of non-descript alternative rock. The singer has a gentle voice full of angst, but seems to be missing something. This isn't the type of album you'd put on for a dance party, or any other type of party for that matter. This album is too laid back to really get anywhere.

The five members of Augustana, Jared, South, David, Dan and Chris grew up around the country. The band members describe themselves as "liv[ing] in a van somewhere" in between their hometowns of Greenville, S.C., Chicago, Ill., Nashville, Tenn. and Orange Country, San Diego and Los Angeles, Calif. — "no more than 3 feet from each other, 24 hours a day, for months on end," according to www.augustanamusic.com.

Augustana formed in California in 2004. The band's first solo record, "A Memoir," was recorded under the name, "The Last Almanac." The band's following stems from the current single, "Boston." Despite the band's growing popularity, its sad and solitary lyrics leave little room for the "hopeful" welcoming to which its Spanish band name alludes.

Now don't get me wrong, I'll be the first to say that I am a huge fan of "pretty" music, however truth be told even I am left feeling like Augustana didn't deliver on this one. If you are interested in Augustana's new album, the one place they might come through for you is in the car.

This album seems perfect for long drives if you think you would like a watered down version of REM. Overall I give the album a 6 out of 10 for the excellent structure of its songs and creativity (or at least its shot at creativity). Hopefully the band will be one of the rare ones that plays better live as the opening act for the Goo Goo Dolls this spring.

The Bucknellian
February 2, 2007
The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University
Volume 139, Number 2 | Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue | www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Dancing dexterity

DanceBrazil galvanized the Weis Center with its combination of modern and traditional dance last Friday.

See page A10

Creedence Clearwater Revisited

Courtesy of Eastern Illinois University

Creedence Clearwater Revisited will perform at Chrysalis on April 27 in the Gerhard Fieldhouse. The band consists of two original members from Creedence Clearwater Revival.

By Janna Shapiro
Arts & Entertainment Editor

This year, Creedence Clearwater Revisited, the reincarnation of the classic 1960s rock 'n' roll band, will headline Chrysalis, the spring ball scheduled for Friday, April 27 in the Gerhard Fieldhouse.

The event, boasting Kool and the Gang and the Beach Boys as its two previous performers, is geared towards bringing students, faculty, staff and alumni together on one evening.

"[The main objective] is to find a band that crosses across all ages," said Kari Conrad, associate dean of students

See CREEDENCE page A10

Another official gone

Dillard is 2nd administrator to step down this year

By Carly Whitehead
Writer

Mark Dillard, former director of strategy implementation, has left for Atlanta, Ga. after three years of working at the University.

This marks the second departure of a top administrator this semester. Gene Spencer '76, associate vice president for Information Services and Resources, officially departed from his post yesterday.

Dillard left his position in the OSI after just six months on the job.

The Office of Strategy Implementation (OSI) was created last May with "the responsibility of assisting the Bucknell community in developing tactical proposals that can fulfill the five strategies outlines in The Plan for Bucknell," according to a campus-wide email sent out by University President Mitchell last spring.

Dillard said he left the University for personal reasons and because he wanted to be closer to his family.

"Both my wife and I have family in and around the Atlanta area," he said.

In Atlanta, Dillard is working for a management consulting firm doing leadership development and strategic human resources work.

Dillard had been working with the University's Human Resources department as assistant director of learning and development before he was appointed director of strategy implementation at the inception of the office last May.

See MARK page A3

State bolsters minimum wage

Students are the only University employees affected

By Evan Unger
News Editor

The University is preparing for the Pennsylvania minimum wage increase, which will raise the current wage from $5.15 to $7.15 per hour by July.

According to David Surgala, vice president for finance and administration, the only workers the University employs earning minimum wage are students. All full-time employees earn more. Only 60 percent of the approximately 1,600 student workers will be affected.

The increase is incremental; initially, workers received a raise to $6.25. As of Jan. 1, 2007, the first change will cost the University approximately $20,000 in increased wages. The subsequent raise to $7.15 on July 1, 2007, will cost another $100,000.

This approximate figure of $120,000 is 0.06 percent of the University's $200 million budget. Compared to the rising prices of utilities, which will cost an additional $4 million next year, this figure is minimal.

Surgala is optimistic about the University's ability to cover these increased expenditures.

The minimum wage increase "is a non-event and [the University has to] follow the law. It has a minor impact on the budget and none on full-time employees," Surgala said.

Dennis Swank, associate vice president of finance, said the University contacted affected students through an e-mail about the changes. He also said the University has not received any complaints from current employees about wage compression.

Wage compression occurs when the lowest-paid workers of an organization receive a salary increase while workers at the higher end of the wage scale receive little or no increase in compensation. The University will not raise the wages of employees who earn more than $7.15 an hour.

"There has been no real feedback about possible compression issues," Swank said.

Parkhurst Dining Services is also prepared to make changes. According to John Cummins, general manager of Parkhurst Dining Services, the organization pays all its workers above minimum wage. Cummins said Parkhurst embraces the ideology of

See WAGE page A2

Nye draws a full house

By Rachel Freeman
Contributing Writer

Bill Nye Speech Points

-Aims for a 80 percent reduction of greenhouse gases by 2050

-Urged students to reduce energy consumption and to drive less

With a mixture of comedy and seriousness, Nye connected to the University community and discussed two aspects of science: Mars and its similarities with Earth, and global warming, a problem that many do not believe exists.

"We [humans] won the cosmic lottery," Bill Nye said to a packed Weis Center for the Performing Arts Tuesday night.

Nye spoke to the University community because he said that "college students are the future."

The goal of his speech was "to get people excited about the opportunities in the near future for changing the way we allocate our resources," Nye said.

Mars was the foeus of the first 30 minutes of Nye's lecture. He discussed the many things people can learn about Earth through the study of Mars.

This discussion of Mars is so recent, Nye said, that just three weeks ago a gully of water formed on Mars.

Nye segued from Mars to his main message about global warming and climate change. The Earth, Nye said, is warming naturally, but humans have affected the rate at which this happens.

Throughout his speech, Nye talked about various ways to reduce greenhouse emissions. He hopes that by the year 2050 greenhouse emissions will be reduced by 80 percent. In order to do that, Nye said that reducing the use of cars, changing light bulbs to LED light bulbs and creating homes with solar panels are the first steps.

Jokingly, Nye said, "I bet

See NYE page A2

Bucknell Hello

Bring Back the Tradition.

A tradition of courtesy returns

Campus community encouraged to embrace Bucknell 'Hello' custom

By Kevin Petersen
Contributing Writer

The Traditions Committee, a division of Activities and Campus Events (ACE), is asking all students, faculty and staff to wear a Bucknell "Hello" sticker on Feb. 7. The committee is encouraging Bucknellians to say "hello" when they see each other around campus to revitalize an old, cherished University tradition and contribute to a greater sense of community on campus.

"Bucknell 'Hello' was a popular tradition on campus. It used to be a given fact that you would say 'hi' or 'hello' to everyone that you walked past on the streets and pathways," Cara Jellison '08 said.

Prior to World War II, first-year students at the University were expected to know the alma mater, wear orange-and-blue caps and say "hello" to everyone they saw. The Traditions Committee has now brought the Bucknell "Hello" back as part of a campaign to strengthen the University's traditions and to encourage a friendlier campus-wide atmosphere.

"With a simple 'hello,' our campus community can become a more spirited and upbeat place for people to walk around," Adam Weinberg '07 said.

Reestablishing the Bucknell "Hello" can "help our campus community become more unified and promote a place that is accepting to all who come," Weinberg said.

Advocates of the Bucknell "Hello" have characterized the event as a special opportunity for students to show their school pride. The Traditions Committee reminds faculty and students, "This is your community. Say 'hello.'"

By participating, students can demonstrate University pride by taking part in a tradition that reinforces the campus's friendly and unique character.

As Weinberg reminded his fellow students, Bucknell "Hellos" make "our campus stand out amongst our peers."

They encourage the kind of inviting atmosphere that has earned the University its outstanding reputation.

Jenna Camann '07, a member of the Traditions Committee, hopes the program will carry on the customs of the University.

"During orientation we create programs that will instill a sense of what it means to be a Bucknellian within the first-year class," Camann '07 said.

Without consistent traditions to reinforce what is learned during orientation, this meaning sometimes becomes lost.

"My goal is for this meaning not to end after orientation. We can do this by recreating traditions as well as using our initiative to create new

See HELLO page A3

INSIDE THIS ISSUE

OPINIONS
Same work, higher pay: How much will raising the minimum wage help the people who need it most?
A6

SPORTS
The women's basketball team takes first place in the Partiot League with a win over Army.
B1

NEWS
RHA starts the new semester with a doubling of funds and a new executive board.
A4

A&E
Sci-Fi thriller 'Children of Men' takes a philosophical look at the fall of humanity.
A9

Public Safety Log

Thursday, January 25

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Hunt Hall: Student cited for underage consumption.

ALARM-INTRUSION—West Fields Concessions Building: Contractor activated.

ALARM-FIRE—Bucknell West: Caused by cooking.

ALARM-FIRE— Harris Hall: Caused by a hair dryer.

ALARM-FIRE—Demosthenean Hall: Caused by burnt popcorn.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Harris Hall: Ill student transported by ambulance to Evangelical Emergency Room for treatment.

Friday, January 26

SUSPICIOUS PERSON—Vedder Hall: Gone on arrival.

INFORMATION RECEIVED—Elaine Langone Center: Misuse of dining services charge.

Saturday, January 27

SUSPICIOUS PERSON—Smith Hall: Gone on arrival.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Phi Psi: Student transported to Evangelical Emergency Room for alcohol overdose.

VANDALISM—Sojka Pavilion: Vandalism to a suite.

PROPERTY/LOST—Sojka Pavilion: Owner found her wallet.

ASSAULT—Gateway Roser: Male student injured in assault. Refused medical treatment.

ALCOHOL-VIOLATION—Smith Hall: Student cited for underage consumption.

Sunday, January 28

ALCOHOL-VIOLATION—Smith Hall: Student cited for underage consumption.

ALCOHOL-VIOLATION—Larison Hall: Student transported to Evangelical Emergency Room for alcohol overdose.

ALCOHOL-VIOLATION—Carey House: Student transported to Evangelical Emergency Room for alcohol overdose.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Health Center: Student transported to Evangelical Emergency Room for a medical condition.

ALARM-FIRE—Bucknell West: Cause was cooking of the left side of the Mod.

BURGLARY—Swartz Hall: Unknown person(s) removed money from room.

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—Swartz Hall: Unknown person(s) discharged a fire extinguisher in the third floor hallway.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Smith Hall: Student transported to Evangelical Emergency Room for a medical condition.

Monday, January 29

THEFT—Roberts Hall: Small Savoy table taken from Roberts Hall Lobby.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Recreational Center: Soap removed from dispenser's in the men's bathroom.

THEFT—Sojka Pavilion: Unlocked Bicycle taken from the bike rack.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Smith Hall: Student transported to Evangelical Emergency Room by Student Health Services.

Tuesday, January 30

ALARM-FIRE—Computer Storage: Caused by employee entering through the wrong door.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Elaine Langone Center: Student transported to Evangelical Emergency Room for treatment.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Gerhard Fieldhouse: Three students had thrown water in the men's locker room.

'Science Guy' addresses global warming

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Bill Nye answers questions from the press before his speech in front of a packed audience at the Weis Center Tuesday night. Nye, famed for his children's television show, addressed global warming issues and offered possible solutions.

NYE From page A1

there are a lot of students at Bucknell who have cars. When you are at Bucknell, where are you going with a car?"

Though Nye was being humorous, he had a deeper message.

Driving, Nye said, is currently very inefficient and in order to reduce the amount of carbon monoxide emissions, people need to drive less.

Lauren Perez '09 said she "really enjoyed that he gave [these issues] a greater cause and made global warming into a universal issue rather than a liberal versus conservative issue."

The main message that Nye conveyed to the audience was that together we can "change the world." Nye said that changing the way humans use resources is not going to be a breakthrough, but it will be a slow process over many years. Also, by reaching out and speaking to college students, Nye is able to address the issue of voting and how important it is to changing the world.

"The absolute number one thing [students can do to help] is to vote," Nye said.

Ultimately, Nye addressed the issues facing society in a way that young adults can relate to.

"[The speech] was funny and entertaining," Devin Weaver '10 said.

"It wasn't long and boring and had a good message," Cynthia Reza '10 said. "[He] brought up very good points that I could understand."

Josh Douin '10 had one thing to say about Bill Nye: "He should run for president."

Wage increase benefits student workers attempting to provide a "living wage" for its employees. While not all Parkhurst employees earn a "living wage," Cummins said the organization has a pay scale that works towards such a goal.

WAGE From page A1

According to the Living Wage Calculator from Penn State University's "Poverty in America" Web site, a living wage can be defined as "the hourly rate that an individual must earn to support their family, if they are the sole provider and are working full-time (2080 hours per year)."

According to the calculator, the living wage for an adult supporting one child in Lewisburg is $13.27 per hour.

Cummins believes the wage change is excellent.

"The American worker needs these increases. We want all of our associates to be equitably compensated," Cummins said.

Many student workers were thrilled with the change.

"I got a raise. I feel great," library employee Vincenzia Sopko '10 said. "I was making more than minimum wage [before]. It sounds like a drop, but it is not."

> "There is little evidence that the unemployment rate will increase."
>
> Amy Wolaver, associate professor of economics*

Other employees were unaffected by the wage increase.

Danny Mun '08, a Seventh Street Café employee, said the change will be positive for other students on campus. Seventh Street Café workers are employed by Parkhurst and make at least $7 per hour.

"It doesn't really affect the Seventh Street workers but it will be fairer to the other students," Mun said.

Many critics believe a raise in the minimum wage may increase unemployment. Classic economic theory typically agrees with this belief, but Amy Wolaver, associate professor of economics, offers a different opinion.

"There is little evidence that the unemployment rate will increase," Wolaver said. "Most economists believe that [a wage increase] will not have a negative effect on unemployment. This has not happened in our experience."

Meanwhile, the proposed federal minimum wage, which would ultimately raise wages to $7.25, is experiencing delays. The U.S. House of Representatives passed the bill earlier in January, but on Jan. 24 the U.S. Senate rejected the proposal because it lacks tax breaks for small businesses.

There has been no change in the federal minimum wage in almost 10 years.

SPRING 2007 – FIRST WEDNESDAY SERIES

Phil Haynes & No Fast Food

PHIL HAYNES, drums
DREW GRESS, bass
TIM WARFIELD, tenor & soprano saxophones

8:30 p.m., Wednesday
February 7, 2007
Bucknell Hall
Free Admission

Bucknell Hall is located on Loomis Street between the President's House and Hunt Hall

Bucknell

BSG Class of 2008 interim election results

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

BSG Class of 2008 interim elections were held Wednesday to fill vacancies left by officials who were either promoted or are studying abroad. The winners are (from left) Vice President Connie Low, President Andrew King and congress members Sarah Simmons and Emily Chiodo. Not pictured is congress member Katie Metzler.

President: Andrew King
Vice President: Connie Low
Congress Members: Sarah Simmons, Emily Chiodo, Katie Metzler

Students raise Darfur awareness

By Emilie Linsenmeyer
Writer

An emerging student group on campus, voiceDarfur, hosted an awareness event on Jan. 23 to educate students and the surrounding community about the conflict raging in Sudan.

The group was very pleased with the turnout of over 150 people including students, faculty and members of the community who congregated in the Rooke Chemistry Building.

Ahmed Kodouda '10 spoke about the conflict and showed a PowerPoint presentation to explain the complexity of the problem. The group then showed the documentary "Darfur Diaries" in order to show the refugee side of the conflict.

"We want to be the voice of every man, woman and child in Darfur who has had their innocent way of life violently snatched from them," organizer Amy Bruno '09 said.

The overall purpose of the first of multiple awareness activities this year is to help more students understand the roots of the Darfur situation, including the involvement of the Sudanese government and the cost of human life.

Students found the event informational.

"I appreciated how it presented the information in a straightforward manner; Ahmed really knew what he was talking about," Pamela Cohen '10 said.

The Sudanese government is currently arming the nomadic Arabized tribes so that they can fight the rebelling non-Arabized tribes. The government has a vested interest in winning to protect resources such as arable land, water and, most importantly, oil. The conflict has displaced approximately 1.8 million people and killed 400,000 more, according to savedafur.org.

Other organizations are hoping to aid the Sudan. Currently, Students for Fair Trade is working on a divestment campaign, calling for the removal of the University's investment in specific mutual funds.

According to Bruno, a member of Students for Fair trade, certain companies that conduct business in oil-rich Sudan have invested capital in these funds. States such as Connecticut and New Jersey have completely removed their money from mutual funds that contain companies involved in the region because many of these companies provide the Sudanese government with funding, indirectly condoning the conflict.

An investigation is underway to discover if any of the University's money has been invested in any such company through mutual funds. The investigation process is difficult because of the diverse investments of University funds. In order to accomplish this goal, students met with David Surgala, vice president of finance and administration, and the board of trustees to discuss the placement of the University's endowment and mutual funds. Ultimately, the group hopes for a socially conscious clause to be added to the University's investment choices.

> "We want to be the voice of every man, woman and child in Darfur who has had their innocent way of life violently snatched from them."
>
> —Amy Bruno '09

VoiceDarfur will host a display in the Ellen Clarke Bertrand Library of the work of photo journalist Ryan Spencer Reed, whose work depicts the humanitarian conflict.

The group is also working to raise awareness by speaking to local churches and schools.

Recruits in fatal car accident

Mothers of two football recruits killed on I-81 after visiting campus

By Michelle Laxer
News Editor

Treacherous road conditions on Jan. 21 were blamed for the fatal car accident that took the lives of two mothers, returning home from Lewisburg with their sons who were considering playing football for the University.

Snow, sleet and freezing rain on Interstate 81 near Winchester, Va. caused Odessa Smith, 47, of Barboursville, Va. to lose control of her Toyota SUV and cross the median into oncoming traffic. She collided with a northbound Buick SUV. She was pronounced dead on the scene.

The three other passengers traveling with her were transported to Winchester Medical Center. Thomasina Bryant, 36, of Charlottesville, Va. died in the hospital at 9 a.m. on Jan. 22. Their 17-year-old sons, Rod Jackson and Jerrod Smith, received only minor injuries. The couple in the Buick was also hospitalized.

Jackson and Smith went on a trip to explore football recruitment options and were considering playing for the University. Jackson is a star athlete in both basketball and football at Monticello High School. Smith is a star football player at Albemarle High School.

"Jackson is a standout defensive back and shooting guard at MHS, while Smith earned second-team All-Central Virginia and first-team All-Commonwealth District recognition as a running back," reported The Daily Progress.

According to The Daily Progress (Charlottesville, Va.), members of both communities praised Bryant and Smith as devoted and loving mothers who put their sons before anything else.

"[Bryant] was Rod Jackson's No. 1 fan," said Fitzgerald Barnes, athletic director at Monticello High School.

Friends of Bryant and Smith mentioned the excitement the mothers felt for their sons and the opportunities the University was offering them. One of Bryant's co-workers told The Daily Progress that Bryant did not have the chance to attend college and wanted her son to have that opportunity.

Both Jackson and Smith received "academic grants that would cover all tuition costs," said Brud Bicknell, head football coach at Monticello.

> ...Members of both communities praised Bryant and Smith as devoted and loving mothers who put their sons before anything else.

Students offered prayers for the players and their families at the University's Protestant church service on Sunday.

University administrators did not have the liberty to comment due to NCAA regulations on the recruitment of prospective student athletes.

Director of OSI position vacant

MARK From page A1

Before his work at the University, Dillard was an organization effectiveness manager at the Atlanta-based Coca-Cola Co. and has experience in organizational development and strategic planning.

In a campus-wide e-mail sent out on Dec. 5, 2006, Mitchell wrote, "Mark has been with Bucknell for over three years, the last six months in his vital role leading the OSI. We will miss him, and are grateful to him for the valuable service he has rendered to Bucknell to initiate implementation of The Plan."

The Plan for Bucknell has five strategies: strengthen the academic core, deepen the residential learning experience, enhance diversity, build bridges and secure the University's financial strength. These strategies are designed to achieve the vision for the University: "to provide students with the premier undergraduate experience in American higher education."

Despite the departure of Dillard, The Plan is not losing momentum, officials said.

"Thanks in no small part to Mark's leadership of the OSI, and thanks to the work of the variety of campus committees dedicated to implementing the Plan, there is tremendous momentum driving Plan implementation forward. This momentum includes the more than 150 tactics submitted by the inaugural deadline for tactics in December 2006," said Pete Mackey, chief communications officer.

As the University determines the best way to manage the OSI, Dennis Swank, associate vice president of finance, "will assume the oversight responsibility for the continued management of Plan implementation," Mackey said.

> "I feel privileged to have worked with such committed, passionate people within the Bucknell community."
>
> Mark Dillard, former director of strategy implementation*

Dillard had a few parting words for the University.

"I feel privileged to have worked with such committed, passionate people within the Bucknell community," he said. "Bucknell is one of the premier liberal arts institutions in the world. With The Plan for Bucknell, I fully expect that standing to be consistently met and exceeded over the next years."

Dillard will be greatly missed in the University community.

"In his four years with Bucknell, working in human resources and then as leader of the OSI, Mark earned the respect and appreciation of the many people across this University with whom he worked," said Dave Surgala, vice president for finance and administration said. "We are grateful for his service and for his leadership establishing the implementation of The Plan for Bucknell and wish him and his family great happiness and success as they return to Atlanta."

Tradition restored

HELLO From page A1

ones," Camann said.

The Traditions Committee is composed of students involved in a variety of organizations and activities on campus and various school administrators. Students on the committee are also members of Bucknell Student Government, Greek life, athletic teams and other organizations on campus.

Participating administrators include Amy Badal, assistant dean of students; Angela Estes, assistant director of alumni relations; Matt Gorney '06, annual fund manager for special initiatives and Josh Grill, associate director of the annual fund. Chief Communications Officer Pete Mackey and Web editor Sam Alcorn have also helped provide considerable support for Bucknell "Hello."

In addition to bringing Bucknell "Hello" back to campus, the Traditions Committee would also like to see all University students learn the alma mater and develop a greater understanding and appreciation for the University's customs and history.

Recycle this newspaper!

News Briefs

Alumna to manage military trials

Susan Crawford '69, Chair of the Board of Trustees, was chosen by the U.S. Defense Department to oversee military trials of terrorism suspects in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba. According to Pentagon officials, "Crawford will have the authority to select judges for the commissions, send charges to trial and act on commission findings or verdicts," The Washington Post reported. Currently, Crawford is a senior judge of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces. She has spent 15 years on the court, five of which she served as chief judge.

During the Reagan administration, she served as the general counsel for the Department of the Army. Crawford was also inspector general for the Department of Defense for President George H. W. Bush. She graduated from the University with a Bachelor of Arts degree.

Sojka to oversee state's casino industry

Gary Sojka, former University president and biology professor, was appointed to a seat on the Pennsylvania Gaming Control Board on Monday. The state board, consisting of seven members, is in charge of overseeing the state's growing casino industry. He was appointed by House Minority Leader Sam Smith, R- Punxsutawney. Sojka will be replacing Joseph W. "Chip" Marshall III.

Marshall's term ended Dec. 27, 2006. "With his teaching and administrative background, I feel Gary will bring a fresh perspective to the Gaming Control Board," Smith said in a statement. He also said by appointing Sojka, he stepped "outside the political box." The Daily Item reported. He will earn $145,000 a year as a board member. Sojka was University president from 1984 to 1995 and retired in 2006.

BSG to host tactical workshops

On Saturday, Feb. 3, Bucknell Student Government (BSG) will host its second round of workshops for members of student organizations to discuss the tactical phase of the Plan for Bucknell. The tactical phase asks students to submit suggestions to help the University achieve the goals outlined in the plan.

During the first workshop on Jan. 17, BSG distributed information about writing suggestions. Attendees included members of the Inter-Fraternity Council, the Panhellenic Council, the Residence Hall Association and the Residential Colleges.

During Saturday's workshop, the organizations will return with first drafts of their suggestions. The organizations will have the opportunity to "share [their ideas] to hopefully gain feedback and endorsement from others," BSG President Sarah Cummings said in a prepared statement. Students are encouraged to submit their own suggestions to Lindsey Pierce, BSG vice president of administration, at lpierce@bucknell.edu. Suggestions must be received by Feb. 15.

World's oldest person dies at 114

Emma Faust Tillman died Sunday, just four days after being named the world's oldest-known living person at age 114. She lived independently until she turned 110, then moved into the Riverside Health and Rehabilitation Center in East Hartford, Conn. where she died in the company of family members. She received the title of world's oldest person after Emiliano Mercado del Toro of Puerto Rico died at 115 last Wednesday. With Tillman's death, the oldest-known living person is believed to be 114-year-old Yone Minagawa of Fukuoka, Japan.

"She never smoked, never drank, did not need glasses and only reluctantly agreed to wear a hearing aid," said John B. Stewart Jr., Tillman's great-nephew and former Hartford fire chief, according to CNN.com. Tillman attributed her long life to her strong faith in God. She was born in Nov. 1892, during the administration of President Benjamin Harrison and lived through the next 20 presidential administrations.

Gun fired at Bloomsburg University

At least one gunshot was fired early Sunday morning during a fight that broke out at Bloomsburg University. Officials did not determine if the shot was fired by a student. Three hundred students had gathered outside the Kehr Student Union when a campus event ended and numerous fights broke out.

"One student was arrested for allegedly assaulting a police officer," reported The Times Leader (Wilkes-Barre, Pa.). Officers used pepper spray to subdue the assailant and he was charged for disorderly conduct, assaulting a police officer and resisting arrest. There were no injuries reported in the brawl. University police are being assisted by state and local police in the ongoing investigation.

"Turn your Power ON and Add LIFE to your Years!"

Michael D. Morrison D.C.
1205 W Market Street
Lewisburg, PA 17837
Office: 570-523-1221

MORRISON'S ADVANCED CHIROPRACTIC CARE

A Healthy Spine Equals a Healthy YOU!

Bucknell Students may receive a free exam and x-rays (if needed) with mention of this advertisement.

RHA finds new funds, new face

With an increase in funds, RHA explores options for improving residential life

Introducing the new executive board

The University's Residence Hall Association (RHA) recently appointed a new executive board.

As the elected members adjust to their new positions and start planning what they want to accomplish, here is a brief introduction to the new leaders of RHA.

Amanda Allen '08
President

"Through my time in the [RHA] Senate, I gained an appreciation for the changes and contributions RHA was making on campus. I wanted to do as much as I could to help keep RHA has successful as it has been," Allen said.

Allen's favorite aspect of RHA is its independence and thus its complete control over the budget and decision-making. This control allows for numerous changes or contributions to be made to campus to enable RHA to improve the residential life experience for students, which, according to Allen, is hers and RHA's primary goal.

Melissa Duffy '09
Vice President

"I love being a student here and was seeking for a vehicle to help shape the new face of Bucknell into one that future students will love just as much; I strongly feel that RHA is a fantastic opportunity to do just that," Duffy said.

Wittney Ferguson '10
Treasurer/Secretary

"I enjoyed my position [as treasurer and secretary for Larison/Harris] ... and I felt I was ready to take on a more challenging role in the senate," Ferguson said, explaining her decision to run for Treasurer and Secretary of RHA.

As part of her goals while being on RHA, she hopes to set a strong ground for future treasurers and she has been busy working with the recently increased funds RHA has received.

Robert Hallinan '09
Director of Communications

"I ran because I felt like I could do a really great job with the position and I am really excited for the potential that the organization has to get really involved on campus," Hallinan said.

Hallinan's favorite aspect of RHA is that RHA is very involved with its constituents, allowing them to hear the voice of the residents on campus and act on what they want to see.

"We are excited about the increase and what this will mean for furthering RHA's goals to improve RHA's capacity to meet the needs of the residential halls."
Robert Hallinan '09

By Julia Fuchs
News Editor

For the University's Residence Hall Association (RHA), the new year has brought about not only a new executive board, but also a near doubling of funds to bring the current semester's allotted budget to just under $30,000, according to the RHA Web site.

This sudden increase in funds stems from an increase in the student activities fee two years ago and will be used primarily to increase local delegation budgets and allow RAs to have more resources for planning programs to build community in their halls.

"I believe that [the funds] will be very prosperous for RHA and that we [the RHA Student Senate] will be able to claim the recognition that this organization deserves," said Wittney Ferguson '10, treasurer of the RHA Student Senate.

Former President Jamie Giannone '07 applied for the money from the Committee of Complimentary Activities (CCA) during the 2004-2005 academic year. According to the CCA meeting minutes, approval occurred in November 2005 and has been in effect since the beginning of this academic year. Five dollars from each student's student activities fee per semester now goes to RHA, up from $3 in previous years, according to Sarah Cummings '08, president of BSG.

"RHA has had a large influx of money for this semester, making our budget one of the largest student-controlled budgets on campus," Ferguson said.

RHA is an independent organization, meaning it does not have to go before the Bucknell Student Government (BSG) Appropriations for funding and thus no funds are received from BSG. Instead, funds come directly from the student activities fund. All money made by the organization stays within the organization and carries over each semester, unlike most other organizations and clubs on campus, which have to return any unused funds back to BSG at the end of the semester.

While officially independent, RHA maintains a working relationship with BSG for communication purposes and to represent the senate's (and through them, the residents') opinions.

"Currently, we have a sort of partnership with BSG," President of RHA Amanda Allen '08 said. "We are independent in the sense that most, if not all, student organizations get their funding through BSG. RHA, however, is independently funded through the University."

With the title of independent organization comes a set of privileges most other clubs do not enjoy, such as approving their own budgets and spending funds as the organization itself sees appropriate.

Nate Sorber, the advisor to RHA, explained the organization's situation.

"Independent means ... you are not beholden to any other organization or department. Senators can speak their mind about University policy or even disagree with BSG positions and not fear any loss in resources or funding ... RHA is not afraid to act independently of BSG, while at the same time finding ways for positive partnership with BSG on tactics for the Plan for Bucknell," Sorber said.

To the members of the RHA Student Senate, made up of an executive board and nine delegations of residents and resident assistants, the increased funds seem sudden. According to the CCA, the increase in funds was actually implemented in the fall of this academic year, unbeknownst to the senate members.

courtesy of www.orgs.bucknell.edu

RESIDENCE HALL ASSOCIATION
STUDENT SENATE

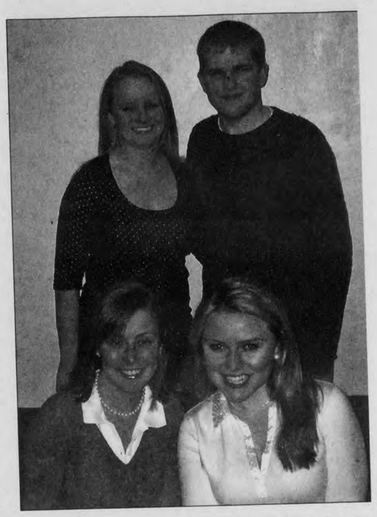
"We are excited about the increase and what this will mean for furthering RHA's goals to improve RHA's capacity to meet the needs of the residential halls," said Robert Hallinan '09, director of communications for RHA.

"It was definitely a pleasant surprise for the entire senate," Sorber said.

Now that the increase has been recognized, the senate is looking forward to finding appropriate uses for this money. To help regulate the money, it has been split into several categories and capped.

According to Ferguson, RHA can spend $10,000 (37 percent of the total budget). The cap allows for more money to be spent overall, as last year's entire budget was $10,000. BisonCorp, the community service division of RHA, is allotted $3,500 (12.5 percent). The executive budget is about $1,500 (5.5 percent). Around $6,500 (23 percent) is the cap for the RA programming fund, while the remaining 22 percent will be divided so that the seven percent will be left to carry over to the next semester, leaving 15 percent for extra expenses.

"I am hoping that this extra money will be able to be used to help with community building activities and events," Ferguson said. "We have already funded two Super Bowl parties for this semester, and we will have a stand at BU After Dark tomorrow."



Julia Fuchs—The Bucknellian

The University's Residence Hall Association recently elected a new executive board. Clockwise, from top left: Wittney Ferguson '10, secretary/treasurer; Robert Hallinan '09, director of communications; Melissa Duffy '09, vice president; and Amanda Allen '08, president.

While this increase will enable a wider variety of programs and purchases to be attained now, there is also a downfall.

"A lot of people will be coming to us asking for money, and though we would love to, we cannot accommodate every wish," Hallinan said.

The senate hopes to increase its role and appearance on campus and to reestablish RHA's role as a student government organization on campus.

"It is [the members of RHA's] job, as elected representatives, to voice the students' opinions and [they] will continue to do so," Allen said.

RHA has taken students' opinions seriously and has done much to enhance the residential aspect of campus life.

"In the past, [RHA has] provided an exchange for quarters so residents may do their laundry without hiking out of their buildings; purchased capital items such as ping pong, foosball and pool tables for residence halls; provided reading day breakfasts, end of semester picnics, Super Bowl parties, etc. for residence halls; [has] held booths for the Lewisburg Freeze and [has] helped to fund programs of other organizations, among other things," said Melissa Duffy '09, RHA vice president of student life.

In moving forward, RHA has come up with specific ideas on how to improve campus residential life.

"We are going to identify key areas for RHA to capitalize on, such as ... [localized] dining options, computer labs in residence halls, RA compensation ... and the future of downtown living," Duffy said.

To do this, RHA plans to present these tactics to the Strategic Plan for Bucknell. According to Duffy, becoming involved with the Strategic Plan is RHA's responsibility as the student representation for the University's living community to help shape the future living situation of the campus.

Allen said by joining with the Strategic Plan RHA will be able to take a more global approach to improve the residential life experience.

RHA is also providing easier access to money for RAs to satisfy programming needs in the residential halls, according to Hallinan. Where BSG represents the students by class year and the Interfraternity and Panhellenic Councils by Greek affiliation, RHA allows for closer communication with the campus by representing students by residence hall, according to Sorber. By making it easier to satisfy programming needs in residence halls, RHA hopes to enhance the residential experience.

"Our foremost concern has been and will always be the safety and comfort of Bucknell's students," Duffy said. "However, in the past two years we have seen a large growth in students desiring representation in RHA ... Based on this growth, it is clear that students are actively searching for avenues to enrich their living experience here at Bucknell, and we plan to provide them with the vehicle to do so."

"It is important for RHA to apply our name to the Bucknell community in a positive way," Ferguson said.

Allen agrees.

"RHA is looking forward to taking on an active role in providing an excellent residential community experience," Allen said.

Armed with an increase in funds and many new ideas, RHA is charging head-first into the new semester.

"As an organization, we aim to strengthen the identity of RHA as a premiere, independent and, most importantly, student-empowered campus force," Duffy said.

For more information, check out:

www.orgs.bucknell.edu/rha

"More than print and ink, a newspaper is a collection of fierce individualists who somehow manage to perform the astounding daily miracle of merging their own personalities under the discipline of the deadline and retain the flavor of their own minds in print."
-Arthur Ochs Sulzberger

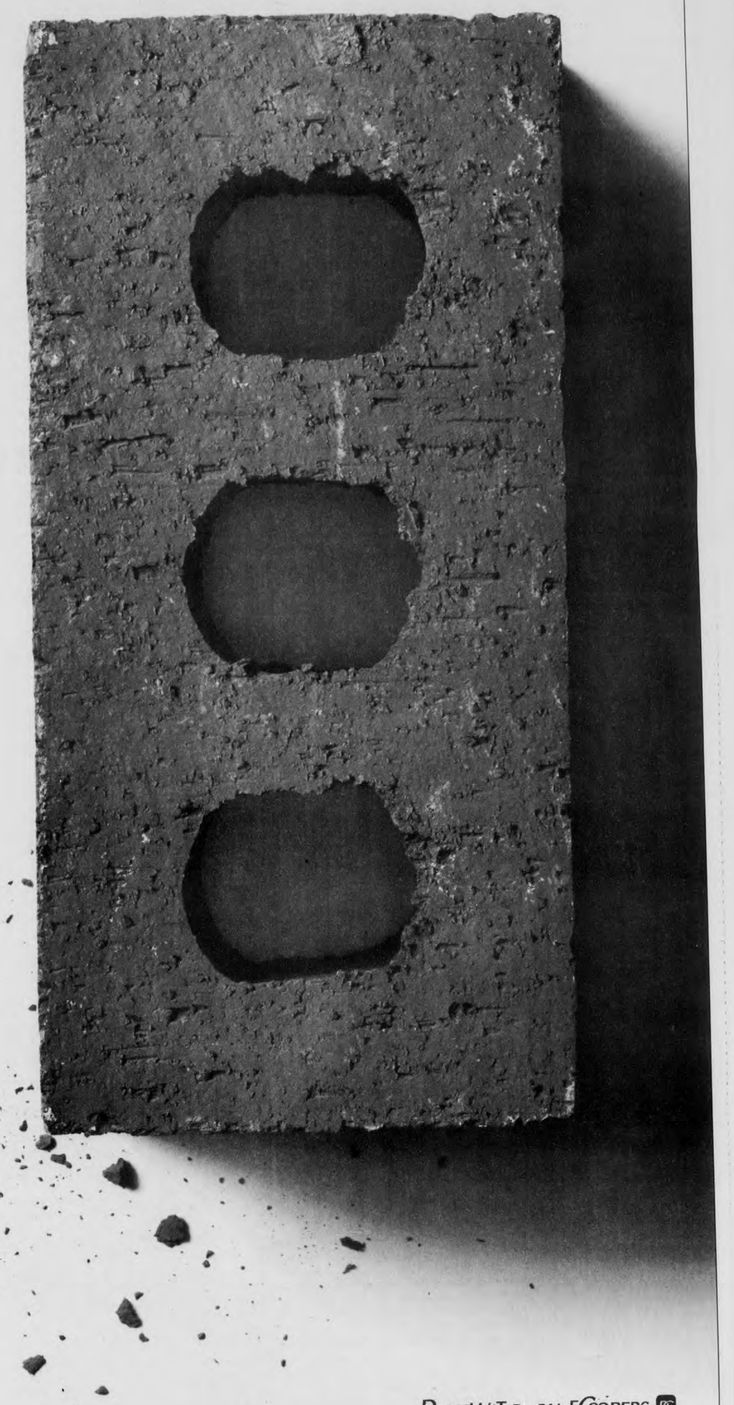
Write for News
etu001@

Leader
Bricklayer
Human being*

We believe community service is a part of our job description. Last June, we asked our US staff of 29,000 to take a day away from work and help their neighbors. We called it 29k/30.

Learn more about this project and others.

Visit pwc.com/community



*connectedthinking

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

© 2007 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (a Delaware limited liability partnership) or, as the context requires, the PricewaterhouseCoopers global network or other member firms of the network, each of which is a separate and independent legal entity. *connectedthinking is a trademark of PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (US). We are proud to be an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer.

The Bucknellian
Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue

Volume 139, Number 2
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu
http://www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Editor-in-Chief
Andrew Larson '08

Associate Editor of Content
Matt Saylor '08

Associate Editor of Layout
Lily Beauvilliers '09

Business Manager
Jared Napolitano '08

Senior Editor
Catie Heverling '07

News Editors
Evan Unger '09
Julia Fuchs '09
Michelle Laxer '09

Opinions Editors
Michael Dippery '08
Hallie Stebbins '08

Sports Editors
Barbara Perlman '09
Brian Mulligan '08
Shannon Pitsch '09

Features Editors
Nilanjana Saha '09
Brianna DelValle '10

Arts & Entertainment Editors
Janna Shapiro '08
Genna Jerrard '10

Photography Editors
Ryan Winn '08
Ellyn Ercolano '09

Advertising Managers
Meredith Reighard '07
Katie Casteel '08

Office Manager
Kate Wood '07

Circulation Manager
Adam Kahler '07

Cartoonist
Juliana Su '09

Adviser
James F. Lee

Op-Ed Policy

The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editor-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 600 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

Publishing Information

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

Subscription Information

Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Bucknell University, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print office.

Advertising Policy

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577-1085. Copyright © 2007 The Bucknellian

The Bucknellian
EDITORIAL

Minimum wage hike has minimal benefit

If you've been flipping burgers at a fast-food restaurant for more than a month, congratulations on your $1.10 raise. And if you can stand the tedious work for another five months, you'll get another 90 cents.

The increases are part of a new Pennsylvania law that raises the state's minimum wage from the federally mandated level of $5.15 to $7.15. As of Jan. 1, the minimum wage became $6.25; it becomes $7.15 on July 1. The wage surge reflects a 40 percent increase in a six-month period. Most workers would be content with a 4 percent raise over a year.

Supporters of the measure argue that the increase is long overdue and is a necessary step towards lifting the working poor out of poverty. But minimum wage increases don't help people teetering on the edge of poverty.

Of all minimum wage earners, more than half are under 25 and more than a quarter are between 16 and 19. Most of the working poor earn more than the minimum wage, and most of the 0.6 percent of America's workers earning minimum wage are not poor.

The University, for example, says it doesn't pay a single full-time employee minimum wage. The only on-campus beneficiaries of the legislation are students, who can cash in their extra $20 a week on a case of imported beer.

The University doesn't sound too distraught about financing the wage hike, since it will only cost about $120,000 of its $200 million budget.

But for small businesses without that revenue cushion, the minimum wage increase is more damaging.

The Bucknellian doesn't usually report on itself, but the minimum wage increase perhaps affects the student newspaper more than anyone else on campus. The Bucknellian, which is self-funded, pays certain student employees minimum wage (with the exception of copy editors, the entire editorial department is unpaid). Our income certainly isn't increasing in proportion to minimum wage. Where does money for extra personnel costs come from?

Do we raise subscriptions rates? Do we raise advertising rates? Or do we just deplete our savings? In this case, The Bucknellian is forgoing replacement of its aging fleet of computers to contend with the minimum wage increase.

Other small businesses strapped for money are forced to lay off employees. It's high school economics: a price floor creates a surplus of demand for minimum wage jobs and a shortage in their supply. Therefore, increasing the minimum wage actually makes jobs harder to find.

The U.S. Senate is currently considering a federal minimum wage bill that would increase the rate to $7.25 nationally and would include a provision for tax breaks to small businesses.

As Congress debates how to mitigate the consequences of its proposed legislation, it's easy to lose sight of the central question: Will anyone actually benefit from it?

Wii a smashing good time for college students

Nintendo scores big with new video game console

By Scott Gosnell
Contributing Writer

A.D. 455: the Vandals sack Rome; western civilization hangs in the balance. 1066: the Anglo-Saxons conquer England; the playing field for the modern era is set. 1991: the Berlin Wall falls; communism collapses. From time to time there are generations that bear witness to momentous events in the course of human civilization, catching a tangible glimpse of history in the making.

Today, providence has brought us to such a juncture.

2006: the Nintendo Wii is released; living rooms across the world will never be the same.

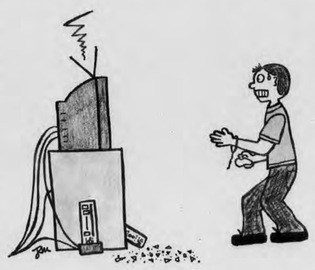
For those of you that have either had your head in a hole or enjoy a fulfilling social life, you may be unacquainted with one of the latest bits of interactive technology to come from the Land of the Rising Sun. Allow me the pleasure of introducing you to the Wii (pronounced "wee"), Nintendo's newest video game console that hit store shelves back in November.

So how does the Wii fare? Pretty well. It was released a day before the Playstation 3 and, according to CNN, Nintendo's unit outsold Sony's console at a two-to-one ratio within the first two weeks of being on the shelf, and the trend has largely continued to date. While the Wii does not boast the same graphical capabilities of the PS3, at $250 it is significantly cheaper than Sony's $600 machine.

However, the main selling point is its revolutionary control scheme, which relies heavily on motion detection. Put simply, the Wii can detect the movements of the controllers, even relatively finite ones.

Play a tennis game, and you'll be swinging the controller like a tennis racket, baseball games require you to square off with the screen just like you would in a batting cage and racing games require you to turn your control sideways and treat it as a steering wheel. Of course, the motion sensing feature is not confined to sports games—other genres feature similarly intuitive control schemes. The result is a delightfully immersive gameplay experience.

In reality, the control scheme of these games is such that simple but metered flicks of the wrists are usually all it takes to communicate the intended action. That being said, experience has shown that you will soon find yourself diving across the room for drop shots and launching Hail Marys from behind your coffee table, all in pursuit of digital glory—effectively turning your living room into a cardiovascular playground.



This, perhaps not surprisingly, has lead to a variety of injuries to both life and limb. It seems that Nintendo may have at least partially anticipated this, as the remotes were packaged with safety leashes that slip around the player's wrist. The idea was that, in the event that a player lost his grip on the controller, the leash would prevent the remote from becoming an impromptu ballistic missile.

Unfortunately, the leash failed in several cases, sending remotes on all sorts of trajectories into (and often through) TVs, windows, walls and many things in between. In other instances, user error was to blame, with gamers inadvertently colliding with objects, people, pets, etc. resulting in black eyes and a few trips to the emergency room.

Nintendo responded to the faulty leashes by sending consumers reinforced models, effectively solving the problem. As for user-inflicted damage, we might have to leave that one up to natural selection.

But looking past the shattered glass and bloodshed, the Nintendo Wii really is a remarkable device. It marks a new dawn in the saga of video gaming, effectively upping the ante for consoles to come. Perhaps the Wii's greatest achievement is the way it appeals to people of all ages. After Christmas dinner, I sat down with my family and booted up the Wii.

There, before my eyes, generations were transcended as we all enjoyed a game of digital bowling. In a weird, faintly Orwellian way, we were brought a little closer together as we sat gawking at the screen, all equally impressed at how far technology has come, all wistfully anticipating where it may lead us.

Silver screen remembers 9/11

'United 93' is a must-see film

By Christy Totten
Staff Writer

Ever since watching the film "United 93" a few days ago, I have not been able to stop thinking about it. The film is a tribute to the passengers aboard Flight 93, the United Airlines plane hijacked on Sept. 11, which was heroically brought down by the passengers who overtook the hijackers.

It is believed that the plane was headed towards the White House. By forcing the hijackers to crash in a field in Pennsylvania, the passengers saved many innocent and important lives that could have been taken.

I could not find a single thing to criticize in this film. First and foremost, I'm impressed at the gall of the director, Paul Greengrass, in writing this script, seeking support and recruiting a cast that he could direct towards production.

"It is the civic duty of Americans to view and consider the issues presented in this film. It could have been any one of us in those airplanes or buildings."

It would seem that because of the sensitive nature of the film, Greengrass would have been destined to fail in the eyes of critics. However, favor was found with Greengrass and his film among the critic circle.

According to wikipedia.org, Greengrass was awarded several Best Director awards from renowned critic groups including the National Society of Film Critics and the Los Angeles Film Critic Association.

Obviously, I am not the first person to recognize the stellar accomplishment of Greengrass in directing this film. My play on the film is that beneath the actors and actresses and Greengrass' artistic talent, there is representation of civic duty.

The terrorist acts committed against the Airline Industries, New York City, and Washington, D.C. were not significant to the United States as a nation solely because of the incredible breach of security and individual lives lost. The more pressing issue is that these terrorist acts were committed against all Americans and everything we represent—mainly democracy and freedom.

The innocent lives that were claimed were not targeted for any reason other than that they were Americans. In the eyes of these terrorists this was fault enough, punishable only by death according to their religious beliefs. Since these acts were committed against our nation and innocent citizens, it is our duty to at least watch films such as these. It calls attention to American heroics in the face of tragedy.

It is the civic duty of Americans to view and consider the issues presented in this film. It could have been any of us in those airplanes or buildings, and upon knowing the motives behind the attacks, we know that all Americans are the same to these terrorists.

A major part of what makes America beautiful is the unification of so many different cultures and beliefs. One way to celebrate our diversity is to watch films like "Flight 93" and reflect on the heroism shown by the passengers that day and what it means to us as one nation.

Pedestrians a nuisance to cars

Busy downhill intersection angers both pedestrians and drivers

By Chris Opiela
Contributing Writer

One of the first things parents teach their children once they are able to walk and talk is how to cross a street safely. Always hold an adult's hand. Look left, right, left again. The works.

So why, on this campus, has street-crossing etiquette dwindled to near-nothing?

I live downhill, so every day on my way to a meal or to a class, I must cross Seventh Street. This is one of the busiest intersections for both vehicles and pedestrians. Every day I find people crossing the street in streams without allowing vehicles to pass through the intersection. This increases tension and emotion for drivers at the intersection. They may become frustrated if they need to be on time for an event or are anxious just because of the inconvenience of waiting.

These emotions cause some to drive halfway through the intersection to wait while stragglers cross the road. Others wait equally as impatiently for the car to go on its way. Not only does this endanger the vehicle's driver and passengers, but it also endangers the pedestrians and holds up traffic by having a car in the middle of the intersection.

Perhaps you believe that the pedestrian has the right-of-way in such a situation. However, under the circumstances of the area, there may only be one or two cars at the intersection at a time.

With the number of pedestrians on campus, one driver at an intersection could potentially wait for minutes before he or she could continue on his or her way. I find little satisfaction in making one person wait as twenty cross the street.

How long does it take for a car to go by? Four, maybe five seconds. How long does it take for twenty loosely-grouped people to pass by? Thirty seconds? Longer? To someone who is trying to get somewhere, 30 seconds seems like an eternity, and the resulting impatience can lead to accidents that are otherwise avoidable. Think about how long the last 30 seconds of a close game in the Sojka Pavilion takes. Thirty seconds is a long time.

"I find little satisfaction in making one person wait as 20 cross the street"

I can understand a few people crossing the street before allowing the car to go, but what I find is that as soon as one person crosses, the people behind him or her feel an obligation to follow. Some even continue to cross, despite the fact that a majority of the crowd is already across the street, acting as if they always have the right to cross the street when and where they please.

This is disconcerting to me mostly because it shows how little we are thinking about others and the outside world.

It seems that the "bubble" around this campus extends beyond apathy toward what's going on in world politics and other current events. Proper etiquette toward fellow classmates, professors and neighboring townspeople who use cars and trucks to get around the campus and Lewisburg are outside of the "bubble" too.

Though part of the problem certainly lies with drivers who wave groups of people across, most of the problem rests on us, the pedestrians, who should distribute patience and goodwill to every driver.

A solution to this problem seems unlikely except in the minds of the students.

In the meantime, I will continue to be amused when a friend becomes disgruntled with a car that won't allow him or her to cross the street first.

Students line up for science guy

Bill Nye, 'The Science Guy,' holds a special place in students' hearts

By Daylin Oakes
Contributing Writer

On Tuesday, our campus was graced by one William Nye, a Cornell-educated mechanical engineer and inventor, responsible for a medium-sized hydraulic cylinder used in Boeing 747s and, most recently, for a new kind of pointe shoe. Amazingly enough, many people from the University and the local community lined up in the snow outside the Weis Center for the Performing Arts for a chance to see this man.

Those lucky enough to make it into the auditorium and grab a seat started cheers and attempted waves while they waited for their hero to appear. When this obviously nerdy scientist finally appeared, he was greeted with prolonged cheers and one loud shout of "I love you, Bill!" I love Bill as well, but not because I find his bow ties incredibly attractive or his lanky physique stunning. No, I love Bill because of a theme song and because of his worthy message.

The "Bill Nye, The Science Guy" theme song is extraordinarily catchy, with easy lyrics, and most of us heard it repeatedly throughout seventh grade science class: "Bill! Bill! Bill! Bill! Bill! Bill! Bill Nye, the Science Guy." There are still times when that refrain pops into my head and remains there for hours. It was my favorite part of Nye's PBS show and the reason I gladly watched it after school and begged for it in school. More importantly, after the theme song was over, I always stayed to watch the complete program.

"Nye presents science as something fun and exciting. He brings the viewer into his lab and lets one in on the joy of discovery."

Nye presents science as something fun and exciting. He brings viewers into his lab and lets them in on the joy of discovery. He also inspires. Often enough, after viewing his show, I would run into the kitchen and dig through the cupboards for the ingredients necessary to blow up a balloon or recreate some other supremely awesome experiment. I questioned more and imagined using the answers to invent rocket-powered rollerblades. I was not as afraid to speak up in class and answer questions, for, in the world of Nye, science is cool and your friends are just as nerdy as you are. When I showed up at the lecture Tuesday night, I was reminded of what that feels like.

A community member behind me kept asking his wife, "What are so many college students doing here to see him?" He simply could not believe so many of us would take time from our busy social lives to come cheer for the host of a children's TV show. As I mentioned earlier, I am sure this was partially nostalgia for the theme song, but I would like to think there was also some nostalgia for the belief that we can come up with our own answers and (dare I say it?) "change the world."

When I was a child, Nye taught me to think critically and look at world issues such as global warming the way a scientist would. He taught me this by assuring me not only that I was capable of comprehending science, but also that our understanding of science has an effect on others.

Most importantly, he told me that "science rules." To me, the number of students who applauded this man and gleefully attended his lecture shows just how large an effect Nye has had and (hopefully) will continue to have on the attitude we have towards science. When he spoke of the way China is pushing to catch up with the United States and in many ways is even ahead of us, it occurred to me that Nye and others like him are part of the reason why we are not already far behind.

The F Word

On Liberia

By Lenore R. Flower
Contributing Writer

"War has always dealt cruelly with women, but the nature of violent conflict in the world has changed in the past decades in ways that are taking an even greater toll on women and children." — Carol Bellamy, Executive Director of United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund (UNICEF), Nov. 25, 2004.

The African country of Liberia reached a peace agreement in 2003 that ended a bloody civil war. Competing rebel forces specifically targeted civilians. In a country of 3.6 million, 250,000 died during the war and another 300,000 fled, according to the British Broadcasting Corporation (BBC). Women and teenage girls were raped and abducted as "sex slaves" by soldiers of the opposition.

They were repeatedly and brutally attacked in their own homes and on the way to school. The epidemic of rape became intimately connected to the already disastrous epidemic of HIV and AIDS. It became a tool of war that has left many physical and psychological scars on the women of Liberia.

Now, four years after the war, the act of raping a minor carries a life sentence. Liberian President Ellen Johnson-Sirleaf has taken a strong stance against sexual exploitation of women and young girls. Yet because the recently reestablished court system is so weak, the violent abuse and exploitation of women in Liberia has not decreased with the end of the war.

Local media in Liberia report at least two rapes involving girls as young as five every week. According to irinnews.org, a recent study at the hospital in Liberia's capital found that 48 percent of the 658 rape victims were between the ages of 5 and 12 years old. Sex offenders specifically target "baby girls" as their chosen victims. However, with roughly 316 raped children in one hospital alone, only two men have been charged with the life sentence required by law.

With 85 percent of the population unemployed, the parents of the raped individual are likely to be very poor. The rapist and the victim's parents will "privately settle the case" by agreeing on a sum of money as restitution, creating a sort of parentally-condoned prostitution.

The exploitation of women is so extreme that there is currently a campaign in Liberia that carries the message, "Sex is not a requirement for jobs, grades, medical treatment or other services." Whether this campaign will have any effect on women's exploitation in Liberia is debatable.

Liberia is crippled by an inept justice system and an overstretched medical system, neither of which seem capable of providing for the basic needs of the women in Liberia. It is an environment so devoid of security and justice for women that many in the United States would find it impossible to comprehend. Because popular media focuses almost exclusively on issues that relate directly to the United States, the average American knows little or nothing about anything else. Without the knowledge and understanding of the everyday violations on human rights that are occurring internationally, how can we as Americans speak out against them?

If the American people remain complacent and ignorant about these international atrocities, we cannot expect the people who represent us in government or in the United Nations to take action. The United States cannot possibly continue to perpetuate the idea that our government fights against evil and for democratic rights if America continues to turn a blind eye to catastrophes such as the current situation in Liberia. If we continue to shake our heads and insist "never again" when we think back on events such as the Holocaust, we need to pay more attention to the tragedies that are occurring now.

"Freedom of the press,
if it means anything at all,
means the freedom to criticize and oppose."
- Eric Arthur Blair

Write for Ops

e-mail mdippery@

By Matt Saylor
Associate Editor of Content

"Lost" — The show returns Wednesday, Feb. 7 at its new time of 10 p.m. This is the first new episode of the show since Nov. 8, and marks the beginning of 16 consecutive weeks of new episodes (or so ABC has promised).

This initial episode, titled "Not in Portland," focuses on Juliet (Elizabeth Mitchell) through flashbacks, while in the present deals with the escape of Kate (Evangeline Lilly) and Sawyer (Josh Holloway) as Jack (Matthew Fox) holds Ben's (Michael Emerson) fate in his hands.

Future episodes in February will focus on Desmond (Henry Ian Cusick), Charlie (Dominic Monaghan), Hurley (Jorge Garcia) and more of Jack. An episode that focuses on Sayid (Naveen Andrews) in March may feature a cameo appearance by a former castaway, but that is not confirmed.

"Scrubs" — The next episode, set to air Thursday, Feb. 8, will feature a road trip by many of the Sacred Heart crew in Dr. Kelso's (Ken Jenkins) new RV. J.D. (Zach Braff) uses it to visit pregnant girlfriend Kim (guest star Elizabeth Banks). However, the news he receives on his visit to her may or may not be what he wants to hear.

Dr. Cox (John C. McGinley) also receives some potentially distressing news about the upcoming birth of his second child with Jordan (guest star Christa Miller).

Creator and Executive Producer Bill Lawrence has said that one of the characters will pass away at some point before this season is over. While I can tell you that it is not one of the main characters, it is one of the key supporting guest stars that we have come to know over the years. Several episodes will air before this character moves on. Look for future hints in this column about who takes the fall and when.

"My Name Is Earl" — Look for Jaime Pressley's real life pregnancy to be written into the series in the coming weeks. Her portrayal of Joy will see some creative moments created by the writing staff to work with the baby bump of the mother-to-be. Also, look for further development of the Randy (Ethan Suplee) and Catalina (Nadine Velazquez) relationship.

Earl's (Jason Lee) and Randy's parents also are expected to be turning up again in the relatively near future.

"House" — It appears as if things are going to become more complicated for House (Hugh Laurie) over the next few weeks. The good doctor will still fail to diagnose his relationships with Cuddy (Lisa Edelstein) and Cameron (Jennifer Morrison). He will argue with a patient over whether it is worse to always feel pain or never feel pain. Will Chase (Jesse Spencer) and Cameron explore a relationship of their own? Rumors say yes, but the actors are staying tight-lipped.

Look here in the coming weeks for updates on the Screen Actors Guild award winning ensembles of "Grey's Anatomy" and "The Office," as both have some big developments in store for February sweeps. Also, feel free to write to The Bucknellian if you have any questions about some of the shows you watch.

Vanquishing adults, reviving the past

Bill Bryson's new memoir lovingly describes growing up in '50s America

By Kimberly Kane
Senior Writer

❖ Book Review

Using his childhood alter ego, travel author Bill Bryson gives his readers a glimpse into his life in "The Life and Times of the Thunderbolt Kid." The memoir reads more like a travel narrative—the genre he is famous for—than an autobiography, as Bryson provides an in-depth look at Des Moines, Iowa in the 1950s.

The book is not just an autobiography but also a loving portrait of a time and a place that is long gone.

The Thunderbolt Kid is a superhero (influenced by Bryson's vast appetite for comic books) whose superpowers include vanquishing adults and vaporizing irritating foes. His other powers include "ThunderVision," a more reliable substitute for X-ray vision that allows a superhero to see through women's undergarments, but eliminates the possibility of seeing through skin and vital organs. Bryson mixes tales of the Thunderbolt Kid's adventures with stories about the changing American landscape as well as his adventures as a "regular kid."

1950s Des Moines is full of worthy allies and enemies for the young superhero. Bryson, always a fan of hyperbole, creates biting caricatures of his family and neighbors. From sadistic dentists to maddening old ladies on the paper route, the neighborhood is full of adults who are not to be trusted.

Bryson paints a wonderful portrait of his parents, Bill and Mary, who both worked for The Des Moines Register. His father, recognized as one of the finest baseball writers in America, is obsessively cheap. His mother is sweet, supportive, absent-minded and domestically challenged, despite writing a column about housekeeping. They often seem eccentric and distracted and don't seem to notice little Billy's quests to discover the secrets of the world, which include gaining access to a strip club, stealing beer from a freight train and passing out his dad's Playboy magazines to his classmates.

Bryson achieves a perfect balance of fascinating history and personal anecdotes that range from sweet to hysterical and embarrassing to unbelievable. Stories about his parents, neighbors and friends are mingled with statistics about life in the 1950s. Bryson has a knack for finding the facts that will amaze and humor his audience. For example, who knew that Las Vegas was originally a tourist destination for nuclear detonation viewings? The city didn't have an elevator until 1955.

"The Life and Times of the Thunderbolt Kid" suggests a recurring theme of nuclear war and communism that spurred a nationwide "witch hunt" during Bryson's childhood. One chapter titled "Boom!" deals solely with these two "threats" to national safety. Bryson manages to weave these fears through the various stories of his childhood seamlessly, demonstrating how they permeated the political culture of the time.

Any reader familiar with Bryson's previous works, such as "A Walk in the Woods" and "Notes from a Small Island," will appreciate his unique talent for mocking while simultaneously admiring a culture. This works especially well in "The Life and Times of the Thunderbolt Kid" because Bryson is more self-deprecating than ever. He portrays himself as mischievous and dim-witted with an unending curiosity and desire for adventure.

Bryson floats through his formal education and barely attends school often enough to graduate. He claims his teachers hardly noticed him, let alone liked him. Report card comments included "Billy talks in a low tone" and "Billy sings with enthusiasm." It's hard to believe a writer with such a sharp sense of humor, love of history and keen observational skills could have seemed so bland in his school days.

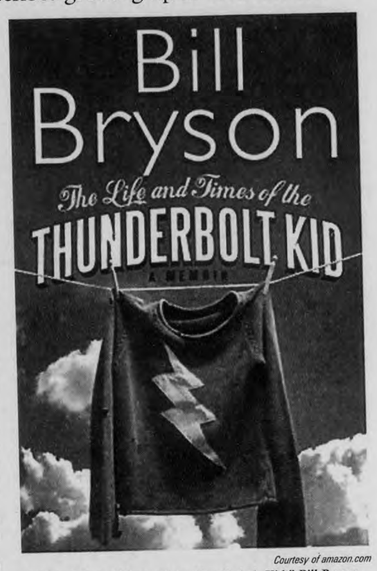
The book is not just an autobiography but also a loving portrait of a time and a place that is long gone. He reminisces about everything from ads for Maidenform bras to the "unparalleled" movies of the 1950s like "The Blob" and "The Incredible Shrinking Man."

In the past, Bryson would meet his mother at her office to go see a movie with her on Friday evenings.

"I'd give anything—really almost anything at all—to pass just once more through that gate and see the guys in the Sports Department and beyond them my dear old mom at her desk typing away," Bryson says in the memoir.

While he may not be able to return to the Des Moines of his childhood, Bryson gives it a fitting tribute in "The Life and Times of the Thunderbolt Kid."

It's been a long time since the Thunderbolt Kid has vaporized an interfering adult, but he has the power to make readers laugh and introduce younger generations to a wonderful world they could never know otherwise.



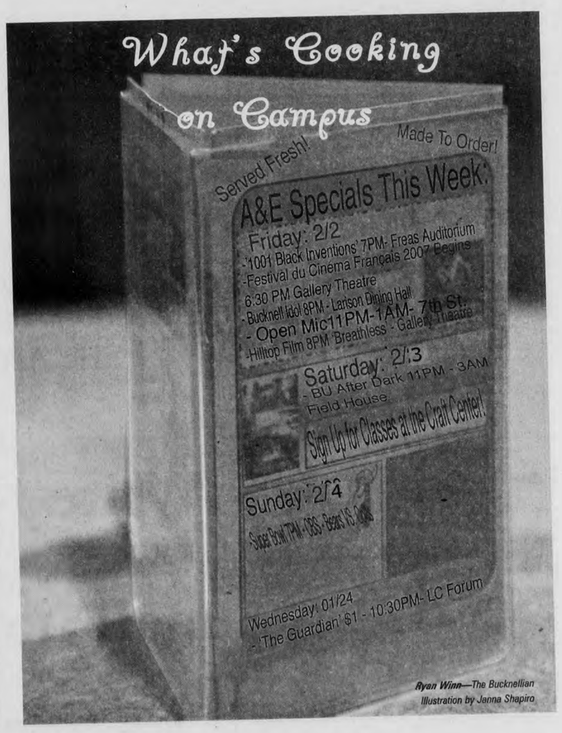
Courtesy of amazon.com

In "The Life and Times of the Thunderbolt Kid," Bill Bryson combines humor with history as he experienced it growing up with the threat of nuclear war. The autobiographical novel pays a loving tribute to a former American landscape.

Think you can do better?
Bring it on!

Write for A & E.

E-mail jshapiro@



What's Cooking
on Campus
Served Fresh!
Made To Order!
A&E Specials This Week:
Friday: 2/2
-1001 Black Inventions 7PM- Freas Auditorium
-Festival du Cinema Francais 2007 Begins
6:30 PM Gallery Theatre
-Bucknell Idol 8PM - Larison Dining Hall
- Open Mic 11PM-1AM- 7th St.
-Hilltop Film 8PM Breathless - Gallery Theatre
Saturday: 2/3
- BU After Dark 11PM - 3AM
Field House
Sign Up for Classes at the Craft Center!
Sunday: 2/4
Wednesday: 01/24
- The Guardian $1 - 10:30PM- LC Forum

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian
Illustration by Janna Shapiro

Countdown to the Oscars

Tinsel Town readies to celebrate its glitterati at the Academy Awards

By Liz Stein
Contributing Writer

The countdown to the Oscars officially began on Tuesday, Jan. 23 when the academy announced its nominations for the bests of 2006. In categories ranging from Performance by an Actor In a Leading Role to Achievement in Makeup, we will once again celebrate the extraordinary work of the celebrities and behind-the-scenes experts who continue to set the standards in Hollywood.

It is difficult to say who will go home with the coveted statuette this year, as there are extremely talented nominees in each category. I imagine it will be a very exciting evening with several surprises. In one of the more anticipated categories, Best Motion Picture of the Year, the nominations go to "Babel," "The Departed," "Letters From Iwo Jima," "The Queen" and "Little Miss Sunshine." According to Chicago Tribune critic Michael Wilmington, "Babel" is a "powerhouse, demanding film that sometimes stretches the limits of credibility."

As of Jan. 29, the film has grossed an approximate $27.4 million in the United States. "The Departed," the highest grossing film of the five Best Picture nominees with $125.5 million domestically, is an exciting, violent story of gangsters, lost identity and loyalty. It was chosen by many critic groups, including those from Las Vegas and Boston, as the best film of the year.

However, the other nominations will also present competition: "The Queen," chosen by critics in New York and Toronto as best film of the year, had earnings of more than $41.6 million in the United States and "Little Miss Sunshine," a quirky comedy, generated more than $59.6 million.

With this in mind, it is clear that "Letters from Iwo Jima" will be up against some serious competition. The lesser-known film has reported an approximate $5.2 million in earnings in the United States. However, this DreamWorks/Warner Brothers production is a compelling film because it "tells a familiar story from a completely new point of view," according to MSNBC. Besides, can you ever go wrong with a Clint Eastwood film?

It is difficult to say who will be going home with the coveted statuette this year as there are extremely talented nominees in each category.

Even if Eastwood's "Letters" doesn't cut it for Best Picture, it still has a chance to be honored for Achievement in Directing, though it will be up against nearly the same competition: "Babel," directed by Alejandro Inarritu; "The Departed," by Martin Scorsese; "The Queen," by Stephen Frears and "United 93," directed by Paul Greengrass, who also directed "Bourne Supremacy" and "Bloody Sunday."

Throughout the evening, viewers may see some surprises, including in categories such as Best Supporting Actress. Here, Mexican actress Adriana Barraza of "Babel" will be up against previous Academy Award winner Cate Blanchett for "Notes on a Scandal", 10-year-old Abigail Breslin of "Little Miss Sunshine," Rinko Kikuchi of "Babel" and new starlet Jennifer Hudson of "Dreamgirls." Will former American Idol contestant Hudson walk away a winner or will Cate Blanchett finally come home victorious after being nominated for the third time? Many viewers will be anticipating the results of this category.

For Best Supporting Actor, Mark Wahlberg of "The Departed" will be a solid candidate against Eddie Murphy ("Dreamgirls"), Djimon Hounsou ("Blood Diamond"), Jackie Earle Haley ("Little Children") and Alan Arkin ("Little Miss Sunshine"). My vote goes to former New Kids on the Block star, Marky Mark.

In the category Best Actor, nominees include Leonardo DiCaprio ("Blood Diamond"), Ryan Gosling ("Half Nelson"), Peter O'Toole ("Venus"), Will Smith ("The Pursuit of Happyness") and Forest Whitaker ("The Last King of Scotland"). This is going to be a close call: DiCaprio has 22 percent of the vote, Smith 26 percent and Whittaker 32 percent, according to MSNBC. After his second Oscar nomination, does the Fresh Prince have what it takes to secure a win? It may not be his biggest concern anyhow. Even though many say Smith is a strong candidate, according to CBS news, winning an Oscar was not his motivation for making the film—he wanted to make sure that the true story of Chris Gardner was told properly.

Another tough competition will be the fight for Best Actress. Penélope Cruz of "Volver" will compete with Judi Dench ("Notes on a Scandal"), Helen Mirren ("The Queen"), Meryl Streep ("The Devil Wears Prada") and Kate Winslet ("Little Children"). Honestly, I would not be surprised if Streep, who has been nominated 13 times, walked away with her third Oscar. But then again, Helen Mirren did win the Golden Globe for her performance and was honored by nearly every critic group, including Los Angeles and New York.

Well, these are the facts of the race to the red carpet. To find out who the academy picks for this year's film achievement awards, tune in to ABC at 8 p.m. on Sunday, Feb. 25. The event will take place at the Kodak Theater at Hollywood & Highland Center, beginning with a half-hour arrival segment on the red carpet.

Movie shows darker side of man

Apocalyptic thriller 'Children of Men' questions human nature

Courtesy of www.childrenofmen.com

Faron (Clive Owen) contemplates the collapsing world around him. Although he is first portrayed as an unlikeable character, by the end of "Children of Men" he becomes a hero.

By Janna Shapiro & Erik Zager
Arts & Entertainment Editor and Contributing Writer

❖ Movie Review

"Children of Men," the new Alfonso Cuaron thriller, opened Jan. 5 with overwhelmingly positive reviews. The Sci-Fi/Fantasy film uses violent and primal imagery of a seemingly inevitable future for the human race to stun its viewers into thought and self-examination. Cuaron's beautiful, if chilling, vision of the end of humanity is both convincing and heartbreaking.

"Children of Men" begins with the revelation that a global pandemic of infertility since 2009 threatens to end human civilization. Every country descends into virtual collapse with Britain surviving, hanging on by a militaristic thread. Under an act of the Ministry of Homeland Security, the harsh UK regime condemns all immigrants to Britain to concentration camp-like prisons.

Patriotic advertisements paper the city, declaring that citizens can only trust each other. Yet, a radical pro-immigrant group discovers humanity's salvation. Kee (Claire-Hope Ashitey), a Fujian immigrant, is the first pregnant woman in 18 years. The film follows Kee's escape from Britain into the custody of "The Human Project," a benevolent scientific group working to restore peace and fertility to the world.

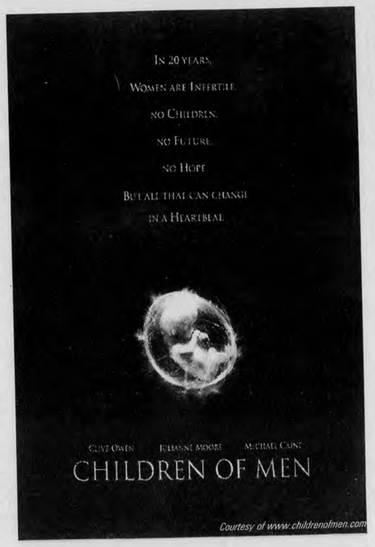
Faron (Clive Owen), a bureaucrat, enters Kee's exodus a self-absorbed addict and ends the film transformed into a Christ-like figure, sacrificing himself for Kee and her daughter, his own long-lost notion of family and for the future of mankind. The cast is joined by a menagerie of wildly talented actors from Michael Caine to Julianne Moore. Caine's performance as a pot-smoking peace junky yelling "pull my finger" upon death was unforgettable and entirely worthy of an Oscar nod. Shame on you, Academy.

The allure of this film lies not in the explicit plot but in the way Curan portrays bigotry in human nature. The lack of innocence and "children's laughter" in the world is the basis of this raw and visionary movie.

"Children of Men" doesn't attempt to hide its political agenda. The film suggests that justice and natural rights would not exist if humans knew extinction was in sight. Security cameras line the streets and the concept of presumed innocence is nonexistent. The film depicts a future in which savage war and human rights violations in distant oppressed countries are not splashed across the evening news but outside every white picket fence and apartment stoop in the world.

"Children of Men" is a not a "Friday night date movie." The camera angles switch from standard format to a war-style reminiscent of "Black Hawk Down" and "Saving Private Ryan."

The cinematography engages the audience in violence-saturated chaos, nearing the climax. "Children of Men" is sure to leave you dumfounded, questioning society's position on the slippery slope towards self-annihilation.



Courtesy of www.childrenofmen.com

By Ana Fullmer
Contributing Writer

Since I know all of you politically active and internationally aware Bucknellians look to moi for guidance through the jumble of stories and briefs that make up our world news, I'll start with the most important headline of the week: Tyra Banks is not fat, and she wants you to know it.

The latest People magazine has her on the cover in her skivvies, with a large quote that reads "You call this fat?" The accompanying piece is aimed at refuting reports that she has put on over 50 pounds and looks "disgusting." In the article, Banks points out that she is no longer a model and therefore doesn't need to be stick thin.

The whole controversy stems from some photos taken of her wandering around Australia in a hideous one-piece that would make Mary-Kate Olson look bloated. I had thought it was just another plug for her talk show where she puts on a fat suit to see how people treat her. But, alas, those were her real thighs. If you're into that sort of thing, People magazine printed her new diet plan, which consists of burgers, pizza and pancakes. I, for one, am all for the Banks revolution, and I have Dorm Delivery Express on the line right now.

Speaking of food, I'll move on to people who don't eat it. Ange-LEAN-a Jolie has been looking increasingly stick-tacular lately, and while she still is ridiculously hot, it might do her some good to go on the Banks diet. I'll order extra Bull Dip. The New York Times ran a story on Jan. 22 about an alleged backlash against the U.N. sweetheart, referring to her as "haughty" and "self-important." This annoyed me more than Rachel McAdams' pink hair. The article states, "In part she is suffering from a common problem: movie stars who make too few movies and are forced to coast on their fame."

Well, I think that the writer of that article is suffering from a common problem: not knowing what the hell she is talking about (I always know exactly what I'm talking about, if you were curious). While she may be a husband-stealer (but hey, who hasn't stolen a husband before?) she is still working hard and looking fierce while doing it. It's like if people criticized you for wearing pearls, makeup and letters to the gym; they're obvi just jealous.

Before any of my readers get uppity with the "what about Jennifer Aniston" comments, I will just have you know that she has been working hard also. But by working hard, I don't mean making decent movies or systematically saving the world—I mean getting a nose job. Perezhilton.com reported that Aniston's publicist said Aniston "had a procedure done to correct a deviated septum that was incorrectly done over 12 years ago." Surely you jest. I know if I was one of the highest-paid actresses in Hollywood, I would wait 12 years to have a botched procedure fixed. Personally, I am seeing the foundation being set for a Michael Jackson-esque self-mutilation spree. Hot.

In other cosmetic procedure news, Hilary Duff got rid of her absurd horse teeth, and is once again flashing proportional chompers. She looks super cute and all the gossip is that her new album, "Dignity," is pure Europop sex on a stick. It also seems that she's been dabbling in some co-ed extra-curriculars. People.com summarized her recent radio interview with Ryan Seacrest where she said that the way she's been dating around since her breakup with Joel Madden makes her "feel like a guy." It's always so much fun when wholesome popstars become hussies. I say, go for it, as long as you don't go all B. Spears on us.

More on blondes: Baby Spice is pregnant! Former Spice Girl Emma Bunton is expecting her first child with long-time boyfriend and former British boy-band member, Jade Jones, reports People magazine. Since I adore both British people and babies, I'll spare everyone the "Baby Spice has apparently been doing a lot of 'slam your body down and wind it all around' moves" jokes. What I won't spare is my weekly Lindsay Lohan rant. The paparazzi-o-phile has been hitting up Hollywood boutiques lately with her sober chaperone, taking time off from her Wonderland Ranch rehab retreat. Shame that she has to buy Dior while sober. I know I never do. But the issue at hand is who goes into rehab at age 20 anyway? Way to be a quitter Lindsay. Do you think that if a University girl wakes up clutching a Breathalyzer tube and her P-Safe report she just quits? What a disappointing role model. Obviously Lohan has just been going to all the wrong parties. That lack of drive would never fly in this bubble.

COLDWELL BANKER
PENN ONE REAL ESTATE

Thank You, Bucknell!!

For thirty years of calling Bucknell and Lewisburg home.

Susan Warner-Mills, Sales Associate
Competence, Integrity, Service

524-7500; swm@coldwellbanker.com

Creedence Clearwater Revisited

Courtesy of www.creedence-revisited.com

Courtesy of amazon.com

As the headliner for Chrysalis 2007, the band boasts a multitude of hits that cross generation barriers and promise to attract a diverse crowd and director of Campus Activities and Programs. "The band needed to be a band that appeals to everybody."

CREEDENCE From page A1

Creedence Clearwater Revival, a folk rock band, took shape in 1959 and began its career playing gigs at fraternity houses. The Louisiana-based band made a splash in 1968 with the release of its self-titled album, featuring the hit single "Suzie Q."

Today, Creedence Clearwater Revival is remembered for hits such as "Fortunate Son," "Proud Mary" and "Bad Moon Rising." It had 13 Billboard-ranked albums and 20-Billboard ranked singles.

With mounting friction between band members, Creedence Clearwater Revival broke up in 1972. Since then, former front man John Fogerty has recorded solo albums with moderate success.

Creedence Clearwater Revisited formed in 1995, with two original band members: drummer Doug Clifford and bassist Stu Cook.

Creedence Clearwater Revisited formed in 1995, with two original band members: drummer Doug Clifford and bassist Stu Cook.

LaPorte dispelled rumors that Creedence Clearwater Revisited is just a shadow of its past.

"Creedence Clearwater Revisited has been together for a long time and they have the rights to all of the popular songs," said Sara LaPorte, assistant director of Campus Activities and Programs. "It is not like it is a cover band. From our understanding it will be a phenomenal show."

It had been rumored that Chrysalis would feature Hootie and the Blowfish this year.

"Hootie might be a great selection for a future Chrysalis, for the now we're very excited to have Creedence Clearwater Revisited," Conrad said.

Borderline Crazy will perform following Creedence Clearwater Revisited. The band is "similar to Snackbar Jones in being a cover band, and even has one of the ex-lead singers from Snackbar Jones," LaPorte said. "They are the newest hot-on-the-scene up-and-coming cover bands."

The band's MySpace page defines it as a rock, reggae and pop punk band with influences varying from Led Zeppelin to My Chemical Romance.

Information on ticket sales will be disseminated via a campus-wide e-mail.

"We're still trying to sort out the ticket information. We're trying to sort out an early bird special for tickets. For an event like this it's important that we know ticket information early. We'll get ticket information out in the next couple weeks via campus email," LaPorte said.

DanceBrazil spins onto campus

DanceBrazil artfully spreads Afro-Brazilian culture through the medium of dance to a packed house

By Lily Beauvilliers
Associate Editor of Layout

Honestly, when I first heard the words "Dance Brazil," I thought of pineapples, toucans and brightly colored skirts. Sure, I expected the show to be a cultural experience, but the culture I anticipated and the culture I encountered were two entirely different animals. Through entrancing music, unique costumes and (of course) exceptional dancing, Dance Brazil revealed unique aspects of northern Brazilian culture to a packed audience.

Tickets for the Weis Center show sold out, but those lucky enough to be in attendance last Friday were first greeted by an almost empty blue-lit stage. A group of dancers, seemingly naked except for different-colored bands strapped against their bodies, huddled in a corner. The music picked up, electronic sounding at first. As more instrumentation kicked in, the dancers began to move, their roiling motions almost mechanical. An awesome deep drum thumped, and the dancers rose to full height.

Possibly the most powerful and stressful performance I have ever seen followed—powerful because the themes of conformism and battling society resonated so clearly in the choreography; stressful because the constant battle manifested itself in the often violent motions of the dancers.

The first of two dances performed was titled "Desafio," and according to the program was "about personal conflict and how society forces us to conform or be left behind in oblivion." Two dancers frequently broke away from a crowd and began dance-fighting. In one particularly memorable encounter, one man seemed to triumph over the other, pushing him into different poses until the two started dancing in time, one of the few synchronized spots in the piece.

The group eventually filtered off the stage, leaving one man alone. He tried to take a step forward, fell and using one arm popped himself off the ground with incredible strength and grace. Many of the dancers exhibited remarkable strength and endurance, repeating tricky motions such as this one rapidly and non-stop.

"DanceBrazil's technique was incredible," Nicole Fellows '10 said. "Their preciseness was perfect, everything in control. The athleticism that it requires is astonishing."

Other scenes stuck in the mind of viewers. "I really liked the part where one woman

"DanceBrazil's technique was incredible. Their preciseness was perfect, everything in control. The athleticism that it requires is astonishing."
— Nicole Fellows '10

was obviously upset and another comforted her. Everyone knows what it's like to be trapped and frustrated and to have someone come and calm you down," Megan McShea '09 said.

Later on in the performance, the music took center stage. Interesting snippets of melody from stringed instruments and the keyboard combined almost tunelessly, more like percussion than melody. Unexpected beats made the song stand out.

Eduardo Santos explained some of the creative process that went behind crafting the music for "Desafio," which he and his brother Edmilson Santos composed.

"Life is full of challenges," he said through a translator, Karina Lassner '07. "It was easy to come up with themes for the dance. The choreographer would name a challenge, like a fight or a relationship, and I would incorporate them."

The "fighting" in the dances is actually a style called Capoeira. Lassner explained that it originated from martial art practices that came to Brazil from Africa. According to the program, DanceBrazil tries to share "Afro-Brazilian culture" which developed in Bahia, a state in Brazil through which more than 3.5 million enslaved Africans came to the country.

"I first saw DanceBrazil perform in Salvador and was impressed with their incorporation of the different dances and cultures of Brazil," dancer Camila Freitas said through Lassner. "That's part of why I joined the company."

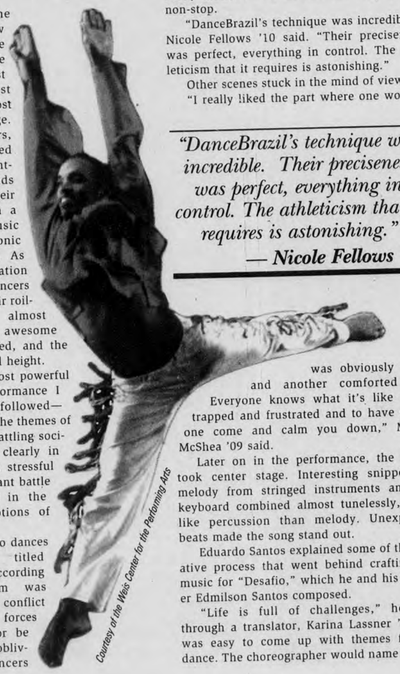
The next half of the show, entitled "The Ritual," lightened the mood of the performance, while keeping the cultural elements. As a "homage to the native Brazilians who are vanishing," as the program put it, the purpose was perhaps less clear than the previous piece, but the entertainment factor was high.

"I thought it was really good that the group started with the more serious piece," then moved to the more choreographed piece," Angela Remeika '09 said.

The timing of the troupe was impeccable. Each dancer could be moving separately when all of a sudden, they snapped together, moving in time. The precision of their movements was also admirable—dancers powerfully kicked barely above the heads of their partners, neither one flinching. Under the bright orange and red lights, the dancers' skin shone with sweat from their constant energetic motion.

Different visual clues tuned the audience into the cheerful tone of the dance. Brighter lights, colorful, bathing suit-esque costumes and bird sounds gave an overall relaxing feel. Waving loose arms above their heads, the dancers seemed almost joyous. The whole performance could have taken place on a bright beach amongst friends, rather than in the dark Weis Center to a silent audience.

At the end of the performance, DanceBrazil got a well-deserved standing ovation, and the audience received new insight into a culture little known in America.



Courtesy of the Weis Center for the Performing Arts

Courtesy of the Weis Center for the Performing Arts

The Bucknellian February 2, 2007
Sports
Volume 139, Number 2 Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

The eye of the storm

Twenty University students traveled to Nicaragua to help pick up the pieces left behind from Hurricane Mitch.

See page B10

Track & field reaches new heights

Orange and Blue produce best weekend of season with numerous championship marks

By Brian Mulligan
Sports Editor

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

From left to right: Kevin Macleod '09, John MacFeeters '07 and Ryan White '10 compete at recent home meet. The track and field team will travel to Akron, Ohio on Saturday to face-off against some of the best schools in the Mid-West.

The track and field squad produced its most successful weekend of the season with three NCAA provisional qualifiers and numerous ECAC and IC4A qualifiers. A select group of athletes traveled to College Park, Pa., to participate in the Penn State National Invitational, where the Bison rubbed shoulders with over 70 of the nation's best teams including Pittsburgh, Syracuse and Tennessee, while the rest of the team competed at the Gerhard Fieldhouse in the Bison Open and Multi.

"To have three NCAA marks in a week is incredible, and tack on some IC4A and ECAC standards and school records," Head Coach Kevin Donner said. "It's arguably the best weekend in Bucknell track and field since I came to Bucknell six years ago."

On Friday, Marjorie Grap '07 met one of the NCAA provisional marks in the weight throw at Penn State with a toss of 65-7 1/2. Her throw was the top collegiate mark at the meet, improving upon her school record and placing her sixth in the nation. Grap then traveled back to the University on Saturday to win the weight throw and place second in the shot put, breaking the school record and qualifying her for the ECAC championship.

Teammate Mel Buczko '07 cleared a height of 13-3 1/4 in the pole vault to win the event, qualify for the ECAC championship and meet the NCAA provisional mark at Penn State. The 13-3 1/4 vault also currently places her at sixth in the nation.

"I was very pleased with my performance," Buczko said. "I haven't been jumping very well lately and it was very helpful to be in that competitive atmosphere to really motivate me."

On Saturday at Penn State, Christa Sawko '07 placed seventh overall in the 800-meter run in two minutes and 10.77 seconds and qualified for the ECAC championship. In the mile run, Erin Cranmer-Hart '08 earned a spot in the ECAC championship with a fifth-place finish in 5:52. Jenny Stevens '07 produced the best performance yet in the Patriot League and broke into the record books in the 3,000-meter run with a first-place finish in the unseeded event in 10:4.45, placing her seventh on the all-time list.

The women's team had a solid showing at the Bison Open and Multi, especially in the pentathlon. Nina Reinhardt '07 broke a 25-year-old school record in the event, notching 3,504 points to place second overall and qualify for the ECAC championship. Teammate Amy Mantush '10 scored 3,344 points to enter the record books at fourth on the all-time list.

Tyler Hoffman '07 flexed his muscles in the weight throw at both Penn State and the Bison Open for the men's team. Hoffman won the event at Penn State on Friday with a toss of 63-3 1/2 and won the event at the University on Saturday. His throw of 64-11 1/4 at the Bison Open was good enough to qualify him for the IC4A championship and for him to meet the NCAA provisional mark.

Kerry Boyle '09 had another spectacular showing on the track with two

See TRACK page B3

Saylor Says

By Matt Saylor
Associate Editor of Content

1. Donald Brown '07 broke a bone in his right hand during the Bison's game against Navy, and it is not yet certain when he will be able to return. Brown, the team's leading scorer and rebounder, will probably be replaced in the starting line-up by Darren Mastropaolo '08.

Mastropaolo started earlier this season before being replaced by Jason Vegotsky '09 in order to move Brown to his more natural power forward position. Mastropaolo, Chris McNaughton '07, Patrick Behan '10 and Stephen Tyree '10 will likely receive more playing time to fill the 30-plus minutes a game that Brown played.

Rob Thomas '08 and/or Josh Linthicum '09 could receive more regular playing time. It will be difficult though to replace Brown's leadership and energy on the court, especially at the defensive end of the floor.

2. It will be a shame if Lindsey Hollobaugh '07 does not get to play anymore for the Bison. She was playing exceptionally well before her injury, and deserves to end her distinguished playing career on a high note.

3. The women's basketball

See SAYLOR page B2

Men's basketball builds upon conference success

By Marcus Mateer
Sports Writer

The Patriot League is shaping up as a two-horse race in men's basketball. Holy Cross (17-6, 8-0) and the Bison (13-8, 7-1) have distanced themselves from the pack. Two big wins against Colgate 56-53 and Army 74-49 solidified the Bison's second place standing in the league. A showdown in Lewisburg on Feb. 9 may very well decide who is the top seed in the Patriot League Tournament.

At Colgate, the Bison came out flat. The Red Raiders jumped out to a 17-2 lead, with two threes by leading scorer Jon Simon coming during the stretch. The Bison clawed back behind eight points by Chris McNaughton '07 in the first half, closing the lead to seven at the break. McNaughton finished the game with 12 points and nine rebounds. Colgate did an excellent job defensively on Bison leading scorer Donald Brown '07, who was limited to six points on 2-10 shooting with four personal fouls. Abe Badmus '07 stepped up with 12 points of his own.

Bucknell 56
Colgate 53

The Bison took command in the early stages of the second half, rattling off 16 straight points during a 27-6 run. A dunk by McNaughton cut the Colgate lead to one and a flash of brilliance from reserve Patrick Behan '10 gave the Bison the lead. Behan drove the lane, spun and hit the tough layup to give the Orange and Blue its first lead of the night. Two John Griffin '08 jumpers and a Jason Vegotsky '09 three extended the lead to eight at 42-34.

Simon hit a trey to climb the Red Raiders within five, but seven Badmus points would help to push it back to 13. Colgate dug in defensively and did not allow another Bison field goal until the last second of the game. The lead was trimmed down due to sloppy Bison play and missed free throw attempts. The comeback fell just short, as Simon's three to cut the lead to one came with only three seconds left to play. He would finish the game with 22 points, the only Red Raider in double figures. A long pass to Stephen Tyree '10, whose hustle defense off the bench always gives a boost, yielded a layup at the buzzer to end the game.

"I'm the hustle player, as you guys can see," Tyree said. "I get on loose balls and I rebound."

The perfect storm awaited a young Army team at Sojka Pavilion Saturday. The Bison had just dismantled a solid Lehigh team to take sole possession of second in the league. The Sojka Psychos finally returned to the sold-out arena in droves.

See MBBALL page B4

Bison stand alone at the top

Women's basketball defeat Black Knights to take first in Patriot League

By Matt Saylor
Associate Editor of Content

The women's basketball team vaulted into first place in the Patriot League with a 59-55 win over defending league champion, Army, on Saturday at Sojka Pavilion. The Bison (14-8, 6-1) are now one game ahead of the Black Knights (18-4, 5-2) at the midway point of conference play.

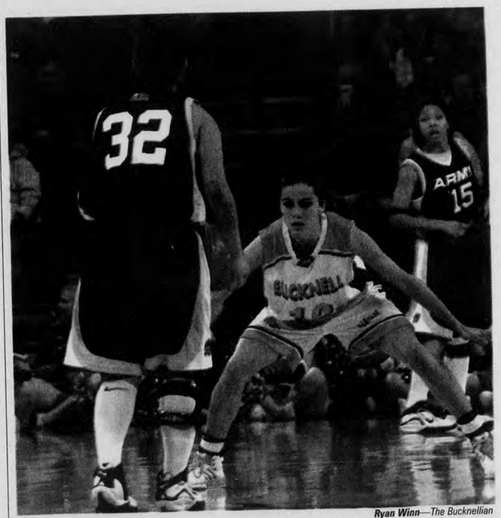
Hope Foster '08 led the Bison attack, scoring a season-high 22 points to go along with 10 rebounds, two blocks and two steals. She played the full 40 minutes for Head Coach Kathy Fedorjaka, as did Amanda Brown '09. Brown scored 14 points, despite missing seven of her eight three-point attempts. Lauren Schober '09 played all but the final 4.3 seconds of the game, grabbing 10 rebounds to go along with her six points.

Bucknell 59
Army 55

"Foster is the premium post-player in the league," said Dave Magarity, Army's head coach. "No one is close in my mind. She knows how to play."

Magarity also said, "Brown is one of the best three-point shooters in the country. Schober really was a presence for them tonight. She is a very versatile player who is so dangerous because of her presence inside and her ability to step out [beyond the three-point arc]."

Fedorjaka relied on her starters almost the entire night. In the first half, only Le'Le' LeSeur '10 saw action off the bench for the



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Jacquie Seawright '07 breaks down into a defensive stance in the Bison's crucial win against Army last weekend. The women's team currently tops the Patriot League standings.

"This game is a real boost of confidence for us. It's a boost of confidence to know that we can play 40 minutes and close out the opponent."
—Hope Foster '08

Orange and Blue, playing just one minute and 24 seconds in place of Jacquie Seawright '07. LeSeur played a little more in the second half, providing a rest for Kesha Champion '08 once she picked up her third foul. LeSeur finished the night with four minutes played, the highest of any Bison bench player. Andrea Wright '08 was the only other player to see playing time for the Orange and Blue off the bench.

"It was not my plan going into the game to play the starters so many minutes," Fedorjaka said. "Every possession just turned out to be so big. We are in good condition though, so I knew the girls could handle it."

Champion played great defense on the league's leading scorer and reigning Patriot League Player of the Year, Cara Enright, holding her to just 10 points on three of 13 shooting. Champion handed out six assists and

See WBBALL page B5

Orange and blue face-off against rival Lehigh

Swimming splashes into the record books as women rocket to easy win; men fall in heartbreaking loss

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

A women's diver competes against the Mountain Hawks. The women's diving team swept both the one and three meter competition, helping the women's team defeat Lehigh, 209-91.

By Barbara Perlman
Sports Editor

The men's and women's swimming and diving teams hosted Patriot League rival Lehigh on Senior Day on Saturday. While the women dominated, steamrolling the Mountain Hawks 209-91 and posting first place finishes in 12 of 16 events, the men fell to Lehigh in a nail-biting 154-146 loss.

The Bison went into their penultimate meet with conviction.

"I am confident going into the end of the season that performances will reflect all the hard work that has been put in throughout the past few months," Captain Nikki Woodward '07 said.

The women started the meet off in full force, as the 400 medley relay team of Courtney Warren '10, Kelly Morris '09, Katherine Munson '07 and Rebecca Scheffter '07 took first in three minutes and 59.06 seconds. Woodward then placed second in the 1,000 meter with a record-breaking time of 10:31.35.

The Orange and Blue continued to roll as Megan Mongan '10 and Kristen Skroski '08 claimed the first and second spots, respectively, in the 200 free. Mongan's time of 1:55.88 was good enough for tenth best in Bison history. The Bison would rewrite the record books again as Warren touched at 59.38 in the 100 back. The women then claimed the first and second spots in the 200 fly as Munson touched in at 2:09.47 and Laura Goeller '07 touched at 2:14.27.

> "I am confident going into the end of the season that performances will reflect all the hard work that has been put in throughout the past few months."
> —Nikki Woodward '07, captain

The Bison continued to command the meet as they swept the one through four spots in the 100 free. The 400 freestyle relay teams then went one-two-three, sealing an easy victory for the Orange and Blue.

The women controlled the boards as well, claiming first through fourth in both the one meter and three meter. Eliza Massie '10 took the top spot in both dives, while classmate Rebecca Bersani '10 placed second in each. Erika Minerowicz '07 placed third in the one meter and fourth in the three meter, while teammate Allison FitzPatrick '10 placed fourth in the one meter and third in the three.

The men did not fare as well against the Mountain Hawks, despite impressive times. After a second place in the 400 medley relay, the meet opener, the Bison began to set the pace. A one-two sweep of the 1,000 free by Luke Trafton '10 and Patrick Stummer '09, who took first and second, respectively, hurdled the Bison into the lead.

Lehigh bounced back, taking first in the 200 free and 100 back, but was only able to gain a two point lead as the Bison placed second through fourth in both events. Bradford Bennett '07 then placed first in the 100 breast with a time of 57.95, good for sixth best in school history.

In spite of a first place finish in the 200 fly by Captain Matt Crandell '07, the Bison saw their lead vanish. Lehigh continued to close the gap in the last few events, and though the Orange and Blue continued to put up strong numbers, they were unable to hold onto the thin lead that they gained going into the last four events.

Both teams look to improve going into the Patriot League Championship.

"As we begin to taper (rest) for PLCs we need to stay focused on keeping positive mentalities," Munson said. "[We need to] work on the little things like starts and turns. We are more than prepared training-wise, now we need to focus on doing things right in the other areas."

The Orange and Blue return to Kinney Natatorium for their last meet before Patriots, hosting the Bison Invitational on Saturday at 12 p.m.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Michael Deighan '09 strokes his way to a second-place finish in the 100 yard breaststroke. The Orange e and Blue will host the Bison Invitational, the last regular season meet, at the Kinney Natatorium Saturday at noon.

Great summer internship... minus the paper cuts.

FINANCIAL FELLOWSHIP PROGRAM 2007

Get paid to learn from financial industry leaders and gain real world business experience.

The MetLife & New England Financial 2007 Financial Fellowship Program

Be one of only 100 college students from across the United States chosen for this paid summer internship.

We're seeking exceptional students like Casey Derbyshire from Bucknell University, who participated in the 2006 Financial Fellowship Program. Here's your chance to get real-world experience.

Apply Now!
www.FFPmetlife.com/news

LD# L0701BG26(exp0108)ENT-LD
MetLife and New England Financial are equal opportunity employers.

MetLife®

SUMMER INTERNSHIP

SAYLOR From page B1

team will need to use its bench more, especially with the injury to Hollobaugh. Using two players off the bench for a combined six minutes in the game against Army will be almost impossible to duplicate. It is important to give the bench players minutes at least so they can have some feel for playing in games so that they will be more prepared when truly needed. This is to take nothing away from the starters who have played so well, but there is a reason that there are more than five players on a team.

4. The passing of Barbaro, the winner of the 2006 Kentucky Derby, after a long bout with injury is painful for his owners, support staff and fans, but a blessing for him that any suffering he may have been experiencing is over.

5. Does there really need to be two weeks between the AFC and NFC Championship games and the Super Bowl?

6. No team from the NBA's Atlantic Division should be allowed in the playoffs unless it has a winning record.

7. The Philadelphia Flyers are so bad this season that the next closest team in the Eastern Conference, the Florida Panthers, has 18 more points than they do.

8. McNaughton is playing at an extremely high level right now. Not only is his scoring up in recent weeks, but his defense and rebounding have been spectacular. He has averaged 8.6 rebounds per game over the last five games, and has scored at least 11 points in each of the last four.

9. The Super Bowl will either be a great game or a blowout. I see nothing happening in between.

10. I think it will be a great game. With two weeks to prepare neither team has an excuse for not being ready for the other. This game is tough to predict. The Bears are better on defense, while the Colts are superior on offense. I may give a slight edge in special teams to Chicago, but could be persuaded otherwise. Both teams are well-coached. In the end I am going to have to begrudgingly go with Indianapolis and Peyton Manning. That way all the stories about Manning and great team athletes who have never won the "big game" can end.

WEEKEND SCHEDULE

Friday

MEN'S BASKETBALL - Navy, 9 p.m., Annapolis, Md.
WOMEN'S TENNIS - Pittsburgh, 1 p.m., Pittsburgh, Pa.
MEN'S TENNIS- Duquesne, 1 p.m., Pittsburgh, Pa.
WRESTLING - James Madison, 7 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.

Saturday

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL - Navy, 1 p.m., Annapolis, Md.
MEN'S TENNIS - Robert Morris, 11 a.m., Moon Township, Pa.
WOMEN'S TENNIS - Duquesne, 9 a.m., Pittsburgh, Pa.; Robert Morris, 2 p.m., Moon Township, Pa.
MEN'S TRACK & FIELD - Akron Open, 10:30 a.m., Akron, Ohio.
WOMEN'S TRACK & FIELD - Akron Open, 10:30 a.m., Akron, Ohio.
WOMEN'S TRACK & FIELD - Bison Open and Multi, 10 a.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
WOMEN'S SWIM & DIVE - Bison Invitational, 12 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
MEN'S SWIM & DIVE - Bison Invitational, 12 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
MEN'S LACROSSE - North Carolina, TBA, Chapel Hill, N.C.

Men's lacrosse poised for breakout season

By Wes Trowbridge
Writer

After an up-and-down season in which the Bison knocked off two nationally ranked opponents and showed flashes of brilliance, the men's lacrosse team will take the field again on Saturday against North Carolina in the first of three preseason contests.

Last year's team lost several close games en route to a 6-8 record but showed tremendous potential in road wins over No. 13 Penn State and No. 1 Maryland in double overtime. This year's team returns eight of 10 starters, including the sophomore attackman duo of Joe Mele '09 and John Togneri '09. Starting every game of their first-year campaigns, Mele led the league in goals scored and copped Patriot League Rookie of the Year honors while Togneri ranked third on the team in points and tied for first in assists.

For the second year, Head Coach Frank Fedorjaka named four seniors co-captains for the 2007 campaign. Kirk Klett '07 was second on the team in points the last two seasons and will play attack alongside Mele and Togneri.

Brian Gargan '07 started every game of his first two seasons at attack and midfield before missing the entire 2006 campaign with a torn ACL. Anchoring the Bison defense will be Greg Sowydra '07, a lockdown defender, and Paul Stansik '07 will return as one of the top long-stick midfielders in the Patriot League.

The team's goals this season are clear: they want to win the Patriot League Championship and earn a berth in the NCAA tournament.

"During the off-season, we worked harder than we ever have, and with all the returning talent we have, I think we have a great chance," Stansik said.

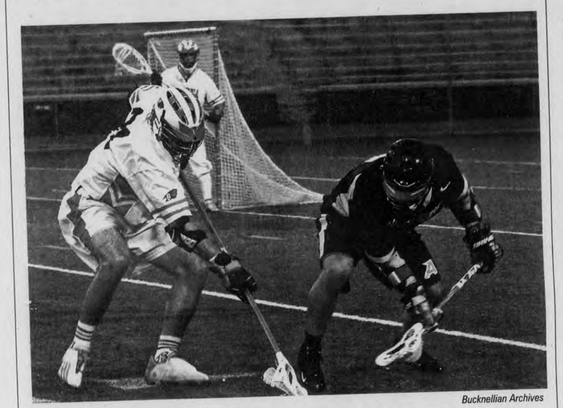
Fedorjaka's recruiting class also has potential to make an immediate impact this season.

"I think we have the best freshman class this year that I have seen. Several of them are pushing for starting spots and I would feel very confident with any one of them out there on the field," Stansik said.

Attackman Austin Winter '10, an All-American and New Jersey Attackman of the Year, should see significant playing time and make an immediate impact on the already potent Bison offense, as will midfielder Tim Brandau '10.

This year's schedule features four teams that finished last season ranked in the top 20, including home games against Navy, University of Pennsylvania and Penn State. The last time Navy visited Christy Mathewson-Memorial Stadium in 2005, the Orange and Blue turned away the then No. 2 ranked Midshipmen 8-7 in overtime. Navy is the defending Patriot League Champion.

The Bison will also play Ohio State, Air Force, St. John's, Holy Cross and Army. Their first game will be at home against St. John's on Feb. 17.



Bucknellian Archives

A Bison defenseman challenges an opponent in home game last season. The men's lacrosse team will begin its pre-season this weekend against UNC in Chapel Hill, N.C.

TRACK From page B1

first-place finishes at Penn State. He won the 400-meter dash in 47.59, which was good enough for a new school record, personal best and IC4A qualifying mark. Boyle was also part of the first place 4x400-meter relay team with Kevin MacLeod '09, Gregory Baxter '10 and Brian Mooney '08, entering the record books as second-fastest in University history.

Matt Forys '07 continues his success in the distance event for the Bison by winning the 5,000-meter run. His time of 14:16.25 was only 4.83 off the NCAA provisional mark, but was the fastest time by a Bison since 1982 and IC4A qualifying mark.

"It was amazing to be able to compete in a meet that had some of the top talent in the nation," Forys said. "A lot of our team reacted very well to the competition and performed at a whole new level."

At the Bison Open, James Meyer '08 entered the record books as seventh all-time in the weight throw with a toss of 16.65 meters, while Ryan White '10 placed third in the heptathlon, finishing with 4,365 points. The Bison went 1-2-3 in the 1,000-meter run, lead by Kyle Ramer '10 in 2:33.90, while teammates Adam Syty '07 and Conor McNamara '10 finished second and third respectively.

The Orange and Blue will travel to Akron, Ohio to compete in the Akron Open. The meet is a great opportunity for the Bison to see how they fare against some of the larger mid-west schools and the oversized 300-meter indoor track that produces faster times than the normal 200-meter track.

> "It was amazing to be able to compete in a meet that had some of the top talent in the nation. A lot of our team reacted very well to the competition and performed at a whole new level."
> — Matt Forys '07

Breaking away

Bucknell cyclist receives prestigious national award

Courtesy of Margaret Hartman

The cycling program has flourished over the past four year under the guidance of Todd Dowling '07. The men's team has grown to 20 strong, while a women's team has been added.

By Ty Clark
Staff Writer

Todd Dowling '07 was awarded the 2006 John Stenner Collegiate Scholarship from USA Cycling.

According to USAcycling.org, the scholarship was named after the late U.S. national team member and recognizes two student-athletes each year, one male and one female, who have demonstrated "outstanding leadership qualities in their respective cycling communities and their major accomplishments during their student-athlete careers."

Dowling, a biology major, said he chose to focus on his work off the bike more than his competitive résumé.

Throughout his college career, Dowling has been a singular force behind cycling at the University.

"When I arrived at Bucknell three years ago the team consisted of six members, and the oldest member was a sophomore. A year later, we reorganized the team and I took over the position of club president, where I helped to organize the greatest expansion in team history," Dowling said.

Two years later, the team jumped to over 20 members, including a newly spawned women's team.

"The growth wasn't just in numbers," Dowling said. "As the team matured, we learned from the past and gained experienced riders such as Mike Chauner ['08], which enabled us to train more effectively."

Dowling said it was not solely his individual performance that earned him the award.

"I emphasized my academics and the growth of Bucknell Cycling during my tenure as president on my award application," Dowling said. "The growth was the result of hard work from a lot of people."

Soon after, the team began to win more races, and in 2006, traveled to the Collegiate Nationals in Kansas with a full men's and women's team for the first time in history.

This accomplishment is magnified when the situation surrounding University Cycling is considered. Cycling is not a varsity sport. There is no coach, no manager and there are limited funds. Every aspect of the club is student-run. This setup has led to difficult work and contributions from every member of the team.

"I worked with the team's business guru Sam Camens ['07] in approaching businesses to sponsor the team," Dowling said. "I remember working with my teammate and roommate Steve Szwec ['07] to piece together functional bikes from parts and pieces we had accumulated over the years to give new members the opportunity to ride."

But even after finding the funds and equipment needed to compete, the team faced additional obstacles.

"Additionally, the team had to work hard to find a way to logistically transport nearly 20 racers to events as far away as University of New Hampshire," Dowling said.

The team's increased success has caused waves through campus and conference. Recently, the University hosted annual races—a tradition that continues this March when an estimated 300 collegiate racers will race on Seventh, Sixth and St. Louis Streets—which has helped to boost awareness on campus and in the community.

This is not just a campus success story. Eleven races were won by University cyclists last year, in what USA Cycling described as "arguably the most competitive collegiate cycling conference in the country—the Eastern Collegiate Cycling Conference (ECCC)."

Chauner held the conference leader's jersey for some time and has taken first in multiple men's "A" races in the past two years.

> "The cycling team continues to excel as we follow the example of our varsity peers in being outstanding student-athletes. We are working hard in preparation for what looks to be another successful season."
> —Todd Dowling '07

Contributions from other members have alleviated some of Dowling's pressure. He has been able to dedicate time to various honors societies and tutoring, two strong contributing factors in his recent scholarship

Dowling also sees this dedication paying off for the cycling team this year.

"The cycling team continues to excel as we follow the example of our varsity peers in being outstanding student-athletes. We are working hard in preparation for what looks to be another successful season," Dowling said.

In the summer, Dowling continues to ride with the WBI Investments non-collegiate team, composed of a number of college and graduate cyclists, including three other University graduates.

Dowling said he plans to continue riding with the team after graduation and is working towards a higher level of racing than he has attained before.

"I could say volumes more," Dowling said. "There have been a lot of growing pains in overcoming these obstacles, but the team continues to grow and strengthen."

Write for Sports
contact blp004@

Nancy's Nu-Wave Salon
look your best
Wax Specials
Eye Brows $5
Upper Lip $5
Bikini $15
Full Face $25
Full Legs $25
Lower Legs $15
Under Arms $10
Back $25
Main Street (Rte 45) Montandon
524-2315
www.nancysnuwave.com

Real Smoked BBQ!
Beef Brisket, Pork, Chicken, Ribs!
Sandwiches, Wraps, Salads, Platters!
No Reservations Needed! Call in for TAKEOUT!
SKEETER'S PIT BBQ
ON THE BLUFF
OVERLOOKING THE SCENIC SUSQUEHANNA RIVER
AT THE INTERSECTION OF ROUTES 11 & 15 SHAMOKIN DAM
570.743.2727
Daily 11:00am - 10:00pm
Sundays till 9:00pm
www.skeetersBBQ.com

In Lewisburg Since 1969
BRYNWOOD 535 Inc.
Rentals
Your search begins..... and ends here.
Professional 24/7 Maintenance Staff
Apartments (furnished & unfurnished)
Houses for professionals students families
Rental Garages Also Available
Office & Retail Space
300—3,000 sq ft
brynwoodrentals.com
611 Market Street, Lewisburg
ph: 570.524.2121 x 3

Men's crew team sets new standard of commitment

Bison focus on strength and productivity over strenuous and challenging winter break training program

By Brian Mulligan
Sports Editor

The temperature drops below freezing as the men's crew team peers out of its hotel rooms in Austin, Texas. The freezing rain begins to fall as the team brings the boats down to the water to begin its first practice of the day. Some question why the rowers even came down here to row, granted the temperature in Lewisburg is warmer than Texas today, but an inner force drives them forward. That force differs for each rower, whether it is the passion to win or drive to be a part of a bigger picture for the upcoming spring season.

"The trip to Austin had some fair weather in the beginning, but towards the end of the trip there was torrential rain and it was cold," John Conte '09 said. "These are obviously not ideal rowing conditions. It did however allow for coach to emphasize pushing us to the limit of our capacity."

Going above and beyond a person's physical capacity has been an integral part of the men's crew winter training program. In addition to the week-long training trip in Austin, the team committed to row one million meters on the stationary rowing machine, the ergometer. A million meters is 622 miles or the distance from Lewisburg to Chicago. The team was only allowed about two months to complete this daunting task before they arrived in Austin.

> "We continue to set new standards and records almost every day so I'm very pleased with the personal progress of our guys and our teams overall sense of purpose."
>
> —Paul Bugenhagen, head coach

The team also competed in an inter-team competition to see who could dream up the most challenging physical task to complete. The goal of this was to make the rowers think outside the box and once again, go beyond their limits. Conte won this "toughman competition" by dragging his parents' SUV over a mile.

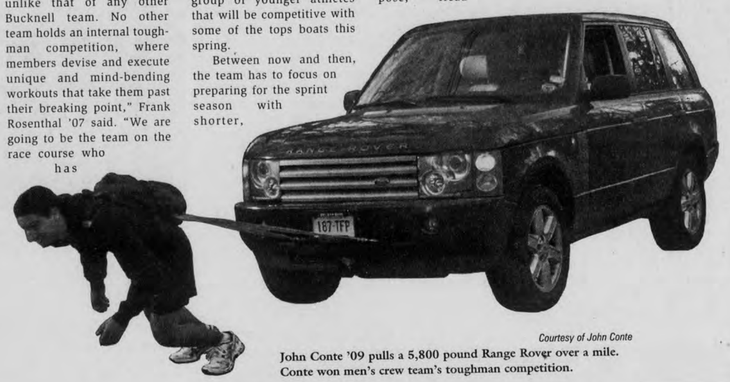
"The new men's crew team has developed a culture unlike that of any other Bucknell team. No other team holds an internal toughman competition, where members devise and execute unique and mind-bending workouts that take them past their breaking point," Frank Rosenthal '07 said. "We are going to be the team on the race course who has the mental maturity to put the hammer down for the whole race."

The team now looks forward to the spring season, where the team will compete in 2,000-meter sprint races against some of the top team in the nations. With the influx of two novice boats this year, the team has strong group of younger athletes that will be competitive with some of the tops boats this spring.

Between now and then, the team has to focus on preparing for the sprint season with intense workouts geared at increasing their core speed. This will be achieved with a strength program and indoor ergometer workout plan.

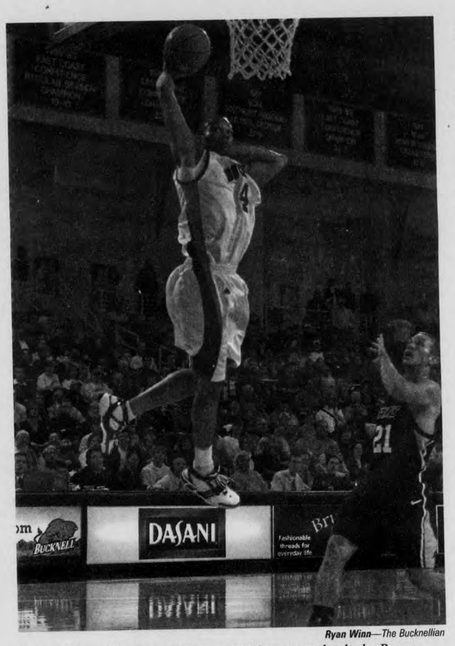
"We continue to set new standards and records almost every day so I'm very pleased with the personal progress of our guys and our teams overall sense of purpose," Head Coach Paul Bugenhagen said. "I think we have an excellent young team with great varsity leadership and I expect our team to continue its rapid development."

The next competition for the team will an indoor ergometer race dubbed Erg Armageddon held at Davis Gym on Feb. 10.



Courtesy of John Conte

John Conte '09 pulls a 5,800 pound Range Rover over a mile. Conte won men's crew team's toughman competition.



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Donald Brown '07 wins over the crowd with a spectacular dunk. Brown scored a team-high 12 points against Army, while adding eight rebounds.

MBBALL From page B1

The Black Knights scored the first basket of the game, and after that it was all Bison. Badmus hit a three to begin the best Bison half this season. The defense was stifling and the offense was electric. When the buzzer sounded for halftime, the Bison led 43-15.

Bucknell 74
Army 49

In the first half, the Orange and Blue held the visitors to 26.1 percent shooting, allowing only six baskets. The Black Knights did not shoot a free throw in the half and were outrebounded 18-10. Nine Army turnovers were a direct result of intense Bison pressure.

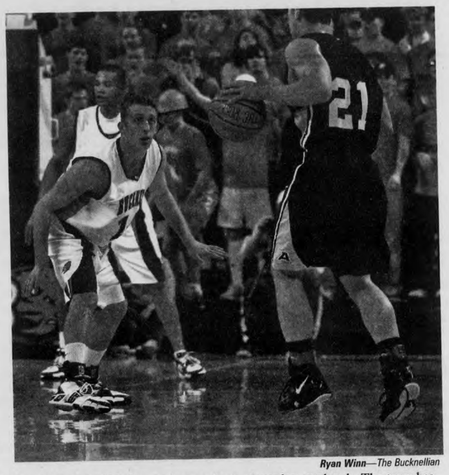
Offensively, the Bison made only one basket less in the first half than Army would in the entire game. They shot 65.2 percent from the field and 70 percent from behind the arc. Assists came on 11 of the 15 baskets. Brown accounted for two of the unassisted scores with steals followed in short order by thunderous dunks. This team effort was reflected in that no Bison attempted more than five shots during the half.

For the game, four Bison scored in double figures, with 10 getting into the scoring column. The bench contributed 25 points and 75 minutes. No starter would be required to give more than 27 minutes, a critical statistic with three starters averaging over 30 minutes per game coming in.

In the second half, the Bison simply coasted to the victory. Fourteen turnovers and 47 percent shooting in the half made for a sloppy finish, but the huge lead (as much as 35 points) allowed the starters to get a breather. Head Coach Pat Flannery '80 was unable to attend the game, as he had a death in the family.

"I thought that our focus and effort to start the game was fantastic," Assistant Coach Nathan Davis said. "I couldn't have been more happy with the way our guys came out. They were taking care of things themselves on the floor, which is what you want."

The Bison return to action tonight against Navy at Annapolis, Md. The game will air on ESPNU, beginning at 9 p.m.



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Jason Vegotsky '09 sizes against an Army player last weekend. The team has improved its Patriot League record to 7-1 on the season.

WBBALL From page B1

committed no turnovers, while also notching a career-high six steals in her 37 minutes and 28 seconds of play.

"If I have a big defensive assignment for the game, then I will take it," Champion said with a big smile after the game.

Photographer—The Bucknellian

Amanda Brown '09 drives to the basket in the women's victory over Army last weekend.

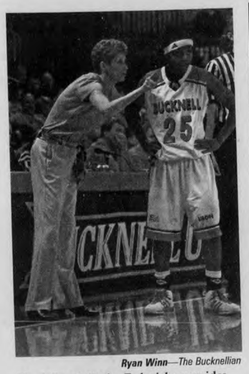
Seawright rounded out the Bison's starting five, playing all but three minutes of the night. Starting in place of the injured Lindsey Hollobaugh '07 (see sidebar), Seawright had 11 points, seven rebounds and two assists.

"Seawright really hurt us," Magarity said. "She is very aggressive and such a great jump shooter off of the dribble."

The Bison were able to stave off the Black Knights, despite their own offensive struggles in the second half. With approximately two and a half minutes to play in the game, Foster was able to convert a layup, while being fouled, off of a nice post-entry pass from Schober. Foster hit the free throw to give the Bison a 55-47 lead. A minute later, Schober blocked a layup attempt by Army's Alex Maguire that would have cut the Bison lead to four with plenty of time left.

"This game is a real boost of confidence for us," Foster said. "It's a boost of confidence to know that we can play 40 minutes and close out the opponent."

The Orange and Blue's next contest is tomorrow afternoon at Annapolis, Md. against Navy.



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Head Coach Kathy Fedorjaka provides advice to Kesha Champion '08 in a recent game.

Injury to Lindsey Hollobaugh

By Matt Saylor
Associate Editor of Content

Lindsey Hollobaugh '07 was in uniform, but sat out the game against Army on Saturday. It is unknown when or if she will be able to return to play.

"She is day-to-day right now," Head Coach Kathy Fedorjaka said. "We want to be smart. She had a little soreness today, and we want to get to the point that she has no soreness for her to return."

Hollobaugh sprained her knee in the game at Lafayette on January 16. She sat out the Bison's next game against Colgate, but returned for a home game against Lehigh on Jan. 24, where she reinjured her knee early in the first half.

"I told Lindsey if the team keeps playing this well, then we may just keep her out and save her for the [Patriot League] Tournament," Fedorjaka said. "She is going to be the one to make the call about when she can play again."

Hollobaugh is averaging 11.1 points per game, along with 4.5 rebounds and 2.1 assists in 35.0 minutes a game this season in 20 games.

Women's tennis struggles at Cornell

By Ellis Hudes
Senior Writer

The women's tennis team saw its first action of 2007 during the Cornell Winter Classic last weekend in Ithaca, N.Y. Ashley Globerman '09, who defeated Columbia's Milena Kachar, was the only Bison to advance in Flight A singles.

Paulina Gamboa '09 went down against Cornell's Tamara John in two 6-3 sets, while newcomer Renee Weissend '10 was beaten 6-1, 6-2 by Nisha Suda, another Cornell player. Carlin Calcaterra '10 made it a competitive match versus Cornell's Shayna Miller, but eventually fell in a three-set tiebreaker 5-7, 6-2, (10-8).

Meanwhile, in Flight A doubles, the Bison duo of Gamboa and Eva Lipiec '10 fell 8-2, but bounced back to beat Sarah Giles-Madden and Brook Jones of Patriot League rival Army in the back draw.

The Bison were more successful on day two of the tournament, winning a total of five matches. The stellar play of Caitlin Baffa '08 picked up two of those wins. She comfortably beat Jen Kucko of Binghamton, N.Y. in straight sets 6-3, 6-3 and then snuck by Columbia's Linnar Goswami in a three-set tiebreaker 6-3, 4-6, (10-5) for a place in the championship match. Baffa lost in the title match to Gayathri Balasundar of Binghamton 6-2, 6-1.

Camille Simonetti '09 also had some success in Flight D singles play as she emerged from a tight match with Whitney Tillman of Temple 4-6, 6-4, (10-3). In the next round, Simonetti lost to Balasundar in straight sets 6-3, 6-1.

Kirstyn Sotak made progress in the draw as well by getting to the Flight C back draw semifinals. Sotak similarly won a three-set tiebreaker followed by straight set losses in the semifinals.

JoAnna Grossman '09 and Baffa lost their doubles match 8-4 and then rebounded to reach the semifinals of the back draw before falling to Columbia's Allie Cordell and Kim McMenamin.

The Bison are ranked second in the preseason polls this year after making appearances in the Patriot League championship match the last two years, where they lost to Army both times.

This season gives Head Coach Rebecca Helt and her team another chance to finally jump that last hurdle and bring home a Patriot League title.

The team will open its season with a road match against Pittsburgh on Feb. 2 at 1 p.m.

The Bucknellian

A subscription is just the prescription you need.

Enclose this form and a check (made out to The Bucknellian) and mail it to:

The Bucknellian, Bucknell University C3952, 701 Moore Avenue, Lewisburg, PA 17837

Name _____

Address _____

_____

Phone _____

E-mail _____

__ ONE YEAR: receive 24 issues each week for the academic year for only $45, a $15 savings!

__ ONE SEMESTER: receive 12 issues during the fall or spring semester for $30. Please specify semester: _____

For more information contact The Bucknellian at 570-577-1520 or bucknellian@bucknell.edu

DOES YOUR CAR NEED SERVICED?

Our Service Department has $25,000 in new upgrades, including a new alignment rack, brake lathe, tire machine, and hundreds of hours of training for the techs. We now offer shuttle service to and from work or home. We have become a complete service center that can perform any work on any model, from an oil change to engine replacement.

Lewisburg Ford
Oil Change w/Multi-Point Inspection
$19.95 Exclusive Details. Must present coupon at time of service. Expires 12/31/06.

Lewisburg Ford
Oil Change/Tire Rotation w/Multi-Point Inspection
$34.95 Must present coupon at time of service. Expires 12/31/06.

Lewisburg Ford
2265 Old Turnpike Rd.
(Route 45 West)
Across From Brookpark Farm
Call Today! (570) 524-7267
Visit us on the web at www.lewisburgford.com

Write for Sports
Contact blp004@

BROOKPARK STATION Cafe
"Casual dining with a gourmet flair"
Fresh Sushi & Vegetarian Items
Catering & Takeout Platters
Book Your Graduation Party!
B.Y.O.B.
Wireless Internet
Mon Sat 8:00 - 8:00 Sun 8:00 - 2:00
1 MILE WEST OF TOWN ON RT. 45
542-FOOD (3663)

$250 CASH
Sign on BONUS
Call for details
3 & 4 Bedroom Houses
CLOSE TO CAMPUS
WHIRLPOOL
WASHER / DRYER
DISHWASHER
STOVE & FRIG
Newly renovated houses available 2006/2007
570-524-5714 / 570-412-4831
or 570-524-5745 /
570-490-2922

A MATCH MADE IN HEAVEN
THIS MVP IS NEVER WITHOUT HIS MVP.

PATRIOT LEAGUE MOST VALUABLE PLAYER CHARLES LEE &
BUCKNELL'S MOST VALUABLE PAPER, THE BUCKNELLIAN

Take a time out once a week and go one-on-one with The Bucknellian to stay up to date with all of the action happening on campus.

Enclose this form and a check (made out to The Bucknellian) and mail it to:

The Bucknellian, Bucknell University C3952, 701 Moore Avenue, Lewisburg, PA 17837

Name _____ __ ONE YEAR: receive 24 issues each week for the academic year for only $45, a $15 savings!

Address _____

_____

Phone _____ __ ONE SEMESTER: receive 12 issues during the fall or spring semester for $30. Please specify semester: _____

E-mail _____

For more information, contact The Bucknellian at 570-577-1520 or 570-577-1085 or e-mail bucknellian@bucknell.edu.

Undergrads gone global: Tours

Experience a taste of France's culture through exotic dining, lavish architecture and trendy shopping

By Cristina Settar
Contributing Writer

If you've considered planning a trip to France but have been discouraged, allow me to set you back on course. France is a beautiful country and any stereotypes are nothing but age-old myths that will (hopefully) cease to exist with awakened awareness of the richness of French culture.

While they do eat snails, better known as "escargots," I can assure you that braving the exotic foods is extremely worthwhile. You have much more to gain than to lose. After spending a semester abroad with the Bucknell en France program in Tours (pronounced "tour"), I can't imagine a trip to Europe without this fantastic city. Located just an hour south of Paris by TGV, a high-speed French train, there's really no excuse not to visit.

Nestled between the Loire and Cher Rivers in the Loire Valley region of France, Tours offers a wide variety of cultural, historical and social opportunities for students and tourists alike.

While retaining its old, European atmosphere the city is equally modern in feel, filled with dozens of chic stores, restaurants and bars.

In my eyes, it was the perfect blend of elaborate architecture and sophistication. Public transportation is well-organized, though unnecessary for most tourists. Primarily a walking city, Tours provides an affordable bus system.

If necessary, taxis are available as well. Many of France's celebrated "chateaux," or castles, are within driving or train distance.

In terms of accommodations, Tours offers a variety of hotels, ranging in both price and luxury. If you're spending on a budget, be sure to check the accommodations closest to the train station. They cater to travelers passing through the city for business or pleasure. Hotels situated near the train station tend to be the cheapest, but they're still clean and well-kept.

"Le Hotel Vendôme," located on La Rue Roger Salengro, or Roger Salengro Street, . provides quality accommodations. Run by a middle-aged couple, this hotel exemplifies French culture. Beautifully decorated, each guest room has a separate theme and color-scheme. The hotel is practically a steal, costing a mere 25 euros a night.

The owners even offer a home-cooked breakfast each morning for an additional five euros per person. When I had visitors from home, they all stayed in this hotel without any problems. Don't be nervous about speaking French with the owners; gestures will suffice for a few nights.

Tours is a fantastic city for shopping, boasting a wide variety of stores ranging in style and affordability.

If you'd prefer something slightly more classic, there is a Best Western located on La Rue Nationale, or National Street, which provides a more urban view, closer to the heart of the city.

Tours is a fantastic city for shopping, boasting a wide variety of stores ranging in style and affordability. Be forewarned: as tempting as it may be, the euro is significantly more powerful than the dollar, for which my bank account is still suffering.

If that hasn't sufficiently averted your desires to become absorbed in French fashion, simply walk down National Street towards the Loire River and browse. Interspersed with pastry shops and smaller boutiques, this main street has a "Galleries Lafayette" (comparable to a high-quality American department store), "Printemps" (the French equivalent of Bloomingdales), "Nafnaf" (a fantastic store for women's clothing), "Springfield" (very similar to an American Eagle or Abercrombie),"Pimke," "Promod" and "Etam" (lingerie goldmines) and many more. There's truly something for everyone.

Longchamp bags, which have become quite fashionable on the campus, are sold in several boutiques in Tours and are primarily featured at Printemps. Ladies, keep in mind that they're much cheaper in Europe, since they're marketed by a French company.

Each week (on Wednesdays and Saturdays, I believe), there is also a large flower market on Boulevard Béranger, situated perpendicular to National Street. With dozens of vendors selling freshly-cut flowers accompanied by a flea market, it's hard to miss! Exploring the city is truly the best way to find the best shopping outlets: you'll always discover something new each time you wander down a side street.

Tours is hardly lacking in cultural outlets that range beyond the materialistic. Museums, including Le Musée des Beaux Arts and Le Musée du Compagnonnage, provide insight into the flourishing artistic world of France.

If you're lucky enough to visit Tours during its annual Patrimony Weekend in the fall, access to all museums is free and unlimited. Various artisan workshops are also available, which are known to display incredible works of craftsmanship. If you've ever dreamed of seeing cardboard furniture or square umbrellas, this is certainly for you.

Cinemas exhibit independent French films and popular American films for reasonable prices. The university associated with Bucknell en France, better known as L'Université François-Rabelais, provides a good deal of activities for students, including theatrical and musical performances.

Tours also has its own opera and theatre, which are options depending on your budget. However, never underestimate the significance of walking through the Jardin de Prébendes, a beautiful park located directly across the street from my host family's house on Roger Salengro Street, or strolling near the Loire River with a loved one. The magic of Tours lies in both its cultural depth and stylish simplicity, without a doubt.

Courtesy of Wikimedia Commons

The Jardin Public, or Public Garden, is one of the scenic spots students can visit in the historic city of Tours. Other attractions include the Jardin de Prébendes, the Loire River and le Vieux Tours, a shopping district with a variety of bars, restaurants and clubs.

Don't be fooled by the seemingly tranquil appearance of Tours during the daytime. Although significantly smaller than Paris, the city boasts a unique nightlife that's appealing for college-age students.

Le Vieux Tours, translated as Old Tours, provides a good variety of bars and restaurants, including Paddy Flaherty's (a nice Irish bar), Café Chaud (a bar combined with a small dance floor) and Alexandra's (a favorite among students).

The Pale, located nearby, tends to be very popular among Americans, since all of the bartenders are fluent in English (relieved yet?)

Often, this bar attracts many foreign-exchange students from a wide variety of countries, including University students. If you're looking for more sophisticated bars, Le Newton (located farther down on National Street) provides a much less chaotic atmosphere, with chic mixed drinks and draft beers always on tap.

Clubs, better known as "discothèques," are also popular in Tours, especially at 2 in the morning. Pyms, which features two large, separate dance floors with various types of music, is a real hot spot for high school and college students. Thursday nights are "student" nights, but girls can normally get in for free on Fridays. If you're visiting Old Tours, check out Excalibur, another neat club and bar geared towards individuals of all ages.

Now have your opinions about visiting France changed? The next time you tour Europe, don't forget to stop in Tours.

WWW.TOYOTALIVEWEB.COM
AS A COLLEGE GRAD, YOU MAY BE ELIGIBLE FOR $400
ANY NEW TOYOTA OF YOUR CHOICE*
2007 FJ CRUISER
2007 COROLLA
2007 YARIS
TOYOTA | moving forward
TOYOTA
buyatoyota.com
*NOT ALL CUSTOMERS WILL QUALIFY. CUSTOMERS RECEIVE $400 FROM TOYOTA TOWARDS LEASING OR FINANCING THE PURCHASE OF NEW UNTITLED TOYOTA MODELS THROUGH PARTICIPATING TOYOTA DEALERS AND TOYOTA FINANCIAL SERVICES. SEE DEALER OR VISIT WWW.TOYOTAFINANCIAL.COM/FINANCE FOR DETAILS. COLLEGE GRADUATE PROGRAM IS SUBJECT TO CHANGE OR TERMINATION AT ANY TIME.

Mer Cares

Dear Mer:
I am an athlete and I have been all my life. Playing college sports is demanding and time consuming, but I feel like I might be sacrificing too much for the game. I love playing, but my coach makes the team work harder and harder, and lots of times it infringes on my social and even professional life. How can I continue to be a top player and also have a life outside of sports?

—Torn

Dear Torn:
I can only imagine the difficulty of trying to be a top athlete on a team with rigorous practices every day and having it cut in on your academic and social life. What you need to do is get your priorities straight. Obviously, we are at a very prestigious school and academics should come first on your list. You just need to plan your social life around your academic life and athletic schedule. This may not always work, but you should also take into account that while you attend mandatory practices, you are already making a commitment to the team, and you need to realize that you may need to sacrifice a popular fraternity party on a Friday night for an optional practice on the fields.

You chose to do sports in college, which is an accomplishment in itself, and it is up to you to show how important it is next to your social life. What I would suggest is to make a schedule full of practices you know about and classes. Arrange for designated times to study and stick to it to the best of your abilities. You should plan on getting papers and assignments done sooner rather than later. That way, when your friends suggest a night of bowling you will be prepared because you have already had your practice and can go out.

Love,
Mer

Dear Mer:
I seem to be having a problem because there just doesn't seem to be enough hours in a day to spend time with everyone currently in my life. I have a handle on my schoolwork and it isn't really a matter of how to factor my friends into my study schedule, but rather that I have friends in my dorm, my sorority, my classes, friends from home and my loving boyfriend. My boyfriend has even started complaining, my sisters in my sorority have been short with me because I have not attended many events with them and e-mails from friends from home leave me bewildered because I have no idea what is going on in their lives. How can I multiply myself so I can cater to all of my friends' needs?

—Perplexed Pal

Dear Perplexed Pal:
It is always hard to juggle all the different friends you make in college in addition to keeping in touch with friends and family at home and keeping your significant other content. It is good that you have a planned study schedule because that will ensure you keep your academics in line and proves you are organized enough to be able to spend time with the people who matter most to you. I would make a list of the different groups of friends you hang out with and decide which friends you may see every day in your classes and in your dorm. Then, in your schedule, add in some time for Greek events that you can share with your sisters. You can also add in maybe a half hour every night before you go to sleep to call up one of your best friends from home and catch up.

As for friends in your classes, maybe you can plan out times to study for that class together and you can knock out two birds with one stone (as long as you actually study and don't talk the entire time). When you're back in your room after class, drop by your friends' rooms in your dorm and ask them if they want to grab dinner or watch a movie on Friday night. Then, you can schedule in some one-on-one time with your honey on week nights when you both have done your schoolwork (or maybe even study together), and see if he wants to have lunch together the next day or go out and party after you watch the movie with your friend on Friday night. It's all about organization and challenging yourself to see if you can do it.

Love,
Mer

Please send questions regarding any topic to marc001@bucknell.edu with subject line reading "advice" or you may send a letter via campus mail to box number C1099. I look forward to hearing from you!

Write for features.
email ns022@

Braving a central Pa. winter?

From hot chocolate to sledding, students creatively avoid the winter blues

By Samantha Kantor
Writer

It seems appropriate that I am writing this article on a day that started off with temperatures in the single digits, as well as on a day that I find myself extremely happy.

But for some reason, many people have a problem juxtaposing happiness with a cold central Pennsylvania winter. After conversing with University students, I've compiled a few ideas on how to steer clear of the sadness that snowy days tend to bring.

"Light a fire," Andrew Clarke '10 said.

Clarke, originally from California and Texas, seems to be dealing with the near-zero Northeastern climate quite well. Lighting a fire is a great way to combat the winter blues. It is something unique to the winter season and can make a chilly day feel extra warm and cozy. Of course, if you don't have the means to light your own fire, you can always warm up a cold night by lighting someone else's. Wink, wink.

Stephanie Needell '10, a native of New Jersey, has her own ideas about warming up during the winter.

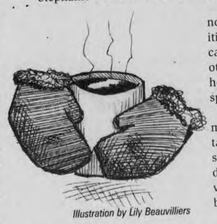

Illustration by Lily Beauvilliers

"I would do something like have a huge sleepover, make hot chocolate; you know, the kind with the little marshmallows," Needell said. "And watch a really good movie. Oh, and bring lots of blankets and dress really comfy! It's a great way to make it feel like a wintry night while still being warm and comfortable."

Needell stressed the notion of embracing the activities winter provides that you cannot engage in during any other season. Cozying up with hot chocolate is her way of spicing up the chilliness.

Those leaning toward more daring activities can take up sledding, skiing and snowboarding to enjoy a cold day. The Lehigh Valley provides great skiing and snowboarding venues.

Simply getting dressed up to brave the cold can evoke a bright smile out of chattering teeth.

"Anything that can make you feel warm and fuzzy when it's actually cold out is something that brings me happiness," Katie Kessler '10 said.

"Whether it be sipping on a coffee and watching the snow fall or bundling up in my favorite earmuffs and taking a walk into town, being warm is a fabulous feeling," Kessler said. "It makes the cold weather seem, I don't know—erroneous."

Though this winter has just begun its frigid fury, I think it's safe to say it will be sticking around for some time. So, instead of complaining about the cold, embrace it.

Coming from a cold weather climate similar to Lewisburg, I missed the feeling of my face freezing off as soon as I stepped out the door (OK, I'll admit, not that much).

But, truthfully, there is something about winter that strikes a chord within all of us, whether we admit it or not. Hopefully, all of you hat-and-coat haters can transform this February into your own winter wonderland.

Coffee: Drinking to your health

By Rajaa Qadri
Writer

Coffee is one of the most popular drinks in the world. In the United States alone, there are 130 million coffee drinkers. There are so many different types of coffee available in coffee shops that it's hard to make a choice — decaf, flavored lattes, espresso and cappuccino, to name a few. One cup of coffee per day is essential for the majority of college students.

For me, coffee is irresistible. I need coffee not only to open my eyes in the morning but also to refresh my mind and healthiest of drinks. There are a lot of myths associated with coffee and coffee addicts.

Aside from tasting good and smelling even better, coffee increases alertness and concentration. It is a stimulant for the central nervous system; it speeds up the metabolism and burns calories.

According to recent studies provided by www.fitnesscoffee.com, coffee consumption has been linked to reducing the risk of liver and colon cancer, Type II diabetes and Parkinson's disease. Coffee contains tannins and antioxidants that are good for the heart and arteries. Caffeine helps reduce headaches and can even reduce the risk of asthma attacks.

The fancy coffee that we are so willing to drink all the time does not have the same effects as plain coffee.

Studies by researchers at Harvard Medical School show that caffeine improves endurance in physical activities such as running, cross-country skiing and cycling. Caffeine also helps relieve migraines.

But here is the catch: the fancy coffee that we are so willing to drink all the time does not have the same effects as plain coffee. Drinking flavored lattes and blended mochas will negate the positive effects of caffeine due to high sugar content. If you like the lattes and mochas, try them with skim milk and less sugar.

Consuming excessive amounts of caffeine causes nervousness and muscle aches. Coffee also stains teeth. If you drink coffee often, try brushing your teeth more than usual.

The findings thus far about coffee intake and the effects it has on health are still inconsistent. For now, moderation does the trick.

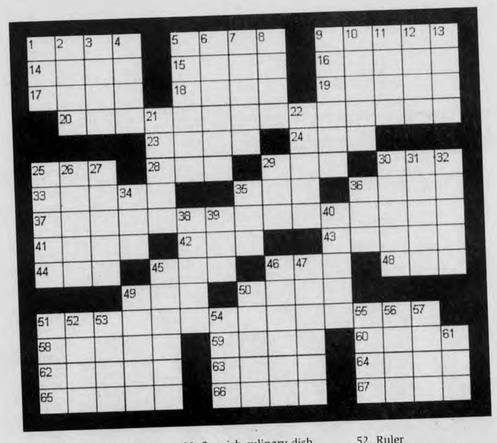
The Bucknellian Crossword

Across

1. True statement
5. Transitional point or time
9. Horrible
14. Home opponent
15. Fully aware of
16. South American nation
17. Classroom item
18. Stench
19. Stories
20. British literary figure
23. Farm noise
24. Mined material
25. Home to the Sun Devils (abbr.)
28. "Little piggy"
29. "No _, ands or buts"
30. Not hers
33. Bluegrass instrument
35. "Woof," from a puppy
36. Verdi opera
37. Secure
41. Initial tournament ranking
42. Tolkien creature
43. Thoughts
44. Blunder
45. Follower follower?
46. Special interest grp.
48. _-mo
49. Award-winning director Lee
50. Free from danger
51. Gym space
58. D-Day beach
59. Law
60. Actress Perlman
62. Mature
63. "_ well that ends well"
64. Directs a weapon
65. Synonym to 1 Down
66. Boring
67. Observe

Down

1. Craze
2. Inspires fear or reverence
3. "Man in Black"
4. Youngster
5. "Gansta's Paradise" artist
6. Ruined
7. _ market
8. Some government spending
9. Thespians
10. Orca
11. Flick
12. Peter Fonda 1997 character
13. _ is more
21. Helicopter part
22. Infamous Teamster
25. Treat cruelly
26. Less crazy
27. Below
29. Irritate
30. Walks in the woods
31. Perfect model
32. Authority to govern
34. Fictional President Bartlet
35. Play part or play a part
36. Include
38. Release
39. United
40. More polite
45. Far from the beach
46. Spanish culinary dish
47. Anew
49. Very pale
50. Pirate flag feature
51. "Beetle Bailey" creator Walker
52. Ruler
53. Back of the neck
54. Zodiac animal
55. Type of exam
56. Buckeye State
57. Written reminder
61. Inquire

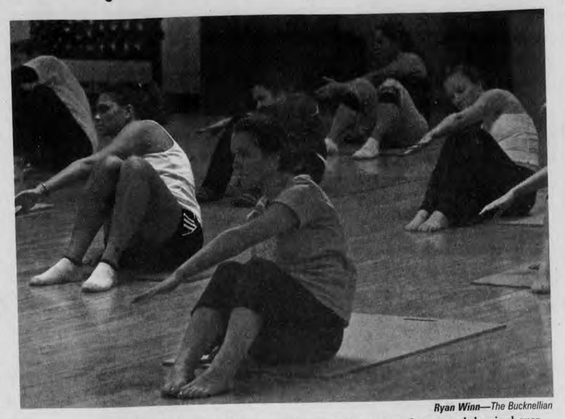


ByVo Crosswords

January 26 Answers

Creative ways to stay in shape

By Liza Banhalmi
Writer



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Students participate in a Wednesday afternoon pilates class. The classes focus on abdominal exercises to strengthen the core.

As you walk through the main entrance of the Kenneth G. Langone Athletics and Recreation Center, the first thing you see is the Krebs Family Fitness Center. Home to over 50 various cardio machines, free weights and other athletic equipment, this facility is great for any individual looking to stay in shape.

But one week of five rounds on the elliptical and free weights can get rather redundant. The Office of Recreation Services provides lots of other opportunities to stay in shape that are very different from L.A. Fitness or Bally Total Fitness experiences.

The athletics center also houses Kinney Natatorium. While the natatorium is used by the University's varsity teams, it is also available at various times during the week for recreational use.

But if you're lacking motivation to swim alone, or if you aren't a good swimmer, group classes are offered in the pool on Mondays and Thursdays. H20 Fitness provides a great way to get a cardio workout. It also eliminates joint pains that you would normally get from running or working your knees.

The 200-meter indoor track, located in the Gerhard Fieldhouse, is also available for recreational sports. It features basketball, volleyball and tennis courts in case you get the urge to play these sports on a rainy day. There are also squash and racquetball courts and a 1,200-foot climbing wall.

On the second floor, beyond the Bucknell Athletics Hall of Fame and across from the wrestling room, are the dance and aerobics rooms. These rooms host a majority of the group fitness classes. Whether you're into cardio, weightlifting or strengthening your core, there's bound to be a fitness class right for you.

Pilates, which is offered on Mondays and Wednesdays, is taught by Jill Tatarzewski '07.

"Pilates uses slower, more controlled exercises," Tatarzewski said. "You use your own body weight instead of outside weights as resistance."

Pilates classes concentrate on strengthening the core and working the legs with various abdominal exercises and leg lifts.

"It works a lot, but it's relaxing," Laura Schilling '09 said.

Spinning and cycling classes are offered as well. Cycling, offered Mondays and Wednesdays, requires a very high energy level and focuses on hill climbs and sprints, so you're guaranteed to break a sweat. Spinning, offered Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays, also focuses on various levels of resistance.

If you want a fast-paced workout with an adrenaline rush, cycling is for you. If you are looking to build muscle while doing a little cardio at the same time, spinning is the better option.

For aerobics, HIT and Step classes are offered. HIT uses a variety of different step intervals, while Step incorporates weights such as bands and dumbbells. For weightlifting, there are Power and Reps classes.

Power, taught by Tatarzewski, focuses on toning the abs and lower body with light weights. Reps, as the name suggests, focuses on maximum repetitions with minimum breaks for 30 minutes.

Lastly, there is Yoga and kickboxing. Kickboxing, offered Mondays through Thursdays, focuses on increasing strength with punching and kicking techniques combined with cardio.

Yoga is normally thought of as a calm, meditative activity, but it actually takes just as much physical strength as other strength-training workouts.

"Yoga is relaxing but it is also a physically rigorous activity," Samantha Young '10 said. "People think it's extremely easy but it actually takes a lot of upper-body strength."

Whether you are constantly on cardio machines or you barely make it to the gym once a month, there's a fitness program on campus that's right for you.

If you're bored with your usual gym routine and want a new way to stay motivated, group fitness classes are a great way to make new friends and get in shape.

Quidditch team sweeps University

Mythical sport popularized in 'Harry Potter' slated to debut in spring

By Erica Schiffres
Contributing Writer

Is your non-wizard status holding you back? Rejoice, Muggles! An intramural Quidditch team is in the works at the University.

Quidditch teams are also being developed at Oberlin College, Vassar College, Tulane University and Mary Washington College. In the fall of 2005, Middlebury's campus created the first club Quidditch team, followed by Marlboro College.

The arrival of this sport may surprise "Harry Potter" fans, since Quidditch is played on bewitched brooms that zip around the sky at the athlete's will. The rules of Quidditch at the University might have to be adjusted due to the limitations of Muggles.

Illustration by Juliana Su

Stephen Dewey '09, founder and president of the University's Adventurers Wanted Club and organizer of the Quidditch team, said the sport is a mix of "freeze tag, dodge ball, ultimate Frisbee and basketball." All players must run carrying a broom between their legs at all times.

The Quidditch field consists of three hoops assembled in a line on each side of the field. Each team has seven players. The keeper defends the hoops and blocks shots from chasers and protects against "bludgers," or dodgeballs. The three chasers run or pass the "quaffle," or in the case of Muggle Quidditch, a volleyball, down the field and toss it through one of the hoops.

Each successful toss earns the team 10 points. If the chaser's respective team is not in possession of the ball, chasers may wrestle the quaffle away from the other team's chasers. The two beaters on the team grab the bludgers and peg any players on the opposite team. Players pegged by a bludger must stand still for five seconds and if they are holding the quaffle, they must drop it.

The seeker, and only the seeker, can chase the snitch, or in this case, a sock ball hanging off the back of a runner.

The rules also prohibit beaters from touching the quaffle and chasers from touching the bludgers. Also, chasers can't move while holding the quaffle.

As soon as the snitch is caught, the game ends. The points are totaled and the team that caught the snitch earns an extra 50 points.

Dewey plans to start playing in the beginning of spring.

"Come spring, when the weather is warm, friends will come to the football field with a group of seven friends, put on team cloaks and pick up a broom and the different teams can play each other," Dewey said.

Students around campus expressed interest in the game. Even George Medrano '10, a basketball player, is considering Quidditch.

"[I might have to become] a dual sport player and come out for some games," Medrano said.

Another tantalizing edition brought to you by ...

Ms. Love and the Bubble

Dear Ms. O,

My boyfriend and I have been together for a while and having sex for almost a year. I wanted to spice things up a bit. You know ... different positions, dirty talk, role playing, etc. but he says he is not into it and ignores my attempts.
Is there anything I can do?

- Bored in Bed

Dear Bored in Bed,
It doesn't hurt to add new things to your sexual relationship. You can't have sex the same way all the time. What would be the fun in that? So to break up what can become routine, it's good to experiment every once in a while. New positions and naughty whispers between the sheets are perfect examples of ways to spice things up. The options are endless. Now to put these playful pointers in action...

Your boyfriend probably feels self-conscious. He may think it seems silly to dress up in costumes or say dirty things aloud. He might not have experience in those areas and therefore doesn't know how to react when you approach him in a new way. Pushing too hard can just make it more awkward.

Talk to him about it. Explain your reasons for wanting to try new things. Actually discussing the issue can help break the barrier on taboo topics and he may feel more comfortable about sharing his desires with you.

Give him some suggestions and if he's not up for your ideas, ask him for some. Take away the pressure by starting off slowly. Decide on something together that you both feel completely comfortable with.

If he doesn't seem to want to talk about it, surprise him with something minor. Just make sure you don't take it too far or do anything that could make him uncomfortable.

But maybe these new techniques are just truly not his thing. Sex is an equal partnership and should be treated as such. You shouldn't make him do anything he doesn't want to.

If that's the case, you can help your situation simply by setting different moods when you have sex. Sometimes, make it sensual and romantic. Light candles, take it slow. Mix it up other times by getting a little rough or a little dirty. Take control. Tell him what you want to do and what you want him to do. Just these small adjustments can add variety to getting busy and open the door to other possibilities. He may find he enjoys these twists on your sex life and wants to take it a step further.

If you both want to spice things up and you need some new ideas, try watching a dirty movie or reading the Kama Sutra together. Between the two, you're bound to find something new and exciting.

~ Ms. O.

E-mail me your questions at MsOintheBubble@yahoo.com or send them through campus mail to Ms. O, The Bucknellian, C-3952. All authors of questions will remain anonymous.

A Bucknell Tradition Since 1968

bull run inn

Open 7 days a week:
Mon. – Sat. 11:30 a.m.—2 a.m.
and Sunday 11:30 a.m. – midnight

605 Market St., downtown Lewisburg
ph: (570) 524-2572
www.bullruninn.com

SUNDAY BRUNCH
Menu Available 11:30 a.m.—2 p.m.

POP QUIZ
Tuesday's—9—11 p.m.
Specials—Prizes—Giveaways

Watch for listing of Thursday Night Bands
Check out www.bullrunninn.com

Experiencing Nueva Vida

Brigade brings a glimmer of hope to Nicaragua

By Nilanjana Saha
Features Editor

After three hours on a rickety bus and an hour-long tractor ride on unpaved, mountainous roads, 20 University students found themselves on the coffee plantation of El Porvenir, picking coffee beans for a day. Much to the surprise of these participants of the Bucknell. Brigade, a meager $5 was earned for their collective efforts in filling up a 160-pound bag.

Since Hurricane Mitch uprooted thousands and left half of Nicaragua submerged in 1999, the brigade, usually consisting of 25 students and staff, has traveled to the country twice a year to provide assistance in the resettlement community of Nueva Vida.

Hannah Irion '07 first stepped foot in Nueva Vida three years ago.

"I was floored by the poverty I saw then," Irion said. Irion returned last month as a group leader.

Political instability, natural disasters and economic inflations culminate to make Nicaragua one of the poorest countries in Central America.

Over the past nine years, the brigade helped build a health clinic in Nueva Vida, made a commitment to raise $30,000 annually to maintain the clinic and returned twice a year with medical supplies that the clinic accepts as donations throughout the year.

Besides health care, water supply and sanitation are some of the immediate issues facing the Nueva Vida community. The Nueva Vida's municipality within which Nueva Vida is located, is working towards improving its water supply chains.

The Jubilee House Community, a volunteer organization involved in the resettlement, set up women's sewing co-ops that have gradually become successful. The co-ops gave the women in the community an opportunity to make and sell their hand-made products and earn a living under decent working conditions.

"It's been a long struggle for them," Irion said.

Change is slow to take place, Phuong Nguyen '07 said during her second trip to Nicaragua last month.

"But the beauty of the brigade is the consistent effort to help these individuals learn as you go. To help a community, you can't pile on financial assistance and leave it. Volunteers are needed for medical care and rebuilding," Nguyen said.

Nguyen first participated in the brigade in spring 2004.

"It sounds like a cliché but it really was a life-changing experience. I knew that I had to go back," Nguyen said.

Felicia Desher '07 was surprised by the unemployment rate in Nicaragua.

"[What] really stunned me was how many people were out on the street. The reason being that sadly, they didn't have a job to report to every day," Desher said. "Unemployment is one of the biggest issues that Nueva Vida faces and I think a lot of their other problems would be addressed if there were jobs to be had."

Jacquelin Kataneksza '09 grew up in Zimbabwe based her expectations of Nicaragua on what she had seen in other developing nations.

"Many Third World countries in Africa are underdeveloped because they have failed to maintain and improve upon their infrastructure. In Nicaragua, there is so little infrastructure to begin with," said Kataneksza.

Photo Courtesy of Hannah Irion

Bucknell Brigade participants pose in front of the yellow bus, their main form of transportation in Nicaragua. The brigade raises money throughout the year to support the free health clinic in Nueva Vida.

According to Nguyen, the clinic has become more stable but many other issues, such as gang violence, have become more evident.

"We couldn't just walk the neighborhood as we did three years ago," Nguyen said. "Many youths do not have any other outlets and turn to gangs."

In a country with more than half of the population living on less than a dollar per day, education bears its price.

"The lack of materials and motivation for higher education makes sustaining students beyond high school exceedingly difficult," Nguyen said.

During their last trip, the brigadiers helped paint the newly built dentist's clinic and construct a second floor of the volunteer dormitory by using the highly technological method of throwing cement on the wall.

"It was a humbling experience," Irion said.

The team also helped dig up old telephone poles that were going to be transported to El Porvenir to be used as electric poles, and helped create cement blocks for building purposes.

"Although we certainly do some good, I think our biggest contribution to development in Nicaragua is to demonstrate interest and give the people another view of America different from what they may get on the news. It's really one of those experiences where you get more out of it than you give," Winer said.

This year, both Irion and Ngyuen noticed a change in the community's attitude due to the outcome of the recent election.

"[Three years ago,] people talked about the failed revolution of the '80s and there was a sense of despair," Irion said.

The brigadiers attended the inauguration of the newly elected president, Daniel Ortega, the leader of the Sandinista Party that was at the forefront of the revolution in the 1980s. "The atmosphere has changed. People seem to be excited and it is contagious. They are waiting for the government to make changes," Irion said.

Nguyen agreed.

"A lot of locals have a sense of hope surrounding the new administration," Nguyen said.

During their 10-day stay in Nueva Vida, the participants had an opportunity to venture out into the capital and visit several volcanoes.

"We went swimming in a volcanic lagoon. The water was clear and warm, we were surrounded by mountains—it was perfect," Winer said.

Returning to the University, participants are more conscious about making everyday decisions.

"It's a lot about awareness," Irion said.

"I was impressed and inspired by all of the progress that has been made since 1999. Sometimes it is easy to get a little discouraged by the intense and widespread poverty in an area such as Nueva Vida," Lauren Fohl '10 said.

"The experience goes both ways. We come back from the brigade with knowledge about a new culture," Nguyen said.

Photo Courtesy of Hannah Irion

Children from the resettlement of Nueva Vida gather around to have their picture taken. Due to the high cost of education and lack of employment in Nicaragua, many youths turn to gangs.

The Bucknellian

February 9, 2007

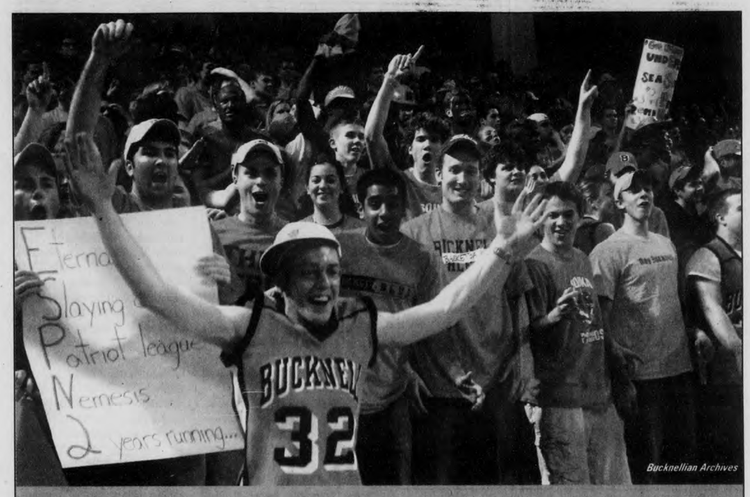
The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

Volume 139, Number 3 | Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue | www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Getting groovy

More students are getting involved with the University's standout dance program by majoring, minoring and just plain dancing.

See page A10



Bucknellian Archives

Showdown at Sojka!

Today's nationally televised Bison basketball double-header welcomes the College of the Holy Cross to Lewisburg. ESPNU will begin its coverage at 4:30 p.m. with the women's match-up.

The Bison are at the top of the Patriot League, winning eight of nine conference games, including a victory earlier this year at Worcester, Mass. The men's game is set to tip-off at 7 p.m. The Orange and Blue's lone league loss came earlier this year against the Crusaders, who have yet to lose a game against a conference foe. Preview today's "Orange Out" on page B1.

Endowment low in peer comparison

By Sara Roth
Contributing Writer

After falling behind its peers, the University is working to increase the size of its endowment.

The University's endowment ranks No. 120 in the nation—in the top 20 percent of all schools surveyed by the Chronicle of Higher Education. But it does not rank as well as most of its peer schools, including Lafayette College (No. 95) and Lehigh University (No. 70).

"Lafayette and Lehigh have each enjoyed extremely successful fundraising programs in the past," said Pete Mackey, chief communications officer.

Compared to Lehigh, the University has a poor annual giving rate. The annual giving rate of University alumni is 37.4 percent, according the Office of Alumni Relations. The 2006 senior class at Lehigh gave at a rate of 60 percent.

Lehigh targets its young

See FUNDS page A2

Katrina relief team speaks

By Bronwen Durocher
Contributing Writer

Members of the University's Katrina Recovery Team spent their winter break sifting through the rubble of Hurricane Katrina-ravaged Louisiana.

In December, the 25 participants, including students and staff, worked with the New Orleans Chapter of Habitat for Humanity at Camp Hope in St. Bernard's Parish, La. They shared stories and lessons from the trip Tuesday night in Trout Auditorium.

"Gutting the houses seemed like an impossible task," said Mina Okochi '09, one of the members.

They knocked down walls, ripped out insulation, scraped out mold, encountered cockroaches on walls and even fish in pools.

However, for the volunteers, the most heart-wrenching aspect of the trip was encountering the personal belongings so many families had to leave behind.

The students worked hard to bring some hope to region, despite the dire situation.

See KATRINA page A2

Tuition compensates for rising utility costs

Ellyn Ercolano—The Bucknellian

The cooling tower of the University's Physical Plant emits cooled steam. The cost of energy to run the University's utilites, such as this one, is due to dramatically increase.

By Carly Whitehead
Writer

The University's annual utility costs will more than double as its 10-year natural gas contract, which has kept costs frozen since 1997, expires. Starting on July 1, 2007, natural gas costs will increase from $2.4 million to $6.4 million a year. Dennis Hawley, associate vice president of facilities, said the contract resulted in significant savings.

"We've paid well below market price for natural gas, with average savings of a million dollars a year," Hawley said. "In fact, the last few years we have saved more than a million dollars a year."

Administrators have been anticipating the change for the past 10 years, and plans are in place to account for the increase.

Part of the recent tuition increase, 9.35 percent for first-year students and 5.75 percent for upperclassmen, has been used to prepare for the spike in utility costs.

Not all of the extra revenue has been used solely for this purpose.

Dennis Swank, associate vice president of finance, said that because of the planning, "this one-time change in costs won't be directly affecting tuition."

From now on, the University will buy natural gas through "a series of commitments to buy, spread over time" Swank said.

Ten-year contracts like the one the University is currently coming out

See UTILITY page A3

By the Numbers

$4 million
Projected increase in University energy cost

80 percent
Efficiency of the power plant which supplies the University

9.35 percent and 5.75 percent
Percentage of tuition increase going towards energy (first years and upperclassmen respectively)

10 years
Length of the University's natural gas contract due to expire

INSIDE THIS ISSUE

OPINIONS
The University ranks below its peers in terms of endowment. How can it improve its alumni giving rate?

A6

A&E
A&E reviews "Beer Fest," the latest movie from the boys of Broken Lizard famous for college classic "Super Troopers"

A9

FEATURES
Valentine's Day has a whole new meaning. Features brings you a two-page spread about what V-Day means to the University.

B8

SPORTS
The men's tennis team shut out Robert Morris University 7-0 on Feb. 3. Read more about the weekend in Sports.

B6

Public Safety Log

Thursday, February 1

ALARM – FIRE—President's House: Caused by employee.

HARASSMENT BY COMMUNICATIONS—Demosthenean Hall: Report of harassing phone calls.

Friday, February 2

ALARM – INTRUSION—President's House: Unknown cause.

PROPERTY – FOUND—Dana Engineering Building: Computer parts found in the stairwell.

VEHICLE ACCIDENT—River Road by the Physical Plant: Vehicle accident with no injuries.

ALARM – FIRE—Kappa Delta Rho Fraternity: Student cited for a candle violation.

Saturday, February 3

DOMESTIC DISTURBANCE—Seventh Street House: Verbal domestic disturbance between a male and a female.

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—Swartz Hall: Fire extinguisher discharged on second floor.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Swartz Hall: Exterior door window broken.

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Swartz Hall: Student cited for underage consumption.

DRUG VIOLATION—Bucknell West: Public Safety responded to a fire alarm and found marijuana.

ALARM – FIRE—Elaine Langone Center: Caused by steam on the detector.

ALARM – FIRE—Bucknell West: Caused by burnt popcorn.

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—Vedder Hall: Pull station on second floor corridor.

DISORDERLY CONDUCT—Trax Hall: Dead Canada Goose found in the fourth floor hallway.

Sunday, February 4

ALARM – SUPERVISORY—Kinney Natatorium: Alarm was caused by an employee.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Walker Street: Unknown person damaged a parked vehicle.

MEDICAL ASSIST—Smith Hall: Officer responded to an ill student call and the student refused medical treatment.

NARCOTIC DRUG—McDonnell Hall: Odor of marijuana was unfounded.

Monday, February 5

ALARM – INTRUSION—Langone Center Gallery: Cause by employees working in the ceiling.

ALARM – FIRE—Dana Engineering: Caused by heating and ventilation problems.

MOTOR VEHICLE ACCIDENT—Judd House: University employee may have struck a student's vehicle with a campus vehicle.

ALARM – FIRE—Spratt House: Cause was steam.

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—Vedder Hall: Unknown person(s) activated fourth floor corridor pull station.

Tuesday, February 6

ALARM – INTRUSION—Lowry House: Unknown cause.

ALARM – INTRUSION—Procurement Office: Caused by employee.

ALARM – INTRUSION—Langone Post Office: Unknown cause.

VEHICLE ACCIDENT—Loomis Street: Hit and run vehicle accident.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Bucknell West: Door damaged on left side of a Mod.

Nancy's Nu-Wave Salon
...look your best
Wax Specials

Eye Brows	$7
Upper Lip	$5
Bikini	$15
Brazilian	$25
Full Legs	$35
Knees Down	$20
Under Arms	$15
Back	$25

Main Street (Rte 45)
Montandon
524-2315
www.nancysnuwave.com

Be in the know.

Write for News
etu001@

University strives to boost its endowment

"Because tuition and fees do not cover the total cost of a Bucknell education, the annual spending from endowment income makes a sizable contribution to all students in the form of a 'silent scholarship."

— David Surgala,
VP for finance and administration alumni through many different type of programs. It hosts rallies asking not only alumni, but current students to donate. The school also has a Young Alumni Council, composed of recent graduates, who volunteer their time to create programs that encourage giving.

FUNDS From page A1

Lehigh also offers many programs for its alumni, including online career seminars, career coaching, career advice podcasts and an online network of all alumni job-search databases. These programs increased the number of alumni served through Alumni Career Solutions, an office dedicated to job networking, by 81 percent—with no additional staff or resources.

However, the University's endowment has been increasing. In 2004, its endowment rose 20.7 percent to $429.4 million. The Plan for Bucknell also contains extensive plans to increase endowment.

University President Brian Mitchell and his wife Maryjane are hosting events around the country for alumni and other potential donors, in conjunction with the Office of Development and Alumni Relations, led by newly hired Sam Lundquist, vice president of the department.

University students feel the pinch of the rising costs of education as tuition at Bucknell has reached an all-time high of $43,368. Even with an average financial aid package of $22,000, this sum is more than many can handle.

Tuition doesn't cover all of the University's overhead.

"Because tuition and fees do not cover the total cost of a Bucknell education, the anntual spending from endowment income makes a sizable contribution to all students in the form of a 'silent scholarship,'" said David Surgala, vice president for finance and administration.

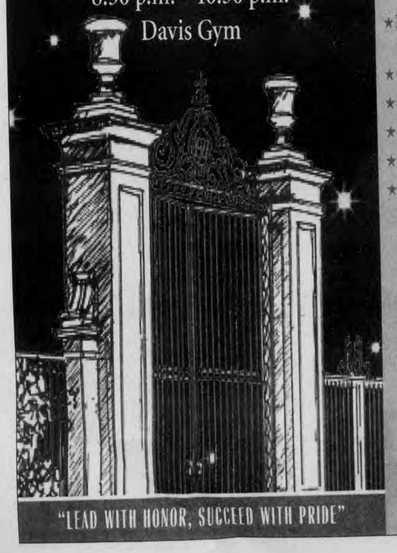
Students interviewed said it was too soon to predict when or if they would donate to their alma mater.

Kathryn Brownstone '09, said that she wanted to give to the University, but it would depend on her financial situation.

Emily Hurd '06, who received a named scholarship this year, said she plans to contribute towards the same scholarship next year.

CLASS of 2007 • SENIORS ONLY!

You are invited to attend the second annual
100 NIGHTS Celebration
COUNTDOWN to GRADUATION
SEMI-FORMAL EVENT
(21 to drink, IDs will be checked at the door)
Friday, February 16, 2007
8:30 p.m. – 10:30 p.m.
Davis Gym



"LEAD WITH HONOR, SUCCEED WITH PRIDE"

Celebrate with your classmates! Count down the final nights of your Bucknell career with food, drink, and music!

PRIZES, PRIZES, PRIZES!
★Free T-shirts for the first 300 guests
★Keepsake glassware while supplies last
★Gift Certificates
★Digital Camera
★iPod
★Airfare
★Broadway Show tickets
Drawings start at 9:15 p.m. Must be present to win.

EVENT SPONSORED BY:
2007 Homecoming Hosts & Hostesses, The Office of Development and Alumni Relations, the Senior Gift Drive Committee, and the 100 Nights Planning Committee

Bucknell

Students bring hope to La.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Professor Tammy Hiller talks to students about the recent Katrina relief trip to Louisiana. Twenty-five staff and students spent part of their winter break rebuilding homes for members of St. Bernard's Parish.

KATRINA From page A1

"The most touching story from our trip was how one man was returned his wedding ring," Jillian Harvey '09 said.

"It had been covered in piles of mud and dirt for 16 months, and he had no hope of finding it again.

The keepsakes we found really connected us to the families, in a way that the sheer number of houses in disrepair could not."

Nick Mozal '08 explained what made this trip, and the other students who volunteered, so special.

"The volunteers that dropped everything they were doing to go down and help out these people who were complete strangers. The people of Louisiana were so thankful for everything that the volunteers had done and couldn't express their gratitude enough," Mozal said.

One-hundred percent of Saint Bernard's parish was flooded and only 10 percent of the population has returned, according to the Strategic Recovery Timeline of Saint Bernard's Parish at www.louisianaspeaks-parishplans.org.

New Orleans homeowners may wonder what incentive there is to move back to their neighborhoods when there is no electricity in many streets, no sewage system and, by the end of December 2006, no government-funded disposal of debris. If homeowners do come back, unfixed water pumps could again compromise the security of their homes.

After Hurricane Katrina, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers agreed to repair the New Orleans' drainage pumps but even on Dec. 22, 2006 while the University group was in Louisiana, rainfall again threatened the area.

There are serious funding issues surrounding the restoration of water pumps, according to the Black and Veatch Needs Report for the Sewerage & Water Board of New Orleans.

Government funding is available but it is significantly short.

There is an $832 million gap in funding needed to restore systems to pre-storm functionality and to provide drinking water, wastewater, drainage and power to all of New Orleans.

Within a week of Hurricane Katrina in September 2005, University President Brian Mitchell and Provost Mary DeCredico pledged the University's help and support to the Gulf Coast Area.

Since then, the University has admitted 19 students from Tulane, raised over $22,000 for the Red Cross's efforts in the region and sent two relief teams composed of 20 students and five staff members.

Students who are interested in attending a future New Orleans trip are encouraged to visit the Katrina Relief Team's Web blog at http://blogs.bucknell.edu/KatrinaRelief.

Public Safety department adds diversity to its fleet

By Kevin Petersen
Contributing Writer

Public Safety has tried to ... immerse itself in several issues important to the University. One such issue is campus diversity.

The department of Public Safety has hired two female supervisors for the first time in its history in an effort to improve diversity on campus.

According to Public Safety Director Jason Friedberg, supporting the University's devotion to improved diversity on campus was an important aspect in the hiring process of the two supervisors.

Cheryl Sitler, the new operations lieutenant, will be responsible for helping coordinate subordinate personnel officers and organizing patrol, safety and security functions on campus. In addition, Public Safety Supervisor Patricia James will be involved in the general supervision, management and assignment of line personnel.

Public Safety has made it a goal this year to improve the quality of its services on campus by strengthening its relationship with the student body and taking on a more supportive role in addressing issues of concern to the University community.

"For too long the department of Public Safety has been seen as a law enforcement arm and entity," Friedberg said.

In order to improve its reputation this year, Public Safety has tried to invest its efforts in a greater variety of matters on campus and immerse itself in several issues important to the University. One such issue is campus diversity.

"As the University moves into the tactical phase of the Plan for Bucknell, it's great to see an office like the department of Public Safety bringing in different perspectives and fresh faces to continue the great work they have been doing under Public Safety Director Jason Friedberg," said Andy Logan '09, vice president of Bucknell Student Government operations.

In addition to its efforts to encourage diversity on campus, Public Safety has also become involved in speaking with students directly about what changes they think will help Public Safety become more supportive of students. In weekly meetings between Friedberg and the BSG executive board, various aspects of campus living have been discussed.

Logan said there has been a "receptive and open atmosphere where [Friedberg] listens to us and takes into account what we say."

Friedberg and other Public Safety officers have also participated in a variety of open forums on campus, such as residence hall programs like "PS and Pizza." During one of these forums, students living in off-campus housing expressed concerns about their houses being unlocked during the day, and after working with Public Safety during the meeting, arranged to have them locked 24 hours a day.

A common concern among students has been the role Public Safety and the Lewisburg Police Department play downtown.

"As it stands right now if you get in trouble downtown you not only get fined and punished from the Lewisburg Police Department, but also the University and Public Safety as well," Zaf Kamar '09 said. "BSG and the Committee on Complementary Activities have been working with Public Safety to help solve that problem."

In an attempt to build recognition and trust between police officers and students downtown, Friedberg said Public Safety aims to "continue working with BSG and external departments such as the Lewisburg police to better the working and formal relationships downtown."

The approach taken by Public Safety this academic year has involved more discourse and collaboration in its decision-making processes than in the past. By continuing to carry out its current strategy, the department hopes to bring continued security to campus based on a greater mutual understanding from students.

New risks involved with energy drinks

FDA studies identify dangers of mixing sugar, caffeine and alcohol

Supplement Facts
Serving Size 8.0 fl.oz. (240ml)
Serving Per Container: 2

Amount Per Serving	%Daily Value*
Calories	30
Total Carb	31g	10%
Sugars	30g	†
Vitamin B2	3.4mg	200%
Vitamin B3	20mg	100%
Vitamin B5	10mg	100%
Vitamin B6	2mg	100%
Vitamin B12	6mcg	100%
Sodium	60mg	2%
Energy Blend	1.21g
Taurine	1000mg	†
Caffeine	80mg	†
Guarana Seed Extract	25mg	†
Inositol	25mg	†
L-Carnitine	25mg	†
Panax Ginseng Extract	25mg	†
Milk Thistle Extract	20mg	†
Ginkgo Biloba Leaf Extract	15mg	†

*Percent Daily Values are based on a 2000 calorie diet. †Daily Value not established.

INGREDIENTS: CARBONATED WATER, HIGH FRUCTOSE CORN SYRUP, GLUCOSE, CITRIC ACID, TAURINE, NATURAL AND ARTIFICIAL FLAVORS, SODIUM CITRATE, CAFFEINE, CARAMEL COLOR, BENZOIC ACID, SORBIC ACID, L-CARNITINE, INOSITOL, NIACINAMIDE, CALCIUM PANTOTHENATE, MILK THISTLE EXTRACT, GINKGO BILOBA LEAF EXTRACT, GUARANA SEED EXTRACT, PANAX GINSENG ROOT EXTRACT, RIBOFLAVIN, PYRIDOXINE HYDROCHLORIDE, CYANOCOBALAMIN.

Courtesy of rockstar69.com

A Rock Star energy drink label shows the amount of caffeine in each serving. The entire can contains 160mg of caffeine, the equivalent to two cups of coffee.

Illustration by Juliana Su

By Emilie Linsenmeyer
Writer

Energy drinks have become very popular with University students as a way to stay up later and study harder, but studies conducted by the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) show the use of energy drinks in conjunction with the consumption of alcohol is on the rise.

When students mix energy drinks with alcohol, dangerous consequences arise.

Stimulants contained in energy drinks can mask how intoxicated a person is by suppressing the fatigue brought about by alcohol's depressant quality, according to the FDA. While a person may feel more alert when combining the two, the amount of impairment due to blood alcohol concentration actually remains the same. In addition, the caffeine in energy drinks further dehydrates a person's body, making it more difficult to metabolize the alcohol.

The health concerns associated with energy drinks have encouraged some students not to drink them.

"When I participated in sports, my coaches would never let me drink them, so I never got in the habit," Christen Longino '10 said. "Also, my family has a great deal of heart problems, so I just want to stay away from them altogether."

Parkhurst Dining Services offers Red Bull, Full Throttle and Rock Star to students for purchase in the Bison, Library Café and Seventh Street Café.

"We sell a lot of them. They are almost as popular as the rest of the other drinks," said Ryan Freilino '08, a student manager at the Seventh Street Café.

And many students take advantage of their availability.

"I rely on them to study and get through my daily tasks in college when I need to stay up late and get work done," Heather Brake '10 said. "They are so useful for college students or anyone on a tight schedule because they get you through the night."

Besides possible dangerous interactions with alcohol, this super booster may not be all it claims to be. Red Bull and Rock Star have roughly the same caffeine content as a cup of coffee and less than a double shot of espresso. The 80 milligrams of caffeine found in Rock Star become a problem when students consume the drinks excessively.

As reported by local TV station WHP-CBS last Sunday, caffeine overdoses can lead to high blood pressure and can leave even young people close to having a stroke.

A new energy drink, Cocaine, boasts the slogan "the legal alternative" and contains 280 milligrams of caffeine in every can, according to www.drinkcocaine.com. This incredibly high dosage of caffeine has caused many stores to refuse to carry the drink.

The verdict is still out within the medical community.

"I am not usually asked by student[s] or student-athletes about the use of energy drinks," said Shawn McGlaughlin, an associate physician at Student Health Services. "I would be prone not to suggest its use since its possible benefits may be short-lived and not substantial."

Campus utility prices jump to $4 million of are no longer available. The University has been using a consulting firm to devise a plan to purchase gas using a cost-averaging strategy.

UTILITY From page A1

Current gas prices are even higher than experts predicted a few years ago.

"We also have to look at the impact of Hurricane Katrina, which drove up the prices," Swank said. "Much of the nation's natural gas supply comes through the port at New Orleans. This means higher prices in 2007 and 2008, but we expect them to go down."

The price of natural gas specifically appears to be on the decline.

"Looking through 2011, projections show cheaper prices, because natural gas storage is at its highest level ever," Swank said.

Another way to lower natural gas costs at the University is to reduce energy consumption, much of which relies on students.

"Students can help out a lot with their consumption just by turning off their computers when they aren't using them," Hawley said.

The current trend shows that energy consumption per square foot of building space on campus is down.

"Even with more buildings on campus, like the Breakiron Engineering Building [which opened in the fall of 2004], total energy consumption has not increased since 2000 due to conservation measures," Hawley said.

The University's Facilities Department has also been working on energy conservation with the installation of a central chilled water plant for air conditioning, more energy-efficient light fixtures and occupancy sensors in new buildings.

The University gets its energy from a cogeneration plant that was installed 10 years ago. According to www.wikipedia.org, the cogeneration plants use "a power station to simultaneously generate both electricity and useful heat." The plant captures and makes use of excess heat that is usually lost in other forms of generation.

Hawley said the plant is 80 percent efficient, compared to more conventional power plants, which are typically only about 30 percent efficient.

"Not many colleges have these cogeneration plants," Hawley said.

The plant also results in less pollution, which is a great improvement over the University's previous power plant, which burned coal.

News Briefs

University launches new Web site

The University launched a new Web site entirely devoted to the Campus Master Plan this week. The site offers detailed information about the Master Plan and its progress. The Web site will have frequent updates and reviews of the Master Plan, and it will also gather opinions and suggestions from the campus community. As the plan progresses, visitors will be able to view sketches, timelines and reports. The site will also provide a FAQ section and a schedule of meetings.

"This Web site is an important tool for communicating with the campus community, especially alumni and friends of the University who are scattered throughout the world," said Dennis Hawley '72, associate vice president for facilities, on the University Web site.

The Master Plan will touch upon all aspects of university life, such as academics, athletics, recreation and residential life. The plan also considers the University's relationship with, and reputation in, Lewisburg.

WVBU loses safe harbor

The University's radio station, WVBU, has voluntarily suspended its safe harbor after complaints about inappropriate material on shows.

The safe harbor allowed certain shows freedom from content restrictions. As a result of the suspension, all shows may broadcast only PG-rated material.

The safe harbor will be reinstated in the fall, after safe harbor DJs have been trained on what is appropriate on-air behavior.

Electronics potentially banned while crossing street in New York

Carl Kruger, New York Senior Senator, introduced legislation on Wednesday that would place a ban on the use of iPods, blackberries, cell phones and similar devices when crossing the street. According to CNN.com, the move is in response to the deaths of three pedestrians who were not paying attention while crossing the street because they were distracted by their handheld electronic devices. If the legislation passes, violators could face a $100 fine.

Kruger described it as a "major public safety crisis." He claimed that he did not intend to intrude or complicate the lives of busy New Yorkers. He is trying to protect his citizens, which he feels is his job as a government official.

"What's happening is when they're tuning into their iPod or Blackberry or cell phone or video game, they're walking into speeding buses and moving automobiles," he said.

Silent lunches for elementary school children in Rhode Island

After three recent choking incidents, the principal of a Roman Catholic elementary school in Rhode Island has decided that students are to remain silent during their lunch period. Principal Jeannine Fuller of St. Rose of Lima School said in a letter that if the cafeteria is loud, then staff members cannot hear a child choking.

Spokesman Michael Guilfoyle explains that the administration wants "enough quiet" to keep everyone safe, not necessarily complete silence. One teacher told FOX News that students are allowed to whisper. The new rules have a mixed reaction from both students and staff.

"Kids need that social time, and they just need time to be kids at that age," Amanda Karhuse of the National Association of Secondary School Principals said. Students accepted the changes, but if a rule was broken, the student was held for detention the following day.

Red Smoked BBQ!
Beef Brisket, Pork, Chicken, Ribs!
Sandwiches, Wraps, Salads, Platters!
NO RESERVATIONS NEEDED!
Call in for TAKEOUT!
SKEETERS PIT BBQ
ON THE BLUFF
OVERLOOKING THE SCENIC SUSQUEHANNA RIVER
AT THE INTERSECTION OF ROUTES 11 & 15
SHAMOKIN DAM
570.743.2727
Daily 11:00am – 10:00pm
Sundays till 9:00pm
www.SkeetersBBQ.com

CAMPUS CONSTRUCTION

Alumni relations house to be constructed near campus

By Ahmed Kodouda
Writer

The University is planning to construct an administrative building that will house the Development and Alumni Relations' personnel, said General Counsel Wayne Bromfield.

The building, which has no official location yet, will be a replacement to four current facilities: Alumni House, Cooley Hall, Judd House and space being rented in South Ward. These locations are to be succeeded by the new facility.

Due to the current geographical separate locations of the Development and Alumni Relations, there have been some communication and technical complications between these departments.

Because of their interrelated fields of work, the need for hiring more staff within these departments is the main factor in the decision to create this new facility.

"The desire to have a single point of administration and office space for [the Development and Alumni Relations staff], together with anticipating the 30-35 new faculty members and support staff required us to consider moving the non-faculty members to an administrative office building separate from the main core of campus," Bromfield said. "That would free those buildings for other administrative uses or faculty uses."

Bromfield discussed the progress of the building's development.

"We are now into the eighth month of the master planning and conversations and consultations with architects and they are well aware that we need more office space for both incoming faculty and staff but they have not yet made a final or preliminary recommendation to where the location should be," he said.

In anticipation that the space is going to be needed, the University has investigated several options such as off-site rentals, sites for purchase, sites for construction and the administrative office building site on Abby Lane and Smoketown Road as possibilities.

The last option of an Abby Lane and Smoketown Road location has proven to be a minor legal battle for the University.

To protect one of the many options, the University had requested and received a permit for construction allowance and has complied with the zoning. Nevertheless, several of the neighbors challenged the grant of that permit citing safety issues, but a judge has upheld the Bucknell's right to construct.

On January 9, 2007, "An appeal against a proposed Bucknell University administrative building in East Buffalo Township has been denied by Union-Snyder President Judge Harold F. Woelfel Jr., opening the door for construction to begin," reported the Daily Item. "That land is zoned in a manner that is compatible with a University administrative building.

Ellyn Ercolano—The Bucknellian

One of the possible locations for the new administrative building is at the intersection of Abbey Lane and Smoketown Road. The University has been developing plans for the construction of this addition for eight months.

[T]he University had requested and recieved a permit for construction [...] Nevertheless, several of the neighbors challenged the grant of that permit citing safety issues.

If a site located away from the general campus is chosen, it would not be detrimental to students.

"This building is not student-related and was one that could be separate from the central core of campus in order to protect the central core of campus for buildings which do relate directly to the general student body. This building will not affect the academic or residential primary student facility use," Bromfield said.

Angie Myers, assistant manager for the student calling program, agreed with Bromfield that the area surrounding campus should be kept for buildings that would directly affect the general student body.

"I do know that I think it is important to try and keep the building on campus but ... we need to keep the grounds free for future buildings that would directly impact the students (i.e., music, art, housing)," Myers said in an e-mail.

An addition to the campus community is not a recent proposal.

"A new administration building has been in imagination for years," said Bromfield.

An architect firm has been hired for the purpose of consulting and guiding the University for almost eight months. A concrete and final decision on the location of the building is yet to be made nevertheless the University would like to have recommendations from the architect by this spring concerning the location and the logistics of the building.

"There is nothing definitive," Bromfield said.

According to Bromfield, a new administrative building is in line with President Mitchell's Plan for Bucknell.

"The primary strategy this new building would go under because of the likely personnel who would be deployed to it would be the financial strength. The original concept was to house the Development and Alumni Relations personnel in a single building so that they may be unified in technology, initiative and something as simple as meeting space," Bromfield said. "The additional resources that would hopefully be generated would then benefit all of the five strategies for the Plan [for Bucknell]."

Swartz set to undergo section renovations

By Nilanjana Saha
Features Editor

After 41 years of wear and tear, the C- and D-wings of Swartz Hall will undergo a much needed renovation this summer.

The C- and D-wings of Swartz, which face McDonnell Hall, were built in 1965 following the construction of the A- and B-wings 10 years earlier. While the infrastructure of the A- and B-wings has been changed over the years, the C- and D-wings only received new paint jobs and other minor repairs.

"There has been cosmetic upgrading over the years, but never a full renovation," said David Surgala, vice president for finance and administration.

The major renovation will take place over a period of eight weeks next summer, but students can expect to see some construction work outside of Swartz as soon as after spring break, said Dennis Hawley, associate vice president of facilities.

The renovation will include the addition of a new kitchen and a redesigned laundry room. The lounge above Uptown will be improved with new light fixtures and carpets. The windows will be replaced to make them more energy efficient.

Students living in these wings next fall will also receive new oak furniture instead of the steel ones currently in use.

The biggest structural modifications will include replacing the old electrical and mechanical systems to enhance the air conditioning and hot water supply. Currently, both are supported through the A- and B-wings, but the plan is to connect them to the central line near Bertrand Library.

The outward appearance of Swartz might not drastically change, but the living arrangements will be more comfortable, Hawley said.

"We will be doing our best to retain the architectural integrity," Surgala said.

The modified wings will include both a men's and women's bathroom on each floor. Adding new bathrooms will result in a loss of living space on the wings.

"[There will be] a net loss of 28 beds," said Daniel Remley, director of Housing and Residential Life.

According to Remley, it is too early to indicate how the loss of rooms will be accommodated. Plans to renovate Seventh Street House are also on the way, and 11 beds are expected to be lost from there, Remley said.

The Swartz renovation will cost approximately $7.3 million.

"The University has been planning for this renovation for a long time," Surgala said.

Since renewal and replacement are part of the annual operating budget, the renovation will not cost the University extra and can be funded by the money it has been saving towards this project for the past few years.

"The University has been disciplined about setting aside money for renovation purposes," Hawley said.

"[The cost] might seem like a lot. But it is much less expensive than building new beds," Hawley said. Constructing living space for each person costs approximately $22,000.

"This is the most challenging project we have taken on in terms of time constraints," Hawley said. The contractors will be working several shifts in order to finish the project on time before students move back in the fall.

"[The Swartz renovation] is certainly overdue," Surgala said.

Since Swartz is used heavily during the summer months, especially by camps and athletic teams, those individuals will have to be placed elsewhere.

"This is certainly an ambitious project, but students will appreciate it when they return to campus in the fall," Surgala said.

According to Surgala, when Vedder and Hunt Halls were renovated, students were placed elsewhere for the summer and the following semester. But due to increased enrollment, that is not possible, and the project needs to be finished within the allotted eight weeks.

Hawley expects the renovation to be completed on time.

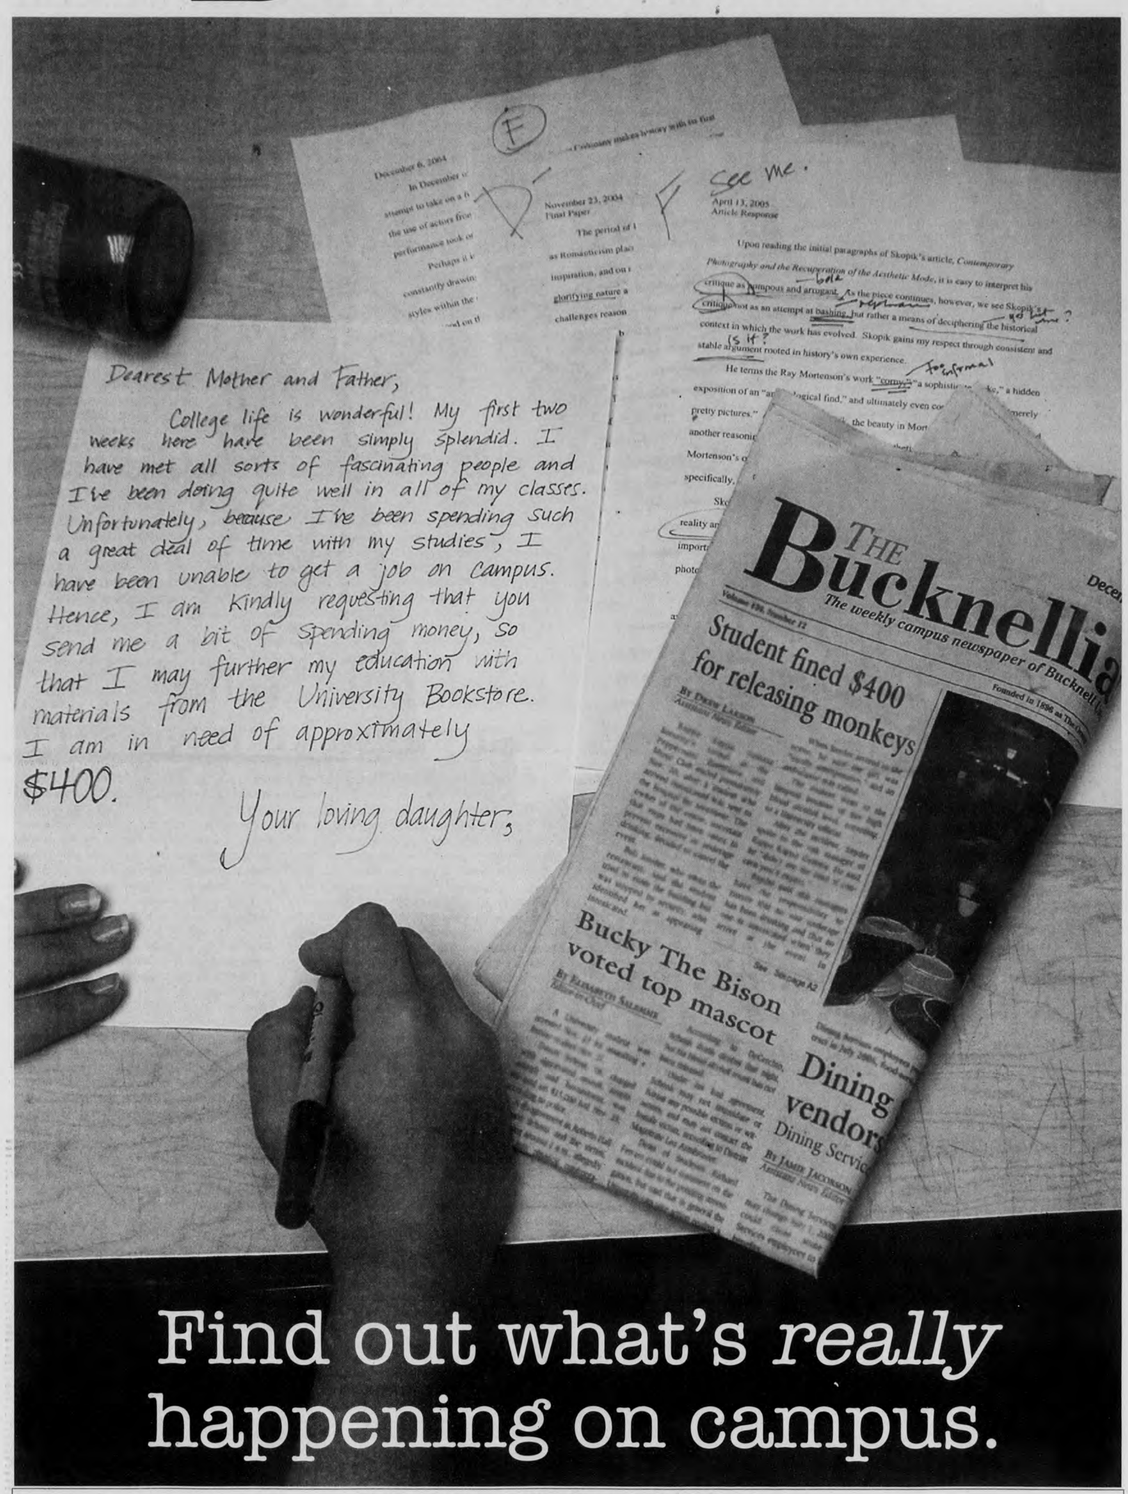
"It has been a collective effort so far, and we will get it done," Hawley said.

Recycle this newspaper!

BRYNWOOD Rentals
535 Inc.
In Lewisburg Since 1969
Professional 24/7 Maintenance Staff
Your search begins..... and ends here.
Apartments (furnished & unfurnished)
Houses for professionals students families
Rental Garages Also Available
Office & Retail Space
300—3,000 sq ft
brynwoodrentals.com
611 Market Street, Lewisburg
ph: 570.524.2121 x 3

New York University
China • Czech Republic • England • France • Germany • Ghana • Italy • Spain
Monday afternoon.
• Sit through slide presentation in art history class.
• Pick up pint of Ben & Jerry's.
6 months from Monday.
• Tour the Uffizi Gallery with art historian.
• Have homemade gelato on the Ponte Vecchio.
apply now and experience florence
NYU StudyAbroad. Be there.
www.nyu.edu/abroad/worldwide

THE Bucknellian



Dearest Mother and Father,
College life is wonderful! My first two weeks here have been simply splendid. I have met all sorts of fascinating people and I've been doing quite well in all of my classes. Unfortunately, because I've been spending such a great deal of time with my studies, I have been unable to get a job on campus. Hence, I am kindly requesting that you send me a bit of spending money, so that I may further my education with materials from the University Bookstore. I am in need of approximately $400.
Your loving daughter,
F
D
F
see me.
THE Bucknellian
The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell
Student fined $400 for releasing monkeys
Bucky The Bison voted top mascot
Dining vendors

Find out what's really happening on campus.

Subscribing to The Bucknellian for the 2006-2007 academic year is easy!

Enclose this form and a check (made out to The Bucknellian) and mail it to:

The Bucknellian, Bucknell University C3952, 701 Moore Avenue, Lewisburg, PA 17837

Name _____
Address _____
_____
Phone _____
E-mail _____

__ ONE YEAR: receive 24 issues each week for the academic year for only $45, a $15 savings!

__ ONE SEMESTER: receive 12 issues during the fall or spring semester for $30. Please specify semester: _____

For more information contact The Bucknellian at 570-577-1520 or bucknellian@bucknell.edu

The Bucknellian
Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue
Volume 139, Number 3
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu
http://www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Editor-in-Chief
Andrew Larson '08

Associate Editor of Content
Matt Saylor '08

Associate Editor of Layout
Lily Beauvilliers '09

Business Manager
Jared Napolitano '08

Senior Editor
Catie Heverling '07

News Editors
Evan Unger '09
Julia Fuchs '09
Michelle Laxer '09

Opinions Editors
Michael Dippery '08
Hallie Stebbins '08

Sports Editors
Barbara Perlman '09
Brian Mulligan '08
Shannon Pitsch '09

Features Editors
Nilanjana Saha '09
Brianna DelValle '10

Arts & Entertainment Editors
Janna Shapiro '08
Genna Jerrard '10

Photography Editors
Ryan Winn '08
Ellyn Ercolano '09

Advertising Managers
Meredith Reighard '07
Katie Casteel '08

Office Manager
Kate Wood '07

Circulation Manager
Adam Kahler '07

Cartoonist
Juliana Su '09

Adviser
James F. Lee

Op-Ed Policy

The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editor-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 600 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

Publishing Information

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

Subscription Information

Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Bucknell University, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print office.

Advertising Policy

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577- 1085. Copyright © 2007 The Bucknellian

The Bucknellian
EDITORIAL
Alumni relationships key to endowment

The University has the second lowest endowment of all Patriot League schools, according to the Chronicle of Higher Education's 2005-06 rankings.

Lehigh leads the Patriot League pack ranking No. 70, followed by Lafayette at No. 95. The University ranks No. 120, with American trailing behind at No. 168 (Army and Navy were the only Patriot League schools not included in the report).

The University's endowment didn't used to leave so much to be desired. In the 1999-2000 report, it ranked second in the Patriot League at No. 97, behind Lehigh at No. 65.

The University has not only slipped to a worse ranking (to be fair, so did Lehigh), it slipped out of its standing among its peer schools.

What happened?

The biggest factor may be alumni-giving rate. The annual giving rate of University alumni is 37.4 percent. At Lehigh, the 2006 senior class alone gave at a rate of 60 percent.

As the University hires new professors to facilitate its course load reduction, plans to build new administrative offices and a dorm, faces rising utility costs and embarks on implementing an ambitious strategic plan, it needs a hefty endowment to pay for the overhead.

University officials need to determine what compels its graduates to donate. Is it the perception of the quality of their education versus cost? Is it the quality of the campus environment? Or is it the school's level of alumni support?

No matter what, it's axiomatic that there is a direct correlation between the attitude of alumni toward their alma mater and their willingness to donate.

It would behoove the University to learn from the success of its peers.

Lehigh's success is largely attributed to the school's extensive career networking services, which keep alumni closely tethered to the school.

Perhaps the University needs to shore up its offerings to alumni, so it remains a more permanent and lasting presence in their lives.

One tactic that doesn't work is hammering the importance of donating into students' minds.

At last year's First Night, the University asked students to start thinking about their future donations, passing out bison-shaped piggy banks. First Night, held each January as a celebration of each first-year class' completion of their first semester at the University, is when students become official Bucknellians.

What should have been a celebration of students' coming of age as University students came across as a shameful request for money.

In many ways, the University earns it keep and more. Many alumni will deem the University a worthy beneficiary of their money. But the University should focus on what it can do to earn a higher alumni-giving rate, not how to best market the importance of donating.

As with most things in life, gifts are most meaningful—and most deserved—when they're unsolicited.

Letters to the Editor

Turnout for Bill Nye unexpected

To the Editor:

It has come to my attention that a Facebook group entitled "I Didn't Get to See Bill Nye Because Bucknell's Planning Skills Suck" was started in apparent outrage at the success of the Bill Nye lecture.

In reading some of the comments posted on the wall of this group, it is clear that some students wonder why they were not able to secure a seat at the lecture by purchasing or acquiring a ticket. First, let me say that as a free event, this lecture was not the type of event that one would expect to require tickets for. In fact, had we required students to pick up a free ticket for the lecture, we most likely would have incurred negative feedback about the inconvenience of having to pick up a ticket in advance for the lecture.

Secondly, this lecture was sponsored by the Student Lectureship Committee. This committee's funds originate from student activities fees and student government finances. Because students are required to pay an activities fee, we cannot charge additionally for an event that is funded from the fees that students are required to pay. It is our mission as a committee to bring quality lectures free of charge to the University.

Because the funds come from student fees, we advertised heavily that the doors of the Weis Center would open for BUID holders only at 7:30 p.m., while community members would not be admitted until 7:45 p.m. It is unfortunate that a student would arrive at the lecture at 7:45 p.m. and blame the fact that he or she did not get in due to "Bucknell's planning skills."

Some questions were raised about an overflow location for a closed-circuit broadcast of the lecture. However, the success of and attendance at the lecture was unprecedented for this committee, and we could never have expected the magnitude of turnout that we received. We did not fill the Weis Center when media figurehead Chris Matthews came last year, and subsequently we did not expect to fill the location for Bill Nye. The seating capacity at the Weis Center is about half of the student body.

Being an individual involved in various other programming committees, including Activities and Campus Events and the Concert Committee, I know that an attendance of 50 percent of the student body is virtually unheard of, and definitely unexpected at a lecture! Even had we provided an overflow location, the maximum number of people that we could have held is about 250. This number is a mere drop in the ocean of students, faculty members and community members that were not able to get inside. Additionally, our small committee could not have staffed an overflow location without incurring unbudgeted fees.

The Student Lectureship Committee thanks those of you who came and enjoyed Bill Nye's lecture, and apologizes to the unfortunate people who stood outside waiting and were never allowed in. We hope you will continue to support University-sanctioned events in the future.

Sincerely,

Mandy Hart '07
Student Lectureship Committee
Hospitality Chair

Bucknell 'Hello' campaign unnecessary

To the Editor:

I am writing to express my concern about the "Bucknell Hello" campaign, described as a pre-World War II tradition of saying hello to everyone, which would be returning to campus this spring ("A tradition of courtesy returns," Feb. 2). In addition to the natural surprise that verbal greetings were, apparently, a University tradition and not, say, characteristic of countless languages and cultures throughout history, the campaign has given me cause to question the direction in which my University is headed.

The Plan for Bucknell, with its stated goal to make the University the premiere undergraduate experience, gave me high hopes that things would be changing from good to great, but name tags and perfunctory friendliness were not exactly what I had in mind. Certainly, a premiere experience would be characterized by many intangibles, among which would likely be a strong social community. But I think that a day or weekend on campus would make it clear to anyone that socializing is not an area of weakness for University students, and certainly is not in need of a University-wide campaign, complete with posters, table tents and a top spot in the news feed on the University Web site, to encourage it.

Perhaps if students were introverted slaves of scholarly endeavors and academic passions who walked with their noses in books and talked of nothing but truth, knowledge and learning, "Bucknell Hello" would be a welcome and needed change. Sadly, I have sat in the Bison for hours without hearing one word of academic conversation and have been in courses where exams were rescheduled for parties and not the other way around. If Bucknellians are such dominantly and obviously social people, why, I cannot help but wonder, is there a need to make them more so?

Of course the Traditions Committee was only trying to do its part in making the University a better place; what we need most is not more smiling faces or friendly greetings but higher academic standards. Too often on this campus students see good grades for little effort as the entitlement bought by the high price tag of their education. The purpose of this University should not be to give its students whatever they want and make them as comfortable as it can; rather, its mission should be to push them outside of their comfort zones and challenge them to reach the limits of what they are capable of achieving as scholars, artists, leaders and human beings.

Sadly, even in the College of Engineering, with a workload that its students wear like badge of honor, few Bucknellians are ever pushed anywhere near to the limits of their potential. If the Traditions Committee really wants to help make the University the premiere undergraduate experience, I propose that it switches its campaign from hello to "Hard Work Bucknell." There could still be posters, table tents and campus mailings proclaiming a newly invigorated campus tradition, but instead of stickers, smiles and hellos, they would prepare the University community for increased expectations on what it means to be a Bucknell student.

Certainly more work, tougher grades and a higher standard on critical independent thought would not be received as well in student opinion or look as nice in a Web site press release, but it would prepare us better to excel in whatever we should choose to do with our lives.

Sincerely,

Dusty Schroeder '07

Minimum wage editorial offends student workers

To the Editor:

I am writing in response to the editorial "Minimum wage hike has minimal benefit" (Feb. 2), which I found surprisingly distasteful. The offending line reads: "The only on-campus beneficiaries of the legislation are students, who can cash in their extra $20 a week on a case of imported beer." This line is much more flippant than I feel appropriate for your paper and was personally insulting.

It implies not only that student employees will find their raise to be a paltry amount, but also that they would spend it irresponsibly, neither of which is true in my case. I attend the University mostly on scholarship and with the money I can earn during a semester. This means that I am constantly stuck balancing time spent working so I can go to school with time spent actually going to school and completing my assignments. For me, the extra money coming in means that I can afford to work a few hours less each week and, in turn, spend more time studying.

It is important to note that your comment is not insulting just to those students like myself who it clearly judges falsely, but is also a symptom of a negative attitude held by a large portion of the campus community. Examples of reverse snobbery and the underestimation of students occur all over, both among friends and in public spaces. It has crept into the normal language and humor of campus and apparently even The Bucknellian.

I understand that the authors of this editorial did not mean to be offensive, but it is in unguarded and glib statements like this that subconscious attitudes come out and The Bucknellian ought to pay more attention to them.

Sincerely,

Daylin Oakes '09

'Harry Potter' actor has the right to take on racy teenage role

By Christy Totten
Staff Writer

I have seen the Harry Potter movies so many times I can no longer recall the way my mind's eye used to picture Harry before the first four movies came out.

When I read the books or hear talk of the much-anticipated final book, the seventh of the series, I picture Daniel Radcliffe, Rupert Grint and Emma Watson, the young actors and actress who play Harry, Ron and Hermione. The British stars have played lead roles in four of the movies so far, with the fifth to hit theatres in July, and have embraced their characters with much success.

The thing is, Harry, Ron and Hermione are just that: fictional characters. At the end of the day it is Daniel, Rupert and Emma who go home to their families; not to their friends, four-poster dormitories or the Gryffindor common room in Hogwarts Castle.

We all know this, but sometimes it is easy to forget, especially now as Radcliffe readies himself for a new role as a troubled teenager in the British drama "Equus" to hit British theatres at the end of February.

The film is about Alan Strang (Radcliffe), who seems to be a normal teenager with a passion for horses. One night, Alan blinds six of the horses with a hoof pick.

The controversy exists because Radcliffe's character, in addition to his unprovoked attack on innocent animals, also has an erotic fixation on the horses, and, in one scene, appears naked alongside a white horse. In another scene, he is pictured naked with Joanna Christie, the actress who plays the part of his girlfriend, according to cnn.com.

In order to advertise for the film, director Thea Sharrock released some "racy" pictures, which are the cause for some of the criticism against Radcliffe. People feel that he is a role model, a title automatically assumed when he agreed to play the role of Harry Potter and should not have taken on this part. Children look up to him, and it is these same children and their families who have given Radcliffe the success he has had by supporting his movies. Radcliffe should not let his personal life jeopardize his place in entertainment as a role model.

While I do not find these claims to be unfounded, I certainly do not agree with them. Is not the point of being an actor to try new things, play different roles and do things under the guise of somebody or something else?

For the rest of Radcliffe's life, he will be seen and recognized in public as Harry Potter. Children will point and crowd around him for autographs, teenage girls will scream and make things uncomfortable; even adults will express their recognition of him. I'm sure Radcliffe knows this, so if he wants to expand his repertoire and test his limits with this new role, why should the public call it inappropriate? No matter what Radcliffe's motivation for accepting this role may be, even if it were out of frustration towards his unflagging notoriety as Harry Potter, that is his prerogative.

What is even more interesting is the fact that he is 17 years old; an adolescent under the supervision of his parents. I have to wonder what effect playing Harry Potter has had on him, and if his new role as Alan is just some kind of teenage media darling form of rebellion. Pondering this begs the question of whether his current role as Alan will continue to affect him in years to come.

Beneath what has become the face America pictures when it hears or reads about Harry Potter, Radcliffe is just a teenage boy with the same freedoms as the rest of us. The only difference is that, right or wrong, the public will have an opinion about every move he makes for the rest of his life.

Bush administration sacrifices Libby as distraction from Iraq

By Rajaa Qadri
Writer

Irving Lewis "Scooter" Libby, who served in the Department of Defense during the first Bush administration, resigned from his position shortly after allegedly being involved in an unlawful exposure of a CIA employee's identity in 2005. The FBI investigated the identity leak and claimed that Libby withheld some information about the CIA officer and mislead FBI agents. He was indicted with obstruction of justice and perjury.

While the media have given this trial and the leaking of classified information some coverage, a lot of journalists have failed to discuss the political issues attached to it. As a result, we fail to understand the real reason behind the Libby trial.

It is obvious that the government has been trying to protect its interests against Libby's. Due to mounting political pressure, President Bush has had to work hard to justify the war. Since it had been speculated that Saddam Hussein was developing nuclear weapons, the Bush administration pressured the CIA to investigate a connection between Niger and Hussein's attempts to buy uranium to build a radioactive weapon. Former Ambassador Joseph Wilson was sent to Niger in order to investigate such a connection. He was unable to find any connection between Hussein and Niger.

Wilson later criticized the Bush administration in an interview with Time magazine. This prompted government officials to discredit him publicly, which then led to the unlawful exposure of his wife Valerie Plame, the CIA officer. By trying to convict Libby of obstruction of justice as well as being involved in some sort of conspiracy, the government is trying to hide its original intent.

At the same time, Republicans worry that Libby's court case will force various top officials to testify in court. This would bring embarrassment to the White House, and in trying to cover up the details of the case would not let Libby testify properly.

This case is nothing but an attempt to distract people from the mess that the Bush administration has made in Iraq, and how the president routinely pressures the intelligence community into fabricating the information he desires.

As citizens of America, how long will we let our "democratic government" enter into wars with other nations for no apparent reason and then let them distract us by sacrificing people like Lewis Libby?

We are all speculating and hoping that the case will bring a bombshell, but it is not going to happen. At heart, Libby's trial will only likely intensify the already heated debate about Iraqi war and how the administration handled criticism of its Iraq policy.

The F Word
On the 'Bucknell Hello'

By Lenore R. Flower
Contributing Writer

On Wednesday, students and faculty alike were encouraged to don blue nametags and give each person they met over the course of the day a friendly "Bucknell Hello." Some students dutifully followed this tradition, which no doubt began at a time before over 3,500 students attended the University. Many may have even tried to memorize one another's names in order to follow the proposal that the University, like "Cheers," should be a place "where everybody knows your name."

While some may have scoffed at the idea of continuing this worthwhile tradition by writing "Obi-wan Kenobi" on their nametags or ignoring the friendly mandates made by the "Bucknell Hello" table tents in the cafeteria, I think it is valid to explore the reason that so many members of the University's population, despite knowing a person's name, dorm room and drink of choice, cannot bring themselves to say hello to certain members of the opposite sex.

Yes, I am referring to our beloved University's hook-up culture, a somewhat less traditional way of meeting people than the "Bucknell Hello." While it may be an entirely enjoyable way for some to spend a Saturday evening, come Monday the situation can shift entirely. Instead of forming any sort of lasting, friendly connection (regardless of how friendly things were the weekend before), suddenly, by hook-up culture protocol, a bridge has been burnt and you find yourself hiding behind your notes or diving behind the salad bar in avoidance.

To many members of older generations and some members of our own, the concept of a single-serving friendship (forged with the aid of a certain social lubricant) seems downright bizarre. While it is understandable that the situation between two people after a hook-up might be awkward, I am inclined to agree with those who find post-hook-up etiquette strange. If my face has been in closer proximity to yours than anyone else's in the class, don't you think we should be on better terms?

We all need to recognize that the hook-up culture has more potential problems than just the possibility of getting mono or a venereal disease (depending on your level of participation). To members of both genders, the emotional response to a hook-up can range from validation and empowerment to the equivalent of a kamikaze attack. For those of the female gender in particular, the situation can be complicated further by concerns regarding your reputation. Following hook-ups with the added negative energy that comes with avoidance is beneficial to no one.

It is universally accepted that individuals should not enter hook-up culture expecting any sort of relationship. In the spirit of the "Bucknell Hello" campaign, I believe it is everyone's duty to at least be cordial. Next week, when you see your latest hook-up partner in the library, resist the urge to run behind a book stack and greet that lucky guy or girl with a cheerful "Bucknell Hello."

War with Iran should be avoided at all costs

By Ben Sirolly
Writer

"I oppose war with Iran."

Reading these words in Thomas Friedman's recent New York Times opinion piece, my heart sank. I blinked a few times in hope that my fatigue from a short night's sleep was playing tricks on me, and that the sentence actually referred to Iraq and not Iran. Unfortunately, the words remained constant, and my world remained shocked.

A few weeks ago, President Bush addressed the nation and during the speech, he commanded Iran and Syria to stay out of the Iraq war. It is hard to argue with the President for taking such a stance—interference from Iran and Syria will likely only increase the violence and instability in Iraq—but how did we move so quickly from a public threat to a threat of war?

The building flow of news stories about our relationship with Iran increasingly point toward the possibility of a war. According to www.defenselink.mil, President Bush has warned the Iranians that their continued meddling in Iraq would cause the United States to "respond firmly." In lock step with Bush are Defense Secretary Robert Gates who threatened Iran stating, "If you're in Iraq and trying to kill our troops, then you should consider yourself a target," and CIA Director Michael Hayden who claims that there is a "clear line of evidence" pointing to the Iranians hurting the United States in Iraq. I can only hope this line of evidence is clearer than the path that led us to believing that Iraq had weapons of mass destruction.

In The New York Times on Feb. 2, an article discussed the possible release of documents towards Iranian involvement in the Iraq war. This document supposedly outlines the evidence supporting the administration's accusations against Iran. Though the pressure to release evidence to support the accusations is high, the Defense Department is hesitant to release the document. Contesting the American claims of secret information, Joost Hiltermann of the International Crisis Group claims that "the Americans have no intelligence on the Iranians, just like they had no good intelligence on the Iraqis [prior to the 2003 invasion]" (www.cfr.org).

Even without the Defense Department report, there is some public evidence that Iran has been supplying money and weapons to the insurgency in Iraq. According to the Council on Foreign Relations, the Qods Force, a special operations wing of Iran's Revolutionary Guard, have been supplying Sunni militants with weapons and small bombs used in roadside attacks. In early January, the U.S. Military arrested two Iranians from the Qods Force north of Baghdad, which supports the claims of the U.S. government. There is also evidence of thousands of Iranian operatives entering Iraq, with some experts placing that number as high as thirty thousand. However, the Iranian ambassador to Iraq claims that his country plans on helping the Iraqi security force and that these operatives are doing so. In any case, Iran is certainly involving itself in Iraq.

> "We are drastically losing influence and power in the world because we have tried to rule with an iron fist. By acting unilaterally and becoming a tired occupier in Iraq we have shown our weakness."

In response to this threat, there has been a movement in the press and the inner circles of Washington toward talk of war with Iran. On the ground, the Bush administration has ordered U.S. forces in Iraq to "kill" Iranian agents or diplomats who appear threatening and the Air Force has begun patrolling the Iraq-Iran border. This buildup has caused one reporter from the Toronto Sun to assert that "the Bush-Cheney administration seems hell-bent on provoking war with Iran."

I believe that we must resist the urge to go to war in Iran. Iran does not present a significant threat to the United States' objectives in Iraq. There, the Shia militias account for the majority of U.S. resistance, and the Iranians are supplying the Sunnis. Lawrence J. Korb of the Center for American Progress explains that "If Iran were to go away today, the situation in Iraq would not change dramatically." Of course, we must take Iran seriously as a threat, being a nation that is arming militias who are actively fighting Americans, but at this point they are the least of our problems.

An attack on Iran will mean increased rather than reduced interference in Iraq. Any hostile actions on our part will not cripple Iran's ability to send weaponry and people to Iraq — the forces required for that attack are tied up in occupying Iran's neighbors to the east and west–but it will give them ample reason to send more weaponry and fighters.

Finally, Iran is a fledgling democracy of the kind we are trying to create in Iraq. They are defined by the CIA as a "theocratic republic," which anchors the ideals of a republican government in a cultural background of Islam. They have popular elections for president as well as a unicameral, popularly elected assembly for a legislative branch. Granted, they are not completely democratic, a council of unelected clerical leaders holds great sway, but Iran is in many ways the shining light of democratic hope that Bush is hoping Iraq to be.

What we must do is define severe economic and political repercussions for any Iranian aggression in Iraq. We must appeal to Russia and China to cut off their oil purchases from Iran in the case that the Iranians do not comply. We must hold a hard line against any country that interferes in a negative way in Iraq. On the other side of the coin, we should accept Iran's offer to assist in Iraq, but only under the conditions that they work side by side with both Sunnis and Shias. This will be an uneasy truce, but any other involvement will be seen by the Shias as a direct threat.

We are drastically losing influence and power in the world because we have tried to rule with an iron fist. By acting unilaterally and becoming a tired occupier in Iraq we have shown our weakness. If we continue to allow President Bush to pursue military objectives without any oversight, we will undoubtedly fail in the Middle East. If we are asked to go to war in Iran, then we must answer in one collective and resounding voice, for the good of our nation and the Middle East: No.

"Freedom of the press, if it means anything at all, means the freedom to criticize and oppose."

- Eric Arthur Blair

Write for Ops. E-mail mdippery@

Spoiler Alert!

By Matt Saylor
Associate Editor of Content

"Grey's Anatomy"—Last night's episode was the first of three to deal with a ferry boat accident that sent a team of Seattle Grace's finest to the scene. The show's public relations' department is very good at limiting the amount of information it releases regarding future plot lines, so not much is known about future occurrences on the show beyond this emergency arc, or even how this arc will end. For those who are a little behind, some current storylines include the marriage of Callie to George, the engagement of Christina to Burke, the impending retirement of the Chief and Addison's budding and secretive relationships with Karev and Sloan.

The Chief is now going through a divorce with his estranged wife. Will that change his retirement plans? Meredith and Derrick's relationship has taken a backseat to the others on the show, but how long can that last? There is never a dull moment on this show.

"The Office"—Those of you looking for more development in the Jim-Pam relationship should pay close attention to the happenings in the next two weeks. Karen's relationship with Jim and Roy's pursuit to win back Pam will help fuel the fires. Michael and Jan will make their relationship public at a corporate party during the Feb. 22 episode, "Cocktails," and this Thursday, Michael will accompany Ryan to his business school.

Someone announced that Ed Helms has become a series regular, so when Andy returns from his anger management classes (not for a couple more episodes) it will be permanent. I wonder what Dwight will think about that?

"Lost" –This week's episode certainly was a return to form for the show, wasn't it? For those of you who were tired of episodes focusing only on Jack, Kate, Sawyer and the Others, have no fear. Locke, Sayid, Charlie, Claire and everyone else will be back in a prominent way before you know it. Look for the Feb. 14 episode to focus on Desmond, as Charlie and Hurley try to figure out why he has been acting so strange since the hatch blew up. My guess is because he was in a hatch that blew up.

"24"—The Feb. 12 installment will feature two hours of Jack and the gang, so be sure to tune in at 8 p.m. instead of 9. Also, Feb. 19 will feature the return of President Logan. Rumor is that Mrs. Logan will also make at least one appearance this season. Rick Schroeder will soon be joining the cast as a CTU agent. Plan on his character working closely with Jack.

"Scrubs"—Here is a hint about the character who will die later this year: he or she appeared in the show's premiere episode in 2001.

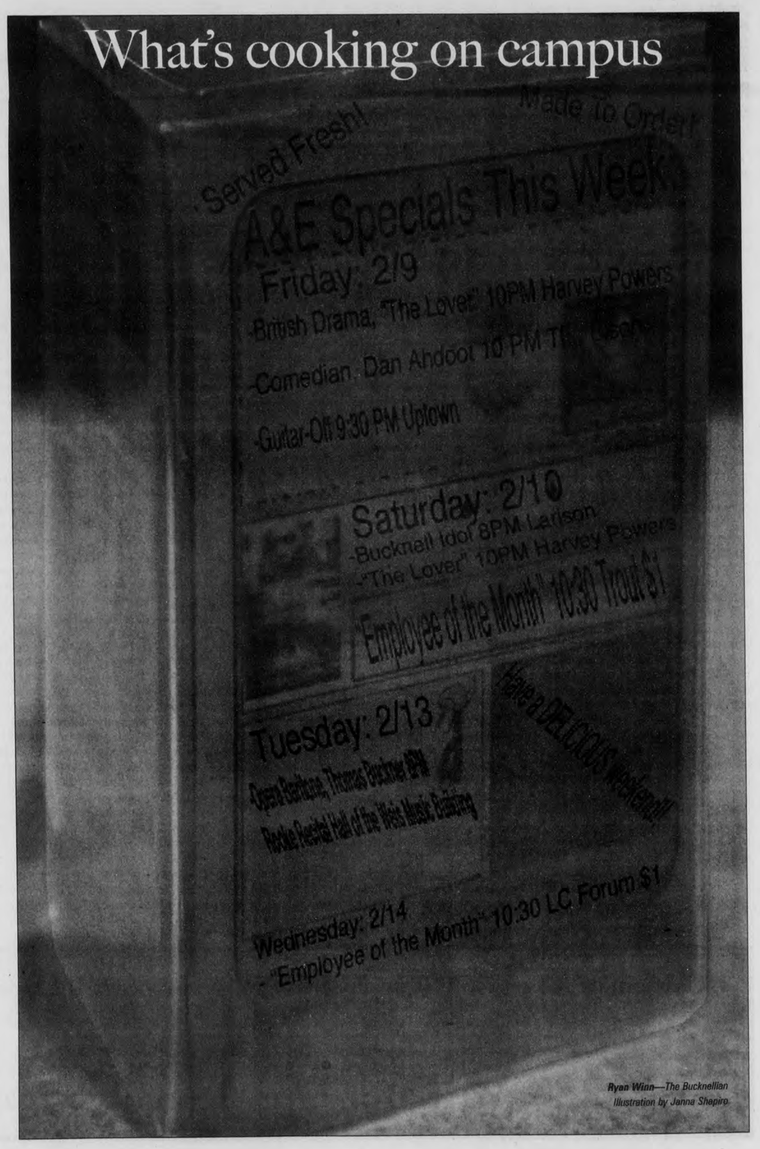
In other news, E! reported that Keri Russell will make a couple of appearances on the show at the end of the season. Her character is said to be Elliot's college roommate, but no further information about her role is known.

Idol hopefuls belt out vocals

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Students (from left: Sheridan Tennant '07, Kerry Flanigan '09 and Will Helmuth '09) vie for the title of Bucknell Idol last Friday in Larsion Dining Hall. After performing in front of their peers, the contestants heard from the panel of judges and the audience was given the opportunity to rate each performance. At the end of the night, five singers (Tennant, Helmuth, Casey Hubert '09, Amanda Fernandez '08 and Karen Grabowski '07) were the finalists chosen to compete again tomorrow at 9 p.m. in Larison.

What's cooking on campus



Served Fresh!
Made to Order
A&E Specials This Week
Friday: 2/9
British Drama, "The Lover" 10PM Harvey Powers
Comedian Dan Ahdoot 10 PM TH Open
Guitar-Off 9:30 PM Uptown
Saturday: 2/10
-Bucknell Idol 8PM Larison
-"The Lover" 10PM Harvey Powers
Employee of the Month" 10:30 Trout's!
Tuesday: 2/13
Have a DELOOS weekend!
Wednesday: 2/14
- "Employee of the Month" 10:30 LC Forum $1

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian
Illustration by Janna Shapiro

"Turn your Power ON and Add LIFE to your Years!"
MORRISON'S ADVANCED CHIROPRACTIC CARE
Michael D. Morrison D.C.
1205 W Market Street
Lewisburg, PA 17837
Office: 570-523-1221
A Healthy Spine Equals a Healthy YOU!
Bucknell Students may receive a free exam and x-rays (if needed) with mention of this advertisement.

A Bucknell Tradition Since
bull run inn
Open 7 days a week:
Mon. – Sat. 11:30 a.m.—2 a.m.
and Sunday 11:30 a.m. – midnight
605 Market St., downtown Lewisburg
ph: (570) 524-2572
www.bullrunninn.com
SUNDAY BRUNCH
Menu Available 11:30 a.m.—2 p.m.
POP QUIZ
Tuesday's—9—11 p.m.
Specials—Prizes—GiveawayS
Valentine's Day - February 14
Dinner Specials plus a complimentary flower for your date !
Watch for listing of Thursday Night Bands
Check out www.bullrunninn.com

'Beerfest' a pint full of laughs

By Erik Zager
Contributing Writer

❖ Movie Review

"Supertroopers" will go down as a quintessential college classic for Generation Y. So when Broken Lizard, the comedy group behind "Supertroopers," produces a new film, every college student in need of quality procrastination should take notice. The group's vulgar theatrics can force the most hardcore bookworm to put down his or her pencil for 90 minutes.

"Beerfest" is Broken Lizard's most recent achievement, and it is definitely worth part of your allowance for the week. This movie is jam-packed with stupid humor and crude jokes. If you were scandalized by the grizzly-bear-love-fest in "Supertroopers," you might as well just bury your head in the sand during the goat-urine-drinking in "Beerfest."

The story is simplistic, as any movie of this genre should be. The plot is based on two American brothers of German descent who must avenge their grandfather after his ashes are rejected from their ancestral German brew house. The brothers must defeat the German Beer-Drinking Team at the super-secret International Beer Games during Oktoberfest to complete their epic quest. The Germans have home bar advantage, as the competition is located in Munich. Winning won't come easy.

The Wolfhouse brothers face their distant cousins, the world champion drinking team. They compete in various drinking games from beirut, or beer pong as University students dub it, to monkey chugging.

Courtesy of imbd.com

Erik Stolhanske, Steve Lemme, Paul Stoter, Kevin Hefferman and Jay Chandrasekhar unite as a ragtag team of beer drinkers in "Beerfest." The five practice their art at home and at parties until they are ready to drink competitively.

The American brothers recruit an assortment of vivid characters, including their old college drinking mates, to win back glory and family honor. This proves more difficult than calling the boys.

Their old friends moved on to develop careers, ranging from a scientist who must manually collect frog sperm, to a cheap male prostitute. After assembling this American beer-drinking dream team, the Wolfhouse brothers begin their strict training routine. They drink from sunrise to sunrise. They drink in their basement and at college fraternity parties. Their intake consists of 100 percent beer. If you haven't guessed, team "Sh*tsngiggles" drink like (insert frat guy of choice).

Courtesy of imbd.com

Todd (Erik Stolhanske) and Jan (Paul Stoter) Wolfhouse drinking beer with two German women. The brothers vow to defend their country and their family's honor by competing in an underground beer-drinking competition.

After receiving advice from their grandmother, a decrepit, retired German hooker, team "Sh*tsngiggles" is ready to return to Germany and claim their place in beer-drinking history. Only one obstacle remains: the sudden-death tie-breaker, "Das Boot." This challenge consists of chugging beer from a boot-shaped glass. The Americans progress to the final round of beer-fest and go head-to-head with their German rivals. It is a finale that you have to see to believe.

It may surprise some people, but there are quite a few difficulties that go along with filming a movie that contains so much beer drinking. Sometimes the cast members would get drunk–very drunk. Training for multiple takes of scenes that required chugging three liters of beer was necessary.

As Steve Lemme (Fink) has said, "I've been training for this for 24 years. You know 'Tsunami' Kobayashi, the hot dog eating champion at Coney Island? He puts cabbage in his stomach to expand his stomach the night before competition. So I ate cabbage every night before I went to bed," according to rottentomatos.com

This film delivers some hardcore laughs. Unfortunately, it also goes through some dull periods. It clearly will not surpass the fame enjoyed by "Supertroopers," but it shows that Broken Lizard is not a one-hit wonder. Packed with one-liners and physical comedy, no one will be surprised when you whip out a beer funnel along with your remote.

Think you can do better?
Bring it on!
Write for
A & E.
E-mail jshapiro@

Another Bubble

By Ana Fullmer
Contributing Writer

In the spirit of the inhumanely cold weather around the University lately, I thought my readers might want to check in on our neighbors to the north—the Canadians! Ryan Reynolds has finally split with his on-again-off-again fellow Canadian, Alanis Morissette, and is now a swinging single. The "Van Wilder" star was photographed steaming up Australia earlier in the week. He should bring some of his hotness here—perhaps my car would start.

Another Canadian that is on the radar this week is none other than the now pink-haired, newlywed Avril Lavigne. JustJared.com posted her new single, "Girlfriend," and made it available to download for all of the fans hungry to hear her new, more "mature" sound. Her new style introduced me to depths of my soul that not even her 2002 effort, "Sk8r Boi," had revealed. With lyrics like "You're so fine, I want you mine … She's like, so whatever/You can do so much better," I felt like she was singing directly to me. I am so playing that song at my wedding!

Speaking of weddings, Kim Mathers, the two-time ex-wife of rapper Eminem, spoke out Feb. 2 on 20/20 about their most recent divorce. AllHipHop.com reported that she told all in a special segment called "Sweet Revenge", where she explained that Slim had been unfaithful multiple times and that their relationship had always been rocky. The last straw came when he performed a song called "Kim," a lovely tune about killing her. Sooner than you can say "bottled blond," he proceeded to choke a Kim look-a-like blow-up doll, while the real Kim was in the audience. Em was just being sentimental!

On a lighter note, it's almost Grammy time! With nominations announced last week, and with my expertise on all things musical (I took Popular Music in America with Annie Randall, associate professor of music, my first year), I knew all of my loyal readers would be chomping at the proverbial bit to hear my take on this year's nods. One of the more interesting choices was The Black Eyed Peas' "My Humps," which was nominated in the category of Best Pop Performance by a Duo or Group With Vocal. I guess Fergie-Ferg has been showing her "lovely lady lumps" off to all of the right people. But as far as non-skanky nominees go, the formerly country and ever-so-lovely Dixie Chicks have scored three nominations, including Album of the Year. What a comeback!

Conspicuously (but not surprisingly) missing from the list of this year's Grammy hopefuls was the good-singer-turned-bad-singer-turned-bad-actress, Beyonce Knowles. Maybe karma is punishing her for her horrible treatment of her dancers. Page Six reports that the highly paid entertainer is forcing her backup dancers to pay for their own flights between New York and Los Angeles to rehearse for her upcoming videos and tour.

On top of that, they are reported to earn $400 per video and were told that if they complained to their agents they would lose the gigs. If anyone has been watching J-Lo's new MTV series, "Dance Life," then you know how desperate these dancers are for a shot to work with someone like Beyonce. It could just be the stepping stone they need to become the next K-Fed or Ashlee Simpson. Leave it to the former Destiny's Child star to dash their hopes of a comfortable life on the D-List!

You can't blame her too much, though. She could just be angry that she has the ugliest armpits in showbiz. Gossip site PerezHilton.com has taken special interest in her armpits, collecting photo after photo of Knowles in unflattering poses. For those of you who haven't had the nauseating experience of seeing them for yourself, they bring to mind the female genitalia of an overgrown hippopotamus. However, I hear if you're of the hippopotamus persuasion, she can be quite the turn-on.

Speaking of hippos, Britney Spears has been out and about these days, looking hideous. Don't you miss the sexy blonde teen that sang and danced her way into America's hearts and Justin Timberlake's pants? Now-a-days she looks worse than your average senior girl trying to find her credit card at the Bull Run on Sunday morning.

How is she supposed to get Justin Timberlake out of the clutches of über-hottie Jessica Biel when she can't seem to get past the washed-up hag-look she has been rocking? She couldn't even score herself a blacked-out first-year dude trying to find his way back to Vedder Hall (Bucknell kids can be picky!). On that note, some advice for this "bubble:" stay warm and out of rehab!

BROOKPARK STATION Cafe
"Casual dining with a gourmet flair"
Fresh Sushi & Vegetarian Items
Catering & Takeout Platters
Book Your Graduation Party!
B.Y.O.B.
Wireless Internet
Mon Sat 8:00 - 8:00 Sun 8:00 - 2:00
1 MILE WEST OF TOWN ON RT. 45
542-FOOD (3663)

Dance Dance Revolution!

Innovative classes, exciting choreography and a new professor thrust dance department into the limelight

By Michelle Wirkus and Janna Shapiro
Contributing Writer and Arts & Entertainment Editor

Despite the theatre and dance department's seemingly secret location in a building adjacent to Coleman Hall, the word is spreading about the scope of the University's dance program. Most students and faculty have seen, or at least heard of, student dance performances taking place on campus. However, many may be unaware of the offerings of the reputable dance program.

Students are quickly getting wind of a revolutionary idea—enrolling in a class where they get to move around, have fun, exercise and even earn academic credit.

Dance courses get more popular every year and are typically maxed out soon after registration.

"It has been so exciting to see an increase in the variety of different dance classes offered to the Bucknell community," said Er-Dong Hu, associate professor and director of dance. "Bucknell is fortunate to invite professional guest artists from around the nation to teach our students, offering them a wider exposure to unique dance styles. Few academic institutions offer these experiences for all undergraduate students."

The dance program offers several courses each semester, open to all students, regardless of experience. Courses include classical technique (ballet, jazz, modern and pointe), conditioning, studies of cultural folk dances of Europe and East Asia and theory courses in dance history and composition. The dance minor also includes a stage design requirement, enabling students to explore a breadth of theatrical elements such as costuming, lighting or set design.

"We have over 50 dance minor students currently enrolled in our curriculum. It is incredible how much the program has grown," Hu said. "With the new addition of the Arts Merit Scholarship, every year we welcome more talented students who are serious about pursuing dance as a major part of their education at Bucknell."

To further increase the University's reputation for artistic development, the Office of Admissions has recently initiated the Arts Merit Scholarship program, which offers a number of awards in several disciplines to select artistically gifted incoming students.

A new addition to the theatre and dance department this semester is visiting assistant professor of dance Dustyn Martincich. After receiving her M.F.A. in dance from Smith College and Bachelor of Arts in both theatre and English from Marquette University, she steps in for Kelly Knox, assistant professor of dance, who is on sabbatical. Currently, Martincich teaches Dance Conditioning, Jazz II and Ballet and Modern I.

Heather Esckilsen '07 said, "While I love the teaching styles of both Kelly and Er-Dong, it's nice to shake things up a bit! Jazz is so stylistic, and Dustyn offers a different spin on the technique. It's invigorating for me as a dancer!"

With her primary interests in the areas of jazz and theatre, Martincich bridges the two halves of the department. This semester she will choreograph the theatre department's spring musical "Urinetown," as well as an original jazz piece with members of the Bucknell Dance Company (BDC) for their Spring Dance Concert to be performed on April 27-28 in the Weis Center for the Performing Arts.

"I'm thrilled at the opportunity to work with such bright, engaging, and talented students from not only the theatre and dance department, but from a variety of departments across campus," she said. "It is what I love about dance: it can be a universal language."

The dance program's spring calendar features the annual Choreographer's Showcase, to be performed on April 19-21 in the Tustin Studio Theatre. Student choreographed, performed and produced, audiences will experience a variety of new creative works from a variety of dance genres such as pointe, hip-hop and Eastern European folk dance.

"Every year I set a folk dance piece which focuses on dance from Eastern Europe," said Paula Davis-Larson, assistant professor of theatre and dance. "It gives students with and without previous experience an opportunity to learn the complex rhythms and steps from countries such as Bulgaria, Croatia, Hungary, Romania and Serbia. This year, they are learning to balance bottles on their heads in a traditional women's dance from Hungary."

Original pieces are also set by current dance composition students as well as other guest choreographers.

Hu hopes to continue collaborating with Davis-Larson and Lighting Designer/Technical Director Heath Hansum to integrate student lighting and costume design elements. These give the performance a professional quality and help the movement come to life.

"Collaboration is at the heart of what the department of theatre and dance does best," Davis-Larson said.

Regarding the pairing of student designers and choreographers, she said, "Students have cited this project as being one of the most valuable assignments in their courses."

In association with the theatre and dance department, the BDC presents other opportunities to engage in dance on campus. Representing the United States and the University as international ambassadors in China this past summer, the BDC performed in several shows celebrating world peace.

Despite being tucked away, the dance program encourages you to come find it. The moral of this story: Come one, come all and enjoy dance at the University, whether on stage or from the audience.

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian
Additional photos courtesy of David Chen and Heath Hansum
Illustration by Janna Shapiro

The Bucknellian
February 9, 2007
Sports
Volume 139, Number 3 Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Polar bears in Lewisburg

Members of the campus and Lewisburg community dove into the frigid Susquehanna for Polar Bear Plunge

See page B10

Rivalry Renewed

First place in the Patriot League hangs in the balance as the Bison face-off against the Holy Cross Crusaders

By Matt Saylor
Associate Editor of Content

"No one, and I mean no one, comes into our house and pushes us around."

-Head Coach Dan Devine (Chelcie Ross), "Rudy"

This inspirational quote from "Rudy" can be heard at the beginning of every home men's basketball game, just as the Bison start to rock in their pre-game huddle. The Orange and Blue (15-8, 9-1) have taken this to heart. They have not lost a Patriot League home game since March 2, 2003 against Colgate. Including the Patriot League Tournament, the Bison have now won 31 straight games at Sojka Pavilion. That streak will be challenged today as Holy Cross comes to town, riding a 12-game winning streak, undefeated in the 2007 calendar year, undefeated in league play.

The Crusaders are trying to duplicate what the Bison accomplished last year: a perfect record against Patriot League foes. Holy Cross (19-6, 10-0) has won its first 10 league games, and the Bison are the biggest hurdle between the Crusaders and perfection.

The Orange and Blue have been on a run of their own, winning their last seven games since the team's 65-60 loss at Worcester, Mass. on Jan. 12. The team is peeking at the right time, as Abe Badmus '07 and Chris McNaughton '07 hit their stride as their distinguished collegiate careers wind down. Donald Brown '07 has been the team's best player over the course of the season, but the Patriot League Player of the Year candidate injured his right hand in the Jan. 30 game at Colgate, placing the remainder of his season in doubt.

Darren Mastropaolo '08 has moved from the bench back into a starter's role in place of Brown, and is averaging 10.0 points and 5.0 rebounds per game in his place. Patrick Behan '10 and Stephen Tyree '10 are seeing increased playing time in Brown's absence, and they are making the most of it, combing for 10 rebounds in Tuesday's game at American.

John Griffin '08 continues to do the bulk of the ball-handling, while Jason Vegotsky '09 remains among the league leaders in three-point shooting. Justin Castleberry '09 has proven himself as a strong first option off the bench, with an ability to create his own shot, shoot the three and play solid defense.

Holy Cross brings its own bunch of talented players to the table, led by the front-runner for player of the year honors, Keith Simmons. Simmons is averaging 17.9 points and 5.9 rebounds per game, while shooting 49.2 percent from the field. Torey Thomas plays the role of Robin to Simmons's Batman, averaging 13.0 points per game, to go along with 4.8 assists and 2.6 steals per contest, while shooting 45.1 percent from three-point territory.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Tim Clifford is the man in the middle for the Crusaders, averaging 10.7 points and 1.7 blocks per game. Alex Vander Baan joins Clifford on the front line, and is the team's best offensive rebounder.

Kyle Cruze, Pat Doherty, Eric Meister, Greg McCarthy and Colin Cunningham will also likely see significant playing time as part of the team's regular rotation. All six of the Crusaders' losses have been away from the confines of Worcester.

In the team's initial meeting, the combination of Simmons, Thomas and Cruze combined to score 48 of Holy Cross's 65 points. The Bison were led by a career-high 16 points from Castleberry, in a game where McNaughton and Badmus combined for only four points, while committing seven turnovers. The Crusaders outrebounded the Bison 31-19, but committed 16 turnovers to 12 for the Orange and Blue.

At the end of the day though, the game will be decided by which team wants it more, which team brings intensity to the game from start to finish, which team is the first to jump on loose balls and makes the fewest mistakes.

If the Bison let no one, and I mean no one, push them around, then they will extend that home winning-streak to 32.

Saylor's Stats

		Statistics from January 12, 2007 Match-up			Patriot League Play Averages
	Player	Minutes	Score while player was on the floor	Game Efficiency	League Efficiency Average	League Minutes Average
HOLY CROSS	Simmons	36:00	62-50	27	22.50	37.0
	Thomas	36:33	63-57	15	16.30	37.2
	Clifford	29:33	50-46	17	13.20	29.5
	Vander Baan	20:50	33-31	3	8.20	28.4
	Meister	26:23	42-42	7	6.50	17.0
	Doherty	26:44	44-49	1	6.50	23.5
	Cruze	21:12	27-24	2	3.30	15.1
	McCarthy	02:46	4-2	-1	3.00	7.3
	Cunningham	DNP	n/a	n/a	0.11	7.1
	Player	Minutes	Score while player was on floor	Game Efficiency	League Efficiency Average	League Minutes Average
BUCKNELL	Brown	30:58	38-45	18	16.75	31.5
	McNaughton	21:42	32-39	-2	12.00	26.1
	Griffin	32:54	47-55	8	10.20	29.2
	Mastropaolo	24:52	42-46	13	8.20	20.2
	Vegotsky	27:14	36-41	7	7.90	27.9
	Badmus	22:34	31-32	2	7.30	29.0
	Tyree	DNP	n/a	n/a	5.43	13.3
	Castleberry	26:19	50-48	13	5.20	18.8
	Behan	02:04	8-2	0	1.80	7.1
	Thomas	07:28	12-16	0	0.90	4.9
	Linthicum	03:55	4-2	3	0.67	3.0

The first group of statistics looks at how well each player performed during the Jan. 12 game at Holy Cross. The score column represents the number of points scored for and against the player's team while he was on the floor. The efficiency statistic is calculated by adding points, rebounds, assists, steals and blocks, while subtracting missed field goals, missed free throws and turnovers.

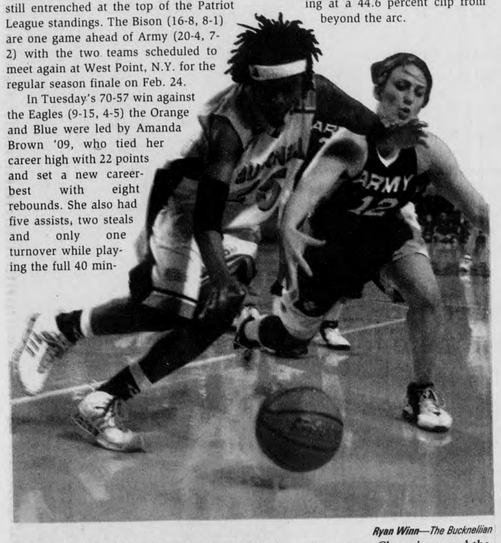
Women's basketball stays on top

By Matt Saylor
Associate Editor of Content

With road wins against Navy and American in the past week, the women's basketball team heads into this afternoon's home match-up with Holy Cross still entrenched at the top of the Patriot League standings. The Bison (16-8, 8-1) are one game ahead of Army (20-4, 7-2) with the two teams scheduled to meet again at West Point, N.Y. for the regular season finale on Feb. 24.

In Tuesday's 70-57 win against the Eagles (9-15, 4-5) the Orange and Blue were led by Amanda Brown '09, who tied her career high with 22 points and set a new career-best with eight rebounds. She also had five assists, two steals and only one turnover while playing the full 40 minutes.

During league play, Brown is averaging 17.3 points per game, having scored in double-figures in all nine games and at least 20 points in a game four times. She is making an average of 2.8 three-pointers per game against conference foes, shooting at a 44.6 percent clip from beyond the arc.



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Keisha Champion '08 challenges a Army player in a recent game. Champion paced the Bison against Navy, notching four steals, six rebounds and eight assists.

"It's just having that experience," Brown told The Daily Item following the game. "[Head] Coach [Kathy Fedorjaka] keeps telling me to take good shots and run the offense."

Brown is receiving plenty of help from her teammates though. Hope Foster '08 made seven of her 10 field goal attempts, scoring 16 points to go along with seven rebounds and two blocks, while Keisha Champion '08 continued her excellent play as the team's primary ball-handler, scoring 14 points, handing out a game-high six assists (to just one turnover) and had three steals.

Overall, the team assisted on 22 of its 27 field goals, while only committing 11 turnovers. This contrasted with the nine assists and 18 turnovers the Eagles had.

The only points of concern for the Bison were allowing American to make eight of its 19 three-pointers, and giving up 15 offensive-rebounds to the Eagles, making the game closer than it should have been in the second-half.

In the Orange and Blue's 76-66 win at Annapolis, Md. on Saturday, it was a balanced offensive effort that led to the victory. Lauren Schober '09 led the Bison with 16 points, including three treys. Jacquie Seawright '07, still starting in place of the injured Lindsey Hollobaugh '07, added 15 points, making all seven of her free throws. Brown also had 15 points and made three shots from behind the arc, and Foster scored 11 of her 13 points in the second half.

Champion tied her career-high with eight assists, to go along with eight points, six rebounds and four steals. Even the bench players got into the act for the Bison, combining for nine points and seven rebounds in 39 minutes of action.

See WBBALL page B6

First-year profile: Stephen Tyree shuts down the opposition

By Connie Barko
Senior Writer

Over the past couple of years the men's basketball team has seen a first-year player or two emerge as up-and-coming players. Two years ago it was John Griffin '08 and Darren Mastropaolo '08 who stole the show. Last year Jason Vegotsky '09 wowed the Sojka Psychos with his three-point shooting. This year fans have had glimpses of the potential of Patrick Behan '10, but it has been the energy and defensive prowess of Stephen Tyree '10 that has caught the most attention.

"We believe he will play a large role in the program," Assistant Coach Nathan Davis said. "He has the ability and mind-set to become an outstanding defensive player. On offense his ability to penetrate and see the floor are hard things to teach."

Tyree has contributed to the squad in a variety of positions because of his size and athleticism. He can drive to the basket, dish to open teammates, hit the boards, and defend the best players in the Patriot League.

"His role is really being able to fill in any spot we need him," Griffin said. He's always ready and willing to do what it takes to help us win, and it is showing. He can finish around the basket better than anyone I think I've ever seen."

Tyree demonstrated his versatility on Feb. 2 in their game against Navy. During 18 minutes of play, he had five rebounds and three assists and was 3-3 for field goals.

Tyree's natural talent may have been a product of his early love for sports, especially basketball.

"I started when I was four or five," Tyree said. "I was in the backyard playing with my older brothers. They gave me a hard time, because they were so much bigger than me."

Getting pushed around by his siblings did not stop Tyree from pursuing sports throughout high school. In fact, he was recruited by other universities such as Army, Navy and Northwestern to play both basketball and football. But it became evident to him that his passion displayed itself more on the court than on the field.

Tyree said, "I love playing both (football and basketball) but I love practicing basketball more. The only way you get good at a sport is by practicing, so that's why I chose basketball."

The desire that Tyree has to

See TYREE page B3

Wrestling takes down JMU

Orange and Blue win all 10 matches, shutting out James Madison

By Kyle Barndollar
Writer

The wrestling team shutout James Madison University last Friday at Davis Gym. The Bison won all 10 matches in the dual, defeating the visiting Dukes 42-0, while recording two technical falls, two major decisions and one pin in the rout.

"It was great to see our athletes compete well from top to bottom. Everyone is training and preparing well and that is the difference when we compete" Head Coach Dan Wirnsberger said.

Greg Hart '10 and David Marble '10 helped the Bison jump out to a commanding 10-0 lead after the first two matches. Hart, at 125 pounds, scored a 17-1 victory over Nhat Nguyen for his ninth win of the season. Not to be outdone, Marble took down Stephen Gunther at 133 for a 17-1 win. Hart is currently ranked sixth in his weight class in the EIWA.

Zach Galligan '10 would follow with a major decision over Shawn Horst in the 141-pound weight class, 13-5. At 149, Jack Conroy '10 advanced the Orange and Blue's lead to 17-0 with his 9-3 decision over JMU's Eric Nadeau.

In the arguably most exciting match of the day, Brantley Hooks '10 edged Scott Yorko by an 8-6 margin. The match was tied 2-2 heading into the third period, but Hooks scored three takedowns in the final round to win the 157 match up.

Andy Rendos '10 made history on Friday, advancing his dual meet record to 16-2 on the season in a forfeit win. Rendos's 16 wins ties the University's all-time record for most dual matches won in a single season, and with four matches remaining in the regular season, the 165-pound first-year has a good chance at taking sole possession of the record. Rendos is 25-3 overall on the season, and currently ranked 18th in the nation for his weight class.

In the 174-pound match, Shane Riccio '10 pinned Ivan Legares in 1:27 for his ninth consecutive match victory. George Mann '10 continued to domination at 184 pounds with a major decision over Johnnie Bauman, 12-1.

Eric Lapotsky '10 continued to win at 197, this time over John Holloway, 8-1. Lapotsky advanced to 15-2 in dual matches this year, and is ranked sixth in the EIWA. George Hingson '10 completed the shutout in the heavyweight division with a 7-3 victory over Pat Finch.

> "Shutting out JMU was important for us to gain some momentum going into our final stretch where 3 out of 4 of our remaining matches are against top 25 teams"
> —Eric Lapotsky '10

"To shut out a team at the Division 1 level and win 10 of 10 matches is a great accomplishment," Assistant Coach Larry Sprecher said. "Even though JMU isn't the strongest opponent, when we wrestled [JMU] earlier in the year they managed to beat us in a couple of individual matches, so it's always nice to improve on previous performances."

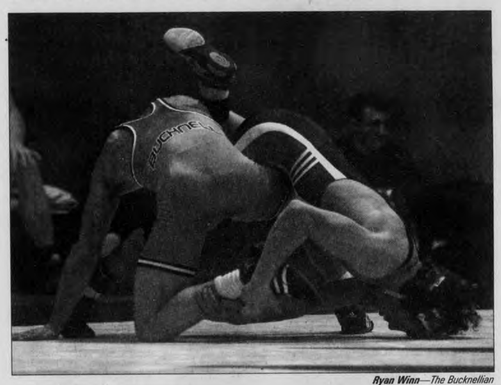
The shutout comes just as the Bison enter the toughest stretch of their season, as they prepare for road matches against Navy (currently first in the EIWA), Harvard and Columbia.

"Shutting out JMU was important for us to gain some momentum going into our final stretch where three out of four of our remaining matches are against top 25 teams," Lapotsky said.

The Bison will travel to Navy on Feb. 10, and will then host Wagner on Feb. 11 before heading to Cambridge on the Feb. 17 to face Harvard and Columbia.

"We have some big individual matchups with Navy that will effect seeding at the EIWA tournament," Wirnsberger said.

The team is now 10-8 in its first season back at the varsity level. With a team composed almost entirely of first-years, the Orange and Blue has already accomplished a lot this year, and with a few big wins in their final matches, the stage will be set for an exciting tournament campaign, and an extremely bright future for Bison wrestling.



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Greg Hart '10 battles an opponent in a recent home match. The Bison rolled over the Dukes to improve their season record to 10-8.

Saylor Says

By Matt Saylor
Associate Editor of Content

1. I don't care what the weather conditions are – there cannot be eight turnovers in the Super Bowl. At least the center and the quarterback should be on the same page after working together since July.

2. Peyton Manning is not undeserving to be named the game's Most Valuable Player, but he would not have been my vote. Colts' running backs Joseph Addai (143 yards from scrimmage) and Dominic Rhodes (113 rushing yards and a touchdown) can make arguments for the award, but I'm going to go an unconventional route and name the Indianapolis offensive line as my MVP. Manning had time to throw and the running backs had gaps to run through all night long. The Colts wore down the Bears' defense, and that starts with the play in the trenches.

3. Nice article on the Bison wrestling team in the Feb. 5th edition of USA Today. It is good for other programs besides the men's basketball team to get recognition.

4. That being said, if you are going to attend or watch on TV (ESPNU) or listen on the radio to one men's basketball game this season, then I suggest doing it tonight. The Bison's match-up with Holy Cross will go a long way in determining who will be the No. 1 seed in the Patriot League Tournament. A Crusaders' win will all but clinch them the top seed (Lehigh would still have a remote chance of earning it, but don't bet on it), while an Orange and Blue victory will put the two teams in a tie for the top spot. If both teams finish the season 13-1 in league play, then it is likely that Holy Cross would still be the no. 1 seed by virtue of having a higher RPI at the end of the season. Every game is critical for both teams as the season winds down.

5. The women's basketball team will get some well-deserved exposure today at its home match-up with Holy Cross at 4:30 p.m. will also air on ESPNU. The Bison are the top team in the Patriot League, but have only the sixth highest home attendance of the eight teams in the conference. The average attendance for the team's games at Sojka Pavilion is 425. Not including Tuesday night's game at American, the average road crowd for the team has been 733. That needs to change. Now.

6. Both the men's and women's basketball teams only have two regular season home games remaining after today. The women will host Lafayette on Feb. 13, while the men will host the Leopards the following night. On Saturday, Feb. 17 the women's team will host Colgate, while the men will face Towson in its ESPN BracketBuster match-up.

7. The Miami Heat are about to go on a run. With the return of Shaquille O'Neal, the team will finally have most of its players healthy at the same time. Miami, currently behind Washington and Orlando in the NBA's Southeast Division, have a great opportunity to pass both teams. The Wizards are currently without Antwan Jamison, while Grant Hill is injured for the Magic.

8. Spring training is closing in fast for Major League Baseball. Doesn't really seem like baseball season with the weather we've had in Lewisburg, does it?

9. The Super Bowl commercials were extremely weak this year. There were a few I liked, but I cannot identify any as great. Companies have a year to prepare for this, and this is the best they can do?

10. Finally, some Valentine's Day advice (and a happy birthday to my sister!) – do not purchase gifts for your significant other, unless you are sure you will still be dating that person by Valentine's Day. So if you feel like you may want to break up with the person or that the person may break up with you in the next few days, then keep the wallet firmly in your pocket/purse.

ASPIRE HIGHER
THIS SUMMER
HTTP://SUMMERSCHOOL.GEORGETOWN.EDU summer at GEORGETOWN UNIVERSITY
Get ahead by enrolling in Summer School 2007 at Georgetown University.
Choose from over 300 courses and learn from the world's foremost faculty. Network and enjoy exclusive Washington access available only to Georgetown University students.
You've had enough ordinary summer breaks.
This year, aspire higher.
Enroll in Summer School 2007 at Georgetown University. Visit summerschool.georgetown.edu or call 202.687.8700

Bison prepare to host Patriots

By Barbara Perlman
Sports Editor

The men's and women's swimming and diving teams competed in their last regular season meet last Saturday at the Bucknell Invitational. While the invitational was not scored, it gave the Bison the opportunity to hit the pool one last time before the Patriot League Championships.

"This meet gave the swimmers and divers that aren't competing in Patriots a final meet to attempt at getting their personal bests to end out their season," Jeff Manning '09 said.

Since many of those who competed were not expecting to swim in the Patriots, the Bucknell Invitational was a stress-free event. Bison on both teams continued to improve on personal bests.

"We were pleased to see the improvement and the good drops in times by all the [swimmers] that competed at the meet," said Head Coach Dan Schinnerer.

The improvement was evident on the boards as well.

"I know that for the two divers that finished their season this past weekend, Allison Fitzpatrick '10 and Steven Schmaltz '09, both turned in personal bests by a large margin, to end out their seasons in a very successful way," Manning said.

The Bison started off strong as Abigail Atkinson '10 placed fourth in the 200 IM in two minutes and 15.09 seconds. Other swimmers followed the trend, as Lauren Arey '10 posted a personal best in the 200 free, placing second, and another best in the 500 free, taking third with a time of 5:15.76. Alexandra Lovallo '09 also put up strong numbers, setting a new personal best in the 50 free and the 100 free, placing second and third, respectively.

In the 200 breast, Leslie DiMichele '07 placed sixth with a time of 1:11.80, and in the 500 free, David Iselin '10, the only male swimmer competing in the meet, got a time of 4:52.96, good for fourth place.

On the boards, the Bison continued to excel, as Manning placed first in both the one-meter with 270.90 points, second best in school history, and the three-meter, with a score of 268.60. Manning was named ECAC and Patriot League Diver of the Week for his performances.

Matt Traver '10 also showed his strength, taking second in the one-meter, and third in the three-meter. For the women, Rebecca Bersani '10 clinched second place in both the one and three-meter, splashing her way to second in the record books in the one-meter with her score of 253.10.

Other divers who showed tremendous growth over the season were Schmaltz and Fitzpatrick.

"Over Allie's season she has improved 65 points on one-meter and 60 points on three-meter. Steve has improved 66 points on one-meter and an astounding 91 points on three-meter," Manning said. "I am amazed at the amazing things they have done this season."

With the regular season now behind them, the swimming and diving teams are preparing for their most important meet of the year, the Patriot League Championships.

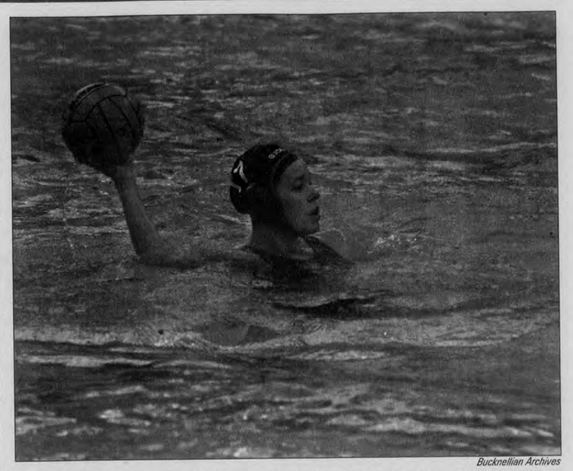
"At this point in training we have brought down our yardage and are fine tuning our skills," Schinnerer said. "In order to meet our full potential as a team, we have to maximize each individual's performance."

The unity and strength that define both teams is what Coach Schinnerer looks at as an indicator of success to come. "Conference Championships are won on the depth of a team from the top swimmers all the way down," said Schinnerer. "For us to have our best performance as a team, everyone needs to contribute."

The Swimming and Diving teams will host the Patriot League Championship at 10:30 in Kinney Natatorium on Feb. 15-17.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Sarah Pease '10 drives through the wat er in the 200-yard fly in Kinney Natatorium. The Bison will take the weekend off from competition to prepare for the upcoming Patriot League Championship beginning at 10:30 a.m. at Bucknell University on February 15-1.



Bucknellian Archives

Mallory Sullivan '07 scans the pool in a game from last season. Sullivan is one of the three captains this spring on a squad that is returning six of their seven starters from last year.

Water polo looks to build off record success

By Shannon Pitsch
Sports Editor

In the cool waters of the Kinney Natatorium, the women's water polo team has practiced for the past six months in preparation for the start of the 2007 season. Last year, the Bison finished the season with a 23-9 record, the best in University history, but fell short of their aspirations of winning an Eastern Championship. In 2007, a team returning six out of seven starting players will settle for nothing less than a championship at the end of the season.

According to offensive power Megan Gins '08, "This year, our goal is to establish a Bucknell system that doesn't change game to game, opponent to opponent. We want to create a team that plays to the highest standards of water polo, with our own unique style and culture. By establishing this, we will maximize the team's physical strength, mental toughness, and unity. We hope that these qualities will propel us to compete for championship titles."

The 2006 team featured a balanced offense with strong first half performances. This year, the Bison hope to capitalize on the scoring capabilities of their three returning offensive leaders.

Gins is leading the Bison offense this season. An honorable mention All-American, All-Conference and All-East Coast selection, Gins broke the record for goals in a season during her 2006 campaign with 70 and became the first player to reach triple figures in single season points, holding the record with 103.

Alongside Gins, the Bison offense features Aubrey Rowe '09 and Elizabeth Jensen '07. In her first year with the Bison, Rowe confidently displayed her offensive potential with 42 goals in the season's first 14 games, earning her All-Conference and CWPA Eastern Conference Rookie of the Year distinctions. She is currently tied for ninth on the University's single-season scoring list with 79 points.

While not the obvious star in the offensive system, Jensen quietly contributed 46 goals and 46 assists in her 2006 season placing her second in the single season assist category. The lefty team captain is expected to make significant contributions to the Bison offense once again this season. Providing support to the offense this season, Jennifer Swoyer '08 and Jessica Trimis '07 are expected to improve upon their combined 32 goals and 49 points from last season.

"I think that the biggest strength by far on our team is our offensive ability," Rowe said. "Everyone on the team is a huge scoring threat, so if other teams try to focus their defense on one player we will have another open to score goals. I think that our scoring will be very balanced."

While the term "balanced" resonates with the Bison offense, "domination" distinguishes the defensive system. A four-year starter, co-captain Mandy Bynum '07 is expected to once again control the Bison goal. With 742 career saves, placing her at second on the all-time list, Bynum will most likely break the University record of 892 career saves held by Lindsey Chesterfield '03. She played 829 minutes of a possible 906 in her 2006 campaign, earned a .542 save percentage and even netting two goals of her own in the process.

> "I think that the biggest strength by far on our team is our offensive ability. Everyone on the team is a huge scoring threat, so if other teams try to focus their defense on one player we will have another open to score goals. I think that our scoring will be very balanced."
> —Aubrey Rowe '09

In front of Bynum, two-time captain Mallory Sullivan '07 led the Bison with 40 steals in 2006. A strong defensive player, Sullivan also contributed 20 goals placing her fourth on the team with 38 points last season.

The hard work of the Bison pre-season will be showcased immediately as the team travels to the highly competitive state of California in their opening weekend at the UC San Diego Invitational on Feb. 10.

"We took a new approach to scheduling this year," Assistant Coach John Abdou said. "We have added the second California trip and raised the level of our competition during our spring break trip. We are playing more ranked opponents this year than any other year in the history of the program."

"This weekend we will play strong, and prove to ourselves and others that we are capable of competing with some of the best teams in the nation," Gins said.

Additionally, their home play will feature tough competition at the Bucknell Invitational Feb. 24-25 and two conference matches including one against heated rival, Princeton University April 13-14.

TYREE From page B1

perform can be seen by others on the Bison squad.

Davis said, "He loves to play and shows up everyday and gives great effort and energy. That allows him to push the guys in practice and not only makes him better, but it makes everyone else around him better."

Despite offers from other universities, Tyree choose the Bison early in his college search. The excellent academic and athletic facilities were notable benefits, but Tyree's mind was made up because of the influence of Donald Brown '07. Brown was Tyree's guide during his campus visit and continues to have a significant role in his development as a player.

"Donald Brown has really helped me. He takes me aside and teaches me the things he's learned through the years," Tyree said.

Even with such encouragement from teammates, the transition to playing on a collegiate level has not necessarily been an easy one.

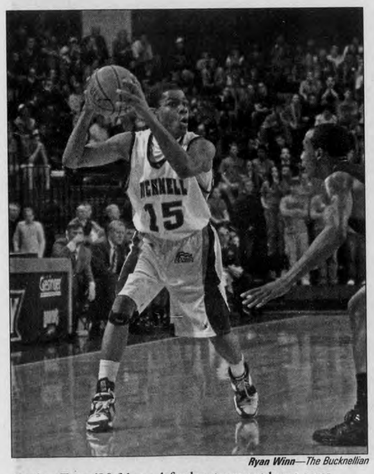
"It has been hard like everyone says," Tyree said. "It's a different speed, and you have to make decisions quicker. But good veteran players help you ease into it."

Tyree, who is a management major, has also undergone an academic transition. Two- to three-hour practices and away games limit his time and have forced Tyree to increase his organization and focus.

"In college, you have to make your own decisions," Tyree said. "Mom and Dad don't tell you what to do anymore. You are either going to get yourself there or you're not."

Although he is still adjusting to college on and off the court, teammates and coaches seem to attribute his success to his approach to life.

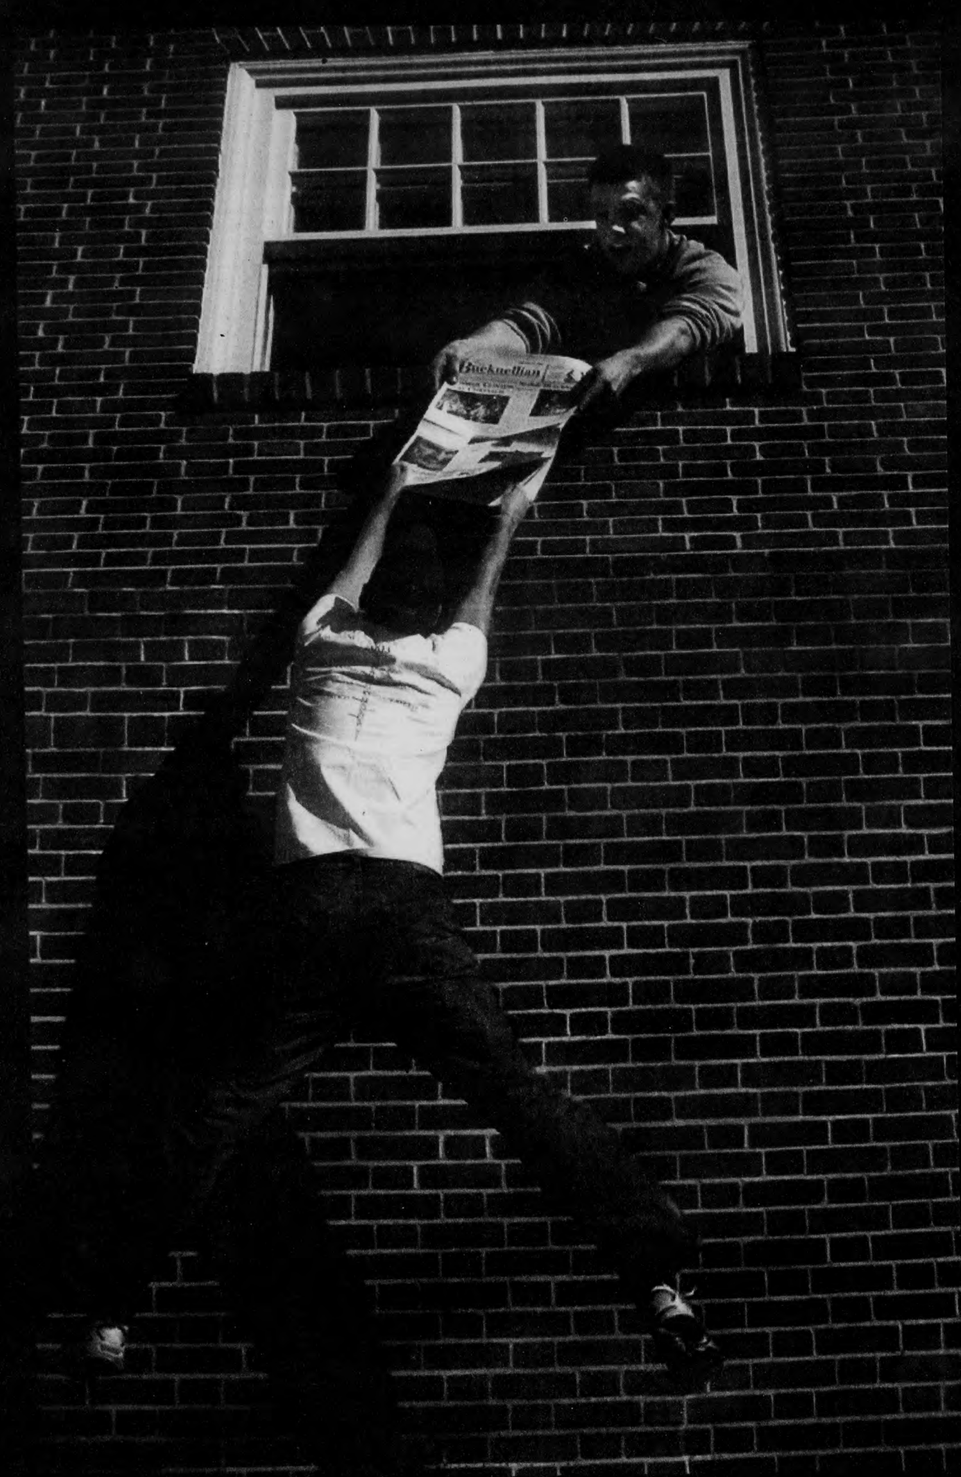
"Stephen has brought his best each day at practice, both mentally and physically," Griffin said. "He brings great athleticism along with a tremendous positive attitude doing all the little things that are so important for us to win."



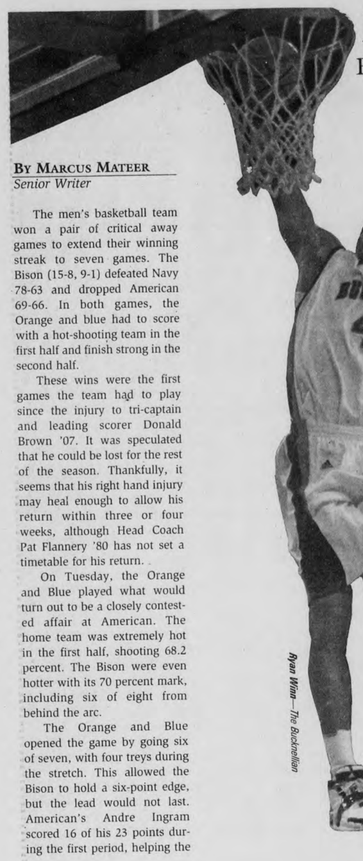
Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Stephen Tyree '10 fakes a defender at a recent home game. Tyree provides a unique spark off the bench that has brought a fresh face to the Bison basketball squad.

THE Bucknellian



BECAUSE IT IS JUST THAT STRONG



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Men's basketball continues HOT streak

Bison prevail over American and Navy despite loss of Donald Brown '07

By Marcus Mateer
Senior Writer

The men's basketball team won a pair of critical away games to extend their winning streak to seven games. The Bison (15-8, 9-1) defeated Navy 78-63 and dropped American 69-66. In both games, the Orange and blue had to score with a hot-shooting team in the first half and finish strong in the second half.

These wins were the first games the team had to play since the injury to tri-captain and leading scorer Donald Brown '07. It was speculated that he could be lost for the rest of the season. Thankfully, it seems that his right hand injury may heal enough to allow his return within three or four weeks, although Head Coach Pat Flannery '80 has not set a timetable for his return.

On Tuesday, the Orange and Blue played what would turn out to be a closely contested affair at American. The home team was extremely hot in the first half, shooting 68.2 percent. The Bison were even hotter with its 70 percent mark, including six of eight from behind the arc.

The Orange and Blue opened the game by going six of seven, with four treys during the stretch. This allowed the Bison to hold a six-point edge, but the lead would not last. American's Andre Ingram scored 16 of his 23 points during the first period, helping the home team to take a one-point lead into the locker room.

Both teams would cool slightly in the second half, but the game remained tight. During the entire contest, there were 19 lead changes and 11 ties. Ten of those lead changes would come within the final nine minutes.

With about a minute to play, Darren Mastropaolo '08, shooting 59 percent for the season from the line, hit two from the line to give the Orange and Blue a one-point lead at 65-64. The Eagles's Derrick Mercer answered with two pressure free-throws to retake the lead. John Griffin '08 nailed a pair at the other end to snatch the momentum back.

Mercer then streaked down the lane, but the defensive presence of Chris McNaughton '07 caused the shot to fall off the front rim. Stephen Tyree '10 bounded into the air and snagged the most critical rebound of his short collegiate career. He alertly passed the ball to Griffin, the Patriot League's third-best free-throw shooter. The two from the line gave Griffin 15 points on the day and gave the Bison the win.

"With our program, we have been able to execute and do some good things [in close games] over the years," Flannery said. "But it could be them standing here talking to you as much as us."

McNaughton added 14 points, and both Abe Badmus '07 and reserve Justin Castleberry '09 contributed 10 points to the effort. Mastropaolo had eight points and four assists, coming off his 12-point performance at Navy.

In their first game of the week, the Bison jumped out to a 5-0 lead at Navy. The Midshipmen would then put on an offensive show in the first period. The home team went nine of 14 from the floor over the next seven minutes and 24 seconds of the game, including six three-point buckets. The stretch built the lead to eight but that would be the high-water mark for Navy.

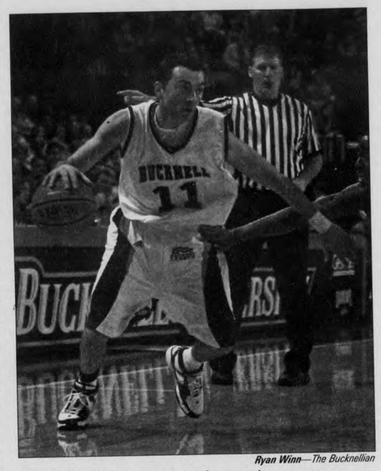
A balanced inside-outside game allowed the Bison to chip away at the lead. Bucknell dominated the paint in the game, outscoring Navy 26-10. The visitors also shot 50 percent from behind the arc, tying a season-high with 11. Patrick Behan '10 nailed a trey just before the half to give the Orange-and-Blue a two-point lead.

"We've got high expectations of our underclassmen," Griffin said. "I think Behan and Stephen Tyree really brought it tonight."

Six straight points out of the locker room would break the game open. A dunk by McNaughton followed by a four-point play by Griffin extended the lead to eight. Another McNaughton basket and a Jason Vegotsky '09 three answered a Midshipmen trey to extend the gap to ten. The Bison would not be seriously challenged again, leading by as much as twenty.

Griffin led the Bison Bucknell with 15 points, with McNaughton adding 13 points and a career-high 12 rebounds for his second double-double of the season. Mastropaolo was perfect from the field and added seven boards. Tyree had the best offensive game of his career with seven points, including an athletic three-point play in the first half.

The Bison are next in action at Sojka Pavilion in a double-header with the women's team today. League-leading Holy Cross will come to town in a huge showdown. The game starts at 7 p.m..



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

John Griffin '08 powers past a defenseman in a recent game. Griffin scored a team-high 15 points in the win over Navy.

Bison compete in Akron Open

Track and field squads rub shoulders with best athletes in Mid-West

By Brian Mulligan
Sports Editor

With the Patriot League Championship only two weeks away, the men's and women's track and field team competed against some fresh teams from the midwest at the Akron Open on Saturday. Some of those teams included Ohio State, Kent State, Pittsburgh and Buffalo along with host Akron.

The teams continued to roll with more names making their way into record books and qualifying marks met by taking advantage of the oversized indoor track

"We knew it would be tough to follow up on last weekend as a team. However, we did have a lot of athletes get seasonal bests and personal bests," Head Coach Kevin Donner said. "The bigger track really helped the athletes in the longer sprints and distance races."

Kerry Boyle '09 posted the third best 200-meter sprint time in Bison history, notching a time of 22.19 seconds. His time was good enough for ninth place overall and good enough to make him a IC4A qualifier. In the 400-meter, Kevin MacLeod '09 also made his way into the record book at fifth with a time of 49.56.

Both Wallace Campbell '08 and Brian Mooney '08 qualified for the IC4A championship in the one-mile run and 800-meter run respectively. Campbell crossed the finish line in a time of four minutes and 11.23 seconds, placing third, while Mooney took eighth place in 1:54.43.

In the 35-lb weight throw, Tyler Hoffman '07 continued his successful season with a toss of 61 feet, 4 1/4 inches, placing him sixth overall.

"Its always exciting to go up against new schools and we not only got to perform against big schools such as Ohio State but also some very talented Olympic development type athletes running there unattached," Mooney said.

> "Its always exciting to go up against new schools and we not only got to perform against big schools such as Ohio State but also some very talented Olympic development type athletes running there unattached."
> —Brian Mooney '08

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

A Bison pole vaulter clears the bar at a recent home meet. The Orange and Blue will wrap their regular season this weekend at the Bison Winter Classic held at Gerhard Fieldhouse Saturday.

On the women's side, the 400-meter dash was the highlight of the meet with three Bison breaking the 59 second plane. Catherine Trentacoste '07 crossed the finish line in 57.52 seconds, placing her fifth overall and fourth in the record books. Megan Hathaway '09 entered the record books at 10th overall in 58.67, while teammate Kalle James-Wintjen '10 finished a mere two hundredths of the second behind Hathaway to place 11th overall.

Jenny Stevens '07 qualified for the ECAC championship and was the ninth fastest Bison in the 5,000. She finished the race in 17:30.78, grabbing second place honors. Erin Cranmer-Hart '08 and Christa Sawko '07 teamed up in the mile run to enter the record books at second and third respectively. Additionally, both broke the five minute barrier in the race and qualified for the ECAC Championship.

Leanna Nastase '07 finished the three kilometer run in 10:01.20, finishing fourth overall and entering the record books at the sixth best all-time. Mariel Fink '07 took second place in the 800-meter run in the blue division with a time of 2:17.73, while Offeibea Hanson-Hall '08 posted a fifth place finish in the gold division with a time of 2:17.35.

Marjorie Grap '07 met the NCAA provisional and ECAC mark in the 20 pound throw with a toss of 64-5 3/4. She earned second place honors at the meet.

A select women's team will travel to University Park, Pa. to compete in the Sykes-Sabok Challenge Cup today and Saturday, while the remainder of the women's team and the men's team will remain in Lewisburg to host the Bucknell Winter Classic beginning at 10 a.m. at Gerhard Fieldhouse.

The meet will allow some of the athletes to rest, tune up or try to make the travel squad for the upcoming Patriot League Championship hosted by Army at West Point, N.Y., Feb. 16-18.

"We seem to be set up well for the league meet," Donner said.

The women are predicted to finish first, while the men are predicted to finish sixth.

SUMMER IN MAINE

Males and Females.
Meet new friends! Travel!
Teach your favorite activity.

*Tennis	*Swim
*Canoe	*Sail
*Water Ski	*Kayak
*Gymnastics	*Archery
*Silver Jewelry	*Rocks
*English Riding	*Ropes
*Copper Enameling	*Art
*Basketball	*Pottery
*Field Hockey	*Office

*And More!

June to August. Residential.
Enjoy our website. Apply online.
TRIPP LAKE CAMP for Girls:
1-800-997-4347
www.tripplakecamp.com

COLDWELL BANKER
PENN ONE REAL ESTATE

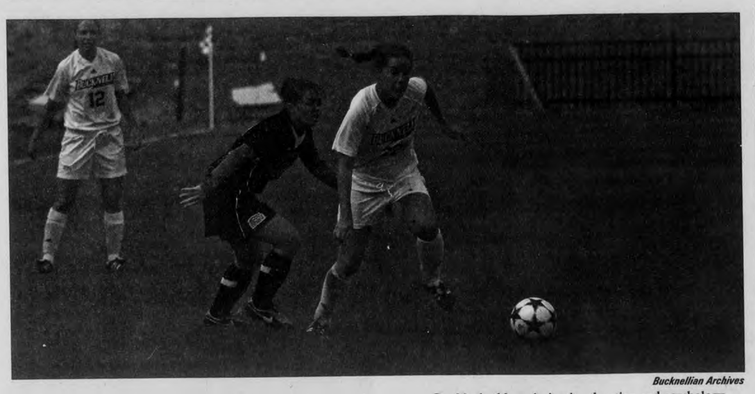
Thank You, Bucknell!!

For thirty years of calling Bucknell and Lewisburg home.

Susan Warner-Mills, Sales Associate
Competence, Integrity, Service

524-7500; swm@coldwellbanker.com

Igniting Creative Ideas
On Fire Promotions
by trautman associates, inc.
promotional products · fundraising items
embroidered & screenprinted caps & apparel
awards · trophies · business gifts
800-538-8009
Lewisburg Showroom 434 Market 570-522-8005
www.onfirepromotions.com
Bring in this ad for one FREE SCREEN!!!
GOOD ON ANY APPAREL ORDER
(minimum 36 pieces)



Bucknellian Archives

Shannon Curd '07 accelerates past a defensive player in a game last season. Curd is double majoring in education and psychology and has maintained a 3.94 GPA, while garnering such titles as 2005 Patriot League Tournament MVP.

A Consummate Leader

By Ty Clark
Staff Writer

Shannon Curd '07 was named the Patriot League Women's Soccer Scholar-Athlete of the Year, becoming the third Bison ever, and the first since 1994, to win the prestigious award.

"It is a high honor," Curd said. "It means more to me than any other award and it demonstrates Bucknell's commitment to academics in all areas."

Although the senior quietly defers the praise to others around her, teammates and coaches are more vocal in their acclaim.

"She's the best captain I've ever seen. Period," Head Coach Ben Landis '96 said.

Compliments and honors like these are not new to Curd, a senior education and psychology major with a 3.94 GPA. Throughout her college career, Curd has garnered numerous accolades for her accomplishments on and off the field. From her second selection to the ESPN The Magazine Academic All-District First team to her MVP play in the 2005 Patriot League Tournament, Curd has constantly amazed everyone around her.

"She is the toughest athlete I have ever met and the most dedicated," said teammate Caitlyn Kuntz '07. "She does a great job balancing the time she spends on school and soccer."

Curd's leadership marveled her teammates and coaches more than any of her athletic prowess.

"As a teammate, she was there for everyone, which is such a tough job when you are managing a team of almost thirty players," Kuntz said. "She was a captain that everyone, from seniors to freshmen, felt comfortable going to talk to."

"Magnetic," Landis said when asked about what made Curd such a great leader. "She's magnetic; people follow her, from the younger players to her best friends. And she treats them with respect, which they give back to her because they see her hard work."

The hard work has paid off for Curd, who has endured a lot of changes throughout her time as a University athlete. Coming off a successful first season as a forward, she was moved to midfield the next year. And after that campaign, she was selected along with two seniors as captains to help with the transition from former Head Coach Chrissy Findlay to Landis. Curd has been a captain ever since.

"As a freshman, I was just trying to make the team, earn a spot, and help where needed," Curd said. "As my teammates and I became upperclassmen, we grew into leadership.

It is the highest honor to represent my teammates, and the opportunity to lead they offered was as good as the relationships I had with them."

Even though Curd is appreciative of her teammates and the opportunities she's had on the field of play, she is equally vocal about the opportunities that the University afforded.

"Bucknell has a great balance between athletics and academics because they realize that there are so many things that complement each other to create a fantastic experience. I was able to study abroad the spring of my junior year, and the ability I had to do that speaks volumes about the philosophy of Bucknell's administration," Curd said.

Always grateful, Curd credits Landis with developing her leadership on the team.

"She was selected the sole captain of the team this year after serving as captain for a year and a half prior," Landis said. "On any level, this situation is extremely rare, because it places a lot of pressure on one individual. But Shannon knew how to lead by voice, example, mentoring—anything—and was a true captain in every sense of the word."

It was for all these reasons that Curd was awarded the Gibbons-Crane Award, given each year to "someone who does everything," as Landis said.

"Other players learned to develop as she did," Landis said. "She outworked scholarship players all the way up, and that mentality spread to the entire team."

So where will Curd go after graduation? "I'm actually hoping to go to graduate school to become a school psychologist," Curd said.

"All along the way, my parents provided me with an opportunity, and I have a passion for the power of education, which opens so many doors," Curd said. "I also would like to coach, possibly at the high school or club level, but it is going to be an interesting transition."

Just like the one from first-year student to award-winning captain.

Women's tennis starts season at 1-2

By Ellis Hudes
Senior Writer

The Bison started their regular season last weekend by going 1-2 in three sweeps, defeating Robert Morris 7-0, but falling to both Pittsburgh and Duquesne. These performances left the team searching for a measure of consistency, something that only comes with more match play...

"These young athletes are stepping up to the challenge and they realize that they learn something every time they step on a court," said Head Coach Rebecca Helt. "The future of this team looks very strong. For now, we're talented, but very inexperienced."

Over the last two years, the Bison have lost four starters and now come in with one of the youngest teams, featuring six first-years and four sophomores in the starting lineup. Although they lack experience, the players make up for it with determination and enthusiasm.

"The first few matches were tough," Kirstyn Sotak '10 said. "We were nervous to start out this weekend, but this team does have a lot of potential."

Accommodating a more prominent first-year class seems like a daunting task; however, the team's leadership dealt well with this new challenge.

"Everyone's so supportive and definitely ready to give advice to younger players," Renee Weissend '10 said.

The Orange and Blue lost their season opener, 7-0, in Monroeville, Pa., to a relentless Pittsburgh squad. Out of nine matches in singles and doubles, only Carlin Calcaterra '10 managed to force her opponent into a third set before falling 2-6, 6-3, (10-2) to Sabrina Visram. Weissend also played one of the more competitive matches of the afternoon in a 6-2, 7-5 defeat to Christie D'Achille. The Panthers also swept three doubles matches. Paulina Gamboa '09 and Calcaterra contributed the best doubles performance for the Bison, but lost 8-5 to Kristy Borza and Leah Friedman.

The team then traveled to Wexford, Pa. to take on Robert Morris. The Orange and Blue played more aggressively, this time sweeping the Eagles in straight sets. Both the upperclassmen and the first-year students stepped up their play to defeat their respective opponents. Six out of 15 sets were won to love in this all-around performance.

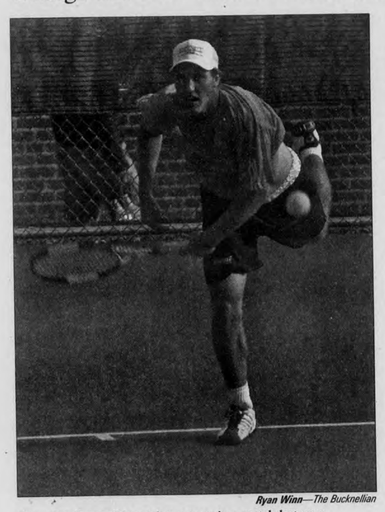
The Bison concluded last weekend's match play with a 7-0 loss to Duquesne. The solid duo of Gamboa and Calcaterra, who fell short of forcing a tiebreak with Jacqueline Hughes and Rebecca Poole, lost a tight 9-7 match in No. 1 doubles. Ashley Globerman '09 and Caitlin Baffa '08 fell 8-1 in the second doubles slot, while Weissend and JoAnna Grossman '09 lost 8-3 in the final slot. In singles, Globerman was the only Bison player to steal a set in her match, but ultimately was defeated by Hughes in a 5-7, 6-2, 10-8 nail-biter.

"I'm proud of the hard work that each player is putting into their off-court and on-court training right now," Helt said. "They are motivated to get better every single day. They are able to look beyond a win or loss and hold onto the ultimate goal which is to win the Patriot League Tournament."

The Orange and Blue return to courts tomorrow in Hamden, Conn., where they will face Quinnipiac.

Men's tennis rebounds against Robert Morris

Orange and Blue look to establish stride against UConn Huskies



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Ryan Sandburg '09 smashes a serve in a match last year. Sandburg defeated Eagles second singles player Sean Curly.

By John Mlodzinski
Senior Writer

The men's tennis team dropped its season opener at Duquesne, 5-2, on Friday, Feb. 2. Ira Reibeisen '08, who played No. 1 singles and Zach Hascoe '10, who played No. 4 singles, were the lone bright spots for the Bison in the singles matches, winning 6-1, 6-4 and 7-6 (8-6), 6-4, respectively.

Ryan Sandburg '09 fell to Michael Ortega, 6-4, 6-7 (5-7), (11-9), at the No. 2 spot and Jonathan Brenner '09 lost to Blake Williams, 6-4, 6-4, at the No. 3 spot. Dan Bednarek '09 lost to Mark Maciuch, 4-6, 6-2, 6-2, at No. 5 singles and Sidharth Makkar '09 dropped his match to Gustavo Villares, 6-3, 6-4, at No. 6 singles.

Team captain Reibeisen was not happy after the match and felt his team had not played up to its potential.

"I was disappointed with the loss and felt that the team under-performed considerably," Reibeisen said. "This was my first dual match as a captain and I took this loss quite personally," he said.

The doubles matches were not much better for the Orange and Blue. Reibeisen and Ben Young '08 teamed up for the Bison at the No. 1 doubles spot and scored the lone doubles victory for the team. At No. 2 doubles, Brenner and Sandburg fell to Maciuch and McClelland of Duquesne, 8-7, while Bednarek and Hascoe dropped their No. 3 doubles match to Ortega and Weisband.

"The match versus Duquesne was not only the first match of the season for our men but it was also their first opportunity to play a full match on a real tennis court surface," said Head Coach Rebecca Helt. "We have the talent to beat a team like Duquesne, but this early in the season we're satisfied with just getting on court."

The nerves that the Bison may have had on Friday against Duquesne seemed to disappear overnight as they shut out Robert Morris, 7-0, on Saturday, Feb. 3, at Robert Morris. The Bison dominated all aspects of the game as only one match went to a third set. At the No. 1 spot, Reibeisen defeated Ryan Cameron, 6-0, 6-1, while Sandburg dropped Sean Curly, 6-1, 6-2, at the No. 2 spot. Brenner defeated Nick Paganetti, 6-3, 3-6, (10-8), in the No. 3 spot, while Hascoe, 6-3, 6-1, Bednarek, 6-2, 6-3, and Makkar, 6-3, 6-0, all easily defeated their opponents.

The Bison were just as overpowering in the doubles matches as they won all three with a combined score of 24-4. Reibesen and Young teamed up to defeat David Yokitis and Cyrus Manouchehrian 8-2. Brenner and Sandburg then beat Sean Curley and David Pinto, 8-0, while Bednarek and Hascoe dropped Ryan Cameron and Nick Paganetti, 8-2.

Reibesen credited the victory to a more focused attitude heading into the match.

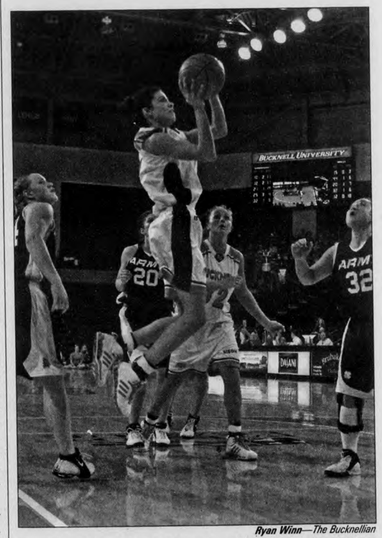
"The turnaround against Robert Morris is mainly due to an increased focus during the match and level of confidence we felt during the match," Reibesen said.

Both Reibesen and Helt know the team's potential and expect good things this season.

"Physically and mentally they look good. When we hit mid-March, these guys will be putting together solid performances," Helt said.

"I expect great things from this team and anticipate that our season's success is not indicative of this weekend's performance [against Duquesne] ... Bucknell tennis is strong this year and I am confident that my teammates and I will help prove how resilient we can be," Reibesen said.

The Bison return to action today when they face the University of Connecticut at Storrs, Conn., at 6 p.m.



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Jaquie Seawright '07 soars above Army for a short jumper. The Bison will kick-off tonight's double-header at 4:30 p.m.

WBBALL. From page B1

Even though the team was fairly efficient on offense (it did commit 16 turnovers), it was the defense that won the game for the Bison, forcing Navy (10-13, 4-5) to commit 26 turnovers.

"I think we played much better defensively in the second half," Schober said on the radio broadcast following the game.

The Midshipmen shot 50.0 percent in the first half, compared to just 40.7 percent after intermission.

The league standings are tightly packed as the final stretch of games gets underway. Holy Cross (9-15, 4-5) is one of three teams with a 4-5 league record, and there are three more that are 3-6.

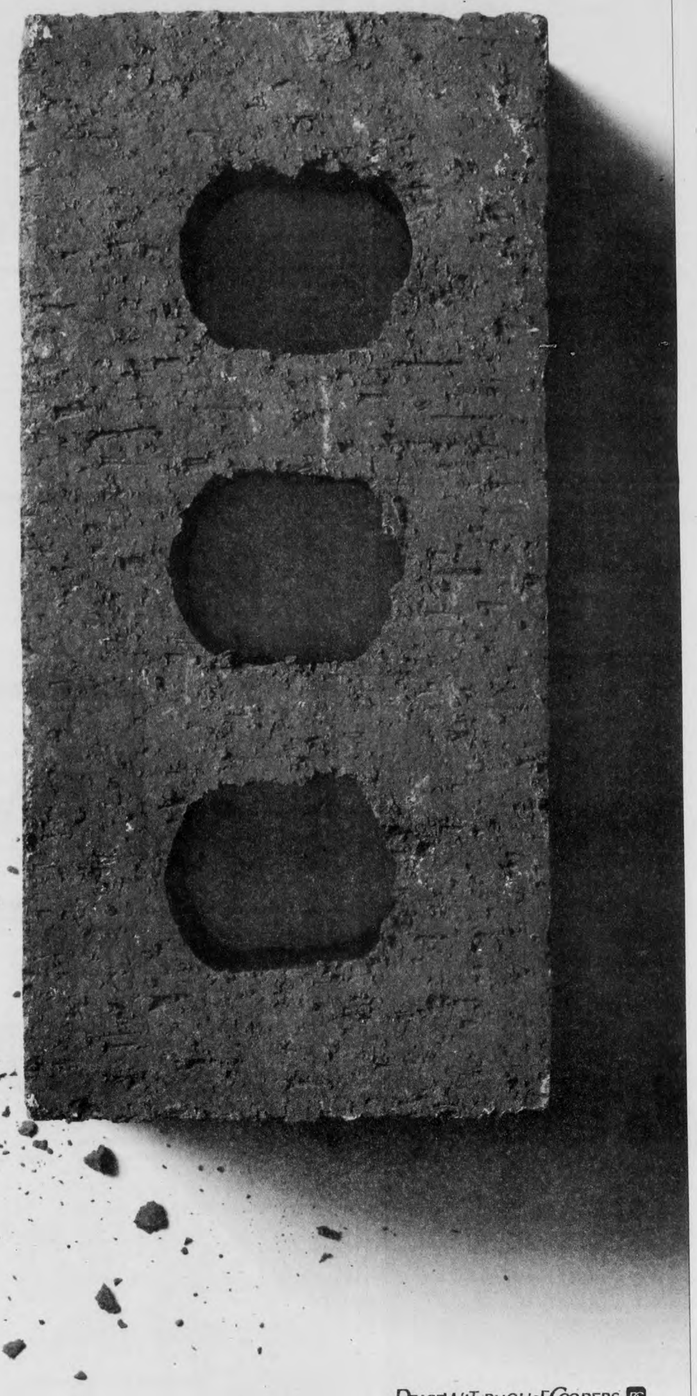
The Bison and the Black Knights are clearly the class of the league, but with every other team still in contention for one of the league's higher seeds, every game will be a battle until the final whistle blows.

Leader
Bricklayer
Human being*

We believe community service is a part of our job description. Last June, we asked our US staff of 29,000 to take a day away from work and help their neighbors. We called it 29k/30.

Learn more about this project and others.

Visit pwc.com/community



*connectedthinking

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

© 2007 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (a Delaware limited liability partnership) or, as the context requires, the PricewaterhouseCoopers global network or other member firms of the network, each of which is a separate and independent legal entity. *connectedthinking is a trademark of PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (US). We are proud to be an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer.

Mer Cares

Dear Mer:

I have a pressing problem that I thought I could handle, but things have proven otherwise. My boyfriend tends to drink a lot, and while this may be a normal social activity (especially for boys in college), he does stupid things when he drinks. On occasion in the past he has kissed other girls when he was drunk. While it may seem pathetic that I have taken him back when he has violated my trust, he swears to me that he has changed.

He promised that he will decrease the severity and number of times he drinks during the week. I thought he really did want to keep my worries at bay and drank moderately when I was not around him, but he got drunk again the other night and I just don't know how to act. I don't want to get upset but he just doesn't get it—how can he think we have a future if he can't hold onto my trust and keep me worry-free? Should I do it back to him and maybe he'll get the idea and see how it feels?

—Bothered Beloved

Dear Bothered Beloved:

You really need to sit your partner down and talk to him. Be open and honest; tell him exactly how you feel and what he can do to make you feel more comfortable with the situation. He should already be working hard to gain your trust, but it is a process. I don't suggest getting drunk and kissing other guys; that will only stir up more problems and, chances are, he probably wouldn't understand that you are trying to teach him a lesson. Try suggesting that you would like to be present in more situations where he will be drinking because then you can show him it is not his drinking that bothers you. He will see that he can drink comfortably with you around and not feel constrained. Then when he goes out with the guys he won't go nuts with the amount he drinks.

Next, ask him if he would just try moderating himself. He needs to understand that trust is a terrible thing to lose. While loving him means that you forgive him and trust him (as you are doing or are trying to do), maybe he has broken your trust so many times that it is difficult to believe him anymore. He might be having a hard time living with himself. Possibly, he feels like he is a failure because he has let you down multiple times. You need to make the transition easy for him (especially if he relies on alcohol). Emphasize that you just need him to ease up on the amount he drinks so he won't do "stupid things" and you will be able to trust him again.

Love,
Mer

Dear Mer:

My relationship with my boyfriend is very stressful for me as we seem to always do things according to his schedule. We always work around his plans and activities and I always seem to be making the sacrifices in the relationship. If he has a sports game to go to one evening, he'll go and disrupt our entire plans. Not that it's a big problem, as I do realize things come up that you can't exactly help and are not your fault. However, he never asks me what my schedule is for the day nor does he seem to care when or how long we see each other. It's always the other way around. Whatever his plans are during the day or in the evening, I figure out and schedule when we'll see each other. Sometimes things come up that I reschedule or cancel when appropriate so that I can still see him when we had planned. I don't think he ever does that for our relationship. I am beginning to realize how unhappy I am about it and how it is an unhealthy, one-sided relationship. How can I make him realize how grateful he should be?

—Disheartened

Dear Disheartened:

This is a hard problem (obviously) because the more people I talk to, the more often I hear this concern from girlfriends of busy boys. I sympathize with you completely because nobody can fully understand the hardships of an adult relationship until he or she experiences one, especially in college when people are always running around to do things. Unfortunately, I think that even as we grow up, instead of going to class and extracurriculars we'll be dashing off to work or the gym or taking care of kids. There hardly seems to be time to fit in a significant other at any point in your life. The key is to put your full effort into making them a big part of your life, but not all of your life.

Boys don't seem to "get" relationships the same way girls do. Girls look at the emotional aspect and the fact that they have a best friend and companion at their side. Sometimes boys just fit girlfriends in as one of their many activities and often don't realize what they are doing is hurting their partner. It's hard to pretend to be OK when plans get ruined or things come up that are unfixable, but maybe the best medicine for it is to go with the flow. I wish I knew the exact solution but, sadly, I don't. Your boyfriend should be grateful to have you and if he doesn't show it now, maybe you need to take a stand and make him see. How, you say? Stop making all your sacrifices and scheduling plans for awhile—I know it's hard, but if you stop, you will see what this relationship really means to you and you will be able to de-stress and focus on you, even though it's a tad selfish.

If you aren't happy, how can you work on issues in your relationship? I do suggest speaking to him about your concerns, but for the most part, just do your own thing for once and see what happens. I'm sure you're scared that nothing will happen and you won't see him at all but if you're that important to him, he will soon get it—it just might take a few days apart for him to realize how he needs to plan in order to spend time with you and make sacrifices sometimes so you can remain a part of his life. Both parties need to make sacrifices and compromise and if he doesn't understand that and just thinks you should work around his schedule, he's got a whole other thing coming. Good luck!

Love,
Mer

Please send questions regarding any topic to marc001@Bucknell.edu with subject line reading "advice" or you may send a letter via campus mail to box number C1099. I look forward to hearing from you!

Dare to say

V-Day spreads awareness about violence against women

By Susan Misur
Contributing Writer

"The Vagina Monologues" is intimidating to some and empowering to many. While the show's production and message are supported by some college students all over the country, others disagree with its portrayal of women and some colleges ban it altogether.

The University is not one of them. The performances are scheduled for 7 p.m. Thursday, Feb. 15 in the Terrace Room and 8 p.m. Feb. 16 and 17 in the Harvey Powers Theatre. All proceeds go to Susquehanna Valley Women in Transition, an agency dedicated to assisting victims of domestic violence in Northumberland, Snyder and Union counties.

"The Vagina Monologues" sparks controversy anywhere it is performed, but also draws attention to how women continue to be victims of domestic violence. Many of the monologues pertain to violent crimes committed against women.

"The play is used as the centerpiece of a global movement to help end the violence against women," said Flor De Liz Perez '07, director of this year's production. "It inspires both men and women to get involved in these efforts in their own communities and celebrate women."

"The Vagina Monologues" is the brainchild of Eve Ensler, who wrote the play and then established V-Day in 1998. According to www.v-day.org, the V-Day movement demands that violence against women must end and proclaims Valentine's Day as V-Day until this goal is reached. Only then will V-Day be known as Victory over Violence Day.

But the play does not just focus on the negative. Women give monologues about positive and even humorous experiences of their sexuality.

"'The Vagina Monologues' contemplates not only the horrors of violence, but also birthing, humor of one's body, talking, listening, sharing and opening up about a past or present that hurts," Perez said.

Some think the performances encourage women to be promiscuous, thereby liberating themselves. Others are outraged, saying that "The Vagina Monologues" only focuses on the sexual organ and what it is used for.

> "While we tend to embrace our sexuality, loving your vagina is not the same as thinking that you are only good for sex"
> —Megan McShea '09

"While we tend to embrace our sexuality, loving your vagina is not the same as thinking that you are only good for sex," cast member Megan McShea '09 said.

Misconceptions about the play are widespread and varied. Those involved with V-Day have been asked if it's a single person reciting the monologue (it's not), if men can participate (they can) and if monologues are personal stories or general observations (they're both).

"I've had more than one person ask me if the play was a woman pretending to be a vagina, standing on stage," McShea said.

The public needs to be more aware of what V-Day and "The Vagina Monologues" are all about. This year, Perez and Campus Coordinator Michelle Kanga '08 are taking the campaign in a different direction to further educate students.

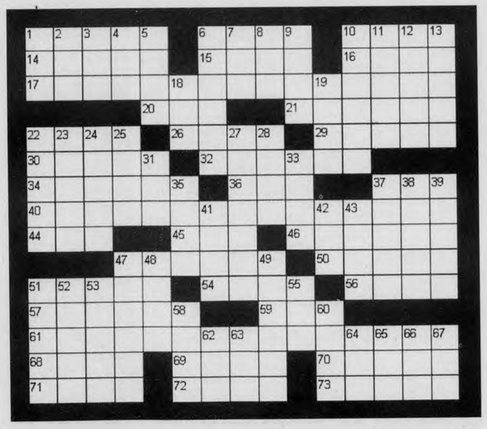
"We are having a number of educational events after the show, including a dialogue on defining masculinity and femininity, and a panel concentrating on women in conflict zones, which is also the spotlight campaign for V-Day this year," Perez said.

The V-Day Educational Events Committee not only wants to make students more aware of the movement, but also comfortable with what is being presented in "The Vagina Monologues."

"I really wanted to make a clear image for 'The Vagina Monologues' and encourage those that have been turned off by it or have felt ostracized in the past to come check it out," Perez said. "Any woman in your life has gone through some or most of what is being presented on stage."

Still have reservations about V-Day and "The Vagina Monologues"? Come see the play for yourself. "Not everyone accepts this production, but I cannot think of a person who wouldn't want to do their part in helping to stop the violence against women," Perez said.

The Bucknellian Crossword



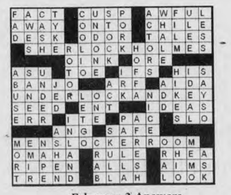
Across

1. Fable guy
6. Young woman
10. Classroom item
14. Coral creations
15. The East
16. Kitchen fixture
17. European tourist spot
20. Childhood game
21. Quash
22. Pequod captain
26. Stopped working
29. Pieces of clothing
30. Type of economics
32. Chooses for office
34. Surround and enclose
36. _ Lingus
37. Mentally quick
40. Place of mystery
44. Simile requirement
45. Faulkner's "_ Lay Dying"
46. Runs for the touchdown
47. Drum type
50. Goody
51. Milk container
54. "What's _ for me?"
56. State of disorder
57. Related to one's nervous system
59. Witnessed
61. Clique
68. Land measurement
69. Against
70. Take without permission
71. Rind
72. Religious faction
73. Rice field

Down

1. Type of museum
2. Poetry word
3. Caspian, for one
4. _ the hook
5. College prep. test
6. Homer's youngest
7. Love _ Many Splendoured Thing"
8. Knight title
9. Backtalk
10. Uncertainties
11. Elude
12. Truth _
13. Important body part when begging
18. Boy
19. Throw in the towel
22. Parasite
23. Sportswear brand
24. Ghana capital
25. "Dracula" author Stoker
27. High spirits
28. Venison
31. Buckeye U.
33. Former J.Lo hubby Judd
35. Type of cheese
37. Concur
38. Humble requests
39. Midterms
41. Sweet wine
42. Play part or play a part
43. "Cheers" barfly
47. Early Toyota vehicle
48. Type of history
49. Fish-out-of-water
51. Remove the top
52. Defrost
53. Licensed psychotherapist Linnda
55. Black liquid
58. Pastures, poetically
60. Will o' the _
62. A number muliplied by its reciprocal
63. Gov. agency protecting consumers
64. Important travel info.
65. Homer's "Hi diddly-ho, neighborino"
66. Pops
67. Actor Stallone

ByVo Crosswords



February 2 Answers

'Vagina'

Courtesy of Christine Kassab

The cast of The Vagina Monologues rehearses in the Leanne Freas Trout Auditorium. The production will be held on Feb. 15 in the Terrace Room and on Feb. 16 and 17 in the Harvey Powers Theatre.

What does V-Day mean to you?

"In short, I love V-Day. V-week is definitely one of the highlights of spring semester, if not the whole year. For four years now, my best friends and I have looked forward to the time when we can take a break from everyday stress and laugh about our shared experiences as women. We go see 'The Vagina Monologues' and all the pettiness of normal young woman-life disappears and we bond with the other girls in the audience, celebrating the fact that yes, we have vaginas! We laugh at the funny ones but are also awakened to issues of women all over the world and called to do something about it, even if it is just paying to see a show. Overall, V-week gives me a chance to smile, take a deep breath and ask, 'What have I done for my vagina lately?'"
—Kate Ballantine '07

"The first time I heard a woman shout, 'I love vaginas!' was an amazing experience. I thought, 'Is that possible?' So many of us grow up being taught not to mention this integral part of our womanhood, let alone love it. For me, V-Day not only raises awareness of women's issues, aiding the fight against violence, but also helps those involved—and hopefully others—learn to love being a woman and accept every part of themselves. I now proudly shout, 'I Love Vaginas!' across the Elaine Langone Center mall not because I view women as sex symbols but because every woman needs to learn that it is OK to love vaginas."
—Megan McShea '09

"I think that people talk a lot. We talk about issues, we gossip about each other, and we love to talk about how much the world needs to be fixed; but how often do we actually see what we talk about manifest itself into something productive? For me, V-Day is a positive expression of the thousands of issues that affect women and by affecting women, affect men and all of society. It's not just talking—it's action. The people involved are not afraid of taking a sometimes unorthodox or even provocative route to get people's attention and put these important and life-changing issues on the top of everyone's priority lists."
—Emily Rath '09

"To many people V-Day and 'The Vagina Monologues' means that for a few weeks in February the word 'vagina' is heard regularly on campus and debates break out over whether the play is vulgar or empowering. To me, being part of V-Day means being part of a talented, passionate group of women who are striving for change. V-Day is a cause, a cause to stop violence against women. Through 'The Vagina Monologues,' V-day calls people's attention to women and their stories of violence as well as their stories of triumph. The members of V-Day are the voices of these women and their stories, and we are also the voices of our own stories. We also raise money to benefit Susquehanna Valley Women In Transition, a local organization helping women. In this way too, we are connected to a larger network of people fighting, to stop violence. Being a part of V-Day is one of the most empowering things I have done for myself and others."
—Jessica Vooris '09

Another tantalizing edition brought to you by ...

Ms. Love and the Bubble

Dear Ms. O,

So, my girlfriend and I have been having sex for a while and I, needless to say, enjoy myself. But we tried once without a condom and we both really liked it, so now my girlfriend always wants to go at it without a condom. She's telling me that I can pull out or time it with her period, but frankly, I'm not ready to have an accident and have life as I know it be over. Are these things going to work?

- Dog without a Leash

Dear Dog without a Leash,

Congratulations. You are thinking with your brain and not your ... well, you know. It's not always a fun lesson to learn, but safety has to come before sensation. It may feel better to lose the love glove, but the consequences could be disastrous.

Let's examine your girlfriend's suggestions.

"Pulling out," also known as withdrawal, when used properly, has a failure rate of 20 percent. This is a very risky number and doesn't necessarily include everything that can go wrong. There may be incidents when the guy doesn't pull out in time. Sometimes it's hard to remain in control in the moment. During sex, the guy can also emit pre-ejaculate (which can contain semen) without even realizing it.

The second is a birth control method called Fertility Awareness or Natural Family Planning. It utilizes the calendar of a woman's menstrual cycle to determine when she's ovulating, and therefore the times when it's most likely to get pregnant. And it means a 7-10 day period of no sex when ovulation is occurring.

When used very precisely, with the aid of special thermometers and daily recordings of various signs, this method still fails 25 percent of the time. Each woman has a different menstrual cycle and each cycle can vary, so it's difficult to pinpoint exactly when ovulation will occur. Just being off by one day can have huge consequences, making this one of the riskier methods of birth control.

If you want to continue having sex without a condom, first and foremost, you should both be tested for STDs if you haven't been already. Secondly, if your girlfriend utilizes one of the various methods of hormonal birth control that are available, your chances for getting her pregnant are greatly reduced (up to 99 percent).

These hormonal methods include "the pill," which is taken daily; the patch, changed weekly; and injections, which can range from once a month to every three months. They will protect against pregnancy but not against STDs. Consulting your doctor about these methods can be helpful in deciding what is right for you. You can also contact Student Health Services on campus for more information.

If you decide not to use a hormonal method of birth control, condoms are your best option. They protect against both pregnancy and STDs. There are plenty of kinds to choose from that can enhance stimulation. Try some ultra thin ones. But simply "pulling out" or attempting to time it right based on her cycle doesn't provide enough protection if you want to remain baby-free.

Many doctors recommend a combination of hormonal and barrier methods of birth control, such as simultaneously using the pill and a condom. This way you are protected from STDs and have even less of a chance of getting pregnant.

With any method of birth control, even combinations, there is a risk of getting pregnant. The only way to be completely free from worry of getting pregnant is abstinence. But being smart about your sex life and taking active measures to prevent pregnancy are the best ways to reduce your chances.

This information and more can be found on the American Pregnancy Association's Web site: www.americanpregnancy.org.

~ Ms. O

E-mail me your questions at MsOintheBubble@yahoo.com or send them through campus mail to Ms. O, The Bucknellian, C-3952. All authors of questions will remain anonymous.

$250 CASH
Sign on BONUS
Call for details
3 & 4 Bedroom Houses
CLOSE TO CAMPUS
WHIRLPOOL
WASHER / DRYER
DISHWASHER
STOVE & FRIG

Newly renovated houses available 2006/2007
570-524-5714 / 570-412-4831
or 570-524-5745 /
570-490-2922

DOES YOUR CAR NEED SERVICED?

Our Service Department has $25,000 in new upgrades, including a new alignment rack, brake lathe, tire machine, and hundreds of hours of training for the techs. We now offer shuttle service to and from work or home. We have become a complete service center that can perform any work on any model, from an oil change to engine replacement.

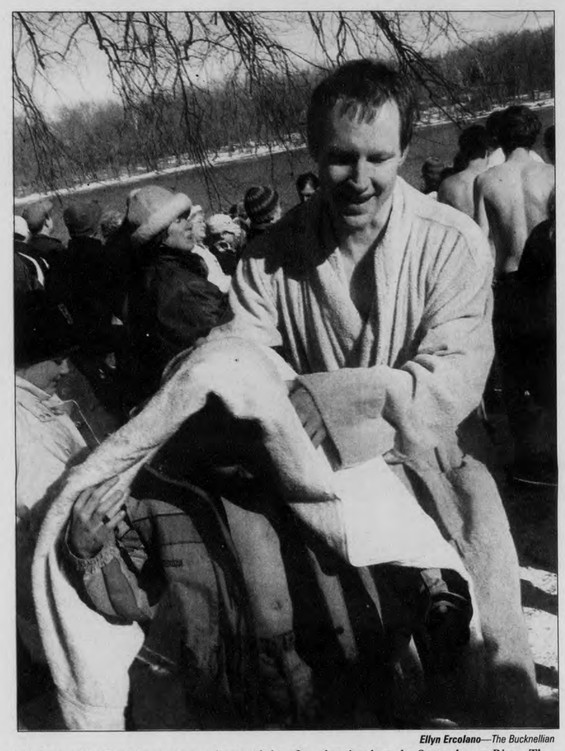
Lewisburg Ford
Oil Change w/Multi-Point Inspection
$19.95 Excludes Diesels. Must present coupon at time of service. Expires 12/31/06

Lewisburg Ford
Oil Change/Tire Rotation w/Multi-Point Inspection
$34.95 Must present coupon at time of service. Expires 12/31/06

Lewisburg Ford
2265 Old Turnpike Rd.
(Route 45 West)
Across From Brookpark Farm
Call Today! (570) 524-7267
Visit us on the web at www.lewisburgford.com

Lewisburg Ice Festival

Students, staff and locals spent last weekend diving into the river, viewing ice sculptures and eating chocolate



Ellyn Ercolano—The Bucknellian

Members of the Lewisburg community towel dry after plunging into the Susquehanna River. The Polar Bear Plunge took place on Feb. 2 and benefitted the Lewisburg Downtown Partnership.

A dip in the Susquehanna

Polar Bear Plunge unites community and campus

By Deidre Carlin
Writer

The third annual Polar Bear Plunge took place at 2 p.m. on Saturday, Feb. 2 at St. George Landing. According to Amy Badal, assistant dean of students, 100 students and community members took the plunge into the icy cold water. While this number is down from 2006, Badal attributes the change to unusually cold temperatures.

The plunge set a new record by having 150 observers present.

Badal said that the idea to bring the Polar Bear Plunge to Lewisburg was developed by Linda Sterling of the Lewisburg Downtown Partnership. Each year the University and the Partnership work together to organize the event.

To keep participants warm, Kevin Gardner, owner of the Bull Run Inn, provides free hot chocolate.

The entire experience displays strong town-gown relations.

While most find it unbelievable that anyone would jump in the Susquehanna River, participants had a wide variety of reasons for wanting to partake in the event.

"You get a thrill after you've done it," Erin Price '08 said.

Brooks Thompson, a Lewisburg Area Middle School seventh grader, said that he took the plunge because "[he] likes to do things that most people don't do."

For others the event had deeper meaning.

Keith Kolakowski '08 said that he participated in the event because "somebody had to represent Students for Fair Trade." He also said, "We'd rather people went to downtown businesses than Wal-Mart."

> "Community service comes in all shapes, sizes, and types. [The Polar Bear Plunge] is a very unique way to serve both the campus and local community."
> —Jenna Camann '07

The event draws many onlookers in addition to participants. Belinda Frey said that she and her husband come to the Lewisburg Ice Festival every year and just found out about the Plunge this year.

"The nutty people that are going in are my favorite part," Frey said.

Donna Boggle said that she brings her granddaughters every year to see the ice sculptures and decided to add the Polar Bear Plunge to their list of events.

Money raised from the Plunge went to support the Lewisburg Downtown Partnership.

"The Partnership ... helps create a better relationship between the University and Lewisburg," Jenna Camann '07 said.

Camann said that the partnership acts as a liaison between the University and the downtown community. The Partnership also works in conjunction with the University to plan such events as Welcome to the Neighborhood during new student orientation.

"Community service comes in all shapes, sizes, and types. [The Polar Bear Plunge] is a very unique way to serve both the campus and local community," Camann said.

While many Greeks participate in the event, Camann does not believe the event will be sponsored by any Greek organizations any time soon.

"I would like to see the Partnership and Community and Volunteer Services continue to sponsor it in order for there to continue to be a wide variety of participants," Camann said.

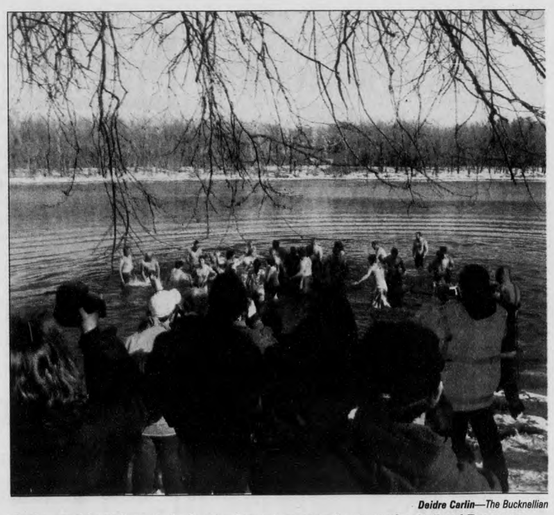
If taking a dip in a cold river is not your style, students, faculty, staff and community members can look forward to interacting again in the Neighborhood Thaw Out in April.

Camann said she hopes "to see more businesses ask for help and more students, faculty and staff participate in this year's event."

The annual Heart of Lewisburg Ice Festival features ice sculptures by local artists. The sculptures, displayed on Market Street, were part of the weekend of festivities that included the Polar Bear Plunge and the Chocolate Festival.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian



Deidre Carlin—The Bucknellian

Students and locals jump in the freezing Susquehanna to raise money for the Local Downtown Partnership. The Polar Bear Plunge is part of the annual Lewisburg Ice festival that takes place every February. Approximately 100 students and townspeople participated in this year's plunge.

The Bucknellian

February 16, 2007

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

Volume 139, Number 4 | Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue | www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Lighting up the stage

Student directed/designed play "The Firebugs" to show at Tustin Studio Theatre tonight at 8.

See page A10

BSG to submit Plan for Bucknell tactics this week

By Bronwen Durocher
Contributing Writer

Bucknell Student Government (BSG) is finalizing tactics to be submitted this Thursday for consideration by the University's Tactics Team. BSG has big plans for the near and not-so-near future for the University and hopes to keep student input alive in these decisions.

BSG plans to submit six tactics on Thursday based on The Plan for Bucknell.

"Tactics are broad-based concepts that can be turned into proposals and implemented to improve life at Bucknell," BSG Vice President of Administration Lindsey Pierce '08 said.

These tactics include, but are not limited to, a "one-card" laundry and vending machine pass, an oral communications program and a comprehensive speaker series, Pierce said.

A few of the tactics are expensive and will be more long-term oriented. The one-card pass and the speaker series are short-term goals that could come to fruition in the near future. The one-card pass would include vending, laundry and dorm access to students.

"The one-card project has gotten a lot of press because of the fact that it could potentially extend to businesses in the community," said Sarah Cummings '08, president of BSG.

This may be exciting news to many students who often look to the University's peer schools for comparison. Universities such as Lehigh already use a comprehensive "all access" card that allows students to purchase items in the downtown area.

"I think the laundry pass is an excellent idea and should have been implemented a long time ago. I think it's great BSG is taking into account what the students think, because that's where the innovation lies," Christine Yaged '09 said.

In addition to BSG's one-card pass plan, students could potentially see an increase in recognizable speakers. BSG has created a comprehensive plan that would help provide

See BSG page A2

Snow Day!

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Eight inches of snow caused campus to close Wednesday for the first time in recent memory.

Stealing trays from Bostwick Cafeteria for sledding or shoveling out cars and bikes were just some of the ways students spent their day.

Ellyn Ercolano—The Bucknellian

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Alumni return to offer leadership advice

Jessica Flannery '00, founder of Kiva organization, discusses success

Courtesy of Amy Badal

Amy Bruno '09 (right) meets Jessica Flannery '00, the keynote speaker at the Student Leadership Institute event last weekend. Flannery founded Kiva, a non-profit organization that helps secure loans for low-income entrepreneurs.

Notable alumni at the Student Leadership Institute

Katie Malague '94 - Program manager for Partnership for Public Service
Colby Cooper '99 - Senior adviser to Condoleezza Rice
Matthew Garman '96 - Chief financial officer for New York Magazine
Ed Robinson '86 - Consultant at Witt/Kieffer, Inc.
Ed Willett '79 - Senior director of ESPN customer marketing and sales
Richard Humphrey '74 - CEO of Arts4All
Jessica Jackley Flannery '00 - Co-founder of Kiva

By Carly Whitehead
Staff Writer

The Student Leadership Institute held a conference Saturday in the Elaine Langone Center during which alumni spoke about the importance of effective communication, motivation, fundraising, networking and entrepreneurship in successful leadership. The event's theme was "Inspiring Change."

Attendance at the Institute's activities was increased this year. One hundred and twenty students registered for the event—the largest audience in recent years.

Participating alumni included Katie Malague '94, a program manager for Partnership for Public Service; Colby Cooper '99, senior adviser to Condoleezza Rice; Matthew Garman '96, chief financial officer for New York Magazine; Ed Robinson '86, a consultant at Witt/Kieffer, Inc.; Ed Willett '79, senior director of ESPN customer marketing and sales; Richard Humphrey '74, CEO of Arts4All; and Jessica Jackley Flannery '00, co-founder of Kiva.

Flannery, the keynote speaker, graduated with a degree in philosophy and political science and was student government president. She spoke about Kiva, an organization she recently co-founded, which allows individuals to "lend to a specific entrepreneur in the developing world—empowering them to lift themselves out of poverty," according to www.kiva.org.

She talked about the evolution of her idea and how she got inspired. She initially spent three years working at Stanford's Center for Social Innovation and Public Management Program, but it was a presentation by Muhammad Yunus that she attended that she credits with changing her life. Yunus is a developer of microcredit, "the extension of small loans to entrepreneurs too poor to qualify for traditional bank loans," according to www.wikipedia.org.

After seeing the speech, Flannery gave up her job at Stanford to travel to east Africa, where she interviewed entrepreneurs in need of small loans to start businesses to help them get out of the cycle of poverty.

She said the stories she heard left her "stunned and deeply moved."

Upon returning to the United States, she co-founded Kiva, which has offered $3 million in loans to entrepreneurs in the developing world since its inception in October 2005. The site has offered loans from 32,000-33,000 lenders to entrepreneurs in 27 countries. Lenders receive regular updates on the entrepreneurs' progress, and they will eventually be

See LEADER page A3

False fire alarm deterrents installed

Public Safety trying to curb false alarms in Vedder and Swartz halls

By Sara Roth
Writer

This year, there have been 16 false fire alarms, with five in the past three weeks.

Ellyn Ercolano—The Bucknellian

"Two of those five [alarms] have occurred on the coldest days of the year," Public Safety Director Jason Friedberg said.

Students are not pleased with the abundance of alarms.

"The alarms are not enjoyable because it is freezing outside," said John Feld '10, a Swartz hall resident.

Last year there were only 11 false alarms throughout the entire school year. With this increase, Public Safety has decided to take preventative measures and install ultraviolet (UV) dye and audio-alarm boxes on the fire alarms in the residence halls that have had the most false alarms, Vedder and Swartz Halls.

"I am for this change," said Christine Friedlander '09, a resident of Vedder Hall. "[The alarms] are a hazard. We have had a lot of alarms at two and three in the morning. The other day, we had an alarm at 4 a.m. and I had practice at five, so I decided to just stay awake."

Two types of deterrents are being applied to the fire alarms in Vedder and Swartz Halls. One is called a "stopper."

"The 'stopper' boxes set off a piercing alarm sound, allowing those in the area to have their attention drawn and look out to see who the person is pulling the alarm before they can get away," Friedberg said.

The audible "stopper" is set off before the person has actually pulled the alarm. Public Safety hopes that this may stop the potential offender from actually pulling the alarm.

The other type of deterrent is UV dye.

"The dye comes in an invisible paste that is applied to the pull stations," Friedberg said. "Once it comes in contact with skin, it turns bright purple. Attempts to wash the paste off hands actually spread it further."

The only way to remove the dye is time, and even after it loses its color, the ultraviolet

See ALARMS page A2

INSIDE THIS ISSUE

OPINIONS
WVBU temporarily relinquished its Safe Harbor status. Does freedom of speech come with limitations?
A4

A&E
Looking for a delectable psychological thriller? Check out A&E's review of "Hannibal Rising."
A8

FEATURES
Features contributing writer Deborah Sandler shares her experiences studying abroad in Japan.
B10

SPORTS
Steve Schmaltz '09 overcame illness to become one of the top divers of the men's team. Read how in Sports.
B5

Public Safety Log

Wednesday, February 7

PROPERTY FOUND—Gerhard Fieldhouse: Bike found outside the building.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Smith Hall Parking Lot: Antenna broken off of vehicle.

THEFT—Trax Hall: Bicycle removed from the bike rack.

Thursday, February 8

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Gerhard Fieldhouse: Student transported to Evangelical ER for a medical condition.

ALARM - INTRUSION—Dana Engineering Building: Unknown cause.

VEHICLE VIOLATION—Dent Drive / Moore Ave.: Failure to stop at a stop sign.

VEHICLE VIOLATION—7th St. / Moore Ave.: Failure to stop at a stop sign.

Friday, February 9

THEFT—Breakiron Engineering Building: Smoke station removed from building.

THEFT—On Campus: Bike stolen or misplaced.

PROPERTY - DAMAGED—Breakiron Parking Lot: Vehicle damaged.

Saturday, February 10

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—7th Street: Student cited for underage consumption.

DISTURBANCE—Chi Phi Fraternity: Student creating a disturbance.

PROPERTY - FOUND—Biology Building: A set of keys found in a door.

VEHICLE INFORMATION—Route 15 / Curtin Ave.: Vehicle in a ditch.

Sunday, February 11

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Gateway Apartments: Student cited for public intoxication.

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Smith Lot: Student cited for underage consumption.

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION / MEDICAL TRANSPORT—McDonnell Hall: Student transported to Evangelical ER for treatment and cited for underage consumption.

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—Vedder Hall: Pull Station activated in the North stairwell.

HARASSMENT—Sojka Pavilion: Student escorted from Sojka Pavilion.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Elaine Langone Center: Student transported to Evangelical Hospital for treatment.

ALARM - FIRE—BU West: Fire alarm caused by cooking.

Monday, February 12

ASSIST AGENCY—Kappa Delta Rho Fraternity: Building inspection.

ACCIDENTAL FALL—Sojka Pavilion: Child fell and hit his head; no injury.

PROPERTY LOST—Unknown: Lost cellular phone.

PROPERTY LOST—Unknown: Student lost her BUID.

Tuesday, February 13

DRUG VIOLATION—Vedder Hall: Substance found outside Vedder Hall.

ASSIST AGENCY—On Campus: Assist Sheriff in serving warrants.

ALARM - FIRE—Swartz Hall: Caused by burnt plastic in a microwave.

BSG broaches new tactics

BSG From page A1

prestigious names and bigger events that could be endorsed by different campus organizations, alumni and even outside corporations.

"In the past, it was tough to come up with big names that our peer schools could come up with. Condoleezza Rice was part of an effort to improve the speaker series, and we really hope to expand on that," said Andrew Logan '08, BSG vice president of operations.

BSG also plans to start a "flame sheet," a poster where students can communicate concerns directly.

"Providing an easy and effective way for students to communicate their thoughts and ideas to BSG is our number one goal. We want the student body to feel informed and empowered," Cummings said.

In this spirit, BSG has also recently updated its Web site. The Web site has biographies, an innovative eBay/Craig's list page as well as student access to communication with the organization.

Pierce, also a member of the Tactics Team, said student involvement is the Plan for Prominence.

"We love to get student input in the tactics we are endorsing. In fact, we have a student who is submitting a tactic for a University communications channel. Any student can contact BSG and become involved in the creation of tactics," Pierce said.

The aforementioned student, Erica Schiffres '10, and her innovation could help create a communications major as well as a BUTV channel that would provide information and entertainment to the campus and community.

"I wanted to get involved in The Plan for Bucknell because I believe a TV station would be a great asset to the University, enabling students who may someday want a career in television to gain nuts and bolts experience in broadcasting as well as express their creativity," Schiffres said.

She also said that BSG was very supportive of her efforts.

WVBU self-regulates on-air content after incident

By Evan Unger
News Editor

WVBU, the University's radio station, has voluntarily suspended its Safe Harbor privileges after receiving a complaint on a show a few weeks ago.

According to Lisa Podolsky '10, WVBU's station manager, Safe Harbor refers to the time from 10 p.m. to 6 a.m. when radio DJs are allowed to play songs that contain curse words.

"DJs can play songs that are not defined as 'obscene' by the WVBU constitution and to use their 'common sense' with other content," Podolsky said.

The WVBU board begrudgingly decided to suspend Safe Harbor until further notice.

"In order to prevent further complaints, we decided to suspend Safe Harbor to assure that all listeners will find material appropriate and are not offended by it," Podolsky said.

WVBU has taken steps to ensure appropriate content.

"During the suspension, the DJs will not be allowed to play music that contains profanity. They will have to play clean versions of songs, or bleep profanities .... Also, DJs were advised to avoid all potentially controversial topics on the air during the suspension," said Jason Snyder '95, WVBU adviser. "All DJs will have to attend an upcoming mandatory training session where the new content guidelines and expectations are reviewed."

WVBU has never had a serious issue with its content.

"The Safe Harbor period has never been suspended before, but the board does periodically review its policies. Complaints have been received in the past, and the board has dealt with them on a case by case basis," Synder said. "Overall, the content of the station is appropriate for the listening audience, and very few issues arise."

Podolsky hopes listeners will appreciate the station's actions.

"[They] can count on WVBU to take concerns seriously," Podolsky said.

Most DJs find the changes appropriate but hope there is an alternative solution.

"It is unfair that others are being punished for one person's mistakes, so we are working on alternate methods of dealing with the situation," DJ trainer Greg Wagner '10 said. "We plan to take all measures possible to prevent future problems and make this the last time an issue arises."

Ellyn Ercolano—The Bucknellian

Recipients of the 2006-07 Greek Awards pose at the dessert reception. Clockwise, from top left: Dave Quinn '08, Karen Landis, Paula Shaw, Dean Chip Marrara, Karen Gardner, Mark Kohler '07, Eric Huselton '08, Joe Rusiewicz '07, Stacey Swift '08, Allie McKendry '09, Alyssa Beckler '08, Cassandra Ostroski '07, Emily Perl '07 and Michelle Wirkus '07.

Group Awards

Campbell Rutledge Jr. Scholarship:
- Fraternity with highest GPA for 2006: Sigma Phi Epsilon (3.48); Theta Chi (3.48)
- Sorority with highest GPA for 2006: Delta Gamma (3.35)

Most Improved Chapter: Theta Chi
Risk Management: Delta Gamma, Chi Phi, Phi Kappa Psi
Common Service and Programming:
- 25 hours per member: Alpha Chi Omega
- 27 hours per member: Sigma Phi Epsilon

Philanthropy: Kappa Alpha Psi; Chi Omega
Recruitment and New Member Education: Chi Omega, Lambda Chi Alpha Education Programming Award: Sigma Phi Epsilon
Community Relations Award: Alpha Chi Omega

Individual Awards

Outstanding University Adviser: Paula Shaw; Don Stechschulte, Jr.
Outstanding Alumni Volunteer/Adviser: Barbara Leauber; Gene Spencer
Outstanding Fraternity Student Athlete: John MacFeeters '07
Outstanding Sorority Student Athlete: Chessa Forer '07
Outstanding Chapter Officer: Cathy Kruesi '07; Adam Curry '07
Outstanding Juniors: Dave Quinn '08; Allison Fox '08
Outstanding Seniors: Cassie Ostroski '07; Molly Lewis '07; Mark Kohler '07
Paul Pigman Memorial Award: Karen Gardner
Gary Sojka Leadership Award: Bob Thomas
John Dunlap Commitment to Excellence Award: Michelle Wirkus '07; Ben Portman '07
Silver Star: Alpha Chi Omega, Chi Omega, Delta Gamma, Kappa Alpha Theta, Sigma Phi Epsilon, Theta Chi

Public Safety tries to limit false alarms characteristics remain up to a week after contact.

ALARMS From page A1

A false alarm is an annoyance to Public Safety as well as to the residents of the dorms, but the real reason for the installation of these deterrents is financial.

"A previous college that I worked for paid over $10,000 in one year for fire department responses to false alarms," Friedberg said.

The University is not the only one being charged for false alarms. If caught, a student faces repercussions from the University as well as the police department. At the University, pulling a false alarm is a Category I violation with penalties and a $500 fine. Due to the seriousness of this crime, the University will often involve outside legal action. These charges can include one year in prison and/or a $2,500 fine.

These charges may be severe, but a false alarm can put other students in extreme danger. In inclement weather, students can be forced to stand outside while ill-dressed for the elements.

In addition, Friedberg said that "it desensitizes residents because of the increased frequency and they may not leave the building during an actual alarm," and it "drains Public Safety resources from other areas to respond to an emergency."

Recycle this newspaper!

Alumni offer career guidance

LEADER From page A1

repaid.

Kiva has garnered a lot of praise from the press. National Public Radio, The New York Times, The Wall Street Journal, The Nilson Report, Business Week, ABC News, BBC World, CNN Money, The Village Voice and PBS Frontline have all run stories on the company.

Kiva is the only organization of its kind.

"We've created a market and we want to open it up," Flannery said.

She has many goals for the company, through which she hopes to continue to offer a connection with "a real person in the developing world." She said she also wants the site to "be a great source for research about stories of microfinance and microcredit in the developing world."

"This is my dream job," Flannery said. "It is the greatest joy to watch it blossom every day."

Much of Flannery's speech focused on the importance of stories and the trials of leadership.

"The real challenge is to personalize the principles of leadership, know which principles apply to you most in a certain instance and use them to make bold choices to contribute to the world," she said.

She said that personalizing the principles comes from knowing yourself and knowing your own story. She credits her interest in stories with the philosophy and poetry she studied while at the University.

"It really helped me slow down, read between the lines and understand what's happening on a deeper level," Flannery said.

She said she got to know and understand herself better by journaling, which she did throughout her time at the University.

"It's important to talk with your family, who can help you reflect on and interpret your life and celebrate your own story," Flannery said. "Think about who you've traveled with and what you have done and chosen not to do. I urge you not to edit out parts. The details matter. Embrace who you are. Give yourself permission to think, reflect and dream."

She said that by knowing other people's stories and your own "you can know your own power and make a difference in the world's story: history."

Flannery, a student at the Stanford Graduate School of Business, said that in one of her recent classes a professor emphasized the importance of thinking outside the box.

"There are a lot of good ideas out there, but it's hard to be a break-out success with the same ideas as everyone else. Opportunity lies in unique ideas and seeing things differently," she said.

In closing, Flannery urged students to seize the great chances the University provides.

"All of us have great opportunities at our fingertips. At Bucknell, you're in the top one percent of the world in terms of education and privilege, so exercise your influence," Flannery said.

The occasion was organized by a committee of eight students: Morgan Berg '09, Jenna Camann '07, Alexandra Campbell-Ferrari '09, Lauren Grainer '09, Harry Kastenbaum '09, Bill McLean '08, Courtney Shanney '09 and Sarah Surgala '09. Amy Badal, assistant dean of students, led the committee with support from Josh Grill and Mary Ann Stanton from Development and Alumni Relations and Missy Gutkowski from the Career Development Center.

"Our committee was brought together initially in the spring of last year," Camann said. "Last semester we did most of our work researching alumni, making contact with potential speakers, developing a theme and improving on our ideas for the conference."

Camann said Badal gave the committee control over much of the event.

"We were encouraged to talk with other students about who they would like to see," Camann said. "We were also given the opportunity to decide what session topics should be presented on and who should speak to these topics. We chose the theme 'Inspiring Change' and developed the program around what we felt the student body would most benefit from."

"I enjoyed Colby Cooper's speech on practical ways you can make connections, how to present yourself well and how to make a good first impression," said Rachel Stanton '07, an elementary education major. "I think this is a great opportunity, because we're getting a chance to learn about being a leader in whatever profession we choose."

Justine Daggett '09, also an elementary education major, said the day "offered a good opportunity to learn about different aspects of leadership and how to set up connections and networking."

Camann spoke of the importance of leadership education and the strength that the University offers in that arena.

"Student leadership is so important on our campus," she said. "We are lucky to have an admipistrator like Dean Badal who can motivate our students to continuously improve on their leadership skills and who can implement such a magnificent opportunity for our entire student body to grow and develop as leaders."

"Throughout the conference, President Mitchell, faculty members and some of our alumni speakers listened to other sessions, illustrating the importance of continuous learning of leadership. Whether you are a student leader inside or outside the classroom, or both, this leadership conference helped you for your tenure at Bucknell as well as in preparation for your future career," Camann said.

Camann called the conference a success.

"It is one of the only events on campus that brings together students, faculty, administration and alumni all in pursuit of one cause—in this case, inspiring change through leadership," she said.

Courtesy of Amy Badal

Courtney Shanney '09 mingles with alumni at the Student Leadership Institute. The event helped facilitate networking.

"The real challenge is to personalize the principles of leadership, know which principles apply to you most in a certain instance and use them to make bold choices to contribute to the world."
—Jessica Flannery '00, founder of Kiva*

University fills newly created chief diversity officer position

By Lily Beauvilliers
Associate Editor of Layout

Rolando Arroyo-Sucre, currently an employee of SUNY Oswego, will take the title of chief officer for diversity and equity for the University on March 15.

The administration hopes this new position will unite the Center for the Study of Race, Ethnicity and Gender, the Office of Multicultural Student Services, the Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual and Transgender Awareness Office (LGBT office) and the Women's Resource Center (WRC) into a more cohesive whole.

The position, which was offered to Arroyo-Sucre following a national search, was publicized in media dealing with diversity in equity, by word of mouth among professionals and through professional organizations in the area of diversity and equity.

Provost Mary DeCredico '81 then appointed a search committee with the purpose of reviewing the candidates' written applications, conducting phone interviews with qualified applicants and then bringing a few candidates to campus.

"The candidates met with students, faculty and staff to get a variety of perspectives," Chief Communications Officer Pete Mackey said.

Jessica Hess, the director of Multicultural Student Services, was on the search committee involved in the national search. The committee consisted of diversity office staff, faculty from different departments and athletic and human resources representatives.

"As part of the committee I was able to follow Arroyo-Sucre through the process," Hess said in an e-mail. Although the decision to hire Arroyo-Sucre was ultimately made after interviews with DeCredico and President Brian Mitchell, the committee recommended applicants based on their interviews.

"Throughout the entire search process, the committee was impressed with his ability to ask the 'right' questions about Bucknell," Hess said. "He took the time to investigate Bucknell from many sources and knew many of the historical and current issues and things in general that happen at Bucknell."

Some students were also chosen to meet with Arroyo-Sucre. Jordan Franklin '09 attended a lunch where he and other students interacted with the future chief officer of diversity and equity.

"Mr. Arroyo-Sucre described himself as a student-centered educator," Franklin said in an e-mail. "We spoke candidly about the problems that Bucknell currently faces and the need for the campus to create an environment in which all feel welcome."

Despite Arroyo-Sucre's lack of experience at a small, private institution like the University, "he spoke passionately and knowledgeably about our community and the opportunities to promote a more multifaceted concept of diversity on campus," Franklin said.

Arroyo-Sucre will report directly to the Office of the Provost. DeCredico said the position requires that he "oversee programming in a variety of organizations directly related to Bucknell's focus on diversity as part of The Plan for Bucknell."

One organization he will oversee is the WRC. WRC Director Micheala Denny expressed optimism about Arroyo-Sucre's ability to elicit change on campus.

"All the diversity offices will report to the same supervisor, which is good for achieving a common vision and common goals," Denny said. "He has excellent access to the upper administration, so he can give us a good voice. This position gives students a unique opportunity to speak with someone directly tied to diverse issues, so changes can be made based on those communications."

The LGBT office will also come under Arroyo-Sucre's jurisdiction. Frances McDaniel, director of the LGBT office, expressed some goals she would like to see Arroyo-Sucre address.

"I'm hoping he will play a major role in redefining diversity for the entire University, bringing diversity to Bucknell as a whole, not just to student affairs," McDaniel said.

Arroyo-Sucre certainly has experience in administrating diversity. He has worked at the University of Iowa, Loyola University Chicago, Saint Augustine College, Universidad Nacional de Panama and Universidad Tecnologico de Monterrey prior to his position at SUNY Oswego according to a campus-wide e-mail from DeCredico.

"Rolando was the finest candidate in an outstanding pool of finalists, and we are glad that the search brought us such an excellent individual," DeCredico said.

Hess hopes Arroyo-Sucre will act as more than just another administrator to students.

"He will probably be a vessel to carry ideas in and implement them at the 'right' time, allowing students and the entire campus community to benefit," Hess said.

"[Arroyo-Sucre] will probably be a vessel to carry ideas in and implement them at the 'right' time, allowing students and the entire campus community to benefit."
—Jessica Hess, director of Multicultural Student Services*

News Briefs

Student-athletes earn place on Dean's List

Two hundred and forty-three University student athletes earned a spot on the Dean's List for the Fall 2006 semester. There were 33 team captains and 23 student athletes who earned a 4.0 grade point average (GPA). In order to be on the Dean's List, students must earn at least a 3.5 GPA (on a 4.0 scale). There were also 118 student athletes who were named to the Patriot League Academic Honor Roll this past semester. In order to qualify for the Honor Roll, students must earn a varsity letter and achieve a 3.20 GPA during the semester of competition.

Harvard University appoints first female president

Harvard University will appoint its first female president, as early as this weekend, reports The Washington Post. Drew Gilpin Faust, dean of the Radcliffe Institute for Advanced Study, will succeed Derek Bok, a former Harvard president who served as interim president after president and former U.S. Treasury Secretary Lawrence Summers left the university.

"Faust's selection comes as Harvard moves to modernize its more than 30-year-old curriculum," reported the Post. Many other educators say that the appointment should send a message to other leading research universities throughout the nation. After Faust's appointment, half of the eight Ivy League schools will be lead by women. The other three universities with female presidents include Brown University, Princeton University and the University of Pennsylvania.

Students lose jobs after controversial film

Five students from Long Island University in New York lost their residence hall responsibilities after filming a short video that mimics the hostage-taking practices in the Middle East. The students apologized on Friday and demanded their jobs back, insisting that the video was never meant to be offensive.

According to CNN.com, the video contained five figures wearing ski masks threatening a rubber duck, the residence hall mascot, using "crude" Middle Eastern accents. Provost Joseph Shenker said in a statement that the college takes "seriously our obligation to create a campus environment that is free of prejudice and intolerance ... We don't find anything about terrorism and hostage-taking to be humorous."

The students' lawyer is filing a suit against Long Island University because he claims that a group of female residence hall assistants made a similar video but did not lose their jobs. He claims discrimination. The five students said the inspiration for the video came from the movie, "Team America: World Police."

Vagina Monologues marquee ordered to change

Last week, the Atlantic Theater in Atlantic Beach, Fla. changed its marquee for "The Vagina Monologues" in response to an offended resident. A passing driver complained that she did not want her young niece to see "vagina" on the marquee, reported The New York Times.

Bryce Pfanenstiel of the Atlantic Theater said, "We decided we would just use child slang for it." They changed the marquee to "The Hoohaa Monologues." Two days after the change, the theater received complaints from students from the Florida Coastal School of Law for changing the marquee. The group was responsible for organizing the production, and they had rights to the play only if they refused any censorship. The original title was later restored.

What's orange and blue and read all over?

The Bucknellian!

Write for News
etu001@

The Bucknellian
Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue
Volume 139, Number 4
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu
http://www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Editor-in-Chief
Andrew Larson '08

Associate Editor of Content
Matt Saylor '08

Associate Editor of Layout
Lily Beauvilliers '09

Business Manager
Jared Napolitano '08

Senior Editor
Catie Heverling '07

News Editors
Evan Unger '09
Julia Fuchs '09
Michelle Laxer '09

Opinions Editors
Michael Dippery '08
Hallie Stebbins '08

Sports Editors
Barbara Perlman '09
Brian Mulligan '08
Shannon Pitsch '09

Features Editors
Nilanjana Saha '09
Brianna DelValle '10

Arts & Entertainment Editors
Janna Shapiro '08
Genna Jerrard '10

Photography Editors
Ryan Winn '08
Ellyn Ercolano '09

Chief Copy Editor
Molly Clay (grad)

Asst. Chief Copy Editor
Anna Juan '08

Advertising Managers
Meredith Reighard '07
Katie Casteel '08

Office Manager
Kate Wood '07

Circulation Manager
Adam Kahler '07

Cartoonist
Juliana Su '09

Adviser
James F. Lee

Op-Ed Policy

The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editor-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 600 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

Publishing Information

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

Subscription Information

Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Bucknell University, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print office.

Advertising Policy

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577. 1085. Copyright © 2007 The Bucknellian

The Bucknellian
Editorial

Radio station accountable for content

WVBU, the campus radio station, has revoked its Safe Harbor status after a complaint about particularly raunchy comments aired on a weekend show.

Now, the station is requiring that all DJs broadcast only PG-rated material, including music. The resitrction extends to the Safe Harbor period between 10 p.m. and 6 a.m.

Safe Harbor usually permits DJs to broadcast indecent—but not obscene—material.

The material in question crossed into the realm of patently obscene by most standards.

The station already faces fines from the Federal Commissions Commission, legal action and action by the University administration.

The station censoring itself on its own accord in an attempt to appease the aggrieved party, and to prevent any future infractions while it retrains its staff on what constitutes appropriate on-air behavior.

WVBU needs to establish policies on its content.

Just because the station is free to say almost anything it wants—except swears—during the Safe Harbor period, it doesn't mean that it should say anything it wants.

While WVBU enjoys the same freedom of speech as a newspaper, it also holds the same responsibilities. Anyone in the area with a radio can listen to the WVBU. DJs should consider that their crude comments could be overheard by children and be irreparably damaging to them.

Further, the radio station, which is housed on campus and receives funding from the University, is a direct reflection of the school.

It shouldn't project an image of the University as an uncouth or licentious place. The radio station's values should be in line with the school's.

The Bucknellian, as a student-produced newspaper, has an audience split down the middle between students and parents, alumni, staff, and the local community.

If we targeted only students, we'd probably put Ms. O on the front page. If the adults had their way, Ms. O wouldn't exist at all.

The key is to balance the interests of all your constituents in the form of sensibility.

It's good that WVBU is reevaluating its on-air practices during Safe Harbor hours.

WVBU ought to think about what listeners—not just students—want to hear, and consider leaving the smut to Lewisburg Penitentiary.

Letters to the Editor

University students studious and social

To the Editor:

In response to the laments of Dusty Schroeder '07 ("Bucknell 'Hello' campaign unnecessary," Feb. 9), I would urge Schroeder to be slightly less dogmatic and doctrinaire when he makes particularly general assertions about the work habits and social preferences of the University student body. I wish to make clear that shades of gray do exist, and generalizations that attempt to encapsulate the entire student body under one single heading can prove misleading and, in my case, even insulting.

I agree with Schroeder that the "Bucknell Hello" campaign is unmerited and, quite frankly, ridiculous. Admittedly, the University does maintain an obligation to improve the "intangibles" of the college experience; clearly, this effort must include a focus on the creation of a "strong social community." Nonetheless, "Bucknell Hello" is a misguided and unneeded waste of energy and is, more importantly, an unwarranted focus.

Furthermore, Schroeder correctly affirmed that the University's attention should remain with larger issues such as enlightened academic standards, improved alumni fundraising and a reinvigorated, unrelenting concentration on increased expectations if we are to make good on the ennobled "Plan for Bucknell."

That said, I have a bone to pick with Schroeder. Rigid, seemingly omniscient claims which assail the entire student body for being lazy or over-insistent on social preoccupations are dangerous generalizations. Not every student at the University strives to be Paris Hilton, though I admit that there is evidence of that behavior on campus. Hedonism, the extreme prioritization of pleasure over all things, is most certainly perilous as it abounds with many philosophical flaws. But wouldn't pious, overly-devout dedication to pure academics also make us boring people?

There can be no denial of the fact that much is to be gained from tireless study and a strict adherence to academics—they are the cornerstone of the liberal arts education and most certainly galvanize independent critical thinking and responsible behavior. Socialization, though, has its benefits too. Dostoevskian self-condemnation may produce great literature, but it does not beget many friends nor memorable shared experiences. Certainly it appears to me that at the least, it is possible to incorporate both aspects of the college experience and do so with a reasonable and balanced approach.

If there is a shortage of hard-working and diligent students at the University, apparently they are hiding under a rock I have yet to turn over. I mean, is there such a thing as an open computer in the library anymore? It is easy to see why I took offense with Schroeder's comments; if he is criticizing indolence, surely he cannot consider me a rightful target. I would go as far to say that the ISR people may even be tired of seeing some of us nightly.

In contrast though, I know students who seldom attend class, disregard assignments and insouciantly prioritize social "obligations" over legitimate responsibilities. Fortunately, these people are, and always have been, a minority among the larger "serious" student population.

Neither of these extremes are healthy or ideal, and most importantly, they are not conducive to personal growth. Truthfully, as intelligent and capable undergraduates at one of the nation's premier universities, we must not deem our Lindsay Lohans as unethical heretics, nor categorize our Steve Urkels as irrelevant, colorless social pariahs. We must be cognizant that absolute dedication to either end of the spectrum is hazardous and impedimentary to both spiritual and cerebral advancement. There is much to be learned outside the classroom and just as much can be ascertained inside. Each aspect, therefore, must be recognized and retains an undeniable importance within the University undergraduate experience.

Sincerely,
Alex DeOteris '07

Editorial mischaracterizes BSG philanthropy drive

To the Editor:

I write in response to The Bucknellian's Editorial, "Alumni relationships key to endowment" (Feb. 9, 2007). To begin, the validity of the editors' statements should be thoroughly examined. On Nov. 10, 2005 the 2009 Class Congress, not "the University," voted (12-1-0) to introduce "Bison Banks" into the First Night ceremony. What The Bucknellian called, "a shameful request for money" was a small part of a larger initiative to create a culture of philanthropy on campus as stated in the Plan for Bucknell.

In conjunction with an inaugural formal class dinner, the Bison Banks (a BSG Class Congress gift from the Alumni Association to the first-year class) were not only meant to "market the importance of donating" (a narrow-minded view held by The Bucknellian editorial staff), but were "symbols of our ownership of the University and the alumni community's support," a statement presented at First Night by the class vice president. The 2009 Class Congress took on the burden of beginning the process to solve the problem associated with the lack of student and alumni giving rate, which the Bucknellian so clearly stated as a concern.

Articles like these inhibit the culture of philanthropy from developing and gaining momentum. The Bucknellian editorial staff should recognize what "the University" and its alumni have done for the current student body by fostering and joining in the quest to develop a philanthropic culture.

The 2009 Class Congress will continue in its quest as it launches a new campaign, "A buck for the BUCK." On Wednesday, Feb. 7, the class congress voted unanimously to continue the process of instilling this philanthropic culture deeper within students.

In all honesty, I believe this culture already exists. One cannot walk through the Elaine Langone Center mall without being solicited by fellow students to participate or donate to a specific group or organization. The problem is as follows: there is a fragmentation among students who are pushed and pulled by their organization, athletic team, Greek affiliation, etc. Students often forget, or rather disregard, that the institution gives students the capabilities and access to support these periphery organizations.

Further, the editorial claimed that Lehigh's success is "largely attributed to the school's extensive career networking services." Again, The Bucknellian failed to mention the recent success of the sophomore Externship Program sponsored by the Career and Development Center. In its inaugural year the program had tremendous response from students, which in comparison did not match the overwhelming support of alumni sponsors.

The Alumni Board and other University offices have been more than willing to help in BSG 2009's mission to instill and create this culture of philanthropy. As we have learned, there is no silver bullet that can raise student and young alumni-giving rates. They must be promoted through communication and connection. This should be an easy task as we, members of the Bucknell community, have a shared objective to make Bucknell the premier undergraduate experience in higher education. Articles such as the editorial on Feb. 9 are not steps in the right direction.

At the Student Leadership Institute over this past weekend, the question was asked, "How do we create this culture? Is it through establishing a rationale of why to give?" The alumnus responded, "People do not care about how much you know, until they know how much you care."

This is a statement on behalf of the BSG 2009 Class Congress to show that we care and hope the Bucknellian and other constituencies of the Bucknell community care too.

Sincerely,

Harry Kastenbaum
Bucknell Student Government
2009 Class President

Negative publicity hurts University's endowment

To the Editor:

I would like to commend The Bucknellian editorial staff on its recent editorial on the endowment. I currently serve as chair of the Communications/Stakeholders Committee on the Bucknell Alumni Association Executive Board. One of my goals as chair is to educate both alumni and current students on the benefits of increasing the endowment.

Believe it or not, current students have a significant effect on the level of participation of alumni in giving towards the Annual Fund. Every time a fraternity or sorority closes, a segment of the alumni population becomes upset and some stop their participation. Every time a party with an inappropriate theme is given, another segment of the population gets disenchanted. Negative publicity from campus hurts the Annual Fund. Conversely, every time good news comes from campus, alumni bring out the Bucknell sportswear ... and the checkbook.

So, I ask that we work together in helping the development staff at the University increase the endowment. It was explained to us at our winter meetings in Annapolis, Md. that the higher the endowment, the lower the tuition, so everyone has a stake in increasing the size of the endowment. The Bucknell Alumni Association is very interested in this and many other topics. If you have any ideas or questions that you feel we should address, please feel free to contact me at thebisondude@comcast.net. I can't tell you how proud I am to be a Bucknellian at this time, as 99 percent of the news coming from campus is great news.

Sincerely,

Kevin R. Blackwell '85
Catonsville, MD

Pharmacists should not interfere with women's right to choose Plan B

Freedom of religion not an excuse to deny medication to anyone

By Rajaa Qadri
Writer

The First Amendment of the U.S. Constitution grants everyone the right to practice his or her religion freely and to the satisfaction of his or her conscience. But you cannot expect to enjoy the freedom of religion at the expense of other people's freedom.

Various pharmacists have been refusing to fill the prescriptions of medications that conflict with their religious beliefs—namely the Plan-B medication. Women are suffering because they are unable to get the emergency contraceptive and some have to run around from one pharmacy to another in order to get the medicine.

Several cases have gone to court in which people have defended that making pharmacists hand out these types of medicines is to force them to go against their religious beliefs. I don't understand how this is a defense when pharmacists are not required to take the medications themselves. The pharmacist just has to fill the prescription that has already been written. The couples have already talked to their doctor about the matter and have everything under control. Then, why the fuss? Since when have pharmacists started to make decisions for the couples in family planning?

When a person visits a professional, it is the professional's job to make sure the client is leaving happily. A pharmacist should promote the right of self-determination and recognize individual self-worth by encouraging patients to participate in decisions about their health. In all cases, a pharmacist should respect personal and cultural differences among patients. The care and well-being of a client should be the center of the pharmacist's professional practices. This principle requires that no patient is deprived of pharmaceutical services because of the personal conviction or religious beliefs of pharmacists. Emergency birth control usually is needed late at night and within a short period of time. It could cause drastic consequences for people if they are not provided with the right medicine at the right time.

A variety of articles in The Washington Post and The New York Times say there are pharmacists who will only give birth control pills to a woman if she is married. There are some who equate contraceptives with abortion and refuse to provide them.

People may argue that if you are not getting the service you want from a pharmacy you can go to another one, but not all people live in the vicinity of multiple pharmacies. Even in the Lewisburg area, I only know of two pharmacies: CVS and Wal-Mart. If they refuse to help us in a time of need, where are we supposed to go? Not all of us in town or at the University have cars.

I do not understand why anyone would want to be trained in a particular profession when unable to handle the responsibilities associated with that profession. The person knows before being trained as well as before getting a job of what is expected of him or her. If you cannot fulfill those expectations due to religious obligations then you should not choose that profession.

Why are people demanding others to see the world through their own religious perspectives?

All these issues ultimately come down to the pro-life versus pro-choice debate. Any pro-choice individual can be extremely religious and hold life very dear. But they should realize that the world is complex in these areas, and in the interest of harmony and fairness, they should leave this decision to the individual. You cannot always make decisions for others. According to The Washington Post, over 95 percent of women use contraceptives at some point in their lives. If we look at it from an unbiased point of view, these women are trying to make a

Campus events calendar disorganized

By Ryan Winn
Photography Editor

Like most students, I do not read through the many e-mails that I receive on a given day. I generally look to the various calendars and heartwarming table toppers for a list of the events occurring throughout the week. I find myself rather frustrated with the limited scope and the often rather horrifically inaccessible nature of most of the "community calendars."

I understand that mediums like the Activities and Campus Events (ACE) table tents have a very limited presentation area. ACE must carefully choose what appears on its cards every week.

There is this wonderful invention, though, called the Internet, and I do believe that we have a Web site. While I am not tremendously skilled at computer programming, I do believe that simple text documents and spreadsheets do not require a significant amount of bandwidth. I am left in shock and irritation that there is not an easily accessible and completely comprehensive weekly calendar for the University. It would be convenient to have the location, date and time of every University event, from a presidential address to a field hockey game, from Bucknell Idol to the French department's feature presentation.

I recognize that there is a "University Calendar" and if one sifts through the links on myBucknell one will stumble across it. This calendar is not complete and it is not directly or even easily accessible from the Web site. In fact, when the phrase "University Calendar" is entered into the University search bar, the calendar does not appear until the fourth hit—and even then it is only a 56 percent match. The information is there if you want to wade through a sea of e-mails or a plethora of calendars and pages of unrelated hits. This is not the way it should be. All I ask is that the events contained in the numerous calendars, publications and e-mails that are sent out in a given week be organized and presented in a simple manner.

U.S. 'democratic' policies oppressive

By Chris Opiela
Contributing Writer

At an international security conference held in Munich last Saturday, Russian President Vladimir V. Putin delivered a speech that directly criticized the United States' current foreign policies, producing an uproar of criticism from several prestigious U.S. politicians. I agree that Putin was not far from the mark.

The Russian president, slowly turning authoritarian, made the speech at the 43rd Munich Conference on Security Policy, a meeting first held during the tensions of the Cold War. Putin's tone and accusations reflected Cold War emotions, especially his misgivings about U.S. intent to put up missile defense systems in Europe, the expansion of NATO and the attendance of Iran's top nuclear program official at the speech.

Putin said in The New York Times that, "Today we are witnessing an almost uncontained hyper use of force in international relations—military force."

He also warned that single power monarchs, such as the one the U.S. has assumed, always end up having their power destroy the country or organization from within.

Putin's remarks were wholly accurate despite the expected denial and startled remarks from United States politicians. He practically foretold the fate of the U.S. as a superpower.

I believe in liberty. I believe in the pursuit of happiness. I believe the U.S. no longer represents such principles. Let us take a look at what the U.S. is doing in foreign policy and to its own people:

The war in Iraq, suppression of North Korea's nuclear programs and threats of war with Iran if they do not cease their nuclear program. All these things sound more like a dictatorship than a model of democracy. I do not agree with any nuclear program; it is a dire threat not just to other countries but to all existence. But if the U.S. is going to force other countries to comply with rules not even the U.S. complies with for reasons like national defense, who is to say that these countries cannot do the same for their own national defense from the U.S.?

The military endeavor to capture Osama bin Laden was justified. The main piece of evidence used to win over the American public for the Iraq War was intelligence linking Iraq to Osama bin Laden and the 9/11 attacks. Recently, the Pentagon Inspector General released his report considering the intelligence that linked the two. According to The New York Times, the report found that the analysts of pre-war intelligence made interpretations that were dubious at best. The report did not recommend prosecution of Feith because neither Donald Rumsfeld himself nor his assistant Paul Wolfowitz condoned Feith's actions.

We are at war suppressing people's right to the pursuit of happiness by killing the people's sons, daughters and innocents who get in the way. This war was based on intentionally deceiving an entire nation and playing upon the memories and emotions of those affected by the 9/11 attacks.

Who could blame Putin for stating simple observations?

I am ashamed to be part of a democracy which has suppressed other people since it was formed, claiming this suppression and death in the name of freedom, national defense, and progress.

Thank you, President Putin, for having the courage to hold up a looking-glass.

The F Word
On Valentine's Day

By Lenore R. Flower
Contributing Writer

Single people's responses to Valentine's Day seem to fall into three categories: you love Valentine's Day and embrace the copious amounts of chocolate that surround you; you find Valentine's Day to be a nice idea, but are annoyed by its over-commercialized nature; or, you hate the holiday with a fiery passion and become physically ill every time you see a happy couple swapping spit. Those that fall into the latter category (many of which are of the female persuasion) tend to become bitter and irritable, wear black to mourn the occasion and stereotypically find themselves on the couch come Valentine's night, watching a movie with a pint of Ben and Jerry's.

Of course, the male gender can also feel the bitter sting of the Valentine's holiday, but it is less expected or condoned in our society for men to whimper over their single status.

Why is it that so many single women eschew their right to celebrate the excessive amounts of candy and stuffed animals at their disposal and instead become depressed and angry on Valentine's Day, while their male counterparts remain seemingly unscathed? To me, it all comes down to my own Valentine's Day tradition, Jane Austen's "Pride and Prejudice."

Set during the Napoleonic Wars, the brilliant female protagonist, Elizabeth Bennet, has nothing but her charms and bright eyes with which to attain a husband. Her love interest, Fitzwilliam Darcy, has the means to live very comfortably with or without a female companion. Miss Bennet, as a woman, cannot inherit her father's estate, and will be destitute without a husband. Her worth as a woman is therefore determined by her ability to procure a wealthy husband, while Mr. Darcy's worth is inherent (or, more accurately, inherited).

Of course, we now live in a society where a woman is capable of being very successful on her own; but for past centuries a woman's worth was wholly dependent on her ability to acquire a husband. Though we have made great progress towards women's equality in the United States, it would be impossible to completely erase such a widespread or longstanding stigma against single women in a matter of decades. Because of this, there is still a great deal of pressure on women to be in a relationship, and later to marry, out of the fear that if we don't, we will somehow morph into an old maid or "crazy cat lady" at the age of 30.

Many women also begin to question whether their standards are too high during the Valentine's holiday. "Pride and Prejudice" also has a lesson for us on this subject: don't!

"Only the deepest love will persuade me into matrimony, which is why I shall end up an old maid," Miss Bennet quips to her sister.

Despite the possibility that she will have to remain unmarried permanently, she refuses to marry Mr. Collins, a man she cannot respect or love. In exchange for this gamble, she gains the opportunity to pursue other men in the future.

This frame of mind is equally relevant in college relationships: without respect or the possibility of lasting affection, why would anyone enter into a relationship that would limit their chances of finding someone truly special?

Remaining single during Valentine's Day does not negate one's value or act as a precursor for future singlehood in any way. In fact, it could be considered an assertion of your own worth. So, while you may still be listening to "Love Song for No One," by John Mayer, repeatedly, keep in mind that things could be worse. While you may not have found your Mr. Darcy yet, at least you are not dating Mr. Collins.

Bucknellian Correction

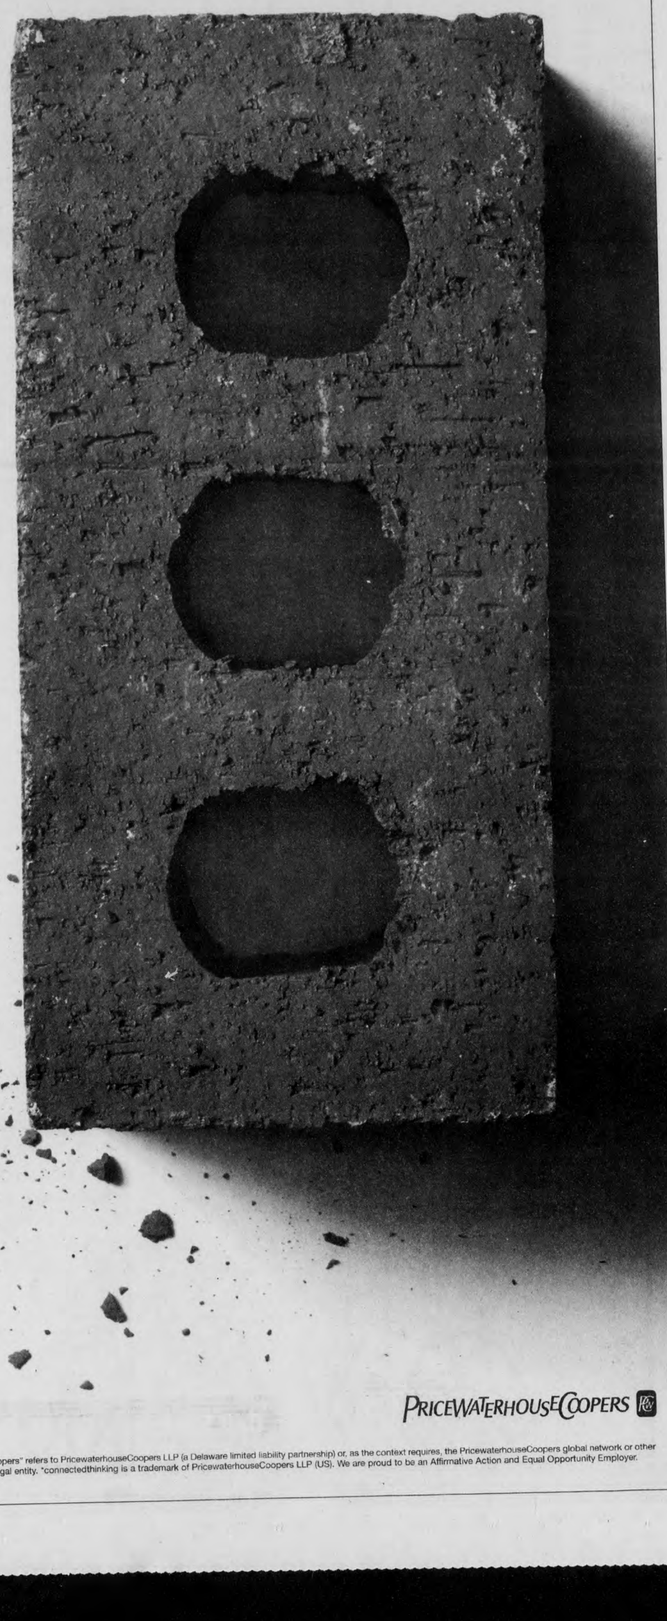
The Feb. 9 op-ed, "War with Iran should be avoided at all costs," incorrectly stated that Iran has been supplying weapons to Sunni militias in Iraq. According to news reports, the United States has alleged that Iran's government is providing weapons to Shiites in Iraq.

Leader Bricklayer Human being*

We believe community service is a part of our job description. Last June, we asked our US staff of 29,000 to take a day away from work and help their neighbors. We called it 29k/30.

Learn more about this project and others.

Visit pwc.com/community



*connectedthinking

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

© 2007 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (a Delaware limited liability partnership) or, as the context requires, the PricewaterhouseCoopers global network or other member firms of the network, each of which is a separate and independent legal entity. "connectedthinking is a trademark of PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (US). We are proud to be an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer.

University artists release new album

Edgy lyrics and club-worthy beats make 'My Own Worst Enemy' a hit

Courtesy of Knock It Out Records

Young Fo (Mahdi Woodard '09) and Ziek (Thaddeus Davis '09) are campus hip-hop artists who released their debut album, "My Own Worst Enemy." Produced by Ryan Nach '07, the album seeks to bring Brooklyn and Atlanta's vibe to Bucknell.

By Reuben Quansah & Janna Shapiro
Contributing Writer and A&E Editor

❖ Movie Review

Just north of campus, situated in a cozy little party house called "Blue Stucco," up the rickety steps to the first room on the right, is a fixer-upper music studio. The cracking floor-boards and dim lightning are the inspiration and creative home of the student-owned music production company, "Knock It Out Records."

The two artists, Zeikk Knoxx and Young Fo, plan to use their newly released album, "My Own Worst Enemy," as a passageway from the sheltered University environment to the real world.

Here, in this gritty downtown house, emerges another side of the two student/hip-hop artists and producer Ryan "Knockout" Nach. They are unphased by the bachelor-pad clutter, but far from indifferent. So it is fitting that we meet them for an a listening party and a look at the poetic observations showcased in "My Own Worst Enemy."

Thaddeus Davis '09 ("Ziek") and Mahdi Woodard '09 ("Young Fo") lyrically shoot for a sure-shot, with production by Ryan Nach '07 ("Knockout") on their debut album, "My Own Worst Enemy." This project is yet another notch in Nach's belt. He has stepped up his game exponentially since his rookie album at the University with the infamous Holland Mack '06 or "M-Hoffa."

Here are my two cents on the three tracks that both make and break the album. While most emcees on campus have the luxury of mediocrity, Ziek and Young Fo toiled in a studio to put intellect, humor, penury, success, soul and grittiness onto one compact disc.

Listeners often discount the importance of an introductory track in an album. "O.W.E. Pt. I" introduces the album's intent. Zeik and Young Fo lay their cards on the table and state what they are about, using tag-team wordplay and Dipset-like drumlines.

"I'm a Star" leaves no doubt that these guys are stars in the making. The lyrics are questionable, but the beat is club-worthy. There are one or two lines referencing cars and money and a life so extravagant that you "gotta wear sunscreen." We "promise ya" that Track 13 makes up for the last song. They let you know that they can be good sports ... until you step on their toes, that is.

"Be Around" is simultaneously hardcore and soulful, thanks to Loretta Miller '09. Ziek "spits" rhymes on the song with a gritty passion that makes it an inevitable classic. Knockout makes good use of his MPC when sampling "I'll be around" by the Spinners.

"Pressure" is my favorite track and the core of "My Own Worst Enemy." Knockout's strings and sincere lyrics by Ziek and Young Fo make it classic. Both rappers rawly expose realities outside the Bucknell "bubble," giving listeners just a small glimpse of their own worst enemies—themselves. They use the motif of the devil to show their battle to be righteous. "Pressure" represents what some might call the "real" hip-hop lacking in the current music stream.

Between every pulsing heartbeat of hip-hop, we thank the heavens for the emcees, "femcees" and beat-makers like these guys who do not give up by making cookie-cutter LPs. These innovators may not "get on the map" but will dig their way through the underground hip-hop scene, and make names for themselves via the hip-hop "chitlin circuit" and on college campuses.

Knockout, Ziek and Young Fo show their finest work on this album. Aside from minor technical shortcomings and female references, this is a solid album. We give it a B+.

Spoiler Alert!

By Matt Saylor
Associate Editor of Content

A note to readers: due to publication deadlines, it is not possible to write completely about the episodes of television shows airing on the Thursday before the issue comes out. There may be references to what happens on those shows, but not all information about what happens in that episode is available.

"ER" — Abby asking Luka to propose to her again at the end of the Feb. 8 episode was a nice turn of fortune for the perpetually doomed couple. There will of course be more difficulties for the two, but it appears that they will make it down the aisle. Goran Visnjic has said publicly that there is the potential of shooting parts of an episode or two in his native Croatia.

In some casting news, Stacy Keach will soon begin an arc of episodes on the show as Gates' troubled father. Gates himself will have to continue to deal with the fallout from Meg's death, including whether or not he really is Sarah's biological father.

Neela is having difficulties deciding whether or not to attempt a relationship with Gates or to explore something with Ray. Speaking of Ray, Shane West has been cast to star in a new pilot for FOX that could be picked up for the 2007-08 television season. We will have to see if Ray sticks around the hospital beyond May, but the guess here is that his days at County General are numbered.

"Scrubs" — Here is my latest hint on the character who will die: he or she is involved in the medical field. This means that Ted, Jordan and the Janitor are safe.

How about the bombshell at the end of the Feb. 8 episode, "My Road to Nowhere"? The show could have taken the easy way out of the relationship between J.D. and Kim with the miscarriage, and it looked like exactly that would happen. But the final 10 seconds of that episode revealed that Kim is still pregnant and lied to the show's leading man. Elizabeth Banks is not scheduled to appear on the show for a while, so there is no word on how this situation will play out.

"Grey's Anatomy" — The medical show trend continues in "Spoiler Alert," but we are switching from the NBC network to ABC. After last night's episode, the show is now two-thirds of the way through the three-part arc surrounding the ferry boat crash. There are so many questions yet to be answered in next week's final hour, but I will say that there are strong indications that another character will join Denny in the great beyond. I do not have a conclusive answer to which it will be, but I can tell you it is not Izzy, Cristina, George, Callie, Alex, Addison or Bailey. Tune in on Thursday for a definitive answer.

Guest Star Alert — Megan Mullally will be appearing on "Boston Legal," Bai Ling and Cheech Marin will be stopping by on "Lost" and Morgan Fairchild will be popping up on "Two and a Half Men." Look for Fairchild on Feb. 19 and Ling on Feb. 21. Marin will show up as Hurley's father on the Feb. 28 episode of "Lost," while Mullally won't appear on "Boston Legal" until later this year.

Seen a movie lately?

Write for A&E!

E-mail jshapiro@

America's #1 law school for trial advocacy is in sunny Tampa Bay, Florida.

Call Stetson toll-free today at (877) LAW-STET or e-mail us at lawadmissions@law.stetson.edu.

STETSON UNIVERSITY College of Law

By Ana Fullmer
Contributing Writer

This week has been a whirlwind in the world of celebrity gossip. By now everyone has heard of the tragic death of the iconic Anna Nicole Smith and the media firestorm that has developed in the aftermath. I believe that tragedy should not be overly exploited—even enigmatic, blonde, ex-Playboy tragedy. If you can't concentrate on your current homework assignment because you are too obsessed with knowing the latest gossip on Smith's lover/lawyer, Howard K. Stern, rest assured that People.com will be providing updates hourly.

On a lighter note, The Grammy Awards were Sunday night, and they brought all of young Hollywood out to celebrate and canoodle.

Scarlett Johansson even decided to open up on the subject of speculation about a relationship between her and Justin Timberlake. PerezHilton.com reports that when asked about the rumors on the red carpet, Johansson said, "We have a lot of friends in common, and Justin's a sweetheart...but there's a lot of speculation and I try not to read that stuff. I think when two people are single and are seen together, it's immediately like a crazy feeding frenzy."

Who does Johansson think she's kidding? It is a crazy feeding frenzy because when two hot, young, single people are seen together, usually they're hooking up. Denial is not a river in Egypt, although it is no surprise that Johansson doesn't want to admit to getting intimate with JT.

Since his breakup with "There's Something About Mary" star Cameron Diaz, Timberlake is reportedly taking full advantage of his newly single status. He has also been linked to actress Jessica Biel. Johansson cannot get away with anything these days because PageSix.com reports that the actress/liar was spotted repeatedly sneaking backstage to be with Timberlake that very same night, wearing a hoodie and sunglasses. She's bringing incognito back!

There was plenty more hot action at the Grammy Awards, including an altercation between Sean "Diddy" Combs and the cast of the hit television show, "Grey's Anatomy" during a pre-Grammy party. According to PageSix.com, the show's cast members, including T.R. Knight and Kate Walsh, were harshly instructed by Diddy's security to move tables in a VIP section of the club so Diddy could have the seat he wanted. Reportedly, Knight exchanged heated words with the rapper after being moved, but Diddy didn't seem to know who Knight was and the situation diffused quickly. Meow!

As for a post-Grammy interaction a newly brunette Jessica Simpson made no attempt to hide her relationship with fellow singer John Mayer. The two were photographed staring adoringly into each others' eyes and glomming at each other all night. Let's hope that Papa Joe, Jessica's father, approves!

In other happy news, it seems that former couple Jennifer Aniston and Vince Vaughn really do remain "good friends." PageSix.com reports that Vaughn was in attendance for at least two hours at a birthday party thrown for Aniston by former "Friends" co-star Courtney Cox. The event was star-studded with other partygoers including Sandra Oh, David Spade, Patricia Arquette and Kathy Najimy. My invite must have gotten lost in the mail.

I know I said I am against exploiting tragedy, but Britney Spears' ex-fling, model Isaac Cohen, spoke to The News of the World about Spears' troubled state. In the candid discussion, Cohen described Spears as an insecure sex addict.

"By the time I met Britney she was burnt out. She knew she had been drinking and partying as a way to try to banish the bad stuff from her life," he said. "Far from the trashy drunk, I saw a very shy, sweet girl who was just desperately sad about what had happened with her marriage."

"It was clear she was not over her marriage. The first time she invited me to her home I saw her wedding dress hung on the wall in a glass box," Cohen said. "As we made love that night it was like Kevin was in bed beside us. She had not even begun to move on with her life."

I bet a video of that threesome would get a ton of money on eBay. Or no money whatsoever. Let's just hope that Spears sees the recent Smith tragedy as a warning and cleans up her act soon. That goes for all you "bubble"-nellians too. Don't do drugs!

A KILLER IS BORN

'Hannibal Rising' chronicles Lecter's journey from child to cannibal

Courtesy of imdb.com

Lector (Gaspard Ulliel), stands over the struggling body of one of his victims. Revealing his cunning aptitude for science, Lector is accepted into medical school, which hones his skills and provides him with the tools to exact justice on those who caused his childhood trauma.

By Erik Zager
Writer

❖ Movie Review

First there was "The Silence of the Lambs," a critically acclaimed masterpiece that set the bar for every psychological thriller and horror movie of our generation. Then "Hannibal," a disappointing sequel, went great lengths to spoil the serial killer we all grew to love. "Red Dragon" followed, proving that if the first sequel falls flat, there still may be hope for reviving the psychopath's charm. Finally, "Hannibal Rising" is a film that, for all its bad reviews, still manages to get some final "umph" out of Dr. Lecter (Gaspard Ulliel) and his penchant for sophisticated cuisine.

The key to enjoying "Hannibal Rising" is not to expect another "The Silence of the Lambs." Sequels to classics are rarely bearable (see "Star Wars" Episodes I, II and III), so one must enter the theatre with few expectations. The movie will always be in the shadow of a giant. As a stand-alone picture, it delivers its fair share of entertainment.

"Hannibal Rising" chronicles "Hannibal the Cannibal's" journey from an innocent boy to the serial killer we see inhabiting a glass cage in "The Silence of the Lambs." Some critics claim that revealing Hannibal's past will diffuse his evil aura.

"Filmdom's greatest villain, Hannibal Lecter, has been both defanged and declawed," said Misha Davenport of the Chicago Sun-Times.

Actually, watching Hannibal's steady descent into insanity adds a sense of reality to this character that could increase his terror factor.

During World War II, we follow young Hannibal and his family as they are forced to flee their Lithuanian home in the face of German occupation. Hannibal watches his parents' deaths in the cross fire during a battle as his family waits out the war in an isolated forest cottage.

Hannibal is forced to care of himself and his younger sister ,Misha, until they are rescued. Unfortunately for them, a group of local mercenaries stumbles across the cottage during their search for loot. Hannibal and Misha endure immense cruelty at the hands of the mercenaries. The seeds of a psychopath are sewn.

After being rescued by Soviet forces, Hannibal is placed in an orphanage. Fast forward almost a decade. The adolescent Lecter takes a more familiar shape. He is mute, except when he screams out in terror during dreams which recreate his traumatic experiences. Lecter eventually runs away and seeks out his uncle in France. The uncle's widow takes him in after informing Hannibal that they are the last two remaining members of their family.

Hannibal grows up, under the tutelage of his Japanese aunt, learning the art of the samurai. He learns to be prepared and resourceful—traits that become quite apparent in his later life of homicide. As Hannibal further matures, his emotional baggage begins to take control of him. He sets out to take vengeance on his childhood tormentors. Little by little, the puzzle pieces of one of the silver screen's most terrifying personalities come together.

Ulliel has very large shoes to fill. Portraying the same character as Academy Award-winner Anthony Hopkins is no easy task. Fortunately for movie-goers, Ulliel did an outstanding job, capturing Lecter's insanity and bloodlust quite well. Watching Ulliel's expression as he licked the victim's blood from his fingers sends shivers down the spine of the heartiest horror-movie fans.

"Hannibal Rising" is not for the faint of heart. Those who found it hard to sit through "The Silence of the Lambs" without burying their face in their hands will find themselves in a similar position with this film.

On the other hand, if you fancy yourself a fan of a good psychological thriller, you will not want to miss out on this delectable morsel of cinema. Bon appétit!

Courtesy of imdb.com

Gaspard Ulliel stars as Hannibal Lector in Peter Webber's psychological thriller recalling the origins of the notorious serial killer. The film reveals how childhood horrors forced Lector to develop a pathological obsession with gaining revenge against those who caused him, and his family, such intense pain.

BROOKPARK STATION Cafe

"Casual dining with a gourmet flair"

Fresh Sushi & Vegetarian Items

Catering & Takeout Platters

Book Your Graduation Party!

B.Y.O.B.

Wireless Internet

Mon Sat 8:00 - 8:00 Sun 8:00 - 2:00

1 MILE WEST OF TOWN ON RT. 45

542-FOOD (3663)

Think you can do better?

Bring it on!

Write for
A & E.

E-mail jshapiro@

Evening with the Chips

University community welcomes annual Bison Chips a cappella concert

Courtesy of the Bison Chips

By Liz Stein
Contributing Writer

❖ Concert Review

The University's all-male a cappella group, the Bison Chips, held its annual spring concert, "Chipfest," on Feb. 10 at the Weis Center for Performing Arts. The show, which began at 8 p.m., lasted an hour and drew a large audience, nearly filling the first tier of the concert hall. Musical harmony and light-hearted humor balanced the evening, with Chip alumni Dave Seal '06 and Kyle Mumford '06 hosting the performance. Seal and Mumford provided delightful entertainment during the brief intermission and communicated with the audience in a warm, personal way, creating an intimacy that reflected the close-knit community that is our campus.

"It was good to see weeks of preparation come together in a great concert. It is sad that this was my last concert but it is exciting to see how many alumni stay involved with the group and come back year-to-year," Josh Kaehler '07 said.

The program began with a rendition of "Good Ole' A Cappella," performed by talented seniors Chris Guskey, Josh Kaehler and Adam Gasiewicz.

Seal and Mumford then took the stage to read letters from two Chips who are studying abroad. This humorous presentation set off roars of laughter as the gentlemen alluded to several inside jokes which a majority of the audience appreciated.

After this short break, the Chips returned to the stage, covering The Beatles' "Eleanor Rigby" and Peter Gabriel's "In Your Eyes" with soloist Kaehler. These were two fine choices for the men, highlighting their ability to harmonize and demonstrating their musical versatility.

The next selection was a traditional a cappella tune, "Come Go With Me," with a vocal solo by Andrew Longenecker '10 and the scat solo performed by Tom Wechsler '09. Kaehler followed with a solo of "Lullaby." Andrew Miller '10 then sang solo on a rendition of The Supremes' "Up the Ladder to the Roof." The Chips alternated between slower songs with soft, but expressive tones, and more upbeat tunes, with faster tempos of a more jovial quality.

After "Up the Ladder to the Roof," the audience was treated to a surprise: an interactive intermission with a mock version of MTV's former dating show, "Singled Out." Three female students were invited up to the stage to act in a version of the show. They could either go on a date with a Bison Chip, or walk away with a copy of the Chip's most recent album, "Appalling and Ridiculous."

The "contestants" faced the audience and read prepared questions from notecards to the Chips standing behind them. The funny questions, such as "If you were an animal, which one would you be and why?" and "If I were an ice cream cone, how would you eat me?" brought on hysterical laughter. After two rounds of questions, two of the ladies decided to take the date and the third chose a copy of the CD. The entertaining intermission, hosted by Seal and Mumford, was an excellent illustration of the good-humored character and comical nature the Bison Chips are known for.

The second half of the show began with "It's Alright," with Stephen Parker '08 as the soloist. Next, Gasiewicz led the group in a charming performance of "True Companion," followed by my favorite selection of the evening, Marvin Gaye's lyrically suggestive "Sexual Healing," featuring Brian Giglio '09. It is this type of musical variety that demonstrates the Chips' faculty to transcend musical boundaries and penetrate all genres of music.

As the evening came to a close, the gentlemen performed a touching version of "Irish Blessing," and then, following tradition, invited all present Chip alumni to join them on stage for an enthusiastic "Coney Island Baby." The audience watched the group nearly double, as ten former Chips climbed the stairs to join in on a decades-old tradition. The program ended with a harmonious "We All Move On," featuring a solo by Seal and support from fellow alumni and current group-members.

It was a very moving performance. These men have genuine passion for singing and continued commitment to the group.

"The group continues to evolve. Every year I come back and listen to a different sound and enjoy it more and more every year," Justin Blanding '03 said.

The Bison Chips have entertained the University community with their compelling harmony and amusing performances for nearly 35 years. You can purchase the group's CDs online at www.orgs.bucknell.edu/chips. A new album will be released as the end of the semester.

Meg's mix

Songs that will make you smile

By Megan McWhinney
Writer

We've reached that point in winter where we've had about enough. Single-digit temperatures? Unacceptable. Zero humidity? Ridiculous. Sunset at 5 p.m.? Preposterous.

And that's not to mention the recent passing of Valentine's Day. With spring nowhere in sight, I see one plausible solution to these mid-winter blues: music. And not just any music. Upbeat, dance-around-like-a-freak, sing-every-lyric-at-the-top-of-your-lungs music. I've compiled a list of songs that I think are pretty universal in their ability to get you out of your chair, but here's another piece of advice: be nostalgic. Put on something from the days before you worried about jobs, lab reports, college admissions or hangovers. My girlfriends and I had a little Blink-182 blasting this weekend and it took us straight back to the sleepover days.

Now for those music elitists out there, and I know there are plenty, let me justify this list. I have given no consideration to the talent or quality of musicians or vocalists, or to the songs' production. If a song makes people happy, it's on the list. I don't care where you are—if The Isley Brothers' "Shout" comes on at a party, it's gonna get "Animal House"-crazy pretty quickly. And as for "All I Want for Christmas Is You"—come on. If that song doesn't make you irrationally happy, you either need to see "Love Actually" or get your head checked. Forget the words and any religious implication, it's a happy song.

Students, take off your boots, close the windows and crank up the stereo. I guarantee these songs will help take the edge off more than those leftover Valentine's chocolates.

1.) "Build Me Up Buttercup" - The Foundations
2.) "Mr. Jones" - Counting Crows
3.) "Old Time Rock and Roll" - Bob Seger
4.) "Powers" - Blackalicious
5.) "(I Can't Get No) Satisfaction" - The Rolling Stones
6.) "It's Tricky" - Run DMC
7.) "Brown Eyed Girl" - Van Morrison
8.) "All I Want For Christmas Is You" - Mariah Carey
9.) "Girl" - Beck
10.) "Hey Ya!" - OutKast
11.) "American Pie" - Don McLean
12.) "Catch My Disease" - Ben Lee
13.) "Shout" - The Isley Brothers
14.) "Ain't No Mountain High Enough" - Marvin Gaye and Tammi Terrell 15.) "Joker" - Steve Miller Band

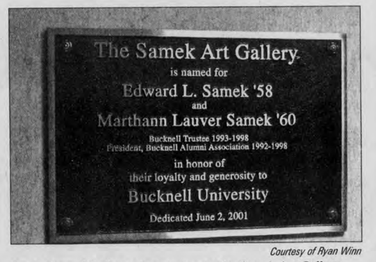
In case you don't have these songs, the list is published and available for purchase on iTunes in the iMix category.

Revisiting SAMEK

The Samek Gallery will be closed for rennovations until the Student Showcase event on April 13

By Patti Scarff
Contributing Writer



Courtesy of Ryan Winn

Located outside the main entrance to the Samek Art Gallery, the plaque marks the dedication of the gallery to Edward and Marthann Samek.

Closed (except for classes) for repairs made necessary by moisture and leaking, the Samek Art Gallery is being renovated in order to adhere to museum standards for keeping stewardship. When Operations Manager Cynthia Peltier noticed leaks in her office, the entire gallery was methodically checked for moisture and plans were made to remedy the problem.

When it opens again, the gallery should not look radically different; but it will be a safer place to display both the permanent and temporary exhibits.

Samek will reopen April 13th with the annual student showcase. The showcase, an interdisciplinary cross section of everything from non-art majors' work to graduate students' pieces, will have "art on the wall, the floor, and projected on the ceiling," Gallery Director Dan Mills said.

A diverse selection of styles ranging from canvas to clay is expected.

The reopening also means that the many works of art, from Renaissance paintings to Japanese netsuke (small ornaments used to attach objects to kimono sashes) to contemporary photographs, will be back on the walls and in the rooms, ready for contemplation.

The permanent collection focuses on modern and contemporary art, while the Kress collection is a 24-piece showcase of Renaissance and Baroque paintings from the Samuel H. Kress Foundation. It includes the first known painting by Pontormo. Other famous artists, like Anthony Van Dyck and Albrecht Durer, also have a home in the gallery. Works from later artists like Salvador Dali and Pablo Picasso are also part of the usual display.

Because of the current renovations, the gallery has postponed the scheduled exhibit "Outside the Centers/On the Edge," featuring Pennsylvania artists from outside Pittsburgh and Philadelphia, until after the student show. Scheduled lectures will continue, including one on Feb. 23 by two of the artists from the postponed show, Kristofer Harzinski and Christine Welch.

"Hands of a Displaced Sudan: The Cost of Silence," a lecture by photojournalist Ryan Spencer Reed, is scheduled for March 8 in the Gallery Theatre. The lecture coincides with Reed's photo exhibit currently on display on the second floor of the Bertrand Library. The black-and-white photos, ranging from a woman carrying her baby in a sling to a frightened, uniformed boy carrying a gun, are a poignant showcase of the dichotomy between family life and war in a current conflict zone. Since he was in Darfur recently, Reed is expected to be an interesting and powerful speaker.

Sarah Hutt, director of visual arts programming and member of Boston Art Commission for the Mayor's Office of Art, Tourism and Special Events, is scheduled to talk about her job as an artist and art professional later in March. Mills said he has hopes that the lecture will open students' minds to a profession they may or may not have known existed. One or two other art professionals like Hutt are tentatively scheduled to speak.

Mills and Peltier emphasize that the line-up of speakers is too exciting to choose a favorite or even select one to be more excited about than another.

In lieu of the gallery, students can attend these sponsored lectures or head to the library for the photo exhibit.

To find out more about the gallery, visit the Web site at www1.bucknell.edu/Arts_at_Bucknell/Samek/index.html. The gallery is open during the school year on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m., and from 11 a.m. to 8 p.m. on Thursday. Weekend hours are 1-5 p.m. Admission is free.

CLASS of 2007 • SENIORS ONLY!

You are invited to attend the second annual

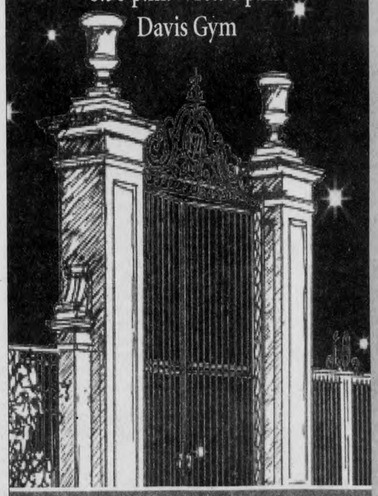
100 NIGHTS Celebration

COUNTDOWN to GRADUATION

SEMI-FORMAL EVENT

(21 to drink, IDs will be checked at the door)

Friday, February 16, 2007
8:30 p.m. – 10:30 p.m.
Davis Gym



"LEAD WITH HONOR, SUCCEED WITH PRIDE"

Celebrate with your classmates! Count down the final nights of your Bucknell career with food, drink, and music!

PRIZES, PRIZES, PRIZES!

★ Free T-shirts for the first 300 guests
★ Keepsake glassware while supplies last
★ Gift Certificates
★ Digital Camera
★ iPod
★ Airfare
★ Broadway Show tickets

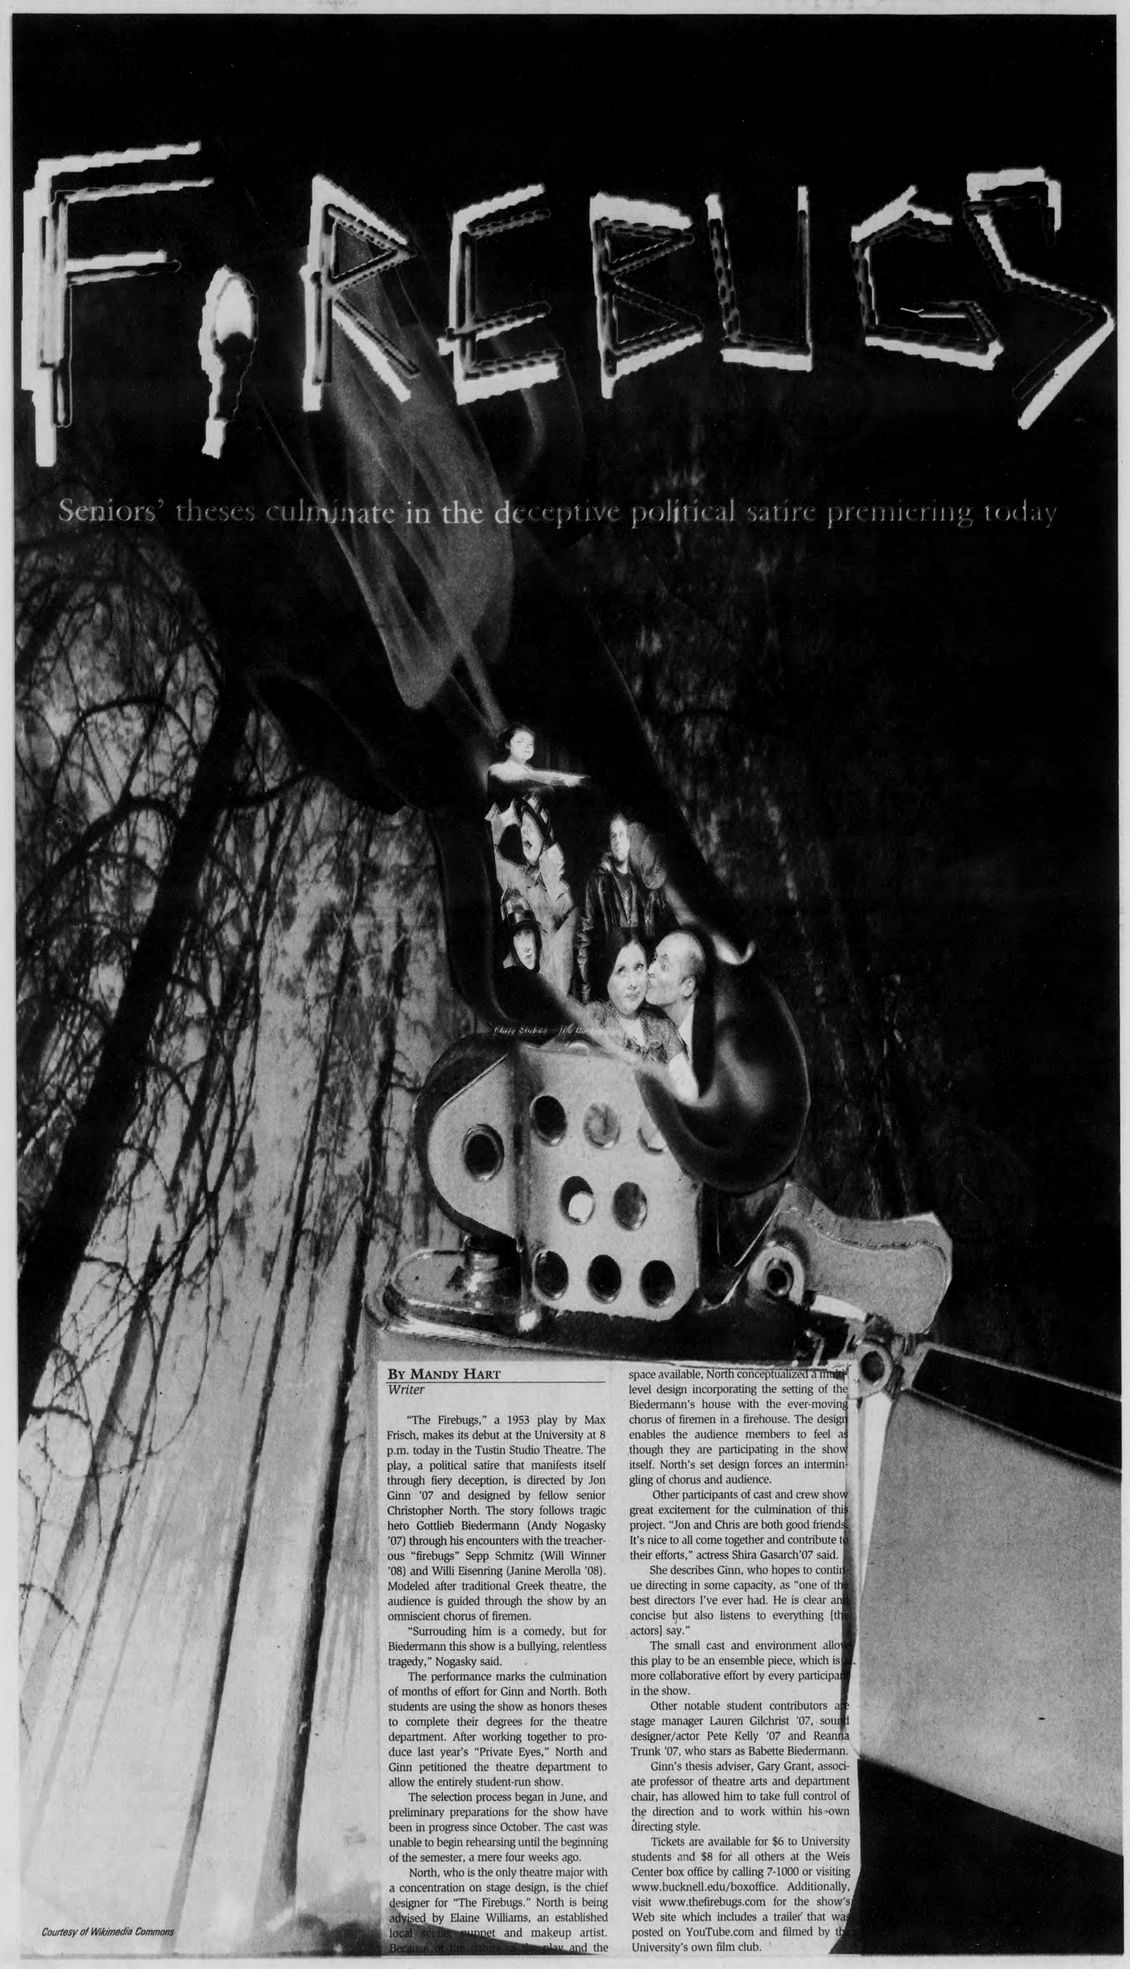
Drawings start at 9:15 p.m. Must be present to win.

EVENT SPONSORED BY:
2007 Homecoming Hosts & Hostesses, The Office of Development and Alumni Relations, the Senior Gift Drive Committee, and the 100 Nights Planning Committee

Bucknell

FIRESIDE

Seniors' theses culminate in the deceptive political satire premiering today



Courtesy of Wikimedia Commons

By Mandy Hart
Writer

"The Firebugs," a 1953 play by Max Frisch, makes its debut at the University at 8 p.m. today in the Tustin Studio Theatre. The play, a political satire that manifests itself through fiery deception, is directed by Jon Ginn '07 and designed by fellow senior Christopher North. The story follows tragic hero Gottlieb Biedermann (Andy Nogasky '07) through his encounters with the treacherous "firebugs" Sepp Schmitz (Will Winner '08) and Willi Eisenring (Janine Merolla '08). Modeled after traditional Greek theatre, the audience is guided through the show by an omniscient chorus of firemen.

"Surrouding him is a comedy, but for Biedermann this show is a bullying, relentless tragedy," Nogasky said.

The performance marks the culmination of months of effort for Ginn and North. Both students are using the show as honors theses to complete their degrees for the theatre department. After working together to produce last year's "Private Eyes," North and Ginn petitioned the theatre department to allow the entirely student-run show.

The selection process began in June, and preliminary preparations for the show have been in progress since October. The cast was unable to begin rehearsing until the beginning of the semester, a mere four weeks ago.

North, who is the only theatre major with a concentration on stage design, is the chief designer for "The Firebugs." North is being advised by Elaine Williams, an established local scenic, puppet and makeup artist. Because of the nature of the play and the space available, North conceptualized a multi-level design incorporating the setting of the Biedermann's house with the ever-moving chorus of firemen in a firehouse. The design enables the audience members to feel as though they are participating in the show itself. North's set design forces an intermingling of chorus and audience.

Other participants of cast and crew show great excitement for the culmination of this project. "Jon and Chris are both good friends. It's nice to all come together and contribute to their efforts," actress Shira Gasarch'07 said.

She describes Ginn, who hopes to continue directing in some capacity, as "one of the best directors I've ever had. He is clear and concise but also listens to everything [the actors] say."

The small cast and environment allow this play to be an ensemble piece, which is a more collaborative effort by every participant in the show.

Other notable student contributors are stage manager Lauren Gilchrist '07, sound designer/actor Pete Kelly '07 and Reanna Trunk '07, who stars as Babette Biedermann.

Ginn's thesis adviser, Gary Grant, associate professor of theatre arts and department chair, has allowed him to take full control of the direction and to work within his own directing style.

Tickets are available for $6 to University students and $8 for all others at the Weis Center box office by calling 7-1000 or visiting www.bucknell.edu/boxoffice. Additionally, visit www.thefirebugs.com for the show's Web site which includes a trailer that was posted on YouTube.com and filmed by the University's own film club.

The Bucknellian
February 16, 2007
Sports
Volume 139, Number 4 Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Fundraising for felines

Students Helping Animals dedicates time and money to improving the lives of abandoned animals.

See page B7

Bison avenge earlier loss to Crusaders

Men's basketball team tops Holy Cross in a heart-stopping showdown at Sojka Pavilion

By Marcus Mateer
Senior Writer

It seemed fitting that a great basketball game should have a thrilling finish, as last Friday's Bucknell-Holy Cross contest did. A double-teamed Keith Simmons found a wide-open Torey Thomas with the Crusaders down three. The ball arced through the air and a suddenly silent arena held its breath. The orange orb rolled around the rim, teasing the 4,209 fans in attendance, before rolling off as the buzzer sounded. Bucknell had held on to win 48-45, and in the process tied Holy Cross for first place in the Patriot League.

If the sport was football, it would have been a 10-7 slugfest in the driving snow. If it was soccer, it would have been a 0-0 tie that went into penalty kicks, won when that last kick careened off the post. If the game had been played in a hockey rink, the final slap shot would have sailed just wide.

Bucknell 48
Holy Cross 45

With both teams deliberate on the offensive end and voracious on the defensive end, it was understood that the game would be a low-scoring affair. Both coaches were familiar with the other's style of play, and it showed.

"The only thing I'm disappointed about is that play at the end, where John [Griffin '08] hit the three. We worked on that play for thirty minutes in the walk-through. We knew it was coming," Holy Cross Head Coach Ralph Willard said

With the Bison clinging to a one-point lead and little more than a minute left to play, Head Coach Pat Flannery '80 called a timeout to set up the offense. The play let Abe Badmus '07 decide whether to pick-and-roll with Chris McNaughton '07 or fire a pass to Griffin in the corner. The defense failed to rotate, and Griffin hit the shot despite missing his previous five three-pointers..

"It came to my hands," Griffin said, "and my initial reaction was to shoot it."

The lead was pushed to six when Badmus hit a pair of free throws on the next Bison possession. A missed Thomas shot gave McNaughton his tenth rebound of the day, and the Crusaders sent him to the line.

A first-year student who shall remain

See MBBALL page B4

Wrestling program reaches new milestone

Orange and blue tie program record with 11th win, shutout Wagner 49-0

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

George Hingson '10 battles his way through a recent home match. Hingson has won 50 percent of this matches this season with a 12-12 record, while the team is currently 11-9 in its first season back after being reinstated as a varsity program.

By Kyle Barndollar
Writer

The men's wrestling team solidified its place in program history with a 49-0 win over Wagner last Sunday. The shutout marked the 11th victory of the season for the Orange and Blue, tying the all-time school record for most dual meet wins in a single season.

"For us to have 11 wins in the season with true freshmen is astonishing but credit must go to the athletes and their mentality," Head Coach Dan Wirnsberger said. "They all have a winning mentality and a strong work ethic."

The Bison began the weekend on Saturday in Annapolis, Md. where they met Navy, the first overall ranked team in the Eastern Intercollegiate Wrestling Association (EIWA). Facing their toughest opponent of the season, the Orange and Blue fell to the Midshipmen, 31-9.

Navy 31
Bucknell 9

Despite only managing three victories in the match, the team loss brought with it some important individual victories that may have a big effect on EIWA tournament seeding.

David Marble '10 pulled off an astonishing victory over Navy's Joe Baker. The 133-pound Marble scored an important takedown with just 15 seconds left in the match that propelled him to the win over Baker, who was ranked 10th in the nation at his weight class.

"Dave Marble's win over Joe Baker was probably the biggest individual win of the year so far for us," 197-pounder Eric Lapotsky '10 said. "Plus, the close score of the match was no indication of how Dave physically dominated Baker and completely controlled the whole match."

Bucknell's other two wins came at the hands of Andy Rendos '10 at 165 pounds, and Eric Lapotsky at 197 pounds, who continue to prove themselves as the two most consistent wrestlers on the team. Rendos claimed sole possession of the school record for most dual meet wins in a season with his overtime victory over Justin Jacobs, 7-3. The decision raises Rendos' season record to 17-2 in dual meets. Lapotsky moved his dual meet record to 16-2 with his 7-4

See WRESTLING page B3

Saylor Says

By Matt Saylor
Associate Editor of Content

1. Retired NBA guard Tim Hardaway bashed gay people during a recent interview. He did this in response to the announcement that former NBA player John Amaechi is a homosexual. Hardaway said, "I hate gay people, so I let it be known." He went on to say that he would not want to play with a gay player, and would ask for the team to take some action to remove the player from the team.

Hardaway would attempt to apologize later, but the damage has certainly been done. It is unclear what has caused Hardaway to have these feelings, but you would think he would at least be smart enough not to express them publicly.

2. The atmosphere for the men's basketball game against Holy Cross was the best it has been this season. If I had to rate the loudest the building has been during the past couple of years, then I'd put the moment when John Griffin '08 hit the three-pointer with a minute left behind only the game against Villanova in December 2005 and last year's Patriot League Tournament championship game.

3. Be sure to visit Kinney Natatorium this weekend as it hosts the Patriot League's men's and women's swimming and diving championships. The women's team will be attempting to earn its fifth consecutive league title, while the men are looking for their first since 2003.

4. The league's track & field championships are also this weekend, taking place at West Point, N.Y. The women will try to defend their back-to-back-

See SAYLOR page B5

Orange and blue extend dominance in Patriot League

Women's basketball notches two wins and increases hold on first place in Patriot League by two games

By Matt Saylor
Associate Editor of Content

With two more wins this past week, and a loss by Army to American, the women's basketball team has a two-game lead in the Patriot League standings with three regular-season games left to play. The Bison (18-8, 10-1) avenged their earlier loss to Lafayette on Tuesday, defeating the Leopards 53-39. This win follows the Orange and Blue's 63-37 victory over Holy Cross in front of a nationally-televised audience on Friday.

It was a sloppy start to the game against the Leopards (6-20, 4-7) for the Bison. By the 8:02 mark of the first half, the team had committed six turnovers and attempted only eight shots from the field.

Bucknell 53
Lafayette 39

The score was tied at 14 apiece when the somewhat dreary game got a bolt of energy at the sight of Head Coach Kathy Fedorjaka sending Lindsey Hollobaugh '07 into the game. Hollobaugh has not played since the Bison's Jan. 24 game versus Lehigh due to a sprained knee. It was not clear when she would play again.

Hollobaugh played the next two minutes and 41 seconds of game time, and despite the bulky brace on her knee, was able to give the Orange and Blue a needed boost. She grabbed a defensive rebound, and on a later offensive possession, drove to the basket drawing a foul. By the time she checked out of the game, the Bison seemed to have a little more spark in their play.

> "It was the game plan to come out strong and put pressure on them."
> —Jacquie Seawright '07

"The last couple of coaches I have talked to didn't believe me when I said that she [Hollobaugh] could play," Fedorjaka said. "I thought that she provided a real senior presence in the first-half that we needed at that time."

Hollobaugh played nine minutes, scoring one point to go along with her one rebound.

"[The knee] felt fine. I had no problems," Hollobaugh said.

The Bison went into the locker room with a 20-17 lead at the half, having committed nine turnovers while assisting on only two field goals.

It was a different story in the second half, as the Bison outscored the Leopards 33-22, committing only three turnovers and handing out nine assists.

From the 14:04 mark to 9:35, Jacquie Seawright '07 scored nine straight points for the Orange and Blue, with a three-pointer, a driving layup past the entire Leopards team, a jumper from the foul line and two free throws. The Bison had a 39-33 lead at this point, and Lafayette would not get closer than that for the rest of the game.

Seawright finished the game with 11 points and five rebounds. Amanda Brown '09 scored a game-high 17 points to go along with five rebounds,

See WBBALL page B3

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Amanda Brown '09 drives past a Lafayette player in the Bison's win on Tuesday. Brown currently boasts the highest three-point shooting percentage on the team, making 45 percent of her attempts from behind the arc.

Women's tennis drops match to Quinnipiac

By Ellis Hudes
Senior Writer

The Bison were swept by Quinnipiac 7-0 last weekend in Hamden, Conn., which brought their record to 1-3 for the season. The loss marked the halfway point of a six-game road series to open the regular season.

Quinnipiac 7
Bucknell 0

"Our tennis season is truly looking great. We've had several matches already, and I can confidently say we've improved at each one. We've been working hard both on and off the court..."
— JoAnna Grossman '09

"The challenges facing our young team go far beyond these early season losses," Head Coach Rebecca Helt said. "We are not playing at our best level right now, but I'm encouraged by the mental toughness and fitness of this team."

These scores seem one-dimensional on paper and do not reflect the progress that the players experience on the court.

"Our tennis season is truly looking great," JoAnna Grossman '09 said. "We've had several matches already and I can confidently say we've improved at each one. We've been working hard both on and off the court and it has really shown during our recent matches."

Quinnipiac gathered all three doubles points with convincing wins over the visiting Bison. Carlin Calcaterra '10 and Paulina Gamboa '09 lost, 8-2, to the Bobcat duo of Gabby Pasternak and Mary Wilson in the No. 1 doubles spot.

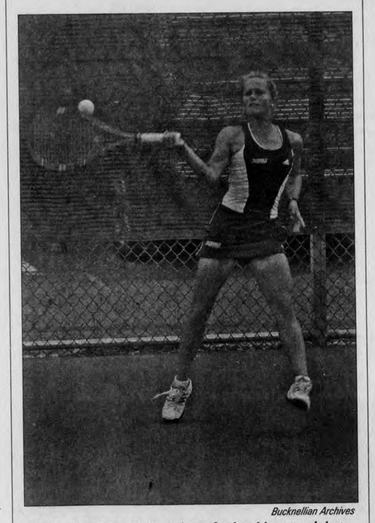
This was followed by an 8-4 defeat for Caitlin Baffa '08 and Ashley Globerman '09 in the No. 2 spot. Partners Kirstyn Sotak '10 and Renee Weissend '10 fell in the No. 3 spot, 8-1.

The Orange and Blue made its matches more competitive in singles action. Weissend pushed her opponent into a two-set super-breaker before falling 6-4, 7-6 (7-5). At the No. 5 spot, Grossman lost to Quinnipiac's Kasey Rosenberger, 7-5, 6-3. Globerman went down to Mary Wilson earlier that day 6-2, 7-5.

Other losses were much more decisive, as Gamboa lost, 6-2, 6-2, to Pasternak in No. 1 singles, Calcaterra to Jackie Herb, 6-1, 6-4, in the No. 3 spot, and Sotak to Amanda Petruzzi, 6-2, 6-2, in No. 4 singles.

The team knows that these out-of-conference opponents, which pepper its schedule, are meant to toughen up players for Patriot League competition. For now, Helt wants her players to focus on their own development rather than external factors beyond their control such as adverse playing conditions.

On Saturday, Feb. 17, the team will travel to Providence, R.I., where they will face challenges from Brown and Rhode Island at 10 a.m. and 6 p.m., respectively.



Bucknellian Archives

Ashley Globerman '09 smashes a forehand in a match last season. The women's tennis team will travel to Providence, R.I. to face off against Brown and Rhode Island.

Men's tennis secures two wins

With a pair of road victories, the men's tennis team improved its early season record to 3-1

By John Mlodzinski
Senior Writer

The Bison defeated Connecticut, 5-2, on February 9th. Leading the way for the Bison was Ira Reibeisen '08, who beat Ben Schueler, 6-0, 2-6, 7-5 at the No. 1 singles spot. Ryan Sandburg '09, defeated Joey Michaels, 6-2, 6-3, while Zach Hascoe '09, won 6-1, 6-3, against Christian Malerba, and Daniel Bednarek '09, 3-6, 6-2, 6-1, overcame Nate Carvalho, contributing to the Bison victory.

Bucknell 5
UConn 2

Jonathan Brenner '09 fell to Joe Goldstein, 6-4, 7-6(9-7), at the No. 3 spot, while Sidharth Makkar '09 lost his No. 6 singles match to Thomas Cook, 6-4, 7-5.

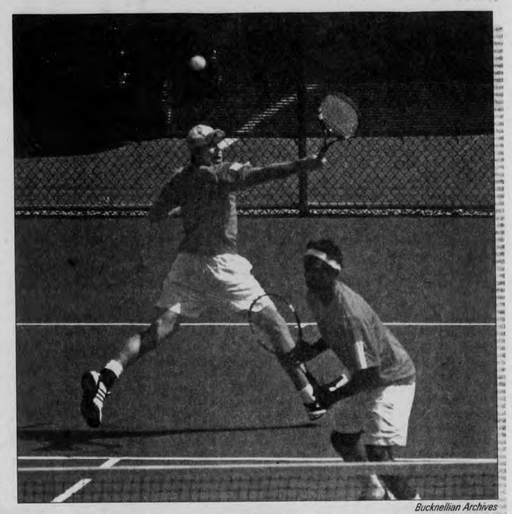
At the No. 1 doubles spot, Reibeisen and Ben Young '08 dropped a tough one to Schueler and Goldstein, 8-6. The No. 2 and 3 doubles matches went to the Bison as Sandburg and Brenner defeated Malerba and Michael, 8-6, and Hascoe and Bednarek handled Cook and Carvalho, 8-5.

Head Coach Rebecca Helt feels that the players are starting to get comfortable out on the court. She knows their games will improve as a result.

"We played with a lot more confidence this weekend. We can clearly identify where our weaknesses are in our match play right now so we just need to keep working on making improvements every day," Helt said.

The next day, the Bison snuck past Quinnipiac, 4-3. Reibeisen and Young secured the first point of the match when they defeated Michael Racioppo and Scott Salway, 8-4, at the No. 1 doubles spot. Sandburg and Brenner fell in the No. 2 doubles spot to John Hughes and Charles Feldman, 9-7. At the No. 3 doubles spot, Bednarek and Hascoe handled Joseph Nuara and Vinny Corvari, 8-5.

Bucknell 4
Quinnipiac 3



Bucknellian Archives

Ira Reibeisen '08 back hands a return in a home match from last season. Reibeisen was a key component in the team's win over UConn, winning in the first singles spot.

Helt knows that although they played well, there is room for development in the doubles games.

"We need to improve our doubles performances and that will definitely be a focus over the next few weeks," Helt said. "We know we must win the doubles point against tougher teams in order to beat them."

Sandburg led the way in the singles matches as he dropped Racioppo, 6-3, 7-5, in the No. 1 singles spot. Also picking up victories for the Bison were Hascoe, 7-6(7-3), 6-0, over Feldman at the No. 3 spot and Young, 6-3, 6-3, over Corvari at the No. 6 spot.

Brenner dropped his match in the No. 2 singles spot to Hughes, 6-3, 7-6, while Bednarek and Makkar each fell, 6-4, 6-2, to Salway and Nuara respectively.

The Bison will take to the court again this Saturday, Feb. 17, in Olean, N.Y. They will face St. Bonaventure at 9 a.m. and Buffalo at 1 p.m.

WEEKEND SCHEDULE

Friday

BASEBALL - VMI, 3 p.m., Lexington, Va.
WOMEN'S TRACK & FIELD - Patriot League Championship, 12 p.m., West Point, N.Y.
MEN'S TRACK & FIELD - Patriot League Championship, 12 p.m., West Point, N.Y.
WOMEN'S SWIM & DIVE - Patriot League Championship, TBA, Lewisburg, Pa.
MEN'S SWIM & DIVE - Patriot League Championship, TBA, Lewisburg, Pa.

Saturday

MEN'S BASKETBALL - Towson, 2 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
WOMEN'S BASKETBALL - Colgate, 5 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
BASEBALL - VMI, 1 p.m., Lexington, Va.
SOFTBALL - Charlotte, 2:30 p.m., Charlotte N.C.
SOFTBALL - North Carolina A&T, 4:30 p.m., Charlotte N.C.
MEN'S TENNIS - St. Bonaventure, 9 a.m., Olean, N.Y. ; Buffalo, 1 p.m., Olean, N.Y.
WOMEN'S TENNIS - Brown, 10 a.m., Providence, R.I. ; Rhode Island, 6 p.m., Providence, R.I.
WOMEN'S TRACK & FIELD - Patriot League Championships, 11 a.m., West Point, N.Y.
MEN'S TRACK & FIELD - Patriot League Championships, 11 a.m., West Point, N.Y.
MEN'S LACROSSE - St. John's, 11 a.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
WOMEN WATER POLO - Marist, 11:45 a.m., College Park, Md. ; Hartwick, 4:30 p.m., College Park, Md.
WRESTLING - Columbia, 2:30, p.m., Cambridge, Mass.
WOMEN'S SWIM & DIVE - Patriot League Championship, TBA, Lewisburg, Pa.
MEN'S SWIM & DIVE - Patriot League Championship, TBA, Lewisburg, Pa.

Sunday

BASEBALL- VMI, 1 p.m., Lexington, Va.
SOFTBALL - Eastern Kentucky, 10:30 a.m., Charlotte, N.C. ; Charlotte Tournament, TBA, Charlotte, N.C.
WOMEN'S WATER POLO - Indiana, 8 a.m., College Park, Md.
WOMEN'S TRACK & FIELD - Patriot League Championships, 11 a.m., West Point, N.Y.
MEN'S TRACK & FIELD - Patriot League Championhips, 11 a.m., West Point, N.Y.
WOMEN WATER POLO - Indiana, 8 a.m., College Park, Md. ; Michigan, 2:45 p.m., College Park, Md.
WOMEN'S SWIM & DIVE - Patriot League Championship, TBA, Lewisburg, Pa.
MEN'S SWIM & DIVE - Patriot League Championship, TBA, Lewisburg, Pa.

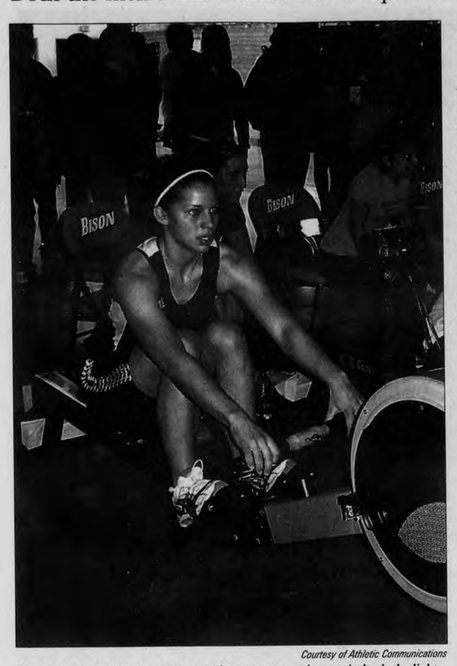
Did you have nothing to do during the snow day?

Then get involved & write for Sports

blp004@

Crew teams bring home the hardware

Both the men's and women's crew squads show their strength at the 11th Annual Bucknell Erg Armageddon



Courtesy of Athletic Communications

The men's and women's teams earned numerous top honors in both the lightweight and openweight divisions. Caitlin Doolin '09 competes in the annual Erg Armageddon held in Davis Gym last Saturday.

By Connie Barko
Senior Writer

The 11th Annual Bucknell Erg Armageddon Sprints was held at Davis Gym in the Kenneth Langone Athletics and Recreation Center on Saturday. Bucknell competed against Penn State, West Virginia University, Allegheny College and Susquehanna University in the collegiate events. The competition showcased men and women rowers in novice and varsity categories.

Although most of the events were 2,000 meters, there were also men and women's coxswains of 1,000 meters, 500-meter dashes and a mixed doubles event of 1,000 meters. Many personal bests and event records were broken by members of both the men's and women's rowing teams.

The idea for the Erg Sprints was initiated by the women's rowing coach, Steve Kish, in 1997. In its first year, it was called ERG Purgatory, but was later named Erg Armageddon. It is primarily run by students and the rowing coach staffs.

Erg Sprints takes place before the spring race season begins and is a diagnostic of the teams' winter training. It is not a typical competition for University rowers, because it is held inside on "ergs" rather than on the water. Competitors and spectators watch the progress of the race on a screen projection on the wall of the gym.

The Erg competition provides both teams with practice for the upcoming season.

"We're in the thick of our preparations for the spring so it's too early to be definitive about anything regarding the races coming up in two months, but we're clearly doing more preparing than wishing and that's encouraging," Men's Rowing Head Coach Paul Bugenhagen said.

The men's team had several top finishes, claiming first and second in the novice lightweight event, first through third in the novice heavyweight, first and third in the varsity openweight and first, second and fourth in the men's coxswain. In the novice lightweight event, George Rockett '10 posted a time of six minutes 8.1 seconds, which is a record for the Erg Sprints and for the Bison men for 2,000 meters.

The competition gave many Bison athletes an opportunity to show improvements since last season and gain some recognition for their continued work. Captain of the men's club team, Benjamin Finio '07, competed in the varsity openweight event. Although he maintained a second-place position for most of the race, he was edged out in the last leg of the race by a tenth of a second, finishing third.

"While I would have liked to finish second, I've never medaled at this event before so it was still nice to get a medal," Finio said,

Even this early in the season, the men's club rowing team has set some bold goals. They hope to compete at the grand finals of the Dad Vail regatta, which is the national small college championship. The squad also wants to race some boats in the IRA regatta in June, an elite level national championship.

"This is an ambitious goal but definitely within our reach," Finio '07 said.

The women's team also had top place finishers this weekend, which has helped jumpstart them to a successful season.

Assistant Coach Kate Strum said, "We did really well this year with many of our rowers posted personal best times."

With a time of 7:45.4, Devon Mitchell '10 earned first place in the novice lightweight event. Whittney Henry '09 also came in first place in the varsity lightweight event with 7:33.6.

In the mixed novice doubles event, Meghan Murphy '10 and George Rockett '10, broke an Erg Sprints record with a time of 3:18.6. Kate Brewster-Duffy '08 and Frank Rosenthal '07 combined their efforts in the mixed double varsity event, finishing with a record time of 3:17.7.

Based on the improvements of this initial diagnostic, expectations for the women's team seem to be high.

"We have a great and talented group of first year recruits and novice that will have a big impact on the team's success. The team is stronger, faster and bigger than ever before," said Whittney Henry '09, who received her personal best time in the varsity lightweight event.

For the upcoming season, the focus of the women's rowing team is the Patriot League Championship, which will be held on April 29 in Worcester, Mass. The team has in its schedule tougher competition from colleges facing Georgetown, University of Rhode Island, Boston College, Princeton, Penn and Dartmouth.

Bison prepare for Patriot League Championship

Track and field team tunes up and hits marks at the Bucknell Winter Classic at home this past weekend

By Brian Mulligan
Sports Editor

The Bucknell Winter Classic was a chance for the women's and men's indoor track and field team to tune up or improve upon current seed times. Some athletes took the weekend off to rest or heal up for the Patriot League Championship this weekend.

"A lot of people had different objectives for this meet," Head Coach Kevin Donner said. "We had some people trying to improve their seed times, tune up and rest. Some athletes were also trying to make the travel squad."

Mel Buczko '07 reached new heights yet again, improving upon her NCAA provisional mark in the pole vault. Buczko cleared a height of 13 feet, 4 ? inches, setting a new field house record. Amanda Kronquist '10 earned first place honor in the triple jump, spanning a distance of 35-11?, while teammate Amanda Mockbee '08 took second in both the weight throw and shot put.

On the track, Chessa Forer '07 placed sixth overall in the 60-meter dash with a personal best of 8.02 seconds, while Allison Janda '10 improved upon her seed time in the 500-meter dash with a time of one minute and 18.67 seconds. In the 1,000-meter run, Laura Cundey '10 won the event in 3:05.16.

Jennifer Grant '08 crossed the finish line first in the 3,000, notching a time of 10:46.08. The team of Kat Allen '07, Lesley Emons '08, Katie Beckett '09 and Kelcey Coffin '09 won the 4x400-meter relay in a time of 4:10.25.

"Our team has not only improved on the track, in the circle and on the runway, but we are mentally ready for Leagues," Catherine Trentacoste '07 said. "I think the number of top-ten performances, school records and national qualifiers we had two weeks ago is an excellent indicator of how far we have come."

"Lots of credit is due for all of our coaches. Without them, we wouldn't be in such a great position heading into Patriot League Championships Weekend."
— David Mante '08

Trentacoste, along with other Bison athletes, also attended the Sykes-Sabok Challenge Cup held at University Park, Pa. Trentacoste broke into the University all-time top ten in the 200-meter dash with a time of 26.04, while teammate Christa Sawko '07 finished third overall in the 800-meter run with 2:10.42, improving upon her personal best.

The men's team remained at home to compete in the Bucknell Winter Classic. Brian Mooney '08 entered the record books at eighth in the 500-meter dash in a time of 1:05.80. Captain Matt Bonelli '07 made a valiant comeback after being hurt for the past month to place second in the 400-meter dash in 51.17.

"I was just happy to put that Bucknell jersey on after being out for four weeks. This is the most excited I have been about the team and our competitive spirit is at an all time high," Bonelli said.

Derrin Pierret '07 ran 2:32.36 in the 1,000-meter run to win the event, while teammate Matt Forys '07 produced an IC4A qualifying performance in the 3,000-meter run. He finished first in 8:29.04.

Kevin MacLeod '10 qualified for the IC4A championship in the 55-meter hurdles with 7.73. He finished fourth overall and fourth in the Bison all-time record book. MacLeod had the privilege to compete against Roger Kingdom, the '84 and '88 Olympic gold medalist in the 110-meter hurdles. Kingdom currently holds the master world record in that event and finished third in 55-meter hurdles at the Winter Classic.

In the field, Tyler Hoffman '07 set a new school record in the weight throw with a hurl of 65-2, improving upon his NCAA provisional mark. David Mante '08 won the pole vault, clearing a height of 15-3, while teammate Nick De Gregorio '07 won the shot put, with a toss of 48-2. The men's team has made leaps and bounds this season due to some impressive coaching.

"Lots of credit is due for all of our coaches," Mante said. "Without them, we wouldn't be in such a great position heading into Patriot League Championships Weekend."

The Bucknell Winter Classic marked the end of the regular season for the Bison indoor track and field squad. The team now looks forward to the championship season. The Orange and Blue will travel to West Point, N.Y. to compete in the Patriot League Championship from Feb. 16-18. The women are predicted to capture their sixth straight indoor Patriot League title, while the men look to surprise powerhouses Army and Navy.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Nina Reinhardt '08 soars through the air in a recent home meet. The women's team is shooting to win its sixth straight Patriot League title this weekend.

WRESTLING From page B1

win over Tyler Moyer.

After falling to the nation's 19th ranked team on Saturday, the Bison returned home to face Wagner at the Davis Gym. The Seahawks proved to be far less competition than the Midshipmen and the Bison cruised to a 49-0 shutout win.

Bucknell 49
Wagner 0

Marble and Greg Hart '10 each won their matches by forfeit. Zach Galligan '10 won his 141-pound match against Nicholas Keshecki by a major decision, 17-4, while Jack Conroy '10 pinned Justin Ensign with just nine seconds remaining to bring the lead to 22-0 after the 149-pound matchup. Brantley Hooks '10 extended the score to 25-0 with his win over Sean Quinn at 157 pounds.

Rendos collected his 18th win of the season when he pinned Vincent Giordano. Rendos, who usually wrestles at 165 pounds, managed to dispose of Giordano in the 174-pound bout in just 28 seconds. Shane Riccio '10 also pinned his competition, Tim Lopresti, in the 184-pound bout.

After Lapotsky won his 17th match of the season by forfeit, heavyweight George Hingson '10 sewed up the shutout with a pin against John Graeffe.

The Bison, now 11-9 in the season, look to set the new school record for wins in one of their final two matches this weekend. The task won't be easy as the team is set to travel to Cambridge, Mass. to face conference foes Harvard and Columbia.

"This is a very big weekend for us. Both these teams are established veteran teams in our league. Every win will help our guys' seeding heading in the EIWAs, and every loss will hurt," Assistant Coach Larry Sprecher said.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Michael Guttilla '10 dominates his opponent in a recent home match. The 19th ranked Bison will travel to Cambridge, Mass. to compete against Harvard and Columbia.

After their regular season is concluded this weekend, the Bison will have a few weeks off to rest and prepare for the EIWAs, which are scheduled to begin March 2, in East Stroudsburg, Penn.

WBBALL From page B1

and Hope Foster '08 notched another double-double, her ninth of the season, with 16 points and 11 rebounds. She also had three blocks.

The Bison had little difficulty dispatching of the Crusaders on Friday night, jumping to a 17-2 lead by the 12:34 mark of the first half. Foster had seven points and five rebounds in the game's first four minutes.

Bucknell 63
Holy Cross 37

"It was the game plan to come out strong and put pressure on them," Seawright said.

The Bison were ahead 37-18 at half time and were never seriously threatened by the Crusaders in the second half.

Foster led the Bison with 19 points, making eight of her 10 field goals, 10 rebounds and five blocks. Brown scored 14 points and had four steals and Seawright had 12 points and seven rebounds.

Kesha Champion '08 had another solid all-around game with nine points, seven rebounds, four assists and three steals. The Bison committed only 10 turnovers, compared to the 20 that Holy Cross (10-16, 5-6) had.

The Orange and Blue conclude the home portion of their schedule tomorrow with a 5 p.m. game against Colgate.

If the team can win this game and Tuesday night's affair at Lehigh, then it will have clinched the top seed for the conference tournament prior to its match-up with defending champion Army on Saturday, Feb. 24.

Seniors Hollobaugh and Seawright will be honored for their contributions to the women's basketball program tomorrow, as this will be their final regular-season home game. They hope the team will get to play at Sojka one more time, March 7, for the Patriot League Tournament title.

Bison compete against ranked opponents

Women's water polo went 1-3 against three nationally ranked teams in the UC San Diego Triton Invitational

By Shannon Pitsch
Sports Editor

On the sunny coast of California, the women's water polo team began its season against three nationally-ranked Division I opponents in the UC San Diego Triton Invitational. In two days of fierce competition against San Diego State, Santa Clara, Redlands and Cal State Bakersfield, the Bison compiled a record of 1-3.

The Bison began the tough weekend of competition on Saturday, with their opening game against the No. 6 team in the country, San Diego State.

SDSU 11
Bucknell 3

The Aztec offense dominated the pool in the first half, shutting out the Orange and Blue 7-0. In the second half, Meagan Gins '08 propelled the Bison offense notching her first two goals of the season. Complimenting the Bison's second-half offense, Valentina Rozas '10 earned her first career goal at the collegiate level. Mandy Bynum '07 and Mallory Sullivan '07 each tallied one assist for an offense playing without usual starters Aubrey Rowe '09 and Jes Trimis '07.

Led by Laura Stalker '08 and Sullivan with two steals each, the Bison defense compiled eight steals during the match. Goalie Bynum also contributed to the defense with 12 saves in 32 minutes of play. Unfortunately, the Bison's formidable second-half play could not fight back from the deficit suffered in the first, losing 11-3 to San Diego State.

Later that afternoon, the Bison faced off against the No. 12 team in the country, Santa Clara. In the first quarter of action, the Bison offense controlled the pool as Rozas once again netted, earning her second career goal behind an assist from tri-captain Elizabeth Jensen '07. Jensen also notched her first goal of the season off an assist from Stalker, furthering the Bison lead to 2-1 at the end of the first quarter.

Santa Clara 13
Bucknell 2

A defense led by Bynum's nine saves in 28 minutes of action could not stop the Broncos as they responded with 12 unanswered goals in 21 minutes. The Bison lost their second game of the day 13-2, falling to 0-2 for the season.

On the final day of competition the team picked up its first win of the season against the No. 1 Division III team in the country, Redlands.

After a day of limited offensive execution, the Bison came out in full force in the first half of competition against the Bulldogs. In the first half the Orange and Blue dominated the pool, outscoring the opposition 6-2 behind multiple goals from Rozas, Gins and Jensen. Rozas led the way for the Bison offense in the first game, adding three goals to her career total. Gins and Jensen each notched two for the victory. After a highly successful first half, the Bison offense showed their authority winning their first game of the season, 10-4.

Bucknell 10
Redlands 4

In familiar Bison water polo fashion, the defensive combination of Bynum, Sullivan and Jensen held the opposition to just four goals in 32 minutes. In goal, Bynum only notched six saves because of 14 steals from the balanced defensive squad. Sullivan led with five steals, followed by Jensen and Rozas with three and two steals respectively.

Cal State 11
Bucknell 5

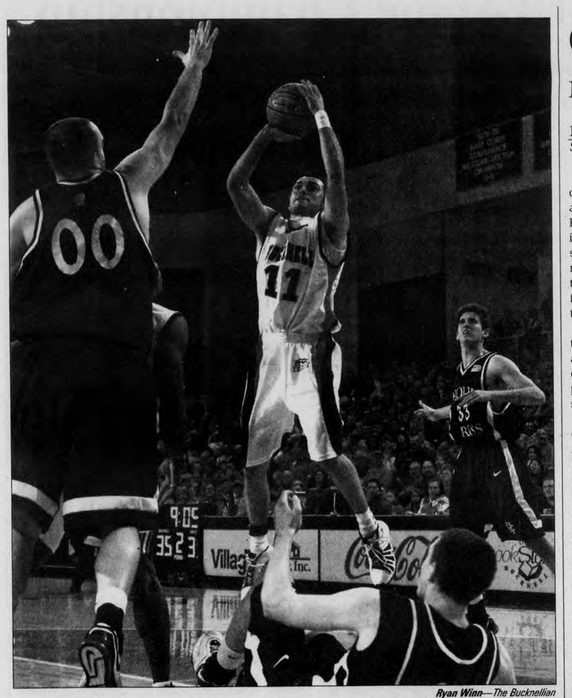
In their second match of the day, the Bison faced another nationally ranked opponent: Cal State Bakersfield. Starting slow in the first half, the Bison fell to a 7-1 deficit despite three saves from Bynum in the first 16 minutes of play.

The Orange and Blue matched the Roadrunners in the second half, with a score of 4-4. Four steals and one save from goalie Alison Carter '10 in the second half held the Bison even; however, the second-half offense could not make up the deficit, dropping its final match of the weekend, 11-5. With two goals from Gins and one each from Susan Kingerski '07, Timis and Rozas, the Bison finished the day with 15 goals.

After a weekend of competition on the west coast, the Bison are ready to dominate the east coast at the Maryland Invitational this weekend. The Orange and Blue will again face three more nationally ranked opponents: No. 13 Michigan, No. 14 Hartwick, and No. 20 Indiana.

Bucknellian Archives

Jessica Trimis '07 scans the pool for a potential pass in a home game from last year. The women's team earned its first win of the season in San Diego, Ca. against Redlands, outscoring the Bulldogs 10-4.



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

John Griffin '08 shoots over the Holy Cross defense in the Bison's win against the Crusaders last Friday. This was the first two of Griffin's seven second-half points.

MBBALL From page B1

unnamed yelled "Game Over" while the first shot was in the air. The ball rimmed out, and the student was good-naturedly pummeled for "jinxing" the shot. McNaughton, who has struggled from the line this year, also missed the second.

The crowd became more nervous when Simmons hit a three.

In a one possession game, Justin Castleberry '09 was sent to the line. The pressure obviously got to the young player, who left the first shot short and was lucky to draw backboard on the second to set up the rim-out at the end.

The final jitters should not overshadow the excellent game Castleberry played, leading the Bison in scoring with 10 points. McNaughton missed a double-double by one point, and Badmus added nine points as well.

Holy Cross was led by Simmons with 15 and Thomas with 12.

Castleberry's points all came in the first half. He was instrumental in allowing Bucknell to hang with the Crusaders in the period and trail by only five at the half. Other reserves who had an impact were Patrick Behan '10, who added a career-high six points, and Stephen Tyree '10. Coach Flannery traded offense for defense, playing Tyree for much of the game in place of Jason Vegotsky '09.

The loss still leaves the Crusaders in possession of the number one seed for the Patriot League Tournament, as they own the RPI (Ratings Percentage Index) tiebreaker. This is the tiebreaker that will be used to determine home-court advantage throughout the tournament if both teams finish with a 13-1 record in league play. The Bison have already clinched a home game for the quarterfinal round, and one more win or a Lehigh loss will clinch a semifinal home game, should the team advance that far.

Wednesday's game against Lafayette was postponed to Thursday night. The final score of the game was not known at press time.

The Bison host Towson tomorrow at 2 p.m. in the ESPN BracketBuster match-up. Be sure to get to the game early, as the senior class of Badmus, Donald Brown and McNaughton will be honored prior to tip-off.

Quick off the blocks

First-year makes immediate impact on track team

By Ty Clark
Senior Writer

The track and field team opened the 2006-07 season against 12 other schools in the Bison Opener on December 2nd in the Gerhard Fieldhouse. In a sea of upperclassmen, one freshman, Kalle James-Wintjen '10, took ninth in the 60-meter dash finals, garnering the second-best time in school history.

This was an impressive start to a season for anyone, let alone a first-year from Lewisburg. But even at the outset, it was clear to people that James-Wintjen was special.

"She is a unique and talented athlete and young woman," Assistant Coach Danielle Hobson, who works with the sprinters, said. "Kalle is driven and modest about her talents and achievements."

Indeed, despite such a prestigious start to a college career, James-Wintjen recognized the demands of college, noting their immediate impact.

"In the beginning of this year, the transition to college life was rough, but expected. Classes were harder and the demands of me to perform well in track were greater," James-Wintjen said.

Greater athletic demands are understandable after such a rousing start. But in the next match, James-Wintjen was part of a sprint medley relay team that grabbed a first-place finish while establishing a new school record. In that same meet, James-Wintjen placed third in the 60-meter. The next week at the Bison Heptagonal, she won the 200-meter.

"Kalle has set an example for everyone on the team, despite only being a freshman," fellow sprinter Lindsey Appel '10 said. "She has had a huge impact on the team this season and will most definitely continue to do it throughout her four years here."

Expectations for James-Wintjen are high for the rest of the season, as well as the rest of her career at the University. Even with this, she has enjoyed her time on campus and has made a more dramatic transition to college than many Lewisburg High School alumni who attend the University.

"Usually when people find out that I am a 'townie,' they assume that I must go home every weekend, hang out with all my high school friends and attend many sporting events at my old school," she said. "That is not the case for me. I feel as though I still left town and went to a new school because when you are at Bucknell, you are certainly in the Bucknell 'bubble.'"

With that said, James-Wintjen has clearly enjoyed her time at the University, especially track camp.

"Track camp was definitely one of the most enjoyable times thus far for me," James-Wintjen said. "Overall, I enjoyed getting to know new people and hanging out with them, my newfound freedom to do basically whatever I choose on weekends and in my free time and being on the track team."

Her team has noticed and appreciates her friendliness as well as her athletic prowess.

"We're lucky to have her as a teammate and friend," Appel said. "I'm sure her name will be in the record books!"

Courtesy of Athletic Communications

Kalle James-Wintjen '10 has made great strides in her first year on the track and field team, breaking records and winning races.

"She is a unique and talented athlete and young woman. Kalle is driven and modest about her talents and achievements."
—Danielle Hobson, sprint coach to-back-to-back-to-back titles, while the men will look to improve upon last year's sixth-place finish.

SAYLOR From page B1

5. The women's basketball team will attempt to set a new team record tomorrow, looking for its eighth consecutive win. The team is also only two wins shy of 20, attempting to reach the mark for the first time since the 2001-02 season. That team won the Patriot League Tournament.

6. The Boston Celtics' 18-game losing streak came to an end with a win Wednesday over the Milwaukee Bucks. It is a sad state of affairs for the proud franchise, which has to seriously consider how much longer it wants to try to win with Paul Pierce as the center of the team.

7. Should Sports Illustrated really release its annual swimsuit edition on Valentine's Day? That is just asking for trouble.

8. Philadelphia Eagles' Head Coach Andy Reid did the right thing by taking time away from the team in order deal with family issues. Two of his sons, ages 21 and 23, are both facing legal issues. Family comes before football.

9. The Allen Iverson-Carmelo Anthony pairing isn't working out so hot in Denver. Of course, that is mainly because the duo never appears to be able to play together.

Anthony missed a bunch of games due to suspension when the Nuggets first acquired Iverson, and now that Anthony is back, Iverson has missed a bunch of games with an injured ankle. Even when together, there are a lot of issues the team needs to work out if it hopes to accomplish anything come playoff time.

10. The men's and women's basketball teams will honor their senior members before each game of Saturday's doubleheader. Next week's Saylor Says will pay tribute to the career's of Badmus, Brown, Hollobaugh, McNaughton and Seawright.

FOR THE LOVE OF THE SPORT

Steve Schmaltz '09 endured a career-destroying disease to come back to his passion

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Steve Schmaltz '09 stands ready at the end of the board in a home meet this season. Schmaltz is one of the top 20 divers in the Patriot League in his first season on the team.

By Brian Mulligan
Sports Editor

No one would have believed that Steven Schmaltz '09 was physically unable to dive or even attend school two years ago. The sophomore from Abington Heights, Pa. had to overcome an illness that kept him from the sport he loves for almost a year and half. His passion and devotion for diving along with support from his high school coach, Mary Gromelski, and his fellow Bison divers gave him the inspiration and confidence to excel at diving once again.

"They were all so supportive and they weren't judgmental at all. They would give me tips that they learned and they made it fun," Schmaltz said. "They created a fun, low-pressure atmosphere that was inviting."

Schmaltz is currently a member of the men's diving team. According to www.thetimes-tribune.com, he's ranked in the top 20 in the Patriot League on both the one-meter and three-meter spring boards. If you compare where he was two years ago and now, you wouldn't believe the strides he has made.

Before pursuing diving, Schmaltz was an avid gymnast for eight or nine years of his life, but once it became too overwhelming a family friend recommended diving. He took up the sport in seventh grade and fell in love with it.

As time passed, he strove to improve and excel and his hard work paid off his junior year in high school. He was the top diver from his high school at the District championship, placing fourth overall.

It seemed that everything was set up for a stellar senior year for the blossoming young athlete. Schmaltz was favored to finish first in his district that year, but those dreams of glory were dashed that December.

After contracting a bad case of strep throat, Schmaltz began to feel achy and tired. At practice, he would have to stop and lay down to relieve the pain. Eventually, the situation worsened with high fevers and swelling in his joints. The worst part was that after visiting numerous doctors the cause of the swelling wasn't diagnosed.

"It was scary because the doctors didn't know what was going on," Schmaltz said.

Eventually, Schmaltz was diagnosed with rheumatic fever, an inflammatory disease that targets the joints, heart, skin and brain. He began a regimen of steroids to suppress his immune reactions. To get out of bed, his joints had to be aspirated a few times.

The disease derailed his diving career and his chances of winning districts. All the hard work he had put into training had been erased. It caused him to miss school as well. For two weeks, he could only get through half a day of school before the pain was too great.

Schmaltz reached the University unsure of his future in diving because he had been out of the sport for so long. But if you love something, you cannot be away from it for long.

Schmaltz decided to try it again. He contacted his high school coach to help him over the summer to get back to where he left off midway through his senior year.

"It was scary starting on a team at a Division I level. Plus, having been out for a year and half was even scarier," Schmaltz said. "I didn't realize how quickly you could forget being out of the routine, like the approach and how you feel in the air."

"Steve's attitude is unmatched by anyone that I have come into contact with in my athletic career."
—Allie FitzPatrick '10

Upon returning to the University, Schmaltz tried out for the diving team, making it easily. Since then he has had a great impact on the team. All along the way, he exuded a positive, go-getter attitude that inspired the rest of the diving team.

"Steve's attitude is unmatched by anyone that I have come into contact with in my athletic career," teammate Allie FitzPatrick '10 said. "Diving is a very mental sport and sometimes your head can get in the way of making progress in your training. Steve has a level head which always helps us stay calm and poised during practices and competitions."

Most importantly, he was back in the pool doing what he loved-diving. All of his teammates could see it in his eyes.

" ... [I]n the beginning, Steve was very wary of joining the team. He didn't think that he would be good enough after taking a year off, but after a little convincing he decided to give it a try," teammate Jeff Manning '09 said. "He surprised me and I'm pretty sure he surprised himself too. He has grown tremendously as a diver and a teammate. He has made unbelievable jumps in his score, and he has taken on a bigger leadership role on the team than I could have ever imagined."

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Steve Schmaltz '09 performs a flip in a recent home meet. He walked onto the men's diving team this season after being out of the sport for a year and half.

Get in on the action.
Write for Sports
Contact blp004@

COLDWELL BANKER
PENN ONE REAL ESTATE
Thank You, Bucknell!!
For thirty years of calling Bucknell and Lewisburg home..
Susan Warner-Mills, Sales Associate
Competence, Integrity, Service
524-7500; swm@coldwellbanker.com

Recycle this newspaper!

Discover Yoga
EASEFUL Body
PEACEFUL Mind
USEFUL Life
Filled with joy, health & well being.
Integral Yoga Center 570-966-2484
428 Market Street, New Berlin www.yoga-center.com

Nancy's Nu-Wave Salon
look your best
Wax Specials
Main Street (Rte 45) Mantandon
524-2315
www.nancysnuwave.com

BRYNWOOD 535 Inc.
In Lewisburg Since 1969
Rentals
Your search begins..... and ends here.
Professional 24/7 Maintenance Staff
Apartments (furnished & unfurnished)
Houses for professionals students families
Rental Garages Also Available
Office & Retail Space
300—3,000 sq ft
brynwoodrentals.com
611 Market Street, Lewisburg
ph: 570.524.2121 x 3

A MATCH MADE IN HEAVEN
THIS MVP IS NEVER WITHOUT HIS MVP.

PATRIOT LEAGUE MOST VALUABLE PLAYER CHARLES LEE &
BUCKNELL'S MOST VALUABLE PAPER, THE BUCKNELLIAN

Take a time out once a week and go one-on-one with The Bucknellian to stay up to date with all of the action happening on campus.

Enclose this form and a check (made out to The Bucknellian) and mail it to:

The Bucknellian, Bucknell University C3952, 701 Moore Avenue, Lewisburg, PA 17837

Name _____

Address _____

_____

Phone _____

E-mail _____

__ ONE SEMESTER: receive 12 issues during the fall or spring semes for $30. Please specify semester: _____

For more information, contact The Bucknellian at 570-577-1520 or 570-577-1085 or e-mail bucknellian@bucknell.edu.

A better life for our furry friends

Students Helping Animals club raises money and volunteers at shelters for abandoned, mistreated animals

By Julia Fuchs
News Editor

Bringing happiness to abandoned animals in the surrounding Pennsylvania area is the name of the game for the Students Helping Animals (SHA) club.

Members visit sick animals, sweep and mop their cages and do fieldwork under any weather conditions. SHA spends hours each semester doing dirty work most students at the University would shrink from in disgust. But if you ask members, they will readily tell you it is one of the most rewarding aspects of their time at the University.

"It's definitely rewarding," secretary of SHA, Katie Conway '10 said. "Even though you're dead tired [by the end], you leave so happy."

Dedicated to helping all sorts of animals and using all the campus support it can get, the club is focusing its efforts this semester on increasing fundraising efforts and more trips to the local animal shelters and refuges.

"[Our main goal is] to help homeless animals and the shelters/groups who've rescued them," SHA President Susan Misur '09 said. "These people do so much. Many people who rescue do it right in their own homes. Think about giving up your own home for like 20 homeless dogs—it's really admirable. So it's nice for us to go out and give them a bit of a break."

Currently, there are four rescue groups and shelters SHA works with, offering animals to suit all preferences.

The Lycoming Animal Protection Society (LAPS) is a no-kill cat shelter and is the organization SHA has worked with the most. Founded in 1992, LAPS currently houses approximately 85 cats and is looking for volunteers.

Jobs such as cleaning, feeding and doing laundry are given to student and outside volunteers to help ease the endless work of the 18 volunteers who staff the shelter. According to Misur, the organization gets no funding from the government and relies on volunteers for most of its donations and help.

"It's a problem because shelters get overcrowded, it's hard to take care of [the animals] with little income and little help," Conway said. "I really admire the people who work there."

SHA volunteers do what they can to aid them.

"We sweep and mop, wash cat toys, replace bedding, cut up blankets, etc." Misur said.

This past winter, the club collected donations of food, treats and toys to make 30 Christmas stockings to give to LAPS, an event that was very successful, Misur said.

> "Most of us miss our pets from home. I kind of see the volunteering as therapy; it's nice to get away from here and be with cats who run up to you and want to sit in your lap."
> —Susan Misur '09

SHA volunteers also help walk, brush and clean the cages of the 80 dogs that call Mostly Mutts, a no-kill dog shelter in Sunbury, Pa., their home.

In addition to LAPS and Mostly Mutts, SHA currently works with Far-Point Stables and T&D's Wild Animal Refuge in Snyder County. Since the animals here are significantly bigger than at LAPS and Mostly Mutts, volunteer work is mostly limited to the outdoors.

In previous trips to Far-Point Stables, students have cut down bushes in the fields to make more room for the horses. At T&D's, work revolves around facility maintenance, though a free tour of the facility, which houses over 200 exotic and wild animals ranging from lions and leopards to bears, raccoons and parrots, is given to the volunteers at the end, Misur said. Volunteers also help with dragging brush, staining, painting and construction.

SHA keeps busy throughout the semester by volunteering at these shelters, but long-term goals for the club focus more on raising money for these organizations.

"Long-term, we'd like to do more fundraising; we're working on different ideas for that now," Misur said.

Pennies for Penelope is the name of the biggest ongoing fundraiser the club is currently working on, with hopes to build off of it in the future. Penelope, a six-month old kitten abandoned on the steps of LAPS four months ago, has battled an upper respiratory infection, a thyroid problem for which she must take daily pills and is now facing eye surgery to correct cataracts that could blind her if left untreated, Misur said. Penelope's surgery alone costs $2,000-$3,000—scraping up enough pennies while caring for 100 other cats is a daunting task. That is where the SHA comes in.

"We're putting some containers at stores downtown to collect money from the public and will be passing some containers out to some halls here at Bucknell," Misur said. "Every little bit counts."

Fundraising aside, the other long-term goal of the club is to educate the campus by inviting directors of its volunteer venues to speak on campus about their experiences working in the field of animal rescue and rehabilitation.

"[People are] not all aware that we're helping abandoned, homeless, often abused animals, and some seem to think these people raise these animals for fun," Misur said. "These animals were all rescued from horrible homes or off the streets."

Trips to the animal rescue shelters and refuges are open to the entire campus and e-mails are sent out campus wide advertising upcoming trips. On average, 25 students dedicate part of their day to drive to these places and socialize with the animals, as well as help with any work they are asked to do.

"Most of us miss our pets from home. I kind of see the volunteering as therapy; it's nice to get away from here and be with cats who run up to you and want to sit in your lap," Misur said.

Courtesy of Meaghan Fleischli

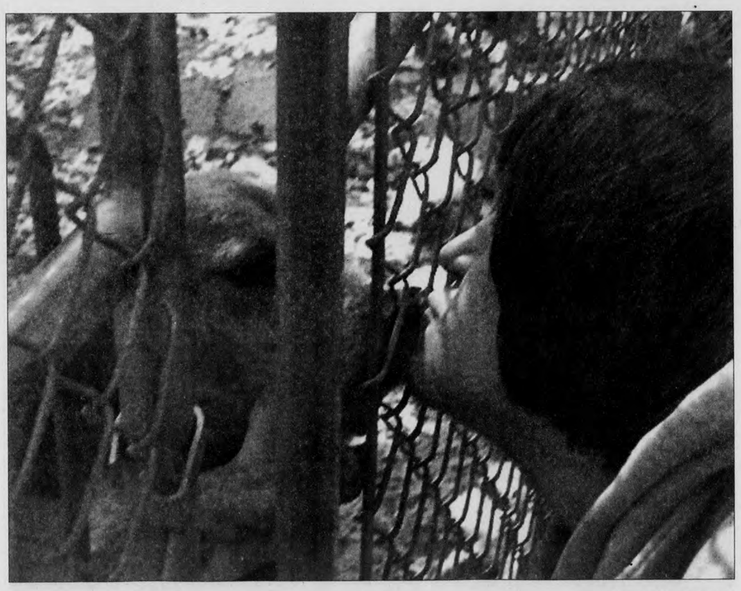
On average 80 puppies reside in the Mostly Mutts dog shelter. Most of them have been mistreated and are abandoned on the hills near the shelter.

Courtesy of Meaghan Fleischli

Students help rake leaves at Mostly Mutts dog shelter. The shelter is managed by volunteers who provide for approximately 80 dogs. On their trips, SHA members help feed the dogs, take them on walks and clean the cages.

Courtesy of Meaghan Fleischli

Members of Students Helping Animals club mop floors at the Lycoming Animal Protection Society. Volunteers try to help the 18 staff members who care for 85 cats on a daily basis by cleaning and feeding the animals.



Courtesy of Meaghan Fleischli

Puppies at Mostly Mutts dog shelter rely on volunteers to feed and walk them. Approximately 80 abandoned and mistreated dogs call the shelter their home. Many members of the Students Helping Animals club visit the shelters because they miss their pets at home or because it's a good chance to get off of campus and relax.

Courtesy of Meaghan Fleischli

Penelope, an abandoned kitten at the Lycoming Animal Protection Agency, suffers from upper respiratory infection. SHA fundraisers will help pay for her surgery.

Mer Cares

Dear Mer:
I am having a lot of trouble eating healthily at school, and sometimes I just go and grab take-out at the cafeteria and go back and eat in my room. I'm not very happy about my eating habits, but I don't know how to go about changing them. I certainly don't want to starve myself, but at the same time I don't know what alternatives I have that will satisfy my hunger needs when I eat meals.

—Hungry & Hopeless

Dear Hungry & Hopeless:

Pretty please do not develop an eating disorder. It's the last thing this campus needs and you surely do not need to add to the stress of being on your own at college. At home it was always easy with parents fixing well-balanced dinners. Now it's up to college kids to balance their meals themselves.

First, if you have a fridge in your room, try not to stock up on sodas and Frappuccinos because they have a boatload of calories. When it's right there in your room, it's definitely hard to resist. Soon enough they are all gone and you wonder why you have gained so much weight. Try to have healthy but delicious things in the fridge such as yogurt, fruit and 100 percent pure juice. It's easier to eat healthily when you have no junk food to turn to instead.

As for making your own meals in your dorm or eating at the cafeteria, opt for healthy drinks like water, milk or juice instead of sodas or lemonade. If you're at home on a Friday night, don't break out the chips, but pop a bag of fat-free popcorn in the microwave and you won't gain those few extra calories. At Wal-Mart, go past the Edy's ice-cream section, and buy the sugar-free fudge pops. You'll thank me later.

If you and your friends want to make Easy Mac, pick up a box of whole-wheat pasta and add olive oil and a bit of cheese. It's more work and we all have busy lives, but if you have a stovetop nearby, you can lay off the junk food items and turn to healthier alternatives.

The cafeteria has the health-food area. Bypass the grill with greasy hamburgers, and maybe get some stir-fry with water instead of olive oil. Throw in a bit of healthy tofu—it's almost tasteless on its own, but it takes on the flavor of the surrounding food. You can't justify not getting it by saying it tastes "icky." Grab a salad instead of pizza and try not to load up on mashed potatoes and pasta because lots of starches are not good for your body.

Also, it's been said that if you eat with friends, you are less likely to consume large amounts of food. When you get take-out on your own you probably get different types of food, and when you get back to your room, you often eat more than you had planned. It's right there and nobody is watching you anyway.

You can also try to limit where you eat food, such as in the kitchen of your lounge or in the cafeteria, because you won't feel as tempted to munch mindlessly while watching movies or chatting online with friends. Measure the amounts of food you eat, too. Put a certain amount of pretzels in a small bowl to eat while doing homework instead of having the whole bag next to you. Good luck!

Love,
Mer

Please send questions regarding any topic to marc001@Bucknell.edu with subject line reading "advice" or you may send a letter via campus mail to box number C1099. I look forward to hearing from you!

Culture Couture gets a taste of high fashion in the Big Apple

By Lauren Kushner
Writer

The fashion club, Culture Couture, traveled to New York City for its annual trip on Feb. 2 and 3.

Twenty students and the faculty adviser, Paula Davis-Larson, assistant professor of theatre and dance, went on this trip. The first stop for the club was the Fashion Institute of Technology. At this location, the members viewed two different museum exhibits: "She's like a Rainbow: Colors in Fashion," and "Ralph Rucci: The Art of Weightlessness." The first exhibit explored the history, symbolism, psychology and science of colors in fashion. The exhibit included over 250 years of fashion and over 150 fashions, accessories and textiles. The second exhibit showcased Rucci's work. A graduate of FIT, Rucci was the first recipient of the Couture Council's Artistry of Fashion Award. This exhibition houses 100 of his most famous garments.

The next stop on the trip was to Bloomingdale's on 3rd Avenue. Here, the members received a "behind the scenes" look at how Bloomingdale's is run. They were also informed about internship and job opportunities within corporate Bloomingdale's. After a 45-minute discussion, the students participated in a 15-minute question-and-answer session.

The last stop for the day was Columbus Circle for the Annual Alumni Reception. Here, Culture Couture members wee given the opportunity to network with University alumni in the fashion industry, while enjoying a classy, catered meal from All About Foods. After a short presentation by co-presidents Abby Borden '08 and Sandy Levine '08 detailing the highlights of the year, members were allowed to converse with the four alumni on a one-on-one basis.

"The trip was a wonderful way to connect what we are doing as a club with real world experiences. It was great to see how the glamorous world of fashion can be made into a real-life career."
—Deb Perry '09

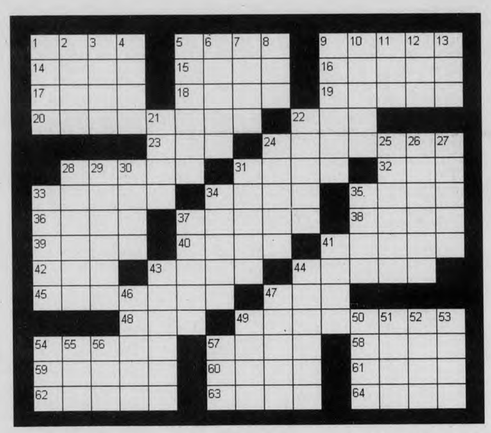
That night, the club members were free to roam about the city.

The next morning, the members met at The Metropolitan Museum of Art, where they looked at the exhibit, "Nan Kempnar: American Chic." Kempnar was a socialite who enjoyed purchasing and observing high fashion. Her collection of clothing was varied, including formal evening gowns, suits in every color and shade, fur coats, jewels, designer shoes and her "coming out dress." The last stop on the trip was to The Museum of the City of New York, where members viewed the exhibition, "Black Style Now." This exhibit explores the role of hip-hop in American culture and how Black style has turned fashion on its head. Articles in this exhibit have been worn by Tina Turner, LL Cool J and Sean "Diddy" Combs.

"The trip was a wonderful way to connect what we are doing as a club with real world experiences. It was great to see how the glamorous world of fashion can be made into a real-life career," Deb Perry '09 said.

Because Culture Couture is such a new club, members are still trying to work out the details and create a stable database of alumni to contact in the future for annual New York City trips. While the event was an amazing experience this year, members only can hope to improve upon it in the years to come.

The Bucknellian Crossword



Across

1. See eye-to-eye
5. U.S. coin
9. Ocean predators
14. Biblical brother
15. Goofball actor Sandler
16. Wedding reception ritual
17. Toilet paper quantity
18. Pierre and I (Fr.)
19. Panky's partner
20. Often exaggerated object
22. Served a meal
23. Naval prefix
24. Italian dish Chicken
28. Breadth
31. Mr. Williams and Mr. Nugent
32. Cattle, individually
33. Tree huggers
34. High
35. Shade of blue
36. Jazz great Fitzgerald
37. Cash (also puzzle theme)
38. Backside
39. Ancient Russian leader
40. British nobleman
41. Use a scale
42. Unit of measurement
43. Siestas
44. Frame within a frame
45. Interminable
47. Began a tunnel
48. Granola ingredient
49. Beaten
54. Detest
57. "Fore!" play
58. Sheltered inlet
59. Contemptible person
60. Against
61. Forest dweller
62. Enjoys crafts
63. Eminem single (2000)
64. Mail

Down

1. Rural residence
2. Peek _
3. Prison room
4. Ms. MacPherson
5. Prince Hamlet, for one
6. Cult images
7. Handle very roughly
8. L.L. Bean clothing rival
9. Everyone else
10. Avenues
11. Soup container
12. Inquire
13. Pigpen
21. Simple structure
22. Worn
24. Olympian's goal
25. Jury option
26. Waiting area
27. Covered by waves
28. Ph.D. President
29. Nev., compared to Calif.
30. Letter opener?
31. Levels
33. Chevrolet slang
34. Corners
35. Help in a heist
37. _ of burden
41. Hourly compensation
43. Close
44. Term of endearment
46. Weaving machines
47. Greek letter
49. Cautionary contraction
50. Play's parts or plays parts
51. Ripped
52. Sum of two odd numbers
54. AMA for Chiropractors
55. "It's freezing!"
56. Quarterback term
57. Fuel

ByVo Crosswords

53. Title

A	E	S	O	P		M	I	S	S		D	E	S	K
R	E	E	F	S		A	S	I	A		O	V	E	N
T	R	A	F	A	L	G	A	R	S	Q	U	A	R	E
				T	A	G				S	U	B	D	U	E
A	H	A	B		D	I	E	D		I	T	E	M	S
M	A	C	R	O		E	L	E	C	T	S
E	N	C	A	S	E		A	E	R			A	P	T
B	E	R	M	U	D	A	T	R	I	A	N	G	L	E
A	S	A			A	S	I		S	C	O	R	E	S
			T	O	M	T	O	M		T	R	E	A	T
U	D	D	E	R		I	N	I	T		M	E	S	S
N	E	U	R	A	L			S	A	W
C	I	R	C	L	E	O	F	F	R	I	E	N	D	S
A	C	R	E		A	N	T	I		S	T	E	A	L
P	E	E	L		S	E	C	T		P	A	D	D	Y

February 9 Answers

"All good writing is swimming under water and holding your breath."
—F. Scott Fitzgerald

Write for Features
E-mail ns022@

Red, Smoked BBQ!
Beef Brisket, Pork, Chicken, Ribs!
Sandwiches, Wraps, Salads, Platters!
No Reservations Needed!
Call in for Takeout!
SKEETER'S PIT BBQ
On the Bluff
Overlooking the Scenic Susquehanna River
At the Intersection of Routes 11 & 15
Shamokin Dam
570.743.2727
Daily 11:00am – 10:00pm
Sundays till 9:00pm
www.SkeetersBBQ.com

Communicating through dance

Dance Improvisation creates relaxing atmosphere for free body movements

By Liza Banhalmi
Writer

The body is the key ingredient of contact improvisation, a specific form of dance improvisation.

"If you say communication, you think of talking, demonstrating or writing," said Joseph Vincent Tranquillo, assistant professor of biomedical and electrical engineering. "Rarely would someone include the way they use their body."

Contact improvisation was first recognized in 1972 in Steve Paxton's "Magnesium," performed at Oberlin College. Since then, it has evolved tremendously as a form of post-modern dance and has spread across the country to different schools and dance companies.

In fact, it is going on right here from 8:30-10:00 p.m. every Wednesday on the second floor of the Tustin Dance Studio, just past the Gateway apartment buildings.

"It's a way for people to explore different ways to communicate with their body," Tranquillo said.

Kelly Knox, assistant professor of dance, started the program last semester, and is currently being taught by Tranquillo, who first became interested in dance and contact improvisation at Duke University.

"It's not classified as dance; that's why it's called dance improv," Tranquillo said. "Some things look like dance that are graceful and an audience would enjoy watching. However, there are moments that arise spontaneously. It's not how it looks to an audience—it's about how it feels to the dancer."

The sessions are very laid-back, and just about anyone can join, regardless of physical ability and dance skills. It's also used as a form of therapy to get patients to move around freely and relax.

At the beginning of the sessions everyone forms a circle and talks about himself or herself and his or her day. Afterward, the circle breaks up and everyone spreads out to do the warm-up.

"I try to base the warm-ups off a story or something that was said in the introductions," Tranquillo said. "I usually try to think of a way, on the spot, to improvise."

Some warm-ups include visualization.

"Imagine you're a snail on a leaf blowing in the wind," Tranquillo said. "From there, there are a lot of different points to go—the snail could blow off. It's kind of like acting it out, but it's just a warm-up to get you moving."

Another warm-up is simply standing and closing your eyes and getting in tune with the way your body sways back and forth. As time progresses, you exaggerate the sways without forcing them until you reach a point where you get thrown off and you lose your balance. From there, you simply need to take a step to avoid the fall.

The point of this, Tranquillo said, is "to notice how it is different from your regular movements and how you can transition from this stumbling walk to a normal walk."

After the warm-ups, there is more focus on the actual contact improvisation. Each person partners up with someone, and touches them on one part of his or her body and reacts to how he or she moves and vice versa.

Sometimes, the partners start off mirroring each other. They touch only with their pointer fingers and react to each other's movements. From here, the contact and movements progress. None of it is planned out; you simply react to your partner's movements.

"It's not how it looks to an audience—it's about how it feels to the dancer."
—Joseph Vincent Tranquillo, assistant professor of biomedical and electrical engineering

"It's a fun way to get into dance without actually being a dancer.", Tranquillo said. "You're not performing for anyone, and it doesn't need to look good."

Ellen Gerdes, a resident of Lewisburg, was introduced to contact improvisation at Wesleyan University in Middletown, Conn. After moving to Lewisburg, she was glad when Knox reintroduced her to dance improvisation here at the University.

"It's not what you would expect in central Pennsylvania," Gerdes said.

Of course, all the ins and outs of dance and contact improvisation cannot be explained in this article. You have to try it out for yourself. It's a great way to get your body to move freely without worrying about making it "look good for an audience," as Tranquillo said.

You can get your body moving in ways you would never expect.

Courtesy of www.artsalive.ca

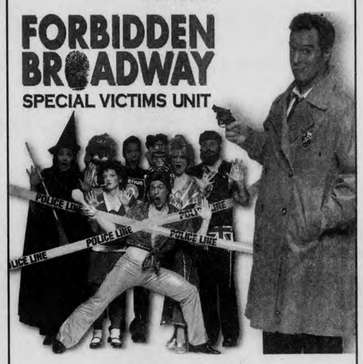
Steve Paxton is the founder of Dance Improvisation movement. The movement was first featured in his performance "Magnesium" in 1972 at Oberlin College.

"Turn your Power ON and Add LIFE to your Years!"
Morrison's Advanced Chiropractic Care
Michael D. Morrison D.C.
1205 W Market Street
Lewisburg, PA 17837
Office: 570-523-1221
A Healthy Spine Equals a Healthy YOU!

Bucknell Students may receive a free exam and x-rays (if needed) with mention of this advertisement.

$250 CASH
Sign on BONUS
Call for details
3 & 4 Bedroom Houses
CLOSE TO CAMPUS
WHIRLPOOL
WASHER / DRYER
DISHWASHER
STOVE & FRIG
Newly renovated houses available 2006/2007
570-524-5714 / 570-412-4831

The Sigmund and Claire Weis Center for the Performing Arts
PRESENTS
FORBIDDEN BROADWAY
SPECIAL VICTIMS UNIT



Friday, February 16, 2007
8 p.m.
coming to the Weis Center
Jazz at Lincoln Center's Afro-Latin Jazz Orchestra with Arturo O'Farrill
Friday, March 2, 8 p.m.
Cassatt String Quartet
Saturday, March 24, 8 p.m.
Bucknell University, Lewisburg, Pennsylvania
Tickets and Information: 570-577-1000
www.bucknell.edu/WeisCenter/

Another tantalizing edition brought to you by ...

Ms. Love and the Bubble

Dear Ms. O,

My last boyfriend always told me I moaned really loudly whenever we had sex. I just started seeing someone new and I am afraid to do anything with him because I am so embarrassed. What can I do to control myself?

- Moaning Mess

Moaning Mess,

First off, I have to say, moaning is welcome. Most guys like the encouragement. It shows your guy that he's doing something right and making you feel good, and that makes him happy.

It's good to be able to let go of your inhibitions and go with what you feel. You express your pleasure through moaning loudly, and that's not something of which to be ashamed.

It shouldn't make you feel overly self-conscious. Perhaps when your ex mentioned it, he didn't look at it as a bad thing. Maybe he was just concerned about other people around you. Dorm walls are pretty thin.

But it's true, everyone needs to be able to keep it quiet in certain situations. You don't want to be so loud that it will offend people, especially if they're people you have to see the next morning.

It can be very hard to take pleasure in sex if you're busy stressing about something you feel self-conscious about, so here are some ways to lower the volume and even increase the pleasure.

There's always the obvious. Cover your face with a pillow and moan into that. It's not necessarily the most romantic or sexy solution, but in crucial circumstances, it gets the job done. Try biting down onto something so your mouth is closed and less sound comes out.

For your situation, I'd suggest trying to focus the energy you normally express by moaning through other means.

Put your hands on his body and let him know how good it feels through your hands. Pull him closer to you, or run your hands over his torso. Maybe even dig your nails in a little bit if he's into that.

Try a little nibbling on his neck or shoulder. Use your teeth lightly and don't bite too hard. This will distract your mouth and help to keep the volume low.

You can also change your sounds into speech. Instead of moaning, try a little dirty talk. It doesn't have to be anything extreme, just tell him what feels good.

Keep the moaning up too, but keep it at a lower level.

If these don't seem to work, then honestly, just let it all go. A lot of guys like it when girls have a set of lungs on them. Be loud and proud.

~ Ms. O

E-mail me your questions at MsOintheBubble@yahoo.com or send them through campus mail to Ms. O, The Bucknellian, C-3952. All authors of questions will remain anonymous.

DOES YOUR CAR NEED SERVICED?
Our Service Department has $25,000 in new upgrades, including a new alignment rack, brake lathe, tire machine, and hundreds of hours of training for the techs. We now offer shuttle service to and from work or home. We have become a complete service center that can perform any work on any model, from an oil change to engine replacement.
Lewisburg Ford
Oil Change w/Multi-Point Inspection
$19.95 Excludes Diesels. Must present coupon at time of service. Expires 12/31/06
Lewisburg Ford
Oil Change/Tire Rotation w/Multi-Point Inspection
$34.95 Must present coupon at time of service. Expires 12/31/06
Lewisburg Ford
2265 Old Turnpike Rd.
(Route 45 West)
Across From Brookpark Farm
Call Today! (570) 524-7267
Visit us on the web at www.lewisburgford.com

Reflections on Japanese culture

Culture shock in Japan helps student gain a better perspective on the world

By Deborah Sandler
Contributing Writer

I have always loved to travel. I rode on my first airplane when I was six weeks old and took my first international trip the summer between my first and second years of high school. The people in my life were not surprised when I decided to study abroad, nor were they surprised when I chose Japan. I started studying Japanese on a whim in high school and continued to study it in college, fascinated by both Japanese culture and language.

I remember being incredibly excited on the airplane, not really understanding that I was going to Japan or that I would be there for four months, away from my friends and family. I was proud of myself for finding the meeting area in the airport where other jet-lagged students were comparing home universities before leaving for the hotel where our orientation would take place. The first week flew by as we learned how to buy train tickets, navigate our way through Tokyo and most importantly, how to use chopsticks.

After orientation was complete, I met my homestay family. The family members had never hosted a foreign student before, and they didn't speak any English. My homestay dad had been outside of Japan to France and England, and when asked what he thought of his trip overseas, he said, "It was one of the scariest experiences of my life."

I was also handed a two-page list of rules upon my arrival, including meal times and some rough translations like, "write name in wanting keep in store in contents of the refrigerator" and "do not put it in the room and receive it in the hall when you invite the friend."

Overall, my homestay family taught me that every family has its own quirks. They were very close with one another and spoke in almost their own dialect, which was sometimes hard for me to understand. I think the funniest thing that my homestay dad and brother did was smoke into the vent above the stove to appease my homestay mom's wish for no smoking in the house.

They knew I was nervous when I first arrived, so my first meal at my homestay was McDonald's, as they assumed it would be food that I was familiar with. From that point on, there was something new on the table almost every week for my entire stay with the Shinohara family. My homestay dad would always point to these foods and say "try," because he wanted me to fully experience his culture and love for food.

Dinner usually consisted of fish, and over time,I tried eel, octopus, stuffed squid and whole fish, including the head, which had been dried. Meals also had their staples; I always had a bowl of soup, a bowl of rice, tea to drink and sliced apples and bananas for dessert. For breakfast, I had Frosties, the Japanese version of Frosted Flakes, and yogurt—nothing abnormal. My homestay dad, on the other hand, would eat something called natto, or fermented soybeans, with rice. He wanted me to try it, but with the horrible smell, I refused it every morning for four months.

Not only did I learn a lot more about Japan, its people and its culture, but I learned a lot about myself and my culture.

It was better that they explained all the foods to me because I did not know what I ordered in most restaurants for at least the first month. The Japanese use lots of pictures on menus and display fake food at the front of their restaurants, which definitely helped. Often, we would just point to what we wanted when ordering, even after we started to understand more of the different menus.

Outside of 15 hours of class each week, I traveled a lot. We were usually done around 12 p.m. every day and, unlike the Japanese educational system, had Wednesdays off. Groups of us would always meet at different train stations. We went to Tokyo Disneyland, Kamakura (home to a giant, hollow Buddha whose belly you can enter and Yokohama (home to the world's fastest elevator), as well as Japan's biggest Chinatown. I also went on four longer trips to Nikko, Nagano, Okinawa and Hokkaido, and concluded with visits to Kyoto, Osaka and Nara after classes were finished.

Okinawa is halfway between the main islands of Japan and Taiwan and is very tropical, like Hawaii. Hokkaido, on the other hand, is the northernmost of the main islands and great for hiking and skiing. Each of the other cities is cultural and historic, with famous castles and temples. By taking many trips, even though a lot of them were short, I felt like I was living in Japan, not just visiting as a tourist. That made my trip a memorable experience.

Like the United States, every area has something a little different about it that can only be experienced by visiting that particular area.

While culture shock comprised a big part of my experience, as well as learning more about the Japanese language and culture, there is something bigger to studying abroad that everyone experiences, no matter which country he or she visits. Not only did I learn a lot more about Japan, its people and its culture, but I learned a lot about myself and my culture.

Part of the culture shock I experienced was my reaction to things I was going through at the time and how people reacted to me. For example, hot springs, in which all visitors enter the same tub of water naked, are very popular in Japan. While most Americans would be uncomfortable with the idea of communal bathing in a public bath where bathing suits are forbidden, it is American culture that makes us uncomfortable.

My homestay family, on the other hand, did not understand why I thought it was refreshing to shower in the morning, as that is not part of Japanese culture. These situations made me feel like I was living in Japan, not just visiting as a tourist. That made my trip a memorable experience.

Photo courtesy of Deborah Sandler

The Matsumoto Castle is located in the city of Nagano. During her four-month study abroad in Japan, Deborah Sandler '08 tried new food, attended classes and visited many of the islands and cities.

The Bucknellian

February 23, 2007

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

Volume 139, Number 5 | Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue | www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

A fairytale nightmare

A magical fantasy and tragic reality meld together in the Oscar nominated film "Pan's Labyrinth."

See page A8

Lack of resources hinders Psych Services

WARNING SIGNS FOR STUDENTS

The following, taken from the University's Psychological Services Web site, are some signs that may signal danger or a need for help in college students:

—Frequent crying
—Dramatic weight loss or gain
—Social withdrawal
—Alcohol and/or other drug use
—Deterioration in personal hygiene
—Direct or indirect reference to suicide, preoccupation with death and morbid subjects generally
—Failure to attend class or do assigned work
—Frequent requests for attention, highly dependent behavior
—Compulsive behaviors (e.g., eating only small amounts of certain foods)
—Listless, lethargic, "depressed" appearance
—Promiscuous sexual behavior

If you think you, or someone you know, may be in danger or need help, contact your resident assistant, Public Safety or Psychological Services immediately.

Psychological Services is unable to provide educational programs to students

By Rachel Freeman
Writer

Insufficient funding of the University's Psychological Services for the past seven years has resulted in understaffing and an inability to create new programs to benefit the well-being of students on campus.

Current Director of Psychological Services Linda Locher was notified of the problem four years ago when she joined the staff and associate academic deans recommended additional staffing.

The situation has not improved. Locher attributes the resource shortage to an increase in student demand for psychological services.

"Schools nationwide are seeing an increase in students with concerns," Locher said.

Because of a high demand for one-on-one counseling, Psychological Services shifted its services from developmental programs to focus more on one-on-one counseling, commonly dealing with such issues as anxiety, depression and perfectionism.

"The reality is there are tight budgets," Locher said, "and unfortunately Psych Services is unable to get the resources that it needs."

According to Sarah Cummings '08, Bucknell Student Government (BSG) president, the issue with Psychological Services has recently been placed on the forefront of BSG's agenda, as well as the top priority of Provost Mary DeCredico '81 .

Cummings has advocated the improvement of Psychological Services because the University should "never outsource something so important. This is a basic service to students," she said.

The increase in student treatment is a national trend. According to The New York Times, awareness of mental disorders is becoming more prominent.

"Though some students resist getting treatment, the general awareness of mental disorders like depression has grown, and seeking help is more acceptable," the New York Times said.

From fall semester 2005

See SERVICES page A2

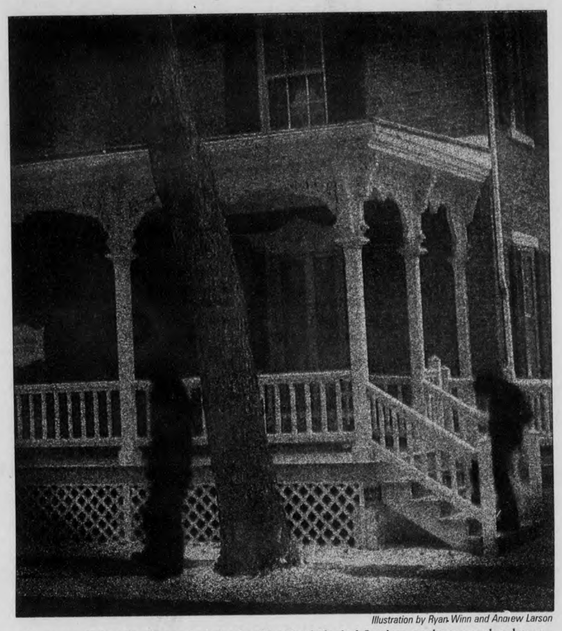

Illustration by Ryan Winn and Andrew Larson

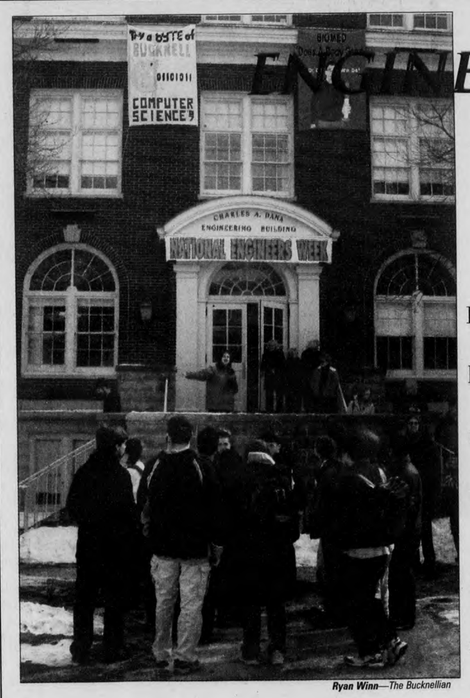
Due to insufficient funding and a lack of staff at Psychological Services, students are placed on a waiting list to see a counselor. Some students feel that their needs are not being fully met.



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

ENGINEERING WEEK 2007

The front of Dana Engineering building has been decorated with banners advertising each field of engineering at the University. Complete with textbook tossing, networking nights and a special engineering dinner, the national Engineering Week seeks to promote engineering and celebrate students in the field.

University begins search for new dean of students

By Bronwen Durocher and Evan Unger
Contributing Writer & News Editor

The University is currently working to fill the position of dean of students, which has been vacant since Richard Ferraro left before the beginning of the fall semester.

The new dean of students will be selected from three finalists who have been narrowed down from 10 candidates, following phone conversations.

The search committee is composed of various members of the campus community including Lindsey Pierce '08, vice president of administration for Bucknell Student Government (BSG). She is the only student on the committee. Although Pierce is a voting member, the committee never takes a vote.

"It's more of a discussion based on the ratings complied from a wide-range of parties including various student groups, the BSG executive board and a compilation of other students," Pierce said.

BSG is actively involved in the search, in part due to its close relationship with the dean of students.

"The dean of students has traditionally been a very important colleague of BSG. We work very closely with their office," said Sarah Cummings '08, president of BSG. Cummings also said that BSG is looking for someone who has experience with the culture of the University and has a vision to "help bring Bucknell to the next level as the premier undergraduate experience in the nation."

The University president and provost face the ultimate decision in hiring the new dean of students.

"The search committee's main goal is to gain feedback from the community and inform President Mitchell and Provost DeCredico of this information," Pierce said.

Rev. Ian Oliver, head of the search committee, outlined what would exemplify

See DEAN page A2

INSIDE THIS ISSUE

OPINIONS
Psychological Services is an essential resource for students and shouldn't be neglected.
A4

A&E
Fans of American Idol know Katharine McPhee from the fifth , season, but will anyone remember her for her debut album?
A6

FEATURES
The University welcomed the Year of the Pig with Chinese dance, music and cuisine. Read more about the festivities in Features.
B7

SPORTS
Jenny Dalzell '09 and her team ran their way to second place in the 4x400m relay. Read about the women's track Patriot League title win in Sports.
B1

Public Safety Log

Wednesday, February 14

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—The Gateways: Student transported to Evangelical ER for medical treatment.

ALARM - FIRE—Bucknell West: Caused by cooking.

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—Sigma Phi Epsilon Fraternity: Fire Extinguisher discharged.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—The Gateways: Student transported to Evangelical ER for treatment.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—The Gateways: Student transported to Evangelical ER for treatment.

Thursday, February 15

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Larison Hall: Student transported to Evangelical ER for treatment.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Student Health Center: Student transported to Geisinger Medical Center for treatment.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Olin Science Building: Student transported to Evangelical ER for treatment.

Friday, February 16

THEFT—Upper Campus: Three Barricades removed from roadways.

PROPERTY/FOUND—Christy Mathewson Drive: A weight was found and returned to KLARC.

INFORMATION—Faculty Court: Non-BU Bus stuck in a snow bank.

VEHICLE - ACCIDENT—Gateway Parking Lot: Snow Plow hit a parked vehicle.

THEFT—Gerhard Fieldhouse: Equipment bag removed from locker room.

SOLICITING—Kress Hall: Individuals soliciting without permission on campus.

ASSAULT—Vedder Hall: Student transported to Evangelical ER for treatment. Charges pending.

Saturday, February 17

ASSAULT—Vedder Hall: Student transported to Evangelical ER for treatment. Charges pending.

Sunday, February 18

ALCOHOL VIOLATION—McDonnell Hall: Underage consumption. Charges pending.

ALCOHOL VIOLATION—Smith Hall: Student transported to Evangelical ER for treatment of alcohol overdose. Charges pending.

ASSIST OTHER AGENCY—State Route 15: PSO removed item/hazard in the roadway.

Monday, February 19

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Golf Course: Non-BU person transported to Evangelical ER.

VEHICLE ACCIDENT - HIT AND RUN—Gerhard Fieldhouse: Damage to a parked vehicle.

ALARM - INTRUSION—Computer Center: Cause unknown.

Tuesday, February 20

VEHICLE - ACCIDENT—Bucknell West Parking Lot: Vehicle was struck during snow plowing.

ALARM - FIRE—Vedder Hall: Caused by contractors.

ALARM - FIRE—President's House: Caused by contractors.

PROPERTY DAMAGE—Sigma Chi Fraternity: Four vehicles damaged by snow from the roof.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Gerhard Fieldhouse: Student transported to Evangelical ER for treatment.

University to fill two vacancies

Search for dean of Arts & Sciences begins

By Bronwen Durocher
Contributing Writer

The University is also in the process of hiring a new dean for the College of Arts and Sciences, a position currently held by interim Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences Christopher Zappe. The search committee is spearheaded by Professor of Biology Warren Abrahamson and Professor of English John Rickard.

Three finalists have been chosen and the committee has scheduled forums for students, faculty, administrators and support staff to meet and evaluate these candidates.

During these forums candidates will be asked to speak on a designated topic for 20 minutes and respond to questions for an additional 30 minutes.

The search for dean of arts and sciences is a step or two behind of the search for the dean of students. Jordan Franklin '09 of Bucknell Student Government (BSG) will represent the student body on the search committee.

"We are confident that Jordan will represent the student voice and provide valuable insight to the committee from a student perspective," said Sarah Cummings '08, president of BSG.

Franklin will be in charge of organizing student meals with the candidates both with BSG and students from across the campus. BSG is looking for a candidate who is, "willing to listen to student ideas related to the curriculum, such as new majors and minors and academic programs," Cummings said.

DEAN From page A1

a good dean of students for the campus community.

"The goal of the merger is to create a consistent, positive student educational experience that bridges students' life inside the classroom and outside the classroom," Oliver said. "The hope would be that an effective and creative dean would help create a campus where students feel that every part of their life here supports and enlarges their Bucknell education."

The search committee is very excited about bringing these potential new deans to campus.

"[The candidates] bring a variety of backgrounds, experience and training to the position. We had an excellent pool of candidates and a very difficult time selecting finalists," Oliver said.

Currently, Gerald Commerford, acting dean of students, is replacing Ferraro who left the University for personal reasons before the fall semester.

"I really have strong positive feelings for Bucknell. I valued my colleagues and the students were terrific. I had a great opportunity at Virginia Tech, which is also a great school," Ferraro said. "My son graduated from here and I have family [locally] including my son and grandson. This is a situation in which I think highly of Bucknell and I appreciate the opportunity at Virginia Tech."

Three open forums have been scheduled to facilitate contact with the student body.

On Feb. 22, Scott C. Brown from Mount Holyoke College will speak and answer questions. He is listed on the school's Web site as the director of the Career Development Center.

Susan L. Hopp, currently the chief student affairs person at Oregon State University-Cascades Campus will speak on Feb. 27.

The third candidate is to be announced and will speak on March 6.

All forums will begin at 4 p.m. and will be held in the Elaine Langone Center Forum.

Write for News!
E-mail etu001@

BRYNWOOD 535 Inc.
Rentals
In Lewisburg Since 1969
Your search begins..... and ends here.
Professional 24/7 Maintenance Staff
Apartments (furnished & unfurnished)
Houses for professionals students families
Rental Garages Also Available
Office & Retail Space
300—3,000 sq ft
brynwoodrentals.com
611 Market Street, Lewisburg
ph: 570.524.2121 x 3

Recycle this news-paper!

Lack of resources limits Psych Services to fall semester 2006, Psychological Services saw a 17 percent increase in clients and a six percent increase in counseling appointments, according to Locher.

SERVICES From page A1

Even though it would like to provide as much assistance as possible, Locher said that Psychological Services "never turns away students." The office can see a student who makes an appointment within one week but typically is only able to see three students during the walk-in hour from 3 to 4 p.m.

Even though it would like to provide as much assistance as possible ... Psychological Services "never turns away students."

It is also fairly common at universities for a student to be recommended to other services, usually off campus, but this does not mean that the student is being turned away.

For some students, though, a week-long wait is unacceptable.

A student, who wished to remain anonymous, was recently asked by her resident assistant to seek the aid of Psychological Services for a possible eating disorder. The student had to wait over a week to see a counselor.

"Honestly I was disappointed when I went [to Psychological Services] because I just felt like they weren't warm or welcoming. The fact that I had to wait a week to even see someone makes me question the organization of the system in general," the student said.

Psychological Services mainly hopes to increase the size of its staff. With more staff available for counseling, more students can be helped.

Locher and a colleague want to focus on various preventative programs for students, but because of the current understaffing, they are unable to devote enough time to these other programs.

With more funding, Psychological Services would also like to provide brochures and educational materials, sophisticated assessment machines for various mental illnesses and an online screening to help students "take the first step," she said.

An interview with new chief diversity officer

By Lily Beauvilliers
Associate Editor of Layout

Lily Beauvilliers '09 conducted an email interview with incoming Chief Officer for Diversity and Equity Rolando Arroyo-Sucre about his newly created position.

B: Why Bucknell? Did anything draw you to this campus?

A-S: The list of things that make Bucknell attractive for me at this point in my career and professional life is rather extensive. The following three are among the highlights: 1) The quality of the institution, the members of its community and its reputation as an institution committed to academic excellence. 2) The vision for diversity stated in The Plan for Bucknell. 3) The level of student, faculty and staff engagement as revealed to me through the students that interviewed me, written questions posed to me by the student government, the number of people attending the open forum and their questions and now your questions, as well as the student-staff-faculty interaction dynamics that I have seen during my visits to campus.

B: What do you suppose is Bucknell's biggest strength in terms of equity and diversity? Its biggest weakness?

A-S: Let me begin by addressing the second part of the question: In my teaching of strategic planning approaches I always emphasize that perceived weaknesses are just opportunities waiting to be realized. That is not to say that I dismiss weaknesses. Instead, when looking at a situation, my approach is to look at what some people may identify as problems as a framework of the work to be done.

The first strength to call for my attention was a climate of openness reflected in student publications, with students feeling comfortable to challenge diversity issues. I believe that if we are going to address diversity as another aspect of learning and growth, we cannot underestimate the importance of open dialogue within the boundaries of mutual respect and collegiality. I am not interested in "selling" a diversity program to anybody; I am committed to working with all students in the process of developing the skills, knowledge and appreciation of differences that will best prepare all of us to become successful professionals and citizens in a culturally diverse world.

B: How do you think your office will affect student life?

A-S: At a personal level, I expect that students will get to know me as a friend and partner in the pursuit of their personal and academic goals; someone they can feel free to approach without worry of being judged or criticized; someone that you can trust to have your best interests in mind.

My style is to be open as a source of information and resources, a sounding board for ideas and a collaborator in your projects. I look forward to being invited to partake in (and attend) meetings, events and programs.

At a campus-wide level, I look forward to becoming an active participant in all the aspects of campus life as a resource, facilitator and partner in various programming initiatives.

My goal is to contribute to an environment in which all students have the best opportunities to learn and grow. I believe in the value of dialogue, exchange of ideas and combination of theoretical frameworks with hands-on experience to develop skills and acquire knowledge.

B: Are there any big plans in the works, perhaps for programs involving the four offices you will manage, or any changes to those offices?

A-S: My work style is collaborative and responsive to the unique needs of the institution and its environment. As the word itself implies, planning is a process that takes time and engagement of all stakeholders. I am not coming to Bucknell with any preconceptions of what should be done. Instead, I come prepared to be part of the process in which plans will evolve as needed to address the needs of the community.

My expectation is that, as a team, the directors and I will work to develop a framework that supports the goals set forth in the strategic plans. Through this process, we will determine which changes (if any) are necessary to better serve the campus.

7th Street House to be renovated

Ellyn Ercolano—The Bucknellian

The Seventh Street House will undergo renovations during the summer. The house has a history as a fraternity house in the 1880s but is now showing its age.

By Ahmed Kodouda
Writer

The Seventh Street House, located at the corner of Seventh Street and Moore Avenue, will be renovated during the summer. The University created a steering committee consisting of faculty, students and staff to discuss the renovation of the house early last fall.

"The house as a whole needs to be renovated. Specifically, the pipe and heating systems need total overhaul. The fire system is out of date and needs to be brought up to date especially because other small interest houses had their fire systems updated this past summer," said Dana Watson '07, a current resident of the house.

The house received minor renovations on the roof and the exterior, but the interior needs major work, said Jessica Hess, director of Multicultural Student Services.

"The University has hired a contractor and has started to take measurements. Physical work will begin in May and should be done by the beginning of the school year," Hess said.

Due to the state of the house, many of its facilities are poor.

"Because the pipe system is very old, the water can get boiling hot or ice cold if two people shower at the same time or if any two water consuming activities occur simultaneously. Resolving that issue would greatly improve our ability to do basic things like take showers, wash dishes, etc." Watson said.

Kelly Walker '08, the current head resident of the house, was very excited about the new renovations.

"Renovations for Seventh Street House would greatly impact students' day-to-day living. The entire house will have heat/air conditioning, the water temperature will be normal, the lounge floor will be designated to hold a large crowd of people and there will be a state-of-the-art fire alarm system," Walker said.

Watson was also happy that the house would be renovated.

"I think the residents are very excited about the renovations. In fact, it was the residents who made the initial push for the house to finally have changes made," Watson said. "Several of Seventh Street House's current residents will still be at the University next year so they have an opportunity to apply to live in the newly renovated house. I think that they will opt to do so because they'll see the major changes that the house will undergo."

Walker, a BSG representative for the class of 2007, was concerned for the students' academic and social well-being.

"Students will be able to focus more on their courses, extracurricular activities, special interests and other things without the distractions I previously listed. The renovation will drastically enhance living conditions overall," Walker said. "Along with programming and high quality residents, Seventh Street House will finally become a 'home' once again."

In the late 1880s, the Seventh Street House was a fraternity house. Almost a century later in the 1980s, the house became the African American Studies house. In the late 1990s, the floor of the house caved in, forcing the University to seal off a portion of the basement.

"Residents as well as faculty, administrators and staff are excited about the renovations. Information about Seventh Street House renovations is spreading among the campus body. New renovations naturally bring interest to live in the house," Walker said.

Caruso M'66 speaks about entrepreneurship

By Michelle Laxer
News Editor

"Every person is born an entrepreneur," Richard Caruso M'66 said during his lecture on Monday.

Caruso gave a presentation entitled "Be the Entrepreneur of Your Life," held in the Elaine Langone Center Forum, co-sponsored by the Bucknell Business Leaders organization (BBL), the Office of Development and Alumni Relations, and the Career Development Center (CDC).

The focus of his talk was to share his motivational advice to gain success in an entrepreneurial venture.

Caruso began by explaining that the basis of many of his ideals and convictions come from the French verb, "entreprendre," which means to undertake an enterprise. Everyone has "the opportunity to undertake the enterprise of their own life," he said.

Caruso explained how his own alternative definition of success inspired him to create the two companies that earned him national recognition. He understood that for some people, success was measured financially or by the amount of power or influence obtained.

"It is individually defined personal happiness," he said.

It was not until achieving success after 20 years in a financial career that he realized he still did not have that sense of personal happiness he preached.

"I created a set of criteria for myself to make me personally successful," he said.

Caruso said he wanted to accomplish something that was intellectually challenging, unprecedented and beneficial to mankind.

This was the inspiration to launch both the Uncommon Individual Foundation (UIF) and Integra LifeSciences. The purpose of UIF is to help young entrepreneurs pursue their own dreams in hopes of achieving personal success. His other company, Integra, is one of the leading groups in regenerative medicine. Integra markets products for skin regeneration and nerve ending replacements.

When asked about how much luck was involved with his success and his achievements in entrepreneurship in general, Caruso said that strengths serve as a guide to personal success and fortunate circumstances are inevitably going to happen.

"If you are able to understand your core strengths and what makes you passionate, you will be able to go in the direction to pursue your dreams and invariably put yourself on the path to run into those accidents," he said.

Courtesy of Mary Ann Stanton

Richard Caruso M'66 accepts the 2007 Bucknell Business Leader award from Brett Irwin '08. Caruso spoke Monday about how to achieve success in the business field.

Caruso said that it is not always an easy road and he was no exception. He said an early mistake was when one of Integra's first products did not sell well on the market because uninsured patients could not afford the treatment. According to Caruso, hospitals were losing money and could not afford the product either. Integra had to switch its focus to satisfy the consumers and the market.

"I always got the idea that if we bring [a product] to market, the market will beat a path to our door," he said. "It never happened."

He encouraged students to protect their inalienable rights–life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness–by practicing them as much as possible.

"We are born into these rights, born into this environment, but we never use them," he said.

According to Caruso, following dreams and passions through entrepreneurship is a way to employ these inalienable rights. It is one person's pursuit of happiness, life and liberty. He urged students to enjoy their lives and to live them in accordance to what makes them happy.

At the end of Caruso's talk, Brett Irwin '08, president of BBL, presented Caruso with the 2007 Bucknell Business Leader of the Year award. He was chosen for his "entrepreneurship achievements and contributions to the community," Irwin said.

Students appreciated the lessons Caruso offered.

"I found it interesting to hear how he got there and to hear his experiences," David James '09 said. "It's not often you get to hear about it."

Other audience members took home valuable advice. "It is important to understand yourself, your strengths and what motivates you. Just use everything that you have to achieve your personal happiness," Nick Chin '09 said.

Chin also found Caruso's speech to be very inspiring.

"At one point in the lecture, I thought that I should stop studying what these classes at Bucknell are trying to teach me and just researching what I think will help me gain my success," he said.

During his stay at the University, Caruso also visited the entrepreneurship class taught by Mark Ciavarella, associate professor of management.

"He listened to students' business plans and gave them advice on their marketability," Ciavarella said.

Caruso was both the overall 2006 recipient of the Ernst & Young Entrepreneur of the Year award and the recipient of the award in the Health Sciences category. In May and June of this year, he will be competing for the Ernst & Young Entrepreneur of the World award.

"The awards program recognizes the significant contributions of business leaders and founders who build and sustain growing, dynamic businesses," a press release said. Caruso graduated from Susquehanna University in 1965 and received his master's degree from the University in 1966. He then went on to obtain his Ph.D. at the London School of Economics.

News Briefs

Alumni Relations and Career Services join forces

In her newly-appointed position as executive director of University Alumni Relations and Career Services, Laura Denbow took the initiative to combine two offices that are operated separately at most other colleges and universities, reported The Daily Item. As the executive director, Denbow will oversee the major alumni-based events of the year, such as Homecoming and Reunion weekends. She will also help students develop career paths and establish student and young-alumni programs.

"We're looking to build bridges and show students that Bucknell cares for them, while they are here and after they graduate," Denbow told The Daily Item.

She hopes that her role will re-emphasize career networking opportunities, mentoring and special events on and off campus. She hopes to help undergraduates take advantage of the networking opportunities that the University community offers them.

Alumna featured in newspaper

Jessica Jackley Flannery '00, keynote speaker for the Student Leadership Committee's "Inspiring Change" Conference, was highlighted in a column in the Pittsburgh Tribune-Review for co-founding Kiva.org, a business that provides micro-loans to entrepreneurs in poor countries. The lenders offer small loans to help entrepreneurs in poor countries build their businesses and improve their credit.

"Think of it more as being a venture humanist than venture capitalist," said the columnist Dimitri Vassilaros.

Flannery and her husband, Matt, co-founded Kiva.org in October 2005, inspired by Nobel Prize winner Dr. Muhammad Yunus and his Grameen Bank. Flannery and Kiva.org were recognized by the Nobel committee for their efforts.

Students escape burning house unharmed

Four students from Susquehanna University escaped their burning house unharmed on Sunday morning. According to The Daily Item, the house and most of the students' possessions were destroyed in the fire. The fire, which officials believed was caused by a woodburning stove, was reported shortly after 5 a.m. Sunday. The Selinsgrove ladder truck was the first to arrive and aid was provided by the Dauntless Hook and Ladder, Hummels Wharf and Shamokin Dam. The fire was put out by 5:52 a.m. with the attic and second floor receiving heavy fire damage. Scott Nagy, a senior at Susquehanna, told The Daily Item that "he was awakened by a smoke alarm and found his second story bedroom filled with smoke." There was $75,000 in damage to the house and an additional $5,000 damage to the contents inside the house. The property owner was insured for his loss.

Winner of Newbery Medal banned

This year's winner of the Newbery Medal, the most prestigious award in children's literature, has been banned in public libraries throughout the South, West, and Northeast because the word "scrotum" appears on the first page, reported The New York Times. In "The Higher Power of Lucky" by Susan Patron, the 10-year-old heroine's dog, Roy, is bitten by a rattlesnake on the scrotum. The ban has sparked the discussion of censorship in public and school libraries once again. According to the Times, the author was stunned by the objections and she explained that an integral part of the story was the maturing of the main character. She told the Times that learning about correct anatomical terminology was important to the character. Some teachers argued that they did not want to have to explain the vocabulary to their elementary-aged students. There were 100,000 copies printed after the book won the Newbery Medal and it was set to arrive in schools and libraries around Feb. 5.

$250 CASH
Sign on BONUS
Call for details
3 & 4 Bedroom Houses
CLOSE TO CAMPUS
WHIRLPOOL
WASHER / DRYER
DISHWASHER
STOVE & FRIG
Newly renovated houses available 2006/2007
570-524-5714 / 570-412-4831
or 570-524-5745 / 570-490-2922

The Bucknellian
Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue
Volume 139, Number 5
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu
http://www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Editor-in-Chief
Andrew Larson '08

Associate Editor of Content
Matt Saylor '08

Associate Editor of Layout
Lily Beauvilliers '09

Business Manager
Jared Napolitano '08

Senior Editor
Catie Heverling '07

News Editors
Evan Unger '09
Julia Fuchs '09
Michelle Laxer '09

Opinions Editors
Michael Dippery '08
Hallie Stebbins '08

Sports Editors
Barbara Perlman '09
Brian Mulligan '08
Shannon Pitsch '09

Features Editors
Nilanjana Saha '09
Brianna DelValle '10

Arts & Entertainment Editors
Janna Shapiro '08
Genna Jerrard '10

Photography Editors
Ryan Winn '08
Ellyn Ercolano '09

Chief Copy Editor
Molly Clay (grad)

Asst. Chief Copy Editor
Anna Juan '08

Advertising Managers
Meredith Reighard '07
Katie Casteel '08
Elaine Teag '09

Office Manager
Kate Wood '07

Circulation Manager
Adam Kahler '07

Subscriptions Manager
John Ostrow '09

Cartoonist
Juliana Su '09

Adviser
James F. Lee

Op-Ed Policy

The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editor-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 600 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

Publishing Information

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

Subscription Information

Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Bucknell University, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print office.

Advertising Policy

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577-1085. Copyright © 2007 The Bucknellian

The Bucknellian
EDITORIAL
Don't skimp on Psych Services funding

As the University doles out money towards creature comforts such as the West Fields sports complex, renovations to Swartz Hall and the Seventh Street House, and a massive new administrative building, it's important to consider whether one of students' most basic needs is being adequately met: their mental health.

College may be one of the most stressful times in a person's life. It's a time when adult and teenage pressures collide, with job searches pulling students out of the college world, and friends, clubs, teams and social lives reeling them back in. There are long days of school work, long nights of homework and for many, there's a part-time job squeezed in between. Sometimes the days are barely long enough to find time to eat and sleep.

No one can change the nature of being a college student. But there's an office on campus dedicated to helping students survive it: Psychological Services, located in the Lowry House on University Avenue.

Unfortunately, after nearly a decade of operating with a threadbare budget and sparse staffing, Psychological Services is struggling to meet increasing student demand. It's not uncommon for a student seeking counseling to wait up to a week for an appointment.

One female student who was referred to Psychological Services for an eating disorder had to wait more than a week to get help. That's unacceptable.

Students utilize Psychological Services for a number of reasons, with varying degrees of severity. Some need help managing their time, others have life-threatening disorders. But either way, if students feel snubbed by Psychological Services' scheduling intricacies, they're less likely to pursue the help they likely need.

Often admitting or acknowledging the need for help is the most difficult step. If students who take the first step aren't met with an open hand, they may end up trying to conceal and mask their feelings.

Making students wait a week for an appointment sends a message that their concerns are insignificant or trivial. That's the worst signal to send a person seeking out help, and it could be enough to discourage him or her from ever returning again.

The truth of the matter is that college students aren't going to stop needing psychological counseling. The surge in the demand for counseling isn't just going to diminish any time soon.

Psychological Services needs adequate funding. In addition to focusing on ways to bolster the school's stature and launch brave new initiatives, the spendthrifts who manage the University's coffers ought to slow down and take a look at one office that's struggling to stay afloat as it is.

We can surround ourselves with big beautiful buildings and shiny new dorms but it's all a pathetic show unless we're capable of enjoying them.

Letters to the Editor

BU radio station rebuffs questionable content

To the Editor:

I am writing in response to the Feb. 16 editorial "Radio station accountable for content" on WVBU's content policies.

As station manager, I would first like to clarify that the radio station has not been contacted by the Federal Communications Commission in regard to any fines or complaints. The editorial mentioned that a weekend show in question crossed the line into the realm of "patently offensive" or "obscene." The material in question does not meet the Federal Communications Commission's definition of obscene. The station is also not facing legal action.

Second, WVBU has established policies on content and behavior that can be found in the constitution available on our Web site www.wvbu.com, and we monitor shows to make sure DJs are adhering to these guidelines.

We do not want questionable material broadcasted because we do not want to present a bad image of the station or the University. We want to appeal to our listeners. These goals must be balanced with WVBU's desire to give DJs a certain amount of freedom to play music which appeals to their audience. As a result, we had Safe Harbor which allows DJs to play songs with curse words in them; it does not give DJs themselves the freedom to curse or talk about inappropriate topics.

The WVBU Board is currently reviewing our constitution and requiring that all DJs attend Show Content Training to ensure that DJs understand the need for discretion and individual responsibility on their shows.

I encourage every listener to contact me or any board member with questions or concerns about the content of a show.

Sincerely,

Lisa Podolsky '10
WVBU Station Manager

University lacks close relations with alumni

To the Editor:

Last week I was driving up Rt. 15 and stopped at the Union for a brief rest. I picked up The Bucknellian and was intrigued with the Feb. 9 editorial ("Alumni relationships key to endowment"). I am an alumnus (1978) who admittedly gives very little to Bucknell, but I work for an institution that is among the leaders in the nation in alumni giving.

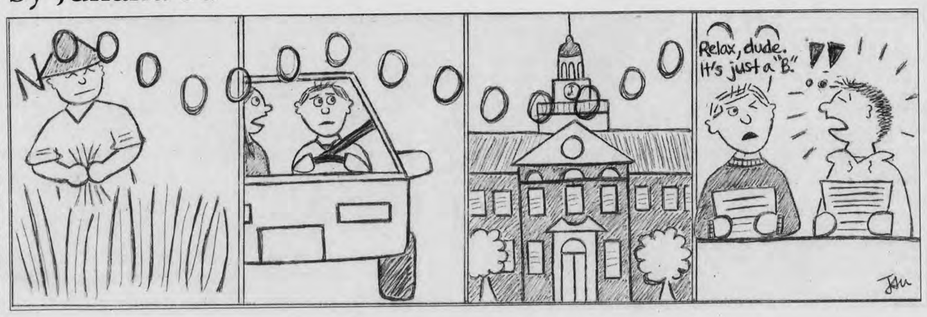
From my perspective, the biggest difference between the two institutions is that Cornell capitalizes on personal relationships that develop between students and faculty, whereas Bucknell does not do this effectively.

I am chairman of a large department, and spend a portion of my time corresponding with alumni, writing a semi-annual alumni newsletter, nurturing relationships with former students, and organizing an occasional open house or retirement party to which alumni are invited. In the nearly 30 years since I've graduated, only once did I ever receive a department newsletter from Bucknell or an invitation to a department open house. I would be much more inclined to give to a specific cause at the request of a former professor or department chairman than donate to general operating funds or endowment.

There are alumni who feel a strong affection for Bucknell, and the University does a good job reaching out to those individuals. But I believe that there is a large number of potential donors who were most strongly connected to departments and individual faculty, and the generic approach to giving that characterizes Bucknell fails to engage. Reaching out to these alumni could help departments and programs gain some financial flexibility, and might, in the longer term, increase endowment.

Sincerely,
Marvin Pritts
Professor and Chairman of Horticulture,
Cornell University

Currently Untitled
by Juliana Su



Obsession with cosmetic surgery violates doctors' oath

Americans should look beyond superficial standards of beauty

By Lauren Berninger
Writer

Reconstructive plastic surgery has done remarkable things for people seriously affected by trauma and tragedy. From burn victims to survivors of severe accidents, this type of surgery has helped to alleviate horrible scarring and deformities left behind by injuries. But in America today, cosmetic plastic surgery is becoming increasingly popular, not because more people are left mangled by horrific tragedies, but because these aesthetic procedures are becoming more widely accepted.

In 2005, there were 11.5 million cosmetic medical procedures performed in the United States, according to the American Society for Aesthetic Plastic Surgery (ASAPS). Of these procedures, 2.1 million or 19 percent were surgical—a 119 percent increase since 1997, according to ASAPS.

To further illustrate America's obsession with cosmetic surgery, ASAPS estimates $12.4 billion was spent on cosmetic procedures in 2005 alone.

The growing trend in cosmetic plastic surgery represents a serious moral dilemma in the United States. First of all, it seriously undermines the medical profession. Physicians take an oath to do no harm. Performing surgeries on healthy individuals simply to enhance their visual appearance violates this oath. With all medical procedures, cosmetic or not, there are serious risks and the recoveries are often very painful. Exposing healthy patients to serious risks and pain is not a moral medical decision.

While the things plastic surgery can do are undoubtedly amazing, the field should focus its abilities on reconstructive surgery for the people who really need it.

In addition, when much of the world has no access to medical care at all, it is almost sickening to watch doctors perform these unneeded procedures. The medical profession is supposed to reach out to those in need, not to those who are striving for "beauty." Perhaps the latter would be better served by a talented beautician.

Furthermore, television shows today such as "Nip/Tuck," "Extreme Makeover," and "Dr. 90210" only reinforce this new fixation on plastic surgery. They send the message that plastic surgery can change a person's life for the better.

Instead, people should be focusing on their lives and not their appearance. Our world would be much improved if people were not so hung up on what they do not like about themselves. A decrease in media attention on the subject and a shift toward unveiling the risks instead of the results could put a stop to this growing trend.

"People should focus more on their education and their careers. After all, looks aren't going to get you a job—or at least probably not a job that really matters," Natalie Cubbon '08 said.

Plastic surgery is undoubtedly capable of amazing things, but the field should focus its abilities on reconstructive surgery for the people who really need it and seriously reconsider the number of procedures for minor imperfections. Medicine is a serious field, and in a world plagued by injury and disease, cosmetic surgery does not deserve a place in science.

Risks of Prince Harry serving in Iraq outweigh possible benefits

By Christy Totten
Staff Writer

Twenty-two year old Prince Harry, a 2006 graduate of the Royal Military Academy Sandhurst, will likely be serving in Iraq by the end of February. According to Yahoo! News, Harry is following a royal tradition that began with his grandfather Prince Philip, who served in the Royal Navy. His father, Charles, was a pilot with the Royal Air Force and Royal Navy. His uncle, Prince Andrew, was a Royal Navy Pilot and also served in the Falklands War against Argentina 25 years ago. Prince William, his brother, has trained as a troop leader with the Blues and Royals, but is kept from deployment to war zones due to his status as second-in-line to the throne.

Granting the go-ahead for Harry has been greatly influenced by this royal tradition of servitude to one's country, I find this justification to be hasty. In the 25 years that passed since the last Windsor served his country overseas, times have changed. A new era of war strategy was literally and symbolically enacted against the United States on Sept. 11, 2001, when Al-Qaeda executed a massive terrorist attack that killed thousands of innocent people.

Of the Windsor men who have served their country, only Prince Andrew participated in something similar to what Harry will find himself doing. According to Time Magazine, Andrew described this time in his life as "exciting and nerve-wracking," and modern warfare 25 years ago as "99 percent boring, routine, intense and repetitive, and then 1 percent terror and frenetic activity when an attack came in."

From the daily news on insurgent bombings and attacks that we hear in the United States, I am assuming that the level of alertness and fear for modern soldiers stationed in these war zones is significantly higher than what Andrew describes. Andrew also went on to say that "the speed of attack [25 years ago] was so much faster than in previous campaigns."

Think about how much technology has improved in the last 25 years. With great knowledge and accomplishments come greater responsibilities, a notion that can have grave consequences when applied to warfare.

According to reports from The Telegraph, Harry has made it clear that he does not wish to receive special treatment, even threatening to quit the army if he is held back from fighting with his men. Harry will be troop commander with the Blues and Royals, in charge of 11 men and four tanks. The job of this reconnaissance formation will be to patrol the Iraq-Iran border. The mission and the entire war are very different from any other in which the royal family has been involved.

According to CNN.com, Harry's fellow soldiers have affectionately referred to him as a "bullet magnet," a term with a scary amount of potential truth behind it. Another truth of the matter is that if Harry is a bullet magnet, that puts his entire group of soldiers in imminent danger as well. I can understand that Harry wants to serve his country and continue the family tradition, but the risks are much higher than they were in the past.

The F Word

On the rise in birth control prices

By Lenore R. Flower
Contributing Writer

For decades, college women have been shouldering birth control costs on their own, including the economic toll, the physical risk and the emotional rollercoaster that may come from bombarding the body with hormones. Recently, news reports have shown that birth control methods may be less effective than they were 40 years ago. According to abc13.com, those pills that once allowed for less than one pregnancy per 100 women now, in some cases, allow for more than two.

Despite their slipping effectiveness, the number of women in need of subsidized birth control is still on the rise, as is the price of birth control itself. According to Slate.com, clinics that were once able to provide birth control packs for a few pennies to underprivileged women now have no choice but to offer generics at more than $18 per month.

Many of the previously inexpensive birth control options available at the University's Student Health Services will also rise significantly in the fall semester. The companies that originally charged as little as $5 per month for the birth control they provided to Student Health Services seemed to recognize a profitable opportunity similar to what they observed in America's chronically under-funded health clinics.

Even more shocking than these "robber-baron tactics" are the number of health insurance companies that no longer cover birth control. Yet those lovely Viagra pills often remain well-insured. The fact that many health insurance companies do not cover a basic necessity such as birth control is insane. Anyone with an understanding of mathematics will realize that increasing the total amount of sperm without also protecting the eggs is going to have unfortunate consequences.

It is entirely unconscionable for the executive of any health insurance company to choose to cover Viagra and not birth control. In the interest of not demonizing such individuals, I choose to believe they are too distracted by their own erectile dysfunction to recognize the significance of such an error.

According to James Reed, an insurance company consultant quoted on PBS.org, many employers select health insurance plans for their workers that do not include birth control under the assumption that "these drugs cost $21 to $32 locally per month. I mean, that's the cost of a movie and a dinner out once a month. It's a small amount of money to pay."

Perhaps for some, $32 a month is an insignificant amount of money, but there are many American women—especially young women—for whom $32 a month is needed for rent or groceries. In a capitalist society where money is power, forcing women to pay for a health necessity that affects both genders makes that $32 price tag seem exceptionally expensive.

The state of Illinois has already passed laws requiring health insurance companies to provide birth control coverage. If action is not taken in other states to ensure that both health clinics and health insurance companies provide birth control options at prices affordable for everyone, more women will inevitably use less expensive and less effective means to avoid conception. The result of an increase in women using less effective birth control methods will inevitably be a rise in unwanted pregnancies. That is a price our society cannot afford to pay.

"Freedom of the press,
if it means anything at all,
means the freedom to criticize and oppose."

- Eric Arthur Blair

Write for Ops.
E-mail mdippery@

SPOILER ALERT!

By Matt Saylor
Associate Editor of Content

"Lost" — The next three episodes will focus on many of this year's less involved characters. Hurley will take center stage on Wednesday in the episode "Tricia Tanaka is Dead." Everyone's favorite Middle-Eastern soldier, Sayid, will be the focus on March 7. Look for episodes about Claire, Locke and Nikki and Paulo (there has to be some reason for the two of them, doesn't there?) throughout March.

There will still be plenty of information about Jack as well as Juliet, Ben and all of your favorite "Others" as the show works its way back to the original island.

"24" — So now that Jack is working with former President Logan, is the world really going to come to an end? What roll will Reed Pollock have on the show and how will it affect Tom Lennox? Is President Palmer in danger? If so, who will save him? What role will Vice President Daniels play in all of this? Is Morris drinking again because he feels guilty or because there are too many questions like these that need answers? Stay tuned to find out.

"Scrubs" — Time for the latest hint on the inevitable death of one of the show's beloved characters. The character worked at the hospital before the arrival of J.D., Eliot and Turk. Look for the character's fate to be decided at the end of March or the beginning of April.

The "Scrubs" episode scheduled to air on March 1 will have the staff of Sacred Heart reliving some old memories, while the following week will look at the future of patient Private Dancer.

Schedule Changes — NBC's much-maligned "Studio 60 on the Sunset Strip" is now on hiatus, airing its last scheduled episode on Monday. "The Black Donnellys" (from the producers of the Academy Award-winning "Crash") will take its place beginning Monday, Feb. 26. There is no word on when or if "Studio 60" will return.

ABC's "Lost" has gotten off to a slow start in its new 10 p.m. times lot on Wednesday. The episode that aired on Feb. 14 received the lowest ratings of the 50-plus episodes of the series, drawing in less than 13 million viewers.

NBC is moving "Crossing Jordan" from Sunday nights to Wednesdays at 9 p.m., where it will face off against favorites "American Idol" on FOX and "Criminal Minds" on CBS. It is believed that this could be the last year for the drama, and placing it against competition this stiff will not help its cause. "Deal or No Deal" will move to Sunday at 9 p.m. and "The Apprentice: Los Angeles" will now start at 10 p.m.

With the sweeps period ending on Feb. 27, many shows will be airing reruns over the next few weeks, including "The Office," "Grey's Anatomy" and "E.R." Take this as an opportunity to catch up on episodes that you missed or explore new shows that you may not have seen. For example, if you have seen every episode of "Grey's Anatomy" so far, tune into "Scrubs" or "30 Rock" from 9 to 10 p.m. on Thursdays. Most shows will begin to air new episodes again around the end of March, but be sure to check out network Web sites for varying return dates.

McPhee's CD lacks originality

By Liz Stein
Contributing Writer

❖ CD Review

Courtesy of amazon.com

Katharine McPhee, the American Idol contestant whose warm personality and heartfelt vocals won her the support of millions of fans in 2006, has finally released her debut album. Though some of the songs may be lacking in originality, McPhee's confident and tender vocals gives her star staying power.

Katharine McPhee, commonly referred to as "that girl from American Idol," released her self-titled debut album by RCA records on Jan. 30. The album is currently at No. 11 and in its second week on the Billboard 200; it debuted at No. 2, behind Norah Jones' third album, "Not Too Late." "Katharine McPhee" sold 116,000 copies in its first week.

Twenty-two-year-old McPhee, who was the runner-up to Taylor Hicks on the fifth season of "American Idol" in 2006, first wowed audiences with her heart-felt rendition of "Somewhere Over the Rainbow." The song peaked at No. 12 on the Billboard Hot 100.

This year, the artist continues to impress listeners with her powerful voice and musical talent in her freshman album, which contains 12 original songs, three of which she co-wrote. Though the record lacks guest artists, contributing writers and producers include Babyface, Kara Dioguardi, The Underdogs and Nate "Danja" Hills, who has co-produced hits such as "Promiscuous," by Nelly Furtado and "SexyBack," by Justin Timberlake.

The album can best be described as rhythm pop, bearing resemblance to fellow American Idol alumna Kelly Clarkson. The record begins with "Love Story," rumored to be the second single. The upbeat tune has a baseline reminiscent of Amerie's "One Thing."

The second track on the album is the first single, "Over It." Though it is sung well and highlights McPhee's ability to harmonize, it lacks originality, like most of the other tracks on the album. The lyrics are typical, with the hook, "Moving on, and it's my time/You never were a friend of mine/Hurt at first, little bit/And now I'm so over,/So over it/I'm so over it," doing little to express any true feelings that her listeners could relate to.

"A lot of people will be able to relate to this song. This is really the only pure pop song on the record, so I thought it would be a good first single," McPhee said in her AOL Music interview. Sure about that? The song sounds remarkably like the last track on the album, "Everywhere I Go," with lyrics that equally lack profoundness and repeat her "broken-heart" theme.

The next two songs, "Open Toes," and "Home," are well-situated on the play list, located in between "Over It" and "Not Ur Girl." The fifth song, co-written by McPhee, has a lyrical melody that could easily attract an audience of eighth graders. This is followed by "Each Other," a song that showcases the artist's range and ability to diversify her musical articulation. The song has a slower tempo and a fluid tonality.

"Dangerous," the seventh track, is produced in a more pop-hip-hop style, with a beat that is similar to Outkast's "Hey Ya." "Ordinary World," and "Do What You Do" follow the latter produced by The Underdogs and "Better Off Alone," my favorite track on the CD, comes next. The song's piano accompaniment strongly resembles an Alicia Keys' piece while McPhee's powerful vocals are reminiscent of R&B singer Vivian Green. Make sure you have this one on hand after a break-up, because you'll definitely want to sing along to the empowering lyrics.

The album ends with "Neglected," a song in which the irritating melody will make you want to skip over it to the last track written and produced by Babyface, "Everywhere I Go."

Though the album has several iPod-worthy songs, I'll be eagerly waiting her sophomore album, in hopes of a more profound message and the possibility of a move toward originality, a quality that is hard to find in the pop music world today.

Nonetheless, I applaud the young artist on her accomplishments. If you enjoy listening to Kelly Clarkson, you'll probably want to purchase this album. Overall, I give it a B.

Do you read books?
Watch movies?
Listen to music?
Write for A&E!
e-mail jshapiro@

Janet Weis cabaret jazz series
Wednesday, February 28, 2007
8:00 p.m. – Free
The Natalie Davis Rooke Recital Hall
in the Sigfried Weis Music Building a cabaret festival performance by STEVE RUDOLPH, piano with Steve Measheу, bass and Phil Haynes, drums
and special guests
Charlie Young, saxophone;
Amy Banks and
Jamie Broumas, vocals
Don't miss ...
Wednesday, March 28
Acclaimed pop-jazz vocalist
Ann Hampton Callaway
The Janet Weis Cabaret Jazz Series is made possible by funding from the Weis family with additional support from the Degenstein Foundation.
Bucknell

SUMMER IN MAINE
Males and Females.
Meet new friends! Travel!
Teach your favorite activity.
*Tennis *Swim
*Canoe *Sail
*Water Ski *Kayak
*Gymnastics *Archery
*Silver Jewelry *Rocks
*English Riding *Ropes
*Copper Enameling *Art
*Basketball *Pottery
*Field Hockey *Office
*And More!
June to August. Residential.
Enjoy our website. Apply online.
TRIPP LAKE CAMP for Girls:
1-800-997-4347
www.tripplakecamp.com

Nancy's Nu-Wave Salon
look your best
Wax Specials
Eye Brows $7
Upper Lip $5
Bikini $25
Brazilian $35
Full Legs $35
Knees Down $15
Under Arms $15
Back $25
Main Street (Rte 45) Montandon
524-2315
www.nancysnuwave.com

Guitar Center
The Musician's Choice
5082 Jonestown Rd.
Harrisburg, PA 17112
717-652-7399
Shipping Available!
BRING IN THIS COUPON AND SAVE!
10% OFF!
THE BEST GEAR
THE BEST DEALS!
* some restrictions apply, see store for details

CatmanDo
Handyman Services
Specializing in small home repair jobs:
Custom Carpentry
Painting
Light construction
Greg H Mathias
570-524-4724
Free Estimates Fully insured

ASPIRE HIGHER THIS SUMMER
HTTP://SUMMERSCHOOL.GEORGETOWN.EDU

summer at georgetown university
Get ahead by enrolling in Summer School 2007 at Georgetown University.
Choose from over 300 courses and learn from the world's foremost faculty. Network and enjoy exclusive Washington access available only to Georgetown University students.
You've had enough ordinary summer breaks.
This year, aspire higher.
Enroll in Summer School 2007 at Georgetown University. Visit summerschool.georgetown.edu or call 202.687.8700

'The Firebugs' burns brightly

By Mandy Hart
Contributing Writer

❖ Play Review

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Directed by Jon Ginn '07 and designed by fellow senior Christopher North, "Firebugs" held its opening night at the University last Friday in the Tustin Studio Theatre. Both students used the play to complete their honors theses for the University's theater department.

The theatre and dance department's production of Max Frisch's "The Firebugs" was a blazing success this past weekend. Director Jon Ginn '07 and designer Chris North '07 displayed their exemplary talents for a packed house last Monday in the Tustin Studio Theatre for the final performance of the show.

The performance is part of an Individual Projects class (THEA 319), which will serve as both Ginn and North's honors theses.

A political satire about the Nazi rise to power during the 1930s, the play is about the con artists (firebugs) who symbolize Nazi figureheads. The firebugs' ease in convincing the main character, Gottlieb Biedermann, that they are worthy of his trust and friendship suggests interesting historical parallels.

"Firebugs" follows the life of hair-tonic salesman Gottlieb Biedermann (Andy Nogasky '07), the hero of this neo-Greek tragedy, through an exploration of fate, trust and humanity. Nogasky captivated audience members with his character's story of self-defeat. The audience was aware of his ironic situation early in the story through the help of an omniscient chorus of firemen.

Despite an earlier rant about his hatred for con artists, such as the sought-after firebugs, Biedermann allows a poor, homeless man named Joe Schmitz (Will Winner '08) to sleep in his attic. Biedermann also houses Schmitz's friend Willi Eisenring (Janine Merolla '08) to prove his own humanity. Schmitz and Willi plan to burn down Biedermann's house as Biedermann searches for benevolence in himself. The constant duality of premeditated crime versus the circumstances of fate echo in Schmitz's "God's will" tattoo.

Biedermann's eagerness to prove his humanity and kindness is exacerbated by the suicide of an employee that he fired. His wife, Babette (Reanna Trunk '07) is too kind-hearted, forcing further frustration in Biedermann's quest. Biedermann ignores the chorus of firemen who assault him with the glaring truth that he is housing firebugs. He retorts and accuses them of "hopeless pessimism."

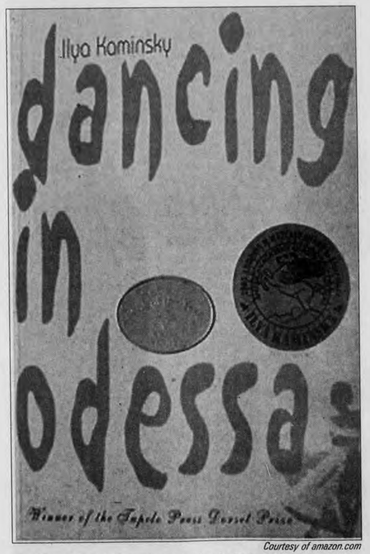
Despite its dramatic themes, the play is not without humor. The audience broke into bouts of laughter as the hero comically displayed his tragic flaw. Willi's whistling of Billy Joel's "We Didn't Start the Fire" in the second-act opener was one such example. Ginn's balance of humor with deep thematic statements allow the audience to appreciate the seriousness of the character's strife while preserving a satirical approach. His direction resulted in some symbolic exploration of themes: members of the chorus dropped their helmets to their peers in hopelessness of any action and the leader of the chorus (Alan Johnson-McNutt '08) smoked a pipe throughout the play.

Willi shows the audience that the "unvarnished truth" is a better hoodwinking device than any form of deception. The political implications can be seen in our generation as well. The main character ignores his instinctive suspicions in favor of fear and disbelief of the glaring truth.

Biedermann, aware of his deteriorating sanity, addresses the audience directly: "What would you have done, and when?" This question is particularly relevant in drawing the Nazi Germany comparison. Indecision, rationalization and fear of action lead to disaster for all participants.

Audience members are left at the close of the play with the realization that for these characters, hell has literally moved to earth. The warning at the opening of the play rings in one's ears: "Bestow not the name of Fate upon man's mistakes."

Poetry Captures beauty in life's pain



Courtesy of amazon.com

Ilya Kaminsky's first book, "Dancing in Odessa," reveals a moving, tragic and utterly unforgettable poetic style that is wonderfully brought to life by this young poet. Often dealing with horrific and painful events, Kaminsky still manages to retain an overall uplifting message in his poetry.

By Catherine Heverling
Senior Editor

Russian-American poet Ilya Kaminsky approached the podium clutching a brown bag at Sunday's Drew Darrow Memorial Reading at Bucknell Hall.

Before opening his book to begin reading, Kaminsky distributed copies of his book, "Dancing in Odessa," which, among other accolades, was named Best Poetry Book of the Year by ForeWard magazine in 2004. This allowed Kaminsky to speak in his natural manner—impassionate and almost ecstatic. It also encouraged an intimate setting for listeners to collectively experience his poetry by sharing books with those sitting beside them. The poet began his reading with the poem "In Praise of Laughter," a piece in which Kaminsky writes about his Aunt Rose and the people of his hometown, Odessa. But the poem does not consist of pure nostalgia as it contrasts memories of joy with dark images of suffering.

"She spoke the speech of poplar trees—/her ears trembling as she spoke, my Aunt Rose/ composed odes to barbershops, drugstores," Kaminsky writes. "[My grandfather] ran after a train with tomatoes in his coat/and danced naked on the table in front of our house—/he was shot, and my grandmother raped."

Kaminsky seems to have a personal understanding for the realistic and necessary commingling of happiness and pain.

"People make jokes at funerals ... and that's what poets do," he said Monday afternoon when he spoke to young writers in the writing center.

Most of the poems from "Dancing in Odessa" carry this common mixture of celebration and nostalgia. In the book's title poem, Kaminsky seems to recognize his personal need to somehow return to Odessa.

"I retell the story the light etches/into my hand: Little book, go to the city without me," Kaminsky writes.

During Monday's "Writers at Work" session, Kaminsky also discussed the element of elegy in his poetry.

"The voices live inside my body and they make my lips move ... That's why I write and that's why it's ecstatic reading," he said.

But these are not the only types of poems Kaminsky writes. He also read selections from "Natalia," which he called a "love poem." While he only read from the main text, the poem also contained secondary narration in the bottom margin of the page.

"She left her slippers in my shower, in my Torah," Kaminsky read. "Her slippers in each sentence I spoke."

For those who chose to read it, the additional prose narration provided insight into the speaker's thoughts.

"I am going to stop this, I am going to stop quoting poems in my mind. She liked that," he writes.

Kaminsky's writing is free of cliché, something he emphasized when giving advice to students.

"If you break through the obvious, you are forced to see the world in a new way ... that's what poetry does," he said.

Kaminsky does this again in "Marina Tsvetaeva." The poet, who later in life experienced some hearing loss, has a gift for peppering his work with original sensory comparisons that create almost a synesthesia in his poetry.

"During the first year of my deafness, I saw her with a man ... And she began to sing," Kaminsky writes. " I imagined her voice smelling of oranges."

The originality and authenticity of Kaminsky's poetry has not gone unnoticed. Deidre O'Connor, co-director of the writing program and writing center, who read Kaminsky's Bucknell Seminar for Younger Poets application a decade ago, remembers being struck by his writing.

"He is one of the most impressive young poets ... This was true ten years ago," O'Connor said.

Since then, Kaminsky, who now teaches in the graduate writing program at San Diego State University, has gone on to collect awards including the Whiting Writer's Award, the American Academy of Arts and Letters' Metcalf Award, the Dorset Prize and the Ruth Lilly Fellowship given annually by Poetry magazine.

But Kaminsky's success seems to have been achieved by approaching poetry in the simplest terms.

During his talk Monday afternoon, Kaminsky boiled the process of writing good poetry down for students.

"When you find a moment, put it on the page. Preserve that moment and glue those moments together ... Do something you love and you'll find poetry," he said.

If you missed the reading, but would like to read and listen to Ilya Kaminsky's work, visit http://fishousepoems.org/archives/ilya_kaminsky.

ANOTHER BUBBLE FAV

By Ana Fullmer
Contributing Writer

For all you "Bubbie-nellians" who have been sleeping under a rock or on a beanbag in the library, Britney Spears has shaved her head! According to People.com, at around 7 p.m. last Friday evening, the pop singer walked into Esther's Haircutting Studio in Tarzan, Calif. and requested that one of the stylists shave her bald. When the stylist refused to do so, Britney did it herself, then turned and smiled for the paparazzi outside.

Many have blamed this stunt on the star's recent hard partying and some have even suggested that Brit has been doing drugs such as ecstasy. Shortly after this story broke, the salon put Britney's shaved-off hair, cigarette lighter and empty can of Red Bull up for sale on eBay. Since then the auction site has removed the items. The owners of the salon have set up a Web site, buybritneyshair.com, where any interested collector can purchase these items for a minimum bid of $1 million.

Gross! Why would I pay $1 million dollars when I could get crabs and herpes for free on any given Saturday night?

Anyway, this recent cry for help did not slow Britney down. According to PerezHilton.com, both of Britney's parents flew to Los Angeles to intervene, but the pop singer ignored their pleas and showed up at West Hollywood's Mondrian Hotel on Sunset Boulevard wearing a blue wig. The hotel staff was reportedly at a loss for what to do when the incoherent star attempted to get a room with no money, identification or credit card. Some tourists felt sorry for her and let her stay with them and bought her a bikini at the gift shop. Spears was photographed later that night smoking and partying.

Another girl who doesn't let what others perceive as "problems" bring her down is our favorite comeback kid—Lindsay Lohan! The young actress, who was released from rehab on Friday, was photographed all over the Los Angeles club circuit during the weekend. She must be completely rehabilitated from drugs and alcohol if she can party like that!

In baby news, Bridget Moynahan, the "stick figure with no soul" from HBO's famed "Sex and the City" is three months pregnant with New England Patriots quarterback Tom Brady's baby. The only problem is that the pro athlete has already broken up with Moynahan and has been dating supermodel Gisele Bündchen for at least the past two months. What a soap opera!

Being a future deadbeat dad seems to be a trend in Hollywood these days. "The Nutty Professor" star, Eddie Murphy, has impregnated Britain's Melanie Brown aka Mel B, or Scary Spice, of the '90s pop group the Spice Girls. According to TMZ.com, when questioned if Murphy was happy about Mel B's pregnancy, he said, "You're being presumptuous because we're not together anymore. And I don't know whose child that is until it comes out and has a blood test. You shouldn't jump to conclusions, sir."

Well, with Scary Spice about to burst, it won't be long before everyone will know whether Murphy is the father of lucky number seven. The condom lady obviously never spoke to his freshman hall. Not all daddies are pathetic cads though.

Brad Pitt, America's favorite father of three, has a hot spread in the new issue of Interview Magazine. He is still smoldering and in his 40s. Of late, Pitt has also been photographed with Angelina Jolie and their children. They look like one of the most beautiful and happy families around.

Publicity for the Australian leg of Beyoncé's latest tour has been causing quite a stir Down Under. Some posters featuring the pop star smoking a cigarette out of a long old-fashioned holder have angered people who believe that the images will encourage young girls to pick up smoking. Dlisted.com reports that a representative from the Queensland Cancer Fund said, "Young women in particular are influenced by what they see in the media. So it doesn't help that they are regularly exposed to images such as celebrities smoking. With young women, image issues usually win out over health issues and it can actually be a prompt for them to start smoking."

The representative is probably right. I mean, who doesn't want to smoke themselves into bad red-carpet-pose oblivion like Beyoncé. Let the transformation begin!

DOES YOUR CAR NEED SERVICED?
Our Service Department has $25,000 in new upgrades, including a new alignment rack, brake lathe, tire machine, and hundreds of hours of training for the techs. We now offer shuttle service to and from work or home. We have become a complete service center that can perform any work on any model, from an oil change to engine replacement.
Lewisburg Ford
Oil Change
w/Multi-Point Inspection
$19.95 Excludes Diesels. Must present coupon at time of service. Expires 12/31/06
Lewisburg Ford
Oil Change/Tire Rotation
w/Multi-Point Inspection
$34.95 Must present coupon at time of service. Expires 12/31/06
Lewisburg Ford
2265 Old Turnpike Rd.
(Route 45 West)
Across From Brookpark Farm
Call Today! (570) 524-7267
Visit us on the web at www.lewisburgford.com

Fairy tale or night terror?

Pan's Labyrinth

By Caitlin Kinger
Contributing Writer

❖ Movie Review

"Pan's Labyrinth" presents the modern story of a young girl who uses fairytales as an escape from the darkness of her tragic life.

Director Guillermo Del Toro perfectly crafts an adult fairytale set against the backdrop of the Spanish Civil War. He seamlessly integrates the real world and the underworld. Del Toro creates a living, breathing world, where the conflict between the Spanish Captain Vidal's (Sergi López) officers and the rebels, and a world where fairies and other magical creatures coexist.

The film has garnered much acclaim. It is nominated for the Golden Palm at this year's Cannes Film Festival. On Sunday, it will be up for six Academy Awards for Art Direction, Cinematography, Makeup, Original Score, Foreign Language Film and Original Screenplay.

Despite "Pan's Labyrinth's" subject matter and a child protagonist, the film is definitely not for kids. The violence, while not overly gory, is very unsettling due to the graphic realism. Also, be forewarned, "Pan's Labyrinth" was filmed in Spanish, so be prepared to read subtitles. But for those of you that bring your spectacles and can bear the violence, don't pass this film up! "Pan's Labyrinth" is one of the best films to be released in the past year.

An imposing voiceover in the opening scene establishes the elements of the movie. The film begins by introducing Princess Moanna of the underground realm who escapes to the human world. Blinded by blue skies and sunshine, she loses her memory and suffers from sickness and pain, symptoms that don't exist in the underworld. She dies, and the King (Federico Luppi) foresees that the Princess' soul would be reincarnated. He promised he would "wait for her, until he drew his last breath, until the world stopped turning."

The movie cuts to 1944 rural Spain. Ofelia, (Ivana Baquero), the protagonist of the story, is traveling with her pregnant mother to be with her stepfather, Captain Vidal. The Captain, a sadistic man whom Ofelia refuses to accept as her father, is stationed at a mill to eradicate the rebels in the area. Her mother falls ill and orders the driver to stop on the side of the road. This decision is pivotal in the storyline.

Ofelia finds a totem stone on the side of the road and fixes a missing piece. A praying mantis-like creature emerges from the stone.

The creature found Ofelia to a mill. It attempts to lead her back into the forest, where she finds an ancient stone labyrinth. Though Mercedes (Maribel Verdú), one of the captain's maids, stops her from entering the labyrinth, the creature returns to her and reveals itself as a fairy, a resident of the underworld.

The fairy later takes Ofelia back to the labyrinth where she meets a faun—a large, goat-like creature who claims to be her servant. The creature tells her that she is the reincarnated Princess Moanna from the fairytale. Her actual father, the king of the underworld, opened many portals on Earth to allow for her return, and the labyrinth is the last one. This revelation explains Ofelia's feeling of displacement in the "real world."

Before she can return to the underworld, she must prove herself by completing three tasks. The faun hands her the "Book of Crossroads," while the pages usually contain information on the tasks at hand, they are sometimes omniscient of her future.

This gothic fairytale is host to many monstrous creatures, including an oversized frog that hinders a tree's growth and a mandrake root that can help Ofelia's mother's sickness. The most frightening creature is the "Pale Man," a grotesque creature with saggy skin and no eyes. Piles of children's bones and monstrous paintings in the character's lair add to his chilling quality.

The captain is the "real world" villain of the story. In a political statement, the film suggests that real-life ruthlessness is just as frightening as a character like the child-murdering "Pale Man."

In one instance of the captain's wickedness, his officers find a father and son in the forest, believing them to be part of the rebels' militia. When the father claims that he was merely hunting rabbits, the captain refuses to believe him. The captain relentlessly smashes a bottle in the son's face and shoots the father multiple times at close range when the son moves to defend his father. Only after both are dead do the officers find the rabbits in the father's bag.

The acting in "Pan's Labyrinth" is superb. The young Ivana Baquero behaves like a veteran actress, successfully bringing to the screen the innocence of a child in a bleak period of history. Sergi López depicts Captain Vidal as a genuinely hateful and feared character. "Pan's Labyrinth" is a thought-provoking political allegory. The stunning art direction and cinematography of this fantasy-drama-thriller-horror is sure to leave you breathlessly entertained.

Courtesy of amazon.com

The Bucknellian
Sports
February 23, 2007
Volume 139, Number 5
Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue
www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

More than globetrotting

Laura Reardon '07 describes her experiences studying abroad in Uganda and Switzerland.

See page B8

BISON CAPTURE SIXTH STRAIGHT

Women's track and field team dominates competition, leading to a Patriot League title win

By Brian Mulligan
Sports Editor

The women's track and field team won an unprecedented sixth-straight indoor Patriot League championship last weekend at West Point, N.Y. Along with winning the title, Head Coach Kevin Donner was named Coach of the Year for the 2006-2007 Patriot League indoor season for the sixth consecutive time. The Bison notched a total of 192 points, outscoring second-place, Navy, by over 50 points. Army and Lafayette rounded out the top four with 81 points and 76.75 points respectively. The Orange and Blue scored in 18 of the 20 events held at the meet.

"We never take these championships for granted. Each one feels as good as the year before," Donner said. "We have a senior class that has never lost a Patriot League track and field meet and we plan to control that string for the outdoor season."

On Friday, in the pentathlon, Nina Reinhardt '07 and Amy Mantush '10 took second and third respectively. Reinhardt scored a total of 3,375 points, while Mantush notched 3,351 points. Mantush produced a first place finish the following day in the high jump, clearing a height of 5'8". Her jump set a new school record and qualified her for the ECAC Championship.

Marjorie Grap '07 broke her own meet record in the 20-lb weight throw and won the event with a heave of 63'8 1/4" on Saturday. The 4 x 800-meter relay team of Mariel Fink '07, Victoria Gilbert '08, Offeibea Hanson-Hall '08 and Christa Sawko '07 grabbed first place honors, completing the relay with an ECAC qualifying time of nine minutes and 9.03 seconds. Leanna Nastase '07 won the gold in the 5,000-meter run in 17:49.71.

"We have even more depth and talent this year than we have had in the past," Hanson-Hall said. "The team is really learning to go out and make the extra effort to support each other and to cheer for teammates in other events. We have grown to cherish our championships and time together and to not take either of these for granted."

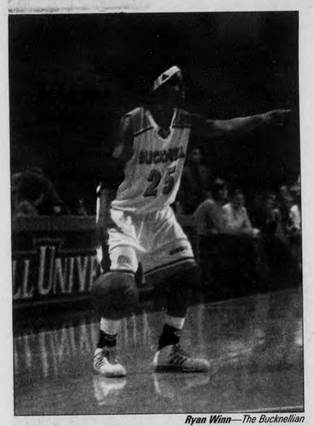
See WTRACK page B2

Courtesy of Offeibea Hanson-Hall

Jenny Dalzell '09 speeds around the track at the Patriot League Championship in Westpoint, N.Y. Dalzell was part of the second-place 4x400-meter relay team.

Women's basketball clinches title

Bison defeat Mountain Hawks to secure the top seed in the Patriot League Tournament



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Kesha Champion '08 commands the court. Champion leads the team in assists, notching 92 on the season.

By Matt Saylor
Associate Editor of Content

With two more wins the women's basketball team has won a program record nine consecutive games and won the Patriot League regular season title. The Orange and Blue (20-8, 12-1) are now in position to host the Patriot League Tournament championship game should they advance through the first two rounds of the tournament to be held at Annapolis, Md.

Saturday was Senior Day at Sojka Pavilion, and the Bison put on quite a show, defeating Colgate 64-32. The Raiders (5-23, 4-9) were held scoreless until the five minute and four seconds mark of the first half, as the Orange and Blue built an astounding 27-0 lead. During this run, the Bison forced 11 turnovers and the Raiders missed all 16 of their field goal attempts.

Bucknell 64
Colgate 32

"Our defense has cranked it up to a whole other level," Head Coach Kathy Fedorjaka said. "I think our whole intensity level, especially our defensive level, has been raised since the start of league play."

The Bison's 12 wins in league play are also a new record for the program, with one more conference game remaining.

The Orange and Blue led 36-10 at halftime, establishing a team record for fewest points allowed in a half. The Bison out-rebounded the short-handed Raiders in the first half 25-15. Only seven players were available to play for Colgate.

Amanda Brown '09 scored 12 of her 14 points in the first half to lead the Bison in scoring at the break, making two three-pointers. Jacquie Seawright '07, honored before the game with fellow senior Lindsey Hollobaugh, scored a game- and season-high 17 points to go along with a career-high tying six steals and a season-high tying seven rebounds.

"The whole experience was kind of surreal," Seawright said of the pregame ceremonies. "It was a great feeling coming out [to start the game]."

Hollobaugh started alongside Seawright, but was limited to just 11 minutes as she continues to recover from a sprained knee. Hollobaugh scored a layup late in the first half to go along with two rebounds.

"[The ceremony] didn't have any effect playing wise," Hollobaugh said. "The only one we were concerned about was Hope [Foster '08]."

Indeed it was the team's center who was the most emotional prior to the start of the game. She was able gain hold of her emotions though, scoring eight points to go along with her seven rebounds and three blocked shots. Kesha Champion '08 had eight points, seven assists and no turnovers, while Kristina Collymore '08 scored a season-high seven points in 20 minutes off the bench.

This win set the stage for the Orange and Blue to

See WBBALL page B2

Saylor Says

By Matt Saylor
Associate Editor of Content

Covering Bison athletics over the past few years has given me great opportunities. I've been able to attend press conferences, talk with athletes and coaches one-on-one and learn from other members of the press about the journalistic craft.

The drawback to this experience has been trying to remain impartial, something that is a continuous struggle to master. Am I a Bison fan and student first, or a reporter?

Before the start of both the men's and women's basketball games on Saturday, I certainly had my press hat off and my Bison cap on. Prior to these games, fans were given the opportunity to recognize the senior classes of each of our basketball teams. This week's Saylor Says will take a look at the senior members of the women's basketball team, while next week will examine the many exploits of the men's Class of 2007.

Lindsey Hollobaugh '07 has been the anchor of the women's team for the past four seasons. She made her presence immediately known, scoring 483 points during her first season, the ninth highest single-season point total in team history. She enters tomorrow's contest with Army having scored 1,384 points in her career, sixth all-time in University history. This number would certainly be higher if Hollobaugh had not battled knee injuries over the past two seasons. Her scoring average of 13.2 points per game, ranks eighth in University history, and she has scored in double-figures in 75 of her 105 games played, including 15 games where she has scored at least 20 points.

For a 5'9" guard, Hollobaugh is a spectacular rebounder. With 527

See SAYLOR page B4

Women's swim snags 2nd in league championships

By Barbara Perlman
Sports Editor

After winning four straight Patriot League titles, the women's swimming and diving team took the runner-up spot in the Patriot League Championship held at Kinney Natatorium. Over the weekend, the Bison came second only to a dominant Navy squad who lead the way with 805 points, to Bucknell's 644.

"I was extremely happy with our girls and that we had a solid second place finish at Patriots," tri-captain Kat Munson '07 said. "They had predicted us to be third, and with the rough dual meet season that we had, a lot of teams definitely underestimated us. We definitely shocked everyone."

The Bison began their Patriot League bid on Friday, a day after it was scheduled to commence due to the storm that engulfed the east coast. The women started off strong despite the late start, with an impressive finish by the 200 free relay team of Munson, Megan Mongan '10, Kristen Skroski '08, and Rebecca Scheffter '07. The team would take third in their event with a time of 1:35.58, good for fifth best in Bucknell University history.

> "The team made significant improvements and performed their best when it counted the most."
> —Dan Schinnerer, head coach

The women continued to show their prowess as Nikki Woodward '07 touched in a record-breaking time of 4:55.73 in the 500 free, good for third place in the meet. Scheffter claimed the runner-up spot in the 50 free, finishing in 23.80, good for third-best in school history. On the boards, the divers moved two girls onto the one-meter finals as Eliza Massie '10 placed third with a score of 236.65 and Rebecca Bersani claimed fourth with 233.40.

The Bison finished the day with a second place finish by the 400 medley relay team of Courtney Warren '10, Kelly Morris '09, Munson, and Scheffter. The team finished the day with 160 points, second only to Navy's 198.

On the second day of competition, the women continued to show their strength, as four Bison placed in the 100 back. Warren

See WSWIM page B4

Setting the groundwork for a wrestling legacy

Andy Rendos '10 on track for successful future

By Connie Barko
Senior Writer

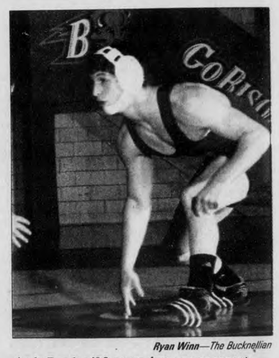
Although the wrestling program achieved varsity status two years ago, this season's recruiting class was named as one of the best in the nation. It was ranked second among teams from the Eastern Intercollegiate Wrestling Association (EIWA) on Wrestling International Newsmagazine (WIN.)'s listing and third among EIWA schools on InterMat's list. It now showcases 17 top first-year athletes, but one wrestler continues to stand out—Andy Rendos '10.

"Andy has been a huge contributor for us this year," Head Coach Dan Wirnsberger said. "He is a big reason why we have had such early success as a young program."

Two-time Pennsylvania Interscholastic Athletic Association (PIAA) AA state champion, Rendos is ranked in the top 25 in the nation and holds a career record of 23-3. He has also toppled seasoned wrestlers such as Maryland's Jason Kiessling, a fifth year senior who is also ranked.

"Andy is a very technical wrestler," Greg Hart '10 said. "He makes very little mistakes which makes him

See RENDOS page B3



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Andy Rendos '10 stares down an opponent. Rendos boasts an impressive record of 23-3 and 6-1 in EWIA.

Bison place third at Patriot League Championship

Men's track and field squad surprises competition and exceeds expectations

Courtesy of Offeibea Hanson-Hall

Matt Forys '07 leads the pack at the Patriot League Championship. Forys won both the 3,000 and 5,000-meter runs and was named Outstanding Track Athlete of the Meet.

"As a team, I believe that we are still working towards the ultimate goal of winning the Patriot League Championship."
—Matt Bonelli 07, captain*

By Brian Mulligan
Sports Editor

On the shoulders of Matt Forys '07 and Kyle Anthony '10, the men's track and field team took third place at the Patriot League Championship last weekend in West Point, NY. Forys was named Outstanding Track Athlete of the Meet, while Anthony was Rookie of the Meet. The men's track and field team was picked to place sixth at the indoor Patriot League Championship at the beginning of the season. The Orange and Blue baffled the competition.

"If you told me back in the fall that we were going to get third, I would have been happy with that finish," head coach Kevin Donner said. "However, being as close as we were to the championship, it was a little bittersweet. Overall, I'm very proud of our men and the direction of the program."

The men's team led the meet through Saturday's competition, but could not hold on to the top positions through the end. The Bison notched a total of 122 points, while first place Navy and second place Army scored 154.50 and 140.50 points, respectively. The Orange and Blue also broke three meet records on their way to third place.

Forys won the 3,000-meter run in 8 minutes, 13.13 seconds, setting a new meet record and qualifying for the IC4A. He also entered the Bison all-time record books at fourth. In the 5,000-meter run, Forys also claimed gold with 14:19.26. Along with his accolades from the championship meet, Forys was named Damon's Bison Athlete of the week this past Monday.

Anthony also set a meet record in the Patriot League Championship in the triple jump. He cleared a personal best distance of 49' 7", winning the event. Anthony also posted a third place finish in the long jump.

Kerry Boyle '09 rounded out the trio of record-breakers. Boyle won both the 200-meter and 400-meter dashes in 22.22 and 48.36 respectively, and set a new meet record in the 400, beating the old record by .12 seconds.

Tyler Hoffman '07 won his second-straight title in the weight throw with a toss of 60' 5", qualifying for the IC4A championship, while teammate James Meyer '08 finished third with an IC4A qualifying mark of 55' 7'. David Mante '08 won the pole vault, clearing a height of 15' 3".

"Even though we finished above what we were expected, the third place was a disappointment for everyone," Brian Mooney '08 said. "After the first day, we had a little taste of the lead and we really just wanted the win after that."

In the heptathlon, Ryan White '10 and Robert Gradoville '07 took fourth and fifth respectively. White scored a total of 4,419 points, while Gradoville finished with 4,355 points. Kevin MacLeod '09 posted a third-place finish in the 60-meter hurdles with 8.37. MacLeod was also part of the third place 4 x 400 meter relay team with Matt Bonelli '07, Boyle and Gregory Baxter '10.

Wallace Campbell '08 took third place honors in the 5,000-meter run, finishing the race in 14:38.68, while teammates Ryan Robinson '09 and Richard Simpson '07 grabbed third and fifth place respectively in the high jump. Robinson cleared a height of 6' 7", while Simpson jumped 6' 3". Mooney finished sixth in the 800-meter run, qualifying for the IC4A championship.

"As a team, I believe that we are still working towards the ultimate goal of winning the Patriot League Championship," Bonelli said. "We competed well this season, which shows a lot of promise for outdoor [season]. We are typically a stronger outdoor team, so we are going into the season striving for the League victory in May."

The men's team now looks forward to the IC4A championship on March 3, in Boston, Mass, which will showcase the top track and field athletes in the Northeast.

First-Team All-Patriot League

Kyle Anthony '10 — Triple Jump
Kerry Boyle '09 — 200m, 400m
Matt Forys '07 — 3000m, 5000m
Tyler Hoffman '07 — Weight Throw
David Mante '08 — Pole Vault

Bucknellian Archives

Ira Reibeisen '08 returns a backhand in a match last season. The team will travel to Williamsport on Saturday to take on Stony Brook.

Bison fall short to Bonnies and Bulls

By John Mldozinski
Senior Writer

After a promising three-game winning streak, the men's tennis team lost two well-fought matches. Despite two 6-1 losses to St. Bonaventure and Buffalo, the scores are not an indication of the team's effort.

"We got a lot of match play experience over the weekend," Daniel Bednarek '09 said. "We did squeak out a few wins and we had a lot of close losses with some solid performances on our part."

The Bison started out the day against St. Bonaventure. Bednarek had the lone victory for the Orange and Blue in the singles matches, defeating Jonathon Luce 6-2, 7-6(4) in the No. 5 spot. In No. 1 singles, Captain Ira Reibeisen '08 fell to Alejandro Nery 6-3, 2-6, 6-1, while Ryan Sandburg '09 dropped his No. 2 singles match to Diego Valdenegro 6-2, 6-1. In the No. 3 and No. 4 slots respectively, Jonathan Brenner '09 lost a heartbreaker to Leo Mochizuki 4-6, 7-6(4), 10-5, and Zach Hascoe '10 was defeated by Andrew Hart 7-5, 6-4. In the No. 6 spot, Sidharth Makkar '09 lost to Dejan Stankovic 6-0, 6-1.

The doubles matches against St. Bonaventure were not much better as the Bison dropped two of three. Reibeisen and Ben Young '08 fell to Nery and Luce 8-5 in the No. 1 doubles match. In the No. 2 doubles match Brenner and Sandburg picked up the Orange and Blue's lone doubles victory as they beat Stankovic and Hart 8-5. The momentum did not last very long, as they lost the next doubles match when Valdenegro and Victor Lecina of St. Bonaventure defeated the team of Bednarek and Hascoe 8-4.

Head Coach Rebecca Helt is pleased with the team's overall performance despite dropping the match.

"I don't concern myself too much with the overall win-loss record. It's very easy to determine the level of other tennis programs and I try to schedule teams that will push us to play our best," Helt said.

The team continued its valiant effort against Buffalo but still could not pick up many wins. Sandburg fell to Mike Rockman 6-1, 6-1 in the No. 1 singles spot, while in the No. 2 spot Brenner had another difficult loss, this time to Nikesh Singh Panthlia 6-7(4-7), 6-3, 6-3. In the No. 3 singles spot Hascoe dropped his match against Kirill Kolomytes, 6-4, 7-5.

Young lost his four spot singles match 6-4, 6-4 to Yules Hadisubroto, while Bednarek fell to Octavian Stane 7-5, 6-3 in No. 5 singles. Brian Cohen '07 picked up the sole singles victory for the Bison as he handled Eric Rothstein 6-3, 6-4.

In the doubles matches Reibeisen and Young picked up the victory against Kolomytes and Albert Alant 8-5. This would be the only doubles victory for the Bison as Brenner and Sandburg fell to Rockman and Hadisubroto 9-7, and Bednarek and Hascoe lost to Stane and Panthlia 8-3.

Even with these difficult losses, Helt knows the team is improving and realizes the men will be challenged throughout the season.

"Yes, I would prefer to win, but I know that at least we were competitive in almost every position, and we just keep getting better every week," Helt said.

The Bison return to action at 1 p.m. Saturday when they head up to Williamsport, Pa., to face Stony Brook.

WBBALL From page B1

clinch the league title with a win on Tuesday night at Lehigh, but this proved a much harder task for the Bison than their previous effort. The game went back and forth but in the end the Bison were victorious, winning 63-53 over the Mountain Hawks (9-18, 4-9).

Bucknell 63
Lehigh 53

The Orange and Blue trailed late in the first half, 26-24, but back-to-back three-pointers by Brown and Seawright gave the team a 30-26 lead going into the locker room.

The Mountain Hawks cut that lead to two, 53-51, with 4:18 left in the game as Adrienne Blount hit a jump shot and was fouled by Lauren Schober '09. Blount made the free throw and Schober fouled out of the game in just 16 minutes.

The Bison responded as Brown made a layup and a three-pointer on two of the team's next three possessions, extending the lead back to seven. Lehigh did not get any closer, as Le'Le' LeSeur '10, Foster and Champion made five of six free throws to close out the game.

Brown and Champion tied for game-high scoring honors, each registering 17 points. The two guards also combined for 10 assists, eight rebounds, five steals and only three turnovers, while making 13 of 23 field goals and four out of seven shots from behind the arc. Seawright added 13 points, seven rebounds and four assists.

The Mountain Hawks shot only 32.7 percent from the field, and the Orange and Blue's defense held Blount to only four made field goals in 18 attempts.

The Bison will travel to West Point, N.Y. on Saturday to take on Army in the regular season finale. The Black Knights (23-5, 10-3) are the league's second-seed and defending tournament champions. The Orange and Blue defeated Army earlier this season, 59-55, at Sojka Pavilion.

The Patriot League Tournament will begin March 3 featuring the four quarterfinal games, with the two semifinal games to be played the next day. The championship game will be played at the home of the highest remaining seed on Wednesday, March 7 and televised on ESPNU.

WTRACK From page B1

Mel Buczko '07 led the charge for the Bison on Sunday, winning her third pole vault title. She cleared an ECAC qualifying height of 12'9 1/2" to capture the gold. Erin Cranmer-Hart '08 earned first place honors in the one mile run in 5:00.03, while she took second in the 1,000-meter dash.

In the 400-meter dash, Catherine Trentacoste '07 had a stellar showing, placing first overall in 57.79. She also produced a new school record, an ECAC qualifying sprint and a second place finish in the 60-meter hurdles with a time of 8.78. Jenny Stevens '07 was another main contributor with a second place finish in the mile run and third place finish in the 3,000-meter run.

In the 4 x 400-meter relay, the Bison ran a time of 3:55.47, taking second place. The silver medal team was made up of Megan Hathaway '09, Trentacoste, Jenny Dalzell '09 and Jennifer Pierce '10. Hathaway also took second place in the 500-meter dash on Sunday with a time of 1:16.46.

Before the women's team can head outdoors, the team will compete at the ECAC indoor championship in Boston, Mass. on March 3. The regional championship will begin at 12 p.m.

Courtesy of Amy Mantush

The women's track and field team poses with its sixth straight Patriot League trophy. The team scored in 18 of the 20 events held at the meet.

First-Team All-Patriot League	Second-Team All-Patriot League
Melanie Buzcko '07 — Pole Vault	Erin Cranmer-Hart '08 — 1000m
Erin Cranmer-Hart '08 — Mile	Jenny Dalzell '09 — 4x400m
Mariel Fink '07 — 4x800m	Megan Hathaway '09 — 500m, 4x400m
Victoria Gilbert '09 — 4x800m	Jennifer Pierce '10 — 4x400m
Marjorie Grap '07 — Weight Throw	Nina Reinhardt '07 — pentathlon
Offeibea Hanson-Hall '08 — 4x800m	Jennifer Stevens '07 — Mile
Amy Mantush '10 — High Jump	Catherine Trentacoste '07 — 60m hurdles, 4x400m
Leanna Nastase '07 — 5000m
Christa Sawko '08 — 4x800m, 800m
Catherine Trenatcoste '07 — 400m

Men's lax dominant in opener

Seven different Bison score in 10-4 win over St. John's last Sunday

By Wes Trowbridge
Writer

Freezing cold temperatures combined with 15-mph winds are not ideal conditions for a lacrosse game, but they did not seem to bother the men's lacrosse team on Sunday as the team scored six consecutive goals in the first half, coasting to victory over St. John's in the season opener.

Bucknell 10
St. John's 4

The Bison were effective in all aspects of their game plan despite the unfamiliar snow banks surrounding the freshly plowed field at Christy Mathewson-Memorial Stadium.

"Our offense was getting great looks seemingly at will; our defense only allowed one goal per quarter and our goalie play was outstanding," Co-captain Paul Stansik '07 said. "On top of all that, we went 12 for 18 on face-offs."

The Bison defense played exceptionally well, using its size advantage to smother the St. John's attackmen. Greg Sowydra '07 collected a career-high six ground balls and Matt Antonelli '09 made his first career start in goal, tallying seven saves in 55 minutes.

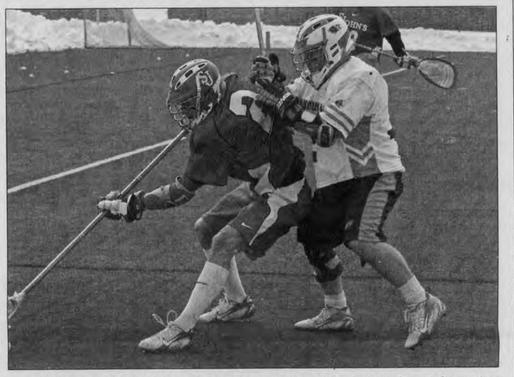
Seven different players, including six underclassmen, found the back of the net for the Bison's young and balanced offense. Austin Winter '10 and Tim Brandau '10 started their first collegiate games at attack and delivered on the high expectations, tallying three goals and three assists between them.

"Freshmen Austin Winter and Tim Brandau really stood out on offense. Austin did a good job of running our offense from behind the goal and Brandau and Joe Mele did a good job of finishing inside," Head Coach Frank Fedorjaka said.

After St. John's opened a 1-0 lead just 1:32 into the first quarter, Winter scored his first career goal to tie the game. Just 42 seconds later Winter fed Brandau in front of the cage for his first goal, giving the Bison the lead for good. After a John Togneri '09 pass slipped by the screened Maverick goalkeeper, the floodgates opened as Brandau, midfielder Perry Menzies '09 and Mele ran off three more goals in the second quarter to cap a 6-0 run.

The Orange and Blue increased their lead to 7-2 on a Nick Marks '08 goal early in the second half and put the game away as Mele and Menzies scored their second goals of the contest. Midfielder Doug Buckley '09 scored from 20 yards out with 5:24 remaining to settle the final score at 10-4.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian



Above: Attackman Austin Winter '10 avoids a St. John's defenseman. Winter, in his college debut, produced a goal and three assists.
Below: Joe Mele '09 pressures an opponent. Mele notched two goals in the season opener against St. John's last Sunday.

The Bison outshot St. John's 42-28 and won the groundball battle 40-32. After struggling on face-offs last season, Fedorjaka's new tandem of face-off specialists won two-thirds of their face-offs Sunday.

"Rick Carolan ['08] and Danylko Kulczycky ['07] did an outstanding job at the face-off X which has been a disappointment the last couple of years," Fedorjaka said.

The Bison will play Hobart at 1 p.m. on Saturday in Baltimore, Md. Hobart fell two goals short of upsetting national powerhouse Syracuse at the Carrier Dome in their season debut.

Women's tennis drops two on the road

By Ellis Hudes
Senior Writer

The women's tennis team continued to struggle as it lost its third and fourth straight matches Saturday in Providence, R.I. The Bison fell to Brown 7-0 and Rhode Island 5-2 in what was the beginning of a difficult two-month stretch before Patriot League play in April.

"It might look [bad] to read, but these losses will only make us better," Kirstyn Sotak '10 said. "Setting up a tough schedule early on will make us mentally tougher [in] similar situations later during league play."

"Setting up a tough schedule early on will make us mentally tougher similar situations later during league play."
— Kirstyn Sotak '10

Facing a well-oiled Brown squad, the younger Orange-and-Blue lineup was swept in both singles and doubles action. The duo of Carlin Calcaterra '10 and Paulina Gamboa '09 fell 8-3 in the No. 1 doubles spot. Brown's Emily Ellis and Kelly Kirkpatrick defeated Caitlin Baffa '08 and Ashley Globerman '09 in No. 2 doubles while Sotak and Renee Weissend '10 lost in the third doubles spot 8-2.

The Bison tried to hit their stride in singles play, but dropped every match in straight sets. Gamboa fell to Alexa Baggio 6-2, 6-2, while Calcaterra lost to Ellis 6-3, 6-2 and Kirkpatrick defeated JoAnna Grossman '09 7-5, 6-3. Grossman came the closest to victory as any Bison player would get against the Bears. The final three singles matches ended quickly as Tanya Vucetic beat Sotak 6-1, 6-1. Weissend was defeated by Brett Finkelstein with a score of 6-0, 6-2 and Baffa fell to Kathrin Sorokko 6-3, 6-0.

Despite strong play by Weissend and Globerman, the Orange and Blue fell to Rhode Island 5-2 in their second match of the day. The match began like the previous one, as the first doubles team of Calcaterra and Gamboa went down 8-1 to Rhode Island's tandem of Lara Maurer and Grace Hedstrom. Globerman followed, falling 8-5 to Valerie Chacon and Nyssa Peele. But the first-year duo of Sotak and Weissend put the Bison on the board by edging out Barletta and Conant 8-6 in the No. 3 doubles spot.

Globerman and Weissend made solid contributions in singles play. Both players picked up points for the Bison in their straight set wins. Globerman dismissed Chacon 6-4, 6-4 and Weissend defeated Catanzano 6-3, 6-2. Rhode Island took the other four singles matches. While Calcaterra and Grossman managed to force third sets in their singles matches, neither could pull out victories, losing 7-5, 2-6, 6-3 and 7-5, 4-6, 6-3, respectively.

With many talented first-year players, the team remains optimistic as it continues to acclimate to college-level play.

"I learn something about my game every time I step on the court," Sotak said.

The Bison look to improve as they meet Stony Brook Saturday at 1 p.m. in Williamsport at the West Branch Tennis Club.

RENDOS From page B1

so hard to be beaten."

Despite his inexperience at the collegiate level, his teammates admire his mat skills—awareness of where he is on the mat, the boundaries and the position of his opponent. He also has developed strong leg defense and can protect himself while on his feet.

"Andy is very good at defending a shot and has the ability to ride or turn most of his opponents," Zach Galligan '10 said.

This wrestling awareness may have been a result of Rendos' early love for the sport. He has been competing since he was a first-grader and has had the support of his family from the beginning.

"I decided [to wrestle] because two of my older brothers wrestled and I tried to follow in their footsteps" Rendos said.

In addition to his natural abilities, Rendos is a hard worker and is not content with mediocrity. Both his coach and teammates seem to appreciate how he leads by example.

"He has a desire to win and a sense of urgency to develop," Wirnsberger said. "Andy is a true competitor and he competes as hard in the practice room as he does in a match. That is the difference because the preparation is there."

There are already high expectations for Rendos. He has the potential to be the next NCAA champion and a multiple All-American. Rendos hopes to use his performances to help launch a successful varsity program that is still in its infancy.

Rendos said, "It would be something special to start it up and build a foundation, be the first team."

With the regular season coming to a close, Rendos now looks ahead for the upcoming EIWA championships on March 2-3 where all his training will be put to the test.

"I'm going to go out there and wrestle as hard as I can," Rendos said. "There is not much else I can do right now."

COLDWELL BANKER
PENN ONE REAL ESTATE
Thank You, Bucknell!!
For thirty years of calling Bucknell and Lewisburg home.
Susan Warner-Mills, Sales Associate
Competence, Integrity, Service
524-7500; swm@coldwellbanker.com

Orange and Blue capture bronze

Luke Trafton '10 named Rookie of the Meet with record breaking times

By Barbara Perlman
Sports Editor

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

A Bison swimmer competes in a recent home meet. The men's team proved itself against a difficult field of Patriot League opponents, placing third.

The men's swimming and diving team met pre-season expectations this past weekend, placing third in the Patriot League Championship at Kinney Natatorium. The Bison, who earned 557 points in the meet, fell only to Navy who won with 864 points and Army who took second with 771 points.

"I was happy with how the team ended the season. The men really wanted to beat Lehigh, and [it was] really important. That the team [reached this goal]" Jeff Manning '09 said.

On the first day of the meet, the Bison started with a bang as the 200 free relay team of John Peterman '08, Mark Kawczenski '09, Bradford Bennett '08 and Grant Steadman '08 took fourth in their event with a time of one minute and 23.22 seconds. Luke Trafton '10 then placed second in the 500 free with a time of 4:30.90. Kawczenski placed sixth in the 50 free in 20.96 and Steadman finished in 21.14, good for eighth place.

Manning was the only male diver to reach the three-meter finals as he earned 246.60 points, taking sixth place in the preliminary round. The Bison finished the day in fourth place behind Navy, Army and rival Lehigh.

On day two, the men picked up the pace as the 200 medley relay team claimed first place in a record-breaking time of 1:31.93. The win set a precedent for Kawczenski, who would go on to take first in the 100 back. Trafton would continue to prove himself, placing fifth in the 400 IM with a time of 4:02.18.

The Orange and Blue continued to excel as Bennett claimed the third spot and Joseph Metcalf '08 took fifth in the 100 breast. Michael Deighan '09 came in shortly after at 58.13, good for seventh place. The 800 free relay team placed third for the day, recording the 10th best time in Bison history.

The Bison slid into third place overall at the start of their last day of competition. The men kept the momentum from the previous day going, as Trafton took the gold in the 1,650 free with 15:39.68. Patrick Stummer '09 followed soon after, claiming the fourth spot, and Ben Leboza '10 placed seventh. Other Bison that placed for the day included David Iselin '10 who placed seventh in the 200 back and Steadman who touched in at 46.22 in the 100 free.

With three record-breaking times in the 1,650 free, 500 free and 400 IM, Trafton was named Rookie of the Meet, recognition never before given to a Bison swimmer. Trafton also garnered all-league first team honors along with Kawczenski and Steadman. Metcalf also joined the all-league second team, rounding out individual honorees.

"I think this meet can serve as a great stepping stone for the future," Head Coach Dan Schinnerer said. "I believe the team has now begun to see what they are capable of and hopefully that inspires them to work even harder for the future. Overall, the level of the Patriot League is definitely on the rise."

This optimism reverberated with team members.

"Now we have a short break, and will start spring training after spring break," Manning said. "I think that with a lot of hard work over this spring training we will see really great improvements next year."

Wrestling dethrones ranked opponent

Orange and Blue dominate No. 25 Columbia and set school record for season wins; finishing regular season

By Kyle Barndollar
Writer

In their final dual meet of the season last Saturday in Cambridge, Mass., the wrestling team shocked 25th-ranked Columbia to set the school record for wins in a season. The Bison came from behind to steal the victory from their EIWA foe in the final match. After collecting their historic 12th win of the season, the Orange and Blue managed a tie against Harvard to round out their regular season schedule at 12-9-1 (3-3-1 EIWA).

Bucknell 17
Columbia 16

"This weekend was a great indication of how we have been preparing all year," Assistant Coach Larry Sprecher said. "We out-wrestled our opponents, we were in better shape and as a team we are peaking at the right moment."

David Marble '10 scored a 10-4 victory against Matt DeLorenzo in the 133-pound match, and 141-pound Zach Galligan '10 collected a major decision over Jerome Greco, 11-3, to help the Bison jump out to a 7-3 lead after the first three matches.

Columbia responded, winning the next two matches at the 149 and 157 weight classes, before 17th-ranked Andy Rendos '10 ended the rally by handing Dustin Tillman a 7-1 loss. Rendos' win at 165 evened the score of the match at 10-10. The Lions then collected two more victories at 174 and 184 to extend their lead to 16-10.

"This weekend was a great indication of how we have been preparing all year. We out-wrestled our opponents, we were in better shape and as a team we are peaking at the right moment."
—Larry Sprecher, assistant coach

With his team trailing by six with two matches remaining, Eric Lapotsky '09 scored a 6-1 victory over Nick Sommerfield to cut the deficit to three going into the final heavyweight match between George Hingson '10 and Kevin Lester. Hingson dominated Lester 20-11 to achieve a four-point major decision that gave the Orange and Blue their record-breaking 12th win of the 2006-2007 campaign, 17-16.

"Going into the heavyweight match we trailed Columbia by three, and the only way for us to win was for George to win by a major decision or better," Sprecher said, "That is a pressure situation, and it was great to see George perform and seal up the win for us."

Later in the day the Bison faced Harvard, which currently sports a roster containing three wrestlers nationally ranked in the top 20. The Bison started strong, posting two pins in the first two matches.

Bucknell 21
Harvard 21

Greg Hart '10 pinned Ryan Fitzgerald in just 48 seconds in the 125-pound match, and Marble pinned his opponent, Simon Orozco, in 4:19 to build up a quick 12-0 lead.

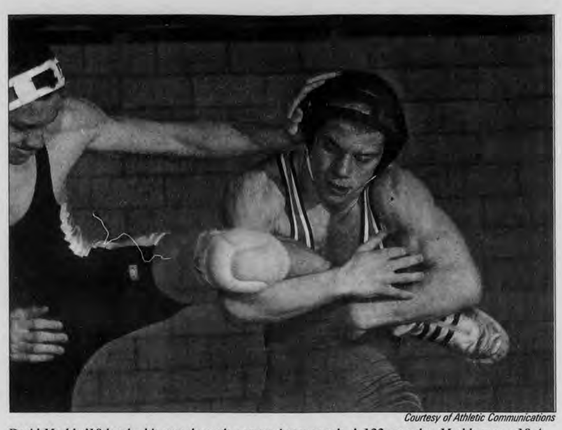
"Dave Marble is by far wrestling better than anyone on our team," Sprecher said. "He has the confidence and the ability to make a great end-of-the-year run."

Harvard captured the next four matches, two of which came in overtime, to regain the lead, 16-12, with four matches remaining. Shane Riccio '10 was able to end the drought with an 8-4 win over Fred Rowsey at the 174-pound weight class. The Crimson would go up 21-15 after George Mann '10 fell in a major decision to 15th-ranked Louis Caputo. Mann wrestled at 184 all year—two classes above his normal weight—in order to help the team.

Lapotsky and Hingson each collected 8-4 victories in the final two matches to even the score at 21-21 and force the first tie of the season for the Orange and Blue.

The Bison concluded an unprecedented season by University wrestling standards with a lot of momentum, and now return home for two weeks of rest and preparation before the EIWA tournament gets started on Friday.

"I feel our coaches have done an awesome job pushing us to our limits mentally and physically up to this point, and now it is really starting to show on the mat," Lapotsky said. "Hopefully we can carry this momentum into the EIWAs and get a handful of guys to nationals."



Courtesy of Athletic Communications

David Marble '10 battles his way through a recent home match. A 133-pounder, Marble won a 10-4 decision this past weekend. The team is currently 12-9 in its first season back after being reinstated as a varsity program.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

(Above) Lindsay Hollobaugh '07 and (below) Jacquie Seawright '07 get cheered onto the court by the teammates on Senior Day. The team won the game that day against Colgate.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

SAYLOR From page B1

rebounds, she is the tenth player in program history with more than 1,000 points and 500 boards.

She is top-10 in University history in field goals made (513), field goals attempted (1,195), three-point field goals made (108) and attempted (330) and assists (263). If she had been completely healthy this year she would undoubtedly also have cracked the top-10 in free throws made and steals.

She has won Patriot League Rookie of the Year and for the past two years has been named to the All-Patriot League Second Team. She has served as team captain as both a junior and a senior, inspiring teammates with her hard-nosed mentality and the sacrifice of her body for the good of the team. The Bison have won 63 games during her tenure, the fourth-highest total for any class in team history.

A large part of the team's success the past two years has been the addition of transfer Jacquie Seawright '07. Seawright immediately made her presence known, being named a team co-captain last year before even playing a game for the Orange and Blue. Playing primarily as the team's first player off the bench last year, Seawright averaged a team-high 16.9 points per game when averaged over 40 minutes of play. Her explosive pull-up jump shot, ability to drive to the basket and intensity to find the ball off the offensive glass added immeasurably to the team's success.

With a year to adjust to Head Coach Kathy Fedorjaka's system, Seawright has become more comfortable this year and it has shown.

She is averaging 8.5 points per game this season, including 10.6 per game during conference play.

Her minutes have gone up to 25.5 per game during Patriot League competition, due in large part to Hollobaugh's injury that has seen Seawright take her spot in the starting line-up. This has led to Seawright scoring in double-figures for eight of the team's 13 league games.

She is the team's best free throw shooter, making 82.8 percent of her shots from the line, to go along with her 38.3 percent shooting from three-point territory. Over her four year collegiate career, Seawright has scored 936 points to go with 454 rebounds.

While the success of the women's program is truly a team-effort, it is the leadership and skill of Hollobaugh and Seawright that will do the most to determine whether or not the Bison will win the Patriot League Tournament.

WSWIM From page B1

took second with a breaking time of 57.83, followed by Munson who placed fifth, Abigail Atkinson '10 who took ninth, and Lauren Russell '10 who took tenth with a time of 59.89.

Records continued to break as Mongan and Skroski claimed the fourth and sixth best times in school history in the 200 free, respectively. The Bison also took third place in both the 200 medley relay and the 800 free relay. After consistently placing throughout the day, the Orange and Blue entered the third and final day of competition with 422 points with rival Colgate trailing by only 35 points.

The women started off the last day of Patriots with Carlyn Donley '07, Ally St. Claire '09, and Skroski taking fifth, seventh, and eighth in the 1650 free, respectively. Laura Goeller '07 then took fifth in the 200 back, and classmate Shceffter placed fourth in the 100 free. The Bison also continued to set new records in the 200 breast as Woodward touched at 2:21.94, good for third best, and Nikki Seaman '09 reached at 2:23.81, fourth best in Bucknell history.

The diving team watched Bersani take third in the three-meter with a score of 235.25. Teammate Massie followed suite with 229.20, claiming fifth place.

Seniors Munson, Scheffter, and Woodward all garnered all-league first team honors. The depth of the team was recognized as seven other women earned all-league second team status.

"The team made significant improvements and performed their best when it counted the most," said Coach Dan Schinnerer.

Despite ending the year in second place for the first time since 2003, the team looks back on the 2006-2007 season with pride.

"Bucknell swimming has allowed me to have personal success that I never thought possible," Musnon said. "It taught me to challenge and push myself beyond the limits day in and day out."

Baseball opens season with loss to VMI

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Matt Curry '07 launches a blazing pitch in a game last season. The Bison prepare for Virginia in a three-game showdown Saturday and Sunday at UVA.

By Ty Clark
Senior Writer

The University baseball team opened its 2007 season with a 10-2 loss to VMI on Tuesday.

Matt Curry '07, the starter for the Bison, allowed two runs—one unearned—on five hits, no walks and six strikeouts, but was tagged with the loss. Offensively, Dustin Kapson '07 and Jason Buursma '08 combined to go 4-for-7, hitting one RBI a piece. Ryan Gryskevicz '07 went 2-for-3 displaying his offensive power.

VMI 10
Bucknell 2

"I was very pleased with our team's performance," said Buursma. "The first series is always tough because it is usually our first time playing on a field. Our only errors came from misjudging speed on a ground ball and pick offs to first base, which are hard to practice in the Fieldhouse, due to the faster floor for ground balls and difficulty practicing pick-offs from a mound inside."

Buursma started the top of the second with a single, getting on base and moving into scoring position thanks to a rundown involving Gryskevicz. The Bison then grabbed a 1-0 lead after Kapson singled to right to plate Buursma.

VMI went on to tie the game in the third thanks to a two-out double to right-center. They then grabbed the lead in the fourth after an error and botched pickoff for the Bison and tallied two more in the fifth to take a 4-1 lead.

In the sixth, the Bison pulled closer as Chris Pieper '08 walked to start the inning. Combined hits from Gryskevicz and Buursma drove home one run, cutting VMI's lead to two. The game broke open in the bottom of the sixth, as three more runs were driven home. The Keydets added three more runs in the bottom of the seventh to clench the win.

Despite the setback, Buursma, who was recently named to the National Baseball Writer's Association Stopper of the Year Watch List for the nation's top closers, is optimistic about the team's future run for the Patriot League Championship.

"Once we get comfortable on a real field, which will happen by the time Patriot League action rolls around, we'll prove ourselves as one of the better teams in the league," Buursma said. "We're predicted to finish fourth because we lost many of our starters last year, some of which were all Patriot League selections. But we all know that this team can perform just as well and that ranking only makes us want to prove it more."

Coach Gene Depew '71 said, "I think we're coming off a positive fall where we saw progress from a number of our younger players. They should be more than capable of filling the starting roles that were left vacant by last year's senior class."

"I think we're coming off a positive fall where we saw progress from a number of our younger players. They should be more than capable of filling the starting roles that were left vacant by last year's senior class."
—Gene Depew '71, head coach

This weekend, the Bison return to Virginia to face the nationally ranked Virginia Cavaliers for three games. When asked about the game this weekend, Buursma was optimistic.

"I would like to win one of three. UVA is a nationally ranked team who again has the advantage of practicing and playing on a field," Buursma said. "It should be another building weekend, but I feel that we will perform much better with respect to making mistakes."

Bison streak to 11 straight

Men's basketball wins BracketBuster and continues league domination

By Marcus Mateer
Senior Writer

For four straight years, league opponents have come to Sojka Pavilion looking for a victory only to leave with a loss. The Bison clinched No. 4 by dismantling Patriot League foe Lafayette 76-58 on Feb. 15. The Bison followed up by extending the win streak to 10 by dropping Towson 73-63 on Senior Day in the BracketBuster. Neither team had an answer for Chris McNaughton '07, who scored a combined 44 points during the two games.

Bucknell 76
Lafayette 58

Towson's Gary Neal is currently ranked fourth in the NCAA in points per game, but he may not have been the most important Tiger that afternoon. Tommy Breaux, the team's third leading scorer and best post defender, missed the game due to illness. McNaughton was able to muscle the backup post players and dominated the entire game.

Bucknell 73
Towson 63

Early fouls on Darren Mastropaolo '08 forced Head Coach Pat Flannery '80 to go to the bench. With Donald Brown '07 still sidelined with a broken hand, Josh Linthicum '10, Stephen Tyree '10 and Patrick Behan '10 would step up and give quality minutes. Behan finished with seven points and five rebounds, the best performance of his young career.

In the first half, Neal was completely shut down. Abe Badmus '07 did a fantastic job of harassing the taller scorer, holding him to a single point in the first half. Badmus even blocked a shot attempt, despite his five-inch deficit to the 6'4" Neal.

"Number five [Badmus] did a real nice job on [Neal]," Towson Head Coach Pat Kennedy said. "He blocked a shot or two. They did an excellent job with their game plan."

"I love a good challenge," Badmus said. "I was in awe of some of the games I saw [on tape of Neal]. My teammates were there for me, helping me."

After the break, Neal came alive. He scored nine straight to keep pace with the Bison and then sparked a 9-2 run. During that stretch, the Bison's lead shrank from 22 to 13 points. Jason Vegotsky '09 hit a critical three to end the threat. Another three by John Griffin '08 allowed Flannery to pull the starters, up by 17 with only 2:49 left to play. Griffin had 15 points on the day.

Griffin also scored in double figures against Lafayette, tallying 16 points. The guard had previously struggled from behind-the-arc, shooting only 34 percent. He would have a break-out game, hitting four of seven against Lafayette.

With Griffin hitting from the outside, Mastropaolo and McNaughton worked the inside. The duo combined for 29 points, 10 assists and 17 rebounds. They formed a seamless team, finding each other for easy lay-ups or kicking it out to a jump-shooter.

The Bison jumped out to a 13-6 lead early on as the team demonstrated its cohesiveness. On the very first play, Mastropaolo found McNaughton for an easy dunk. Next, Badmus hit an open Griffin for a three. Three more great looks turned into three easy lay-ups between the two big men. A Badmus steal turned into another McNaughton dunk and capped the run.

"We went inside and were able to establish that," Flannery said. "That helped us on the defensive end of the floor. Darren did such a good job playing the four spot that they weren't able to spread us out."

Lafayette would never recover. The lead burgeoned to 20 points at halftime. In the second half, it would balloon to as many as 26 points and would never be less than 17 points. Only one Leopard managed double figures.

The Bison will play their last regular season game in West Point, N.Y., as they take on Army at 1 p.m. They will then travel back to Lewisburg for the Patriot League Quarterfinals at 7 p.m. on Wednesday in Sojka Pavilion.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Chris McNaughton '07 overpowers a Towson defender in the Bison's BracketBuster win. McNaughton scored 23 points in the victory and was named PL Player of the Week.

This just in...

By Matt Saylor
Associate Editor of Content

Bucknell 69
Lehigh 56

The Bison men's basketball team extended its winning-streak to 11 consecutive games on Wednesday with a 69-56 win at Lehigh (12-17, 7-6). The Orange and Blue (19-8, 12-1) head into tomorrow's game with Army needing a Holy Cross (21-8, 12-1) loss to the Mountain Hawks to earn the top-seed in the Patriot League Tournament.

John Griffin '08 led the Bison with 16 points, four assists and three steals. Chris McNaughton '07 scored 14 points and grabbed seven rebounds to go along with four assists and two blocks, while Abe Badmus '07 added 13 points of his own.

"This was such a taxing game," Badmus said on the radio broadcast following the game. "We are happy to get out of here with a win."

The Bison made nine of 11 free throws in the last four minutes and 22 seconds of game time. Griffin had six straight points in that stretch, helping to push the team's lead from five points to 10 with 2:27 remaining. Lehigh would never get any closer.

The Orange and Blue were able to hang on down the stretch without the services of Darren Mastropaolo '08, who fouled out with 4:42 seconds left in the game.

"If people say that I am the best defensive player on the team, then Darren is a close second," Badmus said.

Mastropaolo scored seven points and grabbed five rebounds in just 19 minutes of work, battling in the physical interior. He helped to lead the Bison to a 31-25 rebounding advantage over the Mountain Hawks.

The Orange and Blue committed on only nine turnovers in the game and had assists on 19 of their 20 made field goals. The Mountain Hawks committed only eight turnovers, but shot only 32.6 percent from the field, including only 23.1 percent in the first half.

The Bison shot 48.8 percent for the game, making seven three-pointers in 18 attempts and only missing five out of 27 free throws.

Softball loses tight games

By Melissa Duffy
Contributing Writer

The softball team headed down south last weekend for its season opener at the Charlotte Green and White Tournament in Charlotte, N.C. The Bison lost two tight matches against Charlotte 8-4 and North Carolina A&T 6-4, and split a pair of games with Eastern Kentucky.

The Bison and Eastern Kentucky both finished the opening double-header with 1-3 records. Charlotte claimed the tournament title, with North Carolina A&T coming in second, Eastern Kentucky in third, and Bucknell in fourth.

On the first day of the tournament, the Bison suffered close losses against Charlotte and North Carolina A&T, in spite of a promising comeback attempt. In the game against Charlotte, Lauren Litts '07 went 2-for-3 with three RBI, helping to gain a 2-0 lead in the bottom of the first with an RBI single. Litts later scored on an error by second baseman Sarah Malene.

Charlotte 8
Bucknell 4

Back-to-back RBI singles by the 49ers later evened the score and broke Christie Wiest's '08 shutout in the top of the third. The Bison returned strongly with two runs off of a double by Litts, advancing Ashley Carlson '09 and Erin Curatola '08, both on base from bunt singles.

After this, luck turned sour for the Bison, whose hitters were shut down 10 consecutive times by Charlotte starter Christie Murray. In the bottom of the seventh inning, runners did reach second and third base, but did not manage to make it across the plate. The Bison were ultimately unable to defeat the errorless fielding, twelve hits and eight runs of the 49ers, despite five hits and four runs.

In the second game of the tournament on Saturday the Bison suffered another disappointing loss of 6-4 against North Carolina A&T. Early in the game Sherry Finkel '10 scored a homerun. The Aggies came back with a powerful fourth inning that knocked Bison starting pitcher Katie McDonald '09 from the game and gave North Carolina A&T a comfortable 6-2 lead. Though Mary Pavlovich '10 cracked a one-out, multiple-run homer in the fifth, the Bison were unable to score for the remainder of the game and ended with an upsetting 6-4 loss.

NC A&T 6
Bucknell 4

While the girls' opening record left something to be desired, players remained optimistic.

"Our level of play was the best it's been to start a season," Wiest said.

In fact, with eight runs on Saturday, the Bison (1-3) reached its greatest number of runs in its first two games of the season since 2000.

This optimism paid off on Sunday, as the Bison achieved their first season win against Eastern Kentucky, 8-5. The Oragne and Blue quickly built its 8-1 lead with RBI singles from Litts and Finkel. The Bison brought in two more runs in the third inning with an RBI single by Ashley Carlson '09 and a ground out to second by Alyssa Okita '10. Litts then smashed a three-run homer in the next inning to gain the Bison a commanding 8-1 lead, which remained unchallenged by Eastern Kentucky until the final two innings, ending the game with a Bison win of 8-5.

Bucknell 8
E. Kentucky 5

The fourth and final game played by the Bison displayed a disappointing 9-4 loss in the consolation game against Eastern Kentucky. In spite of an initial 4-1 lead for the Bison, thirteen Eastern Kentucky hits and three Bison errors proved to be disastrous for the Orange and Blue.

E. Kentucky 9
Bucknell 4

Notably, Litt's enormous contribution of five hits, five RBI and three runs scored this past weekend already landed her in the university record books. With eight RBI already this season, she ties Charity Ford for fourth place on the University's all-time list with 82 RBI throughout her career. She is also tied former teammate Lauren Wible for first on the home run list with seventeen homers.

In spite of the Bison's last place standing in the tournament, the team looks forward to a promising season.

"Everyone took their turn in contributing to the positives that came out of this weekend," Carlson said.

The Bison, will be back in action on March 3 at the Elon Classic in Elon, N.C.

Polo fights hard against nation's best

After facing five top-20 opponents, the Orange and Blue are ready to make a statement in their own pool

By Shannon Pitsch
Sports Editor

In the first two weeks of the season, the women's water polo team has already played the toughest schedule of any sport at the University. With a season record of 2-6, going 1-3 in each of their last two tournaments, the Bison have already faced five top-20 teams.

"These past two weekends have given us a taste of what it is like to play at a high level of competition," Meagan Gins '08 said. "Playing great teams is very trying, but acquiring more mental toughness will allow us to be the team that competes for championships."

The Orange and Blue traveled to College Park, Md., Saturday and Sunday after a ferocious weekend of competition in California two weeks ago, where the Bison fell to No. 6 San Diego State, No. 12 Santa Clara and No. 19 Cal State Bakersfield. On the opposite side of the country in Maryland, the Bison faced No. 13 Hartwick and No. 16 Michigan. While the team has yet to prevail in top-20 match-ups, it has compiled 26 goals in the five games.

Marist 7
Bucknell 6

In their first game of the Maryland Invitational on Saturday, the Bison were upset by Marist 7-6. At the start of the first half, the Bison offense propelled the team to an early lead of 4-1 behind a pair of goals form Jessica Trimis '07. Two more goals brought the team to a lead of 6-3 heading into the second half. But despite 11 saves in goal from Mandy Bynum '07 and 11 collective steals, the Bison offense could not execute in the second half, losing to a narrow one-goal margin in the end.

Once again in game two of the day against nationally ranked Hartwick, the Bison started strong with seven first-half goals. Gins led the offense with five goals and one assist in 32 minutes of play. Aubrey Rowe '09, an integral part of the 2006 offensive scheme, made her season debut after an injury kept her on the bench in California. She scored her first two goals of the season against the Hawks.

Hartwick 16
Bucknell 9

Once again, the Bison offense deflated in the second half as it was outscored 7-2. Eight saves in the goal from Bynum and five steals on defense could not stop Hartwick, which won 16-9.

"Although it's hard to lose games, we would much rather play high-level opponents than easy games this early in the season," Rowe said.

Day two finally brought the Bison success on the scoreboard as they downed host Maryland 7-5. The match was highly contested as the teams matched each other in goals quarter for quarter with scores of 2-2 in the first, 1-1 in the third and 2-2 in the fourth. Behind three goals from Gins, two from Valentina Rozas '10 and one each from Shana Palencia '10 and Rowe, the offense showcased the balanced potential of the team.

Bucknell 7
Maryland 5

The game came down to the second quarter when the defense refused to let the Terrapins score. With a career-high, 15-save performance from Bynum in goal, the Bison defense was determined to win. Scoring the only two goals of that quarter, the Orange and Blue clinched the victory 7-5.

In their final game on Sunday, the Bison fought hard against the nationally ranked Michigan squad. Here the Wolverines set the pace of the first half, outscoring the Bison 8-3. Four goals from Liz Jensen '07 and a pair of assists from Susan Kingerski '07 were not enough, as the team fell 11-7.

Michigan 11
Bucknell 7

"We have learned that we need to play with more quarter-to-quarter and game-to-game consistency," Head Coach John Zeigler said. "And that we have to be able to get ourselves out of difficult stretches in games where things are not going our way. We hope that this difficult schedule has made us mentally tougher and that, come April, we will be a championship-contending team."

The Bison will get a chance to prove their ability to defeat ranked competition throughout the rest of their season. Over spring break the team will travel to California again, facing No. 9 UC Irvine and No. 7 Loyola Marymount. The Orange and Blue will also match up against No. 17 Princeton, a conference rival, once at Princeton and once in the Kinney Natatorium.

In the mean time, the team will have an opportunity to boost its record at home before the ECAC Championships in early March.

"This weekend we hope to be the aggressors in all our games and playing our style of water polo without playing our opponent's games," Zeigler said. "We are struggling with some key player injuries so others on our team will have to step up their production."

On Saturday and Sunday, the Bison will compete in their first of only two home tournaments. The Bucknell Invitational will showcase the Orange and Blue in four matches with Wagner at 9:15 a.m. and Villanova at 2:15 p.m. on Saturday, and Iona at 10:30 a.m. and Marist at 3:30 p.m. on Sunday.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Elizabeth Jensen '07 passes over an opponents head in a game last season. Jensen, a tri-captain, currently has seven goals and five assists in eight games.

Mer Cares

Dear Mer:

I'm a sophomore, and I'm having a lot of trouble picking a major. It's really coming down to the wire since I have to choose one ASAP. I came in as a chemistry major, and I ended up taking a few classes in Spanish and sociology and really enjoyed them. Now, I think I want to switch my major, but my family thinks otherwise. They believe I wouldn't be able to do anything with a degree in the subjects that I've now come to enjoy and I don't know what to do.

—Bewildered & Alone

Dear Bewildered & Alone:

What many students fail to realize during their first few years of college is that your major doesn't "decide" you. What you choose to study doesn't have to dictate the rest of your life!

You could go on to graduate school and receive another degree. You are only 19 or 20, and by no means do you need to figure out what you plan on doing at age 40. It's all about discovering and finding out who you are and sometimes it takes longer than the two years allotted for you to pick your major.

Parents can be difficult because they often believe they know what is best for you. They have good intentions, but in the end it is your life to live and not theirs. You should not be stuck doing something you do not enjoy, especially if you could earn more money and get more job offers somewhere else. Majoring in Spanish and sociology from one perspective may give off the vibe of a "useless degree," but you can look at it differently. You could travel to multiple Spanish-speaking countries and learn more about the culture.

You could also do research in chemistry and learn about it in an advanced environment. Generally, graduate school has more prestige than undergraduate study and you learn a lot more.

It's all up to you, and there are so many options. Don't have the mindset that you are going to be screwed when it comes time to find jobs, because many people who graduate from college still don't know what they want to do with their lives. You still have so much time to figure it out!

Love,
Mer

Please send questions regarding any topic to marc001@Bucknell.edu with subject line reading "advice" or you may send a letter via campus mail to box number C1099. I look forward to hearing from you!

Bonding with hall mates

Hall programs offer opportunities for educational and social enrichment

By Erica Schiffres
Contributing Writer

While most students are acutely aware of their resident assistants (RAs) responsibility to enforce rules, after a few fun-filled hall activities, students quickly discover that RAs offer less bane and more boon.

RAs organize a host of activities for their halls to build a community and integrate educational and social programs. Vedder Hall, for example, had a Superbowl party, planned a pizza party mixer, organized a Shiatsu massage session and attended therapy dog night. Earlier this year, Smith Hall hosted the social event, "Get to Know the Custodians," with a Dunkin Donuts breakfast in the Smith kitchen.

Participating in educational programming and reaching into the community, Swartz Hall helped raise awareness during Domestic Violence Awareness Month by creating a contest between the halls to collect clothes and other items to be delivered to a local battered women's shelter.

In Larison and Harris Halls, past programs included a cooking class with Head Chef Frank and a miniature golf tournament. Other creative enterprises included the "building a puzzle" project, in which every resident on each hall received puzzle pieces to fit in a template laid out in each corresponding lounge. Residents of each hall then attempted to put their puzzles together and members of any hall that completed its puzzle received small prizes.

Another great event underway is the game "Assassins," in the Arts and Humanities residential colleges.

The six residential colleges—Arts, Environmental, Global, Humanities, Social Justice and Society and Technology—offer slightly different opportunities. Residential college activities include participation in musical groups, volunteer events and trips to nearby cities to visit art galleries, museums and other places. For example, Smith 2A and 2B participated in a "global retreat" by traveling to a cabin setting in the Cowan woods to get to know each other better, eat s'mores and participate in the CLIMBucknell ropes course.

Some activities are common throughout campus, like going to sports events or ordering food and watching a movie.

Among many fun-filled activities, some definitely stand out. Amanda Forsburg '07, the Vedder 2NW RA, said her all-time favorite is the Condom Lady.

"I've been an RA for three years now and the Condom Lady is always hysterical," Forsburg said.

Many first-year students agreed.

"I liked the Condom Lady. She gave out free Snickers," Sarah Svoboda '10 said.

"It was great. I got a lot of free condoms," William O'Brien '10 said.

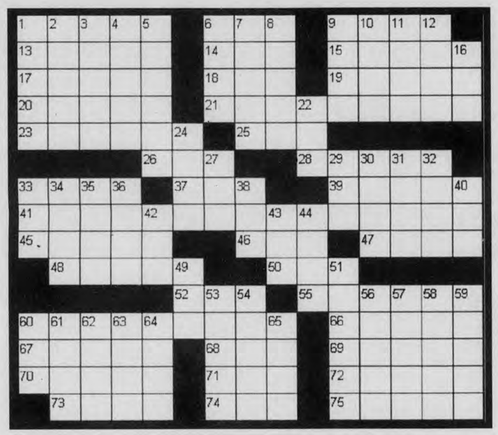
Other first-year students had different favorites.

"I liked the massages best. They were amazing," Sara Alfano '10 said.

Holly Batchelder '10, member of the leadership residential hall program, said they were planning on "visiting the soup kitchen twice. There was also talk about doing CLIMBucknell, but it was canceled—there have been a lot of ideas, but not much has materialized."

RAs are busy planning events, but hall participation is often poor. So, get involved on your hall and jump in on the action.

The Bucknellian Crossword



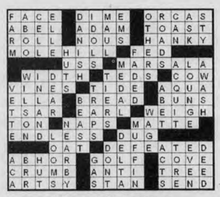
Across

1. Superheroes attire
6. Morose
9. Good _
13. Abraham heir
14. Keats forte
15. Make amends
17. "Beatles" Starr
18. Everything
19. Dromedary
20. Officer in training
21. Famous site of US innovation
23. Revolutionary
25. 21 + hangout
26. Centralized meeting point
28. SNL creator Michaels
33. Scandinavian capital
37. Allow
39. Northern English city
41. Weather forecast
45. Make joyful
46. Sara Lee specialty
47. Wolfe's "A Room of _ Own"
48. Military body
50. Sprinted
52. Pass with flying colors
55. Prepared the keg
60. Innocent infaturation
66. Horned animal
67. Point of debate
68. Brooks or Blanc
69. Lively musical composition
70. Team B's likely opponent
71. Newlywed woman
72. Marine mammal
73. Celebrity
74. Pro vote
75. Tiger of golf

Down

1. Approximately
2. Type of cuisine
3. Bamboo-eating bear
4. Excited
5. Malt whiskey
6. Immerse in water
7. Extemporaneously
8. Greek letter
9. Like some lingerie
10. Popular film festival state
11. Deep sleep
12. Understood
16. Reindeer relative
22. MTV programming
24. _ hoop
27. Gamble
29. Ancient
30. Attempt again
31. Popular sign material
32. Border
33. Mine material
34. Sodium Chloride
35. One convicted of perjury
36. Upon
38. Recipe amt.
40. Draft org.
42. "The Big Cheese"
43. Lighter than _
44. Clean
49. Buddy
51. Little latittude
53. Punctuation mark
54. Without exception
56. Snapshot
57. Type of car or bean
58. Ceased
59. Entrances
60. Peach _
61. Functions
62. Optional HS exam
63. Jungle cat
64. Period of time
65. Threat ending

ByVo Crosswords



February 16 Answers

"Turn your Power ON and Add LIFE to your Years!"
MORRISON'S ADVANCED CHIROPRACTIC CARE
Michael D. Morrison D.C.
1205 W Market Street
Lewisburg, PA 17837
Office: 570-523-1221
A Healthy Spine Equals a Healthy YOU!

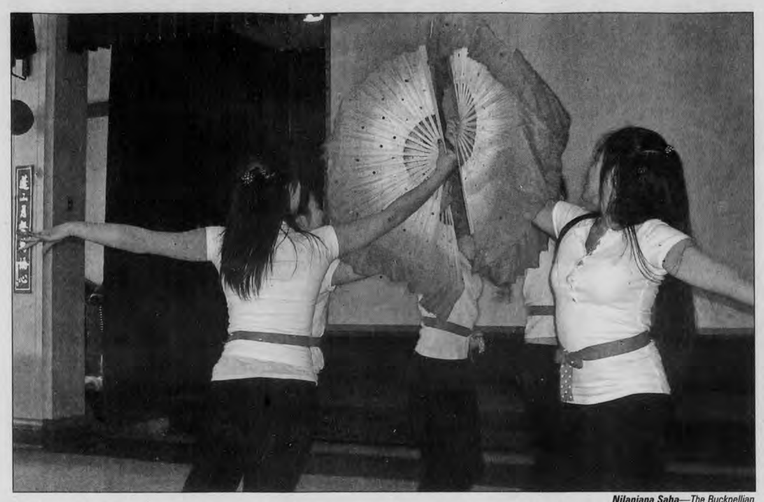
Bucknell Students may receive a free exam and x-rays (if needed) with mention of this advertisement.

BROOKPARK STATION Cafe
"Casual dining with a gourmet flair"
Fresh Sushi & Vegetarian Items
Catering & Takeout Platters
Book Your Graduation Party!
B.Y.O.B.
Wireless Internet
Mon Sat 8:00 - 8:00 Sun 8:00 - 2:00
1 MILE WEST OF TOWN ON RT. 45
542-FOOD (3663)

Igniting Creative Ideas
On Fire Promotions
by trautman associates, inc.
promotional products · fundraising items
embroidered & screenprinted caps & apparel
awards · trophies · business gifts
800-538-8009
Lewisburg Showroom 434 Market 570-522-8005
www.onfirepromotions.com
Bring in this ad for one FREE SCREEN!!!
GOOD ON ANY APPAREL ORDER
(minimum 36 pieces)

Real Smoked BBQ!
Beef Brisket, Pork, Chicken, Ribs!
Sandwiches, Wraps, Salads, Platters!
NO RESERVATIONS NEEDED!
Call in for TAKEOUT!
SKEETERS PIT BBQ
ON THE BLUFF
OVERLOOKING THE SCENIC SUSQUEHANNA RIVER
AT THE INTERSECTION OF ROUTES 11 & 15
SHAMOKIN DAM
570.743.2727
Daily 11:00am - 10:00pm
Sundays till 9:00pm
www.skeetersBBQ.com

Celebrating Chinese New Year



Nilanjana Saha—The Bucknellian

Members of the Chinese Cultural Association perform a traditional Chinese fan dance at the New Year Celebrations. The festival featured food, games, calligraphy and music and dance performances by University students, faculty and local groups.

By Liza Banhalmi
Writer

Sunday marked the beginning of the lunar calendar and the first day of the new moon, also known as the Chinese New Year. This calendar, based on the cycle of the moon, is used by Asian countries such as Japan, Korea and China.

To celebrate 2007, the year of the pig, the Chinese Cultural Association (CCA) held a Chinese New Year Festival on Saturday, sharing different foods, performances, games and other Chinese traditions.

Irene Tsao '09, president of CCA, said the event has been under construction for quite some time.

"It's been [in] the works since we got back from winter break," Tsao said. "It's teamwork, and this is the result of teamwork. All the CCA members came together in this event in either small or large increments."

At the beginning of the festival, there was a calligraphy demonstration by Wei Ge, associate professor of economics. During the demonstration he used Chinese characters to represent people's names.

"Calligraphy takes the sound of your name and tries to get as close to your name as possible," said James Pusey, associate professor of East Asian studies.

Next, the CCA served traditional homemade Chinese food. Members of the CCA cut up the meats and vegetables the night before and woke up at 6 a.m. on Saturday to cook the food for an estimated 300 people.

The members tried to prepare dishes that people typically order from restaurants, such as chicken and broccoli, stir fry, noodles and fried rice. They also prepared more unfamiliar dishes, which included ingredients such as tomatoes, eggs and cucumbers.

Desserts included New Year's sticky rice cakes and bubble tea. Bubble tea is comprised of condensed milk, black tea and tapioca pearls. The tea is served with a wide straw so the tapioca pearls can pass through as you drink the tea.

Graduate student Wei Kang Tchou performed on a traditional Chinese instrument called the "erhu," also known as the Chinese violin. This instrument has two strings and is played with a bow that moves between the strings.

There are no frets on the instrument, so "to play in tune you need to have good pitch," Pusey said. The erhu comes in different sizes; the smallest have the loudest and highest pitches.

Members of the CCA choreographed and performed a traditional Chinese fan dance with pink fans. Another fan dance was performed by the Bloomsburg Exercise Group, which has been performing at the Chinese festival for the last three years.

Chinese vocal performances included soloist Ya Juan Min and a quartet: Pusey, Adam Gasiewicz '07, Yuri Nakamura '10 and Anne Wang Pusey, assistant professor of East Asian studies. The quartet sang a Kangding love song as well as "The Maid of Alli Mountain," a song about the youth of Alli Mountain and the stream in the area.

These songs have a Chinese melody but a Western harmony, which makes them easier for the quartet to sing. The combination is "effective, because pure Chinese singing is more difficult. It's like a hybrid," Pusey said. "In the usual Chinese singing, you use a different tone quality, so you use your voice differently."

Near the end of the festival, some people played two traditional Chinese games. Chinese chess, similar to traditional chess in certain aspects, represents the time when China was split in two before the Han Dynasty. On the board, each side represents a side of the country and the break in the middle of the board represents the river between the two sides. The pieces are moved along lines instead of boxes and are similar to certain pieces in chess. Different pieces, such as the elephants, move in different ways.

Another game, Mahjong, is similar to any American card game, except the cards are domino-like pieces with different suits engraved in them. The game set has 136 pieces, with four different suits—circles, sticks, numbers and directions. The object of the game is to get four sets of three and a pair. The sets of three can be consecutive pieces in a suit or three of a kind. You deal and pass the pieces differently than you would in an American card game.

"It's hard for the first time around to absorb all the rules," said Jessi Shui '09, vice president of CCA. "But once you know how to play, it's a lot of fun."

The CCA holds a Chinese New Year festival every year, so if you're looking for good food, performances and a chance to learn about the culture, mark your calendar for Feb. 7, 2008 and help CCA ring in the year of the rat.

Ellyn Ercolano—The Bucknellian

Members of the Chinese Cultural Association serve food at the festival. They prepared dishes typically not found in restaurants.

Weighing the pros and cons of Wikipedia

By Rajaa Qadri
Writer

Whenever students get an assignment, whether a paper, project, essay or speech, the first thing that they type into their browser's address box is "Wikipedia." It is a magic word that has all the solutions to students' problems. Wikipedia's vast information base covers all subject matters–from politics and history to science and poetry. No matter what course students take, they absolutely love this Web site.

According to Wikipedia's Web site, it "is a multilingual, Web-based, free content encyclopedia project. Wikipedia is written collaboratively by volunteers from all around the world. With rare exceptions, its articles can be edited by anyone with access to the Internet." Wikipedia is one of the world's busiest websites with a 2006 budget of about a million dollars.

What makes Wikipedia easier to navigate than other Web sites is the links in the articles that lead to associated articles. At the end of almost all of the articles, various links are provided to other sources, which help readers further their research.

"Wikipedia is a wonderful resource for a quick fact check or just information about a topic. I know a lot of students, including me, who use the Web site but I try to just keep it to a reference rather than basing my research on it, as I don't think it is a very reliable source," Helen Huang '10 said.

Most people do not perceive Wikipedia to be an adequately reliable resource because anyone can put information on the Web site without any expertise or references. Sometimes, while writing about a current issue, people tend to be more opinionated and do not consider the facts, imposing a bias on the truth.

> "Characterizing Wikipedia as a totally unreliable source is not totally true."
> —James Van Fleet, research services librarian*

At times, entirely wrong information is published out of either ignorance or malice. An article on Wikipedia.org declared John Seigenthaler, a retired journalist and a former editorial page editor at USA TODAY, dead when he was still living. He retaliated through his opinions article in USA TODAY and tried to get legal help in this regard. He failed, as federal law protects companies such as Wikipedia from libel lawsuits. There is no way of knowing or tracing who contributed the information or wrote the article as anyone can register for editing or contribution without any questions asked by Wikipedia's administration.

Even though Wikipedia has proved to be a useful source, the concept lacks the tradition of respect for expertise. This does not mean that Wikipedia is a site that provides entirely wrong information or tries to mislead readers. Wikipedia makes the process of gathering information easier for a lot of us.

"Characterizing Wikipedia as a totally unreliable source is not totally true. Just like Google, it comes in handy when we need some general info. While doing research I would use it as my first source but not the only source. Wikipedia usually points us to the right direction," James Van Fleet, research services librarian, said.

In terms of incorrect information being published on the web site, Fleet said that there are definitely trolls, but they tend to get corrected within a day or two. If you log on to Wikipedia and read an article on Monday, chances are by Thursday it will be changed or updated.

"I would advise students to use judgment when using Wikipedia. It is a good source to take references from, but students should use other resources along with it," Fleet said.

Another tantalizing edition brought to you by ...

Ms. Love and the Bubble

Dear Ms. O,

Lately, my boyfriend and I have had really heated hookup sessions. It sometimes gets to the point where we both want to have sex so badly but I have a lot of religious views about it, and I believe that the guy I do it with should be the one I stay with forever. Of course, it's the 21st century, so it's pretty unrealistic these days, and I can't ask him to plan out his life to figure out whether it includes me in his distant future. But I don't know what to do anymore because it's so hard not to want it lately.

-Confused and Craving

Dear Confused and Craving,

It can be hard to balance out the various aspects of our lives that affect our choices with our own desires. Whether we're influenced by family, friends or religion, we all have to figure out what we believe and what's right for us.

You ultimately have to do what feels comfortable for you.

In the heat of the moment it can be very difficult to keep a grasp on what's going on. You focus on the now and deal with the consequences later. The sex drive can be a very powerful thing.

The important thing is that you're not pushed into doing something you're not comfortable doing. From your question, it seems that your boyfriend respects your ideals and isn't pressuring you to have sex with him. This means you have time to fully come to a decision. Remember, if you decide sex is not the right thing for you now, you can change your mind in the future.

Talking openly with your boyfriend about the situation is a good place to start. Make sure he understands where you're coming from and explain that while you want to have sex, you believe in being with only one man for the rest of your life.

But even if you do discuss your boyfriend's future plans with him, you'll never know exactly what's going to happen over the years. We are in college, we're young and a lot of things will be changing for all of us in the years after graduation. You might not end up where you expect.

That doesn't give you much to go with right now, so you need to figure out what is right for you.

Stop and think about it when you're not hooking up with your boyfriend. What are your thoughts then? Are you totally against having sex if he may not be the one? Is it something you'd consider? Sort out your feelings while you're out of a situation that could sway them.

This moral dilemma may take some time, so don't expect to decide in an hour. Take a few days, weeks, even months if you need it.

If you decide you're ready to have sex and it's truly what you want, then you have your answer. If you have doubts, then now is probably not the time, and furthermore, he may not be the one.

It may seem unrealistic to be with only one person forever, but it is possible. It may not be the easiest choice, but you if believe in a certain way of life, all you can do is stick to it the best you can. It's simply something you have to decide for yourself and commit to, if it's what you really want.

On the other hand, some people think that because sex is such an important part of marriage, it's good for couples to explore their sexual chemistry before tying the knot.

But like I said, we're still young, and there's plenty of time for those decisions. For example, when you get engaged to someone, it may be a better time to test the waters.

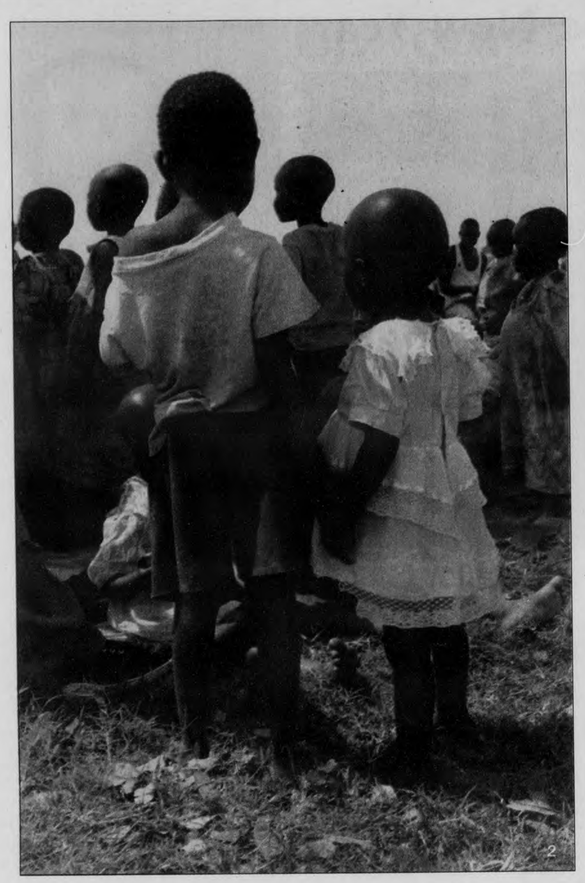
The main message here is you don't want to do something that you're going to regret later, and if you won't be able to live with your decision to have sex, it's better to wait.

They don't always admit it, but a lot of people make mistakes concerning sex that they would like to take back. They didn't want to have sex so soon, or they wish their first time could have meant more. They had sex with someone they wish they hadn't. What seems right at the time can prove to be wrong later.

This is no easy decision. When it comes down to it, you are the only one who can make it. Do what's right for you.

~ Ms. O

E-mail me your questions at MsOintheBubble@yahoo.com or send them through campus mail to Ms. O, The Bucknellian, C-3952. All authors of questions will remain anonymous.



All photos courtesy of Laura Reardon

During her year abroad in Switzerland and Uganda, Laura Reardon '07 had an opportunity to travel around Europe and work with War Child Holland, an organization providing psychological help to children in war-torn countries. 1. View of Geneva 2. Children in Uganda 3. Reardon in an Ugandan village.

A bridge between two worlds

Gaining a new perspective of global issues through year-long study abroad in Uganda and Switzerland

By Laura Reardon
Contributing Writer

From the United Nations (UN) Headquarters in Geneva, Switzerland to the child-friendly space in the Internally Displaced Persons (IDP) camps of Northern Uganda, 2006 has afforded me a world of adventures and learning. I embarked on two semesters abroad in hopes of bringing clarity to the role of international community in development. I wanted answers, but as Elie Weisel said, "There is 'quest' in 'question.'"

In January 2006, I arrived in Geneva. At the School for International Training, I was to focus on International Studies, Organizations and Social Justice.

I lived with a family outside of Geneva in the quaint village of Givrins. Every morning I took a little red train down the mountain, where another train took me into Geneva and announced our arrival at Gare Cornavin in at least three languages.

My family, like most families in Geneva, was international. My host father was from the United States and my host mother was from Zurich, so my three host sisters spoke French, English, German and Swiss German.

Each day our group of 23 students from various American universities formed the audience for different international organizations, including the International Organization for Migration, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and many others. These organizations all acknowledged that they weren't perfect. They expressed their desire to do more and were trying their best within the jurisdiction of their mandates and member states. The problem was one they did not know how to fix.

Despite being academically rigorous and time consuming like many European study abroad programs, I did manage to have some adventures. Educational excursions brought me to Paris, Bern, Luzern and Lugano. My personal adventures brought me to the Torino Olympics and cities like Venice, Barcelona, Nice, Montpellier and London. The adventures came complete with low-budget student perks like hostel stays and overnight trains.

My next quest brought me to Kampala, Uganda where hostels and trains seemed like luxury items. I was no longer the American who clumsily spoke French, but instead I was a "mzungu" (the Ugandan term for white people). Everyday, people yelled it as I walked the streets of Kampala.

I lived there with a family of seven brothers. Instead of taking the train home daily, I conquered the Kampala taxi park. I would squeeze into 14-passenger taxi vans, usually carrying 20, sweating in Kampala traffic on my commute to and from the village.

The program in Uganda allowed for the exploration of all aspects of development in a Ugandan context and its greater international implications. We explored Ugandan culture, history and politics. I conducted group discussions on gender-based and sexual violence in the slums of Kampala.

We also lived in rural villages in eastern Uganda and conducted research on elements of rural poverty, asking community members about issues facing their village.

Uganda was not without its adventures. I went on excursions to Queen Elizabeth National Park, Sipi Falls and the Rwandan capital of Kigali.

During my final six weeks I lived in Lira, one of the northern districts of Uganda. I worked with War Child Holland, an organization that provides psychosocial support for children in armed conflict.

Having completed theoretical research on art as a psychosocial therapy in Geneva, I approached the experience with hopes of gaining a better understanding of how programs operate practically. I had an unforgettable internship experience working with children in the IDP camps of Lira.

Children involved in armed conflict are often deprived of normal childhood activities that allow them to develop as individuals and as part of a community. Using art, music, drama, sports and games, I worked with War Child Holland to restore these essential elements to their lives. I had the opportunity to experience all areas of psychosocial development that the organization was overseeing in the Lira district.

As I walked through the pothole-ridden streets of Lira, washed my clothes in a basin or read by candlelight, I couldn't help thinking about how this was a world so different from mine. It knew more about American politics than many Americans. This was a world that could tell you the exact date of the northeastern United States blackout because Ugandans have at least one every other day. And yet, I come from a place of immense technology in which few people know or care about the world I visited.

On one of my final days in Lira, while implementing a program in an Alebtong IDP camp, my Ugandan colleague asked what I was going to do for the displaced children of northern Uganda when I returned to America. In a moment of honesty, I said, "I don't know what to do. I wouldn't even know where to begin. Should I begin with housing, water, security, education, clothes, health care, food or so many of the other things these children need?"

My colleague simply said, "Pick one. You pick one and you do as much as you can, knowing that you will never be able to provide everything for everyone."

Thinking back on the many debates I had about the ethical dilemmas of post-colonialism and development, I said, "How do I, as a 21-year-old American, who has never been a child in Uganda, decide what these children need?"

He said, "You ask them."

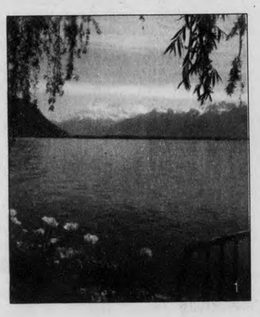
I guess that is the ultimate answer of my quest. Ask more questions, not only of the children, but of everyone. Ask people what they need, ask organizations what they're doing and how they're doing it and ask governments to take responsibility. Just keep asking.

I learned to ask questions of myself as well. Why was I in Uganda? What will my role in development be?

Towards the end of my stay in Uganda, my host mother told me that the world is round. That means people can always meet.

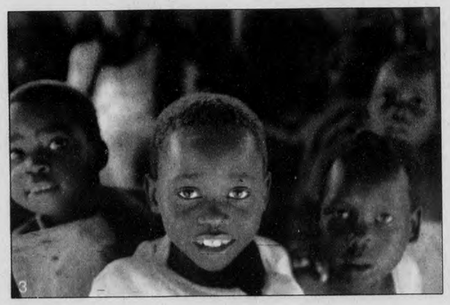
It is also in constant motion. We have the ability to move with it, to meet people from across the globe, to serve as bridges between mountains and hopefully to meet those people that touch our hearts once again.

Ask more questions, not only of the children, but of everyone. Ask people what they need, ask organizations what they're doing and how they're doing it and ask governments to take responsibility. Just keep asking.



All photos courtesy of Laura Reardon

Laura Reardon '07 spent 2006 studying abroad in Switzerland and Uganda. 1. Swiss Alps 2. Reardon with group at the equator 3. Children at the Alebtong IDP camp



BUCKNELL UNIVERSITY
MAR 0 2 2007
LEWISBURG, PA

The Bucknellian

March 2, 2007

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

Volume 139, Number 6 | Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue | www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Weis what?

The Weis Center serves as a cultural center for the entire Lewisburg area. Read more about its history in Features.

See page A8

University considers free speech pledge

By Bucknellian Staff

Bucknell Student Government (BSG) and the Committee on Complimentary Activities (CCA) have proposed a University Pledge of Responsibility that would help protect freedom of expression on campus while prohibiting harassment and discrimination. (See the text of the proposed document on page A3.)

The pledge is currently awaiting final approval from University President Brian Mitchell. If passed, it could become part of the student handbook as early as the fall 2007 semester.

It is unclear when a final decision will be made about implementing the pledge.

"The president will release a statement about the University Pledge of Responsibility in the future," said Alessandro Zanelli, student co-chair of the CCA.

Since BSG proposed the pledge two years ago, it has undergone many revisions. BSG and CCA presented a draft at the February faculty meeting. The most recent version submitted to Mitchell contains minor changes but was unavailable as of press time.

Most students have not seen a draft of the pledge in more than a year, but faculty members seemed to support the document presented at the faculty meeting.

"I strongly feel that it protects students' rights and expressions. But it protects the faculty also," said Elizabeth Capaldi, assistant professor of Biology and Animal Behavior.

While the University's pledge protects students from being evaluated in the classroom based on their personal beliefs, it also holds students responsible for learning different points of view that are part of the course material, Capaldi said.

The pledge is intended to be consistent with the American Association of

See PLEDGE page A3

Week 3 RecycleMania RESULTS

Per Capita Classic
(pounds recycled per student)

Bucknell's rank:

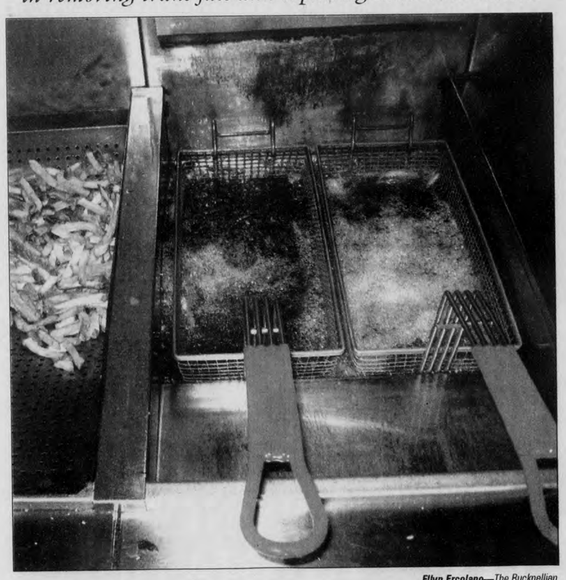
48th place

Illustration by Ryan Winn
Source: recyclemaniacs.org

The University ranked 48 out of 165 schools in the Per Capita Classic, or recyclables per student, after the third week of RecycleMania. Leading the pack in this category was Sheldon Jackson College (Sitka, Alaska). The recycling rate is the combination of pounds of material recycled per student and pounds of waste minimized per student. For more RecycleMania statistics turn to A7.

Healthier alternatives used by Dining Services

Parkhurst beat the nations's largest cities by a year in removing trans fats and replacing them with canola



Elyn Ercolano—The Bucknellian

Cafeteria french fries, and all other campus foods, are cooked in canola oil. Dining Services made the switch in August of 2005, beating Philadelphia and New York City to ban trans fats in foods.

By Ahmed Kodouda
Writer

Bucknell Dining Services has removed trans-fatty acids, more commonly known as trans fats, from the cooking oil used in all its facilities since August 2005, beating the current national trend by over a year. Dining Services has been using canola oil, a non-trans fat oil, as the primary cooking oil instead.

"Trans fats are basically chemically-produced fats and currently are at the top of the list of 'bad fats,'" Dining Services employee Brian Ritchie said.

According to Ritchie, studies have shown that trans fats increase bad cholesterol while reducing good cholesterol. These effects are the reason for the concern and the media attention the issue is receiving.

"We have switched to using non-trans fat fryer oil. We currently use 100 percent natural canola oil, which has not been chemically modified and is low in saturated fat," Ritchie said. "Food fried in saturated fats to me tastes heavier, just the cost is higher because it doesn't last as long."

On July 1, 2005, the University contracted Parkhurst Dining Services as the official University dining services provider. Parkhurst made the switch from trans fat to canola oil just one month after arriving at the University. It was an expensive venture but John Cummins, general manager of Bucknell Dining, assures students that they do not have to help carry the burden.

"The switch from trans fat to canola oil has been costly but it does not affect the students that we serve," Cummins said. "Anything that we do, whether we have organic or local fruits or even going to trans fat-free oils, those costs are never passed on to the community in the resident dining program."

An Aug. 17, 2005 press release from Parkhurst Dining Services announced the switch from trans fats to canola oil.

"We spent more than a year of research, development and testing to ensure we chose the highest quality product. We found a canola oil that was able to meet our high standards for flavor while providing zero trans fats and lower saturated fat," said Brooks Broadhurst, vice president of purchasing for Parkhurst Dining Services.

"Our food will have a clean, fresh taste while delivering the health benefits of trans fat-free and lower saturated fat cooking," the press release said.

Broadhurst said that many corporate, university and museum cafés served by Parkhurst

See DINING page A2

Fraternity forms local scholarship

By Emilie Linsenmeyer
Writer

Phi Kappa Psi fraternity has started a new scholarship program this year based upon its founding principle, "The Great Joy of Serving Others."

Lewisburg Area High School seniors, both male and female, are eligible to apply for this merit-based award if they plan to attend a four-year university the upcoming year.

Applicants must submit an essay discussing how they exemplify the fraternity's founding principle during their high school career. The essay for the application is paramount to the decision-making process. In addition, recommendation letters from school officials and descriptions of extracurricular activities are also necessary for evaluation of the applicants. A five-member committee appointed by the chapter's executive board will review the applications.

"The scholarship was established to create a better connection for Phi Psi with

See PHI PSI page A3

INSIDE THIS ISSUE

OPINIONS
Adopting the Pledge of Responsibility would represent the University's commitment to free speech on campus.
A4

FEATURES
After the third week of RecycleMania, how does the University compare to other Pennsylvania schools?
A7

A&E
Busy last Sunday night? Not to worry—Arts & Entertainment brings you a recap of the 79th Annual Academy Awards.
B8

SPORTS
The Bison men's lacrosse team defeated Hobart in Baltimore, Md. last Saturday.
B1

Public Safety Log

Wednesday, Feb. 21

ALARM-FIRE—Computer Storage: Caused by faulty batteries.

Thursday, Feb. 22

WATER SPILL—Swartz Hall: Trash can full of water spilled when room door was opened.

ALARM-FIRE—Kappa Delta Rho Fraternity: Caused by cooking.

Friday, Feb. 23

PROPERTY/LOST—Phi Psi Fraternity: Student lost a cell phone.

THEFT—Langone Center: Purse and contents stolen.

Saturday, Feb. 24

ASSIST OTHER AGENCY—St George Street: Officer assisted LPD with an intoxicated student.

ALARM-FIRE—Galloway House: Caused by dirty detector.

HARASSMENT/WRITTEN—7th Street Café: Report of an inappropriate note being investigated.

Sunday, Feb. 25

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Swartz Hall: Underage student cited for alcohol consumption.

ALARM-INTRUSION—Langone Gallery: Cause unknown.

Monday, Feb. 26

VANDALISM—Carey House Parking Lot: Unknown person(s) observed entering a vehicle.

THEFT—Student Health Services: Equipment stolen.

ALARM-FIRE—Bucknell West Mod 17: Alarm caused by cooking on the right side.

Tuesday, Feb. 27

ALARM-FIRE—Bucknell West Mod 23: Alarm caused by cooking on the left side of Mod.

College off-campus fires a wake-up call

By Sophia Leong
Contributing Writer

Recent fires at Susquehanna University and Boston University have left several students possession-less, homeless, and even dead, emphasizing the importance of obeying safety precautions and ordinances especially for off campus residents.

While living downtown allows for freedom and growth, it also raises an issue of discipline and responsibility—especially when abiding by ordinances and safety precautions. The tenants are the main agents for maintaining and fulfilling inspection requirements, "but it is the students' responsibility to make sure that the house they choose to live in is safe," said Charles Fritzges, the current Off-Campus Living Coordinator.

Fritzges said that other than alcohol violations or other disciplinary decisions that revoke an off-campus privilege, all upperclassmen are given equal opportunities for approval to live downtown. Off-campus housing candidates are assumed and respected as mature and responsible adults.

Along with several mandatory sessions that off-campus candidates attend, featuring speakers such as the Mifflinburg fire chief, students are given a checklist of things to look out for when shopping for a downtown house. Consisting of 19 items, the list includes a range of safety regulations from minor requirements such as a visible property address to major regulations such as mandatory smoke detectors and safe electrical systems.

"We definitely encourage more and more landlords to transition to upgraded technology such as smoke detectors that are connected to the electric utilities to prevent tampering and removal," Fritzges said. But aside from providing the checklist and information on borough ordinances, University's Housing and Residential Life Coordinators are not responsible for inspections or follow-ups on the safety of the downtown properties housing about 365 Bucknell students.

Studies have shown that a main factor in off-campus fires is overcrowding from the social scene.

"Sometimes, you can't even open the door without hitting a crowd of people," said Josh Lercher '09. "It's dark, it's crowded, people have been drinking—it's fun, but it's an accident waiting to happen."

Lynn Pierson, the Residential Life Coordinator, sympathizes with students who are victims of poorly managed downtown houses. However, Pierson also agrees that it is the students' responsibility to be aware of their surroundings and to obey ordinances and regulations.

"It is a learning process to be prepared for life after graduation. Nobody is going to give you a checklist of things to look for in your future home," said Pierson.

Bucknellian archives

One of the many downtown houses available for students. Recent college fires have raised concerns with off-campus living.

The University is also not responsible for re-housing students if a dorm falls prey to such natural disasters, but Daniel Remley, dean of students and director of Housing and Residential Life, said that the University would be willing to aid its homeless students.

"We would gladly take those students back on campus—students always come first," said Remley. The Housing and Residential Department has shown swift support for relocating off-campus students in event of past emergencies.

Regardless of a student's housing situation, the University is not liable for any damages or losses to personal property incurred from natural disasters—in fact, such terms are stated very clearly in the housing contract. However, several students currently living on campus were surprised about this provision when handed a copy of the contract.

"You never really pay attention to fine prints. But often those are the things that matter," Justin Chow '10 said.

The only recommendation?

"Fire insurance" says Remley. "We send brochures to every student along with the contract."

Parkhurst cooks without trans fats are seeing this trend emerge because parents and young adults alike are interested in improving their health. In addition, corporate venues are seeking ways to provide healthier food for employees.

DINING From page A1

"New York City made trans fats illegal for restaurants to cook with a year and a half after we did it. We are a small company compared to some others but we're very focused on community and are very concerned about the health of our customers," Cummins said.

Students are pleased with Dining Services' efforts to make their food healthier. "I think it was a very good decision to take trans fats out of Bucknell Dining's oil. It shows that they truly care about our health," Caitlin Farren '10 said.

"[Bucknell Dining] has taken a really big step in terms of this issue and we did it very early on because we're conscious of what we're doing," Cummins said. "Brian [Ritchie] has local connections for bagels and artisan breads that are locally produced and being able to support the local community is very important to us also."

Philadelphia also banned trans fat early in February. New York City is phasing out all of artificial trans fat oils by July 2008.

"We are a small company compared to some others, but we're very focused on community and are very concerned about the health of our customers."

—John Cummins, Parkhurst general manager

University heightens admission standards

By Jeremy O'Sullivan
Writer

As University admissions staff forecast a higher yield rate from applicants of the Class of 2011 and upperclassmen retention rates continue to climb, admissions officials aim to cut the number of future acceptances.

"We're predicting that we could go to as low as 30 percent this year," said Kurt Thiede, vice president for enrollment management and dean of admissions.

The estimated 3 percent decrease in acceptances, down from last year's rate of 33 percent, marks a positive trend for the University.

While some suspect the declining acceptance rate to be a result of a rise in applicants this year, the actual numbers are surprisingly slightly lower than last year's applicant pool. The University's increasing retention rate is the cause for the acceptance rate decrease

"This year, between the two semesters, we averaged 3,390 students on campus when we should be at 3,350," Thiede said. "That number is not where we want to be with our facilities."

Some students believe that the student body is feeling the burden from those extra students.

"Too often the gym is so crowded it's even difficult to work out," Emanuel Araica '09 said.

In order to decrease the number of students, the admissions team reduced its target of 915 entering freshman to 900, while also cutting back on transfer student acceptances.

Additionally, the Office of Admissions expects to be more precise in its method of determining whether or not an accepted student is likely to enroll. This will add to the University's percentage yield.

"We're creating a model that allows a student, within this group of 9000 applications, to distinguish themselves," Thiede said. Once an application is submitted, the model will help predetermine whether or not an applicant will enroll if accepted.

The Office of Admissions has high hopes for the future of the University.

"We're going through a market adjustment" Thiede said. "With the new initiatives, the Plan for Bucknell [and] Pete Mackey, our new communications officer, the message about Bucknell is going to be much more consistent and compelling in the future."

Want to get the inside scoop?
Write for news!

E-mail etu001@

Nancy's Nu-Wave Salon
look your best
Wax Specials
Five Brows $7
Upper Lip $5
Chin $10
Bikini $15
Full Legs $35
Knees Down $20
Under Arms $15
Back $25
Main Street (Rte 45) Montandon
524-2315
www.nancysnuwave.com

CatmanDo
Handyman Services
Specializing in small home repair jobs:
Custom Carpentry
Painting
Light construction
Greg H Mathias
570-524-4724
Free Estimates Fully insured

WWW.TOYOTALIVEWEB.COM
AS A COLLEGE GRAD, YOU MAY BE ELIGIBLE FOR $400 EGO
ANY NEW TOYOTA OF YOUR CHOICE*
2007 FJ CRUISER
2007 COROLLA
2007 YARIS
TOYOTA moving forward
TOYOTA
buyatoyota.com
*NOT ALL CUSTOMERS WILL QUALIFY. CUSTOMERS RECEIVE $400 FROM TOYOTA TOWARDS LEASING OR FINANCING THE PURCHASE OF NEW UNTITLED TOYOTA MODELS THROUGH PARTICIPATING TOYOTA DEALERS AND TOYOTA FINANCIAL SERVICES. SEE DEALER OR VISIT WWW.TOYOTAFINANCIAL.COM/FINANCE FOR DETAILS. COLLEGE GRADUATE PROGRAM IS SUBJECT TO CHANGE OR TERMINATION AT ANY TIME.

Pledge of Responsibility proposed

PLEDGE From page A1

University Professors Joint Statement (AAUP) on Rights and Freedoms of Students, which stresses the importance of "freedom to teach and freedom to learn." Members of a campus community should be free to express their views, but they also have the responsibility to respect other points of view, the AAUP statement says.

Some faculty members questioned how the University would balance freedom of speech with its obligation to prohibit harassment and discrimination.

"What if an anti-Semitic or racist speaker was invited to campus? Would Bucknell think it compatible with its ethos to allow a student group to host, and advertise, such a speaker?" said David Thunder, visiting assistant professor of political science, who saw the document but was not present at the faculty meeting.

The original draft of the pledge included a clause pertaining to sexual assault that was removed in the version presented to the faculty. A separate task force under the Office of the Provost, consisting of students, faculty, administration and community members, is investigating the proper responses to sexual assault issues, Capaldi said.

—Nilanjana Saha, Michelle Laxer and Evan Unger contributed to this report

Mission

Bucknell is a unique national university where liberal arts and professional programs complement each other. Bucknell educates students for a lifetime of critical thinking and strong leadership characterized by continued intellectual exploration, creativity, and imagination. A Bucknell education enables students to interact daily with faculty who exemplify a passion for learning and a dedication to teaching and scholarship. Bucknell fosters a residential, co-curricular environment in which students develop intellectual maturity, personal conviction and strength of character, informed by a deep understanding of different cultures and diverse perspectives. Bucknell seeks to educate our students to serve the common good and to promote justice in ways sensitive to the moral and ethical dimensions of life.

Pledge of University Responsibility

In order to foster and protect an environment in which students can develop intellectual maturity, personal conviction and strength of character, the University recognizes its responsibility to provide support without undue restraint, to provide mentors rather than mandates, to allow individual exploration without institutional confinement. The University also recognizes its role and responsibilities as an entity organized under and subject to regulations of the federal and state governments, and must measure its allowances and restraints in accord with those laws, regulations and institutional authority. This Pledge of University Responsibility is intended to be consistent with the AAUP Joint Statement on Rights and Freedoms of Students.

Within those limitations, as an institution committed to serve the common good and promote justice, the University recognizes its responsibilities:

To protect freedom of expression. Students should be free to support causes by orderly means which do not disrupt the regular and essential operations of the institution. Students should be free to take reasoned exception to the data or views offered in courses of study and to reserve judgment about matters of opinion, but they are responsible for learning the content of any course of study for which they are enrolled. Students should be protected against academic evaluations based upon matters unrelated to academic standards. Student groups may select persons they wish to invite as guest speakers or performers, without restrictions on points of view expressed by speakers.

To protect students' confidential information. The University has an obligation to protect students from improper disclosure of confidential information or records.

The protect freedom of student associations. Students should be free to organize and join associations to promote their common interests.

To provide fair and impartial treatment. In all instances of general discipline, academic discipline, and academic evaluation, the student has the right to fair and impartial treatment.

To prohibit harassment or discrimination. The University has an obligation to prohibit harassment or discrimination based on sex, race, color, national origin, religion, ancestry, sexual orientation, gender identity, disability or veteran status.

To protect the privacy of students. Students shall not be subjected to unreasonable searches or seizures of their personal property.

To involve students in policy decisions. Students shall have the opportunity to participate in the formulation of policy directly affecting students through membership on appropriate committees or other recognized governance bodies within the University, and to assist in the recommendations and advice of those committees and governance bodies for the President's consideration.

This draft of the pledge, dated Feb. 1, 2007, was presented at the February faculty meeting

Fraternity funds local scholarship

PHI PSI From page A1

the local community," said Jack Bierwirth '08, Phi Kappa Psi president. "It was not long ago when many of our brothers were receiving scholarships in high school.

This will give the recipient one more opportunity to dive into whatever academic adventure that lies ahead of him or her. It's another opportunity for us to use our resources for the betterment of others."

The contributions of fraternity members, alumni, friends and family provide the funding for the scholarship program. Since the chapter is still receiving donations, the final award amount has not yet been determined, but it will be at least $300.

The fraternity hopes to make this an annual award to reward the efforts of Lewisburg Area seniors.

"Local scholarships are a big part of why I was able to attend Bucknell," said Dean Parmiter '08, Phi Kappa Psi vice president. "I feel that giving recognition in the form of a scholarship is a great way to support the students of the local community."

In keeping with this tradition, all scholarship applicants must prove their commitment to helping others.

The final applicant decision will be made in mid- to late-April, and the award will be presented during the awards assembly of the high school in May.

Phi Kappa Psi's dedication to service can be traced back in the fraternity's history. During an epidemic of influenza in the 19th century, the brothers spent many nights caring for ill friends. In keeping with this tradition, all scholarship applicants must prove their commitment to helping others.

"The scholarship is designed to reward someone who displays the values Phi Kappa Psi believes in. We want to commend someone who has shown a real dedication to community service and ideal of 'The great joy of serving others,'" said Andrew Shea '08, corresponding secretary of the fraternity.

Fellow University students are very pleased with this development.

"I think this scholarship is a wonderfully unique opportunity because it enables students to empower other students," Daria Megotz '10 said. "I'm so happy to see Phi Psi reaching out to the Lewisburg community. I wish I had an opportunity for a scholarship like this in high school."

Recycle this newspaper!

"Turn your Power ON and Add LIFE to your Years!"
MORRISON'S ADVANCED CHIROPRACTIC CARE
Michael D. Morrison D.C.
1205 W Market Street
Lewisburg, PA 17837
Office: 570-523-1221
A Healthy Spine Equals a Healthy YOU!
Bucknell Students may receive a free exam and x-rays (if needed) with mention of this advertisement.

COLDWELL BANKER
PENN ONE REAL ESTATE
Thank You, Bucknell!!
For thirty years of calling Bucknell and Lewisburg home.
Susan Warner-Mills, Sales Associate
Competence, Integrity, Service
524-7500; swm@coldwellbanker.com

Greek Isles Salon & Spa
328 Market Street Suite 1
Lewisburg, PA 17837
570-524-5454
www.greekislessalon.com
20% Off any service with this coupon!

News Briefs

Alumnus receives literary award

Philip Roth '54 is the 2007 recipient of the PEN/Faulkner literary award for his fictional work, "Everyman," according to The Washington Post. His novel "Operation Shylock" won the award in 1994, and in 2001 he won again for "The Human Stain." He is the first writer to win the award three times.

"Everyman" follows the protagonist's physical deterioration, ultimately leading to his death. According to an interview with SPIEGEL magazine, inspiration came from the three or four funerals of his closest friends during the couple of years before he started writing "Everyman," Roth said.

"What hit me so hard about 'Everyman' was its intensity, and its systematic, pitiless stripping away of false comforts—and then real comforts," said writer David Gates, one of the three judges.

Roth will be awarded $15,000 and the four runners-up will receive $5,000 each. Roth has won all of the major American literary awards, some more than once. He has begun his latest novel, "Exit Ghost," which is scheduled for release this fall.

Sorority evicts members for weight and race

The DePauw University chapter of the Delta Zeta sorority has been the cause of controversy for the past couple of months when its national officers evicted 23 members, claiming that they were "insufficiently committed" to recruitment and their sorority, reported The New York Times. The decisions were based on interviews that were to determine the members' dedication to recruitment.

The chapter was suffering with recruitment numbers, which Pam Propsom, a psychology professor at DePauw, attributed to the sorority's reputation on campus. Every single one of the women asked to leave was overweight and they also included the only black, Korean and Vietnamese members in the chapter.

"The dozen students allowed to stay were slender and popular with fraternity men — conventionally pretty women the sorority hoped could attract new recruits," the Times said. Six of the 12 women left Delta Zeta in response to the actions of their national officers.

There has been an outrage on the DePauw campus that resulted in student protests, angry letters from parents and alumni, a faculty petition against the sorority, and a two-page letter from the University president, Robert G. Bottoms, reprimanding the chapter. Delta Zeta's national headquarters claimed image had nothing to do with their decisions and it was based solely on commitment. The national officers declined to be interviewed by the Times.

Middlebury College bans Wikipedia for research

The history department at Middlebury College in Vermont has banned the use of Wikipedia as a research source and students are not allowed to cite Wikipedia in papers or exams, reported the New York Times.

Middlebury history professor Neil Waters urged the department to institute the ban when he realized his students were using Wikipedia as a study guide and even cited it as a research source. He came to the realization when he noticed half a dozen of students in his Japanese history class made the same glaring error on their exams.

The ban went into effect earlier this month. Middlebury held a discussion about the new policy on Monday. However, a citation ban will not discourage students from referring to the site.

"A total ban on Wikipedia would have been impractical, not to mention close-minded, because Wikipedia is simply too handy to expect students never to consult it," said Don Wyatt, the history department chairman at Middlebury.

Vice president target of suicide bombing

Vice President Dick Cheney was the target of a suicide bombing that occurred Tuesday during his stay in Afghanistan. He was not injured. According to CNN.com, the bomber attacked the main entrance to a U.S. military base, which killed 23 people and injured another 20.

Cheney spent the night at the Bagram Air Base and spent time with U.S. troops before his meeting with Afghanistan president Hamid Karzai. The suicide bomber attacked the base around 10 a.m., before Cheney had left to meet with Karzai.

"I heard a loud boom," Cheney said. "The Secret Service came in and told me there had been an attack on the main gate." His was relocated to an on-base bomb shelter. Officials say that Cheney was not near the site of the attack. The Taliban has claimed responsibility, but White House deputy press secretary Dana Perino would not confirm that the Taliban was behind the attack.

The Bucknellian
Famded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue
Volume 139, Number 6
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu
http://www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Editor-in-Chief
Andrew Larson '08

Associate Editor of Content
Matthew Saylor '08

Associate Editor of Layout
Lily Beauvilliers '09

Business Manager
Jared Napolitano '08

Senior Editor
Catie Heverling '07

News Editors
Evan Unger '09
Julia Fuchs '09
Michelle Laxer '09

Opinions Editors
Michael Dippery '08
Hallie Stebbins '08

Sports Editors
Barbara Perlman '09
Brian Mulligan '08
Shannon Pitsch '09

Features Editors
Nilanjana Saha '09
Brianna DelValle '10

Arts & Entertainment Editors
Janna Shapiro '08
Genna Jerrard '10

Photography Editors
Ryan Winn '08
Ellyn Ercolano '09

Chief Copy Editor
Molly Clay (grad)

Asst. Chief Copy Editor
Anna Juan '08

Advertising Managers
Meredith Reighard '07
Katie Casteel '08
Elaine Teng '09

Office Manager
Kate Wood '07

Circulation Manager
Adam Kahler '07

Subscriptions Manager
John Ostrow '09

Cartoonist
Juliana Su '09

Adviser
James F. Lee

Op-Ed Policy
The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editor-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 600 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

Publishing Information
The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

Subscription Information
Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Bucknell University, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print office.

Advertising Policy
The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577- 1085. Copyright © 2007 The Bucknellian

The Bucknellian EDITORIAL

Pledge proposal fuels market of ideas

The University Pledge of Responsibility, currently awaiting President Brian Mitchell's stamp of approval, fills a much-needed void by defining the campus community's rights in an environment where the Constitution doesn't always apply.

When students enroll at a private school such as the University, they effectively relinquish their right to freedom of speech.

As it stands, the University's student handbook forbids students from deliberately interfering with the free speech of others, but there is no clause promising that the University will do the same.

The proposed pledge states that the University will actively foster an environment for expressing a wide range of views, but it also holds members of the campus community responsible for respecting the views of others.

In the classroom, for example, students may be expected to learn material they don't agree with. On that same token, faculty would not be allowed to grade students based on their personal beliefs.

Although the pledge may not grant the campus any rights the Constitution doesn't already provide, it is a fine reminder that students should feel free to express themselves, while extending the courtesy of tolerance to others. Everyone on this campus is mature enough to coexist with others who are different, whether in terms of their ideals of in terms of their skin color or ancestry.

Most professors already encourage an open dialogue in class and don't grade based on their personal viewpoints. But the pledge institutionalizes this unwritten rule, empowering students to take action against impartial grading were it ever to occur.

Before approving the pledge, it bears considering how it would affect other aspects of campus life outside of the classroom.

One clause protects students from unreasonable search and seizure of their personal property. Does that affect the ability of the University to conduct room inspections during breaks? And who defines such a subjective term as "unreasonable?"

The pledge, which promises to prohibit discrimination and harassment, also brings up the question of campus speakers. How would the pledge treat a speaker from the Ku Klux Klan, or a student organization connected to it? Does the freedom of student associations to promote their common interests trump the need to prohibit discrimination? We hope not.

The idea of the University Pledge of Responsibility is right on target. The campus should strive to open up the floodgates to the marketplace of ideas that underpins democracy.

But before the pledge is implemented as University policy, the campus should have ample opportunity to engage in a discussion about its implications, for that is precisely the kind of open dialogue the pledge intends to promote.

Letters to the Editor

Snowplows wasteful, loud

To the Editor:

When I read the featured editorial about how we should give more money to Psychological Services my initial thought was, "Oh great, I get to pay Bucknell even more!" On Saturday morning at 10 a.m., I changed my thoughts on the matter. We should give them all the money they need and take money away from the snowplow workers!

I am sure you are aware that the blizzard of '07 started on Tuesday the 13th. The snowplows stopped plowing at 4:30 p.m., and me and the rest of the student body had to slip and slide our way through the snow to and from dinner and evening classes. The plows did a great job the next day and I bet the drivers were just smiling away as they got paid to plow the same spot over and over again. Heck, I think all of us cash-tight college students envied them a little bit that day.

The problem continued for the rest of the week. By the end of the week, the plows had the paths completely cleared of any residual snow. The next Saturday, I was rudely awoken at 10 a.m. as a snow plow went around in circles outside my window. What was there to plow? About four inches of snow from each side of every path in the Larison-Vedder Quad. At this point, I should probably note that I am a very grumpy person when I am woken up.

Maybe we can forgive the plows for last Saturday; I mean, the paths were a bit on the narrow side. Throughout the week, I watched snow plows running, not clearing anything remotely useful. I saw one on the uphill side of the O'Leary Center, scooping up the snow from the spot in between the sidewalk and the road, then driving it to a little pile. I saw the huge bulldozer on 7th Street in front of the Elaine Langone Center plowing the snow from what could have been the flower bed. He then proceeded to drive all the way down Moore Avenue to some unknown location past the parking lots.

As I read in last week's incident reports, at least two students know what happens when the snowplowers get bored—students' cars get dented.

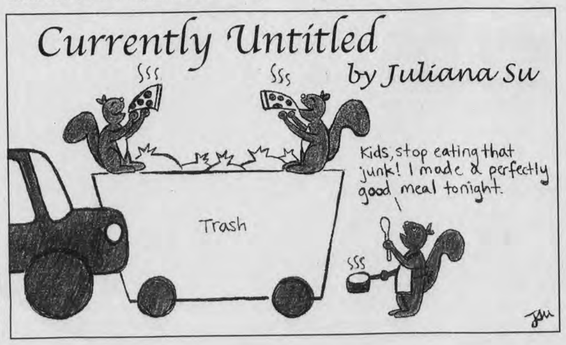
And have you noticed all of the ugly brown snow and mud? The snowplows kept scraping that little bit of snow off the path and eventually ran out of path so they started clearing the snow next to the path. This is a really good use of my tuition dollars.

The final straw was this last Saturday morning, a full week and a half since the Valentine's Day snowstorm (and not to mention four or five days of above-freezing temperatures) when I was woken up again. What was Mr. Plow doing?

Nothing but scraping the bare asphalt (which is a great sound, let me tell you) so that he can push that last tiny little bit of snow off of the path, and off of the foot of dead grass onto either side of the path. Thank you Mr. Snowplow Driver. I hope I don't see you again until the spring, when you come back with your tractor to reseed all the grass you destroyed.

Sincerely,

Bryan Metz '08



"Freedom of the press, if it means anything at all, means the freedom to criticize and oppose."

- Eric Arthur Blair

Write for Ops. E-mail mdippery@

Internet addiction a legitimate disability

In a growing debate, courts question the legitimacy of Internet addiction in the American workplace

By Liz Stein
Contributing Writer

As technology continues to develop, our society is faced with more legal concerns and moral dilemmas. With the expansion of the Internet, an increasing number of issues have surfaced, filling our courtrooms with lawsuits relating to fraud, drug trafficking and harassment. Growing usage of the Internet has also led to controversy in the workplace, with workers freely accessing various Web sites, and in some cases, abusing their privilege to do so.

In a pending lawsuit involving an employee's improper use of the Internet during work hours, a U.S. District Court in New York readdresses the debate over whether Internet overuse is an addiction. According to the Associated Press, IBM fired a man for visiting an adult chat room while he was at work and is "suing the company for $5 million, claiming he is an Internet addict who deserves treatment and sympathy rather than dismissal."

James Pacenza, 58, of Montgomery, N.Y., was employed at IBM's Corporation's plant in East Fishkill for 19 years. In May 2003, Pacenza was fired when a fellow employee discovered a sexually explicit conversation from a chat room left open on Pacenza's computer and reported it to their superiors. While IBM maintains that use of this Web site "was a violation of its business conduct guidelines and a misuse of company property," according to CNN, Pacenza claims IBM is guilty of wrongful termination and could have done more to examine the situation, such as limiting his use of the Internet or blocking certain sites.

Pacenza, who has a wife and two children, said he "visits chat rooms as treatment for traumatic stress incurred in 1969 when he saw his best friend killed during an Army patrol in Vietnam," said ABC News. "The stress caused him to become a sex addict, and with the development of the Internet, an Internet addict."

IBM has asked Judge Stephen Robinson for a summary judgment, claiming the case is without merit. Pacenza alleges protection under the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA).

Cases like Pacenza's are not so simple anymore, as a result of the growing debate over whether compulsive Internet use is a valid addiction, similar to alcoholism. According to MSNBC, if courts recognize Internet abuse as an addiction, and not just a bad habit, the condition could be redefined as a psychological impairment worthy of protection by the ADA. And this is just what should be done.

Companies would be forced to deal accordingly with workplace Internet use and abuse by allowing medical leave, providing therapy, or accommodating employees who are unable to control their use of the Internet, according to Brian East, co-chair of the disability rights committee of the National Employment Lawyers' Association. This way, once Internet abuse is recognized as an addiction, it would become more difficult for employers to fire employees who have a problem, thus protecting their rights as disabled persons.

Several issues arise in this intense dispute. For starters, many people question whether or not Internet addiction is an actual disability. Critics ask, how one can define the disability, and what steps, if any, can be taken to reconcile the problem? Unfortunately, according to MSNBC, "the American Psychiatric Association (APA) doesn't include Internet addiction in the Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders, Fourth Edition, which serves as the basis for many ADA claims related to mental disabilities." Because the condition is not specifically addressed, it becomes particularly difficult to measure the compulsive behavior in the eyes of the law, as seen in the IBM case.

Yet if the addiction is eventually included as a disability by the APA, in 2012, at the earliest, when the next edition is scheduled to be released, the courts would have to articulate a case like Pacenza's in a more lenient manner. In other words, once Internet addiction is recognized as a legitimate disability, courts will have to rule as they would in cases of alcoholism—in favor of rehabilitation rather than dismissal. But even without such a regulation, IBM should not have terminated Pacenza without careful consideration and further examination into the details of the situation.

There are many open-ended questions attached to this controversy, most of which stem from our society's inability to cope with the many side effects of living in a "dot-com" world. According to psychologist Kimberly Young, founder of the Center for Internet Addiction Recovery in Bradford, Pa, "the U.S. lags behind other countries in its recognition of compulsive Internet use as a legitimate addiction worthy of specialized treatment."

In other countries, like Korea and China, compulsive Internet use is understood as a medical condition that needs to be treated. Korea, where a 24-year-old died after playing an online game nonstop for 86 hours, has instituted a Centre for Internet Addiction Prevention & Counseling in an effort to facilitate a growing population of Internet addicts.

The United States, regarded as the most technologically-advanced society in the world, needs to wake up and address the issue at hand, as our Eastern counterparts have done. Internet addiction is not an isolated phenomenon; it is a problem that needs to be addressed as a medical condition and should be protected under the ADA. It is the duty of companies like IBM to support their employees and assist them in their struggles, instead of persecuting them for a disability over which they do not have control.

McCain blames Rumsfeld for problems with Iraq war

By Lauren Berninger
Writer

Republican presidential hopeful John McCain has certainly gotten his share of the press spotlight over the past week. The senator from Arizona has not been hesitant to openly criticize high-ranking Washington officials.

In a crowd of over 800 people near Hilton Head, S.C., McCain said last week, "I think that Donald Rumsfeld will go down in history as one of the worst secretaries of defense in history," according to CNN.com.

McCain, a major supporter of Bush's plan to increase troops in Iraq, is the ranking official on the Senate Armed Services Committee. A Vietnam veteran and the son and grandson of Navy Admirals, McCain has long been in favor of this aspect of Bush's agenda. According to CNN.com, McCain said, "We are paying a very heavy price for the mismanagement—that's the kindest word I can give you—of Donald Rumsfeld, of this war."

Rumsfeld was not McCain's only target. Dick Cheney was held equally responsible for the current situation in Iraq. Last month McCain blamed both Cheney and Rumsfeld for a "terribly mishandled war," according to Time Magazine.

According to The Washington Post, McCain claimed that Cheney had inadequately advised President Bush on Iraq.

"The President listened too much to the Vice President… Of course, the President bears the ultimate responsibility, but he was very badly served by both the Vice President and, most of all, the Secretary of Defense," McCain told the Politico, according to the Post.

McCain also commented last week that Washington should have listened to him all along. He seemed to take a strategic "I told you so" position on the way the war has turned out. According to The Huffington Post, McCain told his South Carolina audience, "I have been saying for three and a half years that we would be in this sad situation and this critical situation we are in today."

One might think that McCain's bold comments may hinder his election campaign. However, McCain is likely consciously improving his chances. With Cheney's low approval rating and Rumsfeld no longer the secretary of defense, his comments may not be perceived very negatively by the public. Common Democrats are unlikely to oppose any form of criticism pointed at Rumsfeld or Cheney while many Bush loyalists will be eager to give a strong supporter of the president's new Iraq plan a decent chance. He never directly criticized the commander in chief.

It seems as though McCain may be also trying to put a guilt trip on the American people in his claim to having known the Iraq policies have been mismanaged all along. Critics of the way the war has been handled may take well to a candidate who is obviously committed to the Iraq problem and is confident in a solution.

Overall, McCain's audacious remarks have presumably only strengthened his campaign. They illustrate his strength in defending his beliefs as well as his commitment to the war in Iraq.

According to The Washington Post, McCain did apologize to Cheney last week for his comments, saying they were out of context. This has mitigated any grudge that may have developed between the two. Most importantly, McCain's bravado has given the candidate a few headlines in the news to remind the American public that he is actively involved in Washington politics.

America should focus on improving national identity

By Chris Opiela
Contributing Writer

Confucius said, "If a State is governed by the principles of reason, poverty and misery are subjects of shame; if a State is not governed by the principles of reason, riches and honors are the subjects of shame."

On which side of the aphorism does the United States stand? Considering that we claim to be protectors of freedom and justice, it sounds like we are governed by reasonable principles. But then, why are the rich and poor both subjects of shame for the United States? Why is the United States stricken with celebrities and politicians making noisy gossip and a large population living under the poverty level?

The people of the United States look too far beyond their own borders and overlook the people in need that sit outside their doors, starving or dehydrated. We yearn for the recognition that comes from doing good deeds than for the actual doing of the deed.

The solution to the problems of the United States will not be found in Iraq or the Middle East or Asia or beyond our borders because the problems of the United States will be found inside the country.

The problems will be found on the streets of America's cities, in the trailer parks along our freeways, in the under-funded schools, under-staffed hospitals and in every minimum wage job. Problems will also be found in multi-million dollar estates, in overpriced college tuition bills, in CEO salaries and in athletic role models. Are we a nation free of oppression? Of hate? Of discrimination? Of absurd differences between the rich and the poor?

The United States needs to begin to rebuild the ideals upon which our forefathers built this "great" country. Then, and only then, will I consent to call this country "great." But is America even capable of a higher morality?

When a nation gawks at the antics of a single woman who is lost and should be embarrassed by her actions, can we not say that we are the subjects of shame? We encourage extravagant wealth and wasteful lives.

We must realize that if our brother lies in a ditch of soiled water after being beaten by those who hate, we too lie in pain in the ditch next to him. If our sister shivers and thirsts during a long, cold night spent in an alley, we too shiver and thirst. As Americans, we should be inherently connected at the hip. Every person should be a reflection of this country.

As a culture and a people, we have grown complacent and lazy concerning our individual beliefs. As long as someone else approves, so do we. If it sounds legitimate, we believe it must be legitimate. Every person becomes a reflection of the next. We were once taught to embrace our differences, while sharing our similarities. We have learned to disappear into a body of people that neither moves nor is capable of moving due to the lethargy and apathy that have enveloped it.

As a rising generation here on campus, we have the opportunity to turn this around. We can incite change. We can begin a movement for the oppressed; we can begin a movement for the underappreciated; we can begin to show compassion and true charity.

But will we first have the courage to turn our eyes from where everyone else is looking to truly see the environment we live in?

Attention!

Clubs, Organizations, Academic Departments, Fraternities and Sororities, Student Entrepreneurs:

Greek Organizations: Looking to promote your upcoming philanthropy event?
Clubs: Trying to publicize new developments or recently received commendations?
Organizations: Hoping to increase membership via a new recruiting medium?
Student Entrepreneurs: Seeking a simple way to stimulate your business?

The Bucknellian currently circulates almost 6,000 copies per week, distributed to on-campus hubs, off-campus businesses, and over 1,000 subscribing households nationwide. Few other platforms have the capability and level of efficiency that advertising your message in The Bucknellian provides.

With a new, low rate of only $3.50 per column-inch, it is now cheaper to reserve ad space in the recent Columbia Scholastic Press Association Gold Medal recipient's weekly publication.

In order to place an ad, contact The Bucknellian Advertising Department by calling 570-577-1085 or e-mailing bucknellianads@bucknell.edu and an advertising manager will be happy to assist you.

Mer Cares

Dear Mer:

I'm dealing with a troubling situation. I'm a freshman on campus, while my older brother is a senior. I really respect my brother, and I would never want to disappoint him, but recently I've developed a huge crush on one of his fraternity brothers. It doesn't help that my love interest is one of his best friends who lives only two doors away from him. Knowing my brother, I realize that he would never approve of me and my crush being together. However, I just can't resist this boy's humorous and personable charm.What should I do?

–Frustrated Freshman

Dear Frustrated Freshman:

I'm sure you must think this is quite a dilemma, but let's approach it rationally.

First, I think you need to really evaluate your feelings for this boy. Are you friends with him or do you adore him from afar? When you, your brother and his friends hang out, do you make conversation and have fun with them?

If so, perhaps you are thinking a bit pessimistically because, in my opinion, if a brother allows you to be around him and his friends, he obviously feels comfortable with you as a peer. If you had a very protective older brother, he would most likely disapprove of you hanging out with fraternity brothers or engaging in his fraternity's activities.

I think you need to sit your brother down, tell him how you feel and ask him to be sincere and honest about how he sees the situation. If you care deeply about your crush, your brother should be more sympathetic towards you, and not jump to conclusions. He should be considerate to you by being comfortable with you voicing your feelings for his friend.

Another thing you may want to think about is the age difference. While your brother may actually be more open to the idea of you dating someone he knows rather than a stranger he would have to "keep an eye on," he may not be completely OK with you dating one of his junior or senior best friends in the fraternity. Your brother might be worried by the idea of an older guy breaking his little sister's heart.

While this might seem like a ridiculous thought, there are some things you should think about before confronting your crush. You need to consider whether you want to get involved with someone who will be graduating in just a few months. What kind of relationship are you looking for? Casual or serious? Is it the kind of relationship you think he is looking for?

What you should not do is hide your feelings or do something about this situation and keep it from your brother. It could result in disaster and he might not be as accepting of your relationship you had come to him in the beginning. If your brother isn't 100 percent sure about this relationship, don't take it the wrong way or make any rash decisions. If he is open to it and accepting, it couldn't hurt to give it a try. Just make sure your crush is a good guy, of course!

You don't deserve to be unhappy just because he isn't comfortable with the idea of you dating his friend. It isn't your fault. You can't help what makes you happy, and you can't stop yourself from having feelings for one of his friends either. You fell for this guy and if your brother loves you, he shouldn't keep you from experiencing new things and meeting new people as you grow up—even if it happens to be someone you both know. It's college for goodness sake!

Love,
Mer

Please send questions regarding any topic to marc001@Bucknell.edu with subject line reading "advice" or you may send a letter via campus mail to box number C1099. I look forward to hearing from you!

A night of Turkish festivities

By Rajaa Qadri
Writer

Members of the Turkish Student Association transformed Larison Dining Hall into an intimate setting for their annual Turkish dinner Saturday evening.

The brightly-lit hall was filled with the sounds of calming music and tables were adorned with red table cloths, beautiful candles and fine cutlery. People mingled around the room, some sitting at the tables fishing through the menu, others standing in groups laughing and gossiping.

According to the president of the club, Zeynep Turan '07, 125 people attended the dinner. Even though the organization did not begin advertising until last Wednesday, all the tickets were sold out by Thursday. In addition, the organization received various e-mail requests from faculty, staff and students to bring siblings and friends to the dinner.

This year, the dinner was catered by New York-based Dervish Restaurant, with dishes such as Patlican Salatasi (Eggplant Salad), Zeytinyazli Fasulye (String beans with olive oil) and Izgara Tavuk sis Kebap (Grilled chicken shish kebab), to name a few.

"I especially like the food; it's delicious. We don't get to eat such cultural food often around here. Even though Bison tries to offer some Mediterranean food from time to time, it still isn't the same. I like it how these student organizations give us an opportunity to try something different," Rachel Schassburger '09 said.

The desserts were highly appreciated by a lot of students. Many people went back for seconds of baklava (pistachio in dough), keskul (almond pudding) and bulbul yuvasi ("nightingale's nest" baklava).

> "I love the atmosphere; it's warm, harmonious and pleasing. The food is great, and I am definitely looking forward to it next year."
> —Fazil Habibullah '08

"The desserts are really delicious. I am glad I attended this dinner. It gives you a break from the usual cafeteria food and interestingly, the people are not stringent in serving the food as well," Simran Kaur '10 said.

Live entertainment was provided along with the tasty food. The restaurant sent in a Turkish singer who performed. After dinner the dance floor was crowded with people dancing to live Turkish music.

"The food and festivities are amazing! This is a great eye-opener to the Turkish culture," Natasha Vedage '10 said.

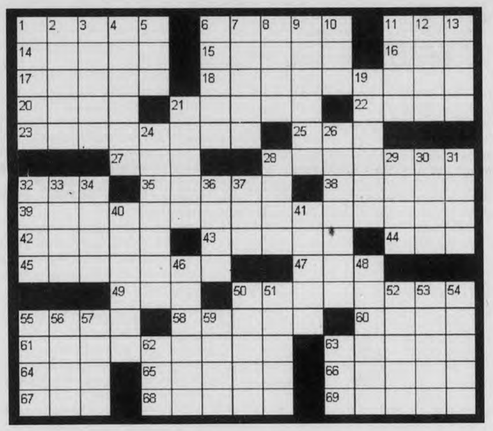
Some students enjoyed the event so much, they have already made plans to return next year.

"I love the atmosphere; it's warm, harmonious and pleasing. The food is great, and I am definitely looking forward to it next year. I am sure I am going to bring more friends next time as I am having a lot of fun," Fazil Habibullah '08 said.

The event required several hours of preparation and members of the Turkish Student Association found it to be a huge success.

"It's a lot of work," Turan said. "It's running around from one office to the other, making sure that everything is on schedule and then getting the restaurant to cater for us, but in the end it's all worth it. When I see people having fun and enjoying the food, all the hassle goes away and I feel good. Every year people enjoy this dinner and we try to make sure that they do."

The Bucknellian Crossword



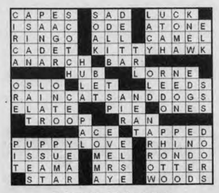
Across

1. Pro. athlete data
6. _ blanche
11. Popular tattoo word
14. Type of chip or cheese
15. Campfire food
16. Age
17. _ Park, Colorado
18. Sporting term
20. Sitting on
21. Female living quarters
22. Scandinavian capital
23. Lamp oil
25. Mine material
27. Actress Carrere
28. Bale, Bloom and the Beatles
32. Dorothy's aunt and others
35. Oven setting
38. Type of bean
39. Geek gear
42. Flying (2 words)
43. Dine at home
44. Possess
45. Related to 21 Down
47. Hebrew letter
49. Father
50. Substances from a chemical reaction
55. Bank vault
58. La Scala site
60. Be a good customer
61. Folktale character
63. British biscuit
64. _ to Joy
65. Investigate
66. Line up
67. Mr. Williams or Mr. Nugent
68. Passover ritual
69. Bush and Clinton's 1992 rival

Down

1. Prowl
2. Type of bud
3. Thespian
4. " _ calling the kettle..." (2 words)
5. Distress signal
6. Gov. TV
7. Love (It.)
8. T. _ Price
9. Involuntary spasm
10. Poetic word
11. Brooks, Blanc and Gibson
12. Type of exam
13. Famed Minnesota clinic
19. Wordsworth's words
21. Soul mate?
24. Legendary place of exile
26. Matured
28. Ink mark
29. Excited about
30. Pack away
31. Orchestra section
32. Impressively great
33. Da Vinci's _ Lisa
34. Lasting emotional trauma
36. Fuel cartel (abbr.)
37. Senior savings acct.
40. Teased
41. Pumbaa pal
46. Hold in high regard
48. Brawn
50. West Point freshman
51. Less well-done
52. Singing ensemble
53. Creole language
Sranan _
54. Exhausted
55. Common pet name
56. Assistant
57. Nourish
59. Popular digital device
62. Puzzle theme
63. Sticky substance

ByVo Cosswords



February 23 Answers

Discover Yoga
EASEFUL Body
PEACEFUL Mind
USEFUL Life
Filled with joy, health & well being.
Integral Yoga Center 570-966-2484
428 Market Street, New Berlin www.yoga-center.com

Guitar Center
The Musician's Choice
5082 Jonestown Rd.
Harrisburg, PA 17112
717-652-7399
Shipping Available!
Bring in this coupon and save!
10% OFF!
The Best Gear
The Best Deals!
*some restrictions apply, see store for details

Ziegler's Beauty Salon
38 N. 5th Street
Lewisburg, PA 17837
570-523-1250 570-523-1262
Book by Appointment
1 Beauty Chair & 2 Barber Chairs
PARKING AVAILABLE

Fred Greenawalt
Owner / Designer
Cuts -n- Curls Family Salon
Established 1982
Phone: (570) 523-7500
Email: drhair@dejazzd.com
311 JPM Road
Lewisburg, PA 17837-9762

INDIGO HAIR & NAIL STUDIO
106 Market Street
Lewisburg, Pennsylvania 17837
570-524-7888

STEIN'S
FLOWERS & GIFTS
220 Market Street
Lewisburg, PA 17837
(570) 524-9933
www.steinsflowersandgifts.com

RecycleMania returns

The University places 60th out 75 in the third week of RecycleMania

By Samantha Kantor
Writer

Everyone on campus is sure to have heard the buzz about RecyIceMania at some point or another this semester, regardless of whether they have chosen to participate in it or not. For those who have not been informed about the University's goal to help protect the environment, you may want to read on and realize what an impact you could (and should!) be making.

"RecycleMania is a friendly competition between colleges and universities across the United States to see who can collect the largest amount of recyclables per capita, the largest amount of total recyclables, the least amount of trash per capita or have the highest recycling rate," Christine Kassab '08 said. "It is a 10-week competition that started on January 28 and will last until April 7."

Originally created in Ohio in 2001, RecycleMania has increased significantly in its number of participants. From 2004 to 2007, the number of schools participating increased by approximately 200. Pennsylvania schools such as Villanova University, University of Pennsylvania and Temple University, among many others, are all 2007 RecycleMania competitors.

"Bucknell is doing better than last year, but compared to some of the other schools, [the University] has a lot to improve on," Kassab said.

The University placed 48th out of 165 schools in the Per Capita Classic (pounds of recycling per student) and 60th out of 75 schools in the Grand Champion (recycling rate). Though these statistics have improved since last year, there is still much to be desired in order for the University to progress in the contest.

Kassab notes that the facilities on campus need to increase the amount of recycling bins, as well as place them in the spots they are needed the most. Students can contribute by not throwing garbage in the recycling bins; this contaminates the recyclable items and makes them unusable.

For those of you who are skeptical about the effectiveness of recycling, I assure you recycling is an important step in helping the environment and it is happening on campus; RecycleMania is not an imaginary contest with which the University's environmental activists are humoring us. Kassab encourages everyone to take those few extra steps to the recycling bin and to reuse any items in order to reduce waste.

If you want to know more about RecycleMania, you can visit the official website at www.recyclemaniacs.org. And remember to recycle all plastic, glass, aluminum and paper whenever you can!

How does our trash stack up to the competition?

Waste per student

Bucknell

1st place Portland Community College

The University ranks 63 out of 67 schools in RecycleMania's Waste Minimalization competition, producing 47.69 pounds of municipal waste per student (as of week three). This graphic compares the University to current first-place school Portland Community College — Rock Creek Campus in Oregon.

Recyling rate

1st place California State San Marcos

Bucknell

Illustration by Ryan Winn
Source: recyclemaniacs.org

The University ranks 60 out of 75 schools for its recycling rate (as of week three). This graphic compares the University with current first-place holder, California State San Marcos. The recycling rate is the combination of pounds of material recycled per student and pounds of waste minimized per student.

Pennsylvania Rankings

21 Schools Competing
Results as of Week Three

Competition	First Place	Our Rate	Our Rank
Per Capita Classic: Largest amount of recyclables	Wilson College: 17.59 lbs. recyclables per person	7.34 lbs. recyclables per person	3rd out of 13
Waste Minimalization: Least amount of municipal solid waste	Gettysburg College: 13.77 lbs. waste per person	47.69 lbs. waste per person	5th out of 5
Grand Champion: Combined results of Per Capita Classic and Waste Minimalization	Gettysburg College: 30.16 % recycling rate	15.39 % recycling rate	5th out of 6

RecycleMania

Ccourtesy of recyclemaniacs.org

Another tantalizing edition brought to you by ...

Ms. Love and the Bubble

Dear Ms. O,

I am afraid my relationship with my boyfriend has become too physical. We have been having sex for a good while but there seems to be something missing at this point. We don't connect on an emotional basis. I don't want to go cold turkey but is there any other way to push it in a different direction or is it too late?

- Unfortunately Physical

Dear Unfortunately Physical,

It's great that you two have a strong sexual attraction, but that doesn't always last. A good relationship needs a lot more to maintain a healthy balance.

Consider whether you started out with a substantial relationship that brought you close together emotionally, or if it was mostly physical from the beginning. When you mix the excitement of a new relationship with the heat of a new sexual encounter, it can sometimes be mistaken for a deeper connection than is really there.

If it did start out as mostly physical attraction, that doesn't mean you haven't formed a deeper bond since then.

Perhaps you two have always had that "something special" and just need to rediscover it amid all the demands and stresses of college life.

No matter what, you have to figure out how you and your boyfriend can connect now.

If you completely stop having sex, it will send him the message that something is wrong and it has the potential to create tension between you two and make things worse.

Your boyfriend may not realize that anything is wrong. You two hang out, and while that time is mainly devoted to sexual activity, you're still together.

It seems you've fallen into a rut. Sex ties you together enough to keep the relationship going, but the effort that's needed to keep your bond strong isn't quite there.

You can change all that. The best way to do this is by improving your communication.

Easy solution: Go on dates!

This seemingly obvious approach often gets overlooked in our social structure dominated by hooking up, but it's extremely important.

Take your relationship out of the bedroom. You need to go out and spend time together to reconnect emotionally and make time for each other.

Find something that you're both interested in. Or something you've never done before, either together, or at all. It can become an adventure and bring you closer together since you share something only the two of you experienced.

One-on-one time is good. Even if you just get dinner together and talk, you're getting comfortable and learning more about each other.

Going to the movies or out to parties won't necessarily help much—it doesn't give you much of a chance to talk. And frankly, just hanging out together in your dorm rooms will probably lead to sex.

You don't need to stop having sex entirely, but it needs to be on the back burner for a while. Communication has to come first.

Through this "getting re-acquainted" process, you may discover that you two don't have the same connection you once had and it may be time to call it off. If sex is the only way you two can reach each other, then the relationship has become purely physical, and it doesn't sound like that's what you're looking for.

But hopefully you two will see new sides of each other and find other experiences you can share and enjoy together, including—but not limited to—sex.

~ Ms. O

E-mail me your questions at MsOintheBubble@yahoo.com or send them through campus mail to Ms. O, The Bucknellian, C-3952. All authors of questions will remain anonymous.

Brookpark Station Cafe
"Casual dining with a gourmet flair"
Fresh Sushi & Vegetarian Items
Catering & Takeout Platters
Book Your Graduation Party!
B.Y.O.B.
Wireless Internet
Mon Sat 8:00 - 8:00 Sun 8:00 - 2:00
1 MILE WEST OF TOWN ON RT. 45
542-FOOD (3663)

Real Smoked BBQ!
Beef Brisket, Pork, Chicken, Ribs!
Sandwiches, Wraps, Salads, Platters!
No Reservations Needed! Call in for Takeout!
Skeeters Pit BBQ
On the Bluff overlooking the scenic Susquehanna River
At the intersection of Routes 11 & 15 Shamokin Dam
570.743.2727
Daily 11:00am - 10:00pm
Sundays till 9:00pm
www.skeetersBBQ.com

Write for Features.
E-mail ns022@

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

A look inside the Weis Center

Since it was built in 1988, the Weis Center has served as an outlet for the arts.

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

By Brynn Moragne
Contributing Writer

Since its gala opening in 1988, the Weis Center for the Performing Arts has been a cultural center in the Susquehanna Valley and in the University communities.

The Weis Center was established at the University because it has the resources necessary to thoroughly maintain and care for the building.

Glass and brick frame the sets of glass doors which welcome visitors and patrons as they enter the lobby of the concert hall. The lobby is home to a 270-degree "helicoidal" staircase enunciated by a string of chandeliers, as well as many watercolor paintings by artist David Armstrong '69 on both the first floor and balcony.

Looking up, a captivating mobile titled "Targets" by Robert Perless can be seen rotating gently in the natural air current of the building. The concert hall itself is paneled with wood and brick, displaying twinkling chandeliers overhead.

Seating 1,288, the concert hall is in the design of "shoebox construction" for optimal acoustics. No matter where you sit in this concert hall, you can hear every detail of the performance as if you were with the performer on the stage itself.

Without Sigfried and Janet Weis' contributions, the Weis Center would not exist.

"[Sigfried and Janet Weis] were the people who guided the early years through the architectural complications, the board of trustee complications, the campus complications and it became a reality. They have shepherded it with contributions and support ever since," said Gary Sojka, who served as the University's president from 1985-95.

The Weis Center was built, in part, to commemorate Claire Weis' love of music and to give music its own place on campus. Before the Weis Center was built, the music department never had a designated rehearsal or performance space. The Weis Center has rooms for rehearsal and other space to help visiting performers feel welcome.

The performances held at the Weis Center are chosen to bring the highest culture possible to the Susquehanna Valley and University communities.

"The quality of performances [presented at the Weis Center] hasn't changed throughout the years. The performances brought in are always high culture and high quality," said Bill Boswell, executive director of the Weis Center.

In addition to the University's own ensembles, the Weis Center performances include a variety of visiting classical theaters, professional orchestras, dance groups and small ensembles. Some groups that have visited the University during its 2006-07 season are the Aquila Theatre Company performing Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, the Nathaniel Dett Chorale, Dance Brazil and the Hungarian Symphony Orchestra with piano soloist Paavali Jumppanen.

Some of the performers in the Weis Center Series also go into the community to do workshops with local schools through various outreach programs. As many as 1,500 students from two schools can experience these workshops in less than two hours.

Aside from bringing new culture to Lewisburg and its surrounding towns, the Weis Center has influenced the University community. The structure itself began opening up another section of campus, paving the way for buildings like the Sigfried Weis Music Building, which became the next addition to the music facilities at the University.

By offering a variety of job opportunities, the Weis Center has become integrated into the lives of many students. These jobs range from directly interacting with visitors and patrons by working as ushers, house managers and box office attendants, to working behind-the-scenes as members of Performance Services.

Students who do not have jobs with the Weis Center are also encouraged to get involved. Through the Office of Housing and Residential Life, residential assistants are given information about the Weis Center and its shows to inform their residents.

The Weis Center Student Cultural Collective ("Weis Guys") plays a big part in getting the attention of their fellow University students by being the "grounding and reality of student interests," Outreach Coordinator Iris Rifkin-Gainer said.

In recent years, the Weis Center has given a coupon to each first-year student to see a performer from the Weis Center Series at the Weis Center for free as an additional effort to get students involved with the Weis Center from the beginning of their time at the University. The performances are meant to be cultural experiences and to incorporate alternative experiences with daily student life.

As time passes, the Weis Center continues to provide an important outlet to the arts at the University and its surrounding communities.

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

BUCKNELL UNIVERSITY
MAR 02 2007
LEWISBURG, PA

The Bucknellian
March 2, 2007
Sports

Volume 139, Number 6 | Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue | www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

A war of music

Phi Kappa Psi raises money for the Million Penny Project with their Battle of the Bands.

See page B7

Bison on track for three-peat

Men's basketball team overpowers Midshipmen to win the Patriot League quarterfinal

By Matthew Saylor
Associate Editor of Content

The men's basketball team continued its 13-game winning streak and 34-game home winning streak against Patriot League opponents with its 62-43 victory over Navy in the conference quarterfinals. The Wednesday-evening victory sets the stage for the Bison (21-8) to host the Army Black Knights (15-15) Sunday afternoon in the tournament's semifinal round.

The Orange and Blue got off to a quick start against the Midshipmen (14-16), thanks to back-to-back three pointers by Jason Vegotsky '09 in the game's first 95 seconds. This had the Sojka Psychos already rocking when Donald Brown '07 entered into the game at the 16 minute and 54 second mark of the first-half.

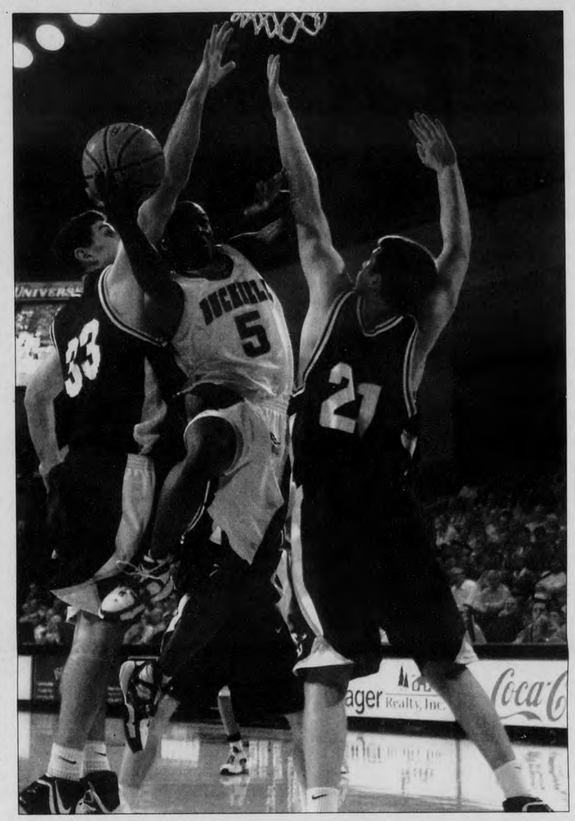
Brown missed the previous seven games due to a broken bone in his right hand, but played as if he did not miss a beat.

The senior tri-captain scored eight points and snatched nine rebounds in 13 minutes of first-half action, spurring the Bison to a 33-16 lead at intermission.

"Donald gave us a big spark," Head Coach Pat Flannery '80 said. "He really found the seams in the defense."

Bucknell 62
Navy 43

The key stretch came after the Midshipmen cut the lead to 15-14 at the 6:38 mark of the half on a Kaleo Kina jumper. The Orange and Blue would then score the game's next 16 points, not allowing a Navy field goal for the remainder of the half. Only two Kina free throws would stop the run with 35.1 seconds remaining until the half.



That stretch started with two Abe Badmus '07 free throws, followed by a Brown layup, a Badmus layup off of a steal and a John Griffin '08 three-pointer from the corner thanks to a nice Brown pass. An intentional foul was called on Navy's T.J. Topercer, leading to a Griffin free throw and Bison possession of the ball. Stephen Tyree '10 inbounded the ball to an open Chris McNaughton '07 for another layup and the run continued. Brown added another short jumper, following his own miss, and two more McNaughton free throws followed to finish the spurt.

"Our offense affected our defense a little," Kina, who led Navy with 12 points, said after the game. "They [the Bison] then busted out, and we couldn't recover from there."

The second half saw Navy go on a 11-0 run, cutting the Orange and Blue lead to 50-34, thanks to three consecutive threes by the Midshipmen in a 93-second span. The Bison would respond though, thanks to another Griffin three-pointer late in the shot clock, stopping the run. Navy would not get closer than 15 points for the remainder of the game.

The stingy Bison defense held the Midshipmen to just 33.3 percent shooting from the filed, including 23.1 percent in the first half. All-Patriot League Second Team selection Greg Sprink was held to just nine points on three of nine shooting and committed eight turnovers.

Navy Head Coach Billy Lange was pleased with his team's effort, but knew the Orange and Blue would be a formidable foe.

"We happened to run into a

See BBALL page B2

Saylor Says

By Matthew Saylor
Associate Editor of Content

The trio of Abe Badmus '07, Donald Brown '07 and Chris McNaughton '07 has been part of the most successful run in the history of Bison basketball. The three seniors have been a part of 86 wins—the most by any class in University history.

Brown was the team's sixth man for both his sophomore and junior seasons, before stepping into the starting lineup this year. A hand injury suffered against Colgate a few weeks ago kept the tri-captain out of the lineup for seven games, stopping what had been the best stretch of his career.

Brown leads the Patriot League in rebounding (6.7 per game) and field goal percentage, shooting a career-high 57.2 percent from the floor. He is averaging a team-high 31.6 minutes per game, leading the team in scoring with 12.0 points per contest. His numbers went up in the eight regular-season games he played against Patriot League teams, where he averaged 13.1 points and 7.5 rebounds per game. He has scored 773 points to go with 496 rebounds and 107 steals in his stellar career of 115 games.

Despite the missed playing

See SAYLOR page B3

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Aubrey Rowe '09 secures the ball in a game against Marist at the Bucknell Invitational. The Orange and Blue won all four games on the weekend.

Polo posts sweep over weekend

By Shannon Pitsch
Sports Editor

Finally able to play in its home waters of the Kinney Natatorium, the women's water polo team dominated the competition with four straight wins over the weekend. Defeating Wagner 11-6 and Villanova 9-3 on Saturday followed by Iona 13-6 and Marist 8-3 on Sunday, the Bison improved their season record to 6-6 in hopes of an ECAC Championship this weekend.

In their first game of the weekend against Wagner, the Bison offense came out firing behind two goals from Meagan Gins '08 in the first minutes of play. An additional goal from Jen Swoyer '08, brought the team to an early 3-0 lead. The opposition responded netting two quick goals to cut their deficit to one, but two more Bison goals would end the first half 5-2 in favor of the home team.

Bucknell 11
Wagner 6

The second quarter featured Elizabeth Jensen '07, who matched Gins goal for goal, bringing the score to 7-3 at the end of the first half. Once again, the second half saw a hungry Bison offense featuring one more goal from Gins, a pair from Valentina Rozas '10 and one from Aubrey Rowe '09. Although the team would go scoreless in the final eight minutes, they had already built an 11-4 lead giving them an easy 11-6 win.

Later that day, the team secured a second victory against Villanova with Gins once again notching two goals

See POLO page B2

Bison rally to defeat Hobart in OT

Men's lacrosse win catapults team to No. 17 rank in national poll

By Wes Trowbridge
Writer

Tim Brandau '10 split a double team and scored the game winner in overtime on Saturday to defeat Hobart 11-10 in a dogfight of a lacrosse game at St. Paul's School in Baltimore, Md.

Brandau led the team in points with two goals and two assists and Perry Menzies '09 added a career-high three goals, the last of which tied the game with just 47 seconds left in regulation. Austin Winter '10 had three assists, running the offense from X while Brian Gargan '07 and Joe Mele '09 added two goals apiece.

Bucknell 11
Hobart 10

After an even first quarter, the score was 2-2 on goals by Mele and Brandau. But three Statesmen goals in the first four minutes and15 seconds of the second quarter prompted Head Coach Frank Fedorjaka to put in goalkeeper Nick Sciubba '09 in place of Matt Antonelli '09. Facing a very efficient Hobart offense, Sciubba tallied 11 saves in the final 43:29 and allowed just five goals while Antonelli had five saves in his first 19:15.

"The goalie situation is great for the team but a tough situation for the two goalies," Co-captain Greg Sowyrda '07 said. "They are both excellent goalies and will have to continue to prove themselves each week, but to have the ability to switch goalies and have both be so talented is great for the team."

Once Sciubba took his place in the cage the Bison defense buckled down, creating turnovers and getting the ball to the offense in spite of going 0-10 on face-offs in the second quarter. The offense responded by scoring four straight goals and five of the last six in the half. Mele scored on a feed from Brandau and Winter found Menzies for a goal just 45 seconds later to make it 5-4. Gargan followed a Doug Buckley '09 goal with two unassisted goals of his own as the Bison secured a 7-6 halftime lead.

In the third quarter, Hobart managed to tie the game twice but was answered by goals from Andrew Goodhand '08 and Menzies to keep the Bison on top. Hobart tied the game again on Daryl Veltman's fifth goal with 12:02 remaining. The game remained 9-9 for more than 10 minutes until Veltman gave Hobart the lead on his game-high sixth goal with just 1:26 remaining. Jamie Kirk also had eight points on seven assists for Hobart.

With their backs against the wall, Danylko Kulczycky '07 won the ensuing face-off and co-captain Paul Stansik '07 picked up the ground ball. Moments later, Winter found Menzies with a brilliant feed from behind the cage and Menzies buried it with 47 seconds left in regulation, sending the game into overtime.

Hobart had two shots in overtime and Sciubba made one critical save. On the ensuing clear, Nick Marks '08 drew the

See MLAX page B3

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Tim Brandau '10 battles a defenseman in a recent home game. Brandau was named Damon's Bison Athlete of the Week, notching two goals and two assists against Hobart.

Baseball pitches against nation's best

Orange and Blue drop three games to No. 7 Virginia, struggle offensively unable to plate base runners

By Barbara Perlman
Sports Editor

The baseball team traveled back to Virginia last weekend, facing ACC powerhouse University of Virginia (UVA) in a close, three-game series. The Bison fell to the No. 7 team in the nation 2-0, 3-0 and 13-2.

"Virginia is ranked seventh in the nation in the Baseball America poll and in the top 10 in every other poll. Our goal [was] to focus on how we play and not worry about how good they are," Head Coach Gene Depew '71 said.

Virginia 2
Bucknell 0

On the first day of play, the Bison pitching held the Cavaliers to only two runs. Pitcher Mathew Wilson '08 held Virginia to one run in his six innings, no small feat against a team that scored at least 10 runs in all but one game before meeting the Bison. Wilson pitched five strikeouts and seven walks, while working himself out of a bases-loaded squeeze in the bottom of the third. Sean Driscoll '09 and Jason Buursma '08 provided relief, allowing a combined one run, four hits and one strikeout.

Virginia 3
Bucknell 0

While the pitching staff persevered, the Orange and Blue had trouble driving home runs offensively. A double by Austin Turban '08 started the game off in the top of the third, but he was left stranded on second after teammates could not connect. Bison runners would be left on base again as two men were left on the corners after two disappointing outs.

Courtesy of Jeff Brown

Zachary Brown '10 sprints towards first after a sacrifice bunt in game two of the series. The team was relocated to Philadelphia due to inclimate conditions in Lewisburg to play a four-game series against Ivy League foe Cornell.

"The pitching was our greatest strength," Ryan Gryskevicz '07 said. "Virginia had a great team in terms of hitting, but our pitchers really held them in check."

Bison pitching enjoyed continued success in game two of the series, as Virginia was held to only three runs. Nathan Mittag '07 allowed eight hits and one run and tallied three walks and two strikeouts in his six innings.

Both teams struggled to plate, as the game remained scoreless until the bottom of the sixth, when Virginia's Jeremy Farrell plated after his leadoff double. Despite solid hitting from Buursma, who went 2-for-3 and a two-on threat in the top of the sixth, the Bison were unable to drive home any runs.

"The hardest part when facing

Virginia 13
Bucknell 2

Virginia was trying to hit off their nationally recognized pitching staff," catcher Zach Brown '09 said, who went 0-for-2 with a sacrifice bunt.

The bats started swinging in the final game of the series, as Virginia hit their way to a decisive 13-2 victory. Scoring started early, as Virginia took an early 3-0 start in the bottom of the second. Determined to get on the board, Ed Rubbo '08, who went 2-for-4, drove home teammate Shawn Hirsch '08 in the top of the third, cutting the team's deficit to two.

The Cavaliers answered back with two runs of their own, solidifying the win despite a home run by Gryskevicz. The Bison struggled to bring home runs tallying two runs off of 10 hits, while Virginia plated 13 and totaled 13 hits.

"Facing a team like Virginia is comparable to when the men's basketball team played a high-caliber team like Villanova last year," Brown said. "[Virginia] players even talked to me when they came up to the plate about how impressed they were by our showing and how the Bison really made them work for their wins."

The team hits the road again as they are displaced to LaSalle University in Philadelphia in what was supposed to be their home opener, but was moved due to the weather. The Bison will face Cornell in a two-day, four-game series beginning Saturday at 12 p.m.

POLO From page B1

in the opening minutes. The Wildcats responded with a goal of their own, but before the end of the half the Bison would be ahead 5-2.

Bucknell 9
Villanova 3

In the second, Jessica Trimis '07 matched Gins with two goals of-her own, while Susan Kingerski '07 and Jensen each notched one. The Bison went on to win 9-3 leaving them undefeated in their first day of competition.

On Sunday, the Bison defense controlled Iona limiting the opposition to just one goal during a 25-minute stretch. With nine saves in 32 minutes of play,

Bucknell 13
Iona 6

Alison Carter '10 firmly protected the net while Mallory Sullivan '07 led the squad defensively contributing three steals.

Offensively the team was equally strong with Gins and Jensen dominating with three goals apiece. At the end of the first half the Bison maintained an 8-4 lead. Eight people scored in the eventual victory of 13-6.

In the final match of the weekend, the Orange and Blue completed a perfect record with an 8-3 defeat of Marist. In the first 21 minutes of the game, the Bison defense shut out the Red Foxes while building a five-goal lead behind Rozas and Jensen each contributing two apiece. The offense was balanced across the board with six players scoring goals, seven assisting on goals and two goals in each of the four quarters.

Bucknell 8
Marist 3

Defensively, goalie Mandy Bynum '07 paced the defense with seven saves in goal and a team-high three steals. Rowe and Jensen each contributed two steals apiece holding the opposition to just three goals in 32 minutes of play.

"The driving factor in our success this weekend was our defense," Head Coach John Zeigler said. "Not only did it keep our opponents from scoring but it fueled our offense in that we were able to score in transition because of our defense. In four games we played three different goalies and all of them had outstanding performances."

In most team sports, the offense usually receives the glory because they are responsible for scoring the points that win games. On the Bison water polo team the past weekend, the defenders dominated the pool, securing the net and enabling the team to succeed.

"Our defense is so successful because of the level of communication we have. If a player finds themselves behind a play, they can simply yell a switch, and another player will pick up their player," said Sullivan, currently leading the team in steals with 26 on the season. "Also, we have coaches that do great scouting reports on other teams. They figure out what defenses should be ran to prevent the other teams from scoring, and if we execute the game plan, as we did this weekend, we're usually very successful.

The team travels to Cambridge, Mass. Saturday and Sunday for the ECAC Championships.

"The ECAC is an early test of our championship

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Mandy Bynum '07 controls the net in a game at the Bucknell Invitational. Bynum has played in all 10 games this season, racking up 85 saves.

readiness," Ziegler said. "Last year we took second at this tournament to Princeton and we would like to see a rematch of that game, but with many improved teams in the conference it will be a challenge to advance to the final of this tournament."

The Bison will face Harvard University in the first game on Saturday as they look to improve upon their 2006 second-place finish.

BBALL From page B1

team that is playing very well," Lange said.

Brown finished the night with game-highs of 15 points and nine boards. He also blocked two shots and notched two steals. The first of his blocks appeared to cause some discomfort in Brown's hand, but he said he felt fine after the game.

"It was a real good test [for the hand]," Brown said of the block. "It doesn't hurt now, so that is a good sign."

McNaughton finished with 14 points and eight rebounds against the physical Navy defense, while Griffin also scored in double-figures with 10 points, to go along with four assists and three steals. Badmus scored nine points, handed out five assists and had four steals, several leading to fast breaks for the Orange and Blue.

Darren Mastropaolo '08 added six points and seven rebounds in just 18 minutes. Mastropaolo and Patrick Behan '10 saw a slight decrease in their minutes compared to recent games, due to the return of Brown.

"We have a very unselfish team," Flannery said. "There were times I thought about going with different match-ups on the floor, times I wanted to play Behan more, but the way Donald was playing it was a no-brainer."

The Orange and Blue will host the Black Knights due to Army's 47-46 upset of Lehigh on Wednesday, in a controvertial finish. The Bison played at West Point, N.Y. on Feb. 24, defeating Army 54-49. In the game between the two teams at Sojka Pavilion on Jan. 27, the Orange and Blue won 74-49. Tipoff is set for 3:30 p.m. Holy Cross will host American in the league's other semifinal.

The winners will meet on Friday, March 9 on the home court of the highest remaining seed to determine who will advance to the NCAA Tournament.

WEEKEND SCHEDULE

Friday

WRESTLING - Colgate, 11 a.m., Annapolis, Md.

Saturday

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL - Colgate, 11 a.m., Annapolis, Md.
SOFTBALL - Norfolk State, 11 a.m., Elon, N.C. ; UNC Greensboro, 1 p.m., Elon, N.C.
BASEBALL - Cornell, 12 p.m., Philadelphia, Pa. ; Cornell, TBA, Philadelphia, Pa.
WOMEN'S TRACK & FIELD - ECAC Championship, 12 p.m., Boston, Mass.
MEN'S TRACK & FIELD - IC4A Championship, 12 p.m., Boston, Mass.
MEN'S LACROSSE - Ohio State, 12 p.m., Columbus, Ohio
WOMEN'S WATER POLO - Harvard, 12:30 p.m., Cambridge, Mass.
WOMEN'S TENNIS - Marist, 1 p.m., Williamsport, Pa.
WOMEN'S LACROSSE - Robert Morris, 3 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
MEN'S TENNIS - Marist, 4:30 p.m., Williamsport, Pa.
WRESTLING - EIWA Championship, All Day, East Stroudsburg, Pa.
WOMEN'S WATER POLO - ECAC Championship, TBA, Cambridge, Mass.

Sunday

MEN'S BASKETBALL - Army, 3:30 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
WOMEN'S BASKTEBALL - PL Semifinal if win on Saturday, 1 p.m., Annapolis, Md.
BASEBALL - Cornell, 12 p.m., Philadelphia, Pa. ; Cornell, TBA, Philadelphia
SOFTBALL - St. Francis Pa, 11 a.m., Elon, N.C. ; Elon, 1 p.m., Elon, N.C.
MEN'S TRACK & FIELD - IC4A Championship, 11 a.m., Boston, Mass.
WOMEN TRACK & FIELD - ECAC Championshp, 11 a.m., Boston, Mass.
WOMEN'S WATER POLO - ECAC Championship, TBA, Cambridge, Mass.

MAKE A SURVEY
HELP A CAUSE
Online surveys for students by students
For fun
For rewards
For social causes that matter
Visit kwizu.com today!
kwiz U
online surveys for students by students

Bison close out regular season

Women's basketball hungry for a PL Championship after loss to Army

By Matthew Saylor
Associate Editor of Content

The women's basketball team finished its regular season with a 61-57 loss to Army at West Point, N.Y. The Bison (20-9, 12-2) will travel to Annapolis, Md. this weekend for the quarterfinal and semifinal rounds of the Patriot League Tournament. They hope to win those two games in order to return to Sojka Pavilion on Wednesday, March 7 to host the championship game.

The Black Knights (24-3, 11-3) got off to a fast start against the Bison, using a starting line-up of mostly seniors for their senior day. This lineup did not include All-Patriot League First Team member, Cara Enright '08, or All-Patriot League Second Team member, Alex McGuire '09.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Lauren Schober '09 charges towards the basket against Lafayette. The women's team will face Colgate on Saturday at 11 a.m.

Army 61
Bucknell 57

Army got off to a quick 6-0 start and held the Orange and Blue scoreless for the first four minutes and 41 seconds of the game. The Black Knights extended their lead to as large as 15 in the first half and went into halftime with a 32-20 lead. The Bison shot 27.3 percent from the field in the first half and missed 12 out of 13 three-point attempts. The rebounding hurt the Orange and Blue the most in the first half, giving up 30 rebounds to the Black Knights.

"We did not match their physical intensity," Bison Head Coach Kathy Fedorjaka said in her post-game radio interview. "We were pressured and rushed things, and beat bad on the boards in the first half."

Army extended its lead to 42-25 at the 16:24 mark of the second half. The Bison cut the lead to nine, but the Black Knights would extend it back to 15, 50-35.

Finally, the Orange and Blue went on a sustained run. Over 7:42, the Bison went on a 22-10 run, cutting the Army lead to three, 60-57, with 36 seconds left. During that stretch the Orange and Blue launched a balanced offensive attack, with points being scored by Jacquie Seawright '07, Hope Foster '08, Kesha Champion '08, Lauren Schober '09, Amanda Brown '09 and Le'Le' LeSeur '10. Two missed free throws by Margaree King gave the Bison a chance to tie the game, but a Foster trey was off the mark. Jen Hansen added a free throw to seal the deal for the Black Knights.

"I'm proud to come [back] from 17 down," Fedorjaka said.

Enright was the game's leading scorer with 19 points, while McGuire and Hansen added nine for the Black Knights.

Army was able to hold Brown, who had scored in double-figures in the 13 previous Patriot League games, to seven points on three of 15 shooting. Despite this tough game, Brown was named to the All-Patriot League First Team on Tuesday.

The Bison were led by 14 points from Foster and Champion and 11 from Seawright. Foster, named to the All-Patriot League First Team for the second consecutive year, added seven rebounds and six blocks.

Champion also had a career-high-tying eight rebounds and four assists while playing the full 40 minutes. She earned the praise of her coach for her efforts.

"I challenge this team to match what Kesha is bringing," Fedorjaka said.

The Orange and Blue's quarterfinal game against Colgate (5-24, 4-10) will tip-off Saturday at 11 a.m. The winner of that game will play the winner of the match-up between American (6-8, 11-18) and Navy (6-8, 12-16) on Sunday.

Strong doubles play not enough

By John Mlodzinski
Writer

The men's tennis team dropped its fourth straight match as it fell to Stony Brook 6-1 on Saturday. The team now stands at 3-5 on the season.

"Most of the teams we've played will beat most of the teams in our league," Head Coach Rebecca Helt said. "They are some of the best teams the East region has to offer. We can play with those teams."

"Most of the teams we've played will beat most of the teams in our league. They are some of the best teams the East region has to offer. We can play with those teams."
—Rebecca Helt, head coach

The team looked good early on as it came out flying, taking the first two doubles matches. Ira Reibeisen '08 teamed up with Zach Hascoe '10 to defeat Nihal Advani and Quirjin Van Veen 8-5 in the No. 1 doubles spot. Jonathan Brenner '09 and Ryan Sandburg '09 beat Youssef Fassi-Fehri and Alex Markovich 8-5 in the No. 2 doubles spot. The momentum did not continue for the Bison, as they were unable to continue this run of victories. In the No. 3 doubles spot, Daniel Bednarek '09 and Ben Young '08 fell to Ilan Shvartz and Jon Epstein 8-2.

The singles matches were not as kind to the Bison, who were unable to pick up a win in singles play. At the No. 1 spot, Reibeisen fell to Van Veen 7-5, 6-2. Sandburg lost to Advani 6-4, 6-2 in the No. 2 spot, while Brenner was defeated by Fassi-Fehri 6-2, 6-2 in the No. 3 spot. Hascoe lost his match 6-3, 6-0 to Shvartz in the No. 4 singles spot, and Young (8-4) and Bednarek (8-6) fell to Epstein and Markovich, respectively.

While the team has floundered as of late, Helt is not overly concerned. She said the Bison are facing very strong opponents and they have only had limited use of the indoor facilities to get into game shape. She also said the team will be ready to play with these teams very soon.

"With limited use of the fieldhouse, which offers us mediocre practices as best, we are struggling with our intensity. That's the element that's missing right now: intensity. We'll get there," Helt said.

The Bison return to action on Saturday when they face Marist in Williamsport, Pa., at the West Branch Country Club.

MLAX From page B1

defense and passed to Brandau. Brandau split a double team and ripped a shot into the top right corner from 10 feet out.

"Scoring the game winner in OT was an incredible feeling," Brandau said about the fourth goal of his first collegiate season. "We played our hearts out against a very talented Hobart team and to be able to come out with a win in the fashion we did felt great."

Hobart won the ground ball battle 44-29 and out-shot the Bison 43-35. The Bison also lost on face offs, going eight for 25.

Now 2-0, the Bison reentered the national rankings for the first time since early last season. This week's USILA national coach's poll ranked the University No. 17 in Division I.

On Saturday at noon the Bison will travel to Columbus to play a critical game against No. 19 Ohio State.

"It is nice to have the momentum of a two-game win streak behind us heading into Ohio State," Mele said. "They have a real strong team this year, but I think we'll do very well."

SAYLOR From page B1

time, Brown has established new career-highs in points scored, field goals made and attempted, free throws made and attempted, free throw percentage, rebounding average, assists and steals. For his efforts, Brown was named to the All-Patriot League Second Team.

While his electric slam dunks and waves to the crowd are staples in his game, he may be remembered best for his 50-foot pass through multiple Arkansas defenders to Charles Lee '06 during the waning moments of last year's NCAA Tournament win. Brown's pass allowed the Orange and Blue to avoid the 10-second violation and led to a Lee layup that all but secured a win for the Bison.

Perhaps no other player is as crucial to the team's success as Badmus. When he plays well, the Bison play well. This was never more evident than when the Orange and Blue upset Kansas during the 2005 NCAA Tournament, when the point guard had 11 assists and no turnovers against one of the pre-tournament favorites.

In the team's win against Holy Cross earlier this year, the Orange and Blue trailed by five at half-time. Badmus came out of the locker room on fire, putting the team on his shoulders and scoring seven consecutive points during the first two minutes of second-half play. The Sojka Psychos were back into the game, and the Bison were spurred to victory.

His jet-speed quickness and incredible leaping ability have made him one of the most exciting players to wear orange and blue. Badmus won the Patriot League's inaugural Defensive Player of the Year Award in 2005, and had to have been considered as a leading contender again this year. His 212 steals are second in team history and he ranks fifth in Bison history in assists with 370. His scoring average is up to 7.7 points per game this year, a career-high, as is his 76.5 percent shooting from the free-throw line, 30.8 minutes per game and 24 made threes. Badmus has scored 713 points in 121 career games.

McNaughton hit the University's version of "The Shot." He made the right-handed hook over Kansas's All-American, future NBA player Wayne Simien with 10.5 seconds left in the team's 64-63 win.

No player has been more involved in the team's success over the past three years than McNaughton. Barring unforeseen circumstances, he will graduate with the most games played in University history. He has now played 123 games, needing one more to break the record of 123 set by Kevin Bettencourt '06 last year.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

The men's baskteball seniors pose with friends and family on Senior Night. The basketball team will be graduating tri-capitains Abe Badmus, Donald Brown and Chirs McNaughton.

His 1,494 points rank eighth in University history, while his 636 rebounds rank 12th. He is only one of three players for the Bison to have at least 1,400 points and 600 rebounds.

McNaughton ranks in the top 10 in Bison history in field goals made (596) and attempted (999), field goal percentage (.597), free throws attempted (437) and blocks (79).

He has scored in double-figures in 90 of his 123 career games. He was a member of the Patriot League All-Rookie team in 2003-2004, and a member of the league's first team for his sophomore, junior and senior years. In each of the past two Patriot League Tournament championship runs, McNaughton has been named to the conference's all-tournament team.

These three have been a huge part of the team's 13-game winning streak, and the Bison will once again be in the thick of the race to the NCAA Tournament. After a 0-4 start, the Bison have won 21 of their last 25 games. Look for Badmus, McNaughton and a healthy Brown to push the under-recognized squad to the top again.

BRYNWOOD 535 Inc. Rentals
In Lewisburg Since 1969
Your search begins..... and ends here.
Professional 24/7 Maintenance Staff
Apartments (furnished & unfurnished)
Houses for professionals students families
Rental Garages Also Available
Office & Retail Space 300—3,000 sq ft
brynwoodrentals.com
611 Market Street, Lewisburg
ph: 570.524.2121 x 3

SUMMER IN MAINE
Males and Females.
Meet new friends! Travel!
Teach your favorite activity.
*Tennis *Swim
*Canoe *Sail
*Water Ski *Kayak
*Gymnastics *Archery
*Silver Jewelry *Rocks
*English Riding *Ropes
*Copper Enameling *Art
*Basketball *Pottery
*Field Hockey *Office
*And More!
June to August. Residential.
Enjoy our website. Apply online.
TRIPP LAKE CAMP for Girls:
1-800-997-4347
www.tripplakecamp.com

DOES YOUR CAR NEED SERVICED?
Our Service Department has $25,000 in new upgrades, including a new alignment rack, brake lathe, tire machine, and hundreds of hours of training for the techs. We now offer shuttle service to and from work or home. We have become a complete service center that can perform any work on any model, from an oil change to engine replacement.
Lewisburg Ford Oil Change w/Multi-Point Inspection $19.95 Excludes Diesels. Must present coupon at time of service. Expires 12/31/06.
Lewisburg Ford Oil Change/Tire Rotation w/Multi-Point Inspection $34.95 Must present coupon at time of service. Expires 12/31/06.
Lewisburg Ford
2265 Old Turnpike Rd. (Route 45 West) Across From Brookpark Farm
Call Today! (570) 524-7267
Visit us on the web at www.lewisburgford.com

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Le'Le' LeSeur '10 positions herself for a jump shot in a recent game against Lafayette. LeSeur was recently named to the Patirot League All-Rookie Team.

Le'Le' LeSeur: A mindset for success

By Connie Barko
Senior Writer

The women's basketball team has had one of its best seasons in recent memory after winning 20 games in the regular season and clinching the Patriot League Championship title. Although the team holds a roster of only 10 players, every member has played a fundamental role in the success of the season, including the single first-year player, Le'Le' LeSeur.

LeSeur, who is originally from Snellville, Georgia, is familiar with the concept of winning. As a senior at Wesleyan High School, she led her team to its fourth consecutive state championship. Leseur was Second Team All-State, an Atlanta Journal Constitution All-State Honorable Mention selection, All-Gwinnett County choice and played in the Georgia Athletic Coaches Association All-Star game.

Despite her experience, it was still a shock when she transitioned to college play. There is an increase in the physical and academic workload, pace of the game and number of team plays that must be memorized. What makes LeSeur's story different is that she is the only first-year on the team and has to undergo these challenges alone.

"Even though she is a freshman and the only freshman LeSeur always demonstrates such maturity," Hope Foster '08 said, "I really admire LeSeur because I know it isn't easy being a freshman, let alone the only one on a team full of veteran players."

LeSeur has found that the help of her teammates and coach is the only thing that has made the transition easier.

"At first, it was scary because coming in as the only freshman. You have a lot to live up to. There are a lot of kids with more experience than you, but it was a great feeling knowing I would be the only one coming in and be able to prove myself and play my games." she said.

Although LeSeur immediately fit in with the Bison family, her transition into college has not necessarily been an easy road. Early in the season, LeSeur developed stress fractures. Her injury prevented her from participating in pre-conference games, which are important for building the team dynamic and developing as an individual player. Although she knew that it would temporarily cut back her playing time, LeSeur tried to remain optimistic during her recovery by encouraging her teammates and learning through observation.

"Watching from the bench also helped me see the type of style we played and what I could do better," LeSeur said. "It has been a great learning experience for me."

LeSeur returned two games before league play, overcoming this initial setback. She now averages 15 minutes per game—a significant amount of time for a first-year athlete playing on a Patriot League Championship team For her efforts this year LeSeur was named to the All-Patriot League Rookie Team.

"If Le'Le' was playing on a lot of other teams, she might be starting and averaging ten points a game, but she is playing with some other great players around her and has fit into a very critical role for the number one team in the league," Head Coach Kathy Fedorjaka said.

LeSeur, who plays primarily in the post, has filled a need on the team both offensively and defensively. She is an aggressive rebounder but is also confident handling the ball. Her foot speed and active defense also fit in the Bison's style of play.

"She is a tough mismatch for a lot of post players in our league," Fedorjaka said.

Despite playing only half a season, LeSeur has made significant progress as an individual player because of her natural athletic ability. But perhaps her best asset to the squad is her attitude.

According to teammate and Captain Lindsey Hollobaugh '07, "Le'Le' has contributed so much to our team this season, on and off the court. She's a very team-oriented player who provides a great deal of energy when she's playing and when cheering on her teammates."

This enthusiasm may prove to be a significant factor in the Bison's success next year. With the loss of key seniors Hollobaugh and Jacquie Seawright '07, the team will need confident leadership to set the groundwork for the next generation of players.

"Le'Le' is a very upbeat and personable young woman with a great maturity about her," Fedorjaka said. "She is a very hard worker and an extremely responsible young woman who is a great role model for the young girls that follow our program."

$250 CASH
Sign on BONUS
Call for details
3 & 4 Bedroom Houses
CLOSE TO CAMPUS
WHIRLPOOL
WASHER / DRYER
DISHWASHER
STOVE & FRIG
Newly renovated houses
available 2006/2007
570-524-5714 / 570-412-4831
570-524-5745 / 570-490-2922

Bison vanquish Black Knights

By Marcus Mateer
Senior Writer

The men's basketball team secured the second seed in the Patriot League Tournament and a share of the regular-season conference title with Holy Cross, outlasting a determined Army team 54-49 Saturday in West Point, N.Y.

Bucknell 54
Army 49

On the Black Knights' senior day, a pair of Bison seniors was the difference. Abe Badmus' three near the end of the game was a dagger and Chris McNaughton tallied his third double-double of the season.

The first half was unusual, as both teams shot 50 percent or better from three-point range, but 42 percent or worse from closer range. The Bison (20-8, 13-1) tallied four treys in the period, including the second career three from Stephen Tyree '10. Army (14-15, 4-10) drained seven and looked to take the lead heading into halftime, but Rob Thomas '08 nabbed a steal with four ticks left. McNaughton then found Jason Vegotsky '09 in the corner for his only bucket of the game. The three-pointer tied the score at 27 at the buzzer.

During the opening play of the second half, McNaughton picked up a crucial third foul. The free throws gave the Black Knights a two-point lead. Rather than pull the big man, Head Coach Pat Flannery '80 left him in. The gamble paid off, as McNaughton scored six points, grabbed two boards and added an assist during a 10-0 run over the next 4:31.

"I think it was a thing where he had to become more of a focal point for us in the second half," Flannery said. "We stretched the floor a little bit better, and he was able to do some good things."

The Bison would not trail again, but Army kept the game tight. Richard Cleveland, who tallied 14 points, and Jarell Brown, who notched 14 of his own, kept the Black Knights close. It was Matt Bell's three with 1:56 left that cut the lead to two at 49-47. A pair of Brown free-throws following a Bison turnover tied the game with 1:07 remaining.

A time-out allowed Flannery to call for a pick-and-roll between McNaughton and Badmus.

"The shot Abe had, Chris rolled, and I think five, maybe six guys came for [Army]," Flannery said. "Abe hit the big shot."

"[Flannery] told me read the defense and make a right read," Badmus said. "Chris really did a good job rolling. He sealed my guard right under him, and I was wide open."

Excellent defense on the other end forced an errant shot attempt, but a flying Darren Mastropaolo '08 was unable to grab the rebound and keep his feet steady. The resulting travel gave Army new life, but the three-attempt clanged off back iron. John Griffin '08 seized the rebound and was sent to the free-throw line with 10 seconds remaining. Griffin, who had just missed the front end of a one-and-one, dropped both to ice the victory.

The Bison dominated the boards 39-24. In addition to McNaughton's 10 rebounds, Mastropaolo added eight and Griffin gave five. Badmus led the way in the point column with 15 points, with McNaughton's 12 second on the team.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

John Griffin '08 scans the court in the Bison's recent quarterfinal win over Navy. Griffin notched 10 points, four assists and three steals in Wednesday night's game.

Women's lacrosse off to slow start on season

By Kyle Barndollar
Writer

The women's lacrosse team opened up its 2007 season with losses in two tough road tests last week. Despite a three-goal performance from midfielder Bonnie Buechel '09, the Bison fell in their season opener at University of Maryland Baltimore County (UMBC), 13-5. Just five days after being defeated by last season's America East champions, the laxers traveled to 14th ranked Penn State, where they were beaten by a 19-6 margin.

"Personally, I feel that UMBC and PSU are the way to open up a season; it sets the bar for the team and poses challenges that will only aid us in our quest for the championship" Head Coach Jess Spadafora said.

Buechel recorded her second hat-trick in two games against Penn State last Wednesday in State College. After her first goal tied the game at 1-1, the Nittany Lions went on a 10-goal streak that would not end until halftime. The Orange and Blue would eventually fall 19-6.

Penn State 19
Bucknell 6

Sarah Collins '09 and Chelsea Peters '10 scored a goal apiece. Collins netted the first goal of the second half to bring the score to 11-2, while Peters' goal came four minutes later to make it 13-3. Casan VanLangen '09 also scored a goal, her first this season. Buechel would score the next two goals for the Bison to make it 15-6, but Penn State would score the final four goals of the game.

Penn State took 16 more shots than the Bison, and 13 different players combined for 19 goals. The Bison only managed four shots in the entire first half, but out-shot PSU 15-10 in the second. Katie Hartsock '10 made eight saves in her second career start in goal.

"Katie Hartsock has shown us some great things in the goal" said Spadafora, "She is calm and cool and a great teammate."

The Bison, whose 24-player roster contains 18 freshman and sophomores, battled hard against UMBC but were unable to overcome the Retrievers' six-goal run to start the game. Peters notched her first-ever collegiate goal with 10:06 remaining in the half to put her team on the board, 6-1. Less than one minute later, last season's leading scorer and Second Team All Patriot League selection Collins fired one home to cut the lead to 6-2, where it would stay until halftime.

UMBC 13
Bucknell 5

UMBC would go on another run to begin the second half, and stretch their lead to 10-2. Buechel, who looked determined to build on her First Team All Patriot League season last spring, would provide all of the offense for the Orange and Blue from that point on. The defense stiffened as the game progressed, and Hartsock made six saves on the way to the 13-5 result.

"The game against UMBC was definitely well fought although the score doesn't seem to show it," Co-Captain Lauren Deitrich '08 said. "It was a great team effort on re-defending which helped keep us in the fight."

The Bison will look to bounce back from their two early losses as they host Robert Morris on March 3 at home on Graham Field. The game against Robert Morris should also see the debut of freshman midfielder Alison Heffernan, who, after scoring four goals in a scrimmage versus Navy, missed the first two regular season games with a concussion.

"If we continue to improve every day, then we will be a better and great team in league play" said Spadafora. "This is a team that has decided that they want to win."

Ski squad slaloms to success

By Brian Mulligan
Sports Editor

Minimal snow this winter meant little time on the slopes for the Bison ski team.

Although the team had to battle unseasonably warm weather, canceling two trips and beginning the season on Jan. 27, the squad produced some impressive performances under the direction of team presidents, Teri Schlang '07 and Meagan Kingman '07. The women's team had a second place finish in the Alleghany Conference and tied for sixth at the Mid-Atlantic Regional Championship the following weekend in a field of 20 teams. The men had a rebuilding year with a great group of rising talent.

"This season was shorter than last year, which made it a little bit more difficult to get into a groove," Schlang said. "We had trouble finding training space due to the lack of snow, but all in all, it was another great year for the women's team."

The second-place finish at conference was enough for the women's team to qualify for the Mid-Atlantic Regional Championship, held this past weekend at Elk Mt. Resort, Pa. Over the course of the season, Schlang has consistently placed in the top three in conference racing and had a great performance at regionals. Schlang placed eighth in the Giant Slalom in a time of one minute and 27.8 seconds, while she took fifth place in the Slalom event, crossing the finish line in 1:40.9. In the World Cup Regional standings, Schlang finished in sixth place, notching 77 points.

Kingman had a solid showing in the Slalom event, placing 35th overall in 2:05.0. In the Giant Slalom, Jenny Armstrong '07 grabbed 36th place honors in 1:40.8. Before reaching the Mid-Atlantic Regional Championship, the Bison had a delayed start.

In the "A" Slalom event on Saturday, Schlang took second place honors with a combined time of 1:34.16, while teammate Kingman finished in 13th overall with a time of 2:01.98. Schlang also produced another second place finish the following day in the "A" Giant Slalom and Kingman broke into the top ten, placing ninth with a time of 1:14.17 in the same event.

On Saturday, Mike Adkins '08 was the first Bison to cross the finish line for the men's team in the "A" Slalom event, placing 11th overall. He finished his two runs in a combined 1:40.75, while Micah Schuette '09 finished less than two seconds behind Adkins to take 15th place. Pat Murphy '08 took 39th overall and bounced back from 1:08.01 first run to blaze the second run, crossing the finish line in 51.89.

Murphy came out roaring on Sunday in the "A" Giant Slalom event. He broke into the top ten, finishing ninth in 1:04.06. Wade Fellin '10 and Schuette rounded out the top three for the Orange and Blue, finishing 26th and 30th respectively. The men's squad finished seventh out of ten teams at Wisp. The Bison failed to qualify for conferences but have high hopes for next season.

"The youth of the men's team is promising for next season," Murphy said. "We added a few strong freshman skiers to the team this year, and we do not have any graduating 'A' team skiers."

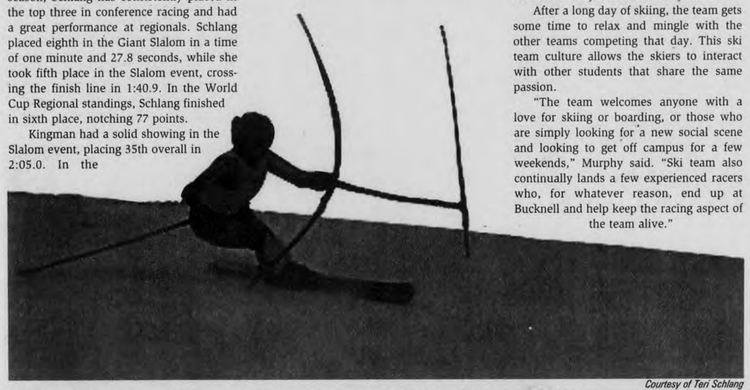
The team competes in both the Slalom and Giant Slalom during their regular season. The Slalom involves extremely quick, sharp turns and, as the racer proceeds down the course, he or she hits the gates out of his or her way. The racer's boots and skis must go around the gate, not necessarily their whole body. The Giant Slalom is a high-speed event with larger turns and slower movement. The racer grazes the gates instead of hitting them on the way down.

Along with the competition, the ski team also is a great social outlet.

"One of the best parts of ski team is that it there are always new people joining," Adkins said. "It's great to meet people who have the same passion for skiing. I made friends with a lot of the new guys and [am] excited to carry it over to next year."

After a long day of skiing, the team gets some time to relax and mingle with the other teams competing that day. This ski team culture allows the skiers to interact with other students that share the same passion.

"The team welcomes anyone with a love for skiing or boarding, or those who are simply looking for a new social scene and looking to get off campus for a few weekends," Murphy said. "Ski team also continually lands a few experienced racers who, for whatever reason, end up at Bucknell and help keep the racing aspect of the team alive."



Courtesy of Teri Schlang

Teri Schlang '07 guns through a gate in a slalom run at the Mid-Atlantic Regional Championship. Schlang competed in the 2005 national individual championship and is one of the outgoing presidents of the ski team.

Bison tennis tumbles again

By Ellis Hudes
Writer

The women's tennis team fell to Stony Brook 5-2 Saturday in Williamsport, Pa., marking its fourth straight loss and leaving the team with a discouraging 1-6 record. While the team has struggled with injuries to its top players in recent weeks, the situation is giving younger players more match play early this season, preparing them for matches to come.

"The match versus Stony Brook was another tough one," Caitlin Baffa '08 said. "This year we have had an exceptionally tough schedule, but each match we are learning and building on our errors, and it is getting better and better."

The Orange and Blue were led by Baffa, who won both her singles and doubles matches. In other singles action, Carlin Calcaterra '10 staged an impressive comeback against Stony Brook's Claudia Sanua at the No. 2 spot. Calcaterra dropped the first set but won the second and third set tiebreakers to complete her 3-6, 7-6(7-5), 10-5 comeback to win the match. Tiffany Card '09 nearly pulled off another three-set victory for the Bison at No. 5 singles but ultimately fell to Brook Flanigan 6-0, 7-5, 10-6.

The remaining Bison losses were in straight sets. Paulina Gamboa '09 lost 6-3, 6-1 to Paola Rodolfi, JoAnna Grossman '09 fell 6-2, 6-1 to Erika Federgreen and Kirstyn Sotak '10 was defeated by Victoria Vovsha 6-2, 6-2.

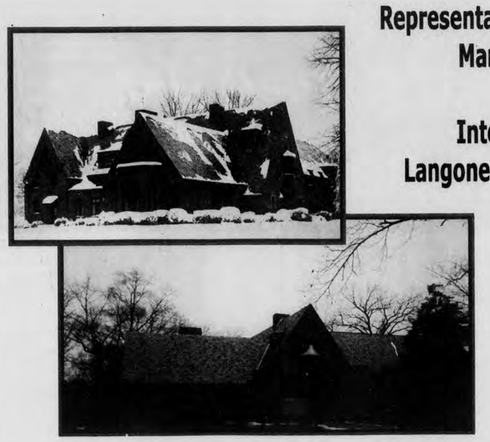
Stony Brook won two of three doubles matches against the Bison to earn the necessary point. The duo of Rodolfi and Federgreen defeated Calcaterra and Gamboa 8-4 in No. 1 doubles, while Card and Grossman went down 8-1 to Sanua and Flanigan in the No.2 slot. Baffa and Camille Simonetti '09 finally put the Bison on the board with an 8-4 victory over Vovsha and Murugan.

"We are working hard as a team on and off the court. I am looking forward to coming back from spring break and starting our patriot league matches."
—Caitlin Baffa '08

"Our team has really good depth and through injuries we have been able to step up and help each other through it," Baffa said. "We are working hard as a team on and off the court. I am looking forward to coming back from spring break and starting our Patriot League matches."

The Orange and Blue return to Williamsport, Pa., on Saturday where they will face off against Marist at 1 p.m.

KAPPA SIGMA FRATERNITY
Established 1869
Be a Founding Father at Bucknell

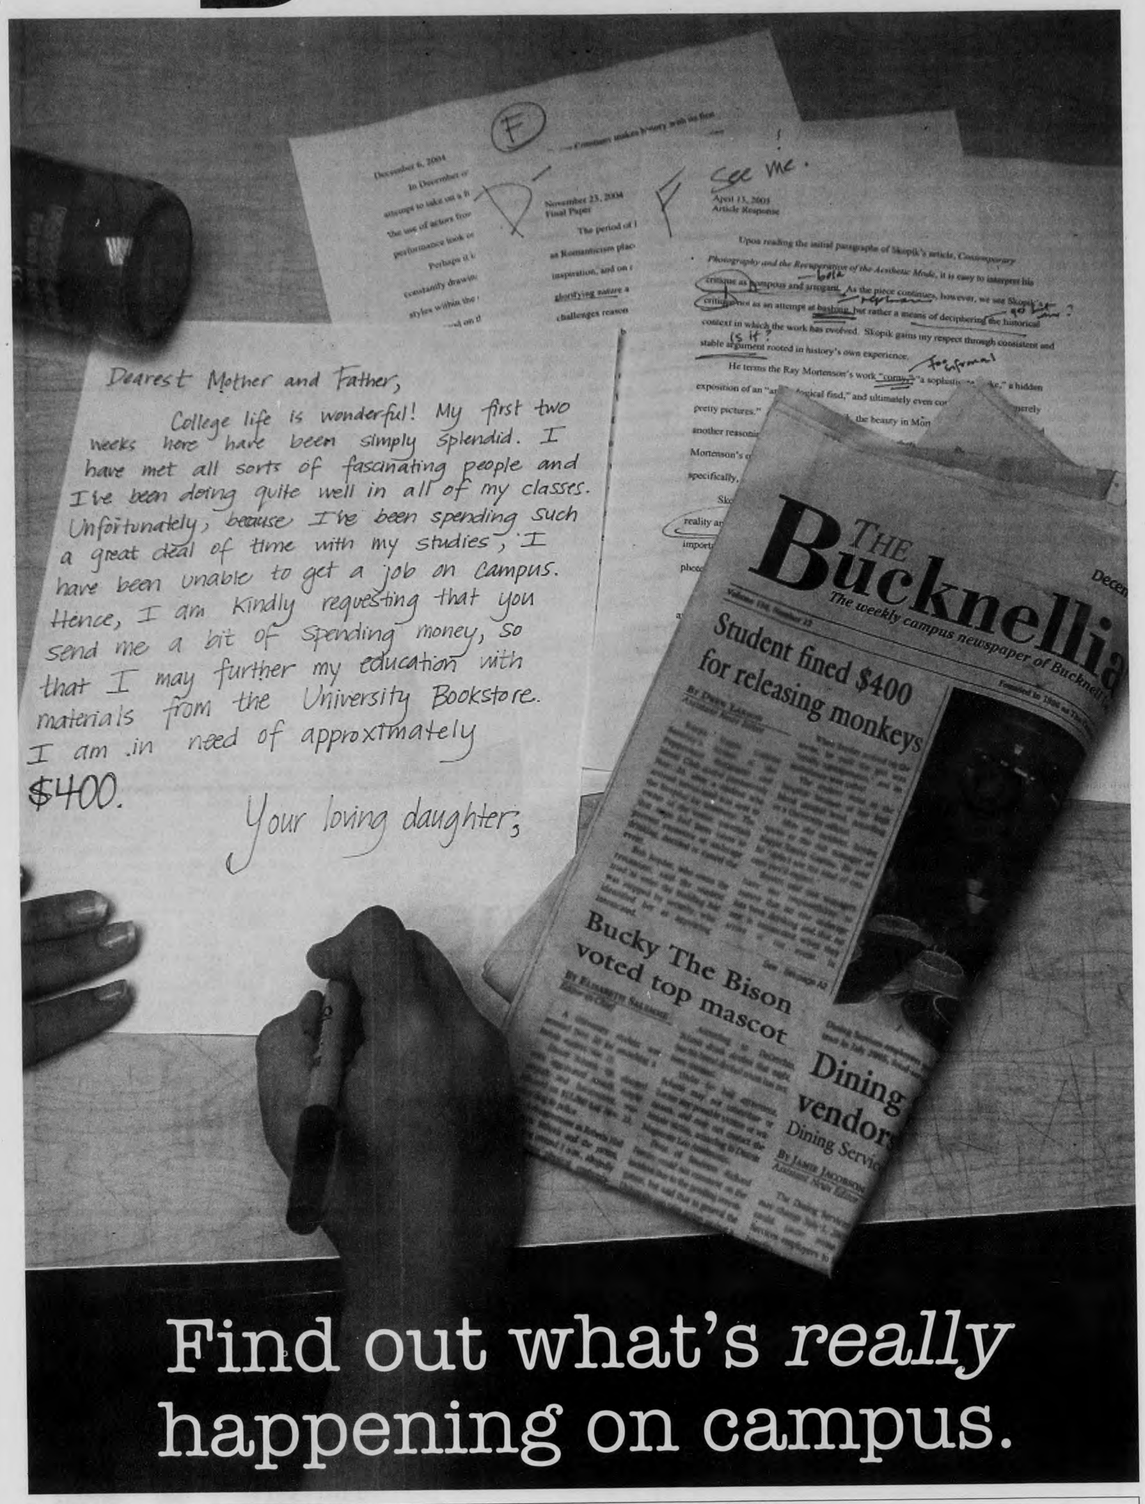


Representatives will on campus
March 5th, 2007

Interest Meeting
Langone Center, Room 213
7:00 PM

Contact Chris Kontalonis
434-295-3193
chrisk@hq.kappasigma.org

The Bucknellian



Dearest Mother and Father,
College life is wonderful! My first two weeks here have been simply splendid. I have met all sorts of fascinating people and I've been doing quite well in all of my classes. Unfortunately, because I've been spending such a great deal of time with my studies, I have been unable to get a job on campus. Hence, I am kindly requesting that you send me a bit of spending money, so that I may further my education with materials from the University Bookstore. I am in need of approximately $400.
Your loving daughter,
THE Bucknellian
The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell
Student fined $400 for releasing monkeys
Bucky The Bison voted top mascot
Dining vendors

Find out what's really happening on campus.

Subscribing to The Bucknellian for the 2006-2007 academic year is easy!

Enclose this form and a check (made out to The Bucknellian) and mail it to:

The Bucknellian, Bucknell University C3952, 701 Moore Avenue, Lewisburg, PA 17837

Name _____

Address _____

_____

Phone _____

E-mail _____

__ ONE SEMESTER: receive 12 issues during the fall or spring semester for $30. Please specify semester: _____

For more information contact The Bucknellian at 570-577-1520 or bucknellian@bucknell.edu

shoutmouth beta delivers music news

Courtesy of oscar.com

Launch of new online music news community gives voice to music fans

By Liz Stein
Contributing Writer

Isn't it a pain to go back and forth between different Web sites to read about the current happenings in each music genre? Do you find yourself checking CMT.com to find out what new political debate the Dixie Chicks are caught up in, then logging on to AllHipHop.com to read up on Lil' Wayne's most recent mix-tape and then having to click on MTV.com to check out John Mayer's tour schedule?

If you've listed "everything" under your "music favorites" on MySpace and it has become a real hindrance for you to stay updated on your own music preferences, there is a solution to this problem: Shoutmouth.com.

On Feb. 22, Shoutmouth announced its launch of "the most comprehensive news community on the Internet." According to Billboard Publicity Wire, "Shoutmouth.com offers daily music news on nearly 1,000 popular music artists, filling a void in today's music news industry."

"Most Web sites cover only the top ten music stories each day ... That type of generic coverage does not satisfy the needs of serious music fans," co-founder Pete Kennedy said. "When you look at most people's iPods, they're listening to many different artists and genres of music."

Shoutmouth.com users have access to the latest updates on artists in categories including rock, pop, rap, R&B, country and electronic.

"We think that music fans should be able to read news on all their favorite artists the same way that they scroll through songs on their iPods," Kennedy said.

[Members] can even submit news stories, recommend new music artists to add to the community and receive other customized news and e-mail alerts on their favorite artists without any charge.

Shoutmouth.com features links to articles in categories such as "All News," "Top News," "General News," and "Artists A-Z." This grouping system is one of the best features of the Web site because it allows you to read up on all genres of music in a straightforward, organized fashion—all in one place.

The stories that appear on Shoutmouth.com are written by its staff and members, and each story links to an original news source in order to ensure its accuracy and truthfulness. In short, the site publishes music news with commentary.

According to Kennedy, the staff screens hundreds of Web sites and blogs for the best stories and then "summarize[s] the news events, add[s] a viewpoint, and post[s] a link to the original news source, in case readers would like to learn more. In this way, Shoutmouth.com could be described as a combination of a blog and a news aggregator, with some social networking functions added in."

All articles are archived and are available to all readers, not just members. Music is also available, though downloadable MP3s are not yet offered. There are tons of YouTube and MySpace videos of artists' live performances and music videos as well.

Shoutmouth reports concert schedules and tour announcements, which can be found by looking at an artist's news page or through customized e-mails, available to members.

Members can also create personal profiles, interact with other members and provide comments on news stories. They can even submit news stories, recommend new music artists to add to the community and receive other customized news and e-mail alerts on their favorite artists without any charge.

At the moment, Shoutmouth membership is available by invitation only. If you don't know a member who can send you an invitation, make sure you log onto the Web site and submit your e-mail address to be put on the waiting list.

Shoutmouth.com is a brilliant way for serious music listeners to stay in tune with the constantly changing music scene. It allows listeners to connect with others who share similar interests and communicate thoughts and opinions to the virtual community.

On Shoutmouth.com, "college students will be able to submit news stories about local music events involving popular artists, such as performances and interviews/appearances on college radio," Kennedy said.

Here is your chance to become a part of a new movement in the music and news communities. Get excited, get to a computer and sign up.

Meg's mix: Songs to wake up to

By Megan McWhinney
Contributing Writer

If you're anything like me, the sound of an alarm going off in the morning is right up there with nails on a chalkboard. The abrasive siren signaling my departure from dreamland and the warmth and comfort of my bed is among the least welcome sounds I can imagine.

[T]hese songs start off smoothly and segue into something upbeat that will hopefully get your day started with a smile.

Luckily, modern technology provides us with an escape. We now have the option of alarm clocks that play CDs and iPod tunes, allowing us to pick the poison to which we wake. But when we are afforded such choices, we open ourselves to the possibility of a grievous error. Sure, selecting the wrong song to wake up to seems like a minor mistake, but think of it as waking up on the wrong side of the bed. If someone woke you up with a bullhorn, you would probably be in one nasty mood for the remainder of the day.

When selecting a song to wake up to, you should also consider this: how much do you love the sound of your alarm clock? Your favorite song might put you in a cheerful mood when you're awake, but when it's the first thing you hear in the morning, it might become jarring and unpleasant. The negative feelings associated with waking up are enough to cause your once-favorite song to make the hairs on your neck stand on end. With this in mind, I've assembled a list of songs that I think are about as close as you can get to a pleasant awakening.

Another important quality that an alarm-song should have is a gentle introduction. How long do you let your alarm go on for? At most, you'll hear 20 seconds of whatever song you choose. There shouldn't be vocals in the song until the music has been rolling for about seven seconds. If you're a light sleeper like me, awakening to an unfamiliar man's voice would scare me to death. Taking that into consideration, these songs start off smoothly and segue into something upbeat that will hopefully get your day started with a smile.

1. "Here Comes the Sun"—The Beatles
This starts off with soft guitar, then eases into an upbeat song about the sun coming up. If that's not self-explanatory, I don't know what is.

2. "I Still Remember"—Bloc Party
This one is by a relatively new band on the scene. It begins with a long guitar note that leads into a pleasant song about happy days with someone you love.

3. "Run Around"—Blues Traveler
Remember this one? You have to sing along, so you definitely will have to wake up to do that.

4. "Don't Panic"—Coldplay
Soft guitar leads into Chris Martin's soothing voice in a lovely song that has nothing to do with panic.

5. "Caught by the River"—Doves
Seeing a pattern? A melodic acoustic guitar gives way to a verse that builds into a beautiful and uplifting song.

6. "Fresh Feeling"—Eels
To mix things up, this song begins with a series of string instruments and develops into one of the most elevating songs I know, sung in a mellow, comforting voice.

7. "Pardon Me"—Incubus
This old favorite commences with a dream-like guitar. And, if the first 25 seconds don't wake you up, the sudden entrance of the drums and change of tempo definitely will.

8. "Flake"—Jack Johnson
Acoustic guitar and steel drums give way to Johnson's voice, which is like vocal cotton candy.

9. "Higher and Higher"—Jackie Wilson
Soft drums and tambourines begin this upbeat song that will make you want to shimmy (yes, I said shimmy) out of bed.

10. "No Such Thing"—John Mayer
A modern master of guitar creates a lovely melody that will have you smiling as you shake off the sheets.

11. "Pat Your Hands On Me, My Love"—Owen
Props if you've heard of this guy. He lays each instrument and sound down himself and combines them to create the song. The guitar that drives the song sounds like rain, and his voice is amazingly calming.

12. "Me and Julio Down by the Schoolyard"—Paul Simon
Buoyant guitar and bubbly vocals make this a great song to open your eyes to.

13. "Life On A Chain"—Pete Yorn
This one starts off sounding like an old record, then gives way to a fun song that I've woken up to for years and still love.

14. "In the Meantime"—Spacehog
This song features electric guitar played as gently as possible and lyrics that make little sense. Just try not to imitate the "wooohooo."

15. "Beautiful Day"—U2
A completely obvious and entirely appropriate choice. This should remind you of the wonderful possibilities that the new day presents.

Spoiler Alert!

By Matthew Saylor
Associate Editor of Content

Here is a recap of some shows that will be taking a break from airing new episodes over the next several weeks.

"Grey's Anatomy" — Meredith lived. Shocking that the titular character would not be killed off when the show is at its peak! However, Meredith's mother was not so fortunate—Dr. Ellis Grey, played by the brilliant Kate Burton, passed away. At least she was able to share one more moment with her daughter as they passed through opposite directions of the hospital for the dead. Is this a jumping-the-shark moment?

Cristina got to tell Meredith that she is engaged to Burke. The Chief admitted to dyeing his hair in order to impress the ladies as he goes through divorce proceedings with his estranged wife. Izzie was finally reinstated as a full-fledged surgeon, while continuing her verbal assault on George for marrying Callie. Addison told Mark that she will consider having a serious relationship with him if he can go 60 days without having sex with anyone. But will she be able to resist Alex?

A spin-off of the show is in the works. It would star Kate Walsh's character, Addison, along with actor Taye Diggs. "Grey's Anatomy" will air a two-hour episode in either April or May that hopes to act as the launching point for this new show.

"The Office" — Pam got back together with Roy as he showed a new, gentile and caring side of himself. That all changed when she told him about her kiss with Jim at casino night. Roy proceeded to destroy a bar with his brother, after which Pam ended their relationship—hopefully for good—Pam did say, perhaps for the first time, that she had feelings for Jim when they kissed.

Jim continues on a stable path with Karen, but will they lose it all with Roy now on the warpath to kill him?

Michael and Jan went public with their romance with typical results. Michael comes off looking inappropriate in public, while Jan does so in private. It's not that smart to have sex in the bathroom of the house of your CFO.

Look for Andy to return to Dunder Mifflin from anger management classes when the show comes back in April. Also, the show will have a special one-hour season finale in May.

"E.R." — Luka and Abby are engaged, but no wedding date has been set. If there is one this season, look for it in May.

Sam sent her son off to a boarding school for troubled youths. Without a romantic partner currently in the picture, there is no clear indicator of what her future holds.

Neela continues to have difficulty choosing between Gates and Ray, acting in a manner not fair to either man. Gates has a lot to deal with regarding his alcoholic father and his motherless daughter (though it is not confirmed that Sarah is his child for sure), and never seems to be around when Neela needs him. Neela could use somebody though, especially since Dubenko has found a new favorite student because Neela wouldn't go through with an ethically questionable transplant surgery. But is she just leading Ray on with her actions, resulting in the kiss we saw at the end of the Feb. 22 episode. Plus, isn't Ray still dating intern Katy?

Look for some new information regarding "Scrubs," "24" and "Lost" next week.

Phi Kappa Psi Battle of the Bands

Last Saturday during Siblings Weekend, Phi Kappa Psi fraternity hosted Battle of the Bands as a non-alcoholic event to raise proceeds for the Million Penny Project. The lead singer and bassist pictured are members of the band Rawdog and the Copy Cats.

Spring 2007 – First Wednesday Series

JAZZ at Bucknell

The Gary Thomas Group

Gary Thomas, tenor saxophone
Russell Kirk, saxophones
Paul Bollenback, guitar
Herman Burney, bass
Steve Williams, drums

8:30 p.m., Wednesday
March 7, 2007
Bucknell Hall
Free Admission

Bucknell Hall is located on Loomis Street between the President's House and Hunt Hall.

Bucknell

Reuters Photo Archive

Helen Mirren shows off her Oscar for Best Actress in her role as Queen Elizabeth II in "The Queen." She has earned two previous Oscar nominations, one in 1994 ("The Madness of King George") and the other in 2001 ("Gosford Park").

the oscars®

Courtesy of oscar.com

Hollywood's shining star falls

By Matthew Saylor
Associate Editor of Content

While the 79th Annual Academy Awards broadcast may have had more suspense surrounding it than in recent years, it turned out to be another ho-hum evening at the Kodak Theatre in Hollywood, Calif.

Yes, the majority of big-name stars were present, including a bald-headed Jack Nicholson (it is for a movie and not a show of solidarity with Britney Spears), but some were off trying to save the world. Angelina Jolie was in Sudan, leaving Brad Pitt at home with the kids and not with his fellow "Babel" stars, and Scarlett Johansson was in India, doing her best to make the world a better place.

Of course, this is not to say that those in attendance at the Oscars were overshadowed by those do-gooders not present. The Academy Awards went green this year, meaning that the production crew made the effort to put together a show using environmentally friendly means. If only it could have put together a show that was entertainment friendly.

Coverage began at 8 p.m. EST with an entirely unnecessary pre-show, featuring incompetent "reporters" and "fashion gurus" asking all of the really important questions, such as "How does it feel to be here at the Academy Awards?"

Once the show started at 8:30 p.m., it improved, but not to Oscar standards. The opening, featuring pre-recorded remarks by nominees known and unknown in categories we do and do not care about, was a nice touch, spreading out the recognition for this year's shining stars in the motion picture industry.

Host Ellen DeGeneres then took the stage, performing an opening monologue that, unlike this article, tried very hard not to insult anyone. It did prove that there can be humor without unceremoniously bashing people, but DeGeneres was clearly battling some nerves. She improved as the night went along, but reviews for her performance have been mixed. She could have been better, she could have been worse, but at least she stuck to the theme of mediocrity that the Academy promoted this year. (To be fair, DeGeneres was better than past hosts like Chris Rock and Jon Stewart.)

Will Ferrell, Jack Black and John C. Reilly infused some laughs into the show with their performance of "A Comedian at the Oscars," spoofing the long-held belief that the Academy does not view comedies with the same respect as dramas. The best line of this performance was "Helen Mirren and an Oscar will be coming home with me."

Sure Mirren is 61, but she looked pretty good. I have no objections to this remark.

Pilobolus, an internationally-acclaimed American dance company that also made an appearance at Bucknell last year, showed that with great flexibility almost any design can be made. They proceeded to turn humans into penguins, a gun and a Volkswagen bus. Performances by the "Dreamgirls" were also entertaining, specifically showing off the pipes of Beyoncé Knowles and Oscar—winner Jennifer Hudson (Best Supporting Actress).

The telecast went until almost 12:20 a.m., running a good 45 minutes too long. This could have been avoided had the show cut down on the number of montages put together by famous directors. They showed some enjoyable clips from foreign films and other films from the past, but it would have been better to see some more clips from the motion pictures that were being showcased this year. Was it really necessary to show all of these montages this year? Save some for the years to come.

The big winner of the night was "The Departed," taking home awards for Best Picture, Best Adapted Screenplay (Willian Monahan), Best Film Editing and finally, a Best Director award for Martin Scorsese, who earned a well-deserved standing ovation.

I found it strange that Nicholson co-presented the award for Best Picture with Diane Keaton, considering he was in "The Departed." No bias there, I'm sure.

Mirren and Forest Whitaker each won another award for their lead performances in "The Queen" and "The Last King of Scotland," respectively. It has been quite a run for the two of them, and it must be a bit of a relief that they no longer have to prepare speeches every time they dress up.

"Little Miss Sunshine" also turned out well, winning two major awards, Best Original Screenplay (Michael Arndt) and Best Supporting Actor for Alan Arkin, the drug-taking, foul-mouthed grandpa that shares so many tender scenes with the ceremony's youngest nominee, Abigail Breslin.

As the show progressed, the 10-year-old Breslin could be seen clutching her Curious George doll, as her bedtime came and went. As I clutched my Kermit the Frog doll, I too wished for the ceremony to finally come to an end.

I would be remiss if I did not mention the presence that former Vice President Al Gore had at the ceremony. His documentary, "An Inconvenient Truth," won two awards, and he was able to get in on the humor himself. Gore pretended to begin announcing his candidacy to become the next President of the United States, when the orchestra played him off stage. It is too bad Gore was not this good-natured in 2000. He also wasn't this overweight, but that's another story.

In the end, the evening had its moments, like DeGeneres getting Steven Spielberg to take her picture with Clint Eastwood or giving a script to Scorsese to read. These moments were too few and far between, and that is saying something for a nearly four-hour show. When it was over, like Breslin, I was just grateful to go to bed.

By Ana Fullmer
Writer

I don't know if it is just me who has noticed, but for the past few days it seems that all my beloved "Bubble-nellians" have been walking around like the living dead. I've noticed more dark circles, frowning faces and unplucked eyebrows than usual, which has led me to only one conclusion. Y'all are worried sick about Britney Spears!

The former pop singer's breakdown has inspired a global depression, and with good reason: Our homegirl cannot get a break.

Last week the singer's former boyfriend, Isaac Cohen, spilled to the press about Britney's delicate state, and this week her short-time husband, corn-fed white boy Jason Alexander, told Britain's Sunday Mirror some damning stories about Britney's drug habit and penchant for sexual experimentation.

"We used to take ecstasy at night to party and cocaine during the day to stay awake. Then we would take downers like Valium and Vicodin to come down and rest ... I couldn't keep up with her," Alexander said.

He also sounded like a real gentleman when he told the story about how he "won the sex lotto" the time he caught Britney in the midst of naked activities with a dancer and was asked to join.

K-Fed seems to be the only one not trying to profit off the star's most recent breakdown. People.com reports he is trying to be supportive of his estranged wife with repeated visits to her rehabilitation center in Malibu, even bringing her sons to see the troubled mother of two. I guess Federline has gotten enough money out of her as it is. Brit should probably just stick to the naked dancers.

In other news, Angelina Jolie and Brad Pitt have been spotted all around the Big Easy the past few days, just relaxing and showing off their darling baby girls, Zahara and Shiloh. Who needs to scope out the beautiful people at the Oscars when you can hang with your gorgeous family 24/7?

Sources say that the couple has also been making repeated visits to orphanages in Vietnam in order to acquire another child. Pitt once told a magazine that he wanted enough kids to fill a soccer team. If they are taking that route, there is going to be one lucky Vietnamese orphan in the near future. Personally though, I think Brad and Ange would be better suited to adopt a bored college student in central Pennsylvania. For example, me. I already know how to play soccer.

Speaking of bored, or at least boring people that I'm not usually bothered about, singer James Blunt ran over someone's foot on Saturday. Blunt is the British guy who sings the over-played, high-pitched song, "You're Beautiful." According to Dlisted.com, a man was waiting outside a pre-Oscar party during the early hours of Saturday morning when Blunt and his girlfriend, allegedly trying to duck the paparazzi, raced out of the building and sped off in their car, running over the fan's foot.

Jeez, it must just be so hard to be Blunt, with the paparazzi dogging your every move and people you don't know speculating on all facets of your life. Oh wait, nevermind, no one cares about the guy who produced the annoying one-hit wonder except the occasional dude who wanted an autograph but got ran over instead.

Our friends across the Atlantic sure have been busy this week! As if American crazies weren't doing a good enough job keeping us glued to our television sets, PerezHilton.com reports that both the cell-phone hurling Naomi Campbell and the titillating Posh Spice are in the works to become stars of reality television shows. Campbell's show is reportedly going to be documenting her search for a new assistant. The English model has been accused of physical abuse from her assistants and staff. Any applicants should be instructed to wear a helmet at all times!

As for Victoria Beckham, her show will focus on her move from England to Los Angeles. According to the UK's Daily Mail Web site, the former Spice Girl's husband, soccer phenomenon David Beckham, will have a small role on the show, but the series' main focus will be Victoria and how very hilarious she is. I'm sure she'll have me in stitches.

Reuters Photo Archive

Jennifer Hudson accepts her Oscar for her role as the talented yet troubled Motown singer Effie White in "Dreamgirls." During the awards ceremony, Hudson and cast mates Beyonce Knowles and Anika Noni Rose were given the opportunity to perform the three nominated songs from the movie.

Reuters Photo Archive

"The Departed" was Martin Scorsese's eighth Academy Award nomination, and the movie for which he has finally won his Oscar. The Oscar was presented to him by fellow directors Francis Ford Coppola, George Lucus and Steven Speilberg, two of which had also been the recipient of Academy honors.

Winners List

Who shined at the 2007 Oscars

Best Picture—"The Departed"

Best Director—Martin Scorsese, "The Departed"

Best Actress—Helen Mirren, "The Queen"

Best Actor—Forest Whitaker, "The Last King of Scotland"

Best Supporting Actress—Jennifer Hudson, "Dreamgirls"

Best Supporting Actor—Alan Arkin, "Little Miss Sunshine"

Best Animated Feature—"Happy Feet"

Best Documentary Feature—"An Inconvenient Truth"

Best Original Screenplay—Michael Arndt, "Little Miss Sunshine"

Best Adapted Screenplay—William Monahan, "The Departed"

Best Costume Design—Milena Canonero, "Marie Antoinette"

Best Music (Score)—Gustavo Santaolalla, "Babel"

Best Makeup—David Martí and Montse Ribé, "Pan's Labyrinth"

Best Visual Effects—John Knoll, Hal Hickel, Charles Gibson and Allen Hall, "Pirates of the Caribbean: Dead Man's Chest"

March 9, 2007

The Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

Volume 139, Number 7 | Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue | www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

The delights of Denmark

Copenhagen may not be the first city you associate with Europe, but it's definitely worth a visit.

See page A8

Survey evaluates University

By Sara Roth
Contributing Writer

The Office of Communications has created a survey that asks focus groups to evaluate various aspects of the campus.

The University has largely depended on anecdotal information about its reputation and how its strengths are perceived relative to competitors, Chief Communications Officer, Pete Mackey said.

According to Pam Keiser, the senior associate director of the Career Development Center, "at present, the only survey that the [Career Development Center] sends to alumni is the Post-Graduate Report Activity survey," and that only goes to the most recently graduated class.

"The goal of this survey is to find out what Bucknellians from each particular class are pursuing within their first year of graduation from Bucknell," Keiser said.

In recent years, other surveys have explored opinions of prospective students and parents and small groups of alumni, and there is an annual survey of graduating seniors. But a comprehensive assessment of external audiences has not been taken in at least a generation.

Since last semester, the Office of Communications has been planning a comprehensive study of perceptions of the University. Headed by Mackey, this study is intended to help the University gain an understanding of what external audiences think of the University, where they get their information and what they think the University's strengths and weaknesses are.

In order to obtain objective information, the University has hired a private firm, Peter Hart Research Associates, based in Washington, D.C. In the past, the Peter Hart firm has conducted studies for other universities such as Duke, Franklin and Marshall and the University of California system, and has been the campaign research advisor for the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum since its founding.

According to Mackey, "this study is important because Bucknell moves in a very competitive higher-education sector, and we want to be able to talk about Bucknell in a way that is consistently genuine and defines us successfully to prospective students and alumni."

This study will be conducted in two phases. Phase one, which started last week, is a "Qualitative Phase." In this phase, focus groups will be utilized to test "big ideas," Mackey said. There will be a variety of focus groups that include prospective students, parents and alumni.

Regarding participation,

See SURVEY page A3

Bed shortage anticipated

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

All currently empty dorm rooms, like the one pictured above in Harris Hall, will be filled next year in the University's search to find 130 extra beds.

By Kelly McGaw
Contributing Writer

The Office of Housing and Residential Life (OHRL) has begun to plan for a housing shortage of approximately 130 beds in fall 2007.

Renovations taking place in the summer of 2007 will eliminate 38 on-campus beds from Swartz Hall and Seventh Street House.

Besides the renovations, other factors including decreased fraternity enrollment, a reduction in students choosing to live off-campus and the decrease in study abroad enrollment for the fall semester have all contributed to the housing crunch.

"We have averaged five students above goal for the last four years, resulting in an on-campus enrollment this current year that is 42 above what we had planned," said Kurt Thiede, vice president for enrollment management and dean of admissions. This over-enroll-

See BEDS page A2

MEN'S BASKETBALL

Another chance to dance

The Bison travel to Holy Cross for the Patriot League championship game

By Matthew Saylor
Associate Editor of Content

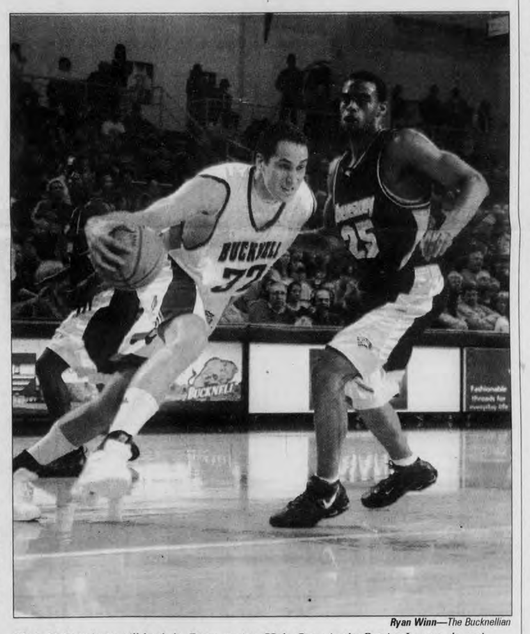
There is perhaps nothing more exciting in sports than a great rivalry.

Fans were reminded of this when Duke player Gerald Henderson committed a hard foul against Tyler Hansbrough of North Carolina last Sunday.

The media attention surrounding the event was simply because it was Duke-North Carolina. The same kind of attention is given to rivalries like the New York Yankees versus the Boston Red Sox or The Ohio State University versus University of Michigan.

The Patriot League has seen the development of its own rivalry, renewed today for the twelfth time in the last four years. The men's basketball team from the College of the Holy Cross will host the University today in a matchup for the Patriot League Tournament title.

See PREVIEW page B5



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Chris McNaughton will lead the Bison against Holy Cross in the Patriot League championship game today. This is the third consecutive year that the teams have vied for the title.

English department hires two professors

By Sophia Leong
Contributing Writer

The University's English department will welcome two qualified and valuable additions to the African-American literature concentration after months of searching, reviewing resumes, and traveling for personal interviews

Initially searching for one position, the University's search committee was very impressed by the talented and strong applicant pool. They urged the administration to seize this opportunity to hire not one, but two new professors. The administration agreed to hire Carmen Gillespie and James Peterson.

"This is a wonderful opportunity for Bucknell to build a strong concentration

See PROF page A2

Carmen Gillespie	James Peterson
- Doctorate in English from Emory University	- Doctorate in English from the University of Pennsylvania
- Recipient of numerous awards and scholarships	- Specializes in "hip-hop" culture
- American and Caribbean literatures and cultures scholar	- Seven publications based on his research and study of hip-hop and its influence on the literature and media
- Toni Morrison Scholar

Vacation dangers rampant

By Jeremy O'Sullivan
Writer

Public Safety said that 58.9 percent of students are injured over spring break during a forum on Tuesday informing students of the risks involved with traveling during break.

Spring break, beginning today, often presents dangers that students do not always consider before booking their flights.

Public Safety continued its efforts to protect students by issuing advice by campus e-mails and holding the forum to discuss ways for students to stay safe.

Some safety tips included not carrying exorbitant amounts of cash, opening drinks with a personal bottle opener to ensure a safe drink and keeping the hotel key around one's neck—even while swimming—to prevent theft. Public Safety also recommended asking a hotel concierge about "good and bad" places around town and always staying in groups, even while using the bathroom.

The forum provided students with a list of many surprising dangers and some alarming statistics.

Public Safety presented a study of college students that found that during past spring breaks an average of 49.7 percent of students engaged in unplanned sex, 52.3 percent engaged in unprotected sex, 58.4 percent had trouble with the police and 58.9 percent were injured.

Statistics also predict over 5,000 arrests and 250 deaths will occur over the next two weeks of American college spring breaks.

"Well, I'm shocked," Anthony Scordio '09 said. "The numbers are definitely encouraging to safely plan ahead."

Cheryl Sitler, Public Safety's new operations lieutenant, said, "Showing students the real statistics and what happens in the real world will make you step back and think, OK, what can I do during my spring break this year to be safe?"

Sitler raised the concern that most students hear the warnings so frequently that most tune them out, leaving them lingering in the back of their minds.

"It was our intent to refresh the students' memory of the safety concerns for spring break," Sitler said. "We want every student to go and have fun on spring break and complete their educations."

Public Safety has plans of encouraging its outreach and relations to more students in order to provide a more effective means of safety.

"I think that if you develop that relationship with students ... they're going to be more apt to come ask for help if they need it or report something if they don't think it's quite right," Sitler said.

INSIDE THIS ISSUE

OPINIONS

The University should have anticipated the potential for a bed shortage next semester. Will students pay the price?

A4

FEATURES

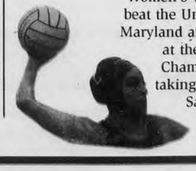
For students looking to relax and exercise their creativity, knitting may just be the perfect hobby. Learn how to get started in Features.

A7

A&E

Former University professor Dan Hoffman recently published a book about a small liberal arts college .... sound familiar?

B8



SPORTS

Women's water polo beat the University of Maryland and Harvard at the ECAC Championship, taking third place Saturday.

B2

Public Safety Log

Wednesday, February 28

ALARM – FIRE—Bucknell West: Alarm caused by cooking.

ALARM – FIRE—Uptown: Alarm caused by the use of a smoke machine.

Thursday, March 1

ALARM – FIRE—Hunt Hall: Alarm caused by a cooking.

DISORDERLY CONDUCT—Smith Hall: Feces placed on room door.

Friday, March 2

ALARM – INTRUSION—Ellen Clarke Bertrand Library: Cause unknown.

THEFT—Krebs Fitness Center: Wallet was stolen.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Kinney Natatorium: Non-University student transported to hospital for treatment.

Saturday, March 3

ASSIST OTHER AGENCY—McDonnell Hall: Assist PSP on license lift order.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Roberts Hall: Vending machine damaged.

ALARM – FIRE—Bucknell West: Caused by smoking.

Sunday, March 4

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Swartz Hall: Student Health Services transported student to Evangelical Community Hospital.

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—Sigma Chi Fraternity: Unknown person activated pull station.

ALARM – FIRE—Bucknell West: Caused by burned food.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Roberts Hall: Multiple broken windows.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Larison Hall: Broken window.

PROPERTY DAMAGE—Larison Hall: Large hole in the hallway wall.

Monday March 5

SUSPICIOUS CIRCUMSTANCES—St. George Street: Vehicle had its lug nuts loosened.

ALARM – FIRE—Lowry House: Caused by an employee.

Tuesday March 6

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Larison Hall: Towel dispenser and entry door damaged.

ALARM – FIRE—Bucknell West: Caused by cooking.

ALARM – INTRUSION—Biology Building: Caused by an employee.

ALARM – INTRUSION—Marts Hall: Cause by an employee.

ALARM – FIRE—Bucknell West: Caused by cooking.

MISSING PERSON—Weis Center: Person was found after the event.

May lose 130 beds next semester

BEDS From page A1

ment, the expected enrollment for the Class of 2011 and the renovation shortfall of 38 beds amounts to an actual shortage of approximately 130 beds.

The University has begun planning to alleviate the situation.

Dan Remley, director of Housing and Residential Life and assistant dean of students, has a game plan with a two-part solution. The first set of beds will come from doubling the occupancy of the singles in the A and B wings of Swartz. This will create a total of 65 new beds. The remaining 65 beds will come from the tripling of doubles in Bucknell West.

Some students feel that the singles of Swartz will not be large enough for a second student.

"There is no way to fit two people in my room. I can barely fit all my stuff in there myself," said Stephen Tarr '08, a resident of Swartz.

As a concession to students who may physically bear the brunt of the housing crunch, Remley plans to propose increased flexibility in block booking so peer groups can remain together. Block booking allows a group of students the opportunity to reserve a set of connected rooms on the same residence hall.

Block booking in Swartz might jump from a six-person maximum to a 10-person maximum, allowing for the block booking of five doubles. In Bucknell West, it will become possible for a group of 10 to book both mod units.

The loss of space as a result of an extra resident in each unit will be alleviated by a furniture-removal service prior to the move-in date. One member of each unit will have the opportunity to fill out a form selecting items of furniture that they wish to be removed. By filling out this form, the student will become eligible for a drawing to win a flat screen television. Students placed in Swartz A and B wing doubles will enter a drawing for free BU TV.

The renovations in Swartz will eliminate four beds per floor in the C and D wings to allow for upgraded bathrooms and provide the space for men's and women's bathrooms on each floor. Additionally, space on the A and B wings will be converted into four singles. These renovations will yield a total loss of 28 beds.

Seventh Street House will undergo a full renovation including the addition of a kitchen and a seminar room on the first floor and two apartments on the second and third floors. These additions, which will establish Seventh Street House as a cultural and a learning center, will yield the loss of 10 beds.

The renovation of Seventh Street House will "create the appropriate environment to merge extracurricular and academic environments," Remley said.

The Swartz Hall and Seventh Street House renovations are coming at the end of a cycle of renovations that are due for a much-needed update. The renovations will begin in small increments over Spring Break with the removal of asbestos from the Swartz D-wing basement.

"I am planning on living with my two best friends and we're having trouble finding a triple so [Bucknell West] might work for us now," Erin Ernst '10 said.

The dates for room selection information sessions have been released and will extend throughout the month of March. Information sessions, led by Remley, cover general room information as well as specialty housing such as quiet halls and African-American studies. OHRL strongly recommends attendance at these sessions as a way to become informed and ask any questions about the process.

MyBucknell users can find additional information such as a room selection timeline, floor plans and details regarding block booking on the Housing and Residential Life channel. Updates will be posted periodically to inform students of the latest room selection news.

In the fall 2003 renovations to Hunt Hall required similar housing accommodations to be made. OHRL placed an extra student in each Bucknell West residence.

> "We have averaged five students above goal for the last four years, resulting in an on-campus enrollment this current year that is 42 above what we had planned."
>
> — Kurt Thiede,
> vice president for enrollment management

Professors focus on black culture

PROF From page A1

for African-American studies within our department," said Harold Schweizer, professor and chair of the English department.

Gillespie, who holds a doctorate in English from Emory University, will fill the senior position as an associate professor. A recipient of numerous honors and scholarships, Gillespie is an American and Caribbean literatures and cultures scholar as well as a published poet.

"Professor Gillespie is an exciting addition to the faculty for she will be bringing The Toni Morrison Society to the campus," Schweizer said. "It will be a good way for African-American literature and African-American studies to be noticed on Bucknell's campus."

Gillespie will also add her expertise in Toni Morrison's literature, as she is the author of "A Critical Companion to Toni Morrison." Her mastery of African-American poetry will be supplemented by Peterson, who will bring in a different perspective on African-American literature.

Holding a doctorate in English from the University of Pennsylvania, Peterson specializes in "hip-hop" culture. Peterson has seven publications based on his research and study of hip-hop and its influence on the literature and media.

As an assistant professor, Peterson will be teaching courses on hip-hop music and its literary and cultural contexts. Peterson's curriculum will include an introductory course surveying African-American literature as well as an upper-level course on the literature of hip-hop culture.

Some students would like to see the University continue strengthening the African-American concentration on campus.

"We just don't have enough students interested in African-American culture," Nygel Knighton '09 said. "But based on the party culture here, students like hip-hop. From that, more awareness will be created and eventually enough demand for a new major."

> "Based on the party culture here, students like hip-hop. From that, more awareness will be created and eventually enough demand for a new major."
>
> — Nygel Knighton '09

On the other hand, Langston Tingling-Clemmons '10 feels that though hip-hop is a common ground of interest, students may be unmotivated to take courses that are not required.

"I think that people still need to learn about the history and literature because there is a lot of ignorance surrounding it," Tingling-Clemmons said. "A lot of people think hip-hop is what they listen to on the radio today, which I don't necessarily think is hip-hop."

Candace DePass '10, who is currently taking an African-American literature course, showed enthusiasm for the new professors, but was also worried that interest will only come from black or minority students.

"I believe that the new professors are highly qualified and have a lot to offer to Bucknell," DePass said. "But there seems to be this stigma that many things are meant for just African-Americans or a particular group, so hopefully students will take advantage of this opportunity."

Though an African-American Studies major is not in the foreseeable future, Schweizer said that this will send a message to students that African-American studies can be done within the English department.

Schweizer believes that the courses will receive a positive response from the general student body.

"Both professors received very positive ratings and comments from students who went to the forums," Schweizer said.

Moving to New York City?
Welcome To The City LLC invites you to Summer 2007 fun-filled events to meet your fellow 2007 graduates also new to the city.
For a detailed description of events, please contact wttc@nyc.rr.com
Hope to see you there!!

Still Magnolia
10% OFF!
Body Waxing · Skin Care · Full Service
Infrared Sauna · Massage · Hair Salon
(570) 523 -772 For Appointment

Recycle this newspaper!

CatmanDo
Handyman Services
Specializing in small home repair jobs:
Custom Carpentry
Painting
Light construction
Greg H Mathias
570-524-4724
Free Estimates · Fully insured

BRYNWOOD 535 Inc. Rentals
In Lewisburg Since 1969
Professional 24/7 Maintenance Staff
Your search begins..... and ends here.
Apartments (furnished & unfurnished)
Houses for professionals students families
Rental Garages Also Available
Office & Retail Space
300—3,000 sq ft
brynwoodrentals.com
611 Market Street, Lewisburg
ph: 570.524.2121 x 3

STEIN'S FLOWERS & GIFTS
220 Market Street
Lewisburg, PA 17837
(570) 524-9933
www.steinsflowersandgifts.com

INDIGO HAIR & NAIL STUDIO
106 Market Street
Lewisburg, Pennsylvania 17837
570-524-7888

Nancy's Nu-Wave Salon
look your best
Wax Specials
Main Street (Rte 45) Mantandon
524-2315
www.nancysnuwave.com

EFFERVESCENT ENERGY DRINK
GIVES YOU THE BOOST YOU NEED FOR BODY AND MIND
STAY ALERT AND FOCUSED
GIVES YOU LONGER LASTING ENERGY
CALL FOR A FREE SAMPLE
CORINNE
888-936-9061

INAUGURAL RAIL JAM

Courtesy of Ross Taylor

Micah Schuette '09 slides down a rail on Wednesday at the first-ever Bucknell Rail Jam behind McDonnell Hall. The University ski team and photography club invited skiers and snowboarders to try out their skills on the temporary snowboarding park.

Program results used to improve image

SURVEY From page A1

Krissy Johnson '04 said, "I think it's just a matter of time and being able to think, 'Did this place make me better?' And if it did, then you'll give as much as you can to keep it that way."

Phase two, or the "Quantitative Phase," will survey prospective students, high school guidance counselors, parents, alumni and three types of University donors: non-donors, weak donors, and strong donors. Peter Hart will also survey leaders in higher education, such as presidents of institutions that the University competes with as well as the heads of national higher education organizations like the Association of American Universities.

The study will take approximately eight weeks and will contact 1,200 individuals coast-to-coast. The Hart firm will keep the identities of those interviewed anonymous because, according to Mackey, "above all, Bucknell is looking for honest results."

Mackey said that the University hopes to find out, among other issues, "what people know and think about Bucknell, and what we didn't know about how people viewed Bucknell."

The study will be largely finished by late April, when it will be presented to the board of trustees. The senior administration will then develop a plan of action concerning the results this summer, and by fall will start implementing any necessary changes on the University Web site, in publications and other materials.

The information that will be collected from this study is especially valuable to the Office of Communications, Office of Admissions and Office of Development and Alumni Relations. Although the academic departments have been informed of this study, it is not expected to affect the academic sector at the University.

The types of questions that the survey asks include:

What do you think when you hear the word "Bucknell?"

What do you think are Bucknell's strengths and weaknesses?

What do you most value about your Bucknell degree?

What could Bucknell do better?

What type of student excels best at Bucknell?

How have you learned what you know about Bucknell?

Guitar Center
The Musician's Choice
5082 Jonestown Rd.
Harrisburg, PA 17112
717-652-7399
Shipping Available!
Bring in this coupon and save!
10% OFF!
The Best Gear
The Best Deals!
• some restrictions apply, see store for details

Discover Yoga
EASEFUL Body
PEACEFUL Mind
USEFUL Life
Filled with joy, health & well being.
Integral Yoga Center
428 Market Street, New Berlin
570-966-2484
www.yoga-center.com

Ziegler's Beauty Salon
38 N. 5th Street
Lewisburg, PA 17837
570-523-1250 570-523-1262
Book by Appointment
1 Beauty Chair & 2 Barber Chairs

Ellacinders
Jewelry & Bead Bar
Classes...Birthday Parties...Weddings...Girls' Nite Out
566 North Derr Drive · Phone 570 522 0880
Lewisburg PA 17837 · cjreed@dejazzd.com
HOURS – Mon-Fri 11 am - 7 pm Sat 10 am - 4 pm
Create Your Own Designs!

Write for News
E-mail etu001@

La Primavera
Rt. 45 West Lewisburg
523-1515
Sun, Tues-Thurs 11-10
Fri-Sat 11-11
Weekly Specials
Tues: Chicken & Veal $12.95
Wed: Seafood Night $12.95
Thurs: Steak Night $12.95
Sun: Pasta Special $8.95
-Pizzas to go! $16.95 for 2 large pizzas
-Full Liquor Bar
-Available for Formals, Graduation Dinners, Reunions
-Lunch Buffet 11-3
COUPON: Buy one entree, get 2nd one half off!
COUPON: 10% off total purchase!
Coupons cannot be used on weekly specials

News Briefs

University publications receive awards

The Bucknellian garnered a Gold Medal from the Columbia Scholastic Press Association for its fall and spring 2006 runs. The newspaper, produced entirely by students at a school with no journalism program, scored 943 points out of a possible 1,000. It earned All-Columbian Honors for its concept and general operations.

Meanwhile, the University's yearbook won an Honorable Mention Award of Excellence from Taylor Publishing for its dedication, efforts and accomplishment in 2006. Taylor Publishing only bestows this honor to 10 percent of yearbook staffs.

WantSkills? program introduced

During the week of March 19, the University will introduce the Want Skills? program to follow up the successful Got Skills? program. It is the second phase in the University's plan to improve emergency preparedness. Students, faculty and staff will have the opportunity to register for classes in first aid, cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR) and automated external defibrillator (AED) and the skills connected to the Community Emergency Response Team (CERT).

"The program expands the group of trained individuals available to help in a campus emergency," Chief Communications Officer Pete Mackey said.

There will be a $10 registration fee for the first aid and CPR/AED classes, but the CERT training will be free. The number of classes available and duration of each class have not been determined. Scheduling will depend on the level of interest and number of people who register. A link to register for classes will be provided in an e-mail to the campus community during the week of March 19.

No link found in Susquehanna alumni cancer deaths

The borough of Selinsgrove, Susquehanna University and state officials all announced separately that there was no link from the cancer deaths of four Susquehanna University alumni to the surrounding environment, The Daily Item reported.

The University released a statement on Monday and the Borough Council in Selinsgrove addressed the issue in a meeting Monday night, both of which reassured the communities that there was no reason for concern. Elizabeth C. Casale, district executive director with the Department of Health, and Robert C. Yowell, regional Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) director, told residents that the DEP "will conduct an additional study to reconfirm their findings from a five-year study and analysis conducted in 2002 that found no environmental cause to link to reported cases of cancer and deaths in the area," The Daily Item said.

The residents grew concerned when four Susquehanna University alumni, all associated with the same off-campus residence, died from cancer. The area was investigated for a possible cancer cluster and link to environmental problems. State officials monitored the soil in the area to determine there was no cancer cluster and there was no connection between the cancer deaths and the environment.

Outbreak of norovirus affects students at N.J. University

The Florham Park campus of Fairleigh Dickinson University in Florham Park, N.J. begins recovery this week from the outbreak of norovirus that affected more than 100 students last week, CNN.com reported.

Students became ill on Thursday and Friday and 12 students were treated for dehydration at area hospitals. An undetermined number of faculty and staff members also caught the 24-hour virus. According to MedicineNet.com, the norovirus causes an inflammation of the stomach and intestines.

"The virus is spread person-to-person and causes flu-like symptoms including nausea, vomiting and diarrhea," CNN.com said.

Dormitory bathrooms and dining halls underwent extensive cleaning and the recreation centers and pool were shut down for 24-hour cleaning.

Church break-in results in $5,000 worth missing

Last Monday, two burglars broke into the Guyandotte United Methodist Church in Huntington, W.Va. and stole approximately $5,000 worth of sound and office equipment, the Associated Press reported. The very next night, however, they broke back into the church and returned almost everything they stole. They returned the sound system, keyboard and computer, but not the $22 in change.

"It's odd that they brought it back," Huntington Police Lt. Rocky Johnson said. "I'm glad they did." He told the AP that he has never seen such a situation before. Despite the change of heart and lack of damage, an investigation will continue.

Geico cavemen to star in own TV show

ABC announced on Friday that they ordered a pilot for a comedy that would star the cavemen from Geico Insurance Company's television commercials. According to CNN.com, Touchstone Television will produce the pilot, one of 14 other ideas, this spring. It will feature "the cavemen as they struggle with prejudice on a daily basis as they strive to live the lives of normal 30-somethings in 2007 Atlanta," CNN.com said. The potential series was tentatively entitled, "Cavemen."

The pilot was written by the advertising copywriter who helped write the cavemen ads for Geico. A pilot order does not guarantee that the series or pilot will air.

The Bucknellian
Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue
Volume 139, Number 7
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu
http://www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Editor-in-Chief
Andrew Larson '08

Associate Editor of Content
Matthew Saylor '08

Associate Editor of Layout
Lily Beauvilliers '09

Business Manager
Jared Napolitano '08

Senior Editor
Catie Heverling '07

News Editors
Evan Unger '09
Julia Fuchs '09
Michelle Laxer '09

Opinions Editors
Michael Dippery '08
Hallie Stebbins '08

Sports Editors
Barbara Perlman '09
Brian Mulligan '08
Shannon Pitsch '09

Features Editors
Nilanjana Saha '09
Brianna DelValle '10

Arts & Entertainment Editors
Janna Shapiro '08
Genna Jerrard '10

Photography Editors
Ryan Winn '08
Ellyn Ercolano '09

Chief Copy Editor
Molly Clay (grad)

Asst. Chief Copy Editor
Anna Juan '08

Advertising Managers
Meredith Reighard '07
Katie Casteel '08
Elaine Teng '09

Office Manager
Kate Wood '07

Circulation Manager
Adam Kahler '07

Subscriptions Manager
John Ostrow '09

Cartoonist
Juliana Su '09

Adviser
James F. Lee

Op-Ed Policy

The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editor-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 600 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

Publishing Information

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

Subscription Information

Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Bucknell University, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print office.

Advertising Policy

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements it deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577- 1085. Copyright © 2007 The Bucknellian

The Bucknellian Editorial

Bed shortage was predictable

Next year the number of students living on-campus at the University will rise significantly, leading to a potential shortage of 130 beds.

A confluence of factors is causing the crunch, including an increase in the yield of accepted students who choose to attend the school, and decreases in the number of students living off-campus, going abroad and living in fraternity houses. Further, renovations to Swartz and 7th Street House will result in an additional loss of 38 beds.

What we have is more students needing to live on campus coupled with less living space. Could the timing be any worse?

The decrease in students living off-campus and studying abroad may have been impossible to predict, but the University has known for years that Swartz and 7th Street House needed renovations. And ever since it adopted the Plan for Bucknell, the University has been trying to bolster its stature—surely increased demand for enrollment comes at no surprise.

To combat the increases the University is trying to put three students in the doubles in Bucknell West, and two per single in Swartz—as if these spaces actually had room to spare. In comparison to many other schools, the University's dorms are like palaces. But we're on the verge of making our dorms unbearably claustrophobic.

It's no secret that Bucknell West, built in the '70s as temporary housing, is on its last legs. And with the University's ambitions to grow, so will its resources need to grow in comparison. The housing pinch isn't just going to fix itself.

Should the University consider allowing first-year students to live off campus? Or requiring seniors to live off campus? Or putting students up at the Econo Lodge?

At Bucknell, 88 percent of undergraduate students live on campus, and the school prides itself on offering every student the option of living on campus for all four years. That shouldn't have to change. There are immense benefits to students living together in a tightly knit campus community.

Let's try to preserve that. So when are we breaking ground on that new dorm building?

Letters to the Editor

Racist parties unacceptable

To the Editor:

In recent weeks, students at Clemson, Johns Hopkins, Tarleton State, the University of Connecticut and the University of Colorado have made the national news by participating in parties full of racial stereotyping. Reports have surfaced that theme parties have occurred on and off campus where participants were in "blackface," were asked to place shiny caps on their teeth as "bling bling" grills, were dressed in gang gear and drank malt liquor from bags. "Gangsta"-themed parties have occurred as well.

Because these parties have appeared on a variety of college campuses, I wanted to bring the issue to the University's attention. It is interesting that some commentators have argued that these parties are not offensive because they would be acceptable on MTV, BET, or in the rap culture or because they are meant to be humorous. I strongly disagree. As far as I see it for the University, these events are instead a reminder to all of us of how important it is that we protect and strengthen our commitment to being an institution where mutual respect and civility prevail. These events are also an opportune reminder to thank you for your own efforts to make Bucknell such a university. Thank you.

Sincerely,

Brian C. Mitchell
University President

"Freedom of the press, if it means anything at all, means the freedom to criticize and oppose."

- Eric Arthur Blair

Write for Ops.
E-mail
mdippery@

Swampy's Corner

Warmer weather long overdue

By Zak Marsh
Contributing Wrtier

When Opinions editor Michael Dippery '08 and I decided I would be writing a weekly column for his section, the immediate question was, "What will I be writing about?" Rather than bore you with my take on University policy, enlighten you with my compelling feelings on the oppression of women or beat you over the head with the same tired, flawed political whining week after week, I decided to take on a column relevant to each of you; hence, "Swampy's Corner" was born. This is a column where I discuss the issues bothering you, and more importantly, the issues bothering me, like this never-ending winter.

I do not consider myself to be a "southern boy" in any sense of the phrase. I call Silver Spring, Md. my home. While I like the winter, after too long I get sick of the cold. Back home, spring is starting. Here, snow is still falling. It is mid-March, for crying out loud, and snow is still falling. The thermometers are dancing back and forth across the line between freezing and thawing. Seriously, enough is enough.

Granted, winter does not officially end until the vernal equinox on March 21, but even so, this cold must stop. Monday was possibly the windiest day this month so far, blowing in snow under a relatively cloudless sky. We had another few inches of snow on Wednesday. I understand that Lewisburg is a tad further north than Silver Spring, but this is getting ridiculous.

Spring break is starting—emphasis on "spring." It was warmer when winter break was beginning. I was told that winters here at the University were harsh, but I had no idea they were this bad. My hallmate from Texas has never even seen this much snow in her entire life (though to be fair, the Alaskan student across the hall from me has been walking around in sandals—no joke).

Wednesday morning, a professor informed me that this winter is mild. "Mild for where? Siberia?" I said. As I was writing this very article, snow was dancing past the Bostwick windows, giving me a lovely view of a campus slowly being whitewashed.

I have to admit, snow is quite pretty. But the cold is not. It was 16 degrees outside and windy. This is what we must endure while walking to class. What happened to global warming? Al Gore and Bill Nye have some explaining to do.

I look forward to the bright spring weather, the chance to go outside in a t-shirt and shorts, to lie on the ground without freezing or getting covered in half-frozen slush and of course, to observe the widely-awaited annual reappearance of short skirts. These are a few of my favorite things.

I know the University does not quite have the funding to construct the proposed enviro-dome over the school (I blame the endowment), and there is not really anything anyone can do. Then again, this is not a week when my column calls you to action; I am merely voicing my opinion.

I leave this evening to drive south for what I hope is the remainder of the winter. When we return in a week, let it be to clear skies, warm weather, blossoming flowers and the return of miniskirts. Amen.

Courtesy lacking on campus

By Ryan Winn
Photography Editor

A few days ago, as I was enjoying my meal in the pleasant and congenial atmosphere of our cafeteria, I saw a young man bring a few heaping plates of food to his back-corner table. After finishing half his food he casually stood up, grabbed his coat and walked out the door.

Some of you have probably noticed the rather glaring omission in my little tale. While he had left the building, his tray, several half-eaten plates of food and cups and silverware remained scattered upon that back table. Admittedly, this is an extreme example of a recurrent problem in the student body. Every day when you walk around campus you are assaulted by the minor examples of the lack of manners and common courtesy for each other and, more importantly, for the University staff.

It is not grand displays of superiority, but rather the little things that add up, like not saying thank you if someone holds open the door or not taking that last little useless piece of soap out of the shower as you leave. How much time can it take to pick up that napkin that fell on the floor?

Maybe I am just too sensitive. If you do not see this as a problem, then I pose this challenge: If you can rationally explain how any of these examples have a significant, or even perceivable negative impact on your life then you need not read any further. I am fairly certain that you cannot find a single realistic instance.

So, why do I see this every day? Could it be that a large number of students here just see it as someone else's problem? Is it within a staff member's job description? I certainly hope not. My best guess is that we just do not think.

From a student's perspective, none of this seems to make that big of a difference. But what if 100 students left their chairs in the aisle? Think about the opposite: what if the same 100 students said hello to one of the Dining Services employees as they walked through The Bison?

I am not asking you to become a banner-waving crusader for common decency and the working man. All I ask is that you pick up after yourself and when you see a few custodians in the hallway that you give them a little nod. Remember the golden rule; it may be a cliché but it is still a powerful lesson.

At a minimum, do not go out of your way to be a nuisance. If it is your mess, then it is your responsibility. And please, I am begging you: say thank you.

Next time when you are pulling your ID out to be scanned, say hello or ask how his or her afternoon is going because you might just make his or her day.

Greek superficiality on the rise

By Liz Stein
Writer

When will the world in which we live be forgiving of differences, flaws and plain individuality? Life as a college student guarantees constant reminders of the necessity to fit in: what clothes to wear, weight and what clique to hang out with.

While walking across the quad or down the halls of the Vaughan Literature building, have you felt as though a dozen pairs of eyes are not-so-discreetly assessing whether or not you are wearing the appropriate North Face jacket with matching Uggs? Haven't you ever felt slightly dizzy, meandering your way though the overwhelmingly crowded Kreb's Fitness Center in the desperate hope of seizing the last available elliptical machine?

Female students at colleges and universities across the country are in endless competition to have the best clothing and the slimmest figures. Needless to say, stereotypes are becoming increasingly prevalent in our culture, forcing many young women to develop self images that are measured in the eyes of their peers and focused primarily on cosmetics, popularity and other superficial qualities.

Unfortunately, this appearance contest has become a dominating force on some college campuses, targeting Greek life in particular.

In an extreme case, this one-dimensional mentality has triggered a nationwide debate over the culture of sororities today.

Last semester, 23 of 35 women of the Delta Zeta sorority at DePauw University in Indianapolis were evicted from their sorority house on the conviction that they were not sufficiently committed to the fraternal organization.

Concerned that a negative stereotype of the sorority was contributing to dwindling membership, Delta Zeta's national officers interviewed the 35 members of the chapter in November, questioning each woman on her dedication to recruitment. The members who were expelled from the sorority included every woman who was overweight, as well as the only minorities. According to The New York Times, "the dozen students allowed to stay were slender and popular with fraternity men—conventionally pretty women the sorority hoped could attract new recruits."

The actions taken by the sorority have outraged students, alumni, parents and faculty. In response, student protests have been held and petitions have been signed denouncing the sorority's unethical actions.

> Whether or not a situation like this could occur here at Bucknell, it is important to recognize that our student community is faced with a growing problem of superficiality that has been increasingly nurtured by tasteless stereotypes.

Though members of the chapter at DePauw claim the story was misrepresented by The New York Times, the Delta Zeta National has made a public apology to all of the women at DePauw who were hurt by the incident.

"It was never our intention to disparage or hurt any of our members during this chapter reorganization process," Delta Zeta National said.

Regardless, the issue at hand is clear: Are sororities overly concerned with their popularity and reputations on campus?

While for some it may seem inconceivable for a similar situation to take place at Bucknell, there is still an element of doubt in the air.

Many underclassmen who have recently gone through recruitment feel that the selection process is unfair, alluding to certain Greek organizations that strongly emphasize physical appearance and popularity as the main criteria for admittance into their chapters.

"I do believe there is an amount of superficiality in the Bucknell sorority system. There are a number of stereotypical sorority girls on campus who, in my opinion, consider physical beauty to be a top priority when choosing their sisters. Would a situation like that at DePauw occur at Bucknell? I think it would depend on the chapter," said a University senior sorority member, speaking on the condition of anonymity.

Whether or not a situation like this could or would occur here, it is important to recognize that our student community is faced with a growing problem of superficiality that has been increasingly nurtured by tasteless stereotypes. Especially during periods of heightened Greek influence, such as recruitment, we cannot avoid noticing the strong presence of the effects of the social stereotypes that condemn students for not looking a certain way.

Though the common purpose of sororities, as dictated in Delta Zeta National's mission statement, is to "unite its members in the bonds of sincere and lasting friendship, to stimulate one another in the pursuit of knowledge, to promote the moral and social culture of its members and to develop plans for guidance and unity in action," it seems as though sororities' have become social clubs and popularity contests.

The F Word

On Spring Break

By Lenore R. Flower
Writer

An advertisement at the bottom of my computer screen reads "Thanks to Proactiv Solution, I Love Being in this Skin," and poster girl Jessica Simpson smiles coyly in all of her bronzed glory.

The tan, her smile and the sentiment are all undeniably fake. A second banner streams across the left of my screen. "Love your tummy," it says, featuring a woman's washboard stomach. If you do not have the requisite flat stomach to love, the image helpfully features the Web site eDiets.com.

Being comfortable in your own skin and loving your body are important messages emphasized each year by National Eating Disorder Awareness Week. But when advertising agencies hijack these sentiments, their warped interpretations have the opposite effect. At best, these advertisements are missing the point. At worst, they are tantamount to blackmail: buy our product or you will be unworthy of even self-love.

This is especially relevant on the advent of spring break. A recent study by Duke University found that women wearing a one-piece swimsuit experienced a significant increase in shame due to body objectification in comparison to those who wore a sweatshirt during the experiment. Furthermore, women in a second study by the University of Michigan found that this body shame (spurred on by the swimsuits) negatively affected their scores on a math portion of the Graduate Management Admission Test (GMAT). Men's body images and math scores, however, remained unaffected.

Many female students at the University will soon be trading in their sweaters for swimsuits, which, according to this Michigan study, will immediately cause an increase in body shame, regardless of their body mass index (BMI). For those women who had midterms this week, trying on a swimsuit may have even lead to a dip in their grades. If you in any way doubt the validity of their findings, try writing a paper in your bikini. Your intrepid columnist tried a variation of this experiment while writing this article, and immediately experienced the distracting effects.

How can something as seemingly harmless as a swimsuit have such devastating effects on women? As intelligent, confident people brought up well beyond the first rumblings of the feminist movement, many expect themselves to rise above body objectification. And yet, come swimsuit season, the "swimsuit body" becomes a source of obsession for women's magazines and many of their target audience. Even jcrew.com provides a swimsuit guide on its Web site, providing the shopper with a number of body parts she can supposedly emphasize or hide by her chosen purchase.

J. Crew's male swimsuit section, in comparison, has no "swim finder" and notably fewer options available for the average guy trying to minimize that embarrassing tummy bulge. Male options for the swimsuit season in general seem downright paltry. If he's a competitive swimmer, an exhibitionist or European, the choice is a Speedo. Everyone else, regardless of shape, size or "trouble areas," buys a pair of swim shorts and the job is done.

Swimsuit season often leads to strict diet and exercise regimens for women. Members of the male gender might consider doing a few more sit-ups, but they might experience less anxiety in comparison to their female counterparts.

Spring break should be a time of relaxation, not body obsession. Women should be buying more paperback novels to read at the beach (or in the Splash Mountain line at Disney World, depending on your preference) and fewer diet books. Because of our culture's tyranny of slenderness, a person's ability to enjoy himself or herself at the beach, in an amusement park, or just around campus regardless of body image seems limited. Short of rewiring the media or surrounding those evil changing room mirrors with the paintings of Peter Paul Rubens, that tyranny will be hard to overthrow.

Currently Untitled

by Juliana Su

Mer Cares

Dear Mer:

My girlfriend is studying abroad in Granada, Spain this semester, and it has been really hard on me lately with her not being here. I'm happy she is having a great time, and I trust her, but I am still a bit anxious as five months is a long time to be away from her, and I miss her a lot. It's been hard to sleep at night sometimes, and on the weekends when people are going out, I always feel kind of down and don't feel like going out. Then I end up staying in, wallowing and missing her. We talk once a week on the phone for 10 minutes or so, but it seems like so little! What do you suggest?

–Pining Away

Dear Pining Away,

It is hard to deal with friends and especially significant others when they are away for a long period of time. I'm sure you envision your girlfriend having a great time and not thinking about you and how you're so miserable, but I haven't a doubt in my mind that she is miles away thinking about you too.

The key to getting through the next few difficult months is to keep busy. Now is the time to work hard on your academics and your other extracurricular activities. Aim for that high GPA and spend some quality time with your friends on the weekends.

I understand that disconcerting thoughts may be running through your head when you think about the distance.. You may wonder if there will be a strain on the relationship because of the disconnect, whether you can trust her completely or if she will change and not feel the same way about you when she returns.

You need to push all those thoughts aside and focus on the fact that it is good for you to be separated like this at a certain point in your relationship. Not only does it test your love, but it makes it stronger. If it's possible, she will probably love you even more when she returns because she has missed you, just like you have missed her.

A long-distance relationship like this is simply a temporary parting, not a goodbye. I bet you were happy with her decision initially, but now that it's setting in, you are feeling lonely, frustrated, angry and detached. To make this relationship successful and able to withstand such a distance, you need to continue to talk to her—use Facebook, e-mail, phone, MySpace, instant messaging and web-cams. You could send flowers to her overseas, care packages filled with chocolate (since no girl will say no to that) and pictures of you two together.

Listen to her when you have those short conversations on the telephone so you can keep up-to-date with each other's lives. It will make the distance less shocking and dramatic.

Some adjustments probably have to be made, such as calling at odd hours of the day to meet each others' schedules/demands, but if she's worth it and the relationship means a lot to you, show her you can make sacrifices.

Make sure to always reaffirm your love and commitment. You need to be able to trust her because doubt and suspicion will weaken your relationship.

Just think, in a few months, you will be meeting her at the airport. The reward will be amazing because of the work and effort you put in to get there.

Love,
Mer

Please send questions regarding any topic to marc001@Bucknell.edu with subject line reading "advice" or you may send a letter via campus mail to box number C1099. I look forward to hearing from you!

Preparing for grad school

By Liz Stein
Writer

Of the 800-plus expected graduates from the senior class at the University, roughly 20-25 percent will attend a post-graduate institution.

Given this percentage, it is clear that graduate school is not for everyone. Indeed, the decision to continue your education should be made only after thoroughly contemplating the depth of your interest in a particular field of study and your career aspirations.

According to the Career Development Center (CDC), one of the most important things to do when determining whether you will go on to graduate school is to be certain of your motives.

"Graduate school will not give you the answer if you are seeking career direction. You need to have a direction prior to applying in order to carry yourself through the admissions process and the demanding curriculum," according to the CDC Web site.

When trying to figure out if graduate study is right for you, take the time to develop your goals, do self-evaluations and research programs. More importantly, research the job market as it relates to your field of study. As experts at the CDC said, "an MBA or Ph.D. is not an automatic ticket to job opportunities. At some point you will need to define how you want to contribute to the world of work. You also need to look beyond the commonly held beliefs about what a degree will do for you."

Carefully consider if you are ready to pursue an advanced degree and whether or not it will suit your career aspirations.

"The process of making a decision to go to graduate school was a bit difficult in itself for me," said Janelle Nodhturft '07, a psychology, French and international relations major. "Finally though, I decided that for the kind of international career I want to pursue—working with international NGOs or human rights commissions or grassroots development groups—I'll benefit a lot from a master's degree."

In addition to determining what course of study to pursue, many students are unsure of whether they should pursue an advanced degree immediately upon graduation.

"Before you jump on the grad school bandwagon, weigh your opportunity costs and make sure the sacrifices are worth it," said the Princeton Review Web site.

When trying to figure out if graduate study is right for you, take the time to develop your goals, do self-evaluations and research programs.

"I could have taken time off, but I felt I had enough experience to know that's what I wanted to do and go right into a program that would prepare me for it. Plus, I worried that if I took a few years off to work or gain professional experience, I'd get into a job or placement abroad that I liked and not want to change [my] lifestyle and go back to school again," Nodhturft said.

It is important to be very selective in choosing a graduate/professional school. According to the CDC, "many applicants who do not research schools thoroughly enough are sometimes disappointed with the school they attend."

The Princeton Review recommends choosing a program that has faculty with whom you would want to study. Publicized rankings, such as those in U.S. News and World Report, are sometimes not as useful in selecting a good graduate program. It is more important to research programs within the specialty area in which you are interested.

A good source for information and for help determining the best way to select a program that is right for you is the departmental advisor in your discipline.

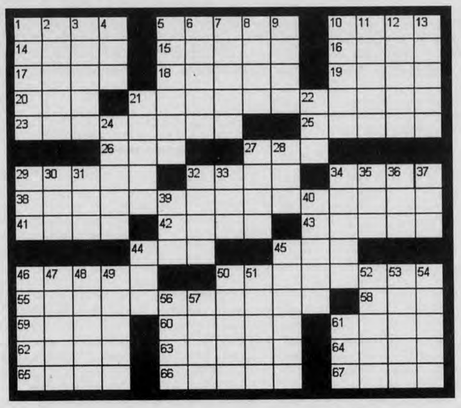
The application process for graduate school ideally should begin your junior year. During the fall and spring semesters of your third year, start researching areas of interest, institutions and programs. Talk to your departmental advisor about application requirements and investigate fellowships and scholarships.

Over the summer before your senior year, thoroughly prepare for and take the required graduate admission tests (GRE, LSAT, MCAT or GMAT). After taking the exam, send in applications to the schools you have chosen. While schools will charge anywhere from $20-100 to process an application, disadvantaged students can have their application fee waived.

With your application, you will need to have a statement of purpose essay targeted toward each institution and two to three strong letters of recommendation. Interviews are not always required for graduate or professional school admissions, but if it is part of your application process, "be sure to prepare by researching the institution and be aware of what makes you a good candidate for the program," the CDC Web site said.

Though the application process may seem intimidating and will be exhausting, once you are sure of the field of study you would like to pursue and have made a commitment to your decision, it will be easier to complete the applications and put forth the necessary effort to succeed in getting into the school of your choice.

The Bucknellian Crossword



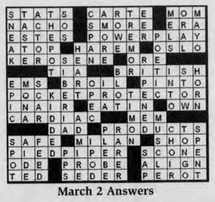
Across

1. Evict
5. Punctuation mark
10. Droops
14. Use a spoon
15. Asian killer _ flu
16. Summer sandwich
17. Boston or Baltimore
18. Crowded
19. Speck
20. Alcoholic beverage
21. Third-rate player
23. Reply
25. Lab equipment
26. Tolkien's tree protector
27. Meow maker
29. _ cadet
32. US Senator Bayh
34. Heard the alarm clock
38. Faculty VIP
41. Shock
42. Clue
43. It's close to our heart
44. _ Lingus
45. Petroleum
46. 1989 Cameron film (with "The")
50. Clandestinely
55. Lazy individual
58. Fish eggs
59. Smoke illegal substances
60. Greek letter
61. Molten rock
62. Prince William's alma mater
63. "Entourage" actor Jeremy
64. Gets 100%
65. Unit of force
66. Equal to one cubic meter
67. Unwanted rodent

Down

1. Boxer de la Hoya
2. Useful
3. Locations
4. Sample
5. Having rhythm
6. Baking chambers
7. Chop finely
8. Bangers and _ (British cuisine)
9. Once more
10. Twist
11. Fragrance
12. Multi-billionaire Bill
13. Fire starter
21. Embarassing blooper
22. Towards the stern
24. Praline main ingredient
27. Cautionary contraction
28. Colonial insect
29. Radical 1960s org.
30. Fondle
31. Springfield business owner
32. Arabic title
33. OPEC participant in S. America
34. Complete
35. Paddle
36. First aid _
37. Age
39. Common article
40. African capital
44. Fire residue
45. Gasoline component
46. Faked
47. Plunder
48. Klondike territory
49. Play part
50. Austin or Martin
51. Ready and willing
52. Go over the line
53. Adores
54. Reliable riser
56. Father, informally
57. Exclude
61. Type of dog or dance

ByVo Crosswords



March 2 Answers

$250 CASH
Sign on BONUS
Call for details
3 & 4 Bedroom Houses
CLOSE TO CAMPUS
WHIRLPOOL
WASHER / DRYER
DISHWASHER
STOVE & FRIG
Newly renovated houses available 2006/2007
570-524-5714 / 570-412-4831

"All good writing is swimming under water and holding your breath."
—F. Scott Fitzgerald

Write for Features
E-mail ns022@

Loops and knots of knitting

By Lily Beauvilliers
Associate Editor of Layout

Stress. According to the Merriam-Webster dictionary, stress is "a physical, chemical or emotional factor that causes bodily or mental tension." According to Lily's English Dictionary, it is "a good excuse to start knitting."

Few hobbies are as satisfying and easy to learn as knitting. You can buy a pair of needles and some yarn, crank out a scarf to keep your sanity during finals week and never knit again, or you can get involved in one of many knitting social clubs.

"It's fun and it's relaxing," Joseph Blair '09 said in an interview. "Whenever I'm stressed or upset, I can knit and feel better."

Knitting doesn't have to consume your life.

"Knitting isn't something I'm really serious about," David Palframan '09 said. "I don't have much time, so I'll start a project and let it sit."

Whatever your level of interest, here's a guide to starting this simple hobby.

Step one—pick a project. For your first project, I recommend a simple scarf. A scarf is basically just a rectangle of fabric, so you'll be able to practice your basic knit stitch without getting too frustrated by a complicated pattern.

Step two—go to Wal-Mart. Sure, you could probably go online and get fancy bamboo needles and cashmere yarn, but for your first project you want something you can waste/never use again. The Wal-Mart craft section has a variety of needle sizes and yarn weights.

I recommend getting colorful, chunky yarn—Lion Brand works well. A heavy yarn will hide any mistakes you make and give your finished product lots of springy poof. Wal-Mart yarns are mostly all acrylic, a fairly soft synthetic fiber, but some have mohair and other natural fibers blended in.

Illustration by Nilanjana Saha

For the most part, avoid these blends—they can be itchy. A skein of Lion Brand yarn goes for about $7.99. You'll probably want two.

As far as needles go, aluminum works just fine. Aluminum needles are cheap, durable and slippery. The slippery part is especially important—you want your yarn to slide easily on the needle. Aluminum needles cost about $3.50 for a pair.

Next, you need to pick your gauge. Needles come in numbered sizes, with higher numbers corresponding to fatter needles. Want to make a lacy scarf? Choose size 15. Want a tight scarf? Try size nine. I personally recommend 10.5 to begin—your scarf will be loose enough to knit easily, but tight enough that combined with a bulky yarn, it won't look holey.

Step three—knit! Once you get your yarn and needles, you just need to begin. A knitting buddy may be helpful—I learned from my RA, Vanessa Hershberger '08, but you don't necessarily need anybody else.

"One week during the summer before freshman year, my friend left on vacation. I got bored, so I bought knitting needles at Wal-Mart, went online and taught myself how to knit," Hershberger said.

See the box below for explicit directions on how to knit a scarf.

So you've finished a scarf or two, and you're wondering—what do I do now? Knitting can be a life-long endeavor and new opportunities always arise.

Looking to learn more about knitting or searching for cool new patterns? Tons of books exist on the topic. "Stitch 'N Bitch: The Knitter's Handbook" by Debbie Stoller ($11.16 on Amazon.com) contains good information for the beginning knitter, including interesting knitting anecdotes and trendy patterns like a Valentine's Day thong and knee socks. "Knitting Rules!: The Yarn Harlot's Bag of Knitting Tricks" by Stephanie Pearl-McPhee ($9.71 on Amazon.com) explains the different kinds of stitches in detail, as well as other useful tips and tricks.

Want to get involved on campus? The Craft Center offers knitting classes open to both the knitter newbie and the experienced knitting professional. Yarn, needles and patterns are provided; you just need to bring your curiosity. Classes meet one night a week for three weeks. The only class left this semester starts on March 23. At $12 for students and $24 for everyone else, this 10-person class could definitely be a fun and affordable addition to your knitting diet.

Looking to expand your stash of knitting supplies? Lewisburg offers an awesome alternative to corporate cash cow yarns. Mad About Ewes, located at 429 Market St., offers many quality Wal-Mart alternatives.

The truly hard-core knitters can buy spinning wheels and un-spun fibers from sheep to make their own yarns.

"Sometime around 1994, 1995 I met Fiona Powell, a professional spinner/storyteller," said Libby Beiler, the owner of Mad About Ewes, in an interview. "I saw her spinning at a Renaissance fair and something sparked my interest."

Beiler now has 16 sheep at home.

"My satisfaction is taking the wool from its beginning stages and making it handspun yarn," she said.

If you're not quite ready to take the plunge into your own Rumpelstiltskin fairytale, Mad About Ewes also offers specialty yarns produced by other small companies in Pennsylvania and on the East Coast. The store even has classes for knitters of all levels of experience (check out www.madaboutewes.com for a complete listing).

So now you've knit 10 million pairs of socks for yourself, and your friends declare they cannot accept another hat. Who will take your finished product? Several charitable organizations take knitted goods.

Project Linus invites knitters to make blankets for needy children—check out www.projectlinus.org for more information. The Web site knitting.about.com offers a link to a long list of charitable knitting opportunities.

Whatever you decide to do with it, your knitting hobby will certainly serve you well.

"I started knitting because I thought it was something unusual, but now I do it because I can make things that match so well. It's fun to wear something I made myself," Hershberger said:

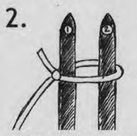
Take your needles everywhere—to the cafeteria, to the library, to your "Grey's Anatomy" marathon—to occupy otherwise idle hands. Your new relaxation technique—and new scarf—will be the envy of stressed-out friends.

1.

Illustrations by Lily Beauvilliers

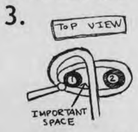
Take one of the needles and loop the yarn around the needle, then loop the loose end of yarn around the other side of the yarn. Tie the loose end of the yarn onto itself. Tighten your knot, and voila. A slip knot.

2.



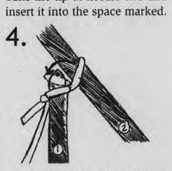
Casting on is the process of getting the first row of stitches onto the needle. First, put the second needle into the loop around the first needle.

3.



Take the part of the yarn attached to the ball and pull it behind the first needle and between both of your needles. Take the tip of needle two and insert it into the space marked.

4.



Insert the tip of needle one into the top of the loop on needle two and pull needle two out. You have just completed your first knit stitch. Fifteen stitches makes a good scarf width.

5.

To knit, follow the same steps as casting on except when you get a new loop on needle two, you drop the top loop from needle one and leave the loop on needle two.

To bind off, knit two stitches onto your second needle and slip the lower stitch over the upper one and off the needle. Repeat until the last stitch, then tie on your loose end.

Gala brings Asian community closer

By Rajaa Qadri
Writer

The aroma of delicious food and the decorations outside Larison Dining Hall attracted many to the Asian Gala, presented by Students for Asian Awareness at Bucknell (SAAB), on Saturday night. Students dressed in Asian attire welcomed guests and helped them get seated. The hall was adorned with silk drapes and cultural symbols hanging from the walls.

At each table, people were given colored paper, as well as instructions explaining how to make an origami "kabuto," or a helmet used with traditional Japanese armor as worn by samurai. Soon everyone was busy making origami while enjoying the bubble tea and appetizers. Some people were able to make the hat perfectly, while for others it turned out to be something entirely different.

The program began with a PowerPoint presentation by Phuong Nguyen '07, President of SAAB. She explained various Asian cultural holidays and festivals, starting with Hina Matsuri, also known as the doll's festival.

"The purpose of the gala is to bring people together to celebrate and embrace the differences and uniqueness of Asian cultures, and the gala really expressed that," Nguyen said.

The presentation continued with explanations of Songkran, the Thai New Year and Kodomo no Hi, the children's festival. Songkran is celebrated annually on April 13-15. It is also known as the "Water Festival," as people believe that water will wash away bad luck. It provides an opportunity for family members to express their respect for the elders by pouring scented water onto the hands of their parents and grandparents. The elders in return wish the youngsters good luck and prosperity.

Kodomo no Hi is celebrated on May 5 every year. Families with sons fly huge carp-shaped streamers called "koinobori" outside the house. Koinobori is a symbol of success and is hung to wish children of these families good fortune.

Next, students from the Korean Cultural Association performed a Korean fan dance. This was followed by the Korean ribbon dance, which consisted of beautiful hand movements and ribbon formations coordinated with a background of drum beats. The ribbon dance usually takes place on the Korean Thanksgiving, celebrated on the fifteenth day of the eighth lunar month, which will be Sept. 25 this year. During this festival, Koreans return home and pay visits to the tombs of the ancestors.

The Chinese New Year, also known as the Spring Festival, was celebrated next. It begins on the first day of the first lunar month in the Chinese calendar and ends on the fifteenth. Members of the Chinese Culture Association performed a Chinese fan dance.

The Panagbenga festival was presented afterward. A world-renowned festival in the Philippines, Panagbenga is celebrated in February. It was founded in 1995 by Damaso Bangaoet as a platform to raise environmental awareness, especially in the case of the flowers that abound in the Cordillera. Traditional festivities include flower exhibits, lectures, garden tours, floral contests and a parade of floats.

This was followed by the tinikling dance, which was the big hit of the night. Considered the national folk dance of the Philippines, it involves a pair of dancers hopping between two bamboo poles held just above the ground and struck together to music.

The dance mimics the movements of tinikling birds that hop over trees, grass stems or over bamboo traps set by farmers. Students performed this dance with remarkable grace and speed.

Later, the dancers invited the audience to learn how to do tinikling. Many people tried to jump between the bamboo poles, some succeeding, while others were too afraid to try. All attempts elicited good-natured laughter from the audience.

The food was served between the dances and presentations. The main course included chicken fried rice, Korean barbeque and Japanese curry.

"I am really enjoying the event. The food is wonderful and the performances are great. It is also interesting to hear the presentations about the various Asian holidays and traditions, which I probably never would have learned about otherwise," Kira Newman '10 said.

Sweet-smelling jasmine tea was served throughout the event, which allowed everyone to relax and enjoy the show.

"I have never seen such a well-organized, informative and joyful event. Everyone is so hospitable and welcoming. I am so glad that I came and I am sure that I will be attending it every year of my four years at the University," Guorui Deng '10 said.

"The entirety of Asian Awareness Week was very taxing but I think that the result was more than worth the effort, especially [the] Asian Gala," Michael Ong '08, Vice President of Finance for SAAB, said. "It wasn't a one-man operation and its success was due to the participation and involvement of the club."

Another tantalizing edition brought to you by ...

Ms. Love and the Bubble

Dear Ms. O,

Recently my boyfriend casually proposed having a threesome to make our sex life more interesting. First, I thought it was absolutely outrageous, and now I am not so sure. And the problem is, I don't know whether he was serious about it or not. How do I bring it up with again without committing to it?

- Thinking about a Threesome

Dear Thinking about a Threesome,

You've got a point. If you bring up having a threesome, your boyfriend will probably see it as a possibility, so he'll be more likely to push for it because he knows you're considering it. So just casually saying, "Hey, what about the threesome thing you wanted to try" is probably not the best idea.

If this is something you really want to think about, you need to bring it up with your boyfriend and be prepared to discuss it in detail.

And like you said, he may have just said it off the cuff, and was never really serious about it.

You need to fully explain to him how you feel. You're not looking to put any pressure on the situation; you simply want to figure out your collective opinion on the subject and see if there's some agreement to which you two may come. Just because you talk about it doesn't mean it's going to happen.

Perhaps your first instincts were trying to tell you something. A threesome may not be a step you're ready to take.

On the other hand, if you are both interested and it is something you feel comfortable with, now is as good a time as any to try it. College is a good time to experiment, and later in life your relationships may not be able to handle any outsiders.

So what do you two need to discuss if you're considering a threesome?

Because you and your boyfriend are committed to each other, a threesome has the potential to put a lot of strain on your relationship and the capacity to end things between you two if you don't consider the possible outcomes beforehand.

A lot depends on how strong the relationship is, how connected the two of you feel and how adventurous you are.

Primarily, you should discuss your motivations for participating in a threesome. If you're not satisfied with your relationship, then odds are a threesome won't make it any better. But if it seems like a fun idea that can add spice to your sex life without distancing you from one another, it can be a great experimental activity that you can enjoy and share together.

Also, talk about what emotional reactions you may have afterwards. You may be concerned about the connection your boyfriend makes with the third person or vice versa. It may make you suspicious or self-conscious. If your boyfriend and the other person are hanging out, are you going to wonder if something else is going on? Will he wonder the same about you?

You need to talk about who the third person will be as well. Both of you need to trust the person and feel comfortable with inviting him or her to participate.

However, having a best friend or roommate join in may not be the best idea. It may not only create a conflict in the relationship, but in the friendships as well.

And will the third person be a guy or a girl?

Beforehand, you may want to decide what activities you feel are and are not OK to do during the threesome.

What types of sex are allowed and with whom?

How active a role will the same-sex pair play during the threesome?

Also, if someone feels uncomfortable during the threesome, there should be a sign to stop it.

If you decide to set up rules, make sure that you and your boyfriend are clear on what is acceptable, and then fully explain it to the third party. Make sure he or she agrees as well.

Under no circumstances should you engage in a threesome simply for your boyfriend's sake, nor should he do it for yours. It needs to be something you both feel comfortable with.

It takes a very honest and open relationship to take this step.

Whatever your decision, keep the lines of communication open.

~ Ms. O

E-mail me your questions at MsOintheBubble@yahoo.com or send them through campus mail to Ms. O, The Bucknellian, C-3952. All authors of questions will remain anonymous.

A 'hygge' experience in DENMARK

By Carly Whitehead
Staff Writer

Shakespeare's Hamlet said, "There's something rotten in the state of Denmark," and, boy, was he ever wrong.

In fact, Denmark might be the closest today's world comes to a utopia. The Danes have free health care and education through graduate school, sleek, modern architecture, progressive social policies, fierce protection of free speech and gorgeous Scandinavian scenery.

Plus, they've got the guy who wrote "The Little Mermaid" and the people who invented Legos. Who could ask for more?

I spent fall semester at Denmark's International Study Program (DIS) in Copenhagen, where I was a member of the Medical Practice and Policy Program with students from all over the United States. I took medicine related classes, one of which focused on Western lifestyle disease mechanisms, with labs at a medical school in Copenhagen. I also took a class on health care economics, juxtaposing America's system with Scandinavian socialized health care.

My program's core course was taught in a hospital by two Danish doctors and included each system of the body as well as the treatment of its diseases. Every two weeks, we also interviewed a Danish patient, wrote up his or her medical record and made a diagnosis. The curriculum was challenging, rewarding and directly related to my interest in medicine.

There was a home-stay option, but I chose to live in a "kollegium," Denmark's version of an apartment-style dormitory. Anyone taking classes at an institution or working an apprenticeship or internship is eligible to live in a kollegium, regardless of age. There are many kollegiums outside the city, most of which consist of about six blocks or buildings with approximately 250 students in each block.

I was the only American on my floor, and there was only one other American in my block. The experience was a bit daunting in the beginning, considering I didn't know Americans in my program or any Danes. My daily commute to class took about 10 minutes by Metro (the Danish above-and-below-ground subway system) and then a 15-minute walk through winding, narrow, cobbled pedestrian streets.

My first two months in Copenhagen were a whirlwind of excitement: constant sightseeing, window shopping (my classes were only a block from Strøget, the longest pedestrian shopping street in the world) and getting to know the Danish culture.

In general, Danes are more laid-back than Americans. Most of the Danes I met thought Americans were too focused on cut-throat competition and individualism. Many also hated George Bush and idolized Bill Clinton. I heard one Dane say that almost everyone over 15 years old in Denmark has read Clinton's autobiography.

Danes are focused on a concept called "hygge," the Danish word for "cozy," although they stress that it is not directly translatable to English. It means taking time out of your day to relax, usually with friends in a candlelit restaurant or alone, watching a movie or reading a book. They promote equality and boasting is socially unacceptable. Everyone is on the same playing field. The root of much of the equality stems from their liberal social-welfare policies, which leave none without access to education, paid maternity/paternity leave or health care.

Courtesy of Carly Whitehead

Carly Whitehead '08 spent fall semester participating in the Medical Practice and Policy program in Denmark and exploring the "hygge," or cozy, lifestyle of the Danes.

One of the best parts about being abroad was leaving everyday life behind. I had every Wednesday off, and I spent my down time visiting almost every museum in Copenhagen, touring the royal palace, hanging out in Tivoli (the oldest amusement park in the world) and taking pictures in every section of town. Trying to explore every nook of the city by the time I left was one of my main goals, and I think I got pretty close.

Looking back, I realize just how self-sufficient I had to be. I was living alone among hundreds of Danes, shopping for groceries, cooking my own meals and figuring out the Metro, S Train, regional train and bus schedule by myself. This was quite a feat considering I had been surviving on the University meal plan and MapQuest till then.

DIS organized lots of weekend trips. I went biking and canoeing in the countryside of Sweden, and I took a weekend cruise to Oslo, Norway. With my Medical Practice and Policy group, I spent five days touring western Denmark, a more rural place than Copenhagen, where we visited hospitals, research labs, museums and even a kindergarten class. I had the opportunity to try my broken Danish on a few blonde-haired, five-year-old students who looked really freaked out.

About halfway through the semester we had three weeks off to travel. Everyone spent the first week on a trip with their programs, and the medical group went to Poznan, Poland. Initially, I wasn't too excited to spend four days of my break in Poland, but I was really surprised. It was a beautiful mix of Eastern and Western architecture, and it was really cool to see a country that used to be behind the "iron curtain." I shadowed a pediatrician in a children's hospital and had the opportunity to see a pretty gruesome autopsy, so my time in Poland was very memorable.

My group then traveled to Berlin, where we visited the Virchow Institute in the Charite School of Medicine. We stayed in a hostel in former East Berlin and visited Checkpoint Charlie, (the point where American and Soviet troops faced each other during the Cold War), the Berlin Wall and the Pergamon Museum. I liked Berlin, but I felt like it had been Americanized, probably because most of it had to be rebuilt after World War II and the fall of the Wall.

After Berlin, I went to Russia for a week with a DIS group. It was amazing to see the inner workings of a country that seems so notorious and to see how the Russians received American students. I spent three days in St. Petersburg, where I toured the Hermitage, a gorgeous art museum housed in the former royal palace; saw the ballet Swan Lake and went on a "Behind the Façade" tour, on which I was able to see the more "real," poverty-stricken residential areas away from typical tourist stops.

After St. Petersburg, we took the night train to Moscow, where we visited St. Basil's Cathedral, toured the Kremlin and the Duma (Russia's main government building) and viewed Lenin's body, preserved and on display under heavy guard in a mausoleum on the Red Square.

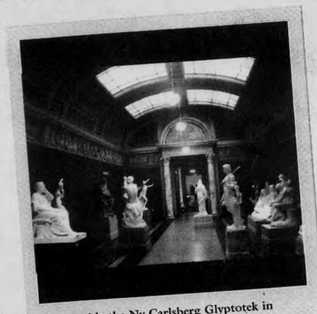
After Russia, I traveled with three friends to Amsterdam for a week. We stopped at the Anne Frank House, went on a canal tour and stayed in a hostel only half a block from the Red Light District.

The city reminded me a lot of Copenhagen, and by the end of the week I found myself missing Denmark. At the end of the travel break I felt like I was coming home.

I picked Denmark because of its medically focused program, and now I feel so fortunate to have ended up in a place with so much to teach and the amazing social and health care policies, the infinitely-more-relaxed-than-America Danish life philosophy. Without my study abroad experience, I might have spent two days in Copenhagen on some European trek later on in life, and the greatness of Denmark wouldn't have hit me with such force.

I'm surprised it isn't a more common stop for travelers in Europe. I think the only reason the world doesn't know a little more about Denmark is because the Danes are so modest. They don't flash their cultural achievements, highly functional welfare and health care system and high literacy rate. If they did that, it wouldn't be Denmark, and I wouldn't feel like I found a diamond in the rough.

Christianshavn, a district of Copenhagen



Inside the Ny Carlsberg Glyptotek in Copenhagen

The Brandenburg Gate, Berlin

At Ny Havn, a trendy water-side area in Copenhagen

Whitehead's Medical Practice and Policy group in front of a piece of the Berlin Wall at the Charite School of Medicine in Berlin

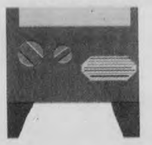
Photos courtesy of Carly Whitehead

The Bucknellian

Sports

March 9, 2007

Volume 139, Number 7 | Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue | www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian



What's on the boob tube?

Matthew Saylor '08, associate editor of content, explains the latest gossip about "Lost," "Scrubs" and "24."

See page B8

No. 16 Bison defeat ranked opponents

Men's lacrosse squad remains undefeated with wins over Ohio State and University of Pennsylvania

By Wes Trowbridge
Staff Writer

The men's lacrosse team toppled the No. 19 team on the United States Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association Coaches Poll two weeks in a row and advanced to 4-0 for the season. The Orange and Blue dominated in a 9-6 win over previously undefeated University of Pennsylvania on Tuesday and defeated Ohio State earlier in the week in a 7-6 thriller on Saturday.

On Tuesday, No. 19 Penn faced off against the Bison in a battle of the undefeated at Christy Mathewson-Memorial Stadium. But the Orange and Blue led 7-0 after a near-perfect first half and sent Penn home with its first loss. The Bison went on to score the first nine goals of the contest before surrendering the last six to Penn in a bizarre 9-6 victory.

Bucknell 9
Penn 6

Joe Mele '09 tied his career-high with five goals, three of which came on a personal 3-0 run in the first quarter. In an incredibly efficient performance, Mele scored five times on only seven shots and also collected a team-high five ground balls.

Bucknell 7
Ohio State 6

The defense was oppressive once again, allowing only one shot in the first quarter and shutting Penn out for the first 35 minutes of the game. Goalkeeper Nick Sciubba '09 collected 11 saves, including an amazing stop from point blank range in the third quarter.

After midfielder Brian Gargan '07 scored on a man-up opportunity 1:11 into the game, Quaker midfielder Drew Collins' stick failed inspection after his goal and the Bison took advantage of the ensuing three-minute penalty, scoring twice.

Austin Winter '10, the Patriot League leader in assists, added three more, all in the first half. Ground ball machine Steve Case '07 added two assists and matched Mele with five ground balls. Perry Menzies '09, Tim Brandau '10, and Mark Lane '08 also added goals during the Orange and Blue's 9-0 run.

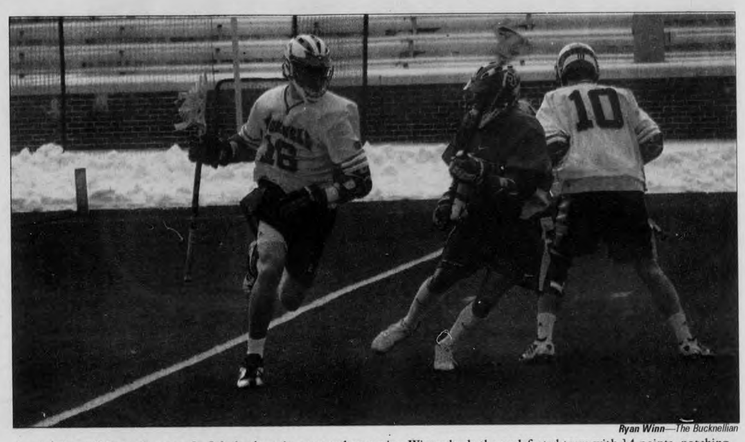
The Bison out shot Penn 33-29 and won the ground ball battle 30-19.

On Saturday, the Bison defeated No. 19 Ohio State 7-6 in Columbus to reach the 3-0 mark for the first time since 1996. Winter had two goals and two assists and Menzies and Brandau each scored twice as the Orange and Blue once again rallied from an early deficit to win.

"Our six on six defense was the key to the win," Brandau said. "Our entire defense played outstanding and we got some clutch goalie play down the stretch."

The Buckeyes had averaged 13.75 goals per game in their

See MLAX page B5

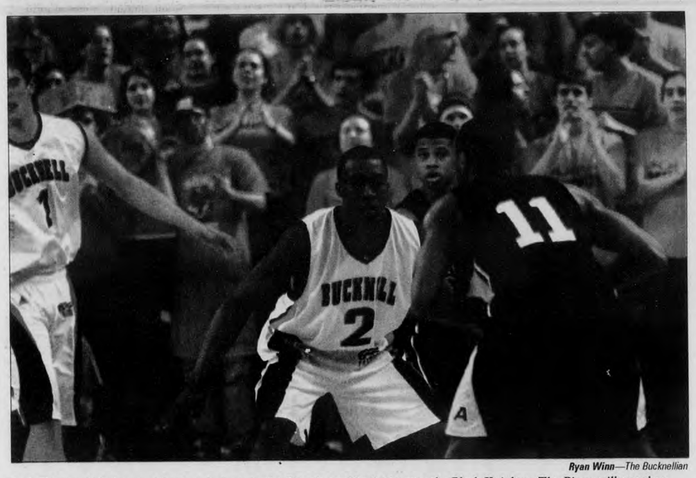


Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Austin Winter '10 speeds past a St. John's player in a recent home win. Winter leads the undefeated team with 14 points, notching 11 assists and three goals in four games in his rookie season as a Bison.

Men's basketball rolls over Army

Bison advance to Patriot League Championship with rout of Black Knights at Sojka



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Rob Thomas '08 sizes up Marshall Jackson in the Bison's semifinal win over the Black Knights. The Bison will travel to Worcester, Mass. for their third consecutive Patriot League final showdown against Holy Cross.

By Marcus Mateer
Senior Writer

Fresh off a first round upset against Lehigh, Army (15-16) looked for another Patriot League Tournament victory at Sojka Pavilion. The Bison (22-8), led by 23 points from Chris McNaughton '07 and 15 points from Donald Brown '07, would have none of it. An eight-minute scoreless stretch in the second half for the Black Knights turned a close contest into a blowout with a final score of 68-47.

The game was tight for most of the first half. McNaughton scored 14 of his 23 points in the half to pace the Bison. Army simply had no answer for the big man down low, but McNaughton was not alone in the scoring column. Seven other Bison added points in the half.

Army was a two-man show. Matt Bell and Jarell Brown were hot in the period, scoring 13 points each. The rest of the team combined for only six points in the half. Nine baskets between the two scorers allowed the Black Knights to take the lead with five minutes left before the break.

Bucknell 68
Army 47

The home team responded as it went on a 12-3 spurt to close out the half. Five Bison scored during the run, yielding a 40-32 halftime score.

Coming out of the break, Head Coach Pat Flannery '80 went ballistic when Abe Badmus '07 earned his fourth foul early in the half. Jarell Brown hit the technical free throws, cutting the lead to five. The pair of points would be half of Jarell Brown's second-half total of four. The Bison defense also clamped down on Bell, who did not score in the final period.

"I understand why Donald and Chris are out here," Flannery said jovially at the press conference, "but I don't understand why me and Abe are here. We had great seats for the game."

Following the technical, the Bison would go on a 14-0 run capped by a steal and dunk by Stephen Tyree '10. The lead ballooned to 19 at 57-38, and the home team went into mop-up mode.

"Coach was saying the whole second half that the big men need to do a better job contesting the shooters,"

See MBBALL page B3

Track and field breaks into top 10

Orange and Blue post strong finishes at the ECAC and IC4A Regional Championships

By Brian Mulligan
Sports Editor

For the first time in history, the women's and men's track team broke into the top 10 at the Eastern Coast Athletic Conference and Intercollegiate Association of Amateur Athletes in America Championships respectively. The women notched a sixth place finish, while the men's squad took 10th place. Marjorie Grap '07 met the NCAA provisional mark in the weight throw with a toss of 61 feet, 11.5 inches. She also took first-place honors at the ECAC Championship.

"It was great to see Marjorie win her first ECAC Championship in the weight throw," Head Coach Kevin Donner said. "She has worked extremely hard."

Mel Buczko '07 also notched the NCAA Provisional height in the pole vault with a jump of 12-7 1/2, placing second overall at the meet. Erin Cranmer-Hart '08 broke into the top five in the mile run with a fourth-place finish in 4minutes and 53.7 seconds, while teammate Christa Sawko '07 placed third in the 800-meter dash. She crossed the finish line in 2:10.53.

"It was a fantastic weekend for both programs. It is the first time that I have had a team finish in the top 10, and for both programs to do so is a great reflection of our athletes and coaches."
— Kevin Donner, head coach*

Leanna Nastase '07 posted a personal best in the 5,000 and is fifth in the all-time record book. Angie Hall '07 took sixth place overall in the pole vault.

Matt Forys '07 led the men's team with a first-place finish in the 3,000-meter run, while teammate Tyler Hoffman '07 set a new school record in the weight throw. Hoffman posted a throw of 65 feet 10.5 inches to take second place overall.

"Matt Forys has had a fantastic season and he will go down as one of the best runners in our rich school history," Donner said.

See TRACK page B4

Saylor Says

By Matthew Saylor
Associate Editor of Content

I started writing my column this week with the presence of mind to strongly criticize the women's basketball team. When I completed the first draft of writing, I had 700 words showcasing how poorly the Colgate Raiders had played prior to the game with the Bison on Saturday and questioning how the Orange and Blue could be outplayed in nearly every aspect of their game with them.

What I did not have was a better grasp on why the Bison, the tournament favorite, lost as they did. I had hoped that by writing about all of my frustrations and feelings of anger and sadness over the loss, I would feel better. I did not. So I restarted, and I tried to come up with something that would have a little more meaning.

Over the past three years, I have watched this team transform itself from a 10-18 team in 2004-05 to 18-11 last year and to the 20-win, regular-season champion team this year. I was sure that this would be the year the team would advance to the tournament championship game, win it and find itself at the NCAA Tournament for the first time since 2002.

The numbers showed that prior to playing the Bison on Saturday, Colgate was 5-24, outscored by an average of 14.4 points per game, shooting only 30.3 percent from three-point territory, out-rebounded by 2.2 boards per game and com-

See SAYLOR page B5

Orange and Blue rebound against Big Red

Men's baseball squad wins three of four against Cornell over the weekend with strong pitching and defense

Courtesy of Jeff Brown

Ryan Gryskevicz '07 slides in to home plate in a win over Cornell last weekend. Gryskevicz has .367 batting average and has drove in six runners on the season.

By Ty Clark
Senior Writer

With a sweep of Saturday's doubleheader and a split on Sunday, the Baseball team enjoyed a 3-1 weekend against Cornell.

Playing at the brand-new Hank DeVincent Field at LaSalle University in Philadelphia, due to poor conditions at home on Depew field, the Bison (3-5) won two tight games on Saturday, 1-0 and 2-1, and rebounded on Sunday after an 8-4 loss in the first game to win the second 11-7.

Bucknell 1
Cornell 0

"We finally got our pitchers run support," said Ryan Gryskevicz '07, the team leader in batting average. "They have been pitching lights-out baseball, so it was good to finally give them some runs and put them in a position to win."

It was Gryskevicz who got the Bison offense going in the first game, belting a second-inning triple and scoring on a single by Ed Rubbo '08 to open and close the scoring in the first game. Bison hurler Mathew Wilson '08 went the distance, shutting out the Big Red with five hits, zero walks, and six strikeouts over the nine innings to pick up his first win of the year (1-1).

The Bison again took a quick lead in Saturday's second contest, as Dane Grandizio '09 led off the game with a single. He then stole second, moved to third on a groundout and scored on a passed ball.

Bucknell 2
Cornell 1

The Bison did not score another run until the ninth, three innings after Cornell tied up the game. Ben Yoder '10 cranked out an infield single, moved to second on a wild pitch and to third on a groundout. Yoder then scored on a single by Austin Turban '08.

Nathan Mittag '07 pitched seven and a third innings of one-run ball game before Jason Buursma '08 relieved him, pitching one and two-thirds scoreless innings for the win (1-0).

"Game competition gives us the best opportunity to get better," Head Coach Gene Depew '71 said. "We had an advantage on Cornell because we had had a chance to play and they had not."

On Sunday, though, Cornell took the first game, 8-4, on the strength of their hitting. After falling into a quick 4-1 hole, the Bison battled back, tying the game at 4-4 in the third on a Gryskevicz double and double-steal of home. The Big Red put up three in the sixth and one in the seventh to round out the scoring. Matt Curry '07 took the loss for the Bison (0-3).

Cornell 8
Bucknell 4

The last game of the four-day series was a return to form for the Bison. After a Buursma triple in the first, Gryskevicz continued his strong weekend with a two-run homerun to open the scoring. The team added three more in the second on a string of singles and doubles. After Cornell came back with five runs in the third and one in the fourth to take their only lead of the game at 6-5, the Bison bats came alive once again. A Buursma two-run double and a Gryskevicz RBI single in the fourth put the Bison ahead for good; they would tack on runs in the fifth and seventh en route to their 11-7 win.

Bucknell 11
Cornell 7

> "We were very pleased with our pitching and defense on Saturday and with the progress we made offensively on Sunday. It was also good to see us bounce back from a first-game loss to win the second game of the double header."
>
> —Gene Depew '71, head coach

"We were very pleased with our pitching and defense on Saturday and with the progress we made offensively on Sunday," Depew said. "It was also good to see us bounce back from a first-game loss to win the second game of the double header."

Over spring break, the team will be traveling to Florida for six games.

"There's nothing better than playing baseball on a sunny, warm or hot day," Rubbo said. "So traveling that far of a distance is most definitely worth the trip."

Men's tennis loses fifth straight

By John Mldonzinski
Senior Writer

The men's tennis team fell to Marist 5-2 on Saturday. The team now stands at 3-6, after dropping its fifth straight match. The Bison kept many of the matches close and were able to collect a few victories despite being without first-year power player Zach Hascoe.

Marist 5
Bucknell 2

Head Coach Rebecca Helt realized the effect this had on the team.

"We were without a key player on Saturday, so that did affect the strength of our doubles and singles lineup a bit," Helt said.

> "We're playing a tough schedule so that we know exactly what we need to do and where we need to be in order to compete hard in conference. I feel we are prepared for the start of the Patriot League season."
>
> —Rebecca Helt, head coach

Jonathon Brenner '09 and Ryan Sandburg '09 secured the only doubles point of the match for the Bison, defeating Pedro Genovese and Federico Rolon 9-7 in the No. 1 doubles match. Ira Reibeisen '08 and Ben Young '08 lost to Gregory Marks and Ray Josephs 9-8 and Daniel Bednarek '09 and Brian Cohen '07 fell to Loic Sessagesimi and Christian Colley 8-4, enabling Marist to pick up the doubles point.

Reibeisen and Brenner were the lone bright spots for the Bison in the singles matches, as Reibeisen defeated Genovese 6-3, 6-2 in the No. 1 singles spot and Brenner dropped Marks 6-2, 6-7(7-5), 7-5 in the No. 4 singles spot. Although the rest of the team played well, they were not able to tally any more victories in their respective matches.

Sandburg lost to Sessagesimi 6-3, 3-6, 6-4 in the No. 2 singles spot, while Young fell to Colley 6-2, 6-1 in the No. 3 singles spot. Bednarek fell to Josephs 6-3, 6-1 in the No. 5 spot and Cohen was defeated by Rolon 6-2, 6-1 in the No. 6 spot.

Although the team has not had much success lately, Helt knows her team is improving, even if their record states otherwise.

"I think what most people need to keep in mind is that the last five teams we played are ranked in the top 15 in the region. They are some of the best teams in the East Region. We are right there," Helt said.

Reibeisen knows he and his teammates are improving as well, but realize they have not been playing to their full potential.

"We have been playing relatively strong teams recently, but my teammates and I should be picking up more wins than we have. We are all taking steps to improve our games which will ultimately lead to more wins," Reibeisen said.

The team will head to Hilton Head, S.C. over spring break to face Coastal Carolina and Skidmore. After the break, they will return and face Mount St. Mary's and UMBC before heading into Patriot League play. Both Helt and Reibeisen feel these recent matches have helped the team prepare for Patriot League play.

"I am hopeful and expect that the strong teams which we have recently played will better prepare us for the Patriot League season. Furthermore, I believe that the team wins will come as our collective levels culminate in unison against our Patriot League foes this spring," Reibeisen said.

"We're playing a tough schedule so that we know exactly what we need to do and where we need to be in order to compete hard in conference. I feel we are prepared for the start of the Patriot League season," Helt said.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Shana Palencia '10 prepares to pass the ball in a recent home game. The Bison commence their conference play this weekend against Princeton and Maryland and are taking their second trip to the California to take on west coast powerhouses.

Bison place third at ECACs

Polo defeats Ivy League foe Harvard and perennial powerhouse Maryland

By Shannon Pitsch
Sports Editor

The women's water polo team took third in the Eastern College Athletic Conference (ECAC) Championships last weekend. The Bison went 1-1 on Saturday, beating Harvard 6-5 and losing to Brown 12-9. On the second day the Bison defeated Maryland 9-7 in overtime for third place.

Entering the tournament as the second seed after having lost to Princeton in the finals last year, the team faced off against tough Ivy League competition Harvard University. Despite two goals from Meagan Gins '08 and Valentina Rozas '10, the Bison fell to a two-goal deficit at the end of the first quarter.

Bucknell 6
Harvard 5

Defensively, the Orange and Blue responded allowing only one goal in the remaining 24 minutes of play with a goal late in the fourth quarter. Goal keeper Mandy Bynum '07 had four saves in her 32 minutes of net play, while Gins, Rozas, Aubrey Rowe '09 and Elizabeth Jensen '07 each contributed two steals each.

Behind two more goals from Rozas and Gins, the Bison managed to tie the score at 4-4 going into the second half. One goal apiece from Shana Palencia '10 and Jensen in the second brought the Bison to a 6-5 lead.

"Our offense was strong this weekend," Gins said, "because we were working more as a team, and everyone was being a threat; playing an inside-outside game so to speak."

In the second game of the day, the Bison faced a second Ivy League opponent, Brown University. Hoping to play for a second consecutive championship, the Bison offense was paced with two goals each from Gins, Rozas, Jensen and Rowe. This balanced quad fought to keep the team even with Brown, trailing by one goal at the end of the first.

Brown 12
Bucknell 9

> "Our offense was strong this weekend because we were working more as a team, and everyone was being a threat; playing an inside-outside game so to speak."
>
> —Meagan Gins '08

Despite six saves from Bynum and eight collective team steals, the Bears furthered their lead with each successive quarter. Three goals in the last quarter would secure the victory for Brown 12-9 forcing the Bison into the third place match-up against Maryland.

Going into the game with a 1-0 record for the year against conference rival Maryland, having beaten them 7-5 on February 18, the Orange and Blue's offense came out confident and prepared to dominate, scoring three goals in the first quarter.

Behind four goals from Gins, the Bison led for most of the game leading 4-2 at the end of the first half and 6-4 going into the final quarter. The Terrapins would not be defeated that easily as they responded with three goals in the final quarter to bring the game into overtime play.

Bucknell 9
Maryland 7

In overtime, Bynum shut out Maryland while Gins, Rozas and Rowe led the offense responsible for two goals in the extra six minutes of play. The Bison captured third place in the ECAC tournament and brought their season record to 8-7.

Three Bison earned all-tournament distinctions this weekend, with Fozas claiming a spot on the first team and Gins and Bynum sharing spots on the second team. They will begin conference play this weekend with games away against Princeton and Maryland before they leave for their second trip to California.

"I think this week in California we are really excited to see west coast competition again," said Gins. "I know that we are looking forward to playing better as a team than we did last time we were there. We just want to prove ourselves that we can do anything we put our minds to."

This time the Orange and Blue will take on California Baptist, Redlands, Claremont-Mudd-Scripps, Loyola Marymount, UC Irvine and Cal State Northridge over the course of seven days.

Orange and Blue suffer early tournament defeat

Loss to Colgate in quarterfinals of PL tournament costs women's basketball a NCAA trip

By Matthew Saylor
Associate Editor of Content

One night after winning Patriot League awards for player of the year, Hope Foster '08, defensive player of the year, Kesha Champion '08, and coach of the year, Kathy Fedorjaka, the women's basketball team suffered a 69-62 loss to Colgate in the quarterfinals of the Patriot League Tournament at Annapolis, Md on Saturday. This was the first time in conference history that an eight-seed has defeated the one-seed, and the Bison will now play in the women's National Invitation Tournament (NIT) instead of reaching their goal of an NCAA Tournament.

Colgate 69
Bucknell 62

"We worked all week [before the game] on things to not only stop Colgate but the future teams we planned on playing," Lauren Schober '09 said. "It just wasn't performed in the game though."

The Raiders (6-25) used a barrage of three-pointers, making nine out of 14 attempts, and shot an efficient 46 percent from the field to defeat the Orange and Blue (20-10). Colgate's defense held the Bison to 42.1 percent shooting, including limiting All-Patriot League First Team members Foster and Amanda Brown '09 to 18 combined points on eight out of 25 shots.

> "I think the NIT is a great opportunity for us to make a name for ourselves. It is still a big tournament to play in, so I'm looking forward to it."
>
> —Kesha Champion '08

"I think we were prepared to play against Colgate," Champion said. "Everything they did we already knew. I just don't think we came to play from the [opening] gates."

The Raiders jumped out to a quick 14-2 lead against the Bison, a stark contrast from the 27-0 lead the Orange and Blue had against them in the Feb. 17 match-up at Sojka Pavilion. Colgate scored on five of its first nine possessions.

"Colgate came out to play, and we just couldn't get going on the defensive end to get a stop when we needed one the most," Le'Le' LeSeur '10 said.

The Bison fought back though, taking a 22-21 lead on a Schober jumper with five minutes and 15 seconds to go in the first half. During this 20-7 run, Champion scored seven points and Foster added six. The Orange and Blue led 34-32 at intermission, led by 11 points from Schober.

A Foster layup at the 14:55 mark of the second half gave the Bison their largest lead of the game at 44-35. Schober scored six of the team's first eight second-half points, giving her a team-high of 17 for the game, but was held scoreless for the remainder of the day. After a Brown three-pointer made it 47-38, the Raiders went on an 11-0 run to take a 48-47 lead with 10:27 left in the game. The Orange and Blue would keep the score close over the next several minutes thanks to Jacquie Seawright '07, who scored 10 of the next 12 Bison points. Champion tied the score at 61 with 2:39 remaining by sinking a pair of free throws, the last time the team would be even with Colgate.

Rookie Tahara Williams scored seven of Colgate's final eight points, including making four of five free throws. Her steal with 15 seconds left in the game and the Bison down 66-62 ended any chance of an Orange and Blue victory.

"On defense they were trapping our rebounder to slow our fast breaks," Champion said. "On offense they just used the quick guard lineup they had very well with a lot of rotations."

The Raiders out-rebounded the Bison 35-30 and made 14 out of 19 free throws, compared to 10 of 15 made by the Orange and Blue. Williams led Colgate with 17 points, but she had plenty of help on the offensive end, as three other Raiders scored in double-figures and six different players scored at least six points.

"Colgate did nothing to stop us," Schober said. "We hurt ourselves. We did not play Bucknell ball the way we had been playing when we were winning."

In addition to her 17 points, Schober led the Bison with six rebounds and five assists in 39 minutes. Seawright scored 16 points, but missed three out of four free throws in the game's final 3:39. She also had four rebounds and four assists. Foster scored 10 points and grabbed five rebounds, but repeatedly faded away from the basket on inside shots against the more physical Raider defenders. Champion had nine points, five assists, three rebounds, two blocks and two steals. The Bison only received two points from the bench, a jumper by Kristina Collymore '08, compared to 10 for Colgate.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Hope Foster '08 scans the court in a recent home game. The Bison earned a trip to the National Invitational Tournament starting on Wednesday.

The Raiders would lose to American (13-19) on Sunday in the semifinal round, 68-45. Holy Cross (15-17) defeated American 56-48 to become the Patriot League Tournament champion on Wednesday.

On Monday, the Orange and Blue will learn who they will play in the first round of the NIT. The team has secured an automatic bid to the tournament thanks to having the top record in the Patriot League during the regular season. Forty-eight teams compete in this tournament.

"I think even though the NIT is not something we were hoping for, it is a great opportunity for our program to be nationally recognized," LeSeur said.

Champion echoed those thoughts.

"I think the NIT is a great opportunity for us to make a name for ourselves," she said. "It is still a big tournament to play in, so I'm looking forward to it."

First Round action of the NIT takes place March 14-16.

Bison drop heart-breaker in final minutes

By Kyle Barndollar
Staff Writer

The women's lacrosse team suffered a painful 9-8 loss to Robert Morris in its home opener last week. After tying the game with just 17 seconds left, the Bison saw a 40-yard shot of desperation make its way into the net as the final seconds of regulation ticked away. The defeat spoiled a one-goal, five-assist performance by attacker Carol Donahue '10. With the loss, the Bison fall to 0-3 on the season, while RMU improves to 1-2.

RMU 9
Bucknell 8

"It was a heartbreaking loss, but it was due to our mistakes throughout the entire game, not just that final shot," Co-captain Shauna Weinstein '07 said. "This is the type of game that you want to forget completely, but you keep the feeling as motivation to play that much harder next time."

Donahue began the scoring with a goal 85 seconds into the game. Two goals from Lauren Deitrich '08, and one each from Bonnie Buechel '09 and Katlyn Recchia '09 propelled the Bison to a 5-2 halftime lead.

Robert Morris scored the first two goals of the second half to cut the lead to 5-4, but Sarah Collins '09 answered with 17:38 remaining. Collins, who along with Buechel has scored in each game this season, gave the Orange and Blue a 6-4 lead. Robert Morris scored the next two goals though, to tie the game at 6-6 midway through the second half.

Alison Heffernan '10, who suffered from a concussion in practice that kept her out of the first two games, gained the lead back for the Bison with her first-ever collegiate goal. The Colonials would tie it up just 28 seconds later.

Robert Morris scored the go-ahead goal with 59 seconds remaining, after almost 12 minutes of deadlock. Paige Kasschau '10 missed a game-tying chance from up close with 25 seconds left, but just eight seconds later, on her second goal of the game, Buechel tied the score at 8-8 off of a key feed from Donahue.

The Bison gained possession on the next draw control, but lost the ball near midfield, allowing RMU's Jennifer Collins enough time for one desperate heave. Just before the horn, Collins launched one from about 40 yards away that somehow got past goalie Katie Hartsock '10 to snatch the win for the Colonials.

"We played really well in the first half, we just need to work on playing for a full 60 minutes" Elizabeth Whipple '08 said.

The Orange and Blue out shot Robert Morris 24-23, won the battle for groundballs 20-15, and committed one less turnover than their counterparts. Hartsock made a season high 10 saves, and Alex Radebaugh '09 performed brilliantly on defense, but it was not enough to earn the first win of the season for the Bison.

"We have a lot of talent on our team, but we are a young team," Weinstein said, "Now, as our season picks up, we need to learn how to translate this talent into a collective effort for the whole game."

The Bison now travel to Florida to train in the warm weather before facing Long Island University in West Palm Beach, Fl. on Monday.

"I think that, if anything, we are even hungrier for LIU and will come out mad and ready to avenge our loss against RMU," Head coach Jess Spadafora said, "We are looking forward to heading to Florida and really bond[ing] as a team. This is the most important week for us in terms of our team development of chemistry and heart."

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Bonnie Buechel '09 over powers a Robert Morris defenseman in the Bison loss last weekend. Buechel boasts a .444 shooting percentage and leads the team with eight points.

Bison fall to Marist

By Ellis Hudes
Senior Writer

Out-of-conference competition has not looked favorably upon the women's tennis team, which dropped its sixth straight game of the season Saturday against Marist 6-1. The team has a 1-7 overall record this year, but key first-year player Tania Varela's return from injury made an immediate impact—a good sign for the remainder of the season.

Marist 6
Bucknell 1

Varela made her regular season debut for the Bison and positive results quickly followed. She notched the team's only point of the afternoon in singles play by beating Marist's Megan Gureck 6-3, 6-3.

"Last weekend's match was a little difficult for me because I have been out of competition for the last three months," Varela said. "However, I thought I handled the pressure really well and felt like I was playing well by the end of the match."

Despite this encouraging win, the Orange and Blue did not collect another set in singles action. Carlin Calcaterra '10 lost to Cassie Strange 6-3, 6-0, while Erin Godly posted a 6-2, 6-2 win over JoAnna Grossman '09. There were two other quick singles losses in the day: Tiffany Card '09 fell to Alexa Strange 6-4, 6-0 and Camille Simonetti '09 won four games in a 6-2, 6-2 loss to Mirelva Colon. Paulina Gamboa '09 forced a second set tiebreak but could not extend Marist's Christina Ong in a 6-4, 7-6(8-6) loss.

In doubles action, the tandem of Caitlin Baffa '08 and Simonetti won its second straight match in a win over Gureck and Colon in No. 3 doubles. Marist took the previous two doubles matches to clinch the point, with C. Strange and Ong prevailing 9-7 over Calcaterra and Gamboa, and an additional win for A. Strange and Godly against Ashley Globerman '09 and Varela.

While Varela's return to the courts is cause for optimism, the team is still struggling with other nagging injuries.

"Right now our focus is on getting all our players healed," Head Coach Rebecca Helt said. "We haven't played with our full lineup yet. But we have had several players step up and work extremely hard to fill those spots. We're slowly coming back together and when we do, we will get back on track."

The Orange and Blue head to Hilton Head, S.C., to face Dayton for a Tuesday evening match.

MBBALL From page B1

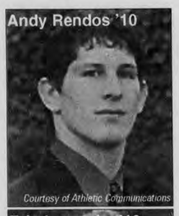
Donald Brown said. "All of a sudden it just clicked for us, and it helped us during that run."

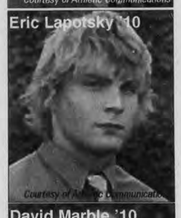
In his two games back from the broken hand, Donald Brown has averaged 15 points and nine rebounds a game. Encouragingly, he was 5-6 from the free-throw line against Army. His 1-3 performance against Navy showed that his hand may still have been bothering him. With the versatile forward back at full strength, the game plan for the Bison has an added weapon.

"Even through halftime when we got in a little bit of trouble, it never went away from Chris and Donald and Darren [Mastropaolo '08]," Flannery said. "As we got into the second half, kids were really punching it in. There's always pressure, and they handled it well."

Men's wrestling sends three to nationals

First-years Eric Lapotsky, Andy Rendos and David Marble earned spots in NCAA Championships





By Kyle Barndollar
Staff Writer

Three Bison wrestlers earned places in the NCAA Championships after competing in last weekend's Eastern Intercollegiate Wrestling Association (EIWA) Tournament. Eric Lapotsky '10, Andy Rendos '10 and David Marble '10 will all represent the University in the National Championships, as the Bison placed ninth out of 14 teams in their two-day post-season conference tournament in East Stroudsburg, Pa.

"I think the sky is the limit for our guys going to nationals. People won't expect much from us because of what people have thought about us all year—we are all freshmen," Assistant Coach Larry Sprecher said. "But those are not the expectations we have set for our guys."

All three of the Bison's national qualifiers came into the tournament ranked fourth in their respective weight classes, and all three had an opportunity to place on the second day of competition.

"I really believe that we were the best physically conditioned team in the conference," Lapotsky said. "And the credit for that goes directly to our coaching staff."

Rendos earned a bye in the first round of the 165-lb bracket and used this extra rest to prepare for the 12-2 major decision he would eventually score over the fifth seed, Harvard's Frankie Colletta. The win earned Rendos a match with top-seeded Michael Cannon from American, which he lost 5-3.

On day two Rendos was able to defeat seventh seed Ricky Turk of Columbia, 16-7, and the eighth seed, Brown's Shawn Kitchner, 6-4, in the consolation championship to finish in third place and in place for an automatic bid to nationals.

Lapotsky would also finish third in his weight class. After his first round bye in 197-lb bracket, Lapotsky downed Nick Sommerfield, the fifth seed from Columbia, 3-2. The top seed, Jerry Rinaldi of Cornell, would beat Lapotsky 15-4 in the semifinals, sending him to the consolation bracket on day two.

But Lapotsky, who thrived under pressure all season for the Bison, managed to win both of his matches on day two to earn a third-place finish. First he upended seventh seed Matthew Parsons of Navy, 8-3, and then he sealed his NCAA berth with an 11-6 decision over third-seed Matt Cassidy of Lehigh.

> "I think the sky is the limit for our guys going to nationals. People won't expect much from us because of what people have thought about us all year—we are all freshmen. But those are not the expectations we have set for our guys."
> —Larry Sprecher, assistant coach

Marble's strong run to end the regular season gave him a lot of momentum coming into the 133-lb tournament, and he began the preliminary round with a 9-4 decision over William Simpson of Army. He would score a dramatic overtime victory 7-5 to move past fifth-seed Joseph Baker of Navy before falling to top-seed Matthew Valenti of Penn, 16-1. Marble would lose his next two matches, one to Lehigh's Seth Ciasulli 5-4 and another in a rematch with Baker, 10-2, to fall to a sixth place finish.

Only the top four seeds for each weight class earn automatic bids to the NCAA Tournament, but a coach's vote allowed Marble to earn one of the seven at-large bids thanks to his performance in an extremely difficult weight class that features four nationally-ranked wrestlers.

"I feel that Marble is by far the hardest worker we have," Shane Riccio '10 said. "And I was really proud of him when I heard he received a bid to the NCAAs."

Riccio, Greg Hart '10 and George Mann '10 all entered the tournament unseeded and pulled off wins over seeded opponents in their first round bouts before eventually being knocked out of competition. George Hingson '10 came into the competition as an eighth seed, but fell to top-seeded heavyweight Ed Prendergast of Navy on his way out of contention.

Rendos, Marble and Lapotsky are now off until March 15, when they travel to Auburn Hills, Mich. for the NCAA Championships.

"I think that we all have a chance to place at this tournament," Rendos said. "I don't think any of us want to end our season on a bad note so I think that we will come out firing and leave every ounce of energy that we have on the mat in Auburn Hills."

Overall Individual Records

Rendos 26-4
Lapotsky 25-4
Marble 23-11

Ice hockey blazes past competition

By Ty Clark
Senior Writer

The 13-game winning streak of the University's under-appreciated ice hockey team will never reach the ears of campus-goers, let alone those of SportsCenter experts. No publicity meets the team, despite their 17-3-0 record. The few people who know the team even exists are the players themselves.

But things are changing quickly and one of the biggest reasons is the increased commitment from first-year students. Out of the 20 players, more than half are either first-year students or sophomores. This has done wonders over the course of the season, as the chemistry has developed rapidly and the newcomers have dedicated themselves to the club sport.

"The previous two years have not amounted to much for the Bucknell ice hockey team," Alex Pron '09 said. "During this time period, the team has not been affiliated with a league and has had a multitude of troubles."

With their efforts, the club joined the Susquehanna Valley Men's Hockey League (SVMHL), where the members have played en route to their impressive record.

They continued to play other college club hockey teams and have been accepted into the Mason-Dixon Collegiate Hockey Association (MDCHA), where they will play against eight other college club teams, including American, Gettysburg and Johns Hopkins.

The team is also working with the University to improve the organization of the club and improve the team's play in years to come. This season has been a tremendous year for the team, as it heads towards the SVMHL Championship. Playing all its games in Sunbury, Pa. the team has dominated with its speed, puck skills and smart play.

The first-year class has brought much-needed experience, as two first-year players won high school national championships. Everyone noted the presence of Captain Jake duPont '07, a strong two-way defenseman who has tallied 40 points in his career while guarding the defensive zone.

There is no lack of talent on the team. The players joke about getting offers from the Manitoba Moosemen and being scouted by the Colorado Avalanche. Dan "The Man" Shiwarski '09 has been called "one of the greatest players to ever put on a sweater" by NHL player Darius Kasparitis.

But there is talent and leadership present on th team. The fresman class has brought much-needed experience, as two first-year players won high school national championships. Everyone noted the leadership of DuPont, a strong two-way defensemen who has tallied 40 points from his position in his career while guarding the defensive zone.

"I have played the sport nearly my entire life and will miss the fast-paced action that drew me to the sport. I'm sure I'll play in a men's league, but it won't be the same," Pron said. "This is the reason that the majority of our team is trying to resurrect the program. We want one last chance to play competitive hockey. Next year, we'll get it."

The team will get a glorious site for its last game this season, against Alvernia College, a team they will face next year: the Sovereign Center in Reading, Pa. a 7,000 seat stadium

Whatever has happened since its inception in 1977, the team has more than equaled it this year.

When asked about this game, Richard Thornburgh '10 said it would be a "moral and spiritual victory for the entire campus," regardless of whether they bring home a SVMHL Championship, which will be remembered as the rebirth of the University's ice hockey team.

Bucknellian Archives

Jennifer James '07 prepares to the throw the ball in a game last season. The Bison will travel to Baltimore County, Md. to take on UMBC Dawg Pound at 12:30 p.m.

Softball drops three at Elon Classic

By Jake Meyers
Contributing Writer

The softball team went 1-3 at the Elon Classic in N.C., dropping Norfolk State 6-1, but falling to UNC Greensboro 5-0, St. Francis (Pa.) 6-5, and Elon 5-1.

The weekend brought the team's record to 2-6 overall, but the losing record does not discourage Team Captain Monica Grinage '07.

"[We] are a better team than what our record shows," Grinage said.

In the first game of the tournament, the Bison faced Norfolk State. Katie McDonald '09 posted her first complete game in just her third career start. McDonald filled up the stat sheet with four strikeouts and just two walks.

The Bison struggled offensively for the first two innings, but picked up in the third, scoring two runs. During the fourth inning, the Bison caught fire, racking up four more runs to solidify the win. Eight different Bison recorded hits in the game, with the first seven in the hitting lineup all racking in at least one hit apiece.

"We're in a really good position as a team," Shelly McCormack '10 said. " We have a young infield but this team has a lot of experience overall."

After the Norfolk victory, the Bison lost 6-0 to a tough UNC Greensboro team. Christie Wiest '08 battled with the veteran squad for six innings, allowing only one run and four hits. Offensively, the Bison showed some fatigue in their second game of the day, getting only three hits and no runs off of UNC Greensboro's pitcher Amber Harrell.

The third game of the tournament was a heart-wrenching 5-6 loss against St. Francis. The game was tied at the end of regulation and went into three extra innings with the game tied 3-3. While the Bison added three runs in the top of the 10th, St. Francis surpassed the Orange and Blue with three runs of their own.

The tough loss was softened by two highlights. The first was Lauren Litts' '07 record-breaking home run at the top of the 10th. Her grand total of 18 career dingers makes her the Bison career leader, edging Lauren Wible '05.

"She is an amazing hitter," Grinage said. "Litts has a lot of power and is a great asset to our team. Her breaking of the HR record is awesome and she is deserving of it."

The second highlight was an outstanding catch by Ashley Carlson '09. The outfielder, showing a complete disregard for her own safety, ran directly into the fence to catch a long fly ball. The athletic play brought the crowd to its feet.

A 5-1 loss to Elon ended the Bison's road trip. A string of hits, topped off by an RBI from Litts put the Bison ahead early, giving them a 1-0 lead. Despite strong hitting, including a double in the second by Sherry Finkel '10, the Bison were unable to drive runs home. Elon came back with a run of their own in the bottom of the second, and would pull away for good off of seven hits and five RBIs.

The team will hit the field again at the UMBC Dawg Pound Tournament at 12:30 p.m. today in Baltimore County, Md. in a highly-anticipated rematch against St. Francis.

TRACK From page B1

Kyle Anthony '10 had an exceptional first-year outing at the IC4A championship. Anthony placed third in the long jump, spanning a distance of 23-4 3/4. In the triple jump, Anthony took seventh place in 47-10 1/2.

"We are a much improved team from previous years and performances this weekend just go to show that," David Mante '08 said.

Mante took eighth place in the pole vault, clearing a height of 15-5. He posted a personal best in the event and fourth in school history. In the mile run, Wallace Campbell '08 crossed the finish line in 4:16.23 to take 10th overall.

"It was a fantastic weekend for both programs," Donner said. "It is the first time that I have had a team finish in the top 10, and for both programs to do so is a great reflection of our athletes and coaches. There are over 90 teams in the league."

Grap, Buczko and Hoffman have all posted NCAA provisional marks in their respective events and are waiting to hear if they qualified for the national meet.

Kevin Donner, the head men's and women's track and field coach, was named the 2007 NCAA Division I Women's Indoor Track and Field Mid-Atlantic Regional Coach of the Year for the second straight season by the U.S. Track and Field and Cross Country Coaches Association.

All or Nothing

A trip to the NCAA Tournament is on the line as the Bison once again battle Holy Cross

PREVIEW From page A1

This is the sixth consecutive year that the Crusaders (24-8) and the Bison (22-8) will meet in the Patriot League Tournament, and the third consecutive year that the two basketball titans will meet in the league's championship game. The Bison hope that they will again get to cut down the nets.

The Orange and Blue defeated Holy Cross at Worcester, Mass. 61-57 for the title in 2005, and completed their perfect run through the conference with a 74-59 championship win at Sojka Pavilion in 2006. Will this year be different?

The two teams are very evenly matched, as evidenced by the two games played between them this year. The Crusaders defeated the Bison at the Hart Center in Worcester, Mass. 65-60 on Jan. 12. Since then, the Orange and Blue have won 14 consecutive games, including a nail-biting 48-45 win against Holy Cross at Sojka Pavilion on Feb. 9.

The Bison enter today's contest having won its last eight tournament games and six consecutive road games, while Holy Cross has won 17 straight home games dating back to last season (that loss was to the Orange and Blue, 57-52, on Feb. 11).

The Bison have a dominant big man in Chris McNaughton '07, who averages 12.0 points and 6.0 rebounds per game, while the Crusaders have a behemoth of their own with Tim Clifford (11.9 ppg, 4.8 rpg). They have arguably been the top-two players in the tournament through the quarterfinal and semifinal rounds.

Keith Simmons, the Patriot League Player of the Year, leads Holy Cross in scoring (league-high 17.8 ppg) and rebounding (5.8 rpg), while Donald Brown '07 fills that role for the Bison, averaging 12.1 points and a league-high 6.8 rebounds per game.

The matchup at point guard features 2007 Patriot League Defensive Player of the Year Torey Thomas versus 2005 Defensive Player of the Year, Abe Badmus '07. Both players use their speed extremely well, whether hounding a player on defense or driving to the basket on offense.

> "We can bring Sojka up to Worcester and make that our home on Friday."
> —Abe Badmus '07

Alex Vander Baan for Holy Cross is a tough forward who can also shoot some from the outside, averaging 5.1 rebounds per game, while Darren Mastropaolo '08 is the strong defensive inside presence for the Bison.

John Griffin '08, Jason Vegotsky '09 and Justin Castleberry '09 have combined with Badmus to form an excellent guard rotation. Griffin excels as a ball-handler and a clutch shooter, Vegotsky brings his three-point stroke and Castleberry shows a strong ability to drive to the basket.

Stephen Tyree '10 is expected to see important minutes for the Bison as a defensive stopper, (look for him to spend some time guarding Simmons along with Badmus) and supplying high-energy play off the bench. Patrick Behan '10 and Rob Thomas '08 could also see critical minutes for the Orange and Blue.

Kyle Cruze draws the final starting slot for the Crusaders, but it is guard Pat Doherty who receives the bulk of the playing time. Doherty gives Holy Cross a solid ball-handler to complement Thomas on the floor, much in the way that Badmus and Griffin work together. Eric Meister is the Crusaders' high-energy player and is not afraid to mix it up with the big boys on the inside. Colin Cunningham and Greg McCarthy round out the rotation for Holy Cross, but it is clear that the Crusaders do not use their bench as much as the Bison.

The teams have faced each other so many times over the past few seasons, that there should be no surprises for each other when it comes to offensive plays or defensive schemes. The game will come down to how well each team is able to execute its attack, while limiting turnovers and taking advantage of mistakes made by the opponent.

The Bison are expected to have a strong fan presence at the Hart Center, hoping to neutralize the Crusaders' home court advantage. As Badmus said following the Orange and Blue's semifinal win over Army on Sunday, "We can bring Sojka up to Worcester, and make that our home on Friday."

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Darren Mastropalo '08 stretches over two players from Navy at Sojka Pavilion. Mastropalo averages 5.9 points and 4.1 rebounds per game, and has started the last nine games.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Stephen Tyree '10 slides past a Navy defenseman in their recent quarterfinal win. Tyree has made an immediate impact this season with his defensive ability.

SAYLOR From page B1

mitted 22.3 turnovers per game.

Then, suddenly, the same Bison team that had led the Raiders 27-0 when the teams met at Sojka Pavilion on Feb. 17, fell behind them 12-2 to start the quarterfinal match-up on Saturday. Everything that had happened up until that point no longer mattered.

It did not matter that the Orange and Blue were the one-seed and Colgate was the eight-seed, that the game was played on a neutral court at Annapolis, Md. and that it started at 11 a.m. in the morning (It did matter that I paid $6.95 plus tax to be able to watch the game, and others for the next month, on the league's Web site and found out that apparently I had agreed to pay this amount per month for the next 18 months–but that is a story for another time).

After much contemplation, I finally figured out what did matter–that this was a college basketball game. It was not the end of the world that the team lost. It was sad and unfortunate but not the be all and end all.

This group of students, ranging in ages from 17 to 22, played poorly and lost. This is no different from how some weeks I will not write well and make mistakes, or sometimes students will perform badly on a test. You just have to hope that there are more opportunities to improve upon what went wrong.

The women's basketball team is lucky in that regard. Due to its strong regular season, it will make a trip to the NIT and have one more chance to take the court and demonstrate its skills. As long as the Bison take advantage of this opportunity, playing with a sense of urgency and desire from start to finish, then the loss to Colgate will not be for naught.

Once we leave college, there will not always be these chances for redemption. We need to take advantage of them now while we are still in college and things that go wrong are not really yet the end of the world.

The Orange and Blue have a second chance. It is time to take it.

MLAX From page B1

first four contests but the stifling Bison defense held them to just six on Saturday. Sciubba recorded ten saves in his first career start.

Ohio State heated up early taking a 2-0 lead after two and a half minutes of play, but they would only score once more in the half. The Orange and Blue's offense seized the opportunity, as goals by Menzies and Winter tied the game and Brandau found the back of the net with just ten seconds left in the quarter to give the Bison a 3-2 advantage.

After the Buckeyes tied the game at 3-3, the Bison put together another 3-0 run to take the lead for good. Menzies and Brandau scored before halftime and Winter found Mele just over a minute into the second half to put the Bison up 6-3. Winter answered the next Buckeye goal with his second score and the Orange and Blue entered the fourth quarter leading 7-4.

Buckeye attack man Joel Dalgarno scored two quick goals to open the fourth and bring Ohio State within one with 12:31 remaining. As the Orange and Blue's offense stalled, the defense was relentless. Sciubba tallied four critical saves in the fourth quarter and the defense knocked the ball free in the final minute to preserve the win.

"To beat a large school like that is very exciting," said defenseman and co-captain Greg Sowyrda '07. "Their facilities are among the best in the country, they have Nike and Warrior contracts and scholarships. We are without scholarships and buy a lot of our own gear, but we know it's about who wants it more on that particular day."

The Bison will try to make it 5-0 on Saturday when they take the field at 1 p.m at Mount St. Mary's in Emmitsburg, Md.

WEEKEND SCHEDULE

Friday

MEN'S BASKETBALL - Holy Cross, 4:30 p.m., Worcester, Mass.
SOFTBALL - St. Francis Pa, 1 p.m., Baltimore, Md.
MEN'S TRACK & FIELD - NCAA Championship, 12 p.m., Fayetteville, Ark.
WOMEN TRACK & FIELD - NCAA Championship, 12 p.m., Fayetteville, Ark.
WOMEN'S WATER POLO - Princeton, 8:00 p.m., Princeton, N.J.

Saturday

SOFTBALL - Howard, 11 p.m., Baltimore, Md ; UMBC, 1 p.m., Baltimore, Md.
WOMEN'S TRACK & FIELD - NCAA Championship, 2 p.m., Fayetteville, Ark.
MEN'S TRACK & FIELD - NCAA Championship, 2 p.m., Fayetteville, Ark.
MEN'S LACROSSE - Mount St Marys, 1 p.m., Emmitsburg, Md.
ROWING- Alabama, 9 a.m., Elberton, Ga.
WOMEN'S WATER POLO - Maryland, 12:00 p.m., Princeton, N.J.

Sunday

SOFTBALL - UMBC Tournamnt, TBA, Baltimore, Md.

Attention!

Clubs, Organizations, Academic Departments, Fraternities and Sororities, Student Entrepreneurs:

Greek Organizations: Looking to promote your upcoming philanthropy event?
Clubs: Trying to publicize new developments or recently received commendations?
Organizations: Hoping to increase membership via a new recruiting medium?
Student Entrepreneurs: Seeking a simple way to stimulate your business?

The Bucknellian currently circulates almost [illegible] copies per week, distributed to on-campus hubs, off-campus businesses, and over 1,000 subscri[illegible]holds nationwide. Few other platforms have the capability and level of efficiency that advertising your message in The Bucknellian provides.

With a new, low rate of only $3.50 per column-inch, it is now cheaper to reserve ad space in the recent Columbia Scholastic Press Association Gold Medal Recipient's weekly publication.

In order to place an ad, contact The Bucknellian Advertising Department by calling 570-577-1085 or e-mailing bucknellianads@bucknell.edu and an advertising manager will be happy to assist you.

A MATCH MADE IN HEAVEN

THIS MVP IS NEVER WITHOUT HIS MVP.

PATRIOT LEAGUE MOST VALUABLE PLAYER CHARLES LEE &
BUCKNELL'S MOST VALUABLE PAPER, THE BUCKNELLIAN

Take a time out once a week and go one-on-one with The Bucknellian to stay up to date with all of the action happening on campus.

Enclose this form and a check (made out to The Bucknellian) and mail it to:

The Bucknellian, Bucknell University C3952, 701 Moore Avenue, Lewisburg, PA 17837

Name _____ — ONE SEMESTER: receive 12 issues during the fall or spring semester for $30. Please specify semester: _____

Address _____

_____

Phone _____

E-mail _____

For more information, contact The Bucknellian at 570-577-1520 or 570-577-1085 or e-mail bucknellian@bucknell.edu.

Meg's mix: songs for a broken heart

By Megan McWhinney
Writer

When I was going through my music making a playlist for a Valentine's Day party, I realized that there is an abundance of great breakup songs. I'm not the type to have a breakup playlist on hand for when I want to wallow in self-pity, but, judging by the endless stream of lists in iTunes, some people out there do.

In the midst of a truly gut-wrenching, hate-the-other-person-forever, set-pictures-on-fire breakup, we go from sadness to anger to acceptance. I've picked some songs that run the gamut of those emotions.

Now, I'm not an "emo" fan. Truth be told, I'd never even heard emo before coming to college, when my roommate gave me a crash course in whiny, angst-driven suburban music. I have concluded that these boys have spent the majority of their conscious lives having just been dumped. The remainder of their time is spent hashing out unresolved (and very aggressive) feelings about the girl who broke their heart that week. That said, I had to include some of the quintessential emo songs on the list and asked some of my girlfriends for help finding the best of them.

Just don't quote the songs on your away message when you get into a fight with your significant other. It might be tempting, but, seriously. You just quoted a malnourished white dude with greasy hair wearing skinny jeans. That was the best way you could express yourself? There are better options than letting your entire buddy list know your butt got dumped. Snuggle up in bed, grab some ice cream, watch some Lifetime, punch a wall or just listen to the music … whatever gets you through the heartbreak.

1. "Walk Away"—Ben Harper

An absolutely heartbreaking song. Only the live version will do—his voice is so filled with emotion and the lyrics are dead-on. "They say time will make all this go away / But it's time that has taken my tomorrows / And turned them into yesterdays."

In the midst of a truly gut-wrenching, hate-the-other-person-forever, set-pictures-on-fire breakup, we go from sadness to anger to acceptance. I've picked some songs that run the gamut of those emotions.

2. "Dammit"—Blink 182

I loved this song so much in grade school I don't even think I realized it was about a breakup.

3. "Okay I Believe You But My Tommy Gun Don't"—Brand New

Part of my first-year indoctrination into the world of emo. "Every line is about who I don't wanna write about anymore." Isn't that exactly how it feels when you're going though a breakup?

4. "All By Myself"—Celine Dion

This is for when you want to wallow in self-pity in a dark room with several empty pints of Ben and Jerry's and your favorite sweatpants. You know you've been there.

5. "Screaming Infidelities"—Dashboard Confessional

The quintessential emo breakup song.

6. "Last Thing"—Diana Anaid

A bit of a girl power song for ladies going through an "I'm better off without him" phase. Sure you are, sweetie.

7. "Sleep To Dream" –Fiona Apple

Yeesh. I hope I never make anyone so angry they write something like this about me. The lyrics are seething with furor; it sounds like it was written in one sitting because she couldn't find the guy to strangle him.

8. "I'm Gonna Find Another You"—John Mayer

A beautiful, bluesy song. If only these were played on the radio …

9. "Cry Me A River"—Justin Timberlake

I love pointed songs, the ones where you know exactly who they're about. Such a sinister song by Timberlake, who I think can do no wrong. Another example of why you shouldn't mess with someone with a record deal.

10. "Don't Speak"—No Doubt

I remember hearing this song in sixth grade, having never been in a relationship, but knowing exactly what she was talking about. Good songwriting can teach an 11-year-old what heartbreak is …

11. "Since U Been Gone"—Kelly Clarkson

Yeah, yeah, I know. Easy, obvious, whatever. Play it and like totally ohmygod get that stupid boy out of your system. Obvi. But do you have to sing along? Who sings this song? Kelly … and let's keep it that way.

12. "Music When the Lights Go Out"—The Libertines

Another lyrically wonderful song from a different angle. The person doing the breaking-up expresses remorse for hurting his significant other very eloquently. And here I thought Pete Doherty could only express his desire for more coke.

13. "It Hurt So Bad"—Susan Tedeschi

Another bluesy song from a woman nominated for the Best New Artist Grammy the same year as Britney Spears and Christina Aguilera. Her voice is absolutely out of this world. You can feel the heartbreak when she belts it out.

14. "Konstantine"—Something Corporate

Forgive me, I had to put in another emo song. I actually think this song is very pretty. I have respect for someone who composed a piano part in a genre that tends to be pretty poppy.

15. "I Will Survive"—Cake

Sure, you could belt out the Gloria Gaynor version. But this one has curse words in it, and those are crucial to any breakup.

By Ana Fullmer
Writer

It's official. The adoption process for the next world's luckiest orphan from a developing nation is in full swing. On Friday, the Associated Press reported that Angelina Jolie filed for eligibility to adopt a baby from Vietnam. Sources say that the process began shortly after the birth of nine-month-old Shiloh Jolie-Pitt, the third addition to the Jolie-Pitt family. Don't head to Weis for your celebratory alcohol-free champagne just yet, though. As a source explained to People.com, the Vietnamese adoption process is one of the most exhaustive in the world, requiring loads of paperwork as well as several interviews. Pitt once told an interviewer that he would like to have enough kids to start his own soccer team. When this adoption is finalized, the family will be inching close to halfway there. That's nice and all, but here at Another Bubble we are into instant gratification. In the time it takes for the couple to adopt the Vietnamese child, they could simultaneously make one the old-fashioned way and have themselves a bona-fide basketball team. They could be "Human Rights Hoopsters" or "Brangelina Ballers"—maybe even the "UN Globe-toddlers."

Speaking of sports, David Beckham suffered an injury to a ligament on his right knee during a Spanish League game against Gatefe on Sunday, reports Forbes.com. The soccer star could miss up to two months on the field, and his Real Madrid coach was quoted as saying that the injury was serious. Apparently "being really, really ridiculously good looking" won't stop you from getting your knee torn up any more than it gets you foreign babies on demand. Well, if Becks is bored during his rehabilitation, he could always kill time by doing drugs and dissing U.S. cities with Sienna Miller!

On Saturday, the UK's Guardian newspaper released an interview with the British actress in which she dished on her relationship with the press and her views on recreational drug use. On the topic of why she is always in trouble with the media she said, "Having met me, you'll realize these things just come out. I think it might be mild Tourette's, not to insult people who have proper Tourette's, but I will say the most inappropriate things at the most inappropriate time to the most inappropriate person. Always. Guaranteed." This comment stems from the recent incident where Miller bashed the town of Pittsburgh to Rolling Stone Magazine and re-named it Sh*tsburgh, following which she had to issue a public apology to the mayor and the city. Sienna should just keep apologizing. She admitted to one time filling a "supersquirter with pee and squirt[ing] it at them [the paparazzi]." Charming. Later in the interview, discussing her recent portrayal of heroin-user Edie Sedgewick in the film "Factory Girl," the actress was asked why she thought people experimented with drugs, to which she said, "Cos they're fun! Cos they're f*ckloads of fun! No, don't write that. I always end up putting my big fat foot in it."

Bad boys … who doesn't love them? The Alcohol Law Enforcement Division of the State of North Carolina, that's who! TMZ.com reports that former "Laguna Beach" cast member Jason Wahler was arrested on Saturday and taken to Pitt County Jail on charges that he "resisted a public officer" during an underage drinking bust at a local club. To make matters worse, the reality television star allegedly was extremely uncooperative and hurled insults and obscenities the entire time he was being booked. Any "Laguna" fans won't be surprised at Wahler's lack of self control, since he was often untrustworthy and anything but faithful to his lady friends during his time on the show. This is Wahler's third run-in with the police. In September he was arrested for misdemeanor battery in Los Angeles, three weeks after he was sentenced for disorderly conduct in New York City.

"Laguna Beach" kids aren't the only reality TV stars making news this week. According to the New York Post, rumor has it that everyone's favorite geriatric booby fanatic, Hugh Hefner, is making plans to marry his No. 1 girlfriend, 26-year-old Holly Madison. The pair stars in the E! series "The Girls Next Door" about the Playboy Magazine founder and his three girlfriends: Holly, Kendra and Bridget. No word on whether he plans to keep the other two busty blondes around. This would be Hefner's third marriage, and he is reportedly trying to keep wedding plans secret because monogamy could ruin his show. Interesting … monogamy ruined my Saturday night, too.

Red Smoked BBQ!
Beef Brisket, Pork, Chicken, Ribs!
Sandwiches, Wraps, Salads, Platters!
NO RESERVATIONS NEEDED
Call in for TAKEOUT!
SKEETERS PIT BBQ
ON THE BLUFF
OVERLOOKING THE SCENIC SUSQUEHANNA RIVER
AT THE INTERSECTION OF ROUTES 11 & 15
SHAMOKIN DAM
570.743.2727
Daily 11:00am - 10:00pm
Sundays till 9:00pm
www.SkeetersBBQ.com

BROOKPARK STATION Cafe
"Casual dining with a gourmet flair"
Fresh Sushi & Vegetarian Items
Catering & Takeout Platters
Book Your Graduation Party!
B.Y.O.B.
Wireless Internet
Mon Sat 8:00 - 8:00 Sun 8:00 - 2:00
1 MILE WEST OF TOWN ON RT. 45
542-FOOD (3663)

DOES YOUR CAR NEED SERVICED?
Our Service Department has $25,000 in new upgrades, including a new alignment rack, brake lathe, tire machine, and hundreds of hours of training for the techs. We now offer shuttle service to and from work or home. We have become a complete service center that can perform any work on any model, from an oil change to engine replacement.
Lewisburg Ford Oil Change w/Multi-Point Inspection $19.95 Excludes Diesels. Must present coupon at time of service. Expires 12/31/06
Lewisburg Ford Oil Change/Tire Rotation w/Multi-Point Inspection $34.95 Must present coupon at time of service. Expires 12/31/06
Lewisburg Ford
2265 Old Turnpike Rd. (Route 45 West)
Across From Brookpark Farm
Call Today! (570) 524-7267
Visit us on the web at www.lewisburgford.com

"Turn your Power ON and Add LIFE to your Years!"
MORRISON'S ADVANCED CHIROPRACTIC CARE
Michael D. Morrison D.C.
1205 W Market Street
Lewisburg, PA 17837
Office: 570-523-1221
A Healthy Spine Equals a Healthy YOU!
Bucknell Students may receive a free exam and x-rays (if needed) with mention of this advertisement.

COLDWELL BANKER
PENN ONE REAL ESTATE
Thank You, Bucknell!!
For thirty years of calling Bucknell and Lewisburg home.
Susan Warner-Mills, Sales Associate
Competence, Integrity, Service
524-7500; swm@coldwellbanker.com

Igniting Creative Ideas
On Fire Promotions
by trautman associates, inc.
promotional products · fundraising items
embroidered & screenprinted caps & apparel
awards · trophies · business gifts
800-538-8009
Lewisburg Showroom 434 Market 570-522-8005
www.onfirepromotions.com
Bring in this ad for one FREE SCREEN!!!
GOOD ON ANY APPAREL ORDER
(minimum 36 pieces)

By Matthew Saylor
Associate Editor of Content

"Lost"—"Par Avion," the episode scheduled to air on March 14, will center on Claire. This hour will focus on her youth and answer the question (yes, the show will actually answer a question) of whether or not she is Jack's half-sister. (Hint: John Terry, the actor who plays Christian Shephard, Jack's father, is scheduled to appear in the episode.)

The following week's installment will be another Locke flashback. Producers of the show have insinuated that this season will reveal why Locke was in a wheelchair, and this may be the episode where that takes place.

Jack plays a part in both of these episodes, and even appears to be getting along with the Others in the second one. The show will end March with an episode that explores the presence of Nikki and Paulo on the island. Tune in to find out if a reason is given for their existence that will make fans care.

"Scrubs"—March episodes will contain some important moments for the show as it passes the halfway-point of its sixth season. On Thursday, Dr. Cox will once again go toe-to-toe with Elliot regarding whether or not a patient is being truthful. Doesn't it seem like the show airs one of these episodes every year? Also, J.D. and Turk try to do a nice thing for a patient, but it involves bending some rules.

The following week, we will meet the nanny that Turk and Carla have hired for Isabelle. Of course J.D. is attracted to her, but is she really what she seems?

This episode, "My No Good Reason," will also begin the two-episode story regarding the death of a member of the Sacred Heart staff. The character will become ill in this episode, and his or her fate will be decided the following week.

For all of those fans concerned that this could be the show's final season, fear not. NBC is expected to pick up the show for a seventh season, and if it does not, then ABC has expressed willingness to do so. The entire cast had signed seven-year contracts (the standard contract length) at the start of the series, except for Zach Braff, who signed for six years.

The Hollywood Reporter published an article on Tuesday stating that Braff has reached an agreement, contingent on the show continuing, to come back for another season at the hefty price of approximately $350,000 per episode. This would make Braff one of the highest-paid actors on television, along with the likes of Charlie Sheen of "Two and a Half Men." If the show is renewed for the 2007-08 season, it willalmost certainly be the final year of the quirky medical comedy that developed a small but loyal following.

"24"—The show has been slumping a bit over the last few episodes, but the return of some familiar faces and the introduction of new ones could infuse energy into the storytelling.

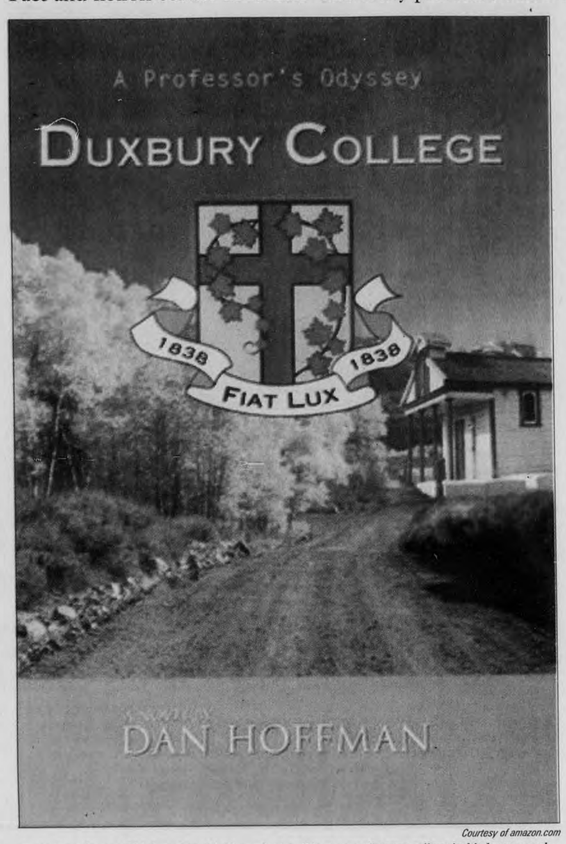
Monday will feature the return of former First Lady Martha Logan, as well as Secret Service man Aaron Pierce. A romance was hinted at between the two during Day 5, and we might see some answers about that in Day 6.

The plot involving the assassination attempt of President Palmer will continue to run its course. Was Vice President Daniels involved? It sure seems possible.

Also, Mike Doyle will be introduced in the March 12 episode, played by Rick Schroeder. Expect him to team up with Jack.

Novel has its roots in the University

Fact and fiction collide in former University professor's novel about a teacher



Courtesy of amazon.com

Retired professor of biology Dan Hoffman depicts life at a small-town college in his latest novel, Duxbury College. Although some of the characters and settings are figments of Hoffman's imagination, he includes aspects of the University that will be familiar to students and staff.

By Kimberly Kane
Senior Writer

❖ Book Review

Former biology professor Dan Hoffman's new novel, Duxbury College, is a winding story of a professor at a small liberal arts college nestled in the snowy mountains of the East Coast. If the setting sounds familiar, that is because the fictitious college is based on the University and the story is, in part, based on Hoffman's experiences at the University.

Duxbury College chronicles the long life of biology professor Dan Tomlinson, a graduate of Berkley and Northwestern University. The novel begins with the chance encounter that brings Dan to Duxbury College: a visit to his doctoral advisor Larry Soloman. Larry just happens to have received a notice of positions available at Duxbury.

He tells Dan, "It's a small liberal arts school back East, probably no facilities for research and large teaching loads. Look it over. You might get a laugh out of it."

Dan seizes the opportunity to venture to the East Coast and apply to work at Duxbury College.

The first glimpse of the college is undoubtedly a description of the University's campus.

It is hard to distinguish between Dan the writer and Dan the character when he writes, "As we finally approached the campus, I could see its centerpiece, the white steeple of a white framed large chapel. The dominant architectural style was red Georgian brick with white columned porticos. For me it was love at first sight."

Dan meets with multiple professors of the biology department, many of whom are based on his real-life colleagues, but since the story begins in the early 1970s the professors may be unrecognizable to current University students.

Hoffman includes other details about the campus that University students will recognize, including the descriptions of Victorian houses in the college town and the Perkins restaurant nearby. Professor Dan Tomlinson also observes the freshmen students moving in, noting, "We started to see a convoy of late model automobiles, mostly Cadillacs, Lincolns, Mercedes and pricey BMWs driving through the campus." Duxbury College also holds the University tradition of first-year students lining the quad and lighting candles while singing the alma mater.

Duxbury College does not revolve around a single plot but rather recalls many small, often tragic events in Dan Tomlinson's life. While visiting the Virgin Islands with another professor, Bruce Wilson, to establish a marine biology course for Duxbury students, Wilson mysteriously disappears during a diving expedition. Just a few months later, Dan loses his first wife, Grace, as she dies giving birth to their twin sons, who also do not survive. A few years later, he marries a woman named Marcia, whom he meets while on sabbatical in California, and she returns with him to Duxbury to eventually become the vice president of finance.

Together, Dan and Marcia form a family, having three children while sadly seeing their own parents pass away. Dan has a secret that he keeps from Marcia: after a one-night stand with his roommate and a girlfriend in graduate school, the woman gives birth to twins, one of whom is Dan's child. While this seems unbelievable, it is possible, though extremely rare. As he nears retirement, Dan finally gets the chance to meet his estranged child and share his secret with Marcia.

Much of the novel takes place away from the title school and in the tropical islands where Dan first loses his colleague, Bruce. The book lovingly describes the beauty of the islands in detail, from the small dive shops that line the coast to the way the ocean looks during Dan's late night skinny-dipping adventures.

A few years after Bruce's death, Dan is finally able to return to the Virgin Islands to teach the course they originally wanted to design. His course turns out to be very successful, and he ends up taking large groups of students as well as his extended family to the Virgin Islands. The trips exemplify the close bonds that students and professors can develop during the college years, especially at a university such as Bucknell.

Hoffman's background as a biology professor is evident in Dan's description of his life. Throughout the novel, no matter where he is, the main character always mentions his studies. Dan describes his various courses, as well as the subject matter the students handle. During his sabbatical, Dan collects and analyzes barnacles from the California coast, and during his time in the islands, he writes about the marine life he encounters.

Hoffman is an emeritus professor of biology, along with other such esteemed professors as Gary Sojka and Richard Ellis.

Hoffman received his Ph.D from the University of Washington and currently has an on-going research project at the Duke University Marine Laboratory. He has authored two other novels, La Salle County and Eddie's Quest.

Guess that professor:

Because most of the characters in Dan Hoffman's novel are based wholly or in part on his former colleagues at the University, many of his descriptions and dialogues should be familiar to members of the campus community. The following quotations are taken directly from Duxbury College, and are spoken by characters who resemble University professors. Can you guess whom the professors are?

Harriet Velasquez

"Vertebrate morphologist in the department so I teach the gamut of courses running from development morphology, or as it used to be called, embryology; plus chordate anatomy and finally vertebrate histology … you (Professor Tomlinson) will be collaborating with me in a new freshmen course, the first in a sequence of four biology core courses called Developmental Biology, or Biology 250."

Nancy Norbert

"Nancy's research centered on the cytology and development of Sertoli cells, part of the cellular component of the male testis. She was busy setting up her colony of rats that she had brought with her from SUNY Geneseo. Nancy had received her degree from Purdue University the year before me and had been a postdoctoral fellow at Geneseo before coming to Duxbury. Nancy was of medium build, blond hair cut short. She had a warm and friendly personality … She was originally from Minnesota and loved the countryside."

John Hrovat

"Our new Drosophila geneticist, who was hired the previous spring. He had just completed his doctorate down at Duke. I was expecting to meet a son of the Deep South, but was pleasantly surprised to find that John was a Canadian, who hailed from the small town on Vancouver Island. He was a tall, handsome fellow with curly dark hair. He told me that his family had originally come from Croatia. John had his work cut out for him, since he was scheduled to teach an upper division course in genetics."

Roger Williams

"The dean of the college was named Roger Williams, a good New England family name. He was impeccably attired in a dark blue suit with a red tie complementing his pinstriped red and white shirt. He appeared to be in his early fifties, with silver hair, slicked back with pomade. He was dedicated to running and loved film noir."

The Bucknellian

March 30, 2007

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

Volume 139, Number 8 | Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue | www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

The secret garden

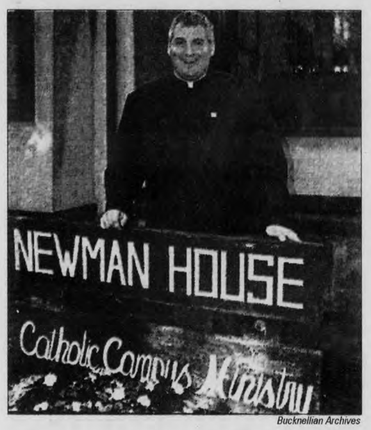
Features examines some old history and new blooms at the University's often-forgotten greenhouse.

See page A10

Father Marty departs University after 9 years

University's priest receives national promotion to executive director of Catholic Campus Ministry Association

September 3, 1998



Bucknellian Archives

By Rachel Freeman
Contributing Writer

Father Martin Moran III, Catholic chaplain, has been named executive director of the Catholic Campus Ministry Association (CCMA), where he will begin on June 1. In his new role, based in Cincinnati, Ohio, Moran will oversee more than 1,800 Catholic Campus ministries all over the United States.

In the first 10 hours after a campus-wide announcement of his departure, Moran received over 230 e-mails from people in the community, wishing him well and thanking him for everything he has done for this community.

Moran admits that while he is excited about his new position, he will miss many things about the University.

"Bucknell is my number one love. I will miss the students, the professionalism of Bucknell, and the community, both Bucknell's community and the greater Lewisburg community," he said.

Moran began his tenure at the University in 1998, and was appointed by the Bishop of the Catholic Diocese of Harrisburg. When Moran came to the University he recalls there being only 30 to 40 students in the Catholic Campus Ministry (CCM).

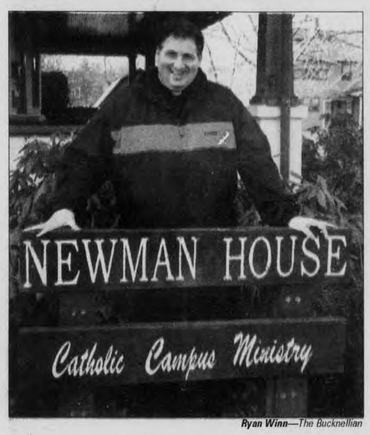
Moran credits University Chaplain Ian Oliver for helping him increase involvement in religious life on campus. CCM now has over 1,000 members.

"The first thing is to realize that some students will just want to go to mass. The second is that some students want to be more involved, so they can be a part of the Ministry team. The third is the Thursday night dinners and the fourth is being able to guide those students who may question their religious faith," Moran said.

This philosophy helped him create the motto of "Faith, Food,

See MORAN page A4

March 30, 2007



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Public Safety prepares for House Party

Safety training session is among new measures offered to students

By Kelly McGaw
Contributing Writer

Public Safety Director Jason Friedberg is preparing for his first House Party Weekend, which begins today. He placed a strong emphasis on organization and safety.

House Party has become such a customary campus event that it has essentially been put on autopilot, while the process and preparation have gone unquestioned. This acceptance of "the way it has always been" has caused crucial aspects of safety planning to slip through the cracks Friedberg said.

Friedberg has taken this opportunity to revamp the process.

"I've never been a, 'This is always how it's been' kind of guy," he said.

Friedberg created an organizational flow chart that outlined every aspect of the weekend, including pre-event planning, attendance, medical alert systems, alcohol, staffing, pre-party checks and environmental management.

House Party pre-event planning included the Inter-Fraternity Council's (IFC) Event Management training session, which occurred Tuesday evening.

The training session offered tips to students on being responsible "social hosts," covering such topics as avoiding liability issues (which can have extreme repercussions), tips for recognizing false IDs, conflict management and door-monitoring policies.

President of IFC David Quinn '08 recognizes the difference between House Party and any other weekend.

"From our end there is a lot more liability because we are opening our houses to almost anybody; there's a lot more on our shoulders, so we'll have to be extra vigilant," he said.

> "I've never been a, 'This is always how it's been' kind of guy."
> —Jason Friedberg, director of Public Safety

Fraternities are tightening their risk management policies after rumors spread that officials from the Liquor Control Board may be monitoring House Party this year. Some houses may require students to show their BUID in order to gain entrance.

Friedberg expects his first House Party to run smoothly.

"I'm not worried about the students," he said.

What he is worried about is the portion of 5,000-plus attendees who are non-University students.

In contrast to a regular weekend, Public Safety will have all available officers on patrol. The number of patrol vehicles will be minimal, but officers will be walking around campus and will increase security in locations such as 7th Street Café and the Elaine Langone Center.

Friedberg recommends that students avoid any blatant violations if they do not want to attract the attention of Public Safety, Lewisburg Police or East Buffalo Township Police, whom he expects to be on patrol. Walking with an open container or acting in a disorderly or belligerent manner are two reasons an officer will stop a student.

In accordance with Public Safety's campaign for House Party safety, Bucknell Student Government (BSG) will be distributing a list of safety tips via e-mail.

BSG President Sarah Cummings '08 wants

See PARTY page A4

68 students cited by police

By Michelle Laxer
News Editor

Local police departments shut down an off-campus party early Sunday morning at a house occupied by University students, resulting in 68 alcohol-related citations.

It is the highest recorded number of citations given at a single event involving Universiuy students, said Public Safety Director Jason Friedberg.

Police responded to 54 S. Sixth St. at 1:27 a.m. Sunday for a disorderly gathering inside the residence, Lewisburg Police Department said. Officers surrounded the house and tried to identify students who had been drinking underage, conducting portable breath tests.

Alcohol and drug paraphernalia were found in the house, Public Safety said. One person was transported to Evangelical Hospital for an alcohol overdose.

The downtown party, outside of the jurisdiction of the Bucknell, had already been shut down by the time Public Safety was notified. When Public Safety officers arrived, they helped to secure the perimeter of the house and provided blow sticks for the Breathalyzers.

"My guys were there to provide the students with a venue and support," Friedberg said. "They also help to keep police action to an acceptable level."

Lewisburg Police Department also was assisted by Milton, East Buffalo and Mifflinburg police departments.

Public Safety made sure students would be able to make it back to campus safely.

Students given citations may face a fine of up to $300 for each offense.

Charges for furnishing alcohol to minors are pending, Lewisburg Police Department said.

New management college a possibility

By Kevin Petersen
Contributing Writer

The creation of a college of management was discussed at an open forum held Tuesday in the Langone Center Forum. The feasibility of creating the college, its impact on the University's existing colleges and its dedication to liberal arts were examined at the forum.

"The benefits to management majors would follow from greater notoriety, leadership and support provided by a college of management," said Doug Allen, associate professor of management. "The college of management would attract even better students and lure new faculty, further improving the educational experience for management majors."

According to an interim report by the Advisory Committee regarding the creation of a college of management, the college might also prove to be an effective rally point for school fundraising

See COLLEGE page A2

Chief of staff to work on Strategic Plan

Credentials of David Myers, new chief of staff

- Deputy Chief of Staff for Gov. Edward Rendell
- Director of Policy Development in the Office of the Minority Whip in the Pa. House of Representatives
- Positions with Hospital and Healthsystems Association of Pennsylvania, Department of Environmental Resources
- Special Assistant to the Governor
- Executive Director of the Senate Education Committee; Assistant Dean of Students at Rutgers College

By Nilanjana Saha
Features Editor

A new chief of staff was recently hired to supervise administrative operations of the president's office and help implement major University plans.

David Myers, a former deputy chief of staff for Gov. Edward Rendell, will take on his new role as chief starting April 2.

"Bucknell is a highly competitive institution, but in order to remain competitive there has to be an on-going commitment to developing the resources, building the facilities and raising the funds to continue to compete at that high level," Myers said in an e-mail interview.

Myers brings in 27 years of experience in policy development. After graduating from Cornell University, Myers attended Rutgers University for his doctorate. He later served as the director of policy development in the Office of Minority Whip in the Pennsylvania House of Representatives.

"My ambition was to work in higher education, but the job market for history Ph.D's wasn't very good, so I started my career working in government

See CHIEF page A2

INSIDE THIS ISSUE

OPINIONS
Something

A6

FEATURES
Approximately 34 candy-themed teams raised $72,000 for the Relay for Life walk on Sunday.

A9

A&E
"Zodiac," David Fincher's latest film, relays the harrowing tale of a real-life murder mystery.

B7

SPORTS
The women's crew team won the overall point cup for the first time Saturday.

B1

Public Safety Log

Wednesday, March 21

VEHICLE ACCIDENT - HIT & RUN—Phi Kappa Psi fraternity Parking Lot: Vehicle damaged by unknown person(s).

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Public Safety: Student transported to Evangelical hospital for medical treatment.

Thursday, March 22

THEFT—Langone Center: BU ID stolen.

Frida,y March 23

THEFT—Marts Hall: Theft and misuse of stolen BU ID card.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Vedder Circle: Student transported to Evangelical hospital for treatment.

Saturday March 24

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—McDonnell Hall: Student Health Services transported student to Evangelical Hospital.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Tustin: Student broke window and cut arm at Tustin Gym.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Kress Hall: Swastika drawn on stairwell wall with marker.

DRUG VIOLATION—Sojka Pavilion: Non-University student cited for drug possession.

DRUG VIOLATION—Sojka Pavilion: Student transported to Evangelical hospital. Charges pending.

HARASSMENT/VERBAL—Sojka Pavilion: Verbal confrontation between two males at concert.

Sunday, March 25

ASSIST OTHER AGENCY/POLICE—54 S. Sixth St.: Assist Lewisburg Police Department while they were shutting down a party.

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Larison Hall room 322: Students cited for underage consumption.

INSTITUTIONAL VANDALISM/CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Public Safety: Four-inch rock launched through office window.

PROPERTY DAMAGE—Moore Ave. Lot: Damage to grass from a vehicle.

ALARM-FIRE—Bucknell West Mod 29: Caused by air freshener.

ALARM-INTRUSION—Computer Center Room 204: Unknown Cause.

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Swartz Amphitheater: Student cited for underage consumption.

Monday, March 26

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Kress Hall: Student transported to Evangelical Hospital for medical treatment.

Tuesday, March 27

SUSPICIOUS CIRCUMSTANCE—Fieldhouse: Employee receiving suspicious notes and phone calls.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Larison Hall: Non-University student transported to Evangelical Hospital for treatment.

House Party Weekend

Line up of bands and entertainment

Chi Phi
Friday:
5-6 p.m. Pig Roast
7-11 p.m. French Donkey
Saturday:
6 p.m. BBQ
6-10 p.m. Forever Strange

DU and Theta Chi
Friday:
5:00 p.m. BBQ

KDR
Friday:
10-2 p.m. DJ
Saturday:
10-2 p.m. Giants of Science

Lambda
Friday:
10 p.m.-2 a.m. DJ Halo
Saturday:
1-5 p.m. Flowdown
10 p.m.-2 a.m. DJ James

Phi Psi
Friday:
10 p.m.-2 a.m. 80'z Enuff
Saturday:
2-6 p.m. Milf and Cookies

SAE
Saturday:
6-10 p.m. Giants of Science

SAM
Friday:
6-9 p.m. Fools and Horses

Sig Chi
Friday:
10 p.m.-2 a.m. DJ
Saturday:
10 p.m.-2 a.m. DJ

Sig Ep
Friday:
10 p.m.-2 a.m. Giants of Science
Saturday:
All day barbeque
DJ Slip N' Slide at night

TKE
Friday:
10 p.m.-2 a.m. DJ Duane
Saturday:
10 p.m.-2 a.m. Snackbar Jones

BRYNWOOD 535 Inc. Rentals
In Lewisburg Since 1969
Professional 24/7 Maintenance Staff
Your search begins..... and ends here.
Apartments (furnished & unfurnished)
Houses for professionals students families
Rental Garages Also Available
Office & Retail Space
300—3,000 sq ft
brynwoodrentals.com
611 Market Street, Lewisburg
ph: 570.524.2121 x 3

Recycle this newspaper!

ADVANCED SKIN CARE SPA & SALON
aesthetics and wellness medi-spa
115 Farley Circle- Suite 101
Lewisbug, PA 17837
524-4466
now offering two new services!
sunless tanning and body waxing
Bring this ad to your scheduled appointment to receive 10% off spray tanning or body waxing also offering facials, massage, manicures & pedicures, IPL hair removal, microdermabrasion, hair design, acrylic nails, etc.

Chief of staff position filled and politics," Myers said. "I continued to hope that at some point, I would have the opportunity to work at a college."

CHIEF From page A1

Myers will report to the president about progress in enforcing the strategic plan and developing a new master plan.

Myers said that one thing he hopes to improve is the outside appearance of the University. "I have always felt that the first approach from Route 15 does not present the most favorable impression of the University, but it is often the first impression that students and parents have of Bucknell," Myers said.

According to Myers, the implementation of the Plan for Bucknell will offer new ways to build new partnerships and promote economic development.

Myers said that his job will entail securing resources for the University as well as involving the local community in the process of carrying out the plans the University has in store.

Myers said that one thing he hopes to improve is the outside appearance of the University.

Myers was hired after a nationwide search to recruit candidates. To gain the job, Myers went through preliminary phone interviews and a day-long set of interviews with President Brian Mitchell, the senior staff, Martin Ligare, the chair of faculty, and students, Chief Communications Officer Pete Mackey said in an e-mail interview.

Myers plans to hold office hours for students and hire student interns for the office to improve communication between the student body and the senior staff.

"I have hired interns in virtually every job that I have had," Myers said.

New college of management is on the table and improve the national reputation of the management program at the University.

COLLEGE From page A1

There are concerns over how the college should be financed and whether a new school would be compatible with the University's mission statement and existing colleges.

"Efforts to bridge the perceived divide between management and the humanities are absolutely critical to any interest in promoting program integration," the report said. "There is some concern, paradoxical as it may seem, that the more successful a college of management may be (as judged by generally accepted standards in management education), the more such a program may serve to dwarf the presence of the University's liberal learning programs, especially the humanities."

Given these considerations, it is important that a College of Management is fully supported and integrated with the University's dedication to the liberal arts if it is to succeed, according to the report.

"The department of management has a strong history of teaching management as a liberal art, and it is this very commitment that would serve as the hallmark of Bucknell's college of management should it come to fruition," Allen said.

Allen said he was confident that a college of management could succeed if it were "cultivated, nurtured and supported continuously" as it is integrated into the University's existing colleges.

Students had their own speculations and suggestions for a possible school of management.

"If a separate college were created, it should still give students some background and have some W1 and W2 courses in the curriculum," Connor Dempsey '10 said.

The department of management is currently composed of approximately 17 full-time faculty, five part-time faculty and 530 undergraduate students. The size of the department is one aspect of the management program that would be unlikely to change.

"There is no plan to increase the proportionate size of the program. The plan is to increase program scope and quality," the report said.

The Committee on the Creation of a college of management was chartered by President Brian C. Mitchell at the beginning of the school year with the objective of "making a case for the formation of a school or college, identifying the principles upon which the new entity will be founded, and proposing an operating plan," according to the report.

The committee is now moving into the practical planning phase for creating the college. The college's circular plans, programming plans beyond the curriculum—such as career planning support and research opportunities—and organizational and financial plans will now be considered in detail.

Alumni-owned taxi service to premier at University in the fall

By Sara Roth
Contributing Writer

Bison Rides, an alumni-owned taxi service, will begin shuttling students around the local community beginning in the fall.

The Bison Rides service was intended to start this month, but due to procedural issues and the paperwork involved in the transfer of ownership and licenses, the Telos Partnership will wait until the fall semester to begin offering Bison Rides.

This program defines itself as "an on-call taxi service designed exclusively for the Bucknell Community."

Bison Rides is the brainchild of two University alumni, Paul Santomauro '07 and Braden Snyder '05. The two started a company called the Telos Partnership and, according to Santomauro, "signed a deal to acquire Aurora Taxi, Inc. at Danville, which holds exclusive taxi rights to Lewisburg, Danville, Watsontown and Milton."

This program has been advertised to run from 7 p.m. to 3 a.m. Wednesday through Saturday.

As of now, there are only two driving services available to the campus community. One is the regular Aurora Taxi service, which will still be available in addition to the Bison Rides program in the fall. Aurora Taxi offers a taxi service at the rate of $1.75 and an additional $1.75 per hour between the hours of 9 a.m. and 7 p.m. Monday through Saturday.

Public Safety's Safe Escort Program is also available to students. Unlike Aurora Taxi, this program is free. This program is much more limited in regards to student destinations.

Director of Public Safety Jason Friedberg said Safe Escorts will "only take [students] to houses. They will not take students to CVS and back, and will not pick students up from bars."

According to Friedberg, the Safe Escorts service was more of a "drunk escort" in its past, but now it is strictly a program that offers a safe escort for students needing a ride or a walking partner from the library to their residence or from dorm to dorm.

Although Bison Rides is not affiliated with Public Safety, Santomauro has consulted with Friedberg, administration officials, Lewisburg town council members and the Lewisburg borough manager.

"If students have an opportunity to find a way to get downtown without driving, then I support [this program]," Friedberg said.

Starting in September, Bison Rides will be offered from 7 p.m. to 3 a.m. Wednesday to Saturday. Two vans seating seven to eight people will be in service immediately. According to Santomauro, "we are ready to go to four cabs right away, depending on demand."

Students can either call for a Bison Ride or wait at one of the six zones around campus and downtown, where Bison Rides cabs will be located on alternating 15 minute blocks of time. For instance, at 15 to 30 minutes after the hour, every hour between 7 p.m. and 3 a.m., there will be cabs in between the Bull Run Inn and The Towne Tavern. Bison Rides have situated their zones to be located around the emergency blue lights for safety purposes.

Prices for Bison Rides will be the same as the rates for Aurora Taxi. Students will also be able to purchase cards worth $24 dollars of taxi service for the price of $20 either directly from a Bison Rides cab or a local participating business. Santomauro estimates that the price of a ride from "the library to downtown will be around $2.50."

Along with offering students a safe way to travel around campus and downtown, Bison Rides will also offer organized rides for groups wishing to go bowling or to restaurants not located downtown, such as Arizona's.

The drivers for Bison Rides will be certified in Training for Intervention Procedures (TIPS), meaning that they will be able to assess the level of intoxication of its passengers. Although the drivers will not be patrolling for underage drinking, they will "act responsibly if a dangerous situation occurs," Santomauro said.

Students overall tend to have a positive reaction to the idea of Bison Rides.

"I think that it's a good idea in general," Kathryn Brownstone '09 said. "But I don't think it's going to make a difference, because no one would pay to be driven from a downtown house to somewhere on campus."

Kristin Phalen '08, is less skeptical of students using this service.

"Kids will totally take taxis from the frat to downtown, especially in the winter. They are going to make so much money. My only concern is that Bucknell will start monitoring students using the taxi service, especially those under the age of 21 who may be intoxicated," she said.

Administration to hire interns

By Bronwen Durocher
Contributing Writer

The University is sponsoring an internship for students to work closely with officials in major projects and research, attending official meetings and acting as staff for senior administrators. This opportunity is offered to students who wish to see the nitty gritty details that go on behind the scenes and see how the University runs from an administrative standpoint.

The internship is for those who have great interest in the future of the University and who exemplify the ideals of the president and the senior staff. There are five offices hiring interns for the upcoming year: the Office of the President, Communications, Development and Alumni Relations and the Offices of External Relations and Enrollment, for a total of eight interns.

"I am very pleased that the University will sponsor broader internship opportunities for our students. The opportunity for Bucknell's best and brightest undergraduates to work closely with senior administrators will undoubtedly benefit the officials and the students. It is truly a win-win situation for all," President Brian C. Mitchell said.

The internship started two years ago as a rising senior e-mailed the president directly to ask for the position. During the past year, Mitchell, along with current interns Ben Portman '07 and Allison Faux '07, have worked to create this comprehensive internship in which students can learn about the administrative aspect of higher learning.

Faux and Portman said a typical work week includes about 10-15 hours in the office and some outside research. This year-long internship includes the responsibility of attending about two to three meetings a week with a staff member on ongoing projects. A past project was a lectureship series sponsored by Mitchell that was created with the hopes to draw large-name speakers. Interns have also become liaisons between the master planners and the student body, giving students input into development.

Faux and Portman are very pleased with their experience thus far as interns working with the senior staff.

"At this point in Bucknell's growth, it's one of the best times to be involved in Bucknell. It's an attractive position for a motivated student. What the president sees the school moving towards is very exciting," Faux said.

Aside from enjoying participating in the University's future, the internship is interesting because it allows students to accompany staff members to events and very often serve as tour guides to distinguished speakers and alumni.

From an administrative standpoint, interns learn to be professional, to communicate with senior members and also get leadership experience among the senior staff.

"I would not have thought about a career in higher education if it had not been for the internship program," Portman said. Now he thinks he may go into higher education consulting.

"Working in higher education is always a possibility for me now as I learn more and see what's going on," Faux said.

The benefit of interning at the University as opposed to another corporation is its superiority in terms of cohesiveness and effective management.

"Having had this position, I can say that the unity between stakeholders in the administration is unique to Bucknell. The willingness to cooperate and move towards a common goal is something many universities lack, and many corporations strive for," Portman said.

It seems the real benefit of an internship is getting to know officials on a personal level, as well as becoming immersed in an effective working environment.

Applications are now being reviewed for eight new interns to join the staff and serve and learn among the leaders of the University. Applications are due April 9 and will be highly competitive. The applications ask students who apply to display a sense of humor, loyalty, honesty, discretion, common sense, independence, motivation, work ethic and intellectual curiosity.

Courtesy of Dan Ostrofsky

Habitat for Humanity students travel down to Miami for a week of service. They helped renovate four homes, including landscaping and painting.

Students opt for alternative break

By Ahmed Kodouda
Writer

During Spring Break, not all University students went to popular tourist destinations, and some instead, opted to participate in many different ranging from a Civil Rights' trip to Memphis, Tennessee, to the Bucknell Brigade's trip to Nicaragua.

Alexandra Campbell-Ferrari '09 helped lead a group of students on the Annual Civil Rights trip in Memphis, Tennessee. The students toured the area and were exposed to important landmarks of the Civil Rights movement, including Slavehaven, a house thought to be a haven for slaves on their way to the North back in the mid-19th century," Campbell-Ferrari said.

All of the student participants were required to choose one out of three service learning sites: SlaveHaven, Meals on Wheels or Youth Villages.

"While in Memphis, we ate scrumptious ribs at Rendezvous, a famous restaurant, toured SlaveHaven, the Burkle Estate, the National Civil Rights Museum, The Lorraine Motel, and Graceland and enjoyed a night of music on Beale Street," said Campbell-Ferrari.

The group also were fortunate to speak with a famous civil rights leader, Minnijean Brown-Trickey, one of the nine students to desegregate Little Rock High School, located in Little Rock, Arkansas, in 1957.

"She [Brown-Trickey] shared with us the ugliness she faced on a daily basis as an African-American student at a school where the majority of people did not want her to be there. With her, the history of desegregation came alive. The Little Rock Central High School was no longer a peaceful setting, but a campus full of angry racist students spitting at the courageous nine who were not willing to submit to white supremacists. Her success story reminded us that while there has been much progress the struggle is not over," said Campbell-Ferrari

Other students traveled with the Bucknell Brigade to Nicaragua, including Katherine St. Onge '07 and Lauren Varboncoeur '07. Both St. Onge and Varboncoeur were able to see another country and life style up close.

"I have been interested in the Brigade ever since I heard about it during my freshman year," Varboncoeur said. "I wanted a chance to be able to help out with this meaningful project in which Bucknell is so invested. I wanted to be able to work alongside the people of Nueva Vida and learn about their experiences in order to increase my knowledge and understanding of the international community."

See BREAK page A4

News Briefs

Improved University Web site to launch next week

The Office of Communications has been working on improving the University home page and hopes to launch the updated site early next week. The completed project underwent a final review by the University management group Wednesday morning. The Web site, which receives approximately 40,000 visitors a day, was revamped in hopes to improve navigation and organization.

"We wanted to reorganize it to focus and emphasize the strengths of the University," Chief Communications Officer Pete Mackey said.

The home page will provide quick links to University facts and figures, involvement in the arts, campus life and athletics. These links are set to replace the existing "Prospective Students," "Alumni," "Visitors" and "Current Students, Faculty, and Staff" links to the left of the screen. Links to myBucknell login will also be easier to find. Each of the new links will lead visitors to illustrated and easy-to-navigate Web pages. The Office of Communications hopes the redesign will appeal to prospective students, parents and alumni.

Emeritus professor appears on 'National Geographic'

Retired University professor Douglas K. Candland appeared in a "National Geographic" special on March 19 entitled "Feral Children," reported The Daily Item. It was the first episode in the eight-part television series, "Is It Real?" Candland's episode was about John Sebuyana, the Ugandan boy who spent a part of his life living alone in the forest.

Last September, Candland and a film crew spent nine days interviewing and observing Sebuyana after his return to civilization.

Candland has investigated other "wild children" claims and this is not his first time dealing with Sebuyana. He has met with the boy three times in the past five years and appeared on a British Broadcasting Company (BBC) special about Sebuyana in 1999. He is also the author of "Feral Children and Clever Animals," published 10 years ago.

"Mr. Candland said he was taped by National Geographic because he is one of the few Westerners to have met John Sebuyana," The Daily Item reported. He taught psychology at the University and is an expert on behavioral psychology.

Mitchell attends health research center ceremony

University President Brian Mitchell was present at the ribbon-cutting ceremony for the Geisinger's Center for Health Research last Thursday afternoon. According to The Daily Item, numerous other area leaders and hospital officials were in attendance. They were among the first to see the $21 million facility.

The new building is said to help further the Geisinger Center's partnership with the University by providing jobs for recent college graduates. There are expected to be 120 full-time positions available at the new facility. Mitchell told The Daily Item it was "an important step forward for an already great team."

University of Florida rejects degree for Jeb Bush

Last Thursday, the University of Florida Faculty Senate rejected a proposal that would award Florida Governor Jeb Bush with an honorary degree from the institution, reported The New York Times. The Senate voted 38 to 28 against Bush's nomination. University President J. Bernard Machen told the Times that it was the first time in memory that the group has rejected a nominee put forth by its honorary degrees committee. The Senate chairwoman, Danaya Wright, claimed the nomination was a mistake. She said that many faculty members disliked Bush and were opposed to his policies and he did not have the correct background for an honorary degree.

"Recipients have pretty much always been distinguished scientists, engineers, artists, nurses, doctors," she said.

The University, however, awarded honorary degrees to five other previous governors. The Senate did approve two other nominees, alumnus Andrew H. Hines Jr., a mechanical engineer and former power company executive and Barry C. Barish, professor emeritus of physics at the California Institute of Technology.

COLDWELL BANKER
PENN ONE REAL ESTATE
Thank You, Bucknell!!
For thirty years of calling Bucknell and Lewisburg home.
Susan Warner-Mills, Sales Associate
Competence, Integrity, Service
524-7500; swm@coldwellbanker.com

Spring breakers visit historic civil rights landmarks

BREAK From page A3

St. Onge found her trip to Nicaragua very satisfying.

"I was very interested in visiting a third world country to see extreme poverty first hand and was very moved by the citizens of Nicaragua. Although they were suffering with poverty, poor health, and little opportunity, they were some of the happiest, most compassionate and community oriented people I have ever met. The Nicaraguans are inspiring and prove that happiness can not be bought," said St. Onge. Living in the materialistic Bucknell Bubble, the Brigade is a refreshing experience and puts things in perspective. Nicaragua has shown me what is important in life and has challenged me to do what I can to help those in need."

Dan Ostrofsky '09, along with the University's Habitat for Humanity organization traveled to Miami, Florida where the group was able to renovate four houses in Overtown Florida. They spent Tuesday through Friday of that week working on the homes.

"Our work primarily involved landscaping and painting. In four days of work we were able to transform the outer appearance of four houses as well as help with smaller projects on the inside of these houses. When we arrived the lawns had no grass and were covered with debris which included drug needles, alcohol bottles, condoms, and other garbage," said Ostrofsky.

Habitat for Humanity left Miami better than it found it.

"By the end of the week, these lawns were completely cleaned up and covered with sod. We also planted several shrubs and trees to improve the appearance of the houses. Each of the houses was also painted in a bright pastel color, which truly made them stand out from the rest of the community," said Ostrofsky.

Amy Bruno '09, Saskia Madlener '08 and Alex Bernshteyn '07 had a more politically active Spring Break in Washington, DC.

Amy detailed how the three students turned their Spring Break into a hands on lobby experience.

"Saskia, Alex and I decided to exercise our democratic rights by lobbying congress! Rather than complaining about our problems with America's foreign policies, we decided to do something about them! We found that lobbying is a fun and easy way to influence the direction of politics," said Bruno.

She continued to discuss her trip.

"Once we arrived in DC, we discussed our opinions on Free Trade Agreements with Peru and Colombia, Fast Track (which is a policy that grants all bargaining power for trade agreements to the Executive Branch), and Divestment from Sudan with the advisors. After eleven meetings, we became very comfortable discussing these issues. We left the trade advisors with information to pass along to the congressmen and received helpful feedback about what the prospective congressman was doing, or not doing, with the issue."

The students were able to get a taste of political life.

"Is lobbying effective? Was it worthwhile? It was definitely a profitable experience for me. Most of the people we met in Washington, from receptionists to trade advisors to congressman, are in their twenties or early thirties and have graduated from institutions like Bucknell. Such jobs are very attainable and got me excited about my options for the future," said Bruno.

Greeks sponsor special olympics at University

By Jeremy O'Sullivan
Writer

Close to 100 mentally-challenged athletes competed in the Special Olympics hosted by the University's Chi Phi Fraternity and Kappa Kappa Gamma Sorority last Sunday morning.

The event featured athletes from ages eight to 40, representing nine counties across the state. The athletes competed in swimming and basketball events followed by an awards ceremony in which every contestant earned a medal.

"It's a great feeling to give everyone an opportunity to compete," said Zack Simoncelli '08, a member of Chi Phi and one of the chief organizers of the event.

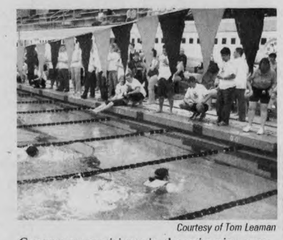
Some of the athletes visit the University every Sunday all year round to practice for this event. The athletes are proud of their accomplishments.

"Also, the competition gave [the athletes] something to do on a Sunday and to do something they could be proud of," said Tom Leaman '09.

Sunday's event marked the 21st year for Chi Phi to host the event and their second year to co-host the event with Kappa Kappa Gamma. With all the excitement generated by the intense competition and the large number of people the event drew, "we are definitely glad to have had their help," Simoncelli said.

"We didn't have a monetary goal," Simoncelli said. The focus of the event was to give back and serve the community. Several Chi Phi brothers raised money for the event by selling advertising space in a book they sent out to local businesses. But the event efforts exceeded just giving back to the community.

"The event raised awareness for the mentally challenged because the entire campus was invited," Michael Ambrosi '08 said. "And from what I've seen, I'd say that student attendance went up from last year."



Courtesy of Tom Leaman

Contestants participate in the swimming competition. Almost 100 mentally challenged people participated in the special olympics.

Although the event took a great deal of effort of planning, fundraising and staffing the event, the student volunteers had an enjoyable and valuable experience serving the community.

"It was great to sit around and chat with the participants. They seemed like they were having a great time, and ... they take the competition really seriously," Leaman said. "One of the kids on the sideline of the basketball games started yelling at the ref... it was like a Bucknell basketball game."

The Special Olympics reflects the noble and much overlooked community service efforts of the Greeks.

"Fundraisers and community outreach is one of the biggest parts about Greek here at Bucknell," Leaman said.

Party safety urged

PARTY From page A1

to stress the simplest but perhaps most overlooked aspect of staying safe this weekend:

"Don't be stupid. The best advice to keep yourself out of trouble is don't draw attention to yourself in any way, shape or form."

It's a common misconception that Public Safety plays a different role on House Party weekend than other weekends.

"Students can have the same expectations from Public Safety as they do any other weekend," Cummings said.

Students are reminded that anyone who sponsors a guest will be held completely responsible for the guest's actions. Every guest must be 18 years of age and every partygoer must wear a wristband.

Moran ascends to top national position

MORAN From page A1

and Fun" for CCM.

Oliver feels very fortunate to have worked with him for nine years.

"Father Moran is incredibly gifted for working with all kinds of people," Oliver said. "I think he has been a priest to everyone, whether they are Catholic or not."

Michael Rakszawski '08, CCM director of administration, said, "Father Marty has been a very influential person in my life. With his help I have become an experienced leader. I will miss Father Marty, but I am happy for his new role."

Fortunately for anyone who may be worried about Moran's replacement, Oliver said, "Given a national shortage of priests, we are very pleased that the Diocese has assured us that another full-time priest will be assigned to Bucknell." Moran will also help the new priest transition to Bucknell.

Moran would like to thank the many dedicated people who have been with him over the years.

"I would like to say thatnks to my colleagues and good friends, Ian Oliver and Serena Fujita; to my staff Suzanne Domzalski and Kim Custer; to an extraordinary group of the CCM student ministry team. I would also like to thank President and Mrs. Mitchell, Provost DeCredico and Charlie Pollock for their enthusiasm and outstanding mentoring."

Moran concluded with plans to maintain his ties to the University.

"I'm so proud of where Bucknell is going with the strategic plan and I hope to still be connected to Bucknell."

Red Smoked BBQ!
Beef Brisket, Pork, Chicken, Ribs!
Sandwiches, Wraps, Salads, Platters!
NO RESERVATIONS NEEDED
Call in for TAKEOUT!
SKEETERS PIT BBQ
ON THE BLUFF
OVERLOOKING THE SCENIC SUSQUEHANNA RIVER
AT THE INTERSECTION OF ROUTES 11 & 15
SHAMOKIN DAM
570.743.2727
Daily 11:00am – 10:00pm
Sundays till 9:00pm
www.SkeetersBBQ.com

"Turn your Power ON and Add LIFE to your Years!"
MORRISON'S ADVANCED CHIROPRACTIC CARE
Michael D. Morrison D.C.
1205 W Market Street
Lewisburg, PA 17837
Office: 570-523-1221
A Healthy Spine Equals a Healthy YOU!
Bucknell Students may receive a free exam and x-rays (if needed) with mention of this advertisement.

"Head to Toe" Spa Girl Parties...
Packages for Birthdays, Bridal Showers, Bachelorette Parties, Girls' Nite Out...

Includes a Facial, Manicure, Pedicure, Massage, & Hot Hand Dip!

...our Tiki Bar is B.Y.O.B.
Call us or check out our website for complete details...
Gift Certificates also available
Body Mind ~N~ Soul
Full Service Salon & Day Spa
www.bodymindnsoul.com
225 North Rt. 11&15, Hummels Wharf
(570) 743-7777 or 743-8888

INDIGO HAIR & NAIL STUDIO
106 Market Street
Lewisburg, Pennsylvania 17837
570-524-7888

STEIN'S FLOWERS & GIFTS
220 Market Street
Lewisburg, PA 17837
(570) 524-9933
www.steinsflowersandgifts.com

Spring 2007 – First Wednesday Series

JAZZ at Bucknell
The Herb Robertson Ritual
Herb Robertson, trumpet & other brass
Phil Haynes, drums & percussion
Kelly Knox, realtime choreographed dance
8:30 p.m., Wednesday
April 4, 2007
Bucknell Hall
Free Admission
Bucknell Hall is located on Loomis Street between the President's House and Hunt Hall.
Bucknell

A MATCH MADE IN HEAVEN
THIS MVP IS NEVER WITHOUT HIS MVP.

PATRIOT LEAGUE MOST VALUABLE PLAYER CHARLES LEE & BUCKNELL'S MOST VALUABLE PAPER, THE BUCKNELLIAN

Take a time out once a week and go one-on-one with The Bucknellian to stay up to date with all of the action happening on campus.

Enclose this form and a check (made out to The Bucknellian) and mail it to:
The Bucknellian, Bucknell University C3952, 701 Moore Avenue, Lewisburg, PA 17837

Name _____
Address _____
_____
Phone _____
E-mail _____

__ ONE SEMESTER: receive 12 issues during the fall or spring semester for $30. Please specify semester: _____

__ ONE YEAR: receive 24 issues during the academic year for only $45, a $15 savings!

For more information, contact The Bucknellian at 570-577-1520 or 570-577-1085 or e-mail bucknellian@bucknell.edu.

The Bucknellian
Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue
Volume 139, Number #
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu
http://www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Editor-in-Chief
Andrew Larson '08

Associate Editor of Content
Matt Saylor '08

Associate Editor of Layout
Lily Beauvilliers '09

Business Manager
Jared Napolitano '08

Senior Editor
Catie Heverling '07

News Editors
Evan Unger '09
Julia Fuchs '09
Michelle Laxer '09

Opinions Editors
Michael Dippery '08
Hallie Stebbins '08

Sports Editors
Barbara Perlman '09
Brian Mulligan '08
Shannon Pitsch '09

Features Editors
Nilanjana Saha '09
Brianna DelValle '10

Arts & Entertainment Editors
Janna Shapiro '08
Genna Jerrard '10

Photography Editors
Ryan Winn '08
Ellyn Ercolano '09

Chief Copy Editor
Molly Clay (grad)

Asst. Chief Copy Editor
Anna Juan '08

Advertising Managers
Meredith Reighard '07
Katie Casteel '08
Elaine Teng '09

Office Manager
Kate Wood '07

Circulation Manager
Adam Kahler '07

Subscriptions Manager
John Ostrow '09

Cartoonist
Juliana Su '09

Adviser
James F. Lee

Op-Ed Policy

The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editor-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 600 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

Publishing Information

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

Subscription Information

Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Bucknell University, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print office.

Advertising Policy

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements it deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577-1085. Copyright © 2007 The Bucknellian

The Bucknellian Editorial

Keep managing a liberal arts education

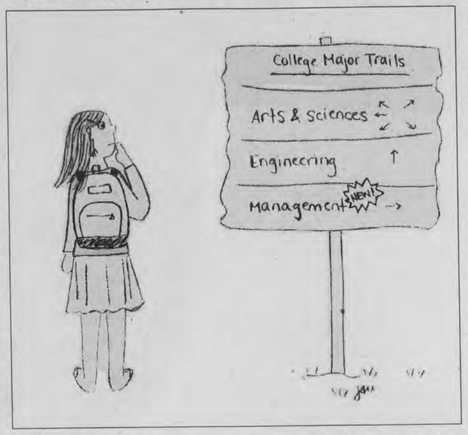
The University is exploring the feasibility of shoring up its current management program to a full-fledged school of management accredited by the Association to Advance Collegiate Schools of Business (AACSB), the gold standard for business schools.

While such a move would bolster the stature of the school's management program, it's unclear how much students or the University at large would actually benefit from it.

The University bills itself as a liberal arts institution, "developing undergraduate students who are thoughtful and capable—able to think critically and creatively about the world in which we live and able to act in that world," according to the strategic plan. The goal of a liberal arts education is to learn how to think before learning how to do. It's no coincidence that the University only has a handful of pre-professional programs.

Currently, management is subsumed by the School of Arts and Sciences, meaning that management majors must fulfill liberal arts requirements in addition to their field-specific courses. Often about 50 percent of the courses management majors take are in the liberal arts.

Many employers seek out Bucknell graduates because they can read and write, think and learn in addition to solving the every day problems that a given field demands. Other management programs churn out students with a thorough knowledge of business theory, but without the skills needed to apply and convey them.



The AACSB has such stringent guidelines for management programs that the University would have little say over what courses its management majors take, likely eroding most of the liberal arts structure of the program.

A school of management also would change the way students apply to Bucknell. As it stands, the only other school on campus with its own dean is the School of Engineering. The vast majority of engineers apply to the engineering program before their first day on campus as a student, as it is difficult for non-engineers to enroll in the engineering introductory classes due to space limitations. The result is that if you want to be an engineer at Bucknell, you have to know it in high school.

In management, it is common for students to come to the University undeclared, take a management course during their first year and decide to switch into the program as a sophomore.

A school of management would increase the competition for spots in the major, creating a system where, as in engineering, students would have to decide on an academic track before even getting a taste of it.

Management majors say the main reason for pursuing a school of management, in their eyes, is to expand course offerings. They say they'd prefer that instead of a catchall, generalized management major, there were more specific offerings such as marketing, communications and finance. They care more about the number of options than the level of accreditation.

As the University considers implementing a school of management, it should keep in mind its promise of a liberal arts education, and the values its pedagogical philosophy promotes.

Its students do. That's why they came here.

Playing in shadow of basketball

To the Editor:

On Nov. 20, 2006, the University was represented in fine fashion by two members of the men's and women's cross country teams at the NCAA Division I National Championships. Two weeks prior, Matt Forys '07 and Leanna Nastase '07 qualified for the most prestigious competition in all of college running. Matt was the sixth male and Leanna the fifth female ever in the University's storied cross country history to ever qualify as an individual for the national championship. The excitement amongst team members and friends was overwhelming. We were all ecstatic at the opportunity to watch two of our own students race their way into history. However, the championships were held in Terra Haute, Indiana—not necessarily right around the corner. But then again, neither is Worcester, Massachusetts.

Upon continuous inquiry, the athletic department told us that there was nothing they could do to help get a small fan bus out to Terra Haute. Yet they sent six fan buses to Holy Cross for the Patriot League Championship in basketball. It is exciting that the basketball team saw such great success this season, but they did not compete in the national championship game. Yet when the University has two of its athletes compete in their respective national championship "game," they are seemingly ignored.

It is upsetting the way the athletic department and administration have shown a complete disregard for its national caliber athletes who compete in "less popular" sports. I can hardly imagine the basketball team making it to the national championship game and not having one fellow student in the stands cheering them on. That's the treatment that two Bison received at a national championship competition this fall.

I was told continuously by the athletic department staff and administration that they would not sponsor or support a trip that would cause students to miss class (the cross country championships were held on a Monday). However, classes were indeed in session on Friday, March 9 when busloads of students were sent to Holy Cross.

It frustrates me that the athletic department and administration pride themselves on winning the President's Cup 12 out of the 16 years the Patriot League has existed, but ignore the fact that all sports have contributed to the attainment of that trophy. This past winter, the men's varsity wrestling team sent David Marble '10, Andy Rendos '10 and Eric Lapotsky '10 to the NCAA National Championship and the women's track and field team won an unprecedented sixth-straight Patriot League title; yet neither of these accomplishments were worthy of a campus-wide Presidential email.

The University is fortunate to have many astounding scholar-athletes that contribute to its national recognition and I congratulate all of the accomplishments made by these individuals. I hope that they can continue to be recognized, respected, and supported to the fullest for their contributions.

Sincerely,

Mark Caroleo '07

Wal-Mart expansion damaging to economy

By Liz Stein
Writer

In Lewisburg today, it is possible to do your grocery shopping, buy a new outfit, get your hair cut, replace the tires on your car and cool down with a McFlurry all in one convenient location. With the arrival of the new Wal-Mart Supercenter, consumers now have the ability to shop with those everyday low prices like never before. Unfortunately, it won't be long until the Lewisburg community will face the serious repercussions other small towns are experiencing across the country. Living in a Wal-Mart world is not as inviting as it seems.

According to Hoover's, Inc., Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. is the largest corporation in the world, reporting total revenues of over $315 billion in 2006, With about 6,400 stores in operation (and almost two-thirds of them in the United States alone), the chain employs 1.7 million workers worldwide, according to its corporate fact sheet.

> "With the opening of a Wal-Mart store, local retailers are forced to reduce wages in order to compete with the chain. This labor displacement weighs heavily on the community because as salaries decrease, poverty increases."

And "because of its size, purchasing power, and technological sophistication, the chain is revolutionizing not only the industrial organization of local retail trade, but also the entire wholesale, transportation and linguistics sector," said Stephan Goetz of Penn State University and Hema Swaminathan of the International Center for Research on Women.

This modernized form of discount retail is affecting more than just internal wholesale operations. The corporation's cost efficiency has strengthened economy-wide productivity and diminished annual inflation. But the emergence of Wal-Mart stores has triggered a loss of U.S. manufacturing jobs, the demise of mom-and-pop retailers, higher poverty rates and has contributed significantly to global outsourcing.

Mom-and-pop stores, unable to handle the competition, are replaced with Wal-Mart stores that offer jobs paying less and offering fewer benefits. The demise of the mom-and-pop store generates the closing of local businesses, such as transporters, accountants and lawyers, which previously had supplied them.

More specifically, Wal-Mart's expansion of its superstore model has produced critical damages to the food sales industry. The research of Kenneth Stone of Iowa State University shows that in Mississippi counties where a Supercenter opened, grocery stores lost 19 percent in sales within five years. With the grand opening of our very own Supercenter, Lewisburg is in danger of similar effects.

On a much larger scale, Wal-Mart is contributing to the controversial outsourcing phenomenon.

"Wal-Mart is one of the key forces that propelled global outsourcing — off-shoring of U.S. jobs — precisely because it controls so much of the purchasing power of the U.S. economy," said Gary Gereffi, a Duke University professor studying global supply chains, in a PBS "Frontline" interview. "Wal-Mart has life-or-death decision over [almost] all the consumer goods industries that exist in the United States, because it is the number one supplier-retailer of most of our consumer goods—not just clothes, shoes, toys, but home appliances, electronic products, sporting goods, bicycles, groceries, food."

This grim reality may be detrimental not only to U.S. unemployment rates, but the economy as a whole.

The inside operations of the corporation are nearly as questionable. There is widespread evidence that Wal-Mart employees face disrespect from the company, according to Ellen Rosen, a sociology professor at Brandeis University who is writing a book about Wal-Mart. Employees are chastised for not being available to work any day of the week between 7 a.m. and 11 p.m. if needed, and they are publicly shamed for making mistakes on the job.

Furthermore, the company's aggressive anti-union efforts have consistently prevented workers from unionizing. As a result, workers do not have the same labor protection they would have had as employees of small-town businesses or other union-friendly chains, such as Bradlees and Furrs, which Wal-Mart has ruthlessly pushed out.

In the wake of the Wal-Mart generation, employees and consumers alike will have to deal with the tragic consequences that come along with low prices. But in the meantime, American communities face economic and social changes as Wal-Mart erodes one of America's most cherished values: providing its people with the ability to climb the economic ladder over time.

Who will be the next president?

Bucknellian writer predicts outcome of 2008 presidential election

By Brett Irwin
Contributing Writer

By way of disclaimer, the reader should approach this article playfully. It was written only to pamper the author's ego; it is certainly not meant as a definitive assessment of the 2008 presidential race. The absence of qualifiers such as "I believe that," "the most likely will" and "It is probable that" serves not only to shorten this already lengthy article but to hopefully inject—by presenting pure opinion as irrefutable fact—some subtle humor. Without further ado, here is one possible outcome of the historic 2008 presidential election.

Prediction: John McCain wins the Republican nomination, Hillary Clinton wins the Democratic nomination and McCain beats Clinton in the general election. This conjecture would not have raised many eyebrows a scant six months ago, but today, pundits relish relating the many ways the two frontrunners have lost momentum.

McCain's current troubles stem from two different surges: the President's troop surge and Rudy Giuliani's surge in the polls. Both of these phenomena should not ultimately prevent McCain from achieving what he could not in 2000.

Iraq will not be the overriding issue that most are predicting. By Labor Day 2008 Bush's desperate desire to prevent Iraq from completely ruining his legacy (thus creating a willingness to embrace the proposals of even his rivals), a larger and more capable Iraqi military and David Petraeus will have stabilized Iraq enough to negate its impact as the decisive election issue.

Giuliani is the Grand Old Party flavor of the month. Although the conventional wisdom, that a pro-choice, pro-gun, pro-gay, cross-dressing, dirty-dealing, thrice divorced candidate can never win a GOP primary has recently become politically passé, it will become conventional again when McCain and Mitt Romney surrogates start reminding Republican voters of the 9/10/01 Rudy (according to a March 3 Newsweek poll, only a quarter of Republican voters know "a lot" about Giuliani). Moreover, he does not have the organizational strength that McCain and Romney have been building for years.

The other threats to McCain's primary campaign—the second-tier and Romney—will prove similarly incapable of preventing a McCain nomination. Conservatives will ultimately judge Romney's abrupt moves to the right (rightly or wrongly) as convenient and superficial. His Mormon faith will also be a bigger barrier than expected (according to a Feb. 9-11 Gallup poll, a whopping quarter of America would not vote for a Mormon, even if the candidate was well-qualified). Notwithstanding fundraising prowess that will continue to impress, Romney's flip-flopping and faith will lead to his primary defeat.

As for the second and third-tier GOP candidates, most will be forced from the race (à la Tom Vilsack) before any of the Big Three have faded. Rudy McRomney, Inc. will have soaked up almost all of the money and endorsements that are required to sustain credibility. Newt Gingrich will make a splash when he jumps in come late summer, but it will be too late and primary voters will be pragmatic and deem him unelectable on the national level.

Conspicuously and oddly lacking from this prediction has been any talk of actual support for McCain. True, he remains unpopular among conservative Republicans for McCain-Feingold, McCain-Kennedy, his unreliability on taxes (the 2001 Bush cuts), judicial nominees (the Gang of 14) and the general contempt he showed for the religious right in 2000 (those pesky "agents of intolerance").

Of the Big Three, he has the most consistently conservative record and a war-hero image that nobody (not even Rudy) can match. McCain has built a machine powerful enough to remain viable as voters flirt with other younger, more exciting candidates. Essentially, as the other candidates falter, McCain will emerge as the nominee by default. Not the most glorious victory, but a victory nonetheless.

What about Clinton? How will she capture the Democratic nomination? Like McCain, most press stories of late have mentioned the decline of Clinton's aura of inevitability. Unlike McCain, she is only really plagued by one surge: the rapid rise of Barack Obama's candidacy.

It is difficult to dismiss the very real threat that Obama poses to her primary campaign. He has stolen her media darling status. He is quickly stealing the black vote from her. His crowds are bigger, his public speaking skills better. If the Clinton camp did not feel legitimately threatened, it would not have been so sensitive to David Geffen's defection to the Obama camp.

Obamania is just that, a massive emotional outburst generated largely by dazzling oratory and a compelling personal story. Presidential campaigns cannot succeed based on entertaining theatrics, regardless of what the cynics say. "Obambi" has already failed to convincingly deflect charges that he is all style and no substance. As the pressure intensifies (he has yet to go through the gruparts, will find it impossible to gain traction with such heavyweights crowding the first tier. Al Gore, like Gingrich, will cause a stir when he throws his hat in the ring, but also like Gingrich, it will be too late in terms of organizational muscle. And despite the warming, so to speak, of Gore's public persona, the very catalyst of that image change, his environmental advocacy, will have ironically confined him to a single-issue candidacy.

Clinton will claw her way to the nomination and McCain will pick it up when Giuliani and Romney drop it. How will McCain best Clinton in the general election? As already noted, Clinton will emerge from her primary fight with Obama as a weakened Democratic nominee. This will work to McCain's advantage, a candidate who knows the consequences of a bruising primary.

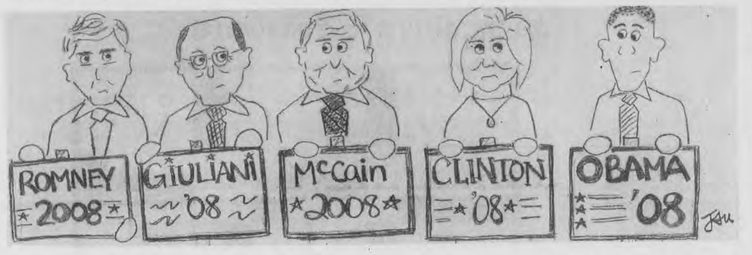
In the general campaign, McCain will be free to tout his centrist career in Congress. The maverick that was adored in 2000 by moderates and the media will reappear. McCain's failed bid taught him that, in the primaries, it is premature and imprudent to embrace the center; he must shore up his right flank and win the nomination before he can run from the center in the general, a mistake he will not make again.

McCain's moderate image will surely help, but it alone will not propel him to the White House. McCain will not win the race, Clinton will lose it. There have been recent stories chronicling a supposed decline in anti-Hillary sentiment on the right, but it will resurface in full force when she becomes the Democratic nominee. Any potentially low conservative turn-out resulting from dissatisfaction with McCain will be more than offset by the right's fear (some say justifiable, some say psychotic) of another President Clinton. The would-be first gentleman will greatly help her in the primaries but greatly hurt her in the general. Republicans will turn out in droves, not to vote for McCain but to vote against Clinton.

Who will Clinton and McCain pick as their running mates? Clinton will be tempted by Wesley Clark's potential to mollify concerns about her ability to serve as commander in chief. She will also be tempted by Evan Bayh's red-state appeal and executive experience. She will ultimately tap Ed Rendell, long-time family friend, energetic and skilled campaigner and presumable guarantor of Pennsylvania's 21 electoral votes (a bigger prize than Bayh's Indiana).

McCain will no doubt select someone much younger to offset his age, and most likely a governor or former governor to offset his lack of executive leadership. Ever the iconoclast, he might be tempted to forge a unity ticket with a conservative Democrat. Realizing the political implausibility of such a ticket, given his already rocky relationship with the right, he will pick a deep-dyed conservative. Romney would ostensibly meet these criteria, but he is not a lifelong conservative. McCain will settle on Mark Sanford, capitalizing on the stabilizing potential of the young, popular, conservative governor.

There it is: McCain-Sanford defeats Clinton-Rendell on Nov. 4, 2008. How do you like that for audacity, Barry Obama?



Comment on this story! E-mail letters to bucknellian@bucknell.edu

The F Word

On the Desperate Housewife

By Lenore L. Flower
Writer

Over the course of spring break, I came across a comedy special in which a vibrant, brilliant, confident woman asserted that feminists ruined everything: she wanted to be at home being pampered rather than working. As someone who considers all individuals (of both genders) to be feminists until proven blatantly sexist, I was shocked to hear that she believed, even jokingly, that housewives are pampered. Unless the lady of the house employs a live-in maid, cook and nanny, the life of a housewife is anything but luxurious.

To ignore this by suggesting that a woman is "pampered" when she opts not to work outside of the house is to further deny the respect any mother (working or otherwise) deserves for the everyday struggle to raise a child and simultaneously keep the home from falling apart. The emotional toll that can result from thanklessly doing such impossible, monotonous, never-ending tasks can be extreme. Many of us do not need to look beyond our own families to recognize this. While I am enraptured when the words "I'd love to be a stay-at-home dad" issue from a gentleman's mouth, I am always concerned that such willingness may stem more from an ignorance of the work that comes along with such a role than from a love of children.

Even some of us who have come from less-than-idyllic family environments still cling to the dream of a "traditional family unit." While I audibly gag at the concept of the 1950s home complete with white picket fence, even I'd rather be "pampered" than slug away at a full-time job for the rest of my life. To buy into this grossly inaccurate view of a housewife or mother would be naïve and offensive to the women who brought us up.

Stay-at-home parents are among the most under-appreciated members of American society. In a capitalist society, money is a main (if not the main) form of power; it undeniably affects our everyday social interactions and relationships. If we are to look at wages as the selling point of our hourly worth, the worth of a person who does not earn an income is further trivialized.

When a woman gives up her ability to earn monetary power in exchange for a traditional family unit, her opinion may be considered trivial in comparison to her husband's. Because his name is on the paycheck, the mentality sometime arises that it is "his money," with which he can do what he pleases.

Because a housewife generally becomes economically dependent on her husband, her husband can easily take advantage of her position. A woman with two children of her own, no personal savings and no time or means to procure employment will have little means to escape an abusive or otherwise unhealthy relationship. Even if the housewife is not abused, taken for granted or otherwise disrespected by her other half, she misses the opportunity to socialize with co-workers and may begin to feel isolated by her role.

What is especially tragic about the esteemed "traditional family unit" is that no family member seems to gain from it. Wives become subjected to monotonous housework while trying to avoid strangling their children; husbands run the risk of becoming absentee parents, working long hours to support a family they barely see. Working parents can become strained by the dual roles, but if both work, they can share the toils and joys together. Children need both parents in their lives more than anything.

While each family is different, and it is commendable for any person to work as a stay-at-home parent, the role of a housewife is a difficult and strained one in our modern society. Without the proper respect and support from both family and society, such a position becomes impossible.

Unethical policies plague insurance

By Lauren Berninger
Writer

The front page of Monday's edition of The New York Times told the upsetting story of an 81-year-old woman who set aside $100-worth of her grocery money for over 10 years for an insurance policy that promised her assisted living care when she needed it. In 2002 when diabetes, hypertension and other ailments created dozens of hospital trips, her family decided it was time for the transition to assisted living.

When a claim was filed with Conseco, her insurance provider, it was denied by a statement saying she had waited too long. After countless arguments, other excuses emerged—the facility was unapproved or assisted living was unnecessary. Every phone call, mailing and office visit resulted in the word "denied." In the end, the family members spent over $70,000 for their mother's care when the purpose of her monthly payments was to elude that very burden.

Stories like this one really tug at the heartstrings. While profit is important for all companies to function, there comes a point when morals must step in. There is nothing more base and ignoble than taking advantage of people who cannot take care of themselves. After promising care for the elderly, these insurance companies are delaying or denying this care, knowing that these customers have a high mortality rate. Being as business-savvy as they are, these companies know that the longer they delay care, the less they will have to pay back to the customer in the end. Clearly, an insatiable lust for money is far more important than a respectable end to a long-lived life.

With the baby boomers aging and the government supporting private policies to reduce the fiscal strain created by state handouts, it is not as if these companies are in trouble. They are likely to be more prosperous than ever in the ensuing years, leaving them no financial excuse to continue their depraved practices. This selling of lies and manipulative ideas must end. Whether that action comes from the power of the government or the voices of non-profit organizations, it needs to happen soon—before thousands of other Americans are faced with the same grief.

Currently Untitled by Juliana Su

Mer Cares

Dear Mer:

I am really stressed with everything going on in my life and I am at a complete loss at how to go about doing everything I need to do with only 24 hours in a day and a few more weeks of classes left. I am beginning to neglect my friends, my boyfriend and my sorority sisters. This week is going by so quickly for me as I have to participate in Greek Week events, culminating in the House Party weekend, which may take time out from studying.

I am trying not to overbook myself but it's really taking a toll on my schoolwork, especially since we need to pick out classes next year and my parents are on my case about how next year's grades will really decide my future and if I can get into a graduate school. I am incredibly close to having a nervous breakdown, but I don't even have time to stress since I have three papers due in a few weeks, presentations, exams and planning for recruitment next year since I am a round leader.

—Anxiously Apprehensive

Dear Apprehensive,

I agree—the amount of work piling on for next month is taking a toll on everyone and it seems that the end of the school year will be here as soon as we know it. But, the key is to try to tone down the complaints because everyone seems to be going through exactly what you are. You don't need to try and boast about your crazy amount of work to gain sympathy. Everyone is dealing with their own ordeals without pity and you need to just get things done and not worry about "complaining" so to speak.

You must learn how to compartmentalize and create a schedule to make sure that your work gets done in the amount of time you have allotted for it. Once that "compartment" is done with for the day, then move on to mandatory Greek events or spending the night with the boyfriend. Don't put all the pressure of spending time with others or wondering how in the world you are going to be able to fit House Party into this weekend's schedule with the amount of work you need to get done until you figure out what needs to be done first. Get it done and then have fun. I'm sure you know the infamous phrase here at the University, "work hard and play hard." But at such a prestigious school, work should be your first priority, then your friends and family and then Greek organizations, events and parties. Please try to remember that the work hard part does come before playing.

Take a break every hour so you don't go insane in a few weeks when everything just bubbles out of you because of all the stress.

I would suggest working on your presentation a few hours a week until it is due, so you are fully prepared. Try and do a rough draft of a paper in the next week or so. Put aside a little time each day to see your friends, whether by just grabbing a meal or watching an episode of "24." Then get right back to work so you will be able to de-stress on the weekend a little and you can have a somewhat relaxing few weeks on campus in the warm weather before summer break starts. Get your plans for recruitment done in the next weeks so you won't be too busy in the fall. Most importantly, get your work done in a timely manner for the things that are top priority right now and put aside everything else in your life. Then, if you feel satisfied with the amount of work you have achieved— reward yourself with a nice night out—but don't go too crazy this weekend since it will most certainly take a huge toll on your schoolwork. If you are not organized everything will wait until Sunday and then you'll need to finish up a presentation and write a few papers for Monday.

Love,
Mer

Please send questions regarding any topic to marc001@Bucknell.edu with subject line reading "advice" or you may send a letter via campus mail to box number C1099. I look forward to hearing from you!

Exploring housing options

Quiet, Res Colleges and CHOICE offer a few special housing choices

By Susan Misur
Contributing Writer

Whether students believe it or not, they actually have quite an influence when it comes to their housing needs. Daniel Remley, director of Housing and Residential Life encourages student feedback; especially about the increasing amount of special housing the University currently offers.

When it comes to quiet floors, Choosing Healthy Options in Community Environments (CHOICE) and Residential College housing, student input is essential to the success and evolution of the programs.

Only a few years ago, those who opted for quiet housing did not know where they would live when they signed up, according to Remley. There was no designated building for the program, making it a risky choice.

"I knew when I came to Bucknell that I wanted to change the way quiet housing worked because students didn't like the way it was being done, and I agreed with them," Remley said.

Currently, Harland A. Trax Hall is the designated building for quiet halls, which are intended to be quiet 24 hours a day. The environment is conducive to studying, and the singles in the building make the program even more desirable.

"It's great to have a single, and it's been nice to have time to study and work whenever I want without music going on in the background, if I don't want it," said Doug Moore '08 who opted for quiet housing this year.

Right across the courtyard from Trax is Rush H. Kress Hall, upperclassmen CHOICE housing. Incoming first-year students who sign up for CHOICE live in Harris Hall. CHOICE was started in 2000 as a substance-free housing program. Seven years later, CHOICE has evolved into a close-knit community, with two Student Program Assistants to take student suggestions and plan events and activities.

"We went canoeing down the Susquehanna, ice skating, rollerblading, had a few birthday parties and a semi-formal and so much more," Katie Conway '10 said.

> "It's been great to have other people on my hall with similar interests, even bird watching."
> —Elizabeth McCarthy '10

Students who join the CHOICE housing program become close friends through all of these activities and through sharing their interests, Conway said.

"It was a great way to start college," she said. "I've made a lot of good friends, simply because we like to do the same things."

Another way many first-year students choose to begin their college years is by joining one of six Residential Colleges, housed in Smith and McDonnell Halls. The Residential Colleges currently include Society and Technology, Arts, Global, Environmental, Humanities and Social Justice. Students in each 'program take a foundation seminar course together and also attend events and trips related to the topic of the Residential College.

Elizabeth McCarthy '10 chose to join the Environmental Residential College because of her interest in nature and animals.

"It's been great to have other people on my hall with similar interests, even bird watching," McCarthy said.

Residential College activities are planned by Junior Fellows, upperclassmen living with the first-year students.

"We went to the quarry to dig for fossils, kayaked on the Susquehanna, hiked and went bird watching at Hawk Mountain and we're going whitewater rafting in a few weeks," McCarthy said.

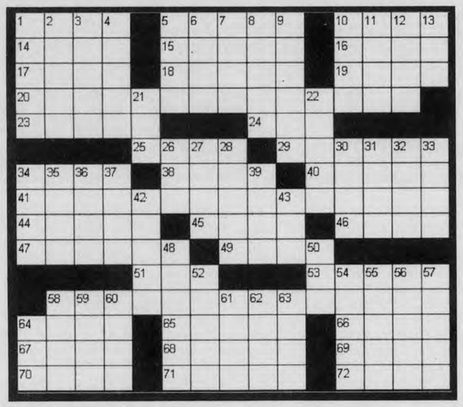
Positive and fun experiences within the Residential Colleges are what motivate students to apply for a Junior Fellow position and stay involved. They can also become a Resident Fellow to coordinate activities for sophomores who choose to stay in the program, which is what McCarthy will be doing next year.

"I knew I still wanted to be in Environmental as a sophomore, and hope to keep everyone interested and involved in events when I'm a Resident Fellow," McCarthy said.

Student interest in special housing like quiet, CHOICE and Residential Colleges is stable, according to Remley. This might be partly due to students' input when the housing office is planning for future renovations and improvements to dormitories and programs.

"Student feedback allows us to tweak our existing plans and try our best to fulfill their needs. All of our programs are evolving, even through small steps, thanks to their input," Remley said.

The Bucknellian Crossword



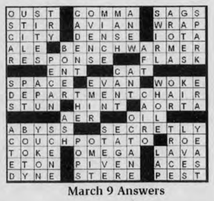
Across

1. XXX material
5. Earthy material
10. Mega or giga ending
14. Master a skill
15. Bow bullet
16. British nobleman
17. You're _ five, four, three…"
18. Pond parasite
19. Dilapidated neighborhood
20. Drink sparingly
23. Radio host Howard
24. Roses _ red
25. Weakling
29. Tripoli resident
34. Biblical pronoun
38. Grocery store section
40. Fatal necktie
41. Eat sparingly
44. Hawaiian greeting
45. Comedian Cook
46. Choice for chips
47. Senor's amor
49. _ cell research
51. 1960s radical org.
53. Noodles
58. Launder sparingly
64. Mare hair
65. Driving itinerary
66. Sinister
67. Comedienne Rudner
68. Mistake
69. Otherwise
70. Gang follower?
71. Author and ardent abolitionist
72. Feat

Down

1. Performances
2. Impressionist painter
3. Join
4. Sax type
5. Masculine
6. Greek warmonger
7. Increased in size
8. Hot beverage
9. Spinning
10. Better than better
11. Group, in The South
12. Authentic
13. Tree type
21. Compass point
22. European river
26. Wedding words (2 words)
27. Repair pants
28. Appeals
30. Transform liquid into gas
31. Fitness fad
32. Pale
33. Cod catchers
34. "_ the night before…"
35. Revolutionary spy turned American martyr
36. Elite British institution
37. Repeat
39. Contraction of contradiction
42. Cruel
43. Small
48. Absolutely loves
50. Dashboard abbr.
52. Nose noise
54. Assisted
55. Day-old danish, for example
56. To the point
57. Questioned
58. Be patient
59. Poker pre-pay
60. Scorch
61. Continental currency
62. Pack away
63. The Way We _

ByVo Crosswords



March 9 Answers

Ziegler's Beauty Salon
38 N. 5th Street
Lewisburg, PA 17837
570-523-1250 570-523-1262
Book by Appointment
1 Beauty Chair & 2 Barber Chairs

HOUSE FOR RENT 6/1/07
78 Brown Street
Lewisburg, PA 17837
4 bedrooms, 1.5 baths
off-street parking
Contact: Marian Thomas
524-7482

Book Your Graduation Party!
Brookpark Station Cafe
"Casual dining with a gourmet flair"
Fresh Sushi & Vegetarian Items
Catering & Takeout Platters
B.Y.O.B.
Wireless Internet
Mon-Sat 8:00-8:00 Sun 8:00-2:00
1 Mile West of Town on RT. 45
542-FOOD (3663)

"Writing is a struggle against silence."
—Carlos Fuentes
Write for Features
E-mail ns022@

Ellacinders
Jewelry & Bead Bar
Classes...Birthday Parties...Weddings...Girls' Nite Out
566 North Derr Drive Phone 570 522 0880
Lewisburg PA 17837 cjreed@dejazzd.com
HOURS – Mon-Fri 11 am - 7 pm Sat 10 am - 4 pm
Create Your Own Designs!

Relay raises $72 thousand

By Samantha Kantor
Writer

I'll be spending the rest of the night lying in bed with ice on my feet, but I can confidently say that I would not take back any lap I did at the Relay for Life on the indoor track Sunday. Why? Because after 12 hours and $72,000 in donations, there is nothing that could make me happier than the validation of a few aches and pains.

For those of you who didn't hear the blasting musical selection, see the mint-green clad Relay committee organizing, or smell the amalgam of pizza, candy and Rockstar emitting from the Gerhard Fieldhouse, you truly missed out on an incredible event.

The 34 teams, consisting of approximately 400 students, gathered at 10 a.m. and spent the next 12 hours walking and raising money.

"I was absolutely thrilled to see so many students participate in Relay this year," said Casey Bryant '09 a co-chair of the Relay Committee. "This is an event that truly unites the entire campus."

The theme of the event was candy, and each team had its own chosen candy as a type of mascot with which its table was decorated. M&Ms, Hershey Kisses, Swedish Fish and Sour Patch Kids were represented, among many others.

The teams varied from fraternities and sororities to sports teams and residence halls to groups of friends dedicated to making a difference.

Money was raised beforehand by each person on every team through the Relay for Life Web site.

In addition to individual fundraising, the organization received donations from the sale of Luminaria bags before and during the event.

Elyn Ercolano—The Bucknellian

Thirty-four teams walked for 12 hours in Relay for Life to raise $72 thousand for cancer research.

These bags were used for the Luminaria ceremony, during which each bag purchased was dedicated to either a cancer survivor or victim and illuminated with a glow stick.

With all of the fieldhouse lights out and all of the bags glowing, this moving ceremony brought tears to the eyes of many.

During the Luminaria ceremony, speeches were made by the University's on-campus reverend, as well as by a visiting cancer survivor who enlightened us all with the story of his courageous battle.

"Relay for Life was a huge success," said Carolyn Baker '10, a team leader. "And our team (the M&Ms) won for best table decorations!"

During the Relay, there were performances by Latino Dance Corner, the Bison Girls, participants in the Relay for Life Idol Competition, Beyond Unison and many more. There was also a root beer pong tournament.

All of the speeches, performances and events that were put together by the College Against Cancer and the Relay committee made the day a successful one, but it was the dedication of the teams who spent their day working for this cause the generated such excitement.

"I'm so pumped! If you think $72,000 is a lot, wait 'til next year," said Joshua Goodman '10, who will be a co-chair for next year's relay.

The convenient world of YouTube

By Rajaa Qadri
Writer

We are all familiar with it and yes, we are all guilty of wasting countless hours on this Web site. One song leads to another and one video attracts the next one. From short clips to full-length movies, from songs to political news, everything is available on YouTube.

"YouTube has everything that you need. I know friends who pretty much live on it and why wouldn't they? Everything is right at your fingertips. Missed a TV show for a group project? Go watch it there. Want to see a music video of the song you got stuck in your head? Log onto YouTube.com," Kate Matelan '10 said.

Founded in February 2005 by three former employees of PayPal, the site took only a couple of months to attract millions of users to it. According to the Los Angeles Times, YouTube has 34 million monthly visitors and 65 thousand new videos are posted every day. Currently staffed by 67 employees, the company was named "Invention of the Year" for 2006 by TIME Magazine.

YouTube attracts so many people and stands out among other Web sites because of its lack of barriers. The Web site is considered to be user-friendly. Unregistered users can watch countless videos on it and you can quickly sign up and upload anything in any format right away. Other Web sites have endless forms to fill out in order to register and a lot of them don't support various video formats.

Another feature that makes YouTube very popular is the ability to embed videos on blogs and Web sites. Facebook users can incorporate YouTube videos in their notes and people can be tagged to the videos as well as post comments.

Even Google services couldn't reach the level of service YouTube provides. Still wonder why Google bought YouTube?

Along with being a source of continuous entertainment for all ages, YouTube is becoming a new political force. Political parties are using the site as an effective means of advertising. The recent demonstration of YouTube's political impact was made clear during the 2006 elections.

While YouTube video wildfire is gaining strength in the United States, it has been banned in a lot of other countries. Turkey banned the Web site after numerous users uploaded clips that insulted the country's residents. An Australian state also banned YouTube from schools after a gang of male school students videotaped its assault on a 17-year-old girl on the outskirts of Melbourne.

The Web site also deals with a lot of copyrighted infringement actions, though only one case has actually made it to court. Even though the company tries to restrict non-copyrighted material, a large amount continues to be uploaded. Since anyone can make and upload a video, you never know what types of videos are being uploaded and watched by millions of users.

Who knows—the next morning you may wake up and discover that you are on YouTube in an embarrassing video. Is making video uploading so easy a threat to the rest of us? Are we able to control it? Does it violate our privacy or is it just another harmless tool to watch videos and full length movies?

Time will tell the tale.

Courtesy of www.YouTube.com

Creative cafeteria concoctions

By Erica Schiffres
Writer

As far as college food goes, University students are spoiled. Bostwick dining can best be described as home-style cooking: fresh, delicious, hearty and nutritious, sometimes gourmet. Despite this laudatory review, cafeteria cuisine is still cafeteria cuisine; it can become monotonous. But there is no reason to get bored. Jazzing up your plate requires only a bit of creativity, which shouldn't be a problem for any Bucknellian.

One creative concoction, which I am still mustering up the courage to try, was cooked up by Daniel Snyder '10. Slice a banana like an ice cream sundae, spread mayonnaise on it and top with peanuts.

"Ever since my friend's mom made that as a snack when I was little, I've loved it," Snyder said.

Pizza wraps are created by adding lettuce, condiments, cold cuts and rolls to pizza. For an update on pasta, mix red tomato sauce with ranch dressing and mushrooms to make a unique topping.

Another easy twist is turkey with applesauce, a combination provided by Erica Austin '10.

One dining staff employee, Beth Humphrys mixes jelly in her scrambled eggs, crediting southern influences.

Patrick Behan '10 leaves no craving unsatisfied, as he resourcefully creates cinnamon sugar butter with the detailed instructions.

"First, you slice then toast your bagel. Spread on butter and sprinkle on cinnamon, found at the waffle bar, and then add sugar," Behan said.

Chet Eimstad '10 pairs his apples with ketchup, while William O'Brien '10 reports spreading mashed potatoes on any meat.

To make your own rice pudding, grab a bowl of rice, add a little soy milk and sweeten with maple syrup.

To create a "choco taco," make a waffle, pour hot fudge and ice cream and fold. Another dessert idea is to add hot fudge from the ice cream station to Rice Krispies.

A drink fashioned by Lauren Hall '10 as the "The Hulk" mixes Sprite, the blue sports drink and orange juice to create a green drink with a punch. Also in the drink department, Audrey Howard '10 shares her cranberry and orange juice mixture.

Howard shared an idea I'm eager to put to the test. She takes her sandwiches, adds meat, cheese or vegetables and uses the waffle maker as a grill.

"Your sandwich has a smiley face on it," Howard said.

To create your own milkshakes, add milk to frozen yogurt in a cup. Add peanut butter and jelly for a pb-and-j milkshake, or add Lucky Charms and Cookie Crisp to milk for a milk and cereal milkshake.

These are just a few ideas to get your creative juices flowing. Once you open your mind to new combinations, the cafeteria will never get old again. So think out of the box. Be daring. Dip french fries in ice cream, put fruit in your salad and channel your inner creativity to make your four years dining your best culinary experience yet.

Another tantalizing edition brought to you by ...

Ms. Love and the Bubble

Dear Ms. O,

My boyfriend and I have been together since high school, and I recently found out that his ex-girlfriend has an STD. We've had unprotected sex before and I'm worried that I might have some symptoms, but I'm too scared to talk to him about it. How should I approach such a sensitive subject?

- Negatively Positive

Dear Negatively Positive,

No matter what, you need to get tested for sexually transmitted diseases as soon as possible. Many STDs are at least curable, and if not, then treatable. Contact Student Health Services for information and testing. Be sure to give your health professional all the information on your sexual background and any symptoms you're experiencing.

I understand that this can be an uncomfortable subject and has the possibility of putting a strain on any relationship, but it's very important that couples are open and honest about it. You need to talk to your boyfriend.

If you think your partner may have a bad reaction, try to bring the subject up in a casual way. Bring up something you read about STDs, or a conversation you had with a friend. If your boyfriend would sit through it, maybe even watch "Rent" together.

Otherwise, sit him down and be up front about it.

Don't say, "I think you got an STD from your ex-girlfriend, and now I probably have it too."

Try something like, "I think we need to get tested for STDs. We have had unprotected sex and its important that we're both sure we're healthy."

You can explain what you've learned about his ex-girlfriend and explain your concerns, but don't get hysterical or accusatory.

Placing blame won't help anything. The important thing is that you both look out for and take care of your sexual health.

You both need to keep your sexual health in the forefront of your mind. You also need to be honest with each other, and if there's any question, you need to stop sexual activity until you know what's going on.

When you go to get tested, you may want to go together. In experiencing it together, you can give each other support and help open up lines of communication.

Get tested for everything so you're sure that you are healthy.

Even if you don't think you have an STD, it's a very good idea that you and your partner get tested before having unprotected sex. Many people who have STDs do not even know they have them, and often don't show symptoms. Some of these include Chlamydia, Herpes, HPV and HIV.

According to www.plannedparenthood.org, women are less likely to develop symptoms than men, and if left untreated some diseases can lead to Pelvic Inflammatory Disease (PID), which can cause infertility.

If you're having sex with multiple partners or your partner has had sex with others before you, it's also important to get tested.

It's important to be well educated about your risks so that you can take care of yourself.

Another Web site to check out for information is the American Social Health Association at www.ashastd.org.

Bottom line: Get tested!

~ Ms. O

E-mail me your questions at MsOintheBubble@yahoo.com or send them through campus mail to Ms. O, The Bucknellian, C-3952. All authors of questions will remain anonymous.

ARRESTED???
D.U.I.?
UNDERAGE DRINKING?
DISORDERLY CONDUCT?
FAKE I.D.?
RHEAM & SPOTTS, P.C.
533 North Derr Drive (Route 15 North)
Lewisburg, Pennsylvania 17837
(570) 524-2344
CRIMINAL DEFENSE ATTORNEYS
CALL (570) 524-2344 NOW . . . TO PROTECT YOUR RECORD & RIGHTS

Greenhouse

An inside look at the University's secret garden

Photo illustration by Ellyn Ercolano

A view through the lens

A Bucknellian photo editor shares tips on shooting plants

By Ryan Winn
Photography Editor

Generally speaking, flowers and foliage fall within the regime of macro photography. Classified by its small depth of fields, the range of the image that is in focus and "simple' backgrounds, the subject is called to the focus. The lighting is key. The photos seen here were taken on a cloudy day with very soft light, creating a great shadow-free environment that allows the natural contrast to play a crucial role. This may not always be the look you are shooting for.

The most important factor in macro photography is the aperture, as it dictates your depth of field. Shoot in aperture priority if you have it, and remember to pick your film speed carefully as these low apertures may require very fast shutter speeds.

Want to break away from the norm?

Play with the depth of field to include a few other blooms. If you are having problems controlling you focal planes, try to focus just in front of the subject.

You can also place the subject slightly before the focal plane and draw attention to the background. Be careful that the now unfocused subject does not overwhelm the background.

Try shooting the same frame in color and black and white. You might be surprised with the way the images come out.

A stroll through exotic ecosystems

By Nilanjana Saha
Features Editor

The greenhouse on the roof of the Biology building hosts approximately 400 species of plants from a wide range of ecosystems.

Upon entering the greenhouse, it is not uncommon to be scratched by the prickly leaves of the agave, a cactus plant that thrives mainly in Central America.

The desert area of the greenhouse receives more sunlight than the rest and houses many other species of cacti that are found in dry environments across the western hemisphere, such as the monstrous curiosity plant and blue chalkweed.

Beyond the desert micro-climate, the wetland area is adorned with traps and pitchers, types of carnivorous plants, including the venus fly trap and butterworts. Since these plants live in nutrient-poor soil, they supplement their diet by trapping and digesting insects.

Following along the path, one also comes across the epiphytes or air plants, a wealth of orchids and a mini-tropical rainforest with pineapple, olive, banana and other plants of various shapes and form.

The greenhouse was built in 1991 along with the Biology building. Professor of Biology Warren Abrahamson remembers the Friday afternoon when volunteer students carried approximately 400 species of plants one-by one to the newly built greenhouse from the old one adjacent to the Botany Building.

Abrahamson has managed the greenhouses on campus since 1976 to 2000 and was also involved in designing the plans for the current greenhouse.

"I worked with architects to estimate the sun angles and to develop the heating and cooling systems," Abrahamson said.

The previous greenhouse was only 1,800 square feet as opposed to the current one with 3,200 square feet, approximately 1,400 of which is devoted to research.

Most of the species currently in the greenhouse were obtained from Smith College by former Professor of Biology Wayne Manning and his wife Peg, Abrahamson said. Manning and his wife managed the greenhouse from the 1940s to early '70's. Some cuttings were also received from the Longwood gardens and other University greenhouses.

Another feature of the greenhouse is that it uses integrated pest management (IPM). Natural insects and parasitoids were introduced to the greenhouse instead of pesticides.

"We have held pest management workshops to local farmers. If we can do it, then it can be applied to other greenhouses as well, " Abrahamson said.

When Flora Eyster, greenhouse caretaker, came on board eight years ago, she insisted on an organic greenhouse.

"We are a role model for the local community," Eyster said. Using IPM makes it safer for children and people with compromising immune systems to visit the greenhouse, Eyster said.

When it was first built, the environment control was a challenge. Since it is part of the Biology building, intense solar radiation needed to be managed with evaporative coolers, Abrahamson said. "We designed it from scratch ... not knowing in the beginning that it was going to be way too dry."

Overhead misters were also installed to pump moisture into the air during the winter months.

Another problem was insect control, Abrahamson said. There is a number of plants that are vulnerable, including the hibiscus and the bird of paradise, that are prone to damage by white flies. But the problem was alleviated through IPM.

Abramson said that student involvement has been really valuable.

"It is a nontraditional way to learn about ecology, evolution and horticulture with plants from all over the world," he said.

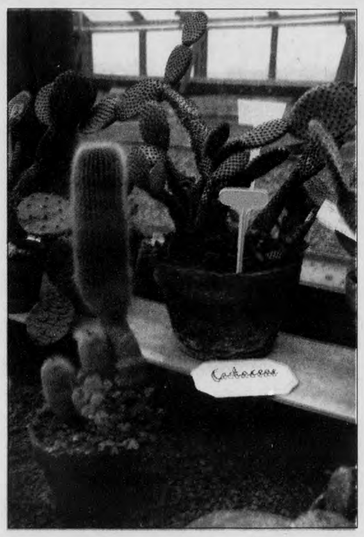
The past two weeks were photography weeks at the greenhouse, where art classes visit for inspiration. In the past, the film club has also used the greenhouse as a setting.

"Through this, we get the artistic angle of the greenhouse," Eyster said.

Other students and organizations, such as the biology club, make a big difference by volunteering to water the plants and clean, Eyster said.

The greenhouse currently has outreach programs for local schools. Eventually, Abramson hopes to have students give tours to the groups, instead of the caretakers.

Photos by Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian



The Bucknellian
March 30, 2007
Sports

Spring concert success

The Goo Goo Dolls put on an inspired performance Saturday with opener Augustana.

See page B10

Volume 139, Number 8 Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Crew squads stroke to success

Women's and men's teams advance a total of six boats to the finals at the Murphy Cup

By Brian Mulligan
Sports Editor

The Murphy Cup signified the beginning of the spring sprint season as the women's and men's crew teams took to the Schuylkill River in Philadelphia, Pa. The women's team advanced four different boats to finals, while the men's team advanced two boats to the final. Additionally, the Bison brought home the overall points cup for the first time.

"I was impressed with how our women handled themselves on race day, both on and off the water," said Steve Kish, women's head coach. "As for results, I was very happy for both the men's and women's teams. Winning the overall points trophy as Bucknell University for the first time was great for everyone and especially poignant for me as I am an alum ('92) of the men's team."

The women's team notched three championship finishes with the varsity eight, the second varsity eight and novice four winning their individual events. The squad improved upon last year's single win. The varsity eight made of coxswain-Jeweliet Yost '09, stroke-Kelly Henkler '09, 7-Jennie Trayes '08, 6-Katherine Brewster-Duffy '08, 5-Christine Drasba (grad), 4-Besty Schneider '10, 3-Page Kannor '09, 2-Catilin Doolin '09 and bow-Whitney Henry '09 edged out Patriot League rival Navy in final by two seconds, finishing the race in just under six minutes.

The second varsity boat won its preliminary heat with a time of 6:07.73, beating out St. Joseph's by 20 seconds. The team then took more than seven seconds off its preliminary time to win the finals, finishing ahead of Navy by just over a second. The boat for bow to stern consisted of coxswain-Katie Kessler '10, stroke-Lauren Olsen '07, 7-Laura Roberts '07, 6-Elizabeth Regan '10, 5-Renee Alemi '10, 4-Brittany Kaplan '08, 3-Megan Murphy '10, 2-Sophie Bird '08 and bow-Devon Mitchell '10.

The novice four posted a time of 7:21.35 in the preliminary round, crossing the finish line right behind Rutgers. The boat of coxswain-Mary Wilson '10, stroke-Kate Courtein '10, 3-Stefanie Marquette '10, 2-Jen Butler '10 and bow-Chrissy Friedlander '10 still qualified for the final heat. The boat managed to cut 40 seconds off its preliminary time and win the race, finishing the two kilometer race in 6:43.40.

The fourth women's boat to reach the finals was the second varsity four, consisting of coxswain-Mary Wilson '10, stroke-Susan Shadle '07, 3-Amanada Gallina '08, 2-Jessica Glenn '08 and bow-Amy VanNostrand '08. The team won its preliminary heat to make into the finals, but placed third behind Navy and Penn State, clocking a time of 7:00.58. The success of all the women's boats earned them the overall points cup for the Murphy Cup for the first time in Bison history.

The men's team has similar success, placing two boats in the finals. The men's varsity lightweight eight placed second overall behind Patriot League rival Lehigh, notching a time of 5:58.52, while the men's novice eight won its final. The boat beat out Army's and Lehigh's top boats by over 5 seconds.

"Our team raced very well," said Paul Bugenhagen, men's head coach. "The early season test gave us a chance to size up the majority of the Patriot League and I like where we stand."

The second-place lightweight boat consisted of coxswain-Mike Gunderson '10, stroke-Vic Ceci '09, 7-John Conte '09, 6-Cody Crooke '07, 5-Adam Lessing '10, 4-Kazuhiro Kawamura '10, 3-Peter Kasper '10, 2-Kurt Skvarla '10 and bow-David Boruta '07.

The gold medalist novice boat was directed by coxswain Kells Green '10 and from stern to bow was made up of stroke Kyle Lafferty '10, Zach Etzel '10, George Rockett '10, Dan Elies '10, David Ross '10, Zach Manburg '10, Zack Konsin '10 and Bryon Garofalis '10.

The men's varsity four also had a spectacular performance in the finals, taking second place overall. The team of stroke-David Wingate '08, 3-JT Dean '07, 2-Frank Rosenthal '07, 1-Ben Finio '07 and coxswain-Wenbo Shan '10 clocked a time of 6:16.01, only 6 seconds behind first place Pitt.

"I think we raced very well as a team, all things considered. Both the lightweight 8 and the varsity 4, although falling short of making the finals, definitely made a strong showing on the water," Rockett said.

After a successful start the season, the women's team will travel back to the Schuylkill River on Saturday to take on Georgetown and Temple, beginning at 1 p.m. The men's team will make the trip to Marietta Ohio to participate in the Marietta Invitational Saturday.

"I'm really excited that the spring season is finally here!" Mitchell said. "With the majority of the team, myself included, not able to race during the fall because of the cancellation of the Head of the Schuylkill and our home regatta, this racing season has been a long time coming."

Courtesy of Athletic Communications

Both the women's and the men's crew teams won the overall points cup, tallying the most points of the day.

Saylor Says

By Matthew Saylor
Associate Editor of Content

1. The department of athletics should be commended for its organization of the trip to Holy Cross for the men's basketball Patriot League Tournament championship game. There were more than a dozen sponsors who paid for the buses so that students and other fans could ride for free. Free T-shirts and hats (which I am wearing on my head right now, courtesy of the Office of the President) were distributed to all who went, along with a bagged lunch. The only thing that would have made the trip perfect would have been a win.

2. Speaking of men's basketball, can someone explain to me how we (and yes, I refer to the team as "we" – we are all Bison) did not receive an invitation to the National Invitation Tournament (NIT)? We played all but three games of our out-of-conference schedule on the road, played top-notch competition and tied for the best record in the Patriot League with Holy Cross. If we had defeated Holy Cross, the Crusaders were guaranteed an NIT bid because they were the top-seed in the Patriot League Tournament. We did not get the automatic bid because the league's tie-breaking procedure designated the

See SAYLOR page B5

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Valentia Rozas '10 searches the pool in a recent home game. Rozas is third on the team in goals, posting 36 this season.

First-year Profile: Valentina Rozas

By Connie Barko
Senior Writer

It comes as no surprise that Division I coaches look for that one high school athlete who will contribute to the future of their programs. First-year Valentina Rozas '10, a center forward for the women's water polo team, was no exception. Assistant coach John Abdou knew Rozas' coach from high school and started recruiting her early.

"I remember when we were recruiting Val last year," Sadie Abuhoff '07 said. "Before she arrived for her visit, our assistant coach told us we needed to do whatever we had to do to make her feel like Bucknell was where she belonged because she was a necessary addition to our team."

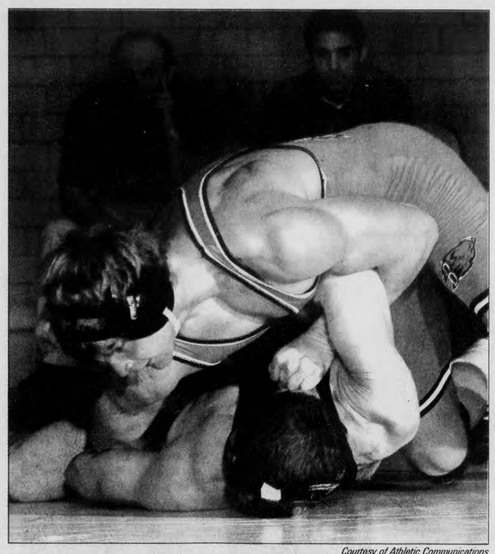
The team was successful at convincing Rozas to come to the University although she had spent her adolescent years on the west coast in distant Pico Rivera, California. Her contribution to the squad was immediate. She was a starter right from her first game and is now scouted by opponents because of her reputation as a scorer.

"Valentina has been put in the difficult position coaches hate to put on freshman – being asked to handle a significant role on our squad right away," Head Coach John Zeigler said. "She has responded remarkably, posting high scoring numbers and contributing heavily on the defensive end."

See ROZAS page B3

Wrestlers grapple with nation's best

The top three Bison wrestlers compete in the NCAA Championships



Courtesy of Athletic Communications

Eric Lapotsky '10 battles in the NCAA Championships. Lapotsky would post the biggest upset by a Bucknellian of the two day match, defeating No. 1 seed Maxwell Askren in the consolation round for the 197-pound weight class.

By Kyle Barndollar
Writer

Sophomore Eric Lapotsky's upset victory over the nation's top wrestler, Maxwell Askren of Missouri, highlighted a successful showing by the wrestling team at the NCAA Championships March 15-16. Lapotsky managed two wins while Andy Rendos '10 and Dave Marble '10 each scored opening round victories. All three Bison qualifiers reached day two of competition.

The Bison placed 30th out of 74 schools after day two at nationals, outscoring key Eastern Intercollegiate Wrestling Association (EIWA) opponents like Lehigh, Harvard and Columbia as their impressive inaugural season came to an end.

"It was great to see our guys compete against the best competition in the country," Assistant Coach Larry Sprecher said. "All three of our guys won matches and wrestled like they have all year, very unlike freshmen."

Lapotsky fell 8-3 to Michigan's Nick Roy in the first round, but he rebounded with a pin on James Gibson of Edinboro in the wrestleback bracket to set up his meeting with Askren. Lapotsky stormed back from a 2-0 deficit to shock the No. 1 wrestler in the 197-pound. bracket 5-2.

"There is nothing like 15,000 fans on their feet cheering because your guy has the number-one kid in the country on his back," Sprecher said. "Opportunities like that come along only so often, and for Eric to step up as a freshman like that was amazing."

Askren, whose brother Ben breezed through the 174-pound. bracket on the way to his second consecutive national title, was a disappointing 0-2 in the tournament. Lapotsky would lose his next match to Jared Villers of West Virginia, ending his tournament with a 2-2 record.

Rendos won a 12-4 major decision over Brian Perry of Stanford in his first match at 165 pounds. He fell in his next two matches, losing 12-4 to No. 3-seed Eric Tannenbaum of Michigan and 4-2 to Steve Anceravage of Cornell, the No. 3 seed in the loser's bracket.

"I learned so much while I was out there," Rendos said, "like what I need to do in the offseason, and also what I need to fix in my style of wrestling."

In the 133-lb. bracket, Marble won his first match over Tyler Gillashaw of Cal State Fullerton 15-7, before losing 7-0 to No. 1 seed Nick Simmons of

See WRESTLE page B5

Water polo heads out west

By Shannon Pitsch
Sports Editor

Compiling a 3-5 record in the last two weeks of competition, the women's water polo team looks forward to ending conference play on a high note. The team went 0-2 in conference play at the start of spring break losing to Princeton (15-12) and Maryland (8-6), followed by a trip to California earning wins against California Baptist (13-12), Redlands (10-6) and Claremont-Mudd-Scripps (13-8), while falling to Loyola Marymount (12-3), UC Irvine (15-6) and Cal State Northridge (13-8). The team is now just shy of .500 with an 11-12 record.

Princeton 15
Bucknell 12

The Bison began its spring break with a pair of conference matches at Princeton University. On March 9 the team took on No. 18 Princeton University for the first time this season. Despite a season-high five goals, two assists and a career-high seven ejections from Meagan Gins '08, the team fell 15-12 in the break opener. Elizabeth Jensen '07 and Aubrey Rowe '09 contributed three and two goals respectively, while Mandy Bynum '07 notched six saves in the loss.

On March 10 the team faced the University of Maryland. Hoping for a third victory against Maryland for the season, the team came out firing leading 2-1 at the end of the first quarter. Valentina Rozas '10 led the offense with four goals and one assist, but the Terrapins fought hard, tying the game at 4-4 at the end of the first half. Each team scored one in the remaining two quarters, bringing the game into overtime play. Despite five saves in goal from Bynum and eight from Alison Carter '10, Maryland scored two goals in the six minute overtime, winning 8-6.

Maryland 8
Bucknell 6

For the remainder of spring break, the Bison returned to the west coast for tougher California competition. Undeniably, the highlight of the trip was a triple overtime victory over California Baptist on March 12.

"We went into the game mentally focused on a win, and did not ever lose this focus," Rowe said. "The game went into three sudden death periods, and we played strong as a team until we won."

Bucknell 13
Cal Baptist 12

At the end of regulation play the score was tied at 8-8. Each overtime consisted of two, three-minute periods, and at the end of the first, the Cal Baptist initially outscored the Bison 3-2. Behind the offensive efforts of Rozas and Jensen, each with four goals, the team responded to end the first overtime 12-12. The tension rose between the two teams as the second overtime ended without a goal, leaving the score once again at 12-12. Finally, with one minute and 43 seconds left on the clock, Rozas lead the Bison to a 13-12 victory.

"There were many times in this game that our team could have given up, but we chose to persevere through some very adverse situations," Gins said.

Bucknell 10
Redlands 6

Later that night, the Bison had to travel to Redlands, Calif. to take on the No. 1 division three school in the country, Redlands University.

"Several weeks earlier we beat them in San Diego and they wanted revenge at their home pool," Head Coach John Zeigler said. "Utilizing a different rotation we played three starters and three non-starters in four-minute rotations the entire first half. We also sat our starting goalie the first half. We told the team beforehand that we were doing this and that the goal would be to be tied at the half and then throw in the starters in the second half."

The first half ended with a tied score of 4-4, but the Bison starters returned to dominate and win 10-6 at the end of 32 minutes. Jensen and Rowe each notched three goals in the victory, while Rozas followed with two.

Bucknell 13
Mudd-Scripps 8

During the rest of the week, the Orange and Blue continued its winning streak with a 13-8 win over Claremont-Mudd-Scripps, before dropping three consecutive games to ranked opponents. The team lost to No. 11 Loyola Marymount, No. 5 UC Irvine and No. 19 Cal State Northridge.

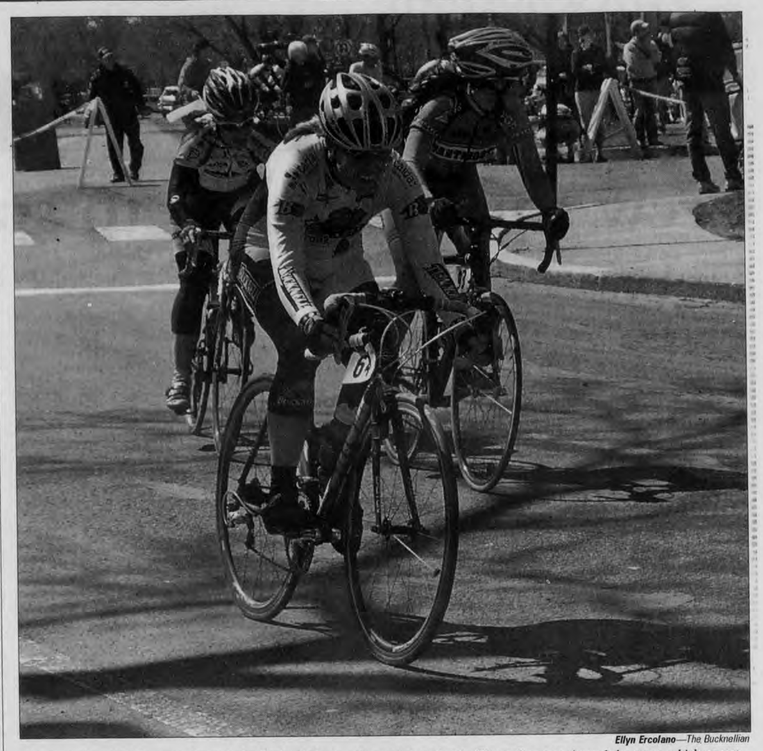
UC Irvine 15
Bucknell 6

Loyola M 12
Bucknell 3

CSN 13
Bucknell 8

"Our second California trip of the year will be a crucial part of our team's success during championships," Assistant Coach John Abdou said. "It was important that we play different opponents and train hard in an outdoor setting."

The team will finish competition in the next two weeks, beginning with matches against Maryland and George Washington this weekend.



Ellyn Ercolano—The Bucknellian

Angela Sherbondy '07 powers through the Bucknell Cycling Classic last weekend. The cycling team hosted the event, which attracted both college cyclists and the local community with a weekend long cycling extravaganza.

Cycling race connects students to town

Bison host third annual Bucknell Cycling Classic, featuring top cyclists

By Ty Clark
Senior Writer

This weekend, the University hosted the Bucknell Cycling Classic, a series of races around Lewisburg that attracts significant local attention and highlights a group of students who have built their sport from the ground up.

"It all started two years ago," said Todd Dowling '07. "We have hosted a race on campus for the past three years, but each year we have tried to make the event bigger and better." Bigger and better means going from one race to three, one day to two and an amazing weekend for the University cycling team from all perspectives. This accomplishment is magnified when one considers that the University has not hosted a weekend event in over a decade.

"The cycling team really wants to thank Bucknell and the Lewisburg community for their support this past weekend," Dowling said. "The race would not have been possible without the hard work of many people throughout the community."

Thanks to such hard work, the University was able to host a race on its campus, a time trial six miles from campus and a road race near Mifflinburg.

The cornerstone of the weekend was the race around the University and downtown Lewisburg, which drew steady crowds throughout its duration. The cycling team's reasoning for this setup was three-fold: it provided a much more exciting course for both the racers and the spectators, it connected University with downtown Lewisburg and it allowed residents from the campus and community to view a sporting event they normally wouldn't see.

> "The cycling team really wants to thank Bucknell and the Lewisburg community for their support this past weekend. The race would not have been possible without the hard work of many people throughout the community."
>
> —Todd Dowling '07

As Dowling said, "It provided a perfect number of fast straight-aways and challenging turns."

In the race, Mike Chauner '08, took first in the highly competitive men's A field, while Janine Hauber '09, Laura Roberts '07 and Chisato Fukuda '07 took first, second and third respectively in the women's C division, demonstrating the quickly growing quality of the University cyclists. Angela Sherbondy '07 also grabbed 10th in the women's A.

Dowling admits they benefited from knowing the course and practicing on it numerous times. The men's A team, consisting of Dowling, Adam Kahler '07, Charlie Alexander '07 and Chauner, won the time trial race against the clock by covering the eight mile course in 15 minutes, 10 seconds, beating the second place Penn State team by twenty seconds.

The men's B team of Kyle Friis '09, Matt Cocola '09 and Aaron Cravez '10 finished fourth, despite missing injured teammate Jeff Boehmer '09. Also winning the team time trial in the women's C category were Hauber and Fukuda.

Although the weather was terrific most of the weekend, Saturday afternoon's road race was a different affair. The difficulty of a 54-mile race was compounded by the driving rain and wind that arose during the contest. Despite the weather, the women's C and men's A teams continued a strong performance, scoring points with a handful of top 10 finishes. Fukuda took third in the women's C and Danielle Monteverde '07 took fourth. Chauner took fifth and Alexander took sixth in the men's A category.

"It was a great weekend," Dowling said. "It is always great to see everything come together after that much hard work and we appreciate everyone's contributions."

Women's golf shoots past the competition

Despite lackluster start, the Orange and Blue place one golfer in top 10 and add scores to the history books

By Barbara Perlman
Sports Editor

After a successful showing at the Shamrock Intercollegiate over spring break, the women's golf team headed down south to William and Mary for a two-day invitational. The team tied for ninth out of 19 teams, with both Deirdre Moran '09 and Amy Loughney '08 finishing in the top 10.

"The team played very well amongst a strong field," Moran said. "It's great that we can score in the 70s and low 80s considering we have only had a few rounds of 18 holes under our belts so far this season."

The Bison got off to a slow start on the first day of competition. Loughney lead the team with 77, tailed by team captain Teri Schlang '07 who shot 81, Moran with 82 and Kathryn Batchelor '08 who shot 88. After a full day of golfing, Loughney was the only Bison to make the top 10, with her ninth place start. At the end of the day, the Orange and Blue were tied with both Marshall and Virginia for eighth place.

While the Bison did not move up in the standings on day two, they improved their game, rivaling some of the nation's best programs.

"This past weekend's performance started off mediocre, but we really stepped it up on Sunday," Schlang said. "Even though we didn't move anywhere in the field, we brought ourselves a lot closer to the leaders...Sunday's round of 316 is one of the better rounds in our programs history, and to only be one shot shy of Penn State is huge."

> "This season could potentially be the best in the history of Bucknell Women's Golf. The team has the talent and the experience to string together some good scores."
>
> —Deirdre Moran '09

Moran led the team, shooting 74, a new personal best and only one short of the University record. After shooting 82 on the previous day, the impressive score catapulted Moran to a tie for13th place overall. Loughney continued to shine, as she shot 76 for the day. The Bison tied with Virginia for ninth place, posting an overall score of 644, falling behind Western Michigan, who shot 617, Winthrop (624), and Columbia (636).

"The player to watch [right now] is Deirdre Moran," Loughney said. "She has always been a solid, consistent player for our team, but two weekends in a row now she has posted career-best scores."

With the trio of Schlang, Loughney and Moran leading the way, the team looks towards the coming season with anticipation.

"This season could potentially be the best in the history of Bucknell Women's Golf," Moran said. "The team has the talent and the experience to string together some good scores. Next week, we have a good opportunity to do well at Longwood's Tournament."

The Bison head back to Virginia on Monday for the Longwood Invitational.

Courtesy of Athletic Communications

Deidre Moran '09 swung back on the second day of the William and Mary Invitational with a personal best of 74.

Orange and blue fail to three-peat

Men's basketball squad fights back after early deficit, but falls short of Patriot League Championship title

Ryan Winn - The Bucknellian

John Griffin '08 searches for a passing lane against Army. The Bison finished their season with an impressive record of 22-9 and were Patriot League regular-season co-champions.

By Matthew Saylor
Associate Editor of Content

Worcester, Mass. — For the third consecutive year, the battle for Patriot League supremacy in men's basketball came down to Holy Cross and Bucknell. Unfortunately, this year the Crusaders emerged on top.

Holy Cross 74
Bucknell 66

Holy Cross defeated the Bison 74-66 to win the Patriot League Tournament title on March 9 at Worcester, Mass. A sold-out Hart Center crowd of 4,000, including more than 1,000 fans of the Orange and Blue, and a national television audience watching on ESPN2, witnessed another classic match-up between the two schools.

"It was a typical Bucknell-Holy Cross type of game," Bison Head Coach Pat Flannery '80 said. "Both teams play so hard, and it could have gone either way."

The Bison got off to a quick start, taking a 9-2 lead at the 16:13 mark of the first half. John Griffin '08 drilled a three-pointer and was fouled by the Crusaders' Torey Thomas, leading to a four-point play. Chris McNaughton '07 hit a corner jump shot, and Justin Castleberry '09 continued his season-long strong play against Holy Cross by hitting a three-pointer of his own.

The Crusaders (25-9) would not let the Bison (22-9) maintain the lead for long, as their senior duo of Patriot League Player of the Year Keith Simmons and Patriot League Defensive Player of the Year Thomas scored the team's first 11 points and tied the game at 11.

Jason Vegotsky '09 hit another three-pointer, giving the Bison a 14-11 lead, but an 8-0 run by Holy Cross would take away the last lead the Orange and Blue would have.

McNaughton picked up his second foul with 9:13 to go in the half with the Bison down 21-16. With him sitting for the majority of the rest of the half, the Orange and Blue struggled offensively and fell behind 35-22.

Simmons scored 13 points, Thomas added eight points and four assists and Crusaders' center Tim Clifford blocked six shots, helping to limit the Bison to a 26.9 percent shooting in the opening stanza. Pat Doherty also hurt the Orange and Blue off the bench for Holy Cross, scoring eight points, including two threes.

The Orange and Blue entered the locker room with no one scoring more than four points and having committed nine turnovers. The team may have been down, but it was not out.

"We had the mindset that we had to keep shooting even though some weren't going down early and let the percentages even out," Castleberry said.

The Crusaders continued to shoot as well and extended their lead to a game-high 19 points, 46-27, just 3:14 into the second half.

It was then that the Bison would put together one of their great runs over the past couple of seasons.

"Chris, Abe [Badmus '07] and me thought it might be our last chance to wear this uniform, so we knew we had to step it up," tri-captain Donald Brown '07 said. "I was proud of the way we never quit."

The Orange and Blue scored the next 13 points, cutting the Holy Cross lead to six with 11:41 still left to play. Griffin hit a three-pointer, followed by a Brown layup, four straight free throws from McNaughton and Darren Mastropaolo '08, a Castleberry drive and layup that rolled up over the rim good and a McNaughton inside shot. A Clifford jumper finally stopped the Bison stampede, but the Sojka Psychos who had made the journey north were back into the game and the blowout was no longer.

A Simmons three-pointer extended the Crusaders lead back to nine, 51-42, but the Orange and Blue would respond with another run, scoring 11 of the next 13 to tie the game at 53.

Castleberry keyed that run, nailing a three-pointer off of an inbounds pass from Vegotsky. He then hit a tough running jump shot from just inside the foul line. He followed this with a steal and an attempt at some more fast-break points. He missed the layup, but Brown made sure the Bison run continued with a rim-rattling put-back slam dunk and a two-handed wave to the stunned Crusaders' faithful. The rim actually was tilted downward after the play and was readjusted during the next time out.

Mastropaolo followed a Brown miss with a layup of his own that would tie the game at 53-53. Badmus was fouled hard by Thomas on a breakaway, but was unable to hit either of his two free throws that would have given the Bison the ever elusive lead.

Holy Cross would score the next seven points, including a back-breaking three-pointer by Thomas with 3:15 left to play, that would give the Crusaders a 60-53 lead.

"You have to have some testosterone going somewhere to make that kind of shot," Holy Cross Head Coach Ralph Willard said.

Thomas knew that he was going to have an opportunity to take the shot.

"I knew Castleberry was going to go under the screen," he said. "Tim did a great job of burying him, and I had an open look."

The game was not over, but the Crusaders had regained momentum. A Badmus three cut the lead to four, as would two McNaughton free throws, but the Orange and Blue would never get closer. A pair of long Griffin threes in the final minute would give the Bison one more gasp, but Holy Cross made all 16 of its free throws in the last five minutes of the game.

"Nobody is going to take away from us the way we battled back in the second half," Flannery said. "I was so proud of how hard we worked. We never quit, and that is a testament to our three seniors."

It was a pair of Holy Cross seniors, though, that would prove to be the difference.

"I am so happy for our two seniors, who have been on the cusp of this for three years," Willard said. "I can't say enough about them as people. I haven't coached two better players in my life."

> "Nobody is going to take away from us the way we battled back in the second half. I was so proud of how hard we worked. We never quit, and that is a testament to our three seniors."
>
> —Pat Flannery '80

Thomas finished the game with a career-high 28 points, making 13 of his 15 free throw attempts. Simmons scored 23, but was limited to just one field goal in the second half, due to the stifling Bison defense.

"We upped the defensive pressure in the second half, a little out of desperation since we were so far behind," Flannery said. "Once we got back in it our crowd gave us a lift, but we just couldn't get over the hump."

The Bison were led by 15 points from Griffin, who made four of the team's eight three-pointers. Castleberry scored 10, and McNaughton and Brown scored 12 and 11, respectively, in their final game as members of the Orange and Blue.

The Crusaders would lose to Southern Illinois 61-51 in the first round of the NCAA Tournament. The Bison would not receive an at-large bid to either the NCAA or the NIT tournaments.

Badmus, Brown and McNaughton end their careers having won a University record 87 games, combining to play in 365 games, score 3,048 points, grab 1,502 rebounds, hand out 608 assists and make 399 steals.

Women's tennis overcomes dry spell

Orange and Blue overcome Niagara notching two doubles and four singles match wins

By Ellis Hudes
Senior Writer

The women's tennis team lost two of its three matches in the Hilton Head Tournament over spring break, falling to Dayton 5-2, defeating Niagara 5-2, and dropping a 7-0 decision to Colorado State. The victory over Niagara snapped the Bison's six-game losing streak, putting them at 2-9 overall this season.

Dayton 5
Bucknell 2

In its tournament debut against Dayton, the Bison took away some positives after a strong doubles showing. Tania Varela '10 was particularly impressive as she teamed up with Ashley Globerman '09 to defeat Dayton's Mackenzie Hoops and Nicole Dzubay 8-4. This victory clinched the doubles point for the Orange and Blue since the tandem of Carlin Calcaterra '10 and Paulina Gamboa '09 beat Allysa Detroy and Kate Mellion 8-2 in the previous doubles match.

The Bison did not fare as well in singles, collecting only one point from another Varela win. Despite its one-sidedness, the day did feature some close battles. Renee Weissend '10 stretched Maggie Ernst to a third-set tiebreaker before falling 6-4, 1-6, 10-8. JoAnna Grossman '09 hung tight with Hoops for two close sets in a 7-5, 7-5 loss.

The team's losing skid finally ended in the second tournament match when it overcame Niagara 5-2. The two winning pairings against Dayton once again assured that the Orange and Blue got off to a good start by seizing the doubles point. Calcatterra and Gamboa snuck by Jennifer Cremieux and Molly Matthews 9-7 while Globerman and Varela pulled off an 8-5 win over Vanja Lakic and Shella Dargout.

Bucknell 5
Niagara 2

Singles play improved from the day before as four of six Bison players helped clinch the match over Niagara. Gamboa, Varela, Globerman and Calcaterra all came away with straight set wins over their respective Niagara opponents. Gamboa ended her personal losing streak with a convincing 6-2, 6-2 victory over Lakic.

The Orange and Blue were shut out by Colorado State on the last day of the tournament. A talented Rams squad ran through singles and doubles competition without dropping any sets. For Varela and Globerman, a two-match winning streak in doubles ended in an 8-2 loss to Laura Neal and Lauren Strasburger. The team was looking to rebound from this tough defeat against UMBC but inclement weather ultimately postponed the contest, which will take place on April 21.

Colorado St 7
Bucknell 0

The Bison will have to look forward to a doubleheader against Fordham and NJIT at the University tennis courts this Saturday.

Bison face tough opponents in Rebel Spring Games

By Jake Meyer
Contributing Writer

While many Bucknellians were hitting the beach this spring break, the softball team took the field in the Rebel Spring Games. It was a tough trip for the Bison, who went 2-4 for the tournament, beating Butler and Dayton, but falling to Mississippi Valley State, Vermont, Wisconsin-Green Bay and Saint Louis, dropping the Bison to 4-11 overall.

The Bison started the Rebel Spring games strong, beating Butler 2-1. Designated hitter Lauren Litts''07 RBI in the first inning put the Bison up early. Butler answered and the score was tied at one. During the fifth inning Right fielder Monica Grinage '07 hit a sacrifice pop fly to score Ashley Carlson '09 and put the Bison up for good. Bison pitcher Meaghan Haley '09 threw for her third complete game.

Overall, Bucknell's bats were white hot against the Bulldogs. They collected nine hits, seven against Bulldog pitcher Nikki Naffziger. Butler had only three hits, due to good fielding and Haley's pitching.

Throughout the season, Bison softball has struggled in its second game of the day in tournament play. Unfortunately, March 13th was no different and the Bison dropped its afternoon game against Mississippi Valley State 4-3. The nail biter featured a dramatic come-from-behind attempt from the Bison that fell just short. MVS jumped to an early 3-0 lead in the second inning. The Bison battled back with Sherry Finkel '10 scoring off of a fielding error and Litts' single drove in Grinage. But Mississippi responded with another run in the fifth inning, effectively putting the game out of reach. For the game, Carlson went an impressive four-for-four at bat

"My teammates have been hitting really well, and that's helped my hitting," Carlson said. "It takes the pressure of off you."

Litts smashed four hits and two RBIs and Grinage had four hits and one RBI.

On March 14th the Bison repeated their pattern, winning their morning game 5-1 against Dayton and losing a high scoring shootout to Vermont 9-1 in the evening.

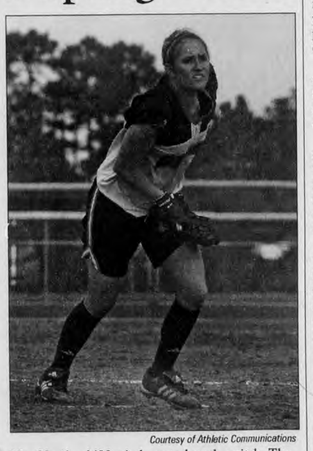
The Bison came out blazing against Dayton. Litts hit a double that scored three for the Bison, giving them the lead that they would keep for the rest of the game. On the mound Christie Wiest '08 pitched a consistent game with five strikeouts. Carlson went two-for-five against Dayton's pitching.

That night the Orange and Blue found themselves hurting defensively against Vermont. Eight runs were given up in the second inning. The third saw another two Vermont players sliding home. The Orange and Blue offense picked up the slack and managed to drive in nine runs. Litts had one hit and two RBIs, giving her an incredible five for the day. Haley hurled seven strikeouts and third basewoman Mary Pavlovich '10 hit two-of-five for the game.

The Bison finished out the tournament with a 10-9 heartbreaker against Wisconsin-Green Bay and an 11-5 blowout versus Saint Louis.

"We had some positives and negatives come out of Florida" Team Captain Grinage said. "We saw the power of our bats and the electricity that our offense can bring. We also learned that we could fault in the defensive division... but come Patriot Leagues we should be in a great position."

The team will begin Patriot League play this weekend, hosting Lafayette in a two-day series, beginning Saturday at 1 p.m.



Courtesy of Athletic Communications

Meg Murihead '09 winds up to launch a pitch. The team will host its first home game this weekend against Patriot League rival Lafayette.

ROZAS From page B1

Rozas currently has the third highest number of goals among her teammates with 36 in 23 games. She also has 16 assists and 24 steals.

Although Rozas now plays a significant role on the squad, she did not grow up playing water polo like other Division I athletes. She fell into the sport by accident at El Rancho High School in California.

"I started playing when I was a freshman," Rozas said. "Before that I didn't even know how to swim. I tried out and wasn't really into it, but somehow I got in the club."

Rozas picked up the fundamentals of the sport quickly with the help of her high school coach and also by mimicking the moves of other girls. Rozas became a three-time letter winner and MVP. During her junior year, El Rancho's club team placed ninth in the Junior Olympics.

Her teammates and coach seemed to attribute the secret of Rozas' achievements in high school and college to her work ethic.

Abuhoff said, "You get the sense that she is always giving 100 percent. Every time there is a break in a game she comes to the huddle huffing-and-puffing, which means she's been hustling."

Rozas' ability to push herself will be a significant factor as she matures in the program and pursues a more significant leadership role. Glimpses of this potential have already been witnessed in recent matches. On March 12, Rozas scored the winning goal in a third sudden death overtime game against California Baptist.

"Valentina will be a force in our league for her entire term," Zeigler said. "She is the example of how if someone works hard and has passion for life they can achieve whatever they set out to do."

Bison end season with loss in WNIT

Women's basketball falls to Hartford, 70-54, to end a record-breaking season for the Orange and Blue

By Matthew Saylor
Associate Editor of Content

A successful season for the women's basketball team came to a close on March 15 with a 70-54 loss to Hartford in the first round of the Women's National Invitation Tournament (WNIT). The Bison ended the year with a 20-11 record, their best record since the 2001-2002 team also went 20-11.

Hartford 70 Bucknell 54

Hartford (25-9) shot an impressive 46.2 percent from the field against the Bison and the Hawks outrebounded the Orange and Blue 39-28.

"We had great energy and intensity," Head Coach Kathy Fedorjaka said. "We just did not execute real well."

The Orange and Blue struggled to find an offensive rhythm, especially when the Hawks used a zone defense. The team shot only 34.0 percent from the field, and missed 12 of 14 three-point attempts.

The Bison matched the Hawks step-for-step early in the game, and had an 18-15 lead with eight minutes and 46 seconds to go until halftime. Hartford then went over an 11-0 run, helped by three Orange and Blue turnovers, to take a 26-18 lead. The Bison were able to cut that lead down to three, thanks to a fast-break layup by Lindsey Hollobaugh '07 with 2:33 to go, but the Hawks entered the half with a 31-24 lead.

The Bison tried to retake some momentum in the second half, but a controversial charging call on Kesha Champion '08 with 14:17 left to play, and the Bison down 41-32, would prove to be a turning point for the Orange and Blue. This would be the last time in the game that Hartford would have a lead less than 10 points, and the Hawks would actually lead by as much as 24 before the final whistle.

Lauren Schober '09 led the Bison with 11 points and Hope Foster '08 added 10 points and a game-high eight rebounds. Kristina Collymore '08 scored a season-high eight points in a game that saw all 10 Bison players score.

"Collymore really showed me something in this game," Fedorjaka said of her junior point guard. "It gives her something to build on going into next season."

The Orange and Blue will return eight members of its team next year, but lose Hollobaugh and Jacquie Seawright '07 to graduation.

"I hope this team takes some sense of Hollobaugh with them next season," Fedorjaka said. "Same with Seawright."

A two-time team captain, Hollobaugh graduates with 1,386 career points, ranking sixth in University history. Her 108 three-pointers rank third, and she averaged an impressive 34.4 minutes per game in her 108 career appearances. She also added 532 rebounds, 264 assists, 153 steals and scored in double-figures in 75 games.

Seawright only played on the team for two years, but served as a team captain as a junior and averaged 7.2 points per game in over 60 contests. Over her four-year collegiate career she scored 966 points and snared 466 rebounds.

The team does return two members of the All-Patriot League First Team, Foster and Amanda Brown '09.

"Through regular-season play, those were two of the top three players in the league," Fedorjaka said. "There are definitely areas for them to improve though and the true test will be the [Patriot League Tournament] championship."

Patriot League Defensive Player of the Year Champion also returns, as does Schober.

"Schober was one of our stronger players down the stretch this season," Fedorjaka said. "I want her to shoot all summer."

Schober sees herself taking on a bigger role next season.

"I really have to step-up," Schober said. "We [players] have had the example set for us and now it is time to set the example. I want to be strong in all areas as a leader, games, practices, on the court and off."

This summer, the forward plans to work more on her guard skills.

"I want things to become like second nature," Schober said. "I can take smaller players inside, and bigger players outside, but I want to be even more of a double threat."

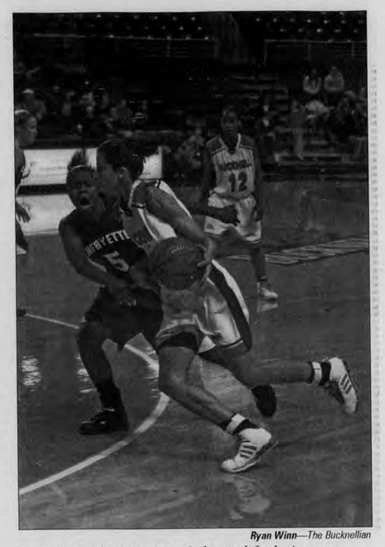
Fedorjaka sees the quartet of Foster, Brown, Champion and Schober as all-conference caliber players. She also likes what she has to work with in terms of the other returning members.

"Le' Le' [LeSeur '10] made a lot of progress this season," Fedorjaka said. "I really want to see her expand on her game. I'm really excited about Collymore going into next year, and Andrea Wright ['08] is an excellent athlete."

The Bison also have commitments from at least three recruits, with the potential to add a fourth. This group will add size (two players over six feet), rebounding, scoring and depth to an already well-rounded squad.

"I see the lose to Colgate [in the Patriot League Tournament] as a very teachable moment," Fedorjaka said. "We need to use that as motivation for next year, in summer workouts, the weight room, practice..."

The team accomplished a goal in winning the regular-season league title. It knows what it has to do to reach its main goal — to win the Patriot League Tournament.



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Jaquie Seawright drives past a Lafayette defender in a past home game. After failing to clinch the NCAA bid, the Bison fell in the first round of the WNIT consolation tournament.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Lauren Deitrich '08 accelerates down the field. Deitrich has started all eight games this season, scoring six goals and snatching 23 ground balls.

Streak stops at 4 for the Orange and Blue

By Kyle Barndollar
Writer

UC Davis 13 Bucknell 2

The women's lacrosse team had its four-game winning streak snapped Wednesday by UC Davis. The Aggies scored the final 11 goals of the game on their way to a 13-2 victory. The Bison, now 4-4, went unbeaten in the last three weeks, posting away victories over Long Island University (LIU), Duquesne and Lehigh, while topping Manhattan at home.

Back-to-back goals from Bonnie Buechel '09 and Paige Kasschau '10 knotted the game at 2-2 midway through the first half. The Aggies ran away from there, holding the Bison scoreless for the final 45 minutes. The Bison did manage to win 10 of 16 draw controls, and goalie Katie Hartsock '10 made 13 saves in the losing effort.

Bucknell 13 Lehigh 12

Four days earlier, the Orange and Blue beat Patriot League rival Lehigh in dramatic fashion, as Alison Heffernan '10 scored the game-winning goal with just 1:15 remaining. Buechel scored five goals and Carol Donohue '10 added one goal and four assists, as the Bison posted their second-highest goal total of the season.

The Mountain Hawks didn't seem to want to go away, as they made three separate runs of three goals or more, including one over the last seven minutes to tie the game at 12-12. After a turnover, Buechel found the streaking Heffernan, who beat the goalie and the post that seemed to be haunting the Bison for the latter half of the game to secure the victory.

Bucknell 12 Manhattan 6

It was Donohue that led the scoring for the Bison with five goals against Manhattan to continue her scoring tear that reached five straight games with at least four points. The Bison led 8-2 at halftime and didn't look back from there, as they coasted to a 12-6 victory. Chelsea Peters '10 also scored two goals in the game, and Buechel managed two goals and two assists, while Hartsock was strong in net again with 12 saves against the Jaspers.

Bucknell 11 Duquesne 9

It was another shootout at Duquesne on March 18, but the Bison proved to have too much firepower for the Dukes. The key to the game may not have been Donohue's assist and four goals, or Buechel's assist and three goals, but the strong defensive play of the Bison. Hartsock made a career-high 18 saves, as her team held Duquesne well below their goals-per-game average, and won 11-9. Alex Radebaugh '09 helped to shut down the Dukes' leading scorer, who could only muster one assist on the day.

Bucknell 18 LIU 5

The Bison notched the first win of their four-game streak against LIU in a neutral-site game in West Palm Beach, Fla. The Orange and Blue dominated LIU in the second half, lighting up the Blackbirds with 11 straight goals to stretch a three-goal halftime lead into a comfortable 18-5 win. Peters and Donohue each netted four goals, and Sarah Collins '09 added three goals and an assist in the rout.

The four-game win provided a much-needed rebound for the Bison, starting the season with three straight losses. Despite the loss to a talented UC Davis squad, the team looks to have begun to gel, and will face a tough conference opponent on Saturday at Colgate.

"As a coach, you decide what level of expectation you can have with a team; I have raised the bar every day and every game with this team, and they have exceeded our expectations," said Head Coach Jess Spadafora.

No. 16 Bison come up short in defensive struggle

By Wes Trowbridge
Writer

Navy 6 Bucknell 3

No. 16 Bison fell to No. 4 Navy on Sunday at Christy Mathewson-Memorial Stadium in a battle that proved why the Native Americans called the game of lacrosse "little brother of war." The overpowering defenses dominated the game, but the undefeated Midshipmen prevailed 6-3 in a clash between two of the top teams in not just the Patriot League, but the country.

The Bison ruthless defense, unleashing several bone-crushing checks while holding Navy's offense, the sixth highest scoring in the country, held Navy to just six goals, nearly half their season average. Nick Sciubba '09 recorded an outstanding 13 saves and is currently third in the nation with a save percentage of 0.672. Defenseman Billy Haire '09 played outstanding, picking up a career best eight ground balls in addition to his suffocating defense.

Fellow defensemen Evan Burns '08 and Greg Sowyrda '07 played solid as well. In the second quarter, when a Navy attackman picked up a loose ball near the crease, Burns' hustle and quick stick check knocked the ball loose, preventing the point blank shot.

"The game was an absolute war with both teams playing very physical for the entire 60 minutes," said Head Coach Frank Fedorjaka. "We thought we would have to play that way to stay with them and I was pleased with our effort. We out shot and out ground-balled Navy. No team has done that to them this year."

The Bison received goals from Perry Menzies '09, Joe Mele '09 and Brian Gargan '07. Mele and Gargan scored on back-to-back goals in the last six minutes of the third quarter to cut Navy's lead to 5-3. The Bison then failed to convert on five fourth quarter Midshipmen penalties, including a one minute, two-man advantage.

Navy entered the game with the number one scoring defense in the nation. The Bison is ranked number five.

Mele, who entered the game as the leading scorer in the Patriot League, suffered a torn ACL in the fourth quarter and will miss the remainder of the season. John Togneri '09, who converted from attack to midfield this season, was the team's third leading scorer last year and will replace Mele.

"Not having Mele is definitely a loss for our attack, but we have great depth on offense," said midfielder Doug Buckley '09. "John played very well at attack last year so its good to have him to step in for [Mele]."

Mele is the second starting attackman in 2007 and third in two years to lose the season to a torn ACL. In January, Co-captain Kirk Klett '07 tore his ACL in a pre-season scrimmage.

The last time Navy came to Christy Mathewson-Memorial Stadium in 2005, the unranked Bison upset the then No. 2 ranked Midshipmen 8-7 in overtime.

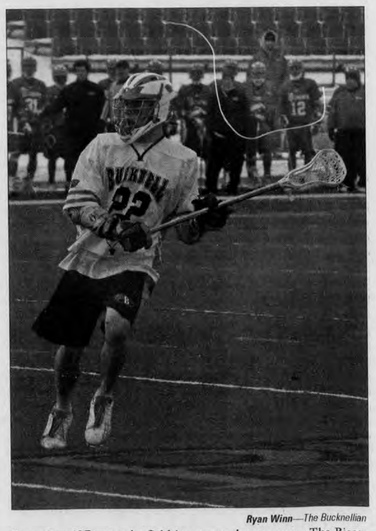
On Tuesday, the Orange and Blue defeated Lafayette 12-5 in their first league contest of the year. Mele scored five times and midfielder Nick Marks '08 added three goals for the Bison.

Bucknell 12 Lafayette 5

The Orange and Blue came out slow, trailing 4-2 in the closing seconds of the first half, until Gargan found Mele, who buried it with three seconds remaining in the half. The goal was the first of an incredible 10 unanswered goals the Bison offense unleashed on the Leopards. The Bison defense also stepped up their play in the second half, not allowing a Lafayette goal until the final ten seconds of regulation.

The Bison out-shot Lafayette 43-25, won the ground ball battle and converted on 12 of 21 face-offs.

The Orange and Blue is now 7-2 and 1-1 in the Patriot League. They will be back in action again Saturday at 1 p.m. when they face off against Holy Cross at Christy Mathewson-Memorial Stadium.



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Steve Case '07 scans the field in a recent home game. The Bison will face-off against Holy Cross Saturday at 1 p.m. at Christy Matthewson- Memorial Stadium.

Baseball brings the heat back home

After spring break play in Florida, the Bison shut out Scranton, notching their first home win on season

By Julia Lyons
Contributing Writer

The Bison men's baseball team came back to Lewisburg after capturing two wins during spring break in Bradenton, Fla., bringing its record to 5-9. While in Bradenton, the Bison defeated Fairfield (12-3) and Northern Iowa (5-2) while falling to Miami of Ohio, Ohio State, and twice to Eastern Kentucky.

When it returned to campus, the team faced a setback due to inclement weather that cancelled two of its four games against Mount Saint Mary's this past weekend. But the Bison were able to take away one win from the shortened series of two games, including a 7-0 shutout in game one, and a 4-3 loss.

The Orange and Blue wasted no time in game one of the contest, with a Ryan Gryskevicz '07 single to right field to open the second inning. Austin Turban '08 advanced him to second with a sacrifice bunt, which was followed by a single by Eddie Rubbo '08. Junior Mark Angelo's single sent Rubbo to third and drove Gryskevicz home to score the first run of the game. A sacrifice fly by Shawn Hirsch '08 allowed Rubbo to score the second and final run of the inning.

The Bison tallied another two runs in the third inning as Dane Grandizio '09 singled to right field to start the inning. After Grandizio stole second, Jason Buursma '08 doubled allowing Grandizio to plate. Gryskevicz followed with another double, earning an RBI as he drove Buursma home which brought the team to a 4-0 lead by the end of the third.

A Grandizio single in the top of the fourth allowed Dustin Kapson '07,who reached on a fielder's choice, to advance to third. First-year Ben Yoder's single drove Kapson to plate, scoring the final run of the inning.

After scoreless fifth and sixth innings, the Bison continued strong into the seventh, as Yoder opened the inning with a single to shortstop. A Buursma single to right field sent Yoder to third, which was followed by an RBI single by Gryskevicz, as Yoder came to plate. Turban followed with a single to advance both Gryskevicz and Buursma, and Rubbo's groundout to the pitcher drove Buursma home to score the 7th, and final run of the game.

> "We have strong seniors and a ot of younger guys who have stepped up and taken on roles which help us, and they rae just getting better with every game they play."
> —Matthew Wilson '08

Pitcher Matt Curry '07 (2-3) captured the win in his 5.2 innings, in which he gave up a mere two hits, two walks, and tied his career-high of eight strikeouts. Buursma relieved Curry, pitching a solid 1.1 hitless inning.

"Overall, our team is really playing well right now. We are getting solid pitching, great defense and our hitting has been outstanding," co-captain Curry said. "With the team hitting as well as they are right now, it really takes the pressure off the pitching staff."

Following a shutout in game one, the Bison fell one run short of the Mount Saint Mary's Mountaineers, with a final score of 4-3. The Orange and Blue picked up one run in the top of the first, after Turban's single to left field, drove Yoder, who had singled to right to the plate. The Bison led 1-0 until the seventh inning, in which they captured two more runs against The Mount. Hits by Grandizio and Buursma opened the inning, and were followed by a double RBI by Turban, to bring the score to 3-0.

The Bison were only able to hold the Mountaineers off until the eighth, when they tallied four runs with two outs in one inning.

Mathew Wilson '08 was unable to record the win despite throwing seven scoreless innings, including five strikeouts, and giving up just two hits and three walks. Nathan Mittag '07 took the loss after giving up four runs.

Gryskevicz and Turban led the team in hits for the series, going 4-8 with two RBIs and 3-7 with three RBIs, respectively. Buursma and Grandizio also had solid performances in the series, both going 3-8 at the plate and tallying three and two runs apiece.

The Bison hitting and pitching combination came out strong again on March 28 for the team's home-opener against Scranton University. The squad defeated the Royals 8-0, tallying eleven hits over the nine inning game.

The Orange and Blue opened up the bottom of the first with three runs. A walk from Yoder was followed by singles from Buursma, and Gryskevicz who drove Yoder home. Angelo began with a single down center field, allowing Buursma and Gryskevicz to score on a throwing error.

Hirsch was hit by a pitch and advanced to first to begin the bottom of the second, but a groundout by Yoder allowed him to score.

After two scoreless innings, the Bison came back again in the fifth to earn an additional three runs. Buursma was hit by a pitch after a single by Yoder to begin the inning, and a wild pitch advanced Yoder to third. A fly ball to left field by Gryskevicz allowed Yoder to plate, and Buursma advanced to third after a groundout from Turban. Angelo's single to left-center sent Buursma home. Sophomore Jared Kuhmerker's double advanced Angelo to third, who came to plate the seventh run for the Bison after a wild pitch.

The Bison would score the final run of the game in the bottom of the sixth, after Buursma doubled to right center, sending Hunter George '09 home who singled to plate.

Starting pitcher Andy Campbell '09 (1-0) took home the win for the Bison, after pitching a scoreless two innings and surrendered three hits, no walks, and throwing one strike out.

"We are looking to get a good start to the year by winning the Lehigh series and take that momentum in to the next weekend against Army," Curry said.

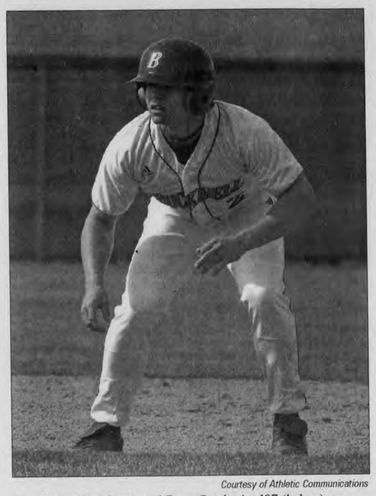
Despite the heartbreaking loss in his last outing, Wilson looks towards the upcoming Patriot League play with optimism and confidence.

"We have strong seniors and a lot of younger guys who have stepped up and taken on roles which helps us, and they are just getting better with every game they play," Wilson said. "We have played some very tough teams this year, which gives us great experience leading into conference play."

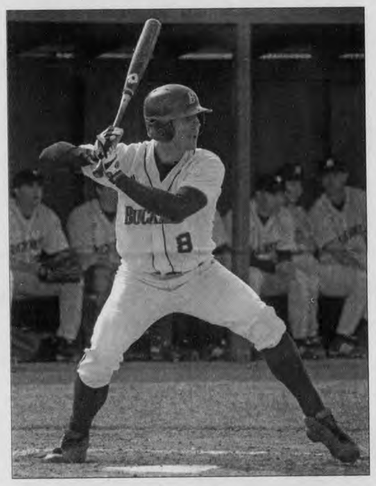
Both Angelo and George had perfect days at bat, going 3-3 with two RBIs and 2-2 with two doubles, respectively. Gryskevicz had a solid performance as well, finishing with two RBIs and a run, while Yoder and Buursma had two runs scored and each drove in one RBI.

With the win against the Royals, the Bison now hold a 7-10 record.

The Bison begin their first Patriot League series of the season against defending Patriot championship winner Lehigh University on March 31 in Bethlehem, Pa.



Courtesy of Athletic Communications



Ben Yoder '10 (above) and Ryan Gryskevicz '07 (below) combine for 17 runs off of 37 hits. The Bison head to Lehigh this weekend for their first Patriot League game of the season.

WRESTLE From page B1

Michigan State to drop to the wrestleback bracket. Marble bowed out of the tournament the next day after losing his next match to Eric Albright of Virginia 16-6.

Bison wrestling finished its season with 12 wins, nine losses and one tie in dual meets, breaking the previous school record with a team composed entirely of first-year students. The newly reinstated program saw two wrestlers, Lapotsky and Rendos, break single-season win records in just its first season back as a Division One sport.

Do not expect the Bison to rest on their laurels after their unprecedented season. The Orange and Blue now embark on a grueling offseason training regimen to prepare for what is already shaping up to be an even more exciting season next winter.

"The future looks very bright for our program," Sprecher said. "I think we are several years ahead of where we thought we would be at the end of this year, but that is no reason for complacency. Now that we are where we are, we have to push the limits more."

Rendos expressed a similar sentiment.

"With the recruiting class that we have coming in next year, I feel that there is no reason why we can't be top 15 or 20 in the country," Rendos said.

SAYLOR From page B1

Bison as a two seed (the RPI also needs a massive overhaul). Many power conference teams refuse to play mid-major teams during the year, so the tournaments provide rare opportunities for mid-majors to prove themselves. It is shame that so few get the chance.

3. There are some great match-ups in the men's Final Four this year. Florida against UCLA is a meeting of last year's title game, and Ohio State versus Georgetown features the match-up of big men Greg Oden and Roy Hibbert. It is nice to see teams surviving to the end of the tournament, having played so well all season. That is one of the negatives about the tournament: the possibility exists that any team can get on a hot streak at the end of the year and take the crown. That is also what makes it great.

4. ESPN cannot possibly show more coverage of the upcoming NFL Draft.

5. I hate how Roger Clemens can decide each year to skip Spring Training and the first few months of the season, choose which team he wants to play for and when and earn eight figures every year. I don't care how talented he is—no one should be bigger than the game.

6. Just like I have said every March since 1994, the Phillies will win the World Series this year.

7. Just like I have done every October since 1994, I will cry when the Phillies fail to make the playoffs (they have to make it one of these years though, right?).

8. CBS needs to work next year on improving its broadcast teams for the NCAA Tournament. Billy Packer is too self-righteous and unwilling to change his opinion when it is clear he is wrong. James Brown should not be a basketball play-by-play man. Gus Johnson and Kevin Harlan deserve to cover more games. Those who perform the best should get to cover the best games, not those who have the biggest names.

9. It is a credit to the women's basketball team at LSU that it was able to make it to the Final Four in the face of adversity surrounding the resignation of its head coach, Pokey Chatman, right before the tournament. Expect more information surrounding that resignation (allegations that Chatman had inappropriate sexual relations with a former player) to emerge once the Lady Tigers' season ends.

10. Finally, a "Saylor Says" tip of the hat to former Sports Illustrated columnist Steve Rushin. His final column was published for the magazine in February. Hopefully, he will continue to write in some form. It is a gift to the eyes of the reader when someone can write as well as Rushin can.

WEEKEND SCHEDULE

Friday

WOMEN'S WATER POLO - Maryland, 8 p.m., College Park, Md.

Saturday

BASEBALL - Lehigh, 12 p.m., Bethlehem, Pa. ; Lehigh, TBA, Bethlehem, Pa.
SOFTBALL - Lafayette, 1 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa. ; Lafayette, TBA, Lewisburg, Pa.
WOMEN'S TENNIS - Fordham, 10 a.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
MEN'S TRACK & FIELD - George Mason Invitational, 10 a.m., Fairfax, Va.
WOMEN'S TRACK & FIELD - George Mason Invitational, 10 a.m., Fairfax, Va
MEN'S TRACK & FIELD - Susquehanna Inviational, 10 a.m., Selinsgrove, Pa.
WOMEN'S TRACK & FIELD - Susquehanna Invitational, 10 a.m., Selinsgrove, Pa.
WOMEN'S WATER POLO - George Washington, 12 p.m., Washington, D.C.
WOMEN'S LACROSSE - Colgate, 12 p.m., Hamilton, N.Y.
MEN'S LACROSSE - Holy Cross, 1 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
WOMEN'S ROWING - Georgetown/Temple, 1 p.m., Philadelphia, Pa.
WOMEN'S TENNIS - NJIT, 2 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
MEN'S TENNIS - NJIT, 2 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.

Sunday

BASEBALL - Lehigh, 12 p.m., Bethlehem, Pa. ; Lehigh, TBA, Bethlehem, Pa.
SOFTBALL - Lafayette, 12 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa. ; Lafayette, TBA, Lewisburg, Pa.
WOMEN'S ROWING - Princenton Lightweights, 9 a.m., Princenton, N.J. (Lake Carnegie)
MEN'S TENNIS - Army, 11 a.m., Lewisburg, Pa.

Discover Yoga
EASEFUL Body
PEACEFUL Mind
USEFUL Life
Filled with joy, health & well being.
Integral Yoga Center 570-966-2484
428 Market Street, New Berlin www.yoga-center.com

CatmanDo
Handyman Services
Specializing in small home repair jobs:
Custom Carpentry
Painting
Light construction
Greg H Mathias
570-524-4724
Free Estimates Fully insured

Bison try to find footing

Courtesy of Athletic Communications

Daniel Bednarek '09 follows through after slicing a backhand. The Bison will face-off against NJIT on Saturday at home.

By John Mlodzinksi
Senior Writer

On Sunday, the men's tennis team was swept by Navy 7-0 in its Patriot League opener, after falling to University of Maryland Baltimore County (UMBC) 6-1. Navy improved their record to 8-10 (2-0), while the Bison dropped to 4-9 (0-1).

Navy 7
Bucknell 0

Navy picked up the first point of the day by winning all three of the doubles matches. In the No. 1 doubles spot, Jonathan Brenner '09 and Ryan Sandburg '09 fell to Nate Nelms and Johnny Waters 8-3. In the No. 2 doubles spot, Stanley Kahl and Adrian Lai of Navy defeated Zach Hascoe '10 and Ira Reibeisen '08 8-3. In No. 3 doubles, Daniel Bednarek '09 and Ben Young '08 were defeated by Alex James and Ramsey Lemaich 9-7.

UMBC 6
Bucknell 1

The Bison did not fare much better in the singles matches. Reibeisen's two-game winning streak was halted after he dropped his No. 1 spot singles match to Helms 5-7, 6-1, 1-0 (10-3). In the No. 2 singles spot, Sandburg fell to Waters 7-6 (8-6), 7-5, while Hascoe lost to Lai 6-4, 6-3 in the No. 3 singles match. Young was defeated by Kahl 6-0, 6-3 in the No. 4 singles match. In the No. 5 singles spot, Brenner lost to James 6-2, 6-2, and Bednarek was defeated by Lemaich 6-4, 6-0 in the No. 6 singles match.

Head Coach Rebecca Helt was dissatisfied with the team's overall performance.

"It was a disappointing weekend," Helt said. "We didn't step up and we didn't play well."

After going 1-1 in Hilton Head, S.C., over spring break, the Bison traveled to UMBC hoping to pick up some momentum before opening up their Patriot League schedule. While most of the matches were close, the team was only able to pick up one win.

"We need to find a way to beat these teams, not just hang with them," Helt said.

UMBC recorded the first point of the day by sweeping the doubles matches. In the No. 1 doubles spot, Brenner and Sandburg fell to Nick Savage-Pollock and Fredi Voorman 8-6. Reibeisen and Hascoe were defeated by David Jackson and Irfan Shamasdin 8-7 (7-3) in the No. 2 doubles spot, while Young and Sidharth Makkar '09 lost to Chris Meyer and Fernando Ferreira 8-3 in the No. 3 doubles spot.

Reibeisen picked up the only victory for the Bison, defeating Shamasdin 6-2, 6-0 in the No. 1 singles match. Sandburg lost the No. 2 singles match to Meyer 6-3, 6-2, while Hascoe fell to Jackson 4-6, 6-3, 6-0, in the No. 3 singles spot. In the No. 4 singles match, Brenner had to retire due to injury. In the No. 5 singles spot, Makkar was defeated by Savage-Pollock 6-1, 6-1 and Bednarek lost his match to Ferreira 6-4, 6-2 in the No. 6 singles spot.

Even though the Bison are in a slump, Helt knows that the team will eventually pull through.

"The problem with where we're at with our level is that we fall clearly in the middle of the pack. ... It's very difficult to find teams like ours who are somewhere in the middle but definitely moving up," Helt said.

The Bison return home for their next nine games starting Saturday, when they face New Jersey Institute of Technology at 11 a.m. at the University tennis courts.

Men's golf slumps in start to season

By Jared Napolitano
Business Manager

In the squad's first outings of the spring, the men's golf team failed to finish in the top half of the field. At the first leg of the southern road trip, the George Washington Invitational, the unit finished 19th out of 24 teams. At the second event, the William and Mary Invitational, the Bison placed 18th of 21.

At the River Course at Kingsmill Resort in Williamsburg, Va., Andrew Cohen '10 led the Bison with a composite score of 151 strokes at the two-day event held Monday and Tuesday. Only one stroke behind was two-time defending Patriot League champion Charlie Waddell '07 (152). Also on the five-man contingent, Rahul Desai '08, Stuart Lindgren '08 and Chas Wagner '07 shot 156, 160 and 163 respectively.

Hampered by an opening score of 310, the Bison were unable to recover in the second round and improve their 18th-place position. Waddell's second-round 73 (+2) and Cohen's second-round 74 (+3) qualified as the Bison's best-counted scores of the Invitational.

Campbell University won the team title by a narrow three strokes over St. John's University, despite a drastically worse second round (279, 296). University of Detroit-Mercy (589), Towson University (591) and the University of Delaware (592) placed third, fourth and fifth respectively. The only other Patriot League team to participate was Army (610), finishing in a three-way tie for 14th place with Villanova and Duquesne.

Campbell's Frederic Sundberg shot five-under-par to win the individual crown. For the Bison, Cohen's +9 score was the lowest and earned him a tie for 33rd place individually.

In the Bison's first event of the spring, the inability to practice on the University golf course contributed to lower-than-usual scores for the team. The squad finished in the bottom quarter of the field, shooting a composite 626 (+50).

With the same crew of Waddell, Cohen, Wagner, Desai and Lindgren, only four of eight counted scores were under 80. After the first round, the Bison sat in a tie for 15th place in the 24-team competition, held at the Bear Trap Dunes Golf Course in Bethany Beach, Del.

Cohen's impressive even-par performance on the first day put him in a tie for 13th place individually. Waddell posted the second-best Bison performance on day one (75, +3). Desai shot a 79, while Wagner and Lindgren each finished the course in 80 strokes.

The team did not sustain its position on day two. Only one score less than 80 dropped the Bison from 15th to 19th place. Wagner's 78 (+6) was the best of a composite team score of 320 (+32) in the second round. Waddell, Cohen and Desai all saw their scores increase as the team eventually finished 41 strokes behind the team champion, the University of Pennsylvania.

Longwood University (588), Seton Hall University (591), the University of Delaware (597) and Yale University (597) also achieved top-five finishes.

Several other Patriot League teams participated in the two-day event; Navy (616) and Lehigh (617) performed better than the Bison, while Colgate (644) and Lafayette (650) finished in 22nd and 23rd place respectively.

Kyle Morris of third-place Seton Hall posted the best individual performance (141, -3). Waddell was the best golfer for the Bison for the event, but barely managed to crack the top 50 (156, t-50th place).

As the spring continues, the Bison will be better able to sharpen their on-the-course skills with the expected opening of the University golf course this weekend. The next stop for the team is Annapolis, Md., for the Navy Invitational on April 6-7. Its season culminates in the Patriot League Invitational at West Point, N.Y., on April 21-22.

BRING IN THIS COUPON AND SAVE!
Guitar Center
The Musician's Choice
5082 Jonestown Rd.
Harrisburg, PA 17112
717-652-7399
Shipping Available!
10% OFF!
THE BEST GEAR
THE BEST DEALS!
* some restrictions apply, see store for details

Nancy's Nu-Wave Salon
look your best
Wax Specials
Eye Brows $7
Upper Lip $5
Bikini $20
Brazilian $30
Full Legs $35
Chest Chain $20
Under Arms $10
Back $35
Main Street (Rte 45) Mantandon
524-2315
www.nancysnuwave.com

10 reasons why you'll love a Mac.

1. Run Microsoft Office. Flawlessly. On a Mac, Office gives you Word, Powerpoint and Excel with the same familiar features and shortcuts.

2. It just works. With a Mac, the OS, the applications and the computer are all made by the same folks, so they all work perfectly together.

3. 114,000 viruses? Not on a Mac. Mac OS X was designed with a superior UNIX foundation, a built-in firewall and security measures far surpassing what you'll find on PCs.

4. You can even run Windows. Parallels Desktop for Mac makes it possible to run Windows software on your Mac.

5. Tools to make amazing stuff. Find your creative voice with iLife '06, the award-winning suite of software found on every Mac.

6. You can use your existing printer or camera. Your Mac comes loaded with thousands of peripheral drivers, so just connect via USB, FireWire or Bluetooth.

7. Mac OS X keeps getting better. The world's most advanced operating system makes it easy to find, access and enjoy everything on your computer.

8. Instant video chats. The built-in iSight camera on iMac, MacBook and MacBook Pro make it easy to video chat with up to three friends or family members at once.

9. Use your Student Discount and SAVE on Apple products!

10. Buy your Mac right here, at your Campus Store. We're just steps away. Visit, call or shop us online today.

Authorized Campus Store

the BookStore AT BUCKNELL
Bucknell University Bookstore
Langone Center
Lewisburg, PA 17837
570.577.1128
http://www.bucknellbookstore.com/

Apple, the Apple logo, FireWire, iLife, iMac, iSight, Mac, MacBook and Mac OS are trademarks of Apple, Inc., registered in the U.S. and other countries. All other products referenced herein may be trademarks of their respective manufacturers.
Some applications must be purchased separately. Mention of third-party products is for informational purposes only, and constitutes neither an endorsement nor a recommendation. Broadband Internet access required for video chat.

VILLANOVA UNIVERSITY
SUMMER SESSIONS 2007

Learn while you play this summer.

Earn undergraduate or graduate credits. Attend day or evening classes. Sign up soon* for the session that's right for you:

- Business
- Natural Sciences
- Humanities
- Counseling
- Social Sciences
- Mathematics
- Engineering
- Computer Science
- Nursing
- Languages
- Education
- The Arts

Summer Session I
May 30 – June 27

Summer Session II
June 29 – July 30

Summer Evening Session III
May 30 – July 30

*Registration closes for each session the day before the session begins.

Over 40 Distance Learning courses available.

Call or visit our Web site for more information:
610.519.4300
www.parttime.villanova.edu

VILLANOVA UNIVERSITY

'300' satisfies thirst for thrill

By Michael Dippery
Opinions Editor

❖ Movie Review

What is the best way to describe "300?" Is it a moralistic tale of justice? Is it a historical portrayal of an epic Greek battle? Is it a classic story of David vs. Goliath?

No. It is simply two hours of pure, raw, bad-assitude.

"300" is the tale of King Leonidas of Sparta, played by Gerard Butler. One day, a Persian messenger comes to Sparta to demand that the Spartans surrender to Persian king Xerxes. Does Leonidas quiver? Does Leonidas beg for mercy? No. He just kicks that messenger and his cronies down a never-ending hole. Cue the bad-assitude.

Naturally Leonidas is pretty angry, but you would be too if some bejeweled messenger on an obscenely large horse made fun of your wife and then asked you to get down on your knees for his boss. So he does what any good Spartan man would do: he gathers 299 of his closest beefcake friends and marches off to eliminate the Persian invaders once and for all.

Along the way, he forms up with an army of artsy Athenians who hope to help the Spartans too. Students of Greek history know that 50 years from now, Sparta will be in the thick of war with Athens, but for now they are buddies. After a lot of marching and bickering with the Athenians, the combined army finally sees the approaching Persian army. Leonidas watches coolly as a convenient thunderstorm thrashes the Persian navy.

This might not be historically accurate, but hey, it looks good on the big screen. And visual imagery is one of the film's best attributes, second only to the jidaigeki-inspired ass-kicking.

Soon the Greeks get a look at the massive Persian encampment. The Athenians use their superior logic to deduce that the Greeks cannot possibly win. The audience uses its knowledge of history to know that none will survive. Leonidas uses the combined testosterone of the Spartan soldiers to show that they might die, but they are going to take a lot of Persian limbs and lives with them.

Very soon, all hell breaks loose. The Spartans get attacked by wave after wave of Persians. They get attacked by infantrymen who fight with a sword in each hand. They get shot at by so many arrows that the entire Spartan army is cast into shade. They are even assaulted by a whole wave of "Immortals," each of which is terrifyingly voiced by Darth Vader himself.

And yet, the Spartans hold firm. So firm, in fact, that Xerxes, a self-proclaimed God among men, confusingly portrayed as the taller Michael Jackson of the ancient world, pleads with Leonidas to surrender. Leonidas responds by killing more Persians.

And that is how much of the movie goes. There is a lot of fighting, a lot of heads getting chopped off. And then more fighting. And just when the slow-motion sequences are starting to feel a bit superfluous, something cool happens, like meeting a bunch of randy leper monks, or Leonidas flexes his tricep menacingly, or a Spartan rolls through a horde of Persians like a rogue who just made a DC 25 tumble check.

Of course, there are a few grippingly emotional scenes too. I do not want to ruin these dramatic scenes for anyone, but suffice it to say that a very key Spartan gets his head cut off so badly that it does a pirouette in midair. But if you look really closely, I bet you can see that he is smiling about it, because that is what Spartans do when they get their heads cut off.

Courtesy of www.imdb.com

Vincent Regan and Gerard Butler as Captain and King Leonidas of Sparta in Warner Bros. Pictures' "300." Based on the graphic novel by Frank Miller, "300" is filled with extraordinarily rich imagery, while recalling the spirited style of comic books through its cinematography.

It should be said, though, that the film makes a valiant, albeit somewhat failed, attempt to describe femininity in an equally glorified manner. These scenes are short and feel forced—but hey, at least the man-fest gave estrogen a bit of a nod.

If the dance of swords does finally get a bit dull, there are a few other interjections, such as a visually rich harem and a golden half-man half-goat playing the panpipes. This film truly has something for everyone.

"300" is based on the graphic novel by Frank Miller, the creative spirit behind "Sin City," and so its cinematography harkens back to the style of comic books. The filmmakers expertly use this imagery to portray the story from the point of view of the Spartans. Viewers will note the elaborate representation of Persian "monsters," such as the executioner. Certainly this portrayal is unrealistic, but as a derivative of the adult version of a comic book, the message is clear: the Spartans really thought the Persians were monsters. Critics may lambaste "300" for its negative portrayal of Persians, but I certainly hope no one is going to the theater to get an unbiased, historically accurate look at the Battle of Thermopylae or early Mediterranean culture in general.

Simply put, this is a film sings a tale in traditional bardic style. Yes, it shows Persians in a negative light. No, it does not give an accurate portrayal of Spartan concepts of democracy. If you are looking for such content, I point you in the direction of the History Channel.

"300" is meant to portray a classic story in the most exciting way possible. It makes every audience member think that he could be a total bad-ass too, even for a few minutes. If that is what you are looking for, "300" will not disappoint.

'Zodiac': A chilling retelling of true events

By Catherine Heverling
Senior Editor

❖ Movie Review

"Schindler's List." "Saving Private Ryan." "Goodfellas." Some of the most critically acclaimed films in history have been about true events. And just as many filmmakers must work to make their cinematic stories seem real, the tellers of true stories must make their real stories seem cinematic.

This is the task undertaken by the crew of "Zodiac," David Fincher's (director of "Seven" and "Fight Club") latest film about a string of serial killer homicides that threatened Southern California in the early 1970s.

The film was based on the books of Robert Graysmith, a political cartoonist who was employed by the San Francisco Chronicle when the murders first made headlines. Jake Gyllenhall lends his innocent grin and puppy dog eyes to the role of Graysmith, whose ears perk up when the Chronicle begins receiving letters from the killer himself. The murderer, who calls himself "The Zodiac," demands that the newspaper print a cryptogram on the front of their newspaper, claiming (falsely) that it will reveal his true identity. Graysmith, who incidentally is an avid puzzler, becomes obsessed with solving the cryptograms and the identity of the killer himself.

But he isn't the only one. The Chronicle's cocky op-ed writer, Paul Avery (appropriately portrayed by a disheveled Robert Downey Jr.), kicks up dust in his column while partners in crime fighting, David Toschi and William Armstrong (Mark Ruffalo and Anthony Edwards), investigate the murders by dusting for prints

None of these characters ever witness the murders, but the audience does. In fact, the film opens with the first murder, which involves two teenage victims sitting in park on lover's lane. The film does contain a few elements, like this one, that might be construed as part of the campy horror flick formula. In another scene, when Graysmith follows a lead to the house of an eccentric elderly man and realizes he might be an accomplice to the murderer, Graysmith rattles the doorknob only to find the door has been locked— just as the tea kettle on the stove begins whistling loudly.

Courtesy of www.imdb.com

Jake Gyllenhaal and Robert Downey Jr. play Robert Graysmith and Paul Avery who both work for the San Francisco Chronicle and follow the Zodiac case through the paper's editorials. Based on Graysmith's book about the Zodiac murders, the movie tells a compelling story of the detectives and newspaper employees who attempt to identify the killer.

Courtesy of www.imdb.com

Robert Graysmith (Jake Gyllenhaal) and Melanie (Chloë Sevigny), two people in the midst of the Zodiac killer spree, try to find answers to the mystery of the serial killer. Although the two eventually marry and start a family, Graysmith's curiosity with the case turns into an obsession that soon threatens their family.

"Zodiac" does, at times, seem cliché, but the film is quick to remind you that you are not watching some sequel to "Friday the 13th." The murders are woven between scenes of police reports and news reports, where the investigators attempt to piece together the evidence and the letters that continue to filter into the newsroom.

But just because they are unsuccessful in identifying the killer through the letters, doesn't mean they don't get to know him in the process. The Zodiac humorously writes, "It would cheer me up considerably if I saw people wearing my buttons [with the Zodiac sign on them]" and, ironically, requests that a movie be made about him. He also responds to Avery's opinions articles by making a threat on his life, to which other reporters respond by wearing "I am not Paul Avery" pins.

But by the end of the 70s, even Avery has given up on solving the crimes. Investigator Armstrong transfers and Investigator Toschi gets suspended from the force. By hour two, everyone, including the audience, is tired of trying. The only person still fiddling with puzzles and rereading crime reports is Graysmith, who is convinced that by doing so he can solve the murders that occurred more than a decade before.

Graysmith might have been more engaging as an unlikely hero if his only function hadn't been to poke his inexperienced nose where it didn't belong. When Avery asks him his hobbies, Graysmith responds, "I like to read ... and I like books." And even on the date where he meets his wife, he leaves to go decipher a cryptogram. Because the filmmakers were not interested in developing Graysmith's character, the audience wasn't all that interested when Graysmith began developing the plot.

Watching Graysmith sniff out suspects takes longer than most films would have allotted it, but he also took longer than most investigators would have spent exploring it.

All in all, the filmmakers did their best to maintain a balance between the movie and the true story, and the chilling effect that results is a blurred line between fact and fiction. This is both a movie and a true story. It is both the cliché and the origin of the cliché.

And the Zodiac killer is both a figure of the past and a constant possibility of the present and future.

Meg's mix

Songs for a crazy House Party

By Megan McWhinney
Writer

Ah, House Party. It's a treacherous marathon (for the over-21 crowd, of course) and, as the t-shirts very accurately suggest, competes with Las Vegas in all-you-can-eat food, free alcohol and the ability to shrug accountability for the potential poor-life decisions around every corner.

For those of you who have yet to experience this famous party, trumped only by Caligula, there are a few things you should expect.

First, don't wear anything to which you are particularly attached. If that shirt would be improved by a solid beer-soaking, go ahead and rock it. Second, work on your elbow-throwing skills—it's that crowded. In fact, House Party is one of the most crowded places you will ever be, outside of the Tokyo subway, but with the same amount of groping. Last, check your ego, your insecurities and your cares at the door. This is one weekend when your homework, who you know and what fraternity or sorority you're in doesn't matter. Just go out and party like it's the only thing on your to-do list.

Now, from a music perspective, there are some awesome bands that play at House Party. There will be so much bass-thumping, hip-grinding, make-your-ears-bleed (in the good way) music that you don't even need a playlist. But I'm giving you one anyway. Here's a list of songs that set the stage for an awesome party. All overzealous political-correctness aside, they are about crazy nights of partying just like the ones that are going down this weekend.

Tragically, I will not be here for House Party, so I'm bequeathing (that's right, bequeathing) unto the University a mix I so sorely wish I could put to good use. So party on and remember: What happens at House Party stays at House Party.

1. "I Bet You Look Good On the Dancefloor"—Arctic Monkeys
I once read that this band attributes its fame to writing about what it knows best: drinking and going out to clubs.

2. "Fight For Your Right (To Party)"—The Beastie Boys
You may or may not have heard of the hard alcohol ban of the 2003-04 school year. Yeah, it was awful. This song rings true for anyone who was here for that ... so don't take this House Party for granted!

3. "Weekends"—The Black Eyed Peas
This is the Black Eyed Peas pre-Fergie. You know, when they were, what's the word? Good. This is a fun song about having an awesome time at a party, which will hopefully be the case for everyone.

4. "Shout"—The Isley Brothers
Sharp readers will note that this is a repeat from my very first mix. It is never more appropriate than for use this weekend, since "Animal House" is in the air. Yell at the DJs or bands wherever you are until they play this; it's well worth it. And at the end of the band's set, yell "Free Bird" until you go hoarse. Bands love that.

5. "What Do I Do"—Jimmy's Chicken Shack
This band played at House Party the last two years and put on a great show. This song is so much fun to sing at the top of your lungs, and the band plays it live until its fingers bleed.

6. "Rock and Roll All Night"—Kiss
"I wanna rock and roll all night and party every day." Maybe not every day, but for this weekend, this is a mandate, courtesy of Gene Simmons. And he's scary, so you should listen.

7. "Got To Give It Up (Part 1)"—Marvin Gaye
This isn't a head-banger, but it's a song about letting go and having an awesome time at a party. And Marvin lived through Studio 54, so he knew a thing or two about a great party.

8. "This Is How We Do It"—Montell Jordan
That's right, I'm going there. "Let's flip the track, bring the old school back. So tip up your cup and throw your hands up." Just don't spill—that's alcohol abuse.

9 "Juicy"—Notorious B.I.G.
And if you don't know, now you know.

10. "Night Shift"—O.A.R.
"It's 3 a.m. and I want to go to bed." It's House Party. No excuses, play like a champion. Sleep when you're dead.

11. "Saturday Night"—Ozomatli
Everyone should see these guys live (if you've seen "Never Been Kissed," they're the band playing when Josie goes to the club)—they kill it. "We don't need bouncers or police / It's Saturday night, it's nothin' better-/ Spread the word, that we comin' together."

12. "Gin and Juice"—The Gourds
OK, the original is great. But what is funnier than country-sounding white guys covering Snoop Dogg? This cover is frequently attributed to Phish for God knows what reason, but once and for all, the cover is by the Gourds.

13. "Mama Told Me (Not to Come)"—Three Dog Night
"This is the craziest party there could ever be / Don't turn on the lights, 'cause I don't want to see." Trust me, lights just let you see a bunch of very sweaty drunk people, which is hilarious until you realize you're one of them. And if you were theoretically underage and theoretically holding a beer, lights on means you should definitely drop that drink you never had in the first place.

14. "Yeah"—Usher ft. Lil John and Ludacris
This song (and Hey Ya) was on a pretty solid loop during my first-year House Party and I still smell stale beer and plywood whenever I hear it ...

15. "Wasted"—Paranoid Social Club
This is the official anthem of the movie "Beerfest," which makes it perfect for House Party. "You only live once and then it's over /and if we drink long enough then we won't get hung over." Again, not recommending you try that, but it's a pretty funny line.

These songs are available on iTunes in the iMix category under the title "Songs for a Crazy Houseparty."

SPOILER ALERT!

By Matt Saylor
Associate Editor of Content

"The Office"—Lots of news on "The Office" as the show prepares for its final run of the season. New episodes start this Thursday with a 40-minute episode beginning at 8 p.m. called "The Negotiation." Darryl would like a raise and convinces Michael that he should have one. This leads to the two of them, along with Toby, making a journey to corporate headquarters in New York to meet with Jan. No doubt Michael will struggle in asking his girlfriend/boss for more money. We know who wears the pants in that relationship.

The other main component of this episode will be the fallout from the Pam-Roy fight seen at the end of the episode "Cocktails." Video clips that NBC has posted online show Roy going after Jim in a fit of rage. If you want to know who comes to Jim's defense before the episode airs, then watch the clips. What consequences will Roy face? This episode should help to provide those answers.

"Safety Training," set to air April 12, features the return of Andy to Scranton after his sting at anger management. As the warehouse goes through safety training exercises, Michael (along with Dwight) remains convinced that the office can be just as dangerous, and implements his own form of safety training.

Another future episode will feature Michael taking a fieldtrip with the women of the office to a special store, as well as some travel problems for the group. The season finale will be one hour in length, and just like last year's "Casino Night," promises to leave us with some can't-miss moments that will have us begging for the summer to be over so new episodes can begin again.

"Scrubs"—Do you think Dr. Cox feels bad about the way he treated Laverne and her beliefs? His weak attempt at an apology was accepted by our favorite veteran nurse, but just a day later the staff at Sacred Heart has to treat Laverne for injuries from a car accident that leave her in a coma. Laverne's fate will be revealed this Thursday.

As one life potentially is lost, another is gained as Jordan will go into labor with her and Dr. Cox's daughter. Remember that surgery has already been conducted on the fetus, so the birth could reveal more problems.

Have no fear though. While "Scrubs" likes to incorporate some drama, it is without question a comedy, and there will be plenty of high jinks along the way as the season winds down. Also, look for Kim to return toward the end of the season, still pregnant with the baby she told J.D. she lost. I wonder how the good doctor will handle that.

"Grey's Anatomy"—Is anyone else annoyed by the sudden George-Izzie pairing? Does everyone on this show have to sleep with each other? While Callie does not yet know what happened that night, secrets don't stay hidden for long at Seattle Grace. I would find it hard to believe that she won't find out what happened at some point before the end of this year. What will this mean for her and George? Well, since Izzie appears to be developing legitimate feelings for George, he might have to make some decisions regarding his own feelings.

Cristina and Burke will try to straighten out their relationship and we could hear wedding bells before the season ends in May. The hospital continues its search for a new chief of surgery and, can you believe it, Sloan is the most impressive candidate (with some inspiration from Bailey). I still find it hard to believe that the Chief is going to give up his job. He seems increasingly unsettled with how things may change.

Finally, the two-hour special that will serve as a potential spin-off for Addison is set to go in May. Her potential departure is the reason that a budding relationship between her and Karev came to an end. How sad that one more hospital hook-up is on hold.

'Idiocracy' falls through the cracks

Courtesy of www.imdb.com

Joe Bauers (Luke Wilson), an Army librarian, is chosen to be one of the two test subjects in a top-secret hibernation program. Here, Bauers is shown participating in the Presidential Motorcade after being appointed Secretary of State.

By Erik Zager
Writer

❖ Movie Review

Most college-aged students will understand a reference like, "Corporate accounts payable, Nina speaking. Just a moment!" After all, it was part of the cult classic "Office Space," directed by Mike Judge. Those same people might simply give a blank look when told, "Electrolytes, they're what plants crave!"

This is because the quote comes from the much lesser known Mike Judge movie, "Idiocracy," recently released on DVD.

This is quite unfortunate indeed. The truth of the matter is, "Idiocracy," released in 2006, just so happens to be one of the funniest movies that no one has seen. Steeped in the same kind of humor as "Office Space," "Idiocracy" is a side-splitter.

The film is based on the simple premise that the less intelligent members of society have many more offspring than the intellectual elite. Because of this, over a period of 1000 years the human race has de-evolved into a mass of blundering idiots. Television's top-rated show, "Ouch, my balls!" consists of a man getting repeatedly hit in the balls. The top-grossing film of the time might be of even higher caliber: "Ass," is 90 minutes of a guy's ass on screen, farting. The president is an ex-pro wrestler and the FCC has been taken over by a sports drink company.

At the beginning of the movie, set in the present, the two protagonists played by Maya Rudolph and Luke Wilson agree to be part of a government experiment in cryogenic freezing. The two are forgotten and reawake 1000 years later to the world previously described. Joe Bowers (Wilson), a private in the military and Rita (Rudolph), a prostitute, are now the two smartest people in the world.

Chased by the police for not having their bar-code tattoos, the two end up in the service of the president of the United States. The sports drink company "Brondo" has convinced the public that watering crops with its product is the best course of action by way of "clever" advertising. As a result, all crops across America are dead. It becomes Joe and Rita's mission to save the world with their superior brain power.

This film will strike a chord with anyone who has ever wondered whether each year brings lower-brow television programming. Judge's vision of the future certainly seems less far-fetched when Fox currently airs specials like "Man versus Beast," featuring an epic pulling contest between little people and an elephant.

We may look back at this film in 500 years and realize that Mike Judge was better able to predict the future than Arthur C. Clarke did with "2001: A Space Odyssey," Kevin Carr of 7M Pictures said on rottentomatoes.com.

The only major weakness of the film stems from its unwavering commitment to depicting stupidity. At some points, the dialogue can become repetitive and tedious. I can't fault screenwriters Judge and Etan Cohen as the redundancy might be unavoidable given the plot line. The movie as a whole is a riot. Judge is adept at satirizing glaring social problems. Let's just hope that Judge's movie is only fiction or this University's education will be pointless.

Quartet adds modern melodies to conventional sound

By Kyle Winslow
Contributing Writer

The program for last Saturday's performance by the Cassatt String Quartet at the Weis Center for the Performing Arts promised to bring conventional classical sound to a modern light.

The 30-minute "String Quartet in A Major" composed by Ludwig van Beethoven was predictably well-performed. Muneko Otani, violin and faculty member of Columbia University's Mannes College of Music, commanded the audience's attention with her virtuosity. Her performance even seemed to over shadow the other members of the ensemble. She moved around the most while she played, signaling her confidence in her talent and her attachment to the piece. As the Quartet played through the composition, the audience was pleased by Otani's depiction of the piece's subtle contrast between the dance-like, slow and melodic movements.

At first glance, it was surprising to see Beethoven listed before "Giving Thanks: An American Good Morning Message." This second piece was composed specifically for the Cassatt Quartet and an all-female children's choir. The Quartet, in residence at the University for the week, enlisted the vocal help of students and staff for the part.

"Giving Thanks," a modern composition by Libby Larsen, was accompanied by select women of the Bucknell Opera Company and also featured vocal narration.

"On a personal level, the members of the Quartet were a lively, close-knit group, willing to share their professional experience," Mia Bonnewell '09, a member of the Bucknell Opera Company who accompanied the Quartet said

The lyrics for "Giving Thanks" were taken from a Native American Thanksgiving speech. Both the instrumentation and vocal narration played complementary roles instead of echoing each other in melody. At points the narration was practically spoken, as if the vocal accompaniment and the Quartet were playing altogether different pieces. At other times both the vocal and instrument performances of "Giving Thanks" worked together with playful syncopation.

What we received was a combination of that standard repertoire with something altogether new.

On the Opera Company's adaptation of the piece originally written for a children's choir, Bonnewell said, "It was a challenge, but I thought it worked out nicely. The Native American narrative provided a change of pace from conventional classical music to a more modern sound."

Not all members of the audience agreed. Three or four older audience members discussed the fact that they could not find the melody. Others did not like the subject matter, as they read the lyrics printed in the program out loud. Their opinion was that a more contemporary sound should not follow Beethoven's conventional compositions.

"Daybreak," the short, modern third selection in the program, featured associate professor of music and Opera Company founder, Catherine Payn. It was similar to "Giving Thanks," with vocal narration and the interlocking instrumentation of the Quartet.

"Daybreak" and the fourth piece, a composition by Ravel, displayed the best musicianship heard all night. "Daybreak" featured a beautiful vocal and instrumental melody and the Ravel composition allowed the Quartet to show off in distinctly autonomous roles. The cellist and violist were finally featured during a somber movement, both playing softly and with emotion. After this, there was an explosion of energy in a fortissimo that was surprisingly audible from the back of the Weis Center.

It is no secret that regular attendees of the Weis Center Performance Series are lovers of traditional classical music, but many audience members were likely expecting convention because Beethoven was on the program. What we received was a combination of that standard repertoire with something altogether new.

Igniting Creative Ideas
On Fire Promotions
by trautman associates, inc.
promotional products · fundraising items
embroidered & screenprinted caps & apparel
awards · trophies · business gifts
800-538-8009
Lewisburg Showroom 434 Market 570-522-8009
www.tapromoproducts.com
www.onfirepromotions.com
Bring in this ad for one FREE SCREEN!!!
GOOD ON ANY APPAREL ORDER
(minimum 36 pieces)

$250 CASH Sign on BONUS
Call for details
3 & 4 Bedroom Houses
CLOSE TO CAMPUS
WHIRLPOOL
WASHER / DRYER
DISHWASHER
STOVE & FRIG
Newly renovated houses available 2006/2007
570-524-5714 / 570-412-4831
or 570-524-5745 / 570-490-2922

DOES YOUR CAR NEED SERVICED?
Our Service Department has $25,000 in new upgrades, including a new alignment rack, brake lathe, tire machine, and hundreds of hours of training for the techs. We now offer shuttle service to and from work or home. We have become a complete service center that can perform any work on any model, from an oil change to engine replacement.
Lewisburg Ford — Oil Change w/Multi-Point Inspection — $19.95 (Reduces Check. Most present coupon at time of service. Expires 12/31/06.)
Lewisburg Ford — Oil Change/Tire Rotation w/Multi-Point Inspection — $34.95 (Most present coupon at time of service. Expires 12/31/06.)
Lewisburg Ford
2265 Old Turnpike Rd. (Route 45 West) Across From Brookpark Farm
Call Today! (570) 524-7267
Visit us on the web at www.lewisburgford.com

Homeless veterans find their voices

Courtesy of www.gnn.tv

'When I Came Home' follows numerous homeless veterans throughout their many life struggles, and examines the factors that have led to their living on the streets. The documentary also focuses on the veteran movement against such unfair treatment by the government.

By Kathryn Bernhardt
Staff Writer

❖ Movie Review

Interventionist documentary "When I Came Home" uses heart-wrenching accounts of homeless vets to empower its audience and facilitate change. Its voice is powerful; its message is unavoidable; and its story compels us to act.

At any given moment, there are over 300,000 homeless veterans living in America. That means that over 300,000 people who risked their lives to serve our country now live each day without the most basic of human necessities: shelter.

"When I Came Home," winner of the "NY Loves Film" Best Documentary award at the 2006 Tribeca Film Festival, exposes the shockingly large presence of homeless war veterans in America.

New York Magazine called the interventionist documentary "fiercely moving." Its potency stems from director and producer Dan Lohaus's ability to delve deeply into the personal battles that veterans face upon returning home, as well as the systematic failures of veteran networks and organizations.

"When I Came Home" gives a voice to the 300,000 homeless veterans of our country by closely following 24-year-old Iraq veteran and father of four, Herold Noel.

After delivering fuel to the front lines of the March 2003 invasion of Iraq, Noel was honorably discharged in August 2003.

His dreams of a better life at home were shattered. After repeated rejection from government and veteran housing programs, he was forced to live out of his 1994 Jeep Cherokee in New York City.

Lohaus follows Noel through his on-going struggle, both internally with his Post Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD) diagnosis, and externally with veteran's organizations as he fights to gain the benefits promised to him upon enlistment. His portrayal of Noel is both heart-felt and moving.

Watching Noel's interactions with his family—his mother, his wife and his children—adds a personal depth to his struggle. He fights not just for himself, but for his impoverished family and fellow soldiers that will soon come home to the same set of problems.

Noel told the New York Post in 2005, "When I was in Iraq, I was fighting a war for the American dream. Now, I'm fighting a different kind of war, but it's still a war for survival." Noel's transformation from ex-soldier to eloquent public figure is, as journalist David Edelstein wrote, "Fiercely moving."

Throughout Noel's story, Lohaus interjects testimonies from other vets of different ages, races and wars to highlight the breadth of the homeless vet problem.

Striking similarities between Noel's accounts and Vietnam veteran accounts reveal the neglect of these issues for the last 30 years and call for more immediate solutions, as the number of returning vets continues to rise (Veterans Affairs is now reporting over 1,000 homeless vets from the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan).

Noel and Lohaus have different attitudes regarding the situation. Noel seems pessimistic which, when taking into account the hardships that Noel has suffered, is expected. After all, three decades have passed since Vietnam and no progress seems to have been made.

But Lohaus seems to believe things can change and that his documentary is a step in that direction. He hopes that recent veteran-neglectful media will set the stage for legislative response.

Regardless of one's optimism or pessimism, "When I Came Home" portrays exciting and eye-opening accounts of vet stories that culminate in cinematic success.

Since winning the Tribeca award in 2006, Lohaus has expanded his audience.

The film expressively portrays Noel's story through the documentary-lens while simultaneously delivering a cinematic experience. But Lohaus' anticipation of a strong public response has been disappointing.

Due to the complex political implications of the documentary, it has been difficult to get "When I Came Home" the attention that it deserves. Although political battles may hinder the film's exposure, they cannot strip the film of its beautiful tragedy; and its tragedy adds to its poignancy.

Currently, Lohaus and Noel are promoting the film by hosting screenings at various universities and organizations. To learn more about their progress, visit www.whenicamehome.com.

Without hope, how can there be change? Without confronting a problem, how can we solve it?

Lohaus' sense of hope makes "When I Came Home" all the more powerful. It presents harsh realities but maintains the optimistic ideals that originally inspired Lohaus to create the film.

"When I Came Home" confronts heart-wrenching accounts of homeless vets to empower its audience and facilitate change. Its voice is powerful; its message is unavoidable; and its story compels us to act.

To deny its achievements—both as a film and as a catalyst for change—would be a tragic failure of perception.

Symposium offers range of artistic critiques

By Janna Shapiro
Arts & Entertainment Editor

With Samek Art Gallery still undergoing renovations, artistic expression may have seemed a bit harder to come by at the University.

If your artistic addiction has been suffering, then you missed the ultimate fix this weekend. The University held its second Intercollegiate Art Symposium in the Gallery Theater Sunday.

The seven-hour marathon art event showcased presentations from five talented and stage-frightened students from Bloomsburg University, Lafayette University, Lycoming College, Pennsylvania State University and two of our own student art historians.

"Professor [Roger] Rothman encouraged me to participate. We all had to turn in abstracts and then were chosen to present," presenter Aislinn Hyde '07 said.

Hyde presented her research on Anselm Kiefer subtitled, "The Message Remains the Same." Hyde discussed how Kiefer, one of the most highly revered post-war German painters, has continued to convey themes of political power and history throughout his career. His shifting styles and mediums changed, but his use of extraordinarily large canvases to convey the effects of social movements on individual identity remain consistent.

Each session showcased two to three students' research with a question panel following the last presentation.

"Kiefer felt the need to re-enact gestures to understand the men who used them," Hyde said. "He was trying to cope and come to terms with the past. He had a continuing identity crisis."

Jenna DiPaolo '07 presented her research on Sandro Botticelli's self-portraiture in his Adoration of the Magi. She emphasized the importance of the individual in the late 15th century as a big factor in Botticelli's self portrayal.

The Art Symposium was the brainchild of Roger Rothman, assistant professor of art history. The art department requested that the four participating schools select two of their finest student candidates to present at the event. The University conducted an internal search for its two participants.

"It's a lot of work but it's absolutely worth it. Students share ideas with other like-minded art history students. It enables them to understand the significance of their undergraduate research," said Janice Mann, associate professor of art.

The Symposium was split into four sessions with coffee and lunch served in between. Each session showcased two or three students' research with a question panel following the last presentation.

Mann hopes to create an art symposium specifically for the University in the Fall as a means for selecting new research candidates. This move would mimic the Art Symposiums held at Bloomsburg University.

Bison comedian's 'filler' humor a disappointment

By Alex Hay
Contributing Writer

I enjoy a good laugh as much as anyone else. Comedy soothes the soul and makes life that much more enjoyable. With that said, I was looking forward to attending comedian Kyle Dunnigan's stand-up routine last Friday in the Bison.

Dunnigan is a regular cast member on television shows like "Cedric the Entertainer" and "Reno! 911," and has appeared on "Late Night with Conan O'Brien" multiple times to do his stand-up routine. His impressive credentials were not a guarantee of comedic originality.

His presentation was very disappointing. The show at the Bison was slow, repetitive and surprisingly devoid of humorous material.

Furthermore, Dunnigan's attitude suggested that he thought the Bison to be an unworthy venue. He lacked energy on stage, mumbled into his microphone and paused extensively between joke. Perhaps this approach to comedy is simply his trademark style, but I found myself waiting for him to lie down and take a nap in the middle of the show. I almost wished he had.

As for his material, Dunnigan switched between stale sex jokes and poking fun at both students in line at the Bison and the cashiers.

Using the crowd as a source for jokes has never been impressive. Dunnigan picked a few unlucky viewers as "filler" material to round out his show.

Indeed the crowd itself did not appear to find the show particularly funny either. Laughter sounded forced and came sporadically. There were more than a dozen people who left within the first 10 minutes. Dunnigan immediately made heavily sarcastic and bitter remarks.

The highlight of the show, if there was one, involved the use of a sound-looping machine, which Dunnigan employed to create a soundtrack full of "oohhh yeaaaahs" and "uh-huhhhhs" for one of his slightly awkward and inappropriate sex jokes.

"I had to leave. He wasn't funny and I couldn't take it anymore," Nathan Mikus '09 said. And Nathan's sentiments were not solely his own.

"Quite simply, he was terrible. I didn't hear one good joke," Matt Nixon '09 said.

I myself left the show frustrated and disappointed, not at all amused that I started my Friday night with bad comedy. Dunnigan is no novice when it comes to stand-up, but I felt as if I were watching an inexperienced amateur at target practice.

Activities and Campus Events has been quite successful in its offering of comedians, and I suppose Dunnigan was simply a rare miss.

For more information on Kyle Dunnigan, you can visit his MySpace page at www.myspace.com/kyledunnigan.

ANOTHER BUBBLE

By Ana Fullmer
Writer

It is House Party season and I know that all my bumbling "bubblenellians" are gearing up for a weekend of springtime revelry and carbonated beverage consumption. I just hope everyone steers clear of becoming the royal mess that Prince Harry was last Saturday night on the streets of London. JustJared.com reports that the monarch was stumbling drunk and attempted to hit a member of the paparazzi who was following him, only Harry missed and fell over. Where was London's police when all of this was happening? They should have immediately breathalyzed the partying prince and sent him straight to the emergency room! I know I certainly wouldn't want to live in a town that didn't know that hospitalization is the only answer for a stumbler! With the events of House Party upon us, I am glad I can party in peace knowing that here at Bucknell both the LBGPD and P-Safe will be stocking up on little plastic blow tubes to keep any Prince Harry copy-cats off the streets.

Not that we need any more reasons to celebrate this weekend, but for those of you that require a little more of a nudge to get that first (glorious) Natty Light down ... Angelina Jolie acquired another child! The Cover story of the recent People Magazine has pictures of the newly adopted Pax Thien Jolie, the three-year-old Vietnamese boy that Angelina went to pick up last week. The magazine has photographs of little Pax cuddled up napping with his older brother Maddox and playing with his baby sister Zahara by the pool at their hotel. The images are just too cute for words!

Jessica Simpson is also taking her first steps in saving the world ... or at least saving Mexican orphans from having bad skin. The singer was publicized last week for donating a Chrysler minivan (that she won/got for free/didn't want to pay taxes on) to the Casa Hagar Elim orphanage in Nuevo Laredo, Mexico. During her visit she also brought the children some beaded jewelry and bottles from the Proactive skincare line. Is she the next Saint Angelina?

On to people who may need some divine intervention. Britney Spears completed her stay in rehab and was out and about Los Angeles over the weekend having sushi with friends and attending dance classes. There were rumors that she got out of her treatment center a few days early to attend estranged husband Kevin Federline's 29th birthday party in Las Vegas. These rumors appear to be untrue since the bash held at Pure nightclub was Britney free. However, Federline's other baby-mama, Shar Jackson, was in attendance, probably hoping to garner some publicity, or a job.

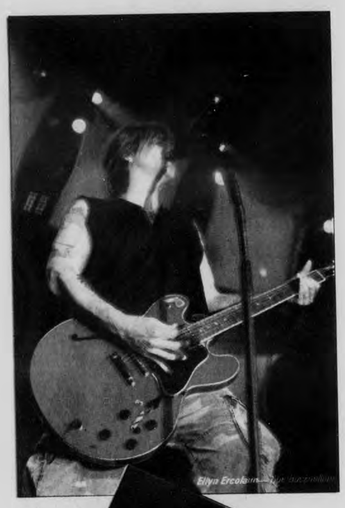
Speaking of those who should get a job, Nicole Richie and Paris Hilton will soon be bringing America's obesity epidemic to an end! In the up and coming season of The Simple Life on E!, the duo is trying its hand at being camp counselors who teach health and fitness. I'm not quite sure how putting stuff up your nose, starvation or binging and purging fit into most summer camps, but Paris and Nicole are such clever girls I'm sure they'll find a way to show the girls their weight loss secrets. And viewers can rest assured that at least Nicole practices what she preaches, as she has been getting dizzy and passing out on set. Her publicists explained that she had been diagnosed with hypoglycemia, hoping to dispel the rumors that Nicole's habits were the cause of her episodes. However, anyone with access to Google knows that hypoglycemia happens when you don't have enough blood sugar to support your body's activity ... aka when you're not eating. It was a nice try.

On that note, we here at Another Bubble wish everyone a happy healthy House Party weekend full of hanging out, hooking up and trips to the meatstand. Cheers!

Still Magnolia
10% Off first visit!
Body Waxing · Skin Care · Full Service
Infrared Sauna · Massage · Hair Salon
(570) 523 -2772 For Appointment

La Primavera
Rt. 45 West Lewisburg
523-1515
Sun, Tues-Thurs 11-10
Fri-Sat 11-11
Weekly Specials
Tues: Chicken & Veal $12.95
Wed: Seafood Night $12.95
Thurs: Steak Night $12.95
Sun: Pasta Special $8.95
-Pizzas to go! $16.95 for 2 large pizzas
-Full Liquor Bar
-Available for Formals, Graduation Dinners, Reunions
-Lunch Buffet 11-3
COUPON: Buy one entree, get 2nd one half off!
COUPON: 10% off total purchase!
Coupons cannot be used on weekly specials

The Goo Goo Dolls!



Band satisfies audience's expectations with great interaction and stage presence

By Lily Beauvilliers
Associate Editor of Layout

❖ Concert Review

I went to the Goo Goo Dolls concert last Saturday with incredibly high expectations and a definite fear of being let down. But the band quenched my fears, putting on an astoundingly good show, one certain to go down in the annals of University history.

As soon as the Goos took the stage, the crowd went wild, with many people standing up in their seats and screaming. The band expertly capitalized on the energy by launching into one of its hits, "Dizzy."

When the crowd got quiet, lead singer John Rzeznik knew exactly what to do—get some audience participation going. "Where are you guys at?" he asked, and the audience roared.

"It's Saturday fing night! Here we go, it's gonna be good," Rzeznik said. He was quite right.

The Goo Goo Dolls seem to have almost a sixth sense when it comes to knowing exactly what the audience needs and when. This showmanship isn't surprising, since they've been together for 22 years (incidentally longer than most University students have been alive). The Goos have the experience to put on a satisfying show, and certainly succeeded.

"Rzeznik seemed really excited to be there. His performance was really intense," Laura Grangeia '07 said.

On stage, the band had a pretty good inner dynamic. Rzeznik and bassist Robby Takac in particular seemed playful, like they really enjoyed being up there together. But they didn't let band dynamics get in the way of developing rapport with the audience.

> Although Goo Goo Dolls may have been the main act, plenty of people were excited to see Augustana as well. The opening band's music was excellent, fitting right in with current trends towards a mellow, thoughtful kind of rock sound. However, its stage presence was nothing to write home about. The group played more to each other than to the audience, failing to really get people moving and excited. But Augustana is still a young group and has a lot of potential. "I liked the lead singer's voice, and how he related to the crowd. He talked to us, which was pretty cool," Drew Wertheim '08 said.

I think one of Rzeznik's most telling moves was the way he would occasionally hold the guitar—away from himself, with his arm stretched. It looked as though he was inviting the audience to literally immerse itself in the music, to step between musician and guitar and really get into the concert.

Rzeznik's sometimes witty interjections also helped build this rapport. "I need to ask one question," Rzeznik said. "Who the f is smoking weed out there?" Some people on the floor screamed. "Isn't that against the law in school? I remember when I was in college, way back in the '80's. It's good to see some things haven't changed."

Of course, being an incredibly popular band certainly helps out your performance—you get props! For the song "Black Balloon," dozens of black balloons were launched onto the floor. Audience members gleefully batted them around for much of the rest of the concert.

No concert is perfect—there were a few disappointments. I was really looking forward to hearing Takac sing a few of his songs—his goofy voice and light-hearted lyrics have made him my personal Goo Goo Dolls crush since Gutterflower came out in 2002. Unfortunately, his voice just didn't come through the microphones as clearly as I would have liked.

Still, Takac's little mini-set of two songs got the audience jumping before Rzeznik took it back down a notch with "Name," from their 1995 album "A Boy Named Goo," followed by the requisite Rock Star Political Diatribe.

Rzeznik told the audience about the band's return to Buffalo to write its latest album, "Let Love In" (2006). Jobs had left the area, and so had many people.

"It makes me sick when 10,000 people lost their jobs and the stock market goes up 10 points. This isn't Republican sh or Democrat sh because they're all full of sh. [...] You guys have to take it all back," Rzeznik said.

"This next song is for all of us that have to work for a living," he said before launching into "We'll Be Here (When You're Gone)" from "Let Love In."

"I love the irony of saying that at Bucknell," Daylin Oakes '09 said. Obviously Rzeznik hadn't researched the University's demographics.

Just as the concert started to drag, the Goo Goo Dolls broke out with "Broadway," followed by "Better Days," and "Iris." The audience reacted well to these songs, jumping, swaying and waving cell phones (substituting for lighters) in the air as appropriate.

After another song, the Goos left the stage, and many students left, too, but a hearty contingent remained clapping until the Goos came back for two more. The first, "Acoustic #3" from "Dizzy Up the Girl," rounded out a night full of heartfelt emotions. (After all, it was the last night of the Goo Goo Doll's tour with Augustana.)

The last song, "Give a Little Bit," from the newest album, really brought audience and band together. Bright lights on both the stage and the audience brought the two together as everyone sang this Supertramp cover.

A strong presence and high energy makes Todd Carey a hit

By Ty Clark
Senior Writer

As part of the Activities and Campus Events (ACE) Late Night Music Series at the 7th St. Café, Todd Carey delivered a great performance on Friday night.

A Chicago native who recorded with and sometimes plays with a band, Carey played a solo acoustic set in two parts, running for about an hour and a half. Throughout the set, he varied between songs from his first album, songs from a new album (released on Tuesday) and covers, creating an interesting blend of music not necessarily expected from a pop-rock singer/songwriter playing at the Café.

Carey began the first set around 11:05 p.m. by tearing into "Falling From Grace," a song from his upcoming album "Watching Waiting," before moving into a dramatically different song from his first record. These juxtapositions, not as present in Carey's studio work with the band, are a trademark of his live solo act. They significantly helped his performance and his music.

On the surface, Carey is a pop musician. He relies on short hooks and riffs to establish a song and runs with them until the song dies. When it is dead, he shifts—often successfully—to a new song. But with many of these songs, most of which were announced as new material, the stripped-down style was not enough to carry the song. What Carey has in energy and creativity, he lacks in talent, and much of his recent work could easily be re-packaged and re-sold under a different name.

His ability to incorporate his influences into a live set is what sets the Chicagoan apart from many of his contemporaries. Much like John Mayer forming a trio with established session musicians and recording a bluesy album, Carey demonstrated his influences during the concert, mainly in the first set. The third song was a sprawling composition, over six minutes long, with a blues riff and excellent guitar work that generated significant applause from the crowd. Carey repeated this in the second set with a five-minute blues exercise, highlighting that part of the performance.

At times, Carey sounded uncannily like Jeff Buckley, and it is not hard to see the influence of Buckley's music on Carey in his music and performance style, especially in the acoustic "Mystery White Boy" album. It was even less surprising to see Carey cover Buckley's rendition of "Hallelujah," calling it "a song I did not write and really wish I had." Although his vocals were not on par with the legendary singer, it was a well-picked addition to his set. Later, in the second set, he would cover Gnarls Barkley's "Crazy," which was well-done but not well-received.

The highlights of Carey's music are not his ample guitar playing or his singing, but rather his ear for sampling. On his Web site, he invites fans to play around with the pedals and equipment he uses for sampling his instruments in the middle of a concert. On the albums, his sampling provides a solid foundation for his work and allows him to expand his sound outward; in a show, it allows him to use a short, looped hook and provides him with an opportunity to play lead. Throughout the night, Carey used this technique to his advantage, mixing rhythm and lead with an adept touch to bolster a melody.

Although Carey seemed to tire vocally throughout the night, he held the audience's attention through his energetic presence. Like an indie rocker, he continuously communicated his enthusiasm and joy in sharing his music during the performance. The 7th St. Café was probably not the best outlet for him. Due to the tenor of the shop at midnight on a Friday, Carey did not develop a real connection with his audience, mainly because the spectators were not interested in one. Carey's charisma would have been better served on a small stage in a club such as Uptown, where the energy he put forth in his performance could be reflected in the audience.

It is hard to pin down Todd Carey as an artist. He has cited influences from Kanye West to the Beatles on his MySpace page, and it is easy to see these come out in a concert. Although Carey has great appreciation for the music that helps to round him out and set him apart as an artist, his original music almost stubbornly settles into the radio-friendly, pop-rock territory and does not move. Like John Mayer, Carey would be well-served by exploring his influences, even at the expense of his other pop music. His music may never be more than unexceptionally good, but his performances will continue to impress.

The Bucknellian
April 6, 2007
The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University
Volume 139, Number 9 | Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue | www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

A price to pee

Broadway-style musical 'Urinetown' will be performed on April 13. Read more about it in A&E.

See page A8

Retired prof arrested in library

By Andrew Larson
Editor-in-Chief

A retired University biology professor was escorted out of the Ellen Clarke Bertrand Library Wednesday morning and arrested on charges of molesting a 10-year-old boy.

State police arrested Jack Edgar Harclerode, 71, of Lewisburg, at 9:50 a.m. Wednesday. He is charged with corruption of a minor and indecent assault and is being held in Columbia County Jail on $75,000 bail. He had not posted bail as of Thursday afternoon.

HARCLERODE

On Wednesday, Harclerode was reading in a back cubicle of the library when two state police offers identified him and escorted him out of the building, accompanied by Public Safety.

"I found him pretty much in the furthest cubicle in the back at a workstation," said State Trooper Kenneth Houck, based out of Bloomsburg, Pa.

State police looked for Harclerode in several locations, then spotted his vehicle parked on campus. The officers asked Public Safety to escort them to the library, where they suspected he could be hiding.

"We'd already been to his residence and quite a lot of other places," Houck said. "Quite honestly I think he was avoiding the police and I don't think he expected us to find him there."

Harclerode worked at the University for 32 years, retiring in 1997. He earned his Ph.D. from Pennsylvania State University. He was noted for his research on the effects of cannabis on sex hormones and testicular enzymes in rodents.

Harclerode is accused of molesting a boy from Lancaster, Pa. on a weekend camping trip with his parents and grandparents at J&D's Campground in Bloomsburg, Pa., according to an arrest affidavit obtained by The Bucknellian.

See ASSAULT page A2

University students threatened by RIAA

Recording Industry Association of America

By Sophia Leong
Contributing Writer

Two University members have been targeted by the Recording Industry Association of America (RIAA) for illegally downloading music files on the school network. The University will not release their names to the RIAA unless it receives a legal subpoena to do so.

The RIAA sent a legal notice to the University stating that two Internet Protocol (IP) addresses showed activity of excessive illegal file sharing. Beyond the IP addresses, the users have not been identified.

General Counsel Wayné Bromfield said the targeted users may be students or faculty members.

"The RIAA sent us a warning because we happen to be the intermediary host that has access to the system which holds the names of the users," Bromfield said. "But it is just a preliminary warning."

Other universities have also received notices from the RIAA recently, asking for cooperation to pre-litigate the charges. The University of Wisconsin and the University of Rhode Island have declined to cooperate with the commission. A pre-litigation settlement consists of a monetary fine and prevents further civil action or penalty.

A past successful pre-litigation from the RIAA at another university was settled at $3,700.

"Well, if they downloaded more than 3,700 songs, then $3,700 isn't such a bad deal," Sophia Magalona '09 said. "But in all honesty, I'd rather pay the 99 cents on iTunes at the onset than be charged for illegally downloading later on."

Bromfield also said the University will not respond to the warning until it receives a legal notice with a subpoena attached.

"They would like us to give names, but we aren't going to give any — that has not been part of our practice," Bromfield said. "If we're faced with a subpoena, then we will have to act accordingly. But there is a fine line between what is legal and what is illegal. What the RIAA perceives as illegal may very well be legal under University rules."

Bromfield also said that if the charges on the users are not legitimate, the University will do what it can to protect the students or faculty from what will be considered harassment from the RIAA.

This is the first time in University history that the RIAA has approached members

See RIAA page A2

Environmental Center receives $450,000 grant

By Jessamy Little
Contributing Writer

The Environmental Center received a grant of $450,000 from the Luce Foundation two weeks ago. The grant will fund the Susquehanna Initiative, a program incorporating learning, integrated teacher-student research and community outreach for the Susquehanna River and its environment.

The grant was secured by the co-directors of the Environmental Center, Peter Wilshusen, assistant professor of environmental studies, and Craig Kochel, professor of geology, as well as Sam Lundquist, vice president of Development and Alumni Relations, and Rick Rosenberg, director of Corporate and Foundation Relations.

"The center is available to everyone on campus, student and faculty alike, with an interest in the environment," Kochel said.

The Environmental Center is not just for environmental studies majors, but students in all disciplines at the University. The Center already involves 45 faculty members from 20 different departments at the University.

The co-directors of the Environmental Center are very excited about the grant and the ability to make great progress.

> Read more about Kochel and his work with Jeff Trop, assistant professor of geology, comparing Alaska to Mars, in Features, page B8.

The Environmental Center is still very young, established in 2005, and the grant will help to improve the program.

The Susquehanna Initiative program has five main goals that work to raise environmental awareness throughout various aspects of the community. Some of these goals are closely associated with the University, either by allowing students to conduct research on the Susquehanna River or work to restore Miller Run, the on-campus watershed.

The administration has taken a liking to the idea of a greener university. University president Brian Mitchell and Rosenberg were instrumental in the grant process.

"It is a great sign to see that we have the administration behind us on these environmen-

See GRANT page A2

Price of birth control to triple

Changes to Medicaid program unexpectedly affecting college students

By Kelly McGaw
Contributing Writer

In the fall, Student Health Services (SHS) will start charging students triple the current price for a pack of birth control pills.

College students around the country have already felt the strain of increasing oral contraceptive prices sweeping through student health centers. About 39 percent of undergraduate women use oral contraceptives, according to an estimate based on survey data by the American College Health Association.

The price increases are a consequence of the Deficit-Rebate Act of 2005. The goal of the act, President George W. Bush said, is "to slow the pace of spending growth in both Medicare and Medicaid" which "are straining budgets at both the state and federal level," according to www.whitehouse.gov. Medicaid is the primary health insurance program for low-income individuals and families.

Roz Yannaccone, nurse practitioner for women's health, began to hoard the discounted $5 packs of birth control pills in November 2006.

"When I heard the price was going up, I bought enough to take me through the fall at $5," Yannaccone said.

Once these discounted packs run out, SHS will charge $16 for a generic brand of birth control pills.

Under the Deficit-Rebate Act, which went into effect Jan. 1, pharmaceutical companies supplying drugs to health care providers such as universities must pay a higher fee to participate in Medicaid when they offer discounts. Now, there is no longer an incentive to offer these discounts.

About 60 women per month visit Yannaccone at SHS to obtain contraceptives.

> "Of those women, more than 75 percent will be affected by the rate increase."
>
> Roz Yannaccone, nurse practitioner

"Of those women, more than 75 percent will be affected by the rate increase," Yannaccone said.

In response to the contraceptive price increase one student, who would only speak if she remained anonymous, said, "It's still cheaper than getting it from the pharmacy; that's all I can ask for. I don't feel like you can really ask [SHS] to keep the prices so low if the price they are paying goes up; it's economics."

Unless a student has an insurance plan that covers oral contraceptives, a pharmacy will charge about $40 for a name-brand pill. CVS in Lewisburg is currently supplying name-brand Alesse, costing $40 a pack. The generic brand of the same pill, Aviane, costs $31.19 a pack.

For female students whose insurance companies cover birth control, an alternative to accepting the new $16 price is to have the nurse practitioner write a prescription that the student can have filled at the pharmacy. This may require a $5-$10 co-pay.

For students who want their transactions to remain private, the insurance

See PILL page A3

INSIDE THIS ISSUE

OPINIONS
Illegal file sharing is hard to justify, but so are the RIAA's bullish tactics to nab Internet thieves.

A4

A&E
House Party favorite Milf-n-Cookies rocked out the lawn of Phi Kappa Psi fraternity this weekend.

A6

FEATURES
Student march tried to "Take Back the Night" and protest sexual assault.

B7

SPORTS
Men's lacrosse beat Holy Cross 15-5 last Saturday. Read more about the game in sports.

B1

Public Safety Log

Thursday, March 29

ASSIST OTHER AGENCY/POLICE—South 6th Street: Assisted Lewisburg Police Department on a possible disturbance.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Swartz Hall: Broken door pane.

THEFT—Christy Mathewson-Memorial Stadium: Sports equipment stolen.

ALARM-INTRUSION—Bertrand Library Computer Room: Caused by employee.

ALARM-INTRUSION—Bertrand Library Computer Room: Unknown cause.

LOST PROPERTY—Between campus and St. John Street: Lost wallet.

LOST PROPERTY—Hunt Hall: Lost ID card.

Friday, March 30

ALARM-FIRE—Bucknell West: Caused by cooking.

ALARM-FIRE—Smith Hall: Caused by cooking.

ALARM-INTRUSION—Marts Hall: Caused by employee.

ALARM-FIRE—Bucknell West: Caused by cooking.

ALARM-INTRUSION—Computer Center Room Three: Caused by student.

VEHICLE ACCIDENT (NON-REPORTABLE)—Sigma Phi Epsilon Fraternity: Vehicle drifted into another vehicle.

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Bertrand Library: Student arrested for underage consumption.

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—Chi Phi fraternity: Pull station activated.

DISTURBANCE—Phi Gamma Delta fraternity: Reports of a disturbance. Gone on arrival.

ASSIST OTHER AGENCY/POLICE—Breakiron Engineering: Assisted LCE with identification of student.

PUBLIC ASSIST—Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity: Assisted president with party management.

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity: Non-University student arrested for underage consumption.

ASSIST OTHER AGENCY/POLICE—Chi Phi fraternity: Assisted East Buffalo Township Police Department with identification of University student.

Saturday, March 31

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—7th Street and Snake Road: Alumni welfare check.

THEFT—Chemistry Building: Jacket stolen.

PUBLIC ASSIST—Kappa Delta Rho fraternity: President assisted with party management.

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—Tau Kappa Epsilon fraternity: Alarm caused by a discharged fire extinguisher.

ASSIST OTHER AGENCY/POLICE—7th Street and Dent Drive: Assisted Lewisburg Police Department.

MEDICAL TRANSPORT—Dent Drive: Provided medical assistance to student.

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Farm Lot: Student and non-student arrested for underage consumption.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Swartz Hall: Broken window.

ADMINISTRATIVE VIOLATION—Farm Lot and Kappa Delta Rho fraternity: Alcohol confiscated.

LOST PROPERTY—Fraternity Road: Lost cell phone.

ALARM-FIRE—Bucknell West: Cause by cooking.

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Coleman Road: Student arrested for underage consumption.

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Breakiron Engineering: Non-student arrested for underage consumption.

MISSING PERSON—O'Leary Center: Student located.

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—KLARC: Student arrested for underage consumption.

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Demosthenean Hall: Two students received disciplinary referrals.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Swartz Hall: Broken window.

PUBLIC ASSIST—Tau Kappa Epsilon fraternity: President assisted with party management.

ASSIST OTHER AGENCY/POLICE—Fourth and St. George Street: Assisted Lewisburg Police Department.

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—McDonnell Hall: Non-University student arrested for public drunkenness and disorderly conduct.

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—7th Street Café: Non-student arrested for public drunkenness and transported to hospital.

Sunday, April 1

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Swartz Hall: Broken window.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Kappa Delta Rho fraternity: Broken window.

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Fraternity Road: Student arrested for underage consumption.

PUBLIC ASSIST—Fraternity Road: Student refused medical treatment.

ASSIST OTHER AGENCY/POLICE—Walker Street and Loomis Street: Assisted Lewisburg Police Department with a vehicle stop.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Vedder Hall: Broken windows.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Dana Engineering: Two non-University students arrested for trespassing.

ALARM-FIRE—Bucknell West: Caused by cooking.

ALARM-INTRUSION—President's House: Unknown cause.

THEFT—Sigma Chi fraternity: Wallet taken from house.

ALARM-INTRUSION—Bertrand Library: Unknown cause.

LOST PROPERTY—Fraternity Road: Black leather bi-fold lost.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Hunt Hall: Sign in lobby defaced.

Monday, April 2

ALARM-INTRUSION—Marts Hall: Caused by employee.

ALARM-FIRE—Carey House: Caused by steam from shower.

THEFT—University Avenue: Hub cap stolen from vehicle.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Bucknell West: Broken window.

CRIMINAL TRESPASS—Bucknell West: Unauthorized entry

Tuesday, April 3

THEFT—Harris Hall: Bike stolen.

PROPERTY DAMAGE—Coleman Hall: Broken window.

ALARM-FIRE—Bucknell West: Caused by burnt saran wrap.

FOUND PROPERTY—McDonnell Hall: Pathway post found.

Police accuse of assault

ASSAULT From page A1

Harclerode and the boy's family belonged to a camping club called The Keystone Bounders Association. On Friday, July 14, Harclerode played miniature golf with the boy, bought him candy and took pictures of him. On Sunday, July 16, the boy visited Harclerode in his RV and Harclerode allegedly sexually assaulted him, according to the affidavit.

The boy told investigators that Harclerode touched his genitalia and asked Harclerode to stop. Harclerode told police that he touched the boy on his back and in other non-sexual areas and that the boy said it was OK.

Harclerode maintained contact with the boy's family after July 16 through e-mail conversations, each with a paragraph written to the boy.

On March 13, police executed a search warrant at the residence of Harclerode and confiscated six pornographic movies relating to young gay males, including one in which a boy seeks companionship with a college professor.

Harclerode's preliminary hearing is scheduled for Tuesday, April 10 in Columbia District Court in Catawissa, Pa.

Public Safety Chief Jason Friedberg said he was contacted about Harclerode for the first time on Wednesday. Friedberg said there had been no restrictions on Harclerode's access to campus and he had no knowledge of the investigation.

"I may never know someone committed a crime until the day it gets filed in court, so we would have no way of putting restrictions on," Friedberg said.

RIAA targets University

RIAA From page A1

regarding illegal file sharing.

Devin Hill '10 said that the RIAA's actions are justified in the sense that they are trying to protect the industry.

"But at the same time, there are millions of people in this world that download illegally every day but do not get caught," Hill said. "It's very unfair."

Until further notice from the RIAA, the identity of the users will remain undisclosed, but the administration continues to warn against illegal file sharing.

Grant to build a 'greener' campus tal efforts," Wilshusen said.

GRANT From page A1

This assistance shows that the environment is near the top of the list of priorities for the administration to address in the upcoming Plan for Bucknell.

"It is of great importance that we reduce the ecological footprint of Bucknell; what we call the 'Greening Initiative,'" said Dina El-Mogazi, sustainability coordinator of the environmental studies program.

Many of the Environmental Center's future programs emphasize helping students and the local community become more environmentally conscious.

House Party a success for Public Safety

By Ahmed Kodouda
Writer

It is estimated that over 5,000 people, including students, alumni, relatives and guests were at the University last weekend to partake in the annual House Party tradition, according to Public Safety.

This was Jason Friedberg's first experience with the tradition as the Chief of Public Safety.

"You hear the stories of what it was like and you prepare for all sorts of outcomes. I didn't see it as, 'This is how it has been done,' so we're going to keep doing it that way. I made sure we made our due diligence in preparing for the weekend," Friedberg said.

There was a lot of planning and preparation that went into House Party. Public Safety began planning for the event much earlier than it has in the past.

"If it's not planned properly, I generally don't like the way things happen," Friedberg said. "Over spring break we got all the party lists so we developed a database of parties—when each one was going to start and stop, how many cases of alcohol each party was going to have. So each officer knew … planned attendance, who's in charge of the party and how much alcohol is supposed to be there. That was never done before."

This was the first year Public Safety met with Interfraternity Council (IFC) and other House Party co-sponsors. Armed with a PowerPoint presentation of 50 slides, Public Safety explained what was expected from both the sponsors and Public Safety itself, with regards to liabilities and responsibilities.

"This gave the students some sort of guideline so they can make good calls and know when they're making bad calls," Friedberg said.

Students were not concerned about safety issues during the weekend.

"I felt very safe walking around campus during the entire weekend," Farrah Kim '09 said.

"There were a lot of events around campus that I attended such as the rugby game on Saturday, which we happened to win. People enjoyed their time and I didn't hear much about any issues with Public Safety," Kim said.

According to Friedberg, in past years, there has always been damage to cars left on the roads.

"Knowing that, I asked myself, why hasn't anyone cleared out Frat Row before? That being the case, we decided that every car goes," Friedberg said.

Public Safety encouraged its offices and the police departments to get out of their vehicles and walk around the area to meet and interact with the students.

"We also asked all vehicle traffic to stop, including police departments," Friedberg said.

Additionally, Public Safety met with the alcohol distributors and found out how much alcohol was sold to each fraternity. This information gave Public Safety a general count of how many cases of alcohol were on campus and how much was present at each location.

There was only one student transferred from Fraternity Road along with three University students that were transported off campus to Evangelical Community Hospital.

Alex Ufier '10 felt that the attitude the University takes towards the entire event is unacceptable.

"They know that underage drinking is going on and refuse to do anything about it. I just don't understand how everyone enjoys being drunk all weekend," Ufier said.

For next year, Public Safety intends to start planning for the weekend in January. "I think we could do a lot of good … with House Party," said Friedberg. "Our main concern was lighting. The fairway on Frat Row from the Observatory to Demosthenean [Hall] had horrible lighting. I'm looking forward to adding more lights, especially in that area," Friedberg said.

BRING IN THIS COUPON AND SAVE!
Guitar Center
The Musician's Choice
5082 Jonestown Rd.
Harrisburg, PA 17112
717-652-7399
Shipping Available!
10% OFF!
THE BEST GEAR
THE BEST DEALS!
*some restrictions apply, see store for details

DOES YOUR CAR NEED SERVICED?
Our Service Department has $25,000 in new upgrades, including a new alignment rack, brake lathe, tire machine, and hundreds of hours of training for the techs. We now offer shuttle service to and from work or home. We have become a complete service center that can perform any work on any model, from an oil change to engine replacement.
Lewisburg Ford
Oil Change w/Multi-Point Inspection
$19.95
Lewisburg Ford
Oil Change/Tire Rotation w/Multi-Point Inspection
$34.95
Lewisburg Ford
2265 Old Turnpike Rd.
(Route 45 West)
Across From Brookpark Farm
Call Today! (570) 524-7267
Visit us on the web at www.lewisburgford.com

ADVANCED SKIN CARE SPA & SALON
aesthetics and wellness medi-spa
115 Farley Circle- Suite 101
Lewisbug, PA 17837
524-4466
now offering two new services!
sunless tanning and body waxing
Bring this ad to your scheduled appointment to receive 10% off spray tanning or body waxing
also offering facials, massage, manicures & pedicures, IPL hair removal, microdermabrasion, hair design, acrylic nails, etc.

Do you like being the first to know about what's going on?
Write for news!
E-mail etu001@

Displays for student art

By Sara Roth
Contributing writer

[The Student Art Initiative] is also one of the first steps in expanding the University's Art Program. Eventually, the University is planning to build a new art building that will have an adjoining art gallery.

Bucknell Student Government is in the process of creating the Student Art Initiative, which will be a year-round rotating display of student artwork in high traffic areas, such as the Elaine Langone Center, the Admissions Building, the 7th Street Café and the Bison.

The idea to display student artwork in public places on campus, is "very Bucknell in essence, because Bucknell students are proud of the work they produce; they should have the right to display it" Class of 2009 president Harry Kastenbaum '09 said.

Kastenbaum describes the Student Art Initiative as having three main benefits:

"It gives the students an opportunity to display their art on campus, Bucknell buildings will be brightened by the work of students and it gives non-Bucknellians a sense of Bucknell's culture and campus diversity."

Chris Simco '09 expands on this idea.

"The Student Art Initiative will open Bucknell students' eyes to the artwork which is created here on campus" he said. "I think this is a step forward and will add more personal and diversified aspects to campus. It will provide art majors as well as students interested in art another way to get involved on campus."

Earlier this semester, BSG unanimously voted to endorse the Student Affairs Committee's request to create an ad hoc Student Art Initiative Committee to be the responsible authority of the program. This committee has not yet been formed and is still accepting applications. There will be eleven committee members. Kastenbaum estimates that by the end of this year, the committee will be "functioning, running and planning" projects for the fall semester.

Although this is a project headed by the BSG, its members have also worked closely with the Craft Center, the art department and Dean Kari Conrad, director of Campus Activities and Programs.

After the Student Art Initiative Committee is formed, BSG will limit its involvement with the program and act solely as a figure of support.

The Student Art Initiative is "the first step in allowing student work to be seen in high traffic areas," Kastenbaum said.

It is also one of the first steps in expanding the University's Art Program. Eventually, the University is planning to build a new art building that will have an adjoining art gallery. The art gallery is currently located in the Langone Center, while the Art Building is on Loomis Street.

Kastenbaum believes that this program adds another layer of diversity to the campus.

When the discussion of increasing diversity on campus is raised, "most people think of ethnic or racial diversity," Kastenbaum said. "[Yet] there is also diversity in academia. Not everyone is a history or political science major."

So far, BSG has received 14 applications for the Student Art Initiative Committee and six portfolios of actual artwork.

Medicare change hits campus

PILL From page A1

company is out of the question. Their only option is to accept the higher price offered by SHS.

"Sometimes we don't think a lot about expense being a big issue for students [at the University], but when you think about it, if you're paying out of pocket all the time, it is. It's a big deal," one sophomore student, who would only speak if she remained anonymous, said.

Yannaccone, who compares this amount to what a couple would pay to go out to the movies, said $16 is still affordable.

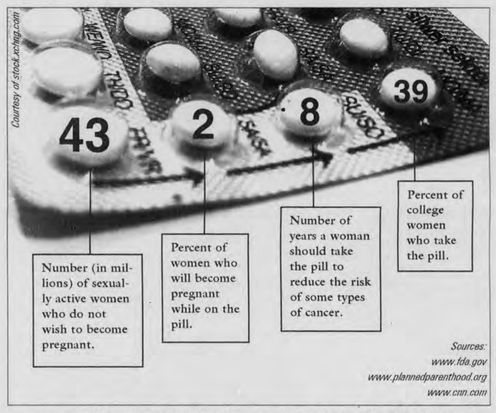
According to the Associated Press, health officials are concerned that students may choose a less preferred contraceptive as a result of the increased price, or might stop using contraceptives entirely.

Emily Steiner '09 expressed her concerns on this topic.

"What worries me the most is that women who can't afford the rise in price will choose not to use birth control pills," Steiner said.

But she does not see a great risk on campus.

"I think that because most students here are educated on the need for using birth control to prevent pregnancy, most females or couples will decide that it is worth the more than 300 percent increase in price."



Courtesy of stock.xchng.com
43
2
8
39
Number (in millions) of sexually active women who do not wish to become pregnant.
Percent of women who will become pregnant while on the pill.
Number of years a woman should take the pill to reduce the risk of some types of cancer.
Percent of college women who take the pill.
Sources:
www.fda.gov
www.plannedparenthood.org www.cnn.com

Another female student who wished to remain anonymous had concerns about women who would be deterred from starting on the pill.

She said, "I've told girls that weren't on [birth control] 'just do it, it's only $5.' Now it will be different because the cost is so much higher."

The Family Planning Clinic in Lewisburg is also feeling the effects of the Medicaid rebate law. One company supplying birth control pills to Family Planning recently raised their prices from $3.40 to $18 a pack. Because suppliers' prices fluctuate, Family Planning has its patients "changing pills all the time to keep prices for patients low," Director Mary Rainey said.

News Briefs

University alumna caught with marijuana

Three New York high school teachers, a University alumna, were caught smoking marijuana outside the Beacon Theatre before a concert by the Allman Brothers on Friday, the New York Post reported. They are being charged with criminal possession of marijuana. All three taught at Manhattan's Urban Assembly Media High School and are facing reassignment after a Department of Education hearing. Police said the teachers "were smoked out at the Upper West Side venue at 6:15 p.m. Friday, shortly before the concert was to start."

The three were identified as Lauriann Kress '05, Jerome Zolobkowski and Alan Blaustein. Kress graduated from the University with a degree in mathematics.

Ashcroft to speak at Bucknell

John Ashcroft, former attorney general of the United States, will speak about homeland security and the war against terrorism at 7:30 p.m. on Monday, April 9 in the Weis Center for the Performing Arts.

As attorney general from 2001-05, Ashcroft led the post-September 11 reform of the Justice Department and helped write the USA Patriot Act. He served in the U.S. Senate and as Governor of Missouri before being appointed Attorney General. His book, Never Again: Securing America and Restoring Justice, was released in 2006.

The talk, entitled "Today and the Future of Homeland Security: Offering strategic perspectives on homeland security and the issues currently affecting our nation's safety," is the Bucknell University Conservatives Club's Fourth Annual Alumni Lecture, a series supported by former BUCC members. Admission to the event is open to the public and free.

First-year dies of alcohol overdose

Gary DeVercelly, an 18-year-old first-year at Rider University in New Jersey, died Friday after being admitted to a hospital Thursday morning for excessive alcohol consumption at a fraternity party, the New York Times reported. Police arrived at the Phi Kappa Tau fraternity house around 2 a.m. Thursday after receiving a call that said someone was vomiting and needed to go to the hospital. At 11 a.m. Friday, DeVercelly died at the Capital Health System's Fuld hospital, 30 hours after being admitted.

According to Angelo Onofrio, an assistant prosecutor from the Mercer County prosecutor's office, "there could be charges involving misdemeanor hazing, felony hazing or manslaughter," depending on the outcome of the investigation. Investigators from the prosecutor's office searched the fraternity house and found many bottles of alcohol. They also seized computers to determine if fraternity rituals might have led to excessive drinking. DeVercelly was originally from Long Beach, Calif.

Sorority sues DePauw after being expelled

The Associated Press reported that the Delta Zeta sorority is suing DePauw University after expelling the sorority due to allegedly evicting members based on popularity and appearance. The sorority, "filed the claim in Federal District Court in Indianapolis, accusing DePauw of breaking contracts, defaming the sorority and interfering with its business relationships," reported the AP.

The sorority is seeking unspecified damages and a public apology. It also wants permission for its chapter to return to the campus and acknowledgement from DePauw that the sorority did not base its decisions on appearance or popularity.

BYU faculty fight to take back speaker invitation

Certain members of the Brigham Young University community want to withdraw the invitation for Vice President Dick Cheney to speak at their commencement ceremonies later in the month, CNN.com reported. Skeptics at one of the most conservative campuses in the nation were not convinced that Cheney set a good example for the graduates. They frowned upon his "promotion of faulty intelligence before the Iraq war and his role in the CIA leak scandal," according to CNN.com. An online petition to withdraw Cheney's invitation, organized by BYU business professor Warner Woodworth, collected more than 2,300 signatures.

Woodworth explained that the BYU has a standard of integrity and "Cheney [did] not measure up." According to Cheney's office, the speech would not have a political theme.

CatmanDo
Handyman Services
Specializing in small home repair jobs:
Custom Carpentry
Painting
Light construction
Greg H Mathias
570-524-4724
Free Estimates Fully insured

Nancy's Nu-Wave Salon
look your best
Wax Specials
Main Street (Rte 45) Mantandon
524-2315
www.nancysnuwave.com

Igniting Creative Ideas
On Fire Promotions
by trautman associates, inc.
promotional products · fundraising items
embroidered & screenprinted caps & apparel
awards · trophies · business gifts
800-538-8009
Lewisburg Showroom 434 Market 570-522-8009
www.onfirepromotions.com
Bring in this ad for one FREE SCREEN!!!
GOOD ON ANY APPAREL ORDER
(minimum 36 pieces)

"End of the Semester" Special
20% off all Clearance Room merchandise
Don't go home without taking advantage of some great bargains. In a wide variety of sizes, colors, and styles.
For the Ladies: Dresses, Premium Denims, Bathing Suits, Sweaters, Coats, Tops, Shoes
For the Men: Suits, Sport Coats, Casual Pants, Sweaters, Ties & Accessories, Leather Coats, Shoes
Special offer for all students, staff, and faculty of BUCKNELL UNIVERSITY
Bring this ad or your ID card
OFFER GOOD THRU MAY 31ST
J. Kleinbauer
fine clothing for ladies and gentlemen
28 N. Market St. Downtown Selinsgrove
(800) 326-9804
www.jkleinbauer.com

Book Your Graduation Party!
Brookpark Station Cafe
"Casual dining with a gourmet flair"
Fresh Sushi & Vegetarian Items
Catering & Takeout Platters
B.Y.O.B.
Wireless Internet
Mon-Sat 8:00-8:00 Sun 8:00-2:00
1 Mile West of Town on RT. 45
542-FOOD (3663)

The Bucknellian
Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue
Volume 139, Number 9
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu
http://www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Editor-in-Chief
Andrew Larson '08

Associate Editor of Content
Matthew Saylor '08

Associate Editor of Layout
Lily Beauvilliers '09

Business Manager
Jared Napolitano '08

Senior Editor
Catie Heverling '07

News Editors
Evan Unger '09
Julia Fuchs '09
Michelle Laxer '09

Opinions Editors
Michael Dippery '08
Hallie Stebbins '08

Sports Editors
Barbara Perlman '09
Brian Mulligan '08
Shannon Pitsch '09

Features Editors
Nilanjana Saha '09
Brianna DelValle '10

Arts & Entertainment Editors
Janna Shapiro '08
Genna Jerrard '10

Photography Editors
Ryan Winn '08
Ellyn Ercolano '09

Chief Copy Editor
Molly Clay (grad)

Asst. Chief Copy Editor
Anna Juan '08

Advertising Managers
Meredith Reighard '07
Katie Casteel '08
Elaine Teng '09

Office Manager
Kate Wood '07

Circulation Manager
Adam Kahler '07

Subscriptions Manager
John Ostrow '09

Cartoonist
Juliana Su '09

Adviser
James F. Lee

Op-Ed Policy

The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editor-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 600 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

Publishing Information

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

Subscription Information

Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Bucknell University, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print office.

Advertising Policy

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements it deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577-1085. Copyright © 2007 The Bucknellian

The Bucknellian
EDITORIAL
RIAA: Don't skirt the law to enforce it

"Everyone does it."

Just like driving over the speed limit and drinking underage, illegal file sharing doesn't seem like a significant infraction until you get caught.

To those who suffer the consequences and serve as standing examples for the rest, it seems unfair, but every person on this campus is old enough to know that when he or she breaks the law, there may be consequences for doing so.

Although not every movie or music file downloaded is done through illicit means, a good majority of them are obtained and possessed illegally. It's impossible to condone or justify such overt copyright infringement.

But there's also something to be said for the historically strong-arm tactics the Recording Industry Association of America uses to nab suspected pirates. Simply put, the RIAA is known for going after people who can't easily fight back.

Often its tactic is to serve papers on people, even when the evidence is dubious at best, and hope they're so scared that they settle out of court before going to trial. This is a pretty good tactic (from the perspective of the RIAA, at least), because most people—especially college students—likely can't match the RIAA lawyer-for-lawyer.

Often the evidence the RIAA produces that a person has engaged in illegal file sharing is shaky at beast. The cases are hard to prove in court. Can the RIAA prove the plaintiff downloaded a file, as opposed to another person on the same network? Can it prove the file was being downloaded onto the plaintiff's computer? The RIAA doesn't want these cases to go to court, so it targets the people most likely to be intimated by the threat.

In this Machiavellian legal battle, the University's stance is good: Tell students not to download files they don't have the rights to, but don't give up their names until a judge makes the University do so. Bucknell should not be in the business of serving papers on its students.

Bad cops and vigilante advocacy groups such as the RIAA that enforce the law through legally dubious means are no better than the perpetrators themselves.

The ends don't always justify the means for them, just as the ends don't justify the means for satisfied college students who break the law to get their music and movies for free.

Letters to the Editor

BSG concerned with recent actions of police

To the Editor:

As the trees bloom and students set in for another beautiful spring at the University, all seems well in the town of Lewisburg. But after a number of incidents between the Lewisburg Police Department (LPD) and University students, serenity seems to be anything but the case. For many students, the area between Sixth and Seventh Streets has become a place that is more of a battleground than a neighborhood. One recent incident has come to the attention of the BSG Executive Board as especially alarming.

The article written by Michelle Laxer ("68 students cited by police," March 30) explained a confrontation between students and police on the prior Sunday morning at 54 S. Sixth Street, which resulted in the citation of 68 students by LPD. This figure also happens to represent the "highest recorded number of citations given at a single event involving University students."

The BSG Executive Board is concerned with this high volume of citations, but what is most discouraging is the manner in which they were issued. Over the past two years there has been a continuing trend of disrespect for students from LPD, despite the students' attempts to reach out and create a positive relationship. There comes a point when the same respect and treatment must be reciprocated.

Students have made strides to improve the condition and behavior of the downtown area in the past year. Actions by the police, like those of March 24, demonstrate that student efforts to improve relations have been ignored. While not condoning the actions of many of the students on this particular night, the police action was excessively hostile and the manner in which LPD treated students in its approach, interrogation and legal processes is unacceptable.

The BSG Executive Board hopes that students will continue to represent their University in a respectable manner in the Lewisburg community and beyond. We are confident that continued efforts to improve communication and build relationships with LPD have the potential to result in a mutually respectful environment, but we need to be met halfway in our attempts to change the hostile atmosphere.

Sincerely,

BSG Executive Board

Sarah Cummings '08, president

Andy Logan '09, vice president of operations

Cara Jellison '08, vice president of finance

Lindsey Pierce 08, vice president of administration

Swampy's Corner

University hypocritically ignores underage consumption

By Zak Marsh
Contributing Writer

Over this weekend, most Bucknellians experienced the phenomenon known as House Party. As a first-year student, admittedly, this was my first House Party weekend. Of course, I had heard stories of past House Party weekends. Many of these stories are hilarious, some downright frightening (having a kegger on the quad, for example). I learned of many House Party traditions and customs, from the assorted management companies' entrepreneurial House Party endeavors to the bins outside the Langone Center for the disposal of alcoholic beverages. I can now tell that House Party weekend is an integral part of our spring awakening (though winter is still clinging on).

It is quite hypocritical for the University to enforce the point system every weekend except this one. At night, Public Safety officers stood idly by as hordes of visibly inebriated students ambled about. Perhaps there were simply too many students for Public Safety to deal with. As I understand it, they did not even try.

I am also distressed by the University's attitude toward the undercover officers from the Pennsylvania Liquor Control Board. The Greeks were informed in advance of the officers' agenda and were told to spread the word warning against sponsoring unknown guests, specifically with the advice to ask if the inquiring guest was an officer — for if so, the officer must answer "yes." Clearly the officers were trying to enforce the law by infiltrating the parties, and several of them were successful. Many students were carded, but many only had their BUIDs on them, which the officers could not process. What I find so disturbing about this is the administration's implicit goal of obstructing the officers' tasks: the regulation of underage consumption and other violations of liquor laws.

Our administration is quite clever. It knows full well that this weekend saw vast amounts of underage drinking. It did not crack down on it nor did it allow the Liquor Control Board to do so. I find this attitude espoused by the University abhorrent and disappointing.

I asked many students their opinions on this "Buck-analia" and the University's attitude thereto. The common response was that "this is college," and so it is OK to break drinking laws. That is ridiculous. Yes, this is college. This is supposed to be the place for higher learning, and this establishment prides itself on being one of the nation's top institutions for this purpose. College is not an excuse to mug old ladies, park illegally, pirate music, shoplift, drive above the speed limit, steal tree slices or vandalize buildings; nor is college an excuse to break liquor laws. A law is a law, no matter the environment.

Though upholding the law is reason aplenty to crack down on underage drinking during House Party weekend, it is only a superficial reason. By turning a blind eye to last weekend's underage drinking, the University silently condoned it. While administrators might read this article and say, "That's preposterous," they cannot deny their knowledge of the behavior, nor can they profess to having actively combated it beyond color-coded wristbands. Knowing that the University will not stop an underage drinker gives students reason to drink with impunity, and this contributes to greater instances of alcohol poisoning, sexual assault, date rape and all the other problems made worse by the introduction of alcohol into the equation.

Next year, I would love to see drastic changes in the University's attitude toward House Party weekend. Usually the administration and Public Safety are firm in their goal of preventing and cracking down on underage drinking. I challenge the University to uphold this commendable stance at all times, especially House Party weekend. I am not saying House Party weekend should be abolished, merely that the weekend should be subject to the same laws as the rest of the year.

Comment on this story!
E-mail letters to
bucknellian@bucknell.edu

"Freedom of the press,
if it means anything at all,
means the freedom to criticize and oppose."

- Eric Arthur Blair

Write for Ops.
E-mail
mdippery@

Classes can broaden perspectives

Classes give students opportunity to learn more about themselves

By Ryan Winn
Photography Editor

Registration is upon us once again. Talk of lottery numbers fills the halls. Across campus you can hear the desperate cries of students who have been locked out of their courses as they desperately seek an alternative. As an upperclassman I could offer my seasoned advice on dorms or registration, but I will not.

Instead I offer this advice:

See the world. Take classes to broaden your horizons. Study a foreign language, or better yet, study as a member of their culture. It is a broken record. But it is true, is it not?

The world is a big place, full of cultures and ideas that are so diverse it boggles the mind. As a student in the world you can never stop learning. The more you know, the bigger your perspective becomes. And the better off you will be.

Every time I mention this, there is a tiny, almost insignificant detail that I just cannot seem to get past.

Is it possible to see the world for what it truly is? Or, more importantly, is that even the point? For example, there are cultures that are so alien to our patterns of thought that from the instant we encounter them it is nearly impossible to withhold judgment. Or there may be philosophies that are mutually exclusive with our way of life. How are we to incorporate these experiences into our own lives?

The most powerful advice I can offer is to know thyself. I may be wrong, but I believe that the single most important thing you can do at this stage in your life is to find out who you are.

We cannot properly understand the world without first understanding who we are. We need to understand where we come from as a people and what spin history places on our interpretation and experience.

But that is merely the first, and lesser, component of that nagging detail. This lack of social context and self-understanding is symptomatic of a failure to understand who and what we are, not just as a people but as individuals, too.

The most powerful and helpful advice I can offer is to know thyself. I may be wrong, but I believe that the single most important thing you can do at this stage in your life is to find out who you are — not who you project to the world, not who you want to become or even who you were, but who you are in heart, mind and soul.

I am challenging you to find out what you think, and why you think it—not to convert you, or make you question your value in the world, but to give you perspective, and to give you a chance to make the most of your time here.

This is not a humble challenge. And if you accept, be prepared to never quite make it to the finish line. But it is the struggle that matters. Every little piece of information, every layer of your rose-colored glasses that you can understand and appreciate will make your perceptions more meaningful and your understanding more powerful.

It is not my intention to discredit the "see the world" philosophy mentioned above, as it is a valuable tool. I merely offer an amendment.

Choose your courses with this goal in mind. Utilize the phenomenal recourses at your disposal and take courses in every discipline imaginable. Reexamine those dreaded required electives. See them not as some inane course you need to boost your GPA but as an augmentation for you psyche.

Take something that seems cool or even crazy. Anything can be used to grant us new insight and perspective. We are at the point in our lives where we are free to delve into ourselves and see what is hiding in our very core. So go nuts.

Comment on this story!
E-mail letters to
bucknellian@bucknell.edu

Virtual conversation lacks personality

By Rajaa Qadri
Senior Writer

Being an avid Instant Messenger, I cannot start my day without pulling out my laptop and logging onto at least one of the three messengers that I use. I bet many of you are nodding your heads at this time, since you are guilty of it too. I doubt if anyone on campus does not use this form of communication. We find ourselves Instant Messaging in the morning, around lunch and especially late at night. Sometimes we IM to communicate when we are sitting right in front of each other in the library or 7th Street Café, just for fun. Talking to three people at a time is normal. One of my friends can juggle 10 to 12 IM conversations at once!

Instant Messaging is not just a way to pass the time; it is also a huge time-waster. Instant Messaging is both appealing and strange. Our contact lists cover pretty much all the important people in our real and virtual lives, some with whom we share deep dark secrets, and others who just happened to cross paths with us. It gives us the ability to block anyone with a click of a button so we can hide away at will, and show ourselves when we are prepared to be bothered. An alternative to this is status messages, where you may remain virtually "away" or "busy" at all times, and are available only for those with whom you wish to talk.

No uncomfortable silences are encountered while Instant Messaging, even if the reply takes 15 minutes. The conversation is usually carried on where it is left off, a blessing for some of us who are inept at carrying on conversations, especially when they are pointless.

We tend to talk about a lot of different things on IM that we would not be able to discuss face to face. Instant Messaging covers almost everything from heartbreaking personal stories to casual jokes.

The ability to categorize people is the most indispensable feature that comes with Instant Messaging. We divide people on the basis of the nature of their relationship to us — friends, acquaintances, people and individuals — in a descending order from the most meaningful to least. One may occasionally take a moment to stop and wonder why those least meaningful people are on our list in the first place.

Once organized, we usually minimize the "people" and "individuals," for their presence does not really matter. We even move or rotate people as we experience periodic epiphanies and realizations. For instance, he is interesting so let's keep him up for now; she is not, so drop her down, and so forth. Out of sight, out of mind — until one of them messages you, at which point you would take a couple of minutes to recall why they are on your list. It works like a charm when you wish to forget someone.

All our emotions are turning into emoticons and we are losing closeness and personal interactions with friends and family members. I think the time will come when we will sit in front of each other and instead of talking, we will IM via our Blackberries.

The more we become virtual, the more we lose our sense of being real. Keeping my head in the computer all the time, I find myself losing my confidence in facing real conversations. Gossiping and bullying that would not take place in a normal face-to-face conversation occurs more often on IM, and it goes without saying that IM and chatting with unknown people opens another Pandora 's Box.

Since I have become an instant messaging addict, I prefer Instant Messaging to talking to someone on the phone, which is true with a lot of other people as well. A study published on MSNBC by the Pew Internet and American Life Project shows that young people prefer to communicate via IM or text messaging to any other means of communication. To make things worse, Instant Messaging is creeping onto cell phones, electronic organizers and other wireless devices. The Washington Post reported that Pew found 15 percent of IM users send messages on wireless devices, while AOL said about a third of folks doing mobile messaging use IM in place of, or in addition to, their SMS text messaging services.

Once you are addicted to this means of communication, it is the biggest, good-for-nothing distraction in your daily life. Five hours sitting in front of the computer, hoping to get your religion paper done, you manage to talk to 15 different people via IM, but accomplish nothing in terms of academics.

What bothers me the most is that along with just personal communications among friends, a lot of departments and offices are adopting this mean of communication with students as well, instead of discouraging it. It is easier for them to get hold of the students, but it does nothing to discourage IM addiction. We tend to rely more on IM than any other means of communication. All our emotions are turning into emoticons and we are losing closeness and persopal interactions with friends and family members. I think the time will come when we will sit in front of each other and instead of talking, we will IM via our Blackberries. Maybe such a time is here already.

Sometimes I wonder where we are going, and if we are being too "virtual." Is it a good thing or a bad thing? Should I feel proud of my virtual life or should I make an effort to go out there and actually try to meet people who live next door to me?

The bottom line is that we are losing touch with the real people around us. We are becoming too lazy to get off the computer. Even though Instant Messaging is very cool and very effective, it is restricting our ability to interact and communicate. Send all the winks and LOLZ you want, but do not forget to laugh in real life too.

The F Word

On Gender and Sports

By Lenore R. Flower
Writer

"My God, you do choose the butch sports, don't you?"

Such were the words of one of my closest friends as I explained to her that I had quit the novice crew team and joined women's rugby. I laughed—and then I bought all of my practice gear in pink. Another friend's brother insisted (jokingly, I hope) that joining the rugby team meant that, by default, my friend was a lesbian.

Meanwhile, the members of a visiting men's rugby team felt it was an insult to be asked to scrimmage against the women's team. The point blank assumptions that "girls can't throw" and that "boys are better than girls at rugby" are infuriating. These statements are an insult to me and all other women who play the sport. On a larger scale, however, I am frustrated because the statements regarding the male-female sport divide are not entirely unfounded.

Yes, there are basic differences between the male and female body. There is, however, far more overlap from one gender to the next when it comes to physical strength and ability than the average machismo-minded male will generally admit. One's genitalia do not determine whether a person can do well in sports. If it did, the number of speeding balls and potential below-the-belt injuries in any given sport would negate the male population from playing at all.

The "girls can't throw" mentality is valid not because of physical limitations, but rather because of social values. Men and women approach physical activity differently because their goals in regards to physicality tend to be different. Because the societal ideal for women is a very thin build, while the societal ideal for men is reminiscent of the Statue of David, each gender's purpose behind going to the gym causes them to engage in different activities. This is especially obvious in the University's own fitness center. While both genders can be found lifting weights or using the cardio machines, there seems to be a gender division between women punishing their thighs on the treadmill and men grunting at the bench press.

While it is perfectly acceptable for men to grow to the size of the Incredible Hulk, a woman's physical strength is secondary to achieving the desired lean build. Because physical attractiveness remains especially crucial to a woman's identity in U.S. society, many women will choose to participate in sports that will allow them to achieve that beanpole physique. Those who do not have a desire to appear borderline emaciated, who are "too aggressive," or who choose sports that are considered masculine, run the risk of being considered "butch." Even women who play sports that require them to "bulk up" may attempt to circumvent the results. The perennial, habitual dieting cycles many women tend to follow further limit their ability to achieve physical strength. Without the muscles to make that key toss in a game or the freedom to play hard without being arbitrarily pegged as a lesbian, it becomes increasingly difficult for girls to throw at all.

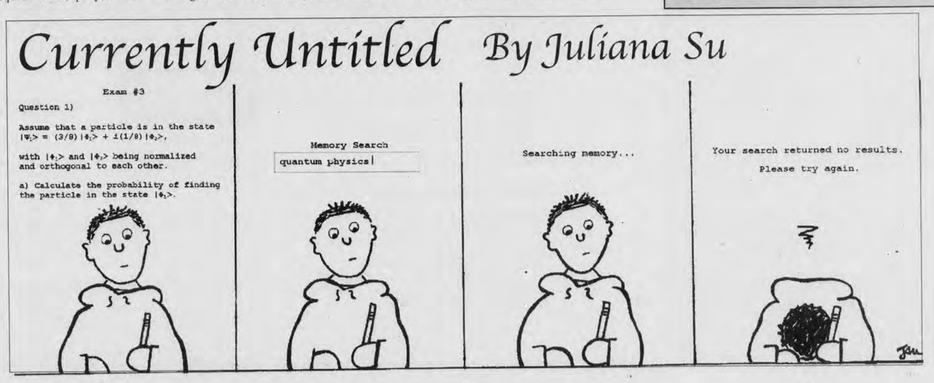
Worse still is that many women have no desire for physical strength. Rather than being a source of pride, many of the female persuasion find muscles to be unfeminine and avoid strength training at all costs. This poses a number of problems. Beyond increasing a woman's chances of osteoporosis, exacerbating the gender gap in sports and propagating the stereotype of "female frailty," refusing to gain strength decreases the woman's ability to defend herself. We live in a society in which domestic abuse and rape are very real dangers for all women. By continuing to follow the twiggy body ideal and look down on the sporty amazons in our culture (Venus Williams comes to mind), women lose out on an opportunity to even out the scales.

I could dwell on the many other societal influences that have led to women being handicapped in sports in comparison to men. I could moan about how my dad never played baseball with me. I could whine about my elementary school Physical Education coach, who had the girls play hopscotch while the boys played football. I could torture myself ad infinitum over the demeaning taunts I thought we had all outgrown.

Or I could go lift some weights, get better at throwing that ball around and build the confidence and strength I need to battle these stereotypes. Women need to stop believing that strength, physical and otherwise, is incompatible with femininity. By eschewing negative body image in exchange for a little muscle, we can stop this male superiority nonsense once and for all.

According to the Magglingen Conference, which occurred in Switzerland in 2003, sports provide an environment where gender stereotypes can be re-negotiated, rather than re-affirmed. Ladies, who's with me?

Currently Untitled By Juliana Su



Exam #3
Question 1)
Assume that a particle is in the state
|Ψ_0> = (3/8)|φ_1> + √(1/8)|φ_2>,
with |φ_1> and |φ_2> being normalized and orthogonal to each other.
a) Calculate the probability of finding the particle in the state |φ_1>.
Memory Search
quantum physics
Searching memory...
Your search returned no results.
Please try again.

SPOILER ALERT!

By Matt Saylor
Associate Editor of Content

"Lost"—Juliet and Desmond will take center stage in the next two episodes. Juliet's flashback will air on April 11 and is expected to pick up where her previous flashback left off. This episode will also feature the return of Jack to the beach, but his reception may be a little cool because of the presence of an Other.

Desmond's episode will have him leading Charlie, Hurley and Jin through the jungle, while the relationships between Kate and Sawyer, as well as Jack and Juliet will be explored.

An episode focusing on Jin and Sun will close out April with possible information regarding the father of Sun's baby.

"E.R."—The final six episodes of the season will air in succession beginning Thursday, April 12, and there is a lot of ground to cover.

The big news is that Goran Visnjic will be leaving the show at the end of the season. There is still hope that he will appear on a part-time basis, but he will not be returning as a regular. What does this mean for Luka's relationship with Abby? There is definitely a wedding planned to air in the next few episodes, but everything beyond that is unclear. Veteran actor Stanley Tucci will be appearing on the show as this season closes and into next year. His character is expected to take over as the E.R. Chief of Staff, replacing who? Luka.

Also, as mentioned in an earlier spoiler alert, Shane West is not expected to return to the show next season. There has been no confirmation of this yet, but the rumors of how his character will leave the show are not pretty for the former teen heartthrob.

In addition, Sam is going to get a new love interest in the coming weeks, and Gates will have some decisions to make regarding the future of Sarah.

"24"—After an excellent fifth season, the show continues to struggle through its sixth year. For the show to get back on track it needs to focus more on Jack, as he has been relegated to more of a minor role over the last few weeks. Also, will we ever get information on the health status of former President Logan? How about President Palmer coming back to take over for the vice president, only to go ahead and carry out the nuclear attacks anyway?

Jack was told that Audrey was killed trying to save him in China. Raise your hands if you believe that Audrey is actually dead? We will find out for sure before the season ends. Also, it looks as if Bill might be experiencing a medical crisis of his own.

"The Office"—I have a few bits of information regarding "The Office" to add to last week. It appears that the episode prior to the season finale will feature a trip to the beach, where some Survivor-style games could come into play. Also, Pam will continue to fight for what she wants in life, a path we've seen her begin to embark on this year with her enrollment in art classes as well as making sure she gets light beer from a bartender (a big step for her).

Next week look for information on "Grey's Anatomy" and "Scrubs," as seasons for most shows begin to come to an end.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Performing in the backyard of Phi Kappa Psi fraternity, Milf-n-Cookies attracted a crowd Saturday afternoon as it entertained House Party goers with a variety of sounds. Originating from Allentown, Pa., the four-member band has been a regular on the campus, returning by popular demand from many of its student fans.

Illustration by Julianna Su

Milf-n-Cookies anyone?

House Party band puts on a rousing show

By Alex Hay
Contributing Writer

On the beautiful Saturday afternoon of House Party weekend, the band Milf-n-Cookies played an energetic and enjoyable show in the backyard of Phi Kappa Psi Fraternity.

The band, hailing from Allentown, Pa., consists of four members: Frank on vocals and percussion, Rob on drums and vocals, Chris on bass, and Ivor on guitar, keyboards and vocals.

The members describe themselves as a "cover band," with influences ranging, oddly enough, from Disturbed to Kelly Clarkson and everything in between.

The versatility with which the band transitioned between a head-slamming rock song to a delicious bubble-gum pop pleaser was really incredible, and the crowd got a taste of a little bit of everything, including Avril Lavigne, Sublime, The Killers and Lustra.

The band's tactic of playing an eclectic mix of music worked like a charm as it seemed to appeal to everyone in the crowd at one point or another. It was truly anyone's guess as to what song would follow the previous one, which only added to the anticipation felt among the crowd (311 and then The Bangles? Or the Black Eyed Peas followed by Blur?).

"I love Milf-n-Cookies. This is my third time seeing them live, and they put on a great show," David Wells '08 said. "The music they play is very diverse, but they sound fantastic no matter what."

Milf-n-Cookies has been a regular on campus in the past, including previous House Party and Homecoming weekends. Students have always come out in hordes to hear the band. Saturday was no exception, with the band blasting through its set list, moving the crowd and receiving quite a reception in the process.

Milf-n-Cookies has earned itself a reputation for playing loudly; on Saturday, the music could be heard from the academic quad — not a small accomplishment by any standards. And even though Milf-n-Cookies had the volume absolutely cranked, it did not detract from the overall quality of the music. At multiple points during the performance, students could be seen dancing on stage with the band, with some even grabbing the microphone and briefly taking over on vocals. This was a generous offer from the band, one which the crowd more than readily accepted; it allowed the audience to get even more involved in the show.

All too often a band will play a show void of any interaction with the crowd, which only diminishes the quality of the performance. With Milf-n-Cookies, this was certainly not the case.

"Between the weather and the band, it was a great afternoon," Dan Maio '07 said, "I spent a lot of time just hanging out towards the back of the crowd with my friends, but I also managed to get up on stage, which was a lot fun as well."

It was almost impossible to find anyone inside the Fraternity, as most people were outside lounging on the grass or dancing in front of the stage. The band played hard for almost four hours, jumping around on stage and going all-out in front of the crowd.

The members of Milf-n-Cookies seem to love what they do. Their enthusiasm for the music spread throughout the crowd, and their energy never subsided during the performance. They paused only twice to grab a quick rest, at which point the crowd took to throwing around Frisbees and footballs while a DJ spun music on stage.

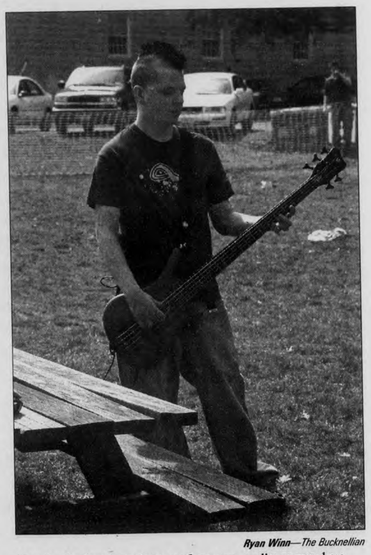
Upon completion of their performance, the band was treated to a raucous approval from the crowd, as students applauded heavily and screamed for one last song.

"I've seen two bands already during House Party, but so far, this has been the best," Adam Curry '07 said. "I got a chance to talk to the band before the show, and they were all pretty cool guys."

Long after the show, Milf-n-Cookies stuck around and once again hung out with students to talk about past shows and the sheer ridiculousness of House Party. The band consists of a truly down-to-earth group of musicians, and they had no problem whatsoever mixing it up with a bunch of students.

Every time Milf-n-Cookies plays at the University, students know exactly what to expect, and the band more than delivered during House Party. It is without a doubt that Milf-n-Cookies will return to campus and put on yet another solid and memorable show. House Party would not be complete without the bands that flock to the University for the weekend, and performances like that of Milf-n-Cookies make House Party weekend even more memorable.

For more information on Milf-n-Cookies, visit the band's Web site at http://www.milfn-cookies.net/home.php.



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Despite the four-hour long performance, audience members say that Milf-n-Cookies never lost enthusiasm during the show. The band's energy and audience interaction led to an immense showing of approval from students after the show.

$250 CASH
Sign on BONUS
Call for details
3 & 4 Bedroom Houses
CLOSE TO CAMPUS
WHIRLPOOL
WASHER / DRYER
DISHWASHER
STOVE & FRIG
Newly renovated houses
available 2006/2007
570-524-5714 / 570-412-4831
or 570-524-5745 /
570-490-2922

Ziegler's Beauty Salon
38 N. 5th Street
Lewisburg, PA 17837
570-523-1250 570-523-1262
Book by Appointment
1 Beauty Chair & 2 Barber Chairs
PARKING AVAILABLE

COLDWELL BANKER
Penn One
Real Estate
Thank You, Bucknell!!
For thirty years of calling Bucknell and Lewisburg home.
Susan Warner-Mills, Sales Associate
Competence, Integrity, Service
524-7500; swm@coldwellbanker.com

What? You haven't seen 'Clueless?'

By Erik Zager
Writer

❖ Movie Review

Admit it—often in social settings, someone inevitably quotes a movie that they assume everyone knows. When no one knows the source of the quote, "Quotation Man," as we'll call him, proceeds to grill the person who has a blank face. Quotation Man or Woman, as it may be, looks flabbergasted and can't possibly understand how "blankface person" has never seen such a cultural milestone.

It's a tragedy, but there are film-impaired people out there, letting perfectly good jokes and quotes pass them by because they have not seen a classic. The situation is unfortunate, but it can be rectified. The process begins with a simple trip to the movie store. First on the "movies I should have seen" list: "Clueless."

Whether recognized or not, the vocabulary of Gen-Y has been shaped largely by this movie gem. Any time someone makes fun of the valley girl lingo, "as if," or "whatever," they are really referencing "Clueless."

Despite the fact that most kids have not attended a rich school in Los Angeles, there are countless themes in this movie that anyone can relate to and laugh at. This movie is just downright hilarious.

It doesn't matter if half of the references go unnoticed, or if a viewer is too young or old to reminisce about the baggy jeans of the '90s. Luckily for viewers of all ages, "Clueless" doesn't completely rely on a couple of obscure temporal references, but for viewers of our age, it has plenty of jokes that will send us through a nostalgic loop.

For those virgin viewers out there, "Clueless" is a film about a rich, spoiled girl from upper-class Los Angeles Concerned more with Ren and Stimpy than with the war in Iraq—the first one—Cher (Alicia Silverstone) is the typical Beverly Hills girl. Her and her best friend Dionne (Stacey Dash) gossip all day long about other people's style, or lack thereof, on their cell phones back in the days when having a cell phone was not a given.

Photos courtesy of stock.xchng.com

The girls decide to take on a new girl in school as their popularity protégé. After a makeover, lessons on who and who not to date and numerous other important life lessons, the new girl begins to replace Cher as the most popular girl in school. Faced with the immense tragedy of not being the most popular, Cher becomes bitter. Her college-aged step brother knows how to put it in perspective for her, and by the end of the movie, everything is, of course, absolutely perfect.

Having not seen "Clueless" at least once is almost unforgivable for anyone currently of college age, though now is the time to redeem yourself. Not only will you be treated to a hilarious movie, but you will get to see a multitude of actors that you now know from shows such as "Scrubs" kicking off their career in style. But don't you dare see "Clueless" alone in your room. This is a group film to be enjoyed with others who remember the same weird clothes and music groups from the early-mid '90s.

Courtesy of www.imdb.com

Alicia Silverstone still reigns supreme as Cher Horowitz, a high school sophomore whose wit and charm rivals her naive cluelessness. This 1995 pop-culture hit is a humorous and heartwarming story about friendship, family and romance, and should not be missed by anyone.

By Ana Fullmer
Writer

Spring has sprung, and everyone here in this bubble knows what that means ... spring fever! From the House Party hookups here in the big L to the stars frolicking around Hollywood, love is in the air! PerezHilton.com reports that the rumors are true: Reese Witherspoon is without a doubt dating. "Brokeback Mountain" star Jake Gyllenhaal. Hopefully Jake is calming his playboy ways to be a good man to future fashion icon and all-around screen legend Witherspoon, who is recently divorced from philandering actor Ryan Phillippe.

It seems that hate is also in the air for rival producers Timbaland and Scott Storch. Timbaland shocked audiences at Club Marquee in New York City last Friday when he jumped on the turntables and declared, "Scott Storch is a Bitch!" reports The New York Post. Scott Storch is known for producing beats with Dr. Dre and 50 Cent. A feud was said to have developed between the two over who deserved credit for the production of the Justin Timberlake hit "Cry Me a River." Speculation has been brewing since the release of Timbaland's "Give it to Me," which has lyrics explicitly dissing an unnamed artist: "I get a half a mil for my beats. You get a couple grand. Never gonna see the day that I ain't got the upper hand. I'm respected from Californ-i-a way down to Japan. I'm a real producer and you just a piano man." Timbaland left nothing to the imagination at Marquee when rapping along to his record he adlibbed, "Scott Storch, I'm a real producer and you just a piano man!"

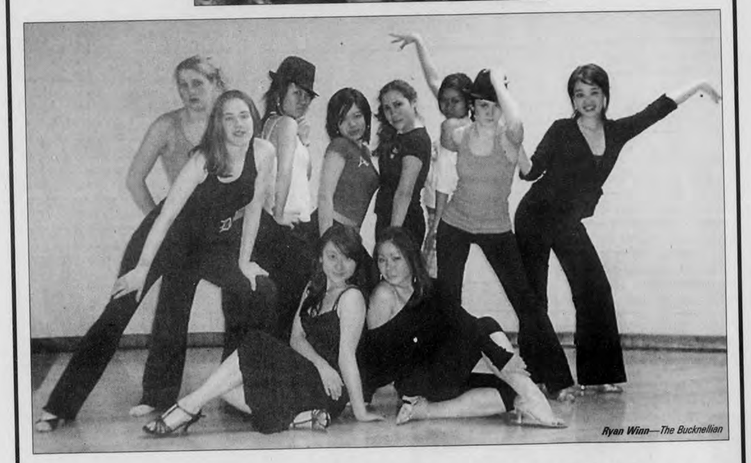
Speaking of musicians who were sipping on the "hate-rade" last week, Thebosh.com reported that Avril Lavigne vented to some interviewers from the UK, "What's happened to Britney [Spears] is all down to who she is as a person. If you want a piece of this business you have to be able to deal with it ...You can't complain about the pressures, the paparazzi, the madness because that's the job." Like Avril would know! If she had a nervous breakdown and shaved her head, no one would even notice except maybe in that Canadialand place she hangs out. Anyway, my girl, the far superior Britney Spears (who I just know is going to make one hell of a comeback) is out of rehab and looking pre-K-Fed healthy and happy. The pop star finalized her divorce from Federline last week, was seen celebrating with friends and was in attendance at two Los Angeles Lakers games. We wish Brit all the best ... and as for Avril, she can go stuff her face with some french fries and gravy to muffle her ignorant rants, eh?!

Diva-like behavior is fabulous in my eyes. It's excellent fodder for this column and there is nothing more fun than being reassured that you're not spoiled when you hear about celebutards requesting their favorite candy from Romania be flown to Los Angeles. In that vein, we hate when celebs try to pretend they're not divalicious. Jennifer Lopez was recently quoted saying "I'm not J.Lo any more. That's all gone with all the ridiculous stories about tantrums and Egyptian sheets. That's all my past." Sure. This from the woman who, not a year ago, demanded an all-white room before a concert. White carpet, flowers, furniture—everything. Jennifer, we love you more when you own up to your diva ways.

In other news, Sascha Baron Cohen (aka Borat Saghdiev) and his fiancé Isla Fisher ("proper girl in the hat" from "Wedding Crashers") are expecting a bundle of joy. If we can expect baby Shiloh Jolie-Pitt to be the most beautiful person in the history of mankind, then this baby will certainly be the funniest. It seems odd that there was no buzz about the pregnancy until this week. Was I the only one who noticed that previously petite Miss Fisher was curiously curvy at the Oscars? She was busting out of that hot little dress of hers! Come on, media! J.Lo (oops, Jennifer Lopez) has a fat day and you're all over suggesting she's expecting, but Borat's bride has clearly packed on about 15 pounds and we hear nothing? Either way, I wish them all the best and can't wait to see the little one's first character!

Latino Dance Corner

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

The Latino Dance Corner (LDC) held its third annual showcase on Saturday, March 24. The ever-popular semi-formal benefit for the Bucknell Brigade featured dinner, six dance pieces performed by LDC members, and three numbers by special guests Paul Richardson and Olga Rodionova. The pair is ranked sixth in International Latin Dance. Richardson performed a show-stopping number with LDC President Monique Leung '08. The benefit ended in a standing ovation and raised over $600 for the Brigade.

Read it. See it.
Hear it.
Review it!
Write for A&E
E-mail jshapiro@

URINETOWN The Musical

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

A 'pee-your-pants' comedy

By Mandy Hart
Writer

You may have seen it advertised. Perhaps you scanned the e-mail calling for auditions. Maybe you even searched the Internet after hearing its title. But what the theatre and dance department's latest musical, "Urinetown" surprises audiences with is much greater than its name.

Joe De Metro '09 didn't give it a second thought when he asked for the "Urinetown" script for auditions at the library. The woman working the circulation desk hadn't stopped laughing until he was out of earshot. Emily Penick '08 was similarly caught up in its title.

"The first time I heard the title I was turned off, but as soon as I read the script and heard some of the songs, I realized that the show is as hilarious as the name is absurd. One of the characters in the show even makes fun of the title," she said.

But urine puns and scatagorical humor are not all that this play promises to be.

After a number of pure dramas or dance shows, the department of theatre and dance has rediscovered an audience favorite: a Broadway-style musical. Auditions took place early in the semester and the cast began rehearsing "Urinetown", in late February.

Director Gary Grant has pulled creative sources from far outside the University to execute this comical performance. Musical director Jim Ryan and choreographer Dustyn Martincich are both visiting the University and are major contributors to the production of the show.

"Working with the director, musical director and choreographer of this musical has been amazing," Wendy Schibener '10 said.

Two student assistants have contributed their talents in the physical production of the show. Melissa Duceman '08 works with Elaine Williams, Professor of theatre, on the set design, while Gloria Clendaniel '07 aids in costume design with Paula Davis-Larson, Assistant Professor of theatre and dance.

Actors must "integrate the three scripts involved in a musical. First, the libretto, then the music and lyrics, and finally, the choreography," Grant said.

Each of these elements must be perfectly aligned to create a successful musical.

In the case of "Urinetown," each of the three elements is full of sarcastic and satirical twinges that combine for a hilarious and emotional plotline.

Ryan incorporated references to other musicals in the melodies with overlying witty lyrics to create the sardonic effect. The choreography also includes many references to well-known dance sequences. Martincich adapted "West Side Story" dueling dance sequences to create a humorous and well-known reference.

The original version of "Urinetown" started as a fringe theater performance in the late '90s and made its way to Broadway. The musical won three Tony Awards and two Obies for its success.

"Urinetown" follows the saga of a city in a perilous drought so urgent that a corporation, in a socially allegorical move, begins charging money for the use of all toilet facilities. The only hope that the citizens have lies in the unlikely love of two of its own.

This pee-your-pants comedy will have audiences rolling in the aisles when it opens at 8 p.m. on April 13 at Harvey Powers Theater. The show is sponsored and presented by the Bucknell Association for the Arts. For more information, visit http://www.bucknell.edu/x792.xml.

Tickets are available for $10 now in the Weis Center Box Office or can be purchased at http://www.bucknell.edu/boxoffice.

Standing ovation!

A&E editor's tips on watching a musical

1. Get your tickets early!
2. Feel free to get the soundtrack ahead of time and sing along.
3. While you're at it, read the plot line online. Much of the plot is expressed in the lyrics, so it's easy to get lost.
4. Leave your camera at home. Singing and dancing is hard enough. Performers don't need to be blinded.
5. Be open-minded. Musicals all have different styles. It's a pretty safe bet that the performances won't look like a Pussy Cat Dolls music video.
6. For musicals with accompanying motion pictures, keep in mind that the two are staged completely differently. A change in scenery is not as smooth a transition in live theater.

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Meg's mix

Songs for a beautiful spring day

By Megan McWhinney
Writer

Spring has finally arrived. Gone are the days when being outside meant only that you were between two destinations. Banished are the heavy wool coats and all North Face attire. Pasty faces are replaced by bronzed limbs, hemlines are rising and necklines are dropping (on Tuesday I heard the boys happily announce that skirt season had arrived). For me, the single signal of spring is the flip-flop. I'm from San Francisco where some people (including myself) wear flip flops year-round. Not having to dig around for matching socks and simply slipping on my Havaianas is enough to make me jump for joy. Some of my fondest memories are of driving around or lounging by the pool on a lazy spring or summer day, listening to music.

There are some songs that will always make me feel like the sun is hitting my skin, no matter what the weather is like. Some songs just sound like spring, with upbeat tunes or lyrics about hanging out. Others are just so relaxing you really have no choice but to find the nearest body of water and vegetate for a while.

In that spirit, here are some songs that will brighten up your day a little bit more, whether you're lying on the quad, sitting on your porch or walking between classes. Just please shout a warning before your frisbee goes careening into my head.

1. "Hardcore Days and Softcore Nights"—Aqueduct
A fun, upbeat song that, for some reason completely beyond me, was used in Jaguar ads. Since the 18-24 demographic is totally their target audience.

2. "Big Blue Sea"—Bob Schneider
This is one of those songs I associate with driving around San Francisco. It makes no sense whatsoever, and I still don't know any of the lyrics after listening to it about 1,000 times. But I still try to sing along because it's that infectious.

3. "Hangin' Around"—Counting Crows
Okay, so the lyrics are about hangovers and needing to get the heck out of town. Doesn't matter. The tune is perfect for … hangin' around. Sorry—I had to.

4. "What Would You Say"—Dave Matthews Band
Throw down the convertible top (or cut a hole in your car), drive to the coast and spend the day on the beach. Repeat if necessary.

5. "Touch of Grey"—Grateful Dead
Could this song be any more cheery? Lyrics aside, this song puts a smile on my face and gets stuck in my head (and I love it).

6. "Trains to Brazil"—Guillemots
I've found that those days spent lazing around the pool where you only get up for water and maybe some fresh fruit leave me completely disoriented in the best way possible. This song could stand on its own without a vocalist and still be completely entertaining, and I always get lost in it.

7. "Multiply"—Jamie Lidell
I'm declaring this year (in music) to be the year of the 'white people with soul. Jamie Lidell is definitely one of them. This song was looped in my car during spring break. It's incredibly upbeat without being fast. And you have to love the nonsensical psychedelic instrumental in the middle of the song. Check out the rest of his album, "Multiply"—there's a lot of great stuff on there.

8. "D'yer Mak'er"—Led Zeppelin
This song sounds so reggae to me. Not the greatest Zeppelin song ever, but it always makes me happy.

9. "Too Much Too Soon"—Llama
If you're really good you'll remember this song from that movie "Swimfan" that came out several years ago. It's definitely a spring/summer anthem that sounds like OAR.

10. "Good Day"—Luce
"Well it's a pretty good day / I'm looking forward to tomorrow / To have a pretty good day / Yeah we'll have a good day." Another band that sounds like OAR or Dispatch, and one of those songs you can't sing without grinning.

11. "(Sittin' On) The Dock of the Bay"—Otis Redding
Just classic. Just perfect. And there's the sound of the ocean in the background. What's more relaxing than that?

12. "1979"—The Smashing Pumpkins
Billy Corgan doing the unthinkable—being cheery. Remember the video for this one? Those kids were living the summertime dream. Just try not to throw the furniture in the pool.

13. "In the Meantime"—Spacehog
Another nonsensical song that reminds me of beautiful days outside during House Party and Homecoming, listening to the bands play and chilling with all your friends.

14. "American Girl"—Tom Petty and the Heartbreakers
Come on. How could this song not be on this list? I can almost feel the breeze in my hair when I hear this. It calls for goofy dancing and best of all, allows everyone to sing off-key because, let's face it, so is Tom.

15. "Island in the Sun"—Weezer
Perfect for a sunny day. And if you're thirsty on that island in the sun, try this: guava juice, pineapple juice, ginger ale and a dash of lime juice. Blend with ice and have the best day ever.

16. "What I Got"—Sublime
We used to joke in high school that you couldn't go to our school without knowing every word to every Sublime song. I can't play the guitar like any sort of riot, but this song is still perfection. "Life is too short so love the one you got …" and have a lovely spring day!

These songs are available on iTunes under the category iMix, titled "Songs for a Beautiful Spring Day."

The Bucknellian

Sports

April 6, 2007

Volume 139, Number 9 | Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue | www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Martian matters

Is there life on Mars? Research by University professors on Alaska may help NASA scientists answer this question.

See page B8

Bison burst into Patriot League

Baseball takes three of four against defending Patriot League champion Mountain Hawks

By Ty Clark
Senior Writer

The baseball team opened its Patriot League schedule with a bang, winning three of the four games in a weekend series against defending Patriot League Champion Lehigh. The streak would not continue though, as the Bison fell one run short to Penn State, losing the heartbreaker 6-5.

PSU 6
Bucknell 5

"I'm very pleased that we opened the Patriot League season strongly," Jason Buursma '08 said. "We only have 20 games to establish a better record than the other teams, so this was an important win, but it felt even better to take the series from Lehigh since they beat us in the championship last year."

Head Coach Gene Depew '71 agreed. "Winning three of four on the road against the defending league champions is a great start for us. We had 4 guys hit over .400 for the weekend and, as a team, we hit .348, so I'm very pleased to see the offense start to produce to compliment what has been a strong start from our pitching staff."

The offense came alive this weekend, starting with Saturday's wins with scores of 7-2 and 8-7 during the day's doubleheader, the latter being Depew's 1,000th game. The Bison (10-12, 3-1) opened the weekend with a roaring start, scoring all seven of their runs in the first two innings of the opening game. In the first inning, back-to-back singles by Ben Yoder '10 and Buursma were followed by an RBI double from Ryan Gryskevicz '07 and an RBI single from Austin Turban '08 to open up a 3-0 lead, which the Bison would add to in the second inning.

Bucknell 7
Lehigh 2

After escaping a jam in the fifth inning with a double play, Matt Curry '07 (3-3) picked up the victory after limiting the damage to two runs, both earned, on nine hits, one walk and four strikeouts over five innings. Will Carney '09 came in to finish the game and pitch two perfect innings.

In the second half of the doubleheader, Orange and Blue lit up Lehigh's starter Ken Longernecker for three runs in the first inning; Longernecker would leave without retiring a batter. Lehigh responded with four in the bottom of the first and two in the second to pull ahead 6-3, but the Bison would reply with four unanswered runs to take a 7-6 lead going into the bottom of the final, seventh inning. Lehigh met the Bison, sending the game into extra innings. Buursma would pitch the final three innings scoreless for the win, after Gryskevicz drove in Yoder with two outs in the tenth.

Bucknell 8
Lehigh 7 (10)

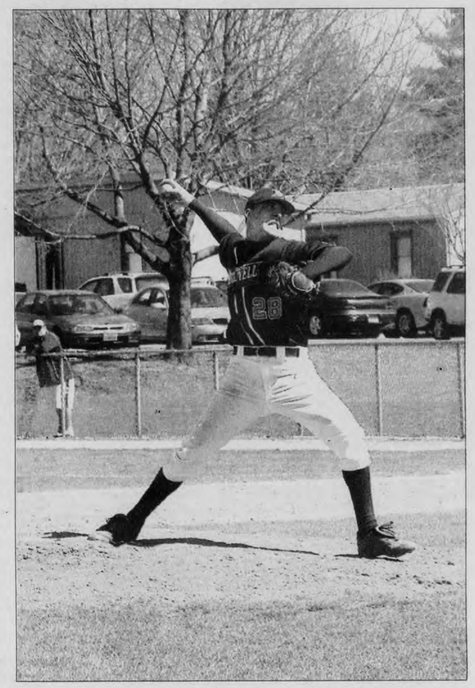
The Bison split Sunday's doubleheader with the Mountain Hawks, winning the first game 3-2 while dropping the last 9-5. After Lehigh took a 1-0 lead, the Bison came back to post three runs in the third with three consecutive doubles from Dane Grandizio '09, who went 10-for-16 with five RBIs for the weekend, Yoder and Buursma, and an RBI single from Mark Angelo '08.

Bucknell 3
Lehigh 2

After Lehigh pulled within one in the sixth and threatened in the seventh, Buursma came on to record the save (3), preserving the win for Yoder (3-1).

Lehigh 9
Bucknell 5

See BASEBALL page B3



Ellyn Ercolano—The Bucknellian

Sean Driscoll '09 winds up for a pitch in a recent game. The Orange and Blue will face-off against Army in two doubleheaders this weekend.

Saylor Says

By Matthew Saylor
Associate Editor of Content

These ten things would happen if I was king of the world…

1. Barry Bonds would not break Hank Aaron's all-time Major League Baseball home run record.
2. Uniforms would not have names on the back. Just numbers.
3. The college three-point line would move back from 19 feet and nine inches by at least one foot. The NBA line is at 23 feet and nine inches.
4. Students would get free admission to all sporting events at their home universities. This would be nationwide. Tuition costs how much already? Just let students root for their friends and classmates and show school pride without spending more money.
5. No primetime major sporting event would start later than 7:30 p.m. Television dictates too much the way things are run.
6. I would be able to slam dunk, hit a 95 miles per hour

See SAYLOR page B5

Bison vanquish Crusaders

First-year duo combines for eight goals in 15-5 win

By Wes Trowbridge
Writer

The men's lacrosse team dominated on both ends of the field Saturday as it defeated Holy Cross 15-5 at Christy Mathewson-Memorial Stadium. Austin Winter '10 and Tim Brandau '10 each scored four times as the No. 16 Bison improved to 8-2 overall, and 2-1 in the Patriot League

Bucknell 15
Holy Cross 5

In their first game since losing Joe Mele '09, the Patriot League's leading scorer, to a torn ACL, the attackman duo of Winter and Brandau was unstoppable, leading the Bison offense to a season-high 15 goals. Winter also recorded three assists on his way to a game-high seven points and Patriot League Rookie of the Week honors.

The Bison defensive unit of Greg Sowyrda '07, Billy Haire '09, and Evan Burns '08 continued their strong play, allowing just five goals and holding Holy Cross scoreless for a 30-minute stretch from the second to the fourth quarter. Sowyrda led the unit with four ground balls and was named Patriot League Defensive Player of the Week. Goalkeeper Nick Sciubba '09 allowed just three goals in his 45 minutes of play and recorded seven saves.

"We had a great week of practice and it really showed on Saturday," said long-stick Midfielder and Co-captain Paul Stansik '07. "Our defense played great again and we were able to absolutely dominate the offensive zone."

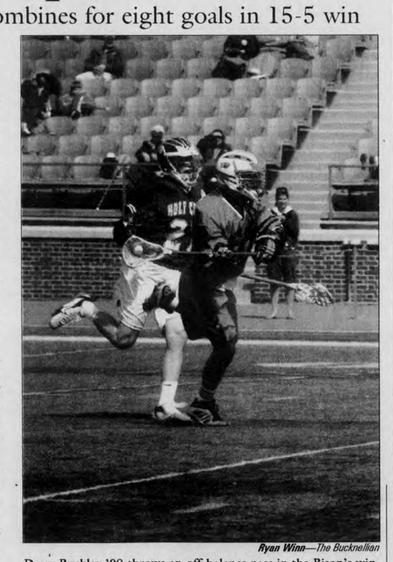
After playing to a scoreless tie in the first quarter, Brandau scored on an extra man opportunity early in the second. He then made a spectacular play, breaking up the Crusader clear, securing the ground ball, and scoring on the ensuing fast break. Holy Cross responded to tie the game at 2-2 before the Orange and Blue's offense took the game over, scoring 12 of the next 13 goals.

Winter fed Brandau his third goal of the game and then proceeded to find the back of the net with two unassisted goals of his own. Zander Crawford '10 scored less than a minute later to extend the Bison lead to 6-2. After a Crusader goal, Winter drove from behind the cage and scored with seven seconds remaining to make it 7-3 at the half.

In the second half, the Bison put the game out of reach, scoring seven straight goals with six different players and not allowing a Holy Cross goal until the 3:09 mark of the fourth. The 7-0 tear included goals by Perry Menzies '09, Brandau, Brian Gargan '07, John Schlicher '08, John Togneri '09, and Winter. Steven Cheng '08 also added a goal in the fourth quarter.

Winter's seven-point outing tied for the most productive game in Bucknell history.

See MLAX page B2



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Doug Buckley '09 throws an off-balance pass in the Bison's win over Holy Cross. The team will travel to West Point, N.Y. to take on rival No. 17 Army.

First-year profile: Tania Varela

Varela rebounds quickly from devastating accident

By Connie Barko
Senior Writer

Few people realize that the University is home to an athlete who was ranked No. 1 in her native country of Ecuador, No. 4 in South America and No. 298 in International Tennis Federation (ITF) rankings. Tania Varela '10 is one of the talented athletes who stands out in the Bison's tennis program.

"Tania has come to this program as one of the highest level players, if not the highest, to ever play at Bucknell," Head Coach Rebecca Helt said.

During her high school years in Ecuador, Varela played with professional tennis players and could have entered the pro-circuit. But she had dreams of the Northeast and winter weather and decided that her professional career could wait. Varela talked with her high school adviser in Quito, Ecuador about finding a strong academic college in the United States.

"I think I could have gone professional, but I didn't think I was going to be more than top 100," Varela said. "That wasn't enough for me."

The University was one of many schools on her adviser's list. Helt, impressed by her tennis profile, encouraged Varela to become a Bison. After transitioning from clay to hard surface play and adjusting to the increased academic requirements, Varela was almost unstoppable during her fall season. She lost only two out of 11 matches and finished 10-0 in doubles matches with her partner Ashley Globerman '09.

But on Nov. 21, 2006, Varela was in a car accident that dramatically changed her life. She suffered multiple bone fractures, ten broken ribs, a broken humorous and shoulder blade, collapsed lungs and a lacerated liver. She practically had no muscle in her legs and could not walk.

The doctors told Varela, who had to stay in the hospital for three and a half weeks, that she would be lucky if she played next fall. Contrary to their estimates, Varela began playing at the beginning of March.

"Once she started to heal, she just wanted to

See VARELA page B5

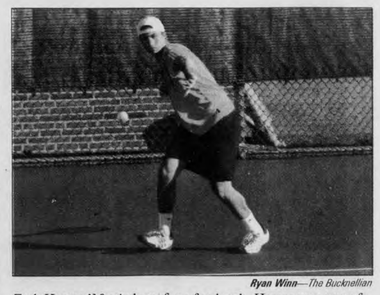
Bison bounce back

By Barbara Perlman
Sports Editor

After two straight losses, the men's tennis team went 2-3 for the week, sweeping Mount St. Mary's on Tuesday, and splitting the weekend, falling to Army 5-2 but defeating NJIT 6-1.

"The men have played the toughest schedule they're ever faced during the first eight weeks of the season," Head coach Rebecca Helt said. "We were hoping to pull a couple of those early matches out, but they were solid teams. These recent matches were a bit easier and I think we're finding the confidence we

See MTENNIS page B5

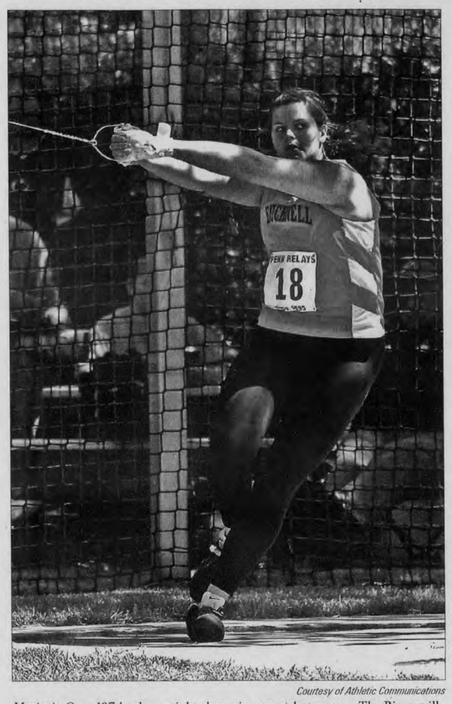


Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Zach Hascoe '10 winds up for a forehand. Hascoe won two of his singles matches this week, defeating opponents from both Mount Saint Mary's and New Jersey Institute of Technology.

Bison spring into outdoor season

Track and field squads begin outdoor campaign on the right foot with many championship qualifiers



Courtesy of Athletic Communications

Marjorie Grap '07 hurls a weight throw in a meet last season. The Bison will send a select team to Alabama to compete in the Tiger Track Classic, while the rest of the team will compete in the Princeton Sam Howell Invitational.

By Brian Mulligan
Sports Editor

The men's and women's track and field team spilt ways this past weekend with half of the team staying close to home, competing in the Jim Taylor Invitational in Selinsgrove, Pa. and the other half making the journey to Fairfax, Va. to compete in the George Mason Invitational to kick off the spring season. With an equal mix of athletes at both meets, the Bison showed their depth and strength with two NCAA regional qualifications and numerous ECAC and IC4A marks met.

"Although our squad was split this weekend, we had some athletes already produce great results and qualify for the IC4A and ECAC championship meets," Ann Doty '07 said. "The team competed with the same intensity and heart that we always compete with."

The men's team had a great showing at the George Mason Invitational with two first place finishes. Kevin MacLeod '09 grabbed first place honors and met an IC4A qualifying mark in the 400 meter hurdles. His time of 53.50 seconds also ranks him third in school history. Senior Joshua Kaehler's throw of 201 feet and 4.5 in. the javelin was good enough for first place overall and IC4A qualification. Steven Pierce '10 also qualified for the IC4A championship in javelin with a throw of 197-2, finishing only three spots behind Kaehler.

Jake Meyer '08 posted two great finishes in the both the hammer throw and discuss, placing second and third respectively, while Andrew Huebner '10 finished second the 3,000 meter steeplechase in a time of 9:46.09. In the 5,000 meter run, Derrin Pierret '07 led a 3-4-5 finish for the Bison, clocking a time of 15:23.36, while teammates Will Holleran '08 and Clinton Orloski '09 finished the race in 15:30.04 and 15:36.80 respectively.

The women's team had a solid meet all-around on both the track and in the field. Mel Buczko '07 led the charge with a first-place finish, an ECAC qualification and NCAA regional qualification in the pole vault. She cleared a height of 12-5¾ meters and has high expectations for the spring season.

"Considering that most of the team was training through this meet, our outdoor opener went pretty well," Buczko said. "We had a lot of great performances and are ready to vie for that 4th outdoor championship!"

In the discuss, Kathleen Hart '07 and Amanda Mockbee '08 placed second and fourth respectively at the meet and fifth and sixth in the Bison all-time record books. Hart's throw of 144-8 qualified her for the ECAC championship as well, while Mockbee placed fourth in the hammer throw with a toss of 45.99 meters. Doty notched a fifth place finish in the triple jump, spanning a distance of 38-8.

At the Jim Taylor Invitational, the Bison raked up a bunch of hardware to bring back to Lewisburg. Tyler Hoffman '07 took home the gold in the hammer throw with a toss of 192-2 and also met the IC4A and NCAA regional marks in the event, entering the record books as fourth all-time.

Tony Cillo '10 crossed the finish line first in the 400-meter hurdles in 58.92. Ryan White '10 finished second in both the 110-meter hurdles and the pole vault, posting a time of 15.56 in the hurdles and clearing a height of 12-11¾ in the pole vault

The women's team posted three first-place finishes along with a slew of second and third place showings. Kim Hassett '09 took first place honors in the 5,000-meter run in 18:29.51, while Nicole Smith '07 posted a time of 11:42.90, which was good enough for the gold.

The Orange and Blue posted a 1-2 finish in the pole vault with Alyson Cobb '09 winning the event. Cobb cleared a height of 9-5¾, while teammate Lauren Bricker '07 finished second in the event. Leanna Nastase '07 took second-place honors in the 10,000 meter run, qualifying for the ECAC championship in 37:24.45. Christine Totten '08 finished less than half a second behind Nastase to qualify for the ECAC championship and take third place.

The top seven athletes from the men's and women's team will be making the trek to the Auburn, Ala. on Saturday, where they will rub shoulders with the top teams in the nation from the Big-10 and SEC in the Tiger Track Classic. The rest of the Bison squad will be in Princeton, N.J. to compete in the Princeton Sam Howell Invitational both Saturday and Sunday.

David Mante '08 received the 2007 Patriot League Men's Indoor Track and Field Scholar-Athlete award. He boasts a 3.56 GPA in civil engineering, won the Patriot League pole vaulting title and earned All-East honors at the IC4A Indoor Championships.

MLAX From page B1

tive game by any Patriot League player this year and he now leads the league with 3.5 points per game. His 24 assists rank him second in all of Division 1 and 13 ahead of the next-ranking first-year.

Sciubba, a transfer from University of Massachusetts who began the season as the backup goalkeeper, currently leads all of Division 1 with a save percentage of 0.673 and is fourth in goals-against average, allowing just 5.75 per game.

The Bison dominated the ground ball battle 37-17, outshot the Crusaders 39-38, and won 13 of 23 faceoffs. The Orange and Blue's first seven goals, all in the first half, were scored by first-year players.

The team will have a week to prepare before it travels to West Point, N.Y. to play No. 17 Army in a critical Patriot League contest against the most efficient defense in the nation. The Bison have lost to the Black Knights five times in the last four years, each time by just one goal.

"For the seniors on the team it has been a goal of all ours to beat Army before we graduate," Sowyrda said. "I think with this year's team we should come out with a victory on Saturday."

Individual play drives women's golf

By Barbara Perlman
Sports Editor

Anchored by three different players shooting 77 on one of the three rounds of competition, the women's golf team finished sixth of 13 at the Longwood Invitational.

"A lot of us are playing great individually, but don't always have our best rounds on the same day," Amy Loughney '08 said. "A definite goal is to have the team members all play great on the same day and post some great scores."

In the first two rounds, Deirdre Moran '09 led the Bison, shooting 77-81. Moran's cumulative score of 158 would catapult her to 10th place individually. After a lackluster first round score of 87, team Captain Teri Schlang '07 matched Moran's impressive first outing, shooting a 77 of her own in round two.

Rounding out the Bison with scores in the 70s after the first two rounds of play was Emily Chiodo '08 who shot 83-79 for the day.

On day two, the third round of competition commenced with Loughney shooting a 77 of her own, good for team best on the day. The score would elevate Loughney to second best for the Orange and Blue. The lone Bison to top Loughney was Schlang, who shot 80 on the final day, good for 24th overall.

"Teri [Schlang] is our strong leader and she is finishing up her last season at Bucknell," Loughney said. "[She has been working hard] to end with a bang and put some great scores on the board."

Unable to keep up the pace she set on the first day, Moran dropped to 30th after a disappointing third round. An impressive 79 from Kathryn Batchelor '08 helped keep the Bison afloat.

The 964-point total over the three rounds put the Bison only six points shy of third. The Orange and Blue also posted a third best score of 319 in round two and all five women shot 70 in one round.

The Orange and Blue now prepare for the Big South Championship in hopes of breaking last year's score of 314, best in school history.

"We will face our strongest competition yet [at the Big South]," Moran said. "We will be playing against many teams that recruit players and offer scholarships for golf. However, if we maintain our consistent game, we could shoot for a top-three finish."

The Bison will head to their last tournament of the year, the Big South Championship on Monday in Charleston, S.C.

Courtesy of Athletic Communications

Teri Schlang '07 plays out of a sandtrap at the Longwood Invitational in Farmville, Va. Schlang shot an impressive 77 in her second round.

STEIN'S
FLOWERS & GIFTS
220 Market Street
Lewisburg, PA 17837
(570) 524-9933
www.steinsflowersandgifts.com

WWW.TOYOTALIVEWEB.COM
AS A COLLEGE GRAD, YOU MAY BE ELIGIBLE FOR
$400 CASH
ANY NEW TOYOTA OF YOUR CHOICE*
2007 FJ CRUISER
2007 COROLLA
2007 YARIS
TOYOTA moving forward
TOYOTA
buyatoyota.com
*NOT ALL CUSTOMERS WILL QUALIFY. CUSTOMERS RECEIVE $400 FROM TOYOTA TOWARDS LEASING OR FINANCING THE PURCHASE OF NEW UNTITLED TOYOTA MODELS THROUGH PARTICIPATING TOYOTA DEALERS AND TOYOTA FINANCIAL SERVICES. SEE DEALER OR VISIT WWW.TOYOTAFINANCIAL.COM/FINANCE FOR DETAILS. COLLEGE GRADUATE PROGRAM IS SUBJECT TO CHANGE OR TERMINATION AT ANY TIME.

Courtesy of Brittany Kaplan

The crew teams pose with their points trophy from the Murphy Cup earlier this season. Both squads posted wins across the country in Philadelphia, Pa., Princeton, N.J. and Marietta, O.H.

Crew continues success

By Brian Mulligan
Sports Editor

The women's rowing squad made the trek back to Philadelphia for the second consecutive weekend to take on Georgetown and Temple last Saturday, while the men's team competed in the 13th annual Marietta College Invitational last Saturday against crews from Ohio University, Dayton University and University of Cincinnati.

"We went into this weekend really not knowing what to expect," Varsity coxswain Jeweliet Yost '09 said, "Across the board the names Princeton and Georgetown stand for tradition and excellence, so to compete against them and come out on top was refreshing and exciting for our young program.

The two eight varsity boats faired well against tough competition, capturing the top two spots in the varsity eight division. The varsity eight finished the 2 kilometer race in 6:33.4, while the second varsity completed the course in 6:47.3. In the varsity four race, the Bison fielded two boats, which once again took the top two positions with the first varsity four finishing the race in 7:23.9. The second varsity four finished a mere 12 seconds behind their teammates. The Bison lightweight eight dominated Temple, beating them by over 30 seconds and notching a time of 6:53.36.

On Sunday, the Orange and Blue sent three boats to compete against the perennial powerhouse Princeton Lightweights. Both the varsity eight and second varsity eight beat out the Tigers on Carnegie Lake in Princeton, N.J, while the novice eight fell to the Tigers in the head-to-head race.

The varsity eight posted a time of 7:07.7, beating out Princeton by more than 10 seconds. The Bison had much closer race in the second varsity event, winning the event by a three second margin, clocking a time of 7:19.2. The novice boat finished the 2-kilometer race course in 7:52.1 against a competitive Tiger's boat.

At the Marietta College Invitational, the novice eight posted a first place finish, crossing the finish line in 4:57.39 and beating out second-place Cincinnati by 12 seconds. In the varsity four event, the Bison battled Cincinnati throughout the race, but edged their boat by less than two seconds to capture the gold.

"The regatta went well this weekend. Our team keeps marching forward every weekend," Men's head coach Paul Bugenhagen. "The guys are working hard and those efforts are paying off on the race course."

The varsity eight showed their prowess through the day with a second place finish in the preliminary heat, finishing just two second behind Dayton in a time of 5:12.40. The boat advanced to the grand final to go head-to-head against the top boats from Marietta, Dayton and Mercyhurst. The Bison finished fourth in the grand final, but improved upon their qualifying time by nine seconds. The Bison lightweight squad also performed well against tough competition, grabbing the bronze medal in a time of 5:20.02.

Both the women's and men's teams will travel to North Kingston, R.I. on Saturday to compete against Rhode Island and Boston College on the Narrow River.

"Rhode Island and Boston College will be the most competitive crews we have faced this year," Women's head coach Stephen Kish '92 said. "I can't wait to see our crews on the race course."

Softball finishes busy week

Bison spilt doubleheaders against Drexel and Lafayette

By Jake Meyer
Contributing Writer

Senior Monica Grinage predicted that the women's softball team was ready for Patriot League competition, and this past week's games may have proved her prophetic. The Bison battled a tough Lafeyette team to a draw on April 2nd and then split another doubleheader with Drexel this Wednesday. Monday's games saw an afternoon 3-2 victory and a 5-2 night cap loss. Wednesday followed the same pattern with a 6-2 victory for the Bison and a 4-1 loss to end the series.

Bucknell 3 Lafayette 2

The first game was a dramatic firecracker of a win for the Bison. In the seventh inning the game was tied at 2-2 and it appeared that it would go into overtime. Enter second baseman Ashley Beans '09. Her walk-off home run gave the game an emphatic exclamation mark of an ending. Beans showed the kind of composure that most seniors would envy. Alyssa Okita '10 was another young highlight for the Bison, going for a career high three hits. Bison ace Christie Wiest '08 pitched her sixth complete game of the season. She gave up only five hits and retired an impressive ten hitters in a row. Wiest has been a workhorse for the Bison, consistently turning in solid pitching games throughout the year.

Lafayette 5 Bucknell 2

Despite another seventh inning rally, the Bison fell to Lafeyette in the second game of the day. Throughout the season the Orange and Blue has proven itself to be a sharp late game team, but large initial deficits have proven to be too difficult to overcome. Monday was no different. After three innings the Leopards had a 4-1 lead. First baseman Cassie Lloyd '09 hit a solo seventh inning homerun to lessen the deficit. For the game Meg Muirhead '09 pitched 4.1 innings and allowed five hits. Offensively the Bison had eight hits total.

Bucknell 6 Drexel 2

The Bison bats caught fire against Drexel 6-2, torching them for six runs and thirteen hits. Of those thirteen none were more memorable then senior Lauren Litts's record breaking RBI. The monster double gave Litts a total of 97 runs batted in, passing her teammate Lauren Wible (grad). Litts also broke her teammate's home run record this year. With those two records under her belt it would be an understatement to stay that her bat has been golden for the last four years.

Drexel 4 Bucknell 1

The final game of the Bison's busy week was a 4-1 loss to Drexel. The Bison bats matched the gloomy weather hitting getting only one run total and one hit after the fifth inning. Ashley Carlson '09 went a bright 3-5 on the game. This brought her total to over .400 on the season. Carlson has proved to herself to be fearless at the plate, hitting everything and anything in sight. Tanya Roth had her third start for the season. She saw only one hit in one inning of action.

You can catch the Bison at Hamilton, N.Y. this weekend versus Colgate.

Ryan Winn — The Bucknellian

Alyssa Okita '10 lays out to tag a runner returning to first base. Okita boasts a .291 batting average and has tallied a total of eight RBI on the season.

BASEBALL From page B1

serving the win for Matthew Wilson '08 (3-1).

The last contest of the weekend would not go the Bison's way. In the nine-inning game, the Bison took a quick 1-0 lead. Lehigh responded by taking a 5-1 lead in the first. The Bison mounted various comeback efforts, but Lehigh pulled away, tagging Sean Driscoll '09 with the loss en route to a 9-5 victory.

With their performances, Yoder and Buursma garnered awards this weekend. Buursma was named the Damon's Bison Athlete of the Week and Yoder was named Patriot League Rookie of the Week.

The Bison were not idle for long and squared off against Penn State on Tuesday. Penn State took a 6-1 lead in the third, but the Bison fought back, chipping away at the Nittany Lions' lead in a variety of ways. A pair of RBI groundouts by Ed Rubbo '08 and Shawn Hirsch '08 plated Gryskevicz and Angelo, respectively, to cut the lead to 6-3. A double to left-center by Gryskevicz plated Grandizio. A sacrifice fly by Yoder plated Ben Allen '10. The last run came in the ninth, when the Bison had the tying runs on base with no outs. But thanks to a double play, the threat ended.

This weekend, the Bison face Army, the predicted league champions that were swept this weekend by Lafayette.

"We are going to have to be fired up from the very beginning," said Buursma. "We swept them at Army last year so they will be coming into this series with something to prove, but we should give them a run for their money since our pitchers are doing a phenomenal job all across the board and our hitters have been pouring on the runs nonstop."

"The Army series is always one of the key match ups of the Patriot League season for us and we are really looking forward to a home series this weekend," Depew said. "It's a great opportunity for us to face the pre-season favorite to win the league; we're looking forward to the challenge."

The Bison face off against the Black Knights this Saturday and Sunday on Depew field, beginning at noon.

Saint Peter's College
invites you to our campus this summer!
We are the Jesuit College of New Jersey and want to help you accelerate your degree program with summer courses.
This summer, we are offering:
• More than 100 undergraduate and graduate courses
• Affordable tuition rates
• A specialized "Risk Management" series of courses for business majors (courses include Sarbanes Oxley, Enterprise Risk Management, Risk Management and Insurance and Business Ethics and Liability)
• Day and Evening courses at our two campus locations in New Jersey (Jersey City: 201. 761. 6042 and Englewood Cliffs: 201. 761. 7480)
EDUCATION. ONE STUDENT AT A TIME.
www.spc.edu
SAINT PETER'S COLLEGE
Visit www.spc.edu for summer class schedules.
Three and five-week courses offered.
The first Summer Session begins May 21st!
The Jesuit College of New Jersey

BRYNWOOD Rentals
535 Inc.
In Lewisburg Since 1969
Your search begins..... and ends here.
Professional 24/7 Maintenance Staff
Apartments (furnished & unfurnished)
Houses for professionals students families
Rental Garages Also Available
Office & Retail Space 300—3,000 sq ft
brynwoodrentals.com
611 Market Street, Lewisburg
ph: 570.524.2121 x 3

GW sinks under strong Bison play

Water polo squad demonstrates team depth in win against George Washington and loss to Maryland

By Shannon Pitsch
Sports Editor

The women's water polo team split this past weekend falling to Maryland 9-4 on Friday and defeating George Washington 10-8 on Saturday morning. The team has compiled a 12-13 record as it looks forward to finishing conference this weekend at home.

Last weekend's conference action began at the University of Maryland with the Bison boasting a 2-1 record in previous match-ups this season. The teams started the game posting two goals each in the opening 16 minutes, but the second half would inevitably decide the match, as the Orange and Blue were outscored 7-2 in the final 16 minutes.

Maryland 9
Bucknell 4

Each of the four goals were scored by members of different classes with one from each Valentina Rozas '10, Aubrey Rowe '09, Meagan Gins '08, and Mallory Sullivan '07. The Bison offense was missing Elizabeth Jensen '07, who stands second in the books with 41 goals and 21 assists in 24 games this season.

On defense, Mandy Bynum '07 compiled 12 saves in goal while Rozas and Rowe each contributed 4 steals to the effort. In the end, the Terrapins' offensive control in the second half enabled the 9-4 win.

In its second game of the weekend, the team looked to avenge its previous loss with an impressive four goals in the first quarter. The offense came out in full force with Jensen back in the game alongside Gins, each registering three goals to the win.

Bucknell 10
GWU 8

Down 2-5 at the end of the first half, the Colonials responded with six goals in the second stanza. This was not enough as the Orange and Blue doubled their score to 10.

Bynum's nine saves in the net brings her season total to 172 saves in 22 games and places her over the 900 mark in career saves. This breaks Lindsay Chesterfield's mark of 892 career saves, earning Bynum a first place spot in the record books with at least five games left in her season.

"Mentally, I think the team is starting to realize that we are a contender for championships," Head Coach John Zeigler '91 said, "But it is going to take extraordinary focus and discipline in our practices over the next few weeks. We now have fewer games and more practices and how we practice will determine how we finish."

The Bison's 10-8 win over the Colonials ended the four-game losing streak and earned them their first conference win of the year. The team, now standing at 12-13 on the season will finish conference play this weekend with two home matches in the Kinney Natatorium. The team takes on rival Princeton, Friday at 7:30 p.m. before a rematch with George Washington on Saturday at 5 p.m.

Ryan Winn — The Bucknellian

Mandy Bynum '07 calls down the pool, looking for an open Bison player. Bynum has participated in all 22 games this season, tallling a total of 172 saves in net.

Women's tennis downs Mount Saint Mary's

Orange and blue sweep The Mount behind strong play in all matches, snapping losing streak over weekend

Ryan Winn — The Bucknellian

Carlin Calcaterra '10 follows through in the Bison's win over Mount Saint Mary last weekend. Calcaterra teamed up with Paulina Gamboa '09 to win No. 1 doubles.

By John Mlodzinski
Senior Writer

The women's tennis team improved to 3-11 with a 7-0 sweep of Mount St. Mary's on Tuesday after having lost their home openers against Fordham and New Jersey Institute of Technology (NJIT) Saturday, 7-0 and 5-2 respectively.

Bucknell 7
Mt. St. Mary's 0

The Bison picked up the first point of the day in doubles matches. Paulina Gamboa '09 and Carlin Calcaterra '10 defeated Chelsea Johnson and Katie Muething 8-6 in the No. 1 doubles spot. Caitlin Baffa '08 and Renee Weissend '10 lost their No. 2 doubles match to Jen Iosue and Whitney Edmonds 8-5. The Bison secured the doubles point when the team of JoAnna Grossman '09 and Camille Simonetti '09 dropped Ashley Wentzel and Emily Grugan 8-3 in the No. 3 doubles spot.

The Bison continued their run in singles matches, as they did not drop a single match. In the No. 1 singles spot, Tania Varela '10 defeated Katie Muething 6-0, 6-2, while Gamboa handed Johnson only her third singles loss of the season 6-2, 6-3, in the No. 2 singles spot. Calcaterra had a relatively easy time against losue as she picked up the victory 6-3, 6-1 in the No. 3 singles spot.

Baffa had a much more difficult road to victory, as she fought her way through a two-set super breaker 6-1, 3-6, 11-9 in the No. 4 singles spot. Kirstyn Sotak '10 picked up the victory in the No. 5 spot 6-2, 6-2, against Wentzel and secured the win for the team. In the No. 6 spot, Simonetti dropped Grugan 6-1, 6-3.

The Bison opened up their home schedule against Fordham and NJIT on Saturday. The team struggled in both of its matches and lost 7-0 to Fordham and 5-2 to NJIT. There were not too many bright spots in Fordham's sweep of the Bison except for the lone doubles victory by Ashley Globerman '09 and Varela over Martina Featherston and Doina Sandor 8-3 in the No. 2 doubles spot.

Fordham 7
Bucknell 0

NJIT 5
Bucknell 2

In the other two doubles matches, Calcaterra and Gamboa fell to Ellenoira Featherston and Dominique Liguori 8-3 in the No. 1 spot, while Baffa and Weissend dropped their match against Lisa Vulin and Elizabeth Stall 8-6 in the No. 3 doubles spot.

The team did not look much better in singles matches. In the No. 1 singles match, Gamboa fell to Liguori 6-0, 6-1. Varela was defeated by E. Featherston 6-3, 6-4 in the No. 2 spot, and Calcaterra dropped her No. 3 singles match to Sandor 6-0, 6-4. In the No. 4, No. 5 and No. 6 singles matches, Globerman fell to Vulin 6-1, 6-0, Grossman lost to M. Featherston 6-4, 6-3 and Baffa dropped her match to Stall 6-3, 6-2.

While the Bison improved their play against NJIT, they were unable to pull out the victory. The Bison struck first, winning two of the three doubles matches. In the No. 1 doubles match, Globerman and Varela defeated Julia Doci and Fatima Kasem 8-3, and in the No. 2 doubles match Calcaterra and Gamboa secured the doubles point as they beat Fanny Aizier and Isha Toor 8-2. In the No. 3 doubles spot, Tiffany Card '09 and Simonetti fell to Marine Henry and Chiori Koike 8-5.

It looked as though the Bison had gained some momentum heading into the singles matches, but it quickly turned in NJIT's favor; the Bison were only able to pick up one victory in the singles matches.

Gamboa picked up the lone singles point for the Bison, defeating Kasem 6-2, 6-1 in the No. 2 singles match. In the No. 1 spot, Calcaterra fell to Doci 6-0, 6-2, while Globerman lost to Toor 6-3, 6-2. In the No.4, No. 5 and No.6 matches, Grossman (3-6, 6-3, 6-3) Sotak (7-5, 6-3) and Weissend (7-5, 6-2) fell to Henry, Aizier and Koike respectively.

The Bison continue their home stand at 1 p.m. Saturday when they face Fairleigh Dickinson at the varsity tennis courts.

MTENNIS From page B1

need heading into the second half of this season."

The Bison charged through the Mount St. Mary's lineup, winning all six singles matches along with all three doubles spots. In singles action, team captain Ira Reibeisen '08 defeated Favio Osorio 6-2, 6-2 at the first slot, while Ryan Sandburg '09 had to work a bit harder, winning in tie break 6-3, 3-6, 10-7 in the No. 2 spot. The next three singles matches followed suit with Zach Hascoe '10, Daniel Bednarek '09, and Jonathan Brenner '09 downing the competition with ease.

Bucknell 7
Mt.St, Mary 0

The Bison dominated doubles play as well, with the sophomore tandem Brenner and Sandburg winning all but one game at the No. 1 spot. The doubles team of Reibeisen and Ben Young '08 came out on top in the second spot, while the Bison took third doubles by default.

On Sunday afternoon, the Orange and Blue came up short against a tough Army squad in their first Patriot League competition of the season. Reibeison took his first singles match 7-6 (7-5), 7-5. The two, three and four spots did not fair as well, as all three came up short. Brenner bucked the trend, topping Charles Mullenger in No. 5 singles, but Bednarek fell at No 6. in two close sets.

Army 5
Bucknell 2

The Bison went 1-2 in their doubles matches, falling at No 1. and No. 2 doubles. The team of Bednarek and Hascoe took the final doubles game 8-4, but the win was not enough for the Bison to claim the doubles point.

Earlier in the weekend, the Bison stunned NJIT 6-1. Reibeisen snatched No. 1 singles yet again 7-5, 6-2. Sandburg followed suit, defeating his opponent at the No. 2 spot 7-5, 6-2. Other singles wins were picked up by Hascoe, Brenner, and Bednarek, at the four, five, and six spots, respectively. The men cleaned up in doubles play as well, as the Bison swept the first, second, and third spots.

Bucknell 6
NJIT 1

"We plan to just keep fighting," Hascoe said. "We are capable of winning every match we play for the rest of the season, depending on if all of us come to play every single day."

The men look to continue their recent success at 1 p.m. this Saturday in Lewisburg as they take on Fairleigh Dickinson.

Bison fall short of upset

By Kyle Barndollar
Writer

Another three-goal game from Bonnie Buechel '09 was not enough to propel the women's lacrosse team past host Drexel on Tuesday night. The Dragons, who currently sit at 20th in Laxpower.com's power rankings, scored 11 goals in the second half on their way to a 17-6 win. The Bison also dropped their first Patriot League game three days earlier, as they fell 13-9 to Colgate in Hamilton, N.Y. The Bison are now 4-6 on the season, and 1-1 in conference play.

Drexel 17
Bucknell 6

Sarah Collins '09 assisted Chelsea Peters '10 for the first goal of the game against Drexel, but the Dragons snatched the lead back with goals by Jessica Bill and Gwenna Johnson. Buechel scored the first of her three goals to tie the game at 2-2 with 18 minutes and 24 seconds left in the first half. Another goal by Bill put Drexel up one, before Paige Kasschau '10 answered to pull the score to a 3-3 tie.

Drexel scored the game's next nine goals, pulling away from the Bison and securing the win. The second half saw two more goals from Buechel, as well as one from Alison Heffernan '10, but the three goals combined were not nearly enough to match the eleven goals scored by the Dragons in the second stanza.

Goalie Katie Hartsock '10 faced 26 shots on goal in the game, making nine saves, while the Orange and Blue managed 16 shots on the two goalies Drexel used. Buechel and Lauren Deitrich '08 combined for nine of the team's 11 draw controls on the day, while the Dragons collected 14. The Bison also lost the ever important ground ball battle, 19-13.

In Saturday's game, the Orange and Blue scored four straight goals against Colgate to end the first half with a 4-1 lead. Peters scored twice during the run, while Erin Weinstein '07 and Deitrich each added a goal, and Collins contributed two assists.

Colgate 13
Bucknell 9

Once again, the second half seemed to bring misfortune for the Bison, as they were outscored 12-5 in the final 30 minutes.

Peters was able to complete her hat trick, while Carol Donohue '10 added two goals and Kasschau added one to account for the team scoring for the period. The Bison were outshot 41-26 and won only four of 13 ground balls in the half, as the Raiders emphatically turned their three goal deficit into a 13-9 victory.

Buechel added three assists at Colgate to help extend her now 14-game point streak. Buechel currently leads the team with 30 points in the season, with 23 goals and seven assists.Hartsock made 11 saves

"We are a team of such talented and capable players," Buechel said, "yet we still make basic errors that cost us possession."

The Orange and Blue face a big Patriot League test in their next game on Saturday at Holy Cross where they look to bounce back and restore their chances of winning a conference championship with a key road victory.

"When we play with confidence in ourselves and the intensity that we bring to practice, we are definitely a threatening team" Buechel said.

Ryan Winn — The Bucknellian

Carol Donohue '10 picks up a ground ball. The Bison will hit the road on Saturday, taking on Patriot League foe Holy Cross.

America's pastime

Story lines and predictions for the 2007 MLB season

By Jared Napolitano
Business Manager

Yes, a team with 83 wins won the 2006 World Series Title. Yes, the Florida Marlins had six of the 12 players on the National League Rookie of the Year ballot. Yes, Roger Clemens essentially wrote his own contract. And yes, the Kansas Royals lost 100 games for the fourth time in five years.

Every season in Major League Baseball (MLB) has its own special moments that make it unique—2006 certainly followed suit. While every season is different, some common trends usually occur: individual breakouts, play-offs upsets and drastic turnarounds. Hopefully the 2007 season will contain much of the same excitement that made last year another successful step in the about-face of baseball after the tainted "Steroid Era."

Let's take a look at some of the major story lines that will undoubtedly characterize the 2007 MLB season.

The Evil Empire: The Yankees last World Series title was in 2000, and it's not hard to tell that the Boss is getting upset. While he relinquished some control to General Manager (GM) Brian Cashman, the leash is never long with George Steinbrenner. Alex Rodriguez will again face a harsh crowd following a poor, 1-for-14 post-season batting performance. The two-time league Most Valuable Player will need to prove himself in both the regular season and post-season to truly gain the favor of the Yankee Faithful.

The Red Socks: GM Theo Epstein made several moves in the off-season, including acquiring the Japanese sensation Daisuke Matsuzaka. The master of the mythical "gyroball" will gain much attention in the summer months, particularly to see if the $51.11 million just to negotiate with Matsuzaka was a wise move. With a strong spring training, it seems that Matsuzaka will compete for both the Rookie of the Year and the Cy Young Award.

NL Playoffs:
Dodgers over Mets
Phillies over Cardinals
Dodgers over Phillies

AL Playoffs:
Athletics over Tigers
Indians over Yankees
Athletics over Indians

World Series:
Athletics over Dodgers

Deep American League Central: Perhaps the best division in baseball. The White Sox won 90 games and finished in third place in 2006. Besides the Royals, every team has a shot at winning the division. The Indians, Twins, White Sox and Tigers all have very balanced squads.

Rookie Class: With an extremely tough act to follow, this year's class will not likely have the quality of 2006's group: Justin Verlander, Jonathan Papelbon, Francisco Liriano, Jered Weaver and Josh Johnson combined to produce at the least a once-in-a-decade caliber of rookie pitching. This year's top candidates include Alex Gordon (Royals), Matsuzaka (Red Sox), Mike Pelfrey (Mets), Delmon Young (Devil Rays), Stephen Drew (Diamondbacks) and Troy Tulowitzki (Rockies).

Rookie of the Year Award:
National League:
Stephen Drew (Diamondbacks)
American League:
Alex Gordon (Royals)

Cy Young Award:
National League (1-3):
Roy Oswalt, Jake Peavy, Carlos Zambrano
American League (1-3):
Roy Halladay, Johan Santana, Jeremy

Tomahawk Comeback: 2006 was the first full season since 1990 that the Braves failed to win its division. Coincidentally, these 14 division titles were the first full 14 seasons of Bobby Cox's tenure in Atlanta. The Braves will improve from last year, but in a very difficult National League East it will be tough for them to finish at the top.

Big Apple Disappointment: Despite being nine games better than any other team in the National League, the Mets were unable to win the pennant. Its offense should not have any problems doing its part, but the Mets' young pitching will have to perform well for the Mets to stay competitive, at least until Pedro returns mid-season.

Defending Champs: Despite winning just 83 games and tail-spinning in the final two months (only 25 wins combined in August and September), the Cardinals stunned the Tigers and the American League by capturing the 2006 World Series title in five games. While they only made a few off-season moves, Albert Pujols has already proven his ability to carry an entire team.

Chicago Spending Spree: It is definitely clear that Cubs management is tired of the World Series drought. Making a conscious effort to address the team's needs and certainly not being frugal in the process, the Cubs inked several big-money deals in the off-season; Alfonso Soriano ($136 mil/8), Aramis Ramirez ($75 mil/5), Carlos Zambrano ($12.4 mil/1), Jason Marquis ($21 mil/3), Ted Lilly ($40 mil/4), Mark DeRosa ($13 mil/3) and Cliff Floyd ($3/1) all found themselves playing for Chicago in 2007. Hopefully, the Chicago Mint still has some funds available.

Reuters Photo Archive

No More Humidor: Coors Field will no longer employ the famous "Humidor," formerly used to take some lift out of ball travel that is normally amplified by the Rocky Mountain Air. Look for increases in home runs, doubles and runs scored in Denver this season.

Milestones: Barry Bonds is 21 home runs away from breaking Hank Aaron's career home run mark. This will be sad day for baseball fans everywhere who do not believe Bonds to be an upright, honest or classy player (these fans are not too hard to find). Craig Biggio needs only 70 hits to reach the milestone 3,000 hit mark (he would be the 27th player in MLB history to do so) and Tom Glavine needs only nine more wins to reach 300 for his career, an accomplishment only 22 other pitchers have ever achieved. All three of these players will end up in the Hall of Fame.

There are few ways to better celebrate the springtime than relaxing in the beautiful weather and celebrating America's favorite pastime.

Most Valuable Player:
National League (1-5):
Albert Pujols, Ryan Howard, Lance Berkman, Carlos Beltran, Alfonso Soriano
American League (1-5):
Vladimir Guerrero, Grady Sizemore, Manny Ramirez, Derek Jeter, Travis Hafner

VARELA From page B1

heal faster and faster," Helt said. "She's very strong, and I think she just got it in her head that she needed to get back on the court. She has been a great source of strength for her teammates and an inspiration to anyone who knows her."

Teammates and coaches attribute her miraculous recovery to her mental toughness and positive attitude.

Paulina Gamboa '09 said, "She tries to see the good in things. From the accident, she could have given up and not played. She recovered and she is back on the team playing."

The road to recovery still has not been easy and has been marked with frustration. Varela, who holds herself to a high standard, has found that she feels slower and tires more easily because her lungs are still not working at 100 percent.

"In tennis, everything is about timing," Varela said. "When you aren't fast enough, you hit the ball in different places then you would normally. My teammates think I am still playing good, but I don't think I am like I used to be before."

Varela has drawn upon her teammates and family as a source of strength.

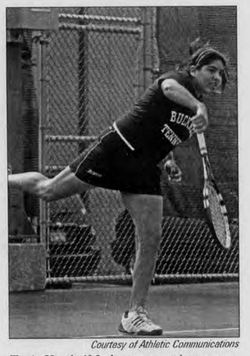
"The team and our coach—we support each other," Gamboa said. "We started to become more of a team by helping her out."

Because of her collapsed lungs, Varela could not go home during winter break. Varela's mother left her job in Ecuador to stay with her for two months and her father also visited for a month. They now talk almost every day.

Despite all of the setbacks from the accident, Varela is now 3-1 in singles play for the spring season and 4-2 in doubles play with her partner Globerman. There are still expectations for Varela to fill an instrumental part in the University's program, including the potential to break University and Patriot League records and earn a regional singles ranking.

Varela, who has players come to her for advice despite her younger class year, also hopes to pursue more of a leadership role in the future. What happened to Varela last November is already becoming a memory as she continues on her road to recovery.

"As her coach, I get goosebumps every time I see her on the court. I'm just so happy to see her there," Helt said.



Courtesy of Athletic Communications

Tania Varela '10 slams a serve in a recent match. Varela is currently ranked number one in her home country of Ecuador and fourth in South America.

SAYLOR From page B1

fastball 400 feet, throw a perfect spiral 45 yards to hit my receiver in stride and complete all of my homework on days I spend too much time at "The Bucknellian."

7. Florida's junior quartet of Corey Brewer, Taurean Green, Al Horford and Joakim Noah would come back to school to try to win a third straight title.

8. Fundamentals would become priorities for athletes instead of making it onto SportsCenter.

9. I would be able to watch college games on ESPNU because it would be free to watch.

10. Signing contracts for eight and nine figures and changing teams every few years would be a thing of the past. The majority of professional athletes would play for one team their entire career, not the minority.

Red, Smoked BBQ!
Beef Brisket, Pork, Chicken, Ribs!
Sandwiches, Wraps, Salads, Platters!
NO RESERVATIONS NEEDED!
Call in for TAKEOUT!
SKEETERS PIT BBQ
ON THE BLUFF
OVERLOOKING THE SCENIC SUSQUEHANNA RIVER
AT THE INTERSECTION OF ROUTES 11 & 15
SHAMOKIN DAM
570.743.2727
Daily 11:00am - 10:00pm
Sundays till 9:00pm
www.skeetersBBQ.com

Ellacinders
Jewelry & Bead Bar
Classes...Birthday Parties...Weddings...Girls' Nite Out
566 North Derr Drive
Lewisburg PA 17837
Phone 570 522 0880
cjreed@dejazzd.com
HOURS – Mon-Fri 11 am - 7 pm Sat 10 am - 4 pm
Create Your Own Designs!

"Head to Toe" Spa Girl Parties...
Packages for Birthdays, Bridal Showers, Bachelorette Parties, Girls' Nite Out...

Includes a Facial, Manicure, Pedicure, Massage, & Hot Hand Dip!

...our Tiki Bar is B.Y.O.B.
Call us or check out our website for complete details...
Gift Certificates also available
Body Mind ~N~ Soul
Full Service Salon & Day Spa
www.bodymindnsoul.com
225 North Rt. 11&15, Hummels Wharf
(570) 743-7777 or 743-8888

Mer Cares

Dear Mer:

Chrysalis is coming up soon and I really want a date this year. There's this really cute guy on the track team with me and I want to ask him out. I've had a crush on him for a while and every time I try to make conversation with him, it never goes the way I want it to.

I can't seem to be able to tell him how I feel without being really awkward. Whenever we go to meets, I usually go up to him and try to be all sexy but I think I just come off as weird. I'm really shy around guys and I don't want to seem desperate or forward since guys usually ask girls, but I want to go out with him so badly! What do I do

— Hopeless and in Despairing

Dear Hopeless,

Although Chrysalis is just around the corner, you don't need to have a date to enjoy the band, food and fun—just grab a couple of good friends, your party outfit, laughter and optimism. In addressing the other issues, I agree that sometimes it is hard to talk to guys, but they are not necessarily judging you on your appearance or how well your necklace matches your skirt.

They're probably thinking more about if you can keep a conversation going without talking about yourself too much or if you can make them laugh.

Don't go into a conversation with the mindset that you need to be sexy and superficial in order for him to like you—start off slow and see where your words take you.

Start with something easy like the weather, or how hard your coach is making you practice these days; something silly and simple so he won't see your "hidden agenda."

If you begin to get a good vibe from him, move onto classes you are taking for your major, etc. Maybe you'll be interested in some of the classes he mentions and it will intrigue him that you are interested in something he actually likes.

Please don't show off for him, like jumping over the hurdles ever so gallantly and then falling flat on your face. Don't get overexcited when he's near —remain calm and collected and it will show him you're an easygoing gal who's fun to be around. This will make him want to hang out with you more and maybe even ask you to chill with him outside of track.

If he doesn't catch onto your discreet flirting, don't be discouraged. Put in a little more effort and put yourself out there.

The best things in life are worth taking a risk for, so just be yourself. Don't talk to all his friends to see who he likes or if he wants to ask someone out, because that usually ends in disaster. Your crush will end up thinking you are too much of a coward to actually talk to him yourself.

Last but not least, you have to get it out of your head that it is desperate or forward to ask a guy out. If you are getting a lot of positive energy from him when you two converse, just go for it and ask him out.

According to "Cosmopolitan," men are flattered when women ask them out. Sometimes guys can be a little dense and don't always see that girls like them, but it doesn't mean you have to sit back and wait for your track hunk to finally get it.

Cosmo suggests that you use a more subtly suggestive approach to make it seem as if it were his brilliant idea.

If anything, it will appear sexier because you want to make the first move; you would seem more confident since you're showing you know what you want.

It's the 21st century and girls actually do ask guys out— sometimes guys want that because it confirms that you like them instead of putting the pressure on them to go out on a limb.

I think guys actually have more of a fear of getting shut down than girls do, because when girls ask guys out they are more scared of the idea of asking at all and revealing their feelings than about getting rejected.

Love,
Mer

Please send questions regarding any topic to marc001@Bucknell.edu with subject line reading "advice" or you may send a letter via campus mail to box number C1099. I look forward to hearing from you!

Awakening your inner spring

Ten things you couldn't do around campus during the dreary winter

By Liz Stein
Writer

It is finally time to retire our insulated North Face coats and Uggs: spring is officially here! So before you slip on your flip-flops and head to 7th Street Café for a cold smoothie, here are some tips to enjoy the warm weather during the last weeks of the semester on campus.

1. If the fruit and veggies selection at Bostwick Dining Hall is becoming a little mundane for your tastes, why not explore other (healthy!) options with new spring varieties? Take a short trip down Market Street to the Farmer's Market on the other side of Route 15. Surely you'll find some of the season's best pickings. Seasonal produce includes asparagus, peas, red radishes, spinach, watercress, blackberries, rhubarb and strawberries. Mmm!

2. It's time to start grilling! With the sun heating up the campus, there is no better way to celebrate than by barbequing. Get your grill heated and throw on some hot dogs and hamburgers. Or if you're more creative, try some new recipes, such as turkey drumsticks, catfish, Portobello mushrooms or calamari skewers. Log onto www.foodnetwork.com for more great ideas.

3. Get a group of friends together and get to the field to play frisbee, tennis or volleyball. Even if you have never played before, it would be a good learning experience.

4. If a team sport isn't your thing and you're looking to exercise outside, you can still have fun in the sun. Give the treadmill a break and go for a run around campus or downtown. Now is also a great time for a bike ride or a hike. There are tons of great hiking trails just a few miles away from campus. For the more adventurous individual, go on a kayak or canoe trip on the Susquehanna River. Log on to www.paddlehappy.com or www.trails.com for more information.

5. If you're not too exhausted from your intramural tournament or hiking the Stony Run trail, head over to the brand new athletic complex next to Bucknell West, among other venues, and support your varsity athletes. Women's water polo, lacrosse, track & field, tennis, softball, golf and crew and men's track & field, tennis, lacrosse, golf and baseball are all currently competing. Check out the athletics Web page for team schedules.

Illustration by Nilanjana Saha

6. A great way to take advantage of the warm weather and to help a good cause at the same time is to get involved in a fundraiser walk. On April 10 the University will host the Light the Night Walk to raise funds for the battle against leukemia and lymphoma. If you don't think you'll be ready in time, a fundraising walk will be taking place at the Lycoming College Stadium on April 15 to help support AIDS research. Also, if your finals schedule permits, you can take a trip to Washington D.C. for the Avon Walk for Breast Cancer on May 5-6.

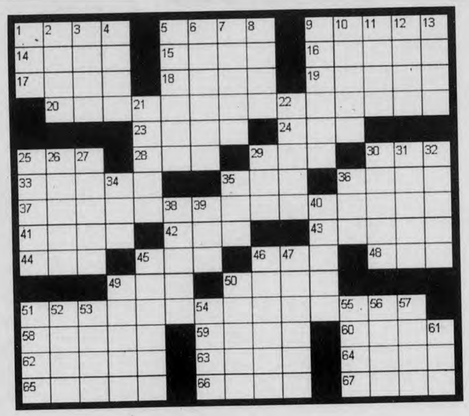
7. Now that the weather is warm, you can enjoy fun events in the Lewisburg area. While a daily walk to The Freez may seem tempting, explore your other options. Less than 30 miles away, Knoebels Amusement Resort offers loads of rollercoasters and rides, a bald eagle habitat, miniature golf, a shooting gallery, an XD theater and more. If you don't want to travel too far from campus, make sure you stop by the various spring festivals that central Pennsylvania has to offer. The Lewisburg Arts Festival on April 28 and the Annual Spring Fling in downtown Danville on May 5 are excellent ways to take advantage of the season's featured cultural and heritage celebrations.

8. Take up a new hobby. With the freshness and cheer of spring, why not engage in a new activity? Learn how to garden, perfect your frisbee toss or study the ins and outs of a new craft. Be creative.

9. Now is a good time to get started on your spring cleaning. Fortunately, it doesn't have to be a chore. After all of that snow, your car is surely in need of a good wash. So put on a t-shirt and some old jeans and get to scrubbing—you'll be proud of your hard work as you cruise around campus in your sparkling vehicle. This is also a great time to weed through your closet and get rid of any unwanted clothing by giving it to Goodwill. Be sure to fill the empty space in your with your favorite warm weather duds.

10. Relax! With the flowers blooming and the temperature rising every day now, you'll definitely feel more stress-free, even with finals looming. Take a blanket and your sunglasses up to the quad and just enjoy the beauty of the campus. With an iced latte in hand and the sun beaming on your face, those freezing snow drifts will seem thousands of miles away.

The Bucknellian Crossword

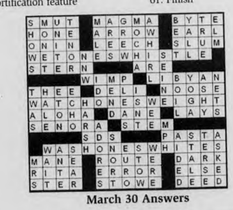


Across

1. Punishment for an offensive remark
5. Hourglass filler
9. Be embarrassed or burned (2 words)
14. Meat sauce
15. Geographic region
16. Common chemical compound
17. Running _
18. Hardy title character
19. Chews
20. Popular test question
23. Cupid
24. Golf equipment
25. Young seal
28. Encountered
29. Academic VIP
30. Mil. rank
33. Infamous fort
35. Yellowfin tuna
36. Trauma-induced state
37. Popular test question
41. Watch over
42. Decay
43. Workout material
44. Gallery pieces
45. Race
46. Wide Sargasso _ by Jean Rhys
48. Common pronoun
49. Aggregation
50. Non-fiction
51. Popular test question
58. Parody newspaper (with "The")
59. Starter to smith or space
60. Rock musician Matthews
62. Love completely
63. Joy
64. Kitchen fixture
65. Firm
66. Sober HS org.
67. Expect interest

Down

1. Frodo's friend
2. Bread unit
3. Against
4. Rind
5. Jonathan Swift or Jon Stewart specialty
6. "Am too!" reply
7. Bird houses
8. Short sprint
9. Fished for fruit
10. Banish
11. Mrs. Tom Hanks
12. Divine garden
13. Cubicle
21. Citrus fruit
22. Work _
25. Noodles
26. Non-healing wound
27. Copy Pollock
29. Greek letter
30. Sponge
31. Italian love
32. Disney villain
34. Shirt size (abbr.)
35. Towards the stern
36. Alan Paton's "_ The Beloved Country"
38. The Donald
39. Charged particle
40. Famous philosopher
45. Destroyed
46. Holy
47. Reverberated
49. Boutique
50. You won't _ thing
51. Fortification feature
52. Reverse
53. King of beasts
54. Falls behind
55. Revered image
56. Spelunking site
57. Level
61. Finish



ByVo Crosswords

March 30 Answers

"Turn your Power ON and Add LIFE to your Years!"

Morrison's Advanced Chiropractic Care

Michael D. Morrison D.C.
1205 W Market Street
Lewisburg, PA 17837
Office: 570-523-1221

A Healthy Spine Equals a Healthy YOU!

Bucknell Students may receive a free exam and x-rays (if needed) with mention of this advertisement.

"Writing is a struggle against silence."
—Carlos Fuentes

Write for Features
E-mail ns022@

Take Back the NIGHT

March raises awareness about sexual assault and domestic violence

By Susan Misur
Contributing Writer

It's easy to think, "That won't happen to me; I'm not going to worry about it." But statistics show that one in four college women are sexually assaulted even here at the University, despite the fact that students often believe these horrific crimes don't penetrate the "bubble."

The Women's Resource Center (WRC) sponsored the "Take Back the Night" march Wednesday in an effort to spread awareness about domestic violence and sexual assault. The event featured the Voices of Praise gospel choir and speeches by Micheala Denny, director of the WRC; Elaine Garret, associate dean of Arts and Sciences; Marty Gates, director of Susquehanna Valley Women in Transition and Tracy Shaynak, director of Community Health Promotion and Speak Out. Speak Out provided an opportunity for participants to address the crowd about their own experience with sexual assault or feelings they have about it.

"Anyone can come up during a Speak Out to talk about their experiences or concerns, and it's often therapeutic for people," Denny said. "It's a really brave thing to do, and it's nice because you don't have to make a whole speech or answer questions when you're up there. You can say as little as 'Sexual assault needs to stop!' and sit down."

Colleges and women's groups across the country sponsor "Take Back the Night" marches. Each is different, since there are no national guidelines for what the march should entail, according to Denny.

The first "Take Back the Night" event was held in 1877 in England as a women-only protest against the violence and fear women encountered walking alone at night. In 1978, San Francisco held the first "Take Back the Night" rally in the U. S. to address sexual assault. Today, some marches and rallies are designated women-only, but the University's goal was to unite men and women on campus, along with the local community, to fight sexual violence.

"We invited a lot of people to come together for this; it's a very inclusive event," Denny said.

The WRC invited a number of community groups such as the local chapter of the American Association of University Women, representatives of Susquehanna Valley Women in Transition and members of the Community Alliance for Respect and Equality.

Ellyn Ercolano—The Bucknellian

Students listen to speakers during the "Take Back the Night" march, organized to raise awareness about sexual assault.

"Take Back the Night is meant to raise awareness, not fundraise," Denny said. "If it were a fundraiser, some people might feel they were obligated to donate and choose not to attend. We want it to be open to as many people as possible."

The WRC staff and members of the Faculty and Staff and Student Advisory Council (FSAC) planned the march with the University administration, Public Safety and Lewisburg officials (since the march ends in Hufnagle Park).

Jen Palomba '07, who serves on the FSAC committee, supports efforts to bring sexual assault awareness to the public eye and is in favor of new security measures at the University to make students feel safer.

"Sometimes I do get nervous walking back to my dorm at night, and would rather have a swipe card to get into my dorm rather than try to fumble with a key to open the door," Palomba said.

Public Safety Chief Jason Friedberg said that swipe keys are in the works for the University, but wants to remind students that Public Safety offers an escort service.

"If a student is nervous about walking home late at night, they can find a blue light, or call Public Safety," Friedberg said. "Of course, it's not meant to be a taxi service, and often we'll send a walking escort rather than a driver."

Students don't use the Safe Escort Service very often, and only a few use the blue lights each semester. This may be due to the lack of information students have about how they work.

"If someone pushes the button on the blue light, the location is identified by Public Safety, and the person can be heard up to 30 feet away from the light," Friedberg said. "This allows for them to keep walking if they are trying to get away from someone, while also still talking to the blue light's intercom.",

Four more blue lights will be installed around campus, Friedberg said, along with more lighting in areas like Harland Trax Hall. Public Safety is working on initiating a student patrol program for next year. The program was active a few years ago, but students disliked the late hours they worked as walking escorts and it needed to be revamped.

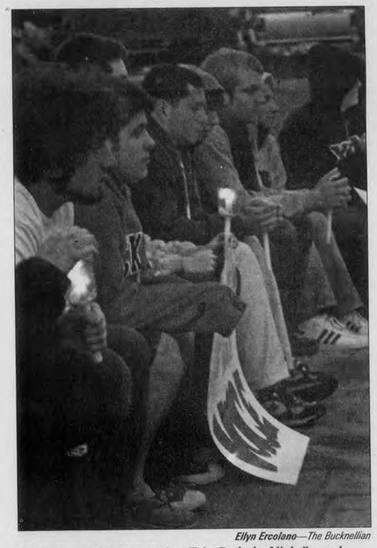
"Next year, we're going to give the students better hours and allow them to be the eyes and ears when it comes to safety on campus," Friedberg said.

Attending the "Take Back the Night" march is just one step for Friedberg in making our campus safer. He supports spreading awareness of sexual assaults that occur on campus because so many go unreported, giving students a false sense of security.

"Since our campus and surrounding community is so safe compared to others, students take it for granted," Palomba said. "Some might feel OK walking alone at night and their precautions are lower, but that doesn't mean we shouldn't have more blue lights, well-lit areas and swipe cards for dorms."

With signs, banners, chants and a large group of Bucknellians and community members marching against sexual violence, Denny hopes marchers made an impression on everyone, in order to influence the way people think about their own safety and that of friends and family.

As Denny said in her speech at the beginning of the "Take Back the Night" march, "We hope that events like this one will help illuminate issues of sexual violence and bring us together to demand that we no longer be victimized. Our community deserves better."



Ellyn Ercolano—The Bucknellian

Students participating in the "Take Back the Night" march walked from the downhill side of the Elaine Langone Center to Hufnagle Park, carrying posters and banners to spread awareness about domestic violence and sexual assault.

Another tantalizing edition brought to you by ...

Ms. Love and the Bubble

Dear Ms. O,

My girlfriend has gone abroad for the semester, and even though we are close, I'm having trouble with the whole different-parts-of-the-world thing. We talk a few times a week, and I'm comfortable with that, but I'm getting frustrated with the lack of physical activity. My buddy suggested phone sex, but I don't know how to go about it. What do I do?

- Tennis Elbow

Dear Tennis Elbow,

You're right. When it comes to phone sex, you can't really just say, "Hey, let's do it." It can feel awkward and forced if you plan it out like that.

But it can be a very enjoyable and sexy way to get some lovin', even though your girlfriend is a few thousand miles away.

To start participating in this naughty long-distance foreplay, you need to get your partner primed.

Start off simple. Tell her something sexual you miss doing with her or a fantasy you've had about her recently. You don't want to overwhelm her, so make sure you start slow and drop subtle hints. Then ask her to share some of her daydreams with you.

Talk about it at a time when you both have privacy and can relax.

After a few sessions of trading fantasies, you'll both start to feel more comfortable voicing your desires out loud, and there will likely be an increase in the description and intensity of the stories.

The more descriptive you are, the more vivid you'll make the pictures in her head, increasing the arousal.

But make sure you're both at the same level. If one of you is saying much dirtier things than the other, it may become uncomfortable. Listen to what words she chooses, and don't go beyond her degree of vulgarity.

At some point, let her know that the last time you swapped stories, you "took care of yourself" while she was telling hers. This will let her know your intentions.

You need to make sure that she's OK with the idea. If it makes her uncomfortable, then phone sex is a no-go.

Odds are, after so many steamy story sessions, the idea will probably have crossed her mind at least once or twice, and she may even admit that she's pleasured herself listening to you too.

Remember to start out slow, but don't be afraid to push the envelope every so often. If you feel like it may be getting too raunchy for her, ask her about it afterwards. If she takes it too far, let her know.

Phone sex can help you open up lines of communication not only sexually but in the rest of your relationship as well. You'll feel more comfortable saying what's on your mind.

A lot of sexual activity takes place without any real vocal direction or demands, but in this case you really do have to tell the other person what you want and what gets you hot.

Have fun with it! You and your partner could develop a closer connection by sharing each other's most intimate desires and, hopefully, fulfilling them when the location permits.

~ Ms. O

E-mail me your questions at MsOintheBubble@yahoo.com or send them through campus mail to Ms. O, The Bucknellian, C-3952. All authors of questions will remain anonymous.

The College of New Jersey

Graduate Education Opportunities

Remaining application deadlines for fall admission:

April 15 Matriculation
Programs Include:
- Educational Leadership: Principal
- Educational Technology
- English
- Global Elementary, Secondary, TESL, Leadership
- Health and Exercise Science (non-teaching)
- Nursing
- Reading
- Special Education (advanced programs for licensed teachers)
- Teaching English as a Second Language

August Non-Matriculation
Applications will be available mid-May.

For information and an application, visit www.tcnj.edu/~graduate. For information about our partnership programs with Regional Training Centers, visit www.tcnj.edu/~graduate/regional.

The College of New Jersey
POBox 7718
Ewing, NJ 08628-0718
(609.771.2300
W www.tcnj.edu/~graduate

INDIGO HAIR & NAIL STUDIO

106 Market Street
Lewisburg, Pennsylvania 17837
570-524-7888

La Primavera
Rt. 45 West Lewisburg
523-1515
Sun, Tues-Thurs 11-10
Fri-Sat 11-11

Weekly Specials
Tues: Chicken & Veal $12.95
Wed: Seafood Night $12.95
Thurs: Steak Night $12.95
Sun: Pasta Special $8.95

-Pizzas to go! $16.95 for 2 large pizzas
-Full Liquor Bar
-Available for Formals, Graduation Dinners, Reunions
-Lunch Buffet 11-3

COUPON: Buy one entree, get 2nd one half off!

COUPON: 10% off total purchase!

Coupons cannot be used on weekly specials

Mars=Alaska?

Looking for water on the red planet

By Lily Beauvilliers
Associate Editor of Layout

What's the difference between Alaska and Mars?

Everything, you might say. But Alaska and Mars are not as different as you think. Research comparing geological formations performed by Craig Kochel, professor of geology, and Jeffrey Trop, associate professor of geology, may allow NASA scientists to understand the past, present and future development of water on the red planet.

At the 38th Annual Lunar and Planetary Science Conference (LPSC) held in mid-March in Houston, Texas, Kochel and Trop presented a poster detailing their work. The LPSC is hosted by the Lunar and Planetary Institute, a research institute aiming to provide support to NASA programs.

A group of scientists from the Ames Research Center took special interest in Kochel and Trop's work. Ames has the ability to take pictures of specific portions of Mars.

"They may take our coordinates and zoom in on them, giving us an image at high resolution," Kochel said.

What exactly are Kochel and Trop looking for? Images of Mars sometimes closely resemble the terrain of Alaska, suggesting that gullies or flows of ice, mud and rocks may be moving on the surface of Mars.

"Mars is probably the most Earth-like of the planets. The concern about finding water is the potential for life in the past on Mars," Kochel said.

Kochel and Trop began this work when Kochel saw a photograph taken by Ryan Delaney '06 for his senior thesis in geology.

Delaney took the photograph while doing research with Trop in St. Elias National Park, an area in Alaska so remote that parts of it can only be accessed via helicopter.

For the past few summers, Trop has taken students to research with him in Alaska, expenses covered by a grant.

"My adviser at the University of Texas was part of the Mars Viking research team," Kochel said.

"The first summer of grad school, he dropped a wheelbarrow of close-up pictures of Mars on me. I spent the summer piecing together the photos."

With this familiarity, he instantly recognized features in Delaney's picture similar to Mars images.

Specifically, Kochel and Trop are studying "alluvial fans," combinations of water, ice and rock which fall down mountains or craters and build up over several decades. Spectral data (meaning the light reflected from the surface of Mars) proved that water is one of the components of Martian structure. Since Mars and Alaska share arctic temperatures, similar landscapes and a history of volcanic activity, comparing photographs of each might illuminate where water exists on Mars.

Over the summer, Kochel spent a week at the St. Elias Park. He observed 289 events such as avalanches, rock falls and debris flows. Seeing how these flows develop can help him and other scientists understand analogous developments on Mars.

"We can't observe the day-to-day on Mars, but we can start to get snapshots. In Alaska, we can sit on the ground and watch the event as it's happening," Trop said.

Surface photographs aren't the only sources of information. Ground-penetrating radar units send signals into the flows, building an image of layers of sediment.

"They're shooting similar radar pulses from orbiters circling Mars. Hopefully they'll be at the same scale as our Alaska images, so we can compare," Trop said.

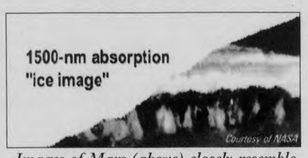
Although Kochel and Trop can't currently support undergraduate research on this project, they hope to in the future.

"We don't have the funding to bring students, but we're looking into getting more grants," Kochel said.

A grant from the University paid for his week-long stay in Alaska.

As more information comes in from NASA's Mars Reconnaissance Orbiter, a satellite launched in 2005 to search for water, keep an eye out for further findings from Kochel and Trop.

Red vs. blue



Images of Mars (above) closely resemble those of Alaska (below), leading to speculation that Martian activity may be analagous to Alaskan developments, allowing scientists to study the potential for water and life on Mars. The Mars image comes from the Chasma Boreale Valley, and the Alaskan from the Wrangell Mountains.

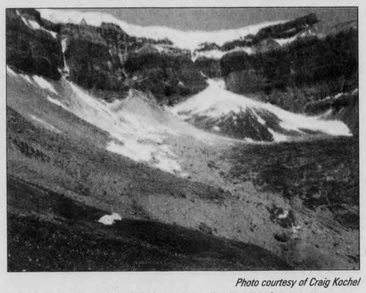


Photo courtesy of Craig Kochel

A ground view of the Alaskan research site. In the remote Wrangell Mountains, events such as mudslides and avalanches occur daily and may be observed up close and in person.

Photo courtesy of NASA

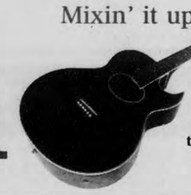
The Bucknellian

April 13, 2007

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University .

Volume 139, Number 10 | Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue | www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Mixin' it up



This week's addition of "Meg's Mix" brings you 14 covers and acoustic tunes to add to your iTunes library.

See page A7

Economics majors surge at University

By Kelly McGaw
Contributing Writer

Approximately 17 of the 147 applicants to the economics major in the Class of 2009 were denied acceptance this year. According to Robert Midkiff, associate dean for academic affairs, the major cap in the economics department has been in place for over six years, but this is the first time that it has been implemented.

Midkiff said that this year the economics department had "more applications than we really could accommodate" forcing the department to find "the most appropriate mix of students who have some talent for economics and also are sincerely motivated to study it."

The economics department has a soft cap of about 100 to 125 students per class year.

Students interested in the economics major must submit an application either in the fall or spring of their sophomore year. The application includes an essay describing what the applicant has found most interesting about his or her economics courses as well as the student's academic progress report.

"[The economics department] is looking at not only overall performance but economic-specific performance," Midkiff said.

The increase in applicants this year was stimulated by the management program imposing a cap, Michael Moohr, associate professor of economics, said.

It is natural for management majors to declare economics as a back up and the department anticipated the bulge, Moohr said.

University enforces cap on popular student major

Conflicting messages regarding the major cap policy have left students and parents butting heads with the economics department. Ian Hollander '09 applied both in the fall and spring of this year and was told that his grades were not competitive enough.

"When I came to this school with the intent of majoring in economics, it was never stated that there was a cap on positions to the economics major," Hollander said.

Hollander is not ready to give up.

"I still plan to reapply in the fall of my junior year. Unless I decide to transfer out of Bucknell, I don't really have any other options," he said.

According to a parent who wished to remain anonymous, recruiters and University administrators told her that in order to circumvent the selective admissions process of the management major, a student could become an economics major. She and her family were never told, "Oh, by the way, you have to apply to the economics major," she said. This mother is concerned that other families may have been similarly duped.

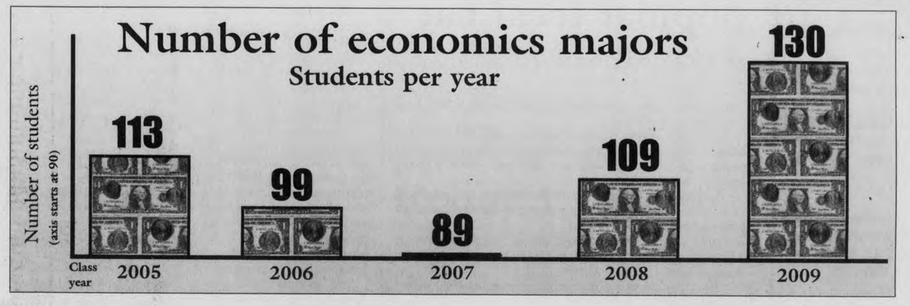
Her son has had to resort to declaring a major he does not have any interest in.

"It is absolutely ridiculous," she said. She and her husband are "paying for an education [they] didn't want to buy for [their] son."

Some students, though, feel the cap is warranted. Kathryn Brownstone, '09, was accepted as an economics major in the fall.

"Economics majors should be able to do well in the basics. If you can't do well in 103 then it might not be the major for you," she said. "If you are going through an application process you need to understand that not everyone will get in."

Moohr said, "Before coming to the University, parents and students should read the catalogue carefully and realize a major in economics or management is selective."



"Economics majors should be able to do well in the basics. If you can't do well in 103 then it might not be the major for you."
—Kathryn Brownstone '09

Former student shoots man in bar

By Michelle Laxer
News Editor

CORBIN

A former University student was arrested at Woodland's Inn and Resort in Wilkes-Barre, Pa. for allegedly shooting another man in the shoulder during Easter weekend. Woodland's is a popular venue for University functions and the location of the Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity's formals tonight and Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity's formals last Saturday night.

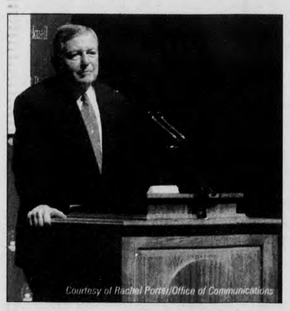
Ian Bradley Corbin, 23, who was a student at the University as recently as fall 2006, was kicked out of the club at approximately 2 a.m. Saturday for fighting in a hallway outside Club Evolution in the resort. As he was escorted out, he said, "I'll be back," according to The Daily Item.

Robert O. Roberts, Jr. was leaving the Woodland's with his friends around the same time Corbin was being escorted from the building. Roberts and his friends were in the parking lot near his car when Corbin approached them and said, "What's up now, man?"

He allegedly proceeded to fire three .9 mm gunshots, one of which hit Roberts in his right shoulder, The Daily Item reported. Roberts then lunged at Corbin in an attempt to knock the gun out of his hands. Corbin continued to fire three more shots before emptying the gun clip. As the two men wrestled on the ground, Corbin began pistol-whipping Roberts. Roberts was able to knock the gun away from Corbin by slamming his hand against the pavement.

See SHOOTING page A2

Ashcroft defends Patriot Act



Courtesy of Rachel Portal/Office of Communications

By Evan Unger
News Editor

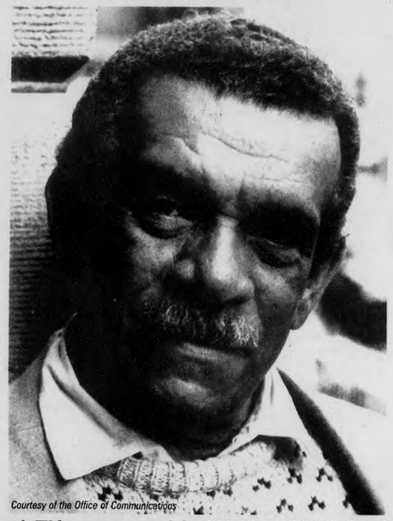
Former U.S. Attorney General John Ashcroft said that one man's freedom is not complete when another man's freedom is restrained, in a speech entitled "Today and the Future of Homeland Security," on Monday at the Weis Center for Performing Arts.

Ashcroft spoke about the policy changes the United States has made since September 11, 2001, including the Patriot Act which he helped author.

"We had to drag the war against terror into the 21st century. We had to get there quickly and it has been controversial to some extent,"

See ASHCROFT page A3

2007 Janet Weis Fellow



Courtesy of the Office of Communications

Derek Walcott was named the 2007 Janet Weis Fellow for Comtemporary Letters. He will receive the award and give a talk at the Weis Center for Performing Arts on Tuesday, Oct. 7 at 7:30 p.m. The poet and playwright received a 1992 Nobel Prize in Literature for his poetry.

INSIDE THIS ISSUE

OPINIONS

The cap on the number of economics majors isn't necessarily a detriment to the University.

A4

A&E

Will Ferrell and Jon "Wait-That's-Napoleon-Dynamite!" Heder star in a pointless, silly and utterly hilarious new movie.

A7

FEATURES

Students Against Multiple Sclerosis is holding a fundraising dance on April 20. Read more about the club and it's mission in Features.

B8

SPORTS

Lauren Litts '07 currently holds the team home run hits record for women's softball. Red more about her achievements in Sports.

B5

Public Safety Log

Wednesday, April 4

ASSIST OTHER AGENCY/POLICE—Bertrand Library: Assist Pennsylvania State Police.

MOTOR VEHICLE ACCIDENT—Trax Lot: Non-reportable accident.

ALARM-FIRE—Bucknell West: Unknown cause.

ALARM-INTRUSION—Biology Building Room 12: Employee activated.

ALARM-FIRE—Bucknell West: Caused by cooking.

DRUG LAW VIOLATION—Larison Hall: Student disciplinary referral.

Thursday, April 5

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Coleman Hall: Two broken windows.

ALARM-INTRUSION—West Fields Concessions Building: Employee activated.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Roberts Hall: Damage to secured entry door.

EMPLOYEE TERMINATION—Langone Center: Employee termination.

ALARM-ADMINISTRATIVE—Demosthenean Hall: Unknown cause.

ALARM-FIRE—Malesardi Hall: Caused by cooking.

SUSPICIOUS VEHICLE—South 6th Street: Gone on arrival.

HARASSMENT/PHONE—Seventh Street House: Student receiving phone calls of a harassing nature.

Friday, April 6

ALARM-FIRE—Bucknell West: Unknown cause.

SUSPICIOUS PERSON—Seventh Street House: Gone on arrival.

ALARM-FIRE—Bucknell West: Caused by a dirty detector.

ASSIST OTHER AGENCY/POLICE—South 6th Street: Lewisburg Police Department investigation.

ALARM-FIRE—Bucknell West: Caused by cooking.

Saturday, April 7

ALARM-INTRUSION—Langone Center Gallery: Accidental activation.

ALARM-INTRUSION—Computer Center Room 106: Unknown cause.

WELFARE CHECK—South Seventh Street: Student contacted.

Sunday, April 8

LIQUOR LAW—Route 15 Tunnel: Disciplinary referral.

Tuesday, April 10

HARASSMENT BY COMMUNICATIONS—McDonnell Hall: Harassing call and Internet message received.

ALARM-INTRUSION—Bertrand Library: Caused by employee.

SUSPICIOUS PERSON—McDonnell Hall: Gone on arrival.

Life is calling.
How far will you go?

Peace Corps will be on campus April 18.
Come learn more and meet a recruiter and Peace Corps former volunteer.

Peace Corps Info Session
Wednesday, April 18th
301 Langone Center
5:30-6:30pm

Peace Corps volunteers work in 73 countries around the world. To date, 226 Bucknell graduates have served in the Peace Corps.
www.peacecorps.gov

Violence erupts at popular local bar

SHOOTING From page A1

One of Roberts's companions, Stephen Hurst, was able to help detain Corbin until security arrived.

Corbin, of Lewisburg, is being charged with aggravated assault, two counts of simple assault, recklessly endangering another person and possession of an unlicensed firearm. He is being held at Luzerne County Prison on $200,000 bail.

According to The Citizen's Voice (Wilkes-Barre), it is not uncommon for the police of the Plains Township to respond to calls from Woodland's every weekend.

"We're up there pretty much every weekend," Chief James O'Malley told The Citizen's Voice. It was estimated that the police annually respond to approximately 100 calls to the club.

The Citizen's Voice also reported that another University student, Esteban Gamboa '08, was arrested for elbowing township officer, Jason Ziolkowski, after he was removed from the club. The incident happened less than 24 hours after Saturday morning's shooting.

Most hotels recommend that families make reservations for Commencement Weekend up to four years in advance.

Another night on campus for seniors

By Sophia Leong
Contributing Writer

University President Brian C. Mitchell and the senior staff recently approved a proposal from the 2007 class officers to start a trial program allowing graduating seniors and their families to stay in their dormitory residences throughout Commencement Weekend.

For years, the housing policy has only allowed seniors and their families to stay on campus the Friday and Saturday night of Commencement Weekend. The trial program would allow families to stay through Sunday night and check out by 10 a.m. Monday.

The service will be free for graduating seniors. Families with reservations for Friday or Saturday night must pay an additional charge of $30 for a room for Sunday night. A solitary Sunday night reservation is $45 for a single room and $64 for a double.

Commencement Weekend is one of the busiest times of the year for hotel accommodations in the Lewisburg area. Most hotels recommend that families make reservations up to four years in advance. Many families end up traveling 45-60 minutes to and from lodging outside of Lewisburg due to overbooking.

The program would allow parents to solve last-minute traveling crunches. Yet many wonder whether or not parents would want to stay in a residence hall longer than necessary.

"I think that families would stay at the Bucknell dorms because they would be conveniently on campus and be able to get involved with the different graduation activities and enjoy Lewisburg for the last time before their child graduates," Amy Anisgarten '09 said. "I definitely think it would be a good program to keep for future graduations."

Another student echoed a similar response.

"I'm probably not going to end up taking advantage of it because I live pretty close to Bucknell," Anne Marie Basanese '07 said. "But I think that a lot of students that live farther, such as the West Coast, will find it very convenient."

Chief Communications Officer Pete Mackey foresees success for the program as well.

"We do expect it to be popular. We are confident that we will be able to accommodate all requests made by the deadline," Mackey said.

The Office of Housing and Residential Life will use feedback and suggestions from this year's participating students and families to determine if the program should remain in effect for future years.

All students and families interested in this trial program should register through myBucknell's housing and residential life channel by May 4.

MARTHA MITCHELL, STUDENT, CITIZEN, AND SECOND LIEUTENANT, U.S. ARMY.

STUDENT CITIZEN OFFICER

Graduate Loan-Free

The Army Health Professions Scholarship (HPSP), pays for Medical or Dental School. A few of the Many benefits are: 100% full Tuition, Over $1300.00 per month Stipend, and reimbursement for cost of required books and equipment. If you're in or about to enter a professional school find out how the Army HPSP can help you achieve your career goals.

Contact SFC James E. Wright at 877-230-2501 or email james.wright@usarec.army.mil

©2006. Paid for by the United States Army. All rights reserved.
*Benefits based on qualifications. Information subject to change. See your local U.S. Army Health Care Recruiter for the latest information.

U.S.ARMY

Avoid senior moments.

Last call for your Apple Student Discount before graduation.

If you're a senior, you'll be history in a matter of weeks. Right along with your Apple Student Discount.

So make plans now to visit your Authorized Campus Store and take advantage of these great Apple savings one last time. Save on the new smarter, faster, do-everything MacBook and MacBook Pro. Save on the new faster, bigger, brighter iMacs. And save on Apple software, peripherals and accessories, too.

It's last call, so stop by today. We're just moments away.

Authorized Campus Store

the BookStore AT BUCKNELL

Bucknell University Bookstore
Langone Center
Lewisburg, PA 17837

570.577.1128
http://www.bucknellbookstore.com/

Apple, the Apple logo, iLife, iMac, Mac and MacBook are trademarks of Apple, Inc., registered in the U.S. and other countries.

Parrot speaks about new book, violence against women

By Sara Roth
Contributing Writer

Andrea Parrot of Cornell University spoke about the global brutalization of women on Wednesday night in the Gallery Theatre. She has recently co-authored a book entitled "Forsaken Females: The Global Brutilization of Women" with Nina Cummings.

Parrot's lecture began with a PowerPoint, which opened with a Dolce and Gabbana ad that was featured in last month's "Vanity Fair." This ad showed four men watching another man lying on top of a woman. All of their facial expressions were serious, and the woman is looking away from the men. The headline of the slide was "Gang Rape, Violence Against Women, or Art?"

This ad was banned in Spain, and raised controversy in many other countries. Parrot asked, "Is this an ad for Dolce and Gabbana products, is it normalizing violence against women, or is it gang rape?"

Parrot defined violence in her lecture as the World Health Organization defines violence: "The intentional use of physical force or power, threatened or actual, against oneself, another person, or against a group or community, that either results in or has a high likelihood of resulting in injury, death, psychological harm, maldevelopment or deprivation." Parrot used this definition in her book as well as her speech because "what some people might define as violence, others might see as just cultural norms," she said. Breast augmentation or the Chinese practice of "foot binding," which was practiced until the 1950s, represent recent examples of this type of violence.

Parrot spoke about how she and Cummings decided to begin their book using common cultural phrases that normalize violence against women. One such phrase is common in Serbia: "Beat a woman and a horse every three days."

Another such expression commonly used in the United States is "The Rule of Thumb." This phrase refers to historical the English law, which said that a man is permitted to beat his wife if the instrument he uses is thinner than the width of his thumb.

"One-third of women have been beaten, coerced into sex, or abused in some way," Parrot said. She highlighted three general areas where women are vulnerable to violence—the family, the community and the state.

She then categorized violence against women by defining how the acts were justified. One of the categories was "Violence to Preserve Virginity," which includes female genital mutilation, honor killings, and public beatings or lashings. According to Parrot, female genital mutilation is especially popular in Africa but is less likely to occur where women are in control of the government.

The World Health Organization estimates between 100 to 140 million women have undergone female genital mutilation worldwide, and two million women each year are at risk for mutilation. 15 percent die as a direct result of the mutilation. Although female genital mutilation happens in 28 African countries, it also occurs in the Arab Peninsula, the Persian Gulf, Europe, Australia, New Zealand, Canada, and the United States.

Other categories in which violence against women occurs were defined by Parrot as "Violence to Improve Status, Male Entitlement, Political and Economic Reasons, and Violence in the name of Religion, Culture, and Tradition."

"Her wide range of knowledge really opened my eyes to the worldwide horror of the problems that still exist for women and equal rights," Tanya Roth '09 said. "If more people just understood the damage still being done then maybe things would change sooner."

Courtesy of Cornell University

Andrea Parrot, a professor of human ecology at Cornell University, spoke at the University Wednesday, promoting her new book, "Forsaken Females: The Global Brutalization of Women."

Around 50 people attended the lecture, two of whom were male.

"You're not finding the guys coming out [to events like this] and educating themselves," Sheridan Fennant '07 said.

"Until men understand the importance of [educating people against the violence of women], this [violence] will not stop happening," Parrot said.

Community reacts to library arrest

By Bronwen Durocher
Contributing Writer

Students and members of the campus have begun to react to the arrest of Jack Edgar Harclerode, former biology professor, who was taken into custody in the Ellen Clarke Bertrand Library last Wednesday.

Harclerode, who lived in Lewisburg and worked in the University biology department for 32 years, is accused of molesting a 10-year-old boy from Lancaster, Pa. and was arrested by one state officer at 9:50 a.m. on Wednesday. He is charged with corruption of a minor and indecent assault.

Members of the community are concerned.

"I think it's disturbing that someone affiliated with the University for 32 years could have done this," Suzy Tsien '09 said.

Tsien heard the news of the incident through the report in The Bucknellian.

"What's most upsetting is that someone who students looked up to and admired and even confided in could have done something so disturbing. He must have been an advisor as well, which is even more shocking. Who knows what else he could have done that the police don't know about," Tsien said.

The University is distancing itself from the incident.

"As this arrest was under the authority of the state police, we would ask that you contact them for comment about this ongoing investigation. There is little we are able to say except the above," said Chief Communications Officer Pete Mackey.

One student surreptitiously witnessed the arrest.

"I was sitting at the computer on the other side of the cubicle from him doing work. I heard one of the officers say, 'He's back here.' They asked [Harclerode] to get up. [Harrclerode] said he knew why they were there. They proceeded to frisk him and escort him quietly out of the library. Everyone who witnessed it looked at each other and thought, 'Did an old man really just get frisked and escorted out of the library?' He certainly didn't look like a pedophile, although I'm sure they never do." Meghan Brown '08 said.

Professor Mitchell Chernin, chair of the biology department, did not respond to e-mails, though the secretary for the biology department mentioned that questions should be directed to Pete Mackey.

Professor Warren Abrahamson worked alongside Harclerode in the department before Harclerode retired in 1997.

"I did know Professor Harclerode, but I would rather not comment," Abrahasam said.

Though Public Safety was involved in the arrest, Jason Friedberg, chief of Public Safety, declined to comment further on the investigation.

"Since his arrest here last week, our department has had no involvement in anything relating to this case, so I will not be any help to you," Friedberg said.

Some students were not surprised that the university was unwilling to comment further on the issue.

"The University is probably scared to look bad. It's a pretty big deal to have a professor affiliated with the school who was a child molester," Tsien said.

An English professor was willing to discuss the implications of Harclerode's arrest.

"I think the issue with our society is that we have no outlet for our emotion on this kind of issue. We, as a community, have rituals for weddings and funerals, but not for a professor who gets arrested for molesting a 10-year-old boy. As a parent, I would have no sympathy for the perpetrator, but as a community we must have empathy," Professor Harold Schweizer said.

Students said they do still feel they can trust their professors.

"Certainly we assume that professors are good people. They are, after all, in charge of our education and supposed to be the influences that shape us for, if not our lives entirely, our future careers," Brown said. "I will continue to assume that my professors are good people and give them the benefit of the doubt as I hope they do for me … This incident will not make me suspicious or untrusting of them."

News Briefs

University receives funding for technological opportunities

The Greater Susquehanna Keystone Innovation Zone (KIZ) and the collaboration between Geisinger Health System and local universities, including our own, received $150,000 from The Ben Franklin Technology Development Authority last week. According to The Daily item, the additional funding "will result in continued investment in technology companies and new jobs." The other KIZ partners are Susquehanna and Bloomsburg Universities. Some of the funds will go to the Technology Work Experience Internship Program where selected student interns from each school will have a different focus in the technology industry. The University has a biotechnology focus with a group of engineering students trying to develop a "patent-ready prototype for a new emergency medication dispensing device." Some of the additional funding will also help the KIZ expand its scope to two more companies and create more "high-technology" job opportunities for college graduates.

Professor aids PennDOT with supermarket decision

University civil and environmental engineering professor Richard McGinnis may be one of the reasons why the Pennsylvania Department of Transportation (PennDOT) cancelled the highway occupancy permit (HOP) for a proposed supermarket along Route 15. According to The Standard Journal, McGinnis sent expert analysis and information to PennDOT on numerous occasions to warn them of the dangers of the proposed supermarket entrance even though he was not a hired consultant. Last week, PennDOT sent a letter that issued the cancellation of the HOP.

"Based on safety reasons associated with the grade, traffic volumes and expected crash frequency, the department [PennDOT] will not permit the installation of a new signalized drive at this location," the letter said. Originally, an HOP was issued in 2004.

Public Safety recognized nationally

The week of April 8-14 was recognized as National Public-Safety Telecommunications Week. "The Department of Public Safety encourages the Bucknell Community to join them in honoring their Communications Officers who work with the Public Safety Officers to maintain a safe campus," a press release said. There are six certified communication officers and they provide service 24 hours a day throughout the year. Between the six officers, there are 60 hours of dispatching experience and it is estimated that they answer over 28,000 calls a year.

The Association of Public-Safety Communications Officials (APCO) introduced to Congress in 1991 the idea that the second full week of April be set aside annually to recognize the people who assist citizens in everyday emergencies. Students are encouraged to schedule "sit-alongs" with communications officers to gain a better understanding of their job.

Charges dropped in Duke lacrosse scandal

According to Newsvine.com, all of the charges against three former Duke lacrosse players were dropped on Wednesday. North Carolina Attorney General Roy Cooper decided to drop the charges because he believed there were "significant inconsistencies" between their evidence and the various witness accounts. "He said the charges resulted from a 'tragic rush to accuse and a failure to verify serious allegations,'" reported Newsvine.com. Last spring, David Evans, Reade Seligmann and Collin Finnerty were accused of rape, kidnapping and sexual offense of a stripper who was hired to perform at an off-campus team party. She told the police she was assaulted in the bathroom. The rape charges were dropped in December 2006. Cooper released a statement saying, "this case shows the enormous consequences of over-reaching by a prosecutor."

Former U.S. attorney general defines liberty said Ashcroft. "One of the first things we did was go to work on a legislation package that had a robust capacity to fight terror that we had previously used to fight the war against drugs."

ASHCROFT From page A1

He described how his life has changed since the terrorist attacks and described the incident as "a signal, a monumental galvanic circumstance pivotal point in my existence and changed the mission of the Department of Justice."

"The world will never be the same," Ashcroft said.

Ashcroft also discussed his support for strong, preemptive measures in fighting the war on terror.

"If your job in court is to adjudicate what happened, to prove what happened, so you can allocate responsibly and you can punish, that is retrospective. You recreate the past in the courtroom … [in] order to keep something from happening in the future, you can't focus on the past you have to focus on the future," Ashcroft said.

He spoke about the deliverability of lethality in modern times. At the birth of the United States, Ashcroft said, the most dangerous substance a person could walk into a room with was a bag of black powder. In today's world, a person could put a nuclear weapon in something the size of a trunk and vaporize an entire city.

"People want to be more than private; I think they want to be almost anonymous."

—John Ashcroft,
former U.S. attorney general

Ashcroft compared the polices of Bush's administration to others in the past, including Clinton's and Franklin Delano Roosevelt's.

"This administration has been more restrained and more respectful regarding civil liberties of individuals in times of serious threats to the United States than any previous war-time administration and many non-war-time administrations."

Ashcroft addressed America's dilemma of trading anonymity with security.

"We have to prevent things that are totally unacceptable. We cannot let them happen again and that requires a lot of information. The other aspiration of the American culture is that we want a lot of privacy. People want to be more than private; I think they want to be almost anonymous," Ashcroft said.

He continued to discuss the relationship between liberty and security. He said that liberty and security are not equal values that can be balanced.

"I merely believe that liberty is the value, that freedom is the value, and liberty is the means to secure freedom. The only reason to have security is to elevate liberty," Ashcroft said. "It is not a value in and of itself, but a means."

To Ashcroft, liberty is what defines the United States.

"We have made laws that enhance liberty. Liberty is the value, the characteristic that makes this place special," Ashcroft said.

The former Attorney General closed his speech by commenting on the future before taking questions.

"The defense of liberty, the defense of freedom, the defense of opportunity has become the primary task ahead of us. In the decades ahead, as we face threats from not just nation states, but individuals and institutions, our effort to make sure those freedoms are secure and that liberty is dependent are at the very core of our opportunity to capitalize on a future that must be bright," Ashcroft said.

Amanda Forsburg '07, enjoyed the speech.

"I thought he had a lot of good things to say and that he gave a strong message about balancing freedom and security for the successful future of America," Foresburg said.

Some students found Ashcroft to be defensive while answering questions.

"I got the impression that he was paranoid as a person but everything was well conducted. It is sweet to get a big-time name here. I am hard-core liberal but I respect everything people did to get him here," Chris Moreau '08 said.

Holly Prehn, the mother of an accepted student, was pleasantly surprised by Ashcroft.

"He was a much better speaker than I expected and I think he gave good examples to make his points. I thought it was great that he seemed relaxed and discussed student questions," Prehn said.

The lecture was sponsored by the Bucknell University Conservatives Club, Young America's Foundation, Bucknell Student Government, Residential Hall Association, Inter Fraternity Counsel, Office of the President, Office of the Provost, Office of the Dean of Students, department of political science, department of sociology and anthropology and the department of management.

The Bucknellian
Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue
Volume 139, Number 10
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu
http://www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Editor-in-Chief
Andrew Larson '08

Associate Editor of Content
Matthew Saylor '08

Associate Editor of Layout
Lily Beauvilliers '09

Business Manager
Jared Napolitano '08

Senior Editor
Catie Heverling '07

News Editors
Evan Unger '09
Julia Fuchs '09
Michelle Laxer '09

Opinions Editors
Michael Dippery '08
Hallie Stebbins '08

Sports Editors
Barbara Perlman '09
Brian Mulligan '08
Shannon Pitsch '09

Features Editors
Nilanjana Saha '09
Brianna DelValle '10

Arts & Entertainment Editors
Janna Shapiro '08
Genna Jerrard '10

Photography Editors
Ryan Winn '08
Ellyn Ercolano '09

Chief Copy Editor
Molly Clay (grad)

Asst. Chief Copy Editor
Anna Juan '08

Advertising Managers
Meredith Reighard '07
Katie Casteel '08
Elaine Teng '09

Office Manager
Kate Wood '07

Circulation Manager
Adam Kahler '07

Subscriptions Manager
John Ostrow '09

Cartoonist
Juliana Su '09

Adviser
James F. Lee

Op-Ed Policy

The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editor-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 600 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

Publishing Information

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

Subscription Information

Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Bucknell University, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print office.

Advertising Policy

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements it deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577-1085. Copyright © 2007 The Bucknellian

The Bucknellian EDITORIAL

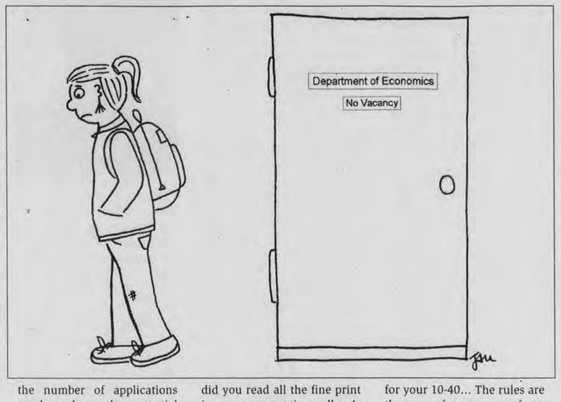
Economics cap woes are inflated

As economics becomes an increasingly popular major at the University, the department has been forced to activate a previously dormant policy: a cap on the number of majors per class year.

In the Class of 2009, 147 students applied for the economics major and 17 were rejected. Some of the students who were rejected and their parents are acting as if this is an affront or an inequity.

One parent of a student who was rejected from the major wrote an anonymous letter to The Bucknellian saying, "The University can propagandize all it wants about its strategic plan to become the preeminent liberal arts university, and solicit capital donations from alumni and parents, but until it upholds its admissions promises, it can't expect to achieve much in the way of either."

But by implementing the economics cap, the University is merely enforcing its own rule. The course catalog clearly spells out the economics department's right to cull its applicant pool based on students' qualifications. "When the number of applications reaches above the potential threshold of 100, criteria for acceptance to the program will emphasize academic achievement," the document states.



Some students and parents are clamoring that the University should do a better job of publicizing its policy on caps. "As a high school student applying to college, did you read all the fine print in your prospective college's course catalog?" the letter from the parent said. But not knowing the rules isn't an excuse for ignoring them. It doesn't matter in what font or on what page a rule is printed, its very existence makes it enforceable. Try telling the IRS you understated your taxes by $2,000 because you didn't read the instructions for your 10-40... The rules are the same for everyone for a reason.

Not only is the economics cap enforceable, it's also logical. The University needs to maintain reasonable class sizes, and it needs to ensure that there will be enough spots open in upper-level courses so that majors can fulfill their requirements. What if economics classes doubled in size? That wouldn't benefit anyone.

The solution isn't to immediately hire more economics professors, as some students and parents have suggested. Students' interest in certain majors, like the economy, is cyclical. Economics has been especially popular the last two years, but how do we know that trend will continue? Also, the University's rigorous application process for faculty doesn't exactly lend itself to cursory hiring decisions. Recently, the English department reviewed more than 300 applications for two positions.

Perhaps most noteworthy is that almost 90 percent of the sophomore students who applied to the economics major were accepted, with decisions being made largely based on students' academic achievement in previous economics classes. Students should pursue majors in fields where they excel. And let's face it: if you're in the 10th percentile of all economics majors, maybe economics isn't the right major for you. Consider it the University's gentle hint.

Letters to the Editor

Attempts to broaden horizons beneficial

To the Editor:

I am writing in response to the article written by Ryan Winn ("Classes can broaden perspectives," April 6). I enjoyed his ideas and his suggestion that we study and appreciate foreign cultures and their languages. Other countries may lack certain things that we have, but if we spend more time investigating their lifestyles, it can only have a positive effect on our own.

After recently spending two months teaching tennis and studying Spanish at the University of Granada, I returned home with a better understanding of the world and its offerings. The best part of my visit was that I had the opportunity to be with the students and staff of Bucknell en España. On one of our field trips, as we were leaving a restaurant, I overheard the owner comment to a customer, "That's the nicest group of students we've ever had visit us."

I'll bet Granada will remember the University's 26 representatives. I know I always will.

Sincerely,

Bob Hammerlee, USPTA
Recreation Services - Tennis

Swampy's Corner

Dietary demands of Passover an inconvenience

By Zak Marsh
Contributing Writer

Being a Jew here is rarely what I would call "challenging." There is an active Hillel, a relatively supportive administration and a small but noticeable Jewish community at the University. The only time I experienced difficulty practicing my religion here was last week during the holiday of Passover.

Passover commemorates the exodus of the Israelites from Egypt several thousand years ago. According to the Passover story, the Israelites were slaves to the oppressive Egyptians for several generations. The Israelites were then set free after a display of the superior divinity of the Hebrew God over the Egyptian gods. The Israelites then went off into the desert of the Sinai Peninsula toward the Promised Land, Canaan (now a region including Israel and the surrounding area).

Part of observing the eight-day holiday of Passover includes a provision prohibiting eating leavened bread, which is any bread-type food made from grains (wheat, oats, barley, rye or spelt) except the hard flatbread called matzah, a dietary symbol of the holiday.

This brings me to why keeping kosher for Passover is so difficult here. I am also a lacto-ovo-pesco-vegetarian, a fancy way of saying I do not eat meat except fish, and I allow animal products like dairy and eggs in my diet. Add that to the Passover dietary restrictions and you can start to see why I had a rough week for eating.

Several times I went to the Passover meals provided by Hillel for students observing the holiday. While these were nice occasions to sit and complain with other Jews about not eating bread, many of the meals I attended there involved meat as a main dish, which, suffice it to say, did not make the cut.

I was able to cut out breakfast entirely, so that made one less meal to figure out. Still, as a first-year student at the University, I prefer to eat at the Bostwick Cafeteria using my beloved unlimited meal plan. Most of the non-bread-oriented food stations there, like the egg corner and Mongo Bongo, are open only at certain times of the day. Conversely, most stations open around the clock are off-limits to me: the pizza/pasta corner, the deli, the fried food section and the bread station at the back. I had to ignore the sinister, delectable dessert table completely for eight days, lest the temptation of a brownie or slice of pie be too great.

Of course, I cannot place the blame squarely on the University or even on Parkhurst Dining Services. In general, keeping kosher for Passover is difficult because you never really realize how much of what you eat is bread-related until it is all off-limits. Not just bread, pizza, bagels, rolls and other expected things, but most cookies, oatmeal, pie, tortillas, breaded fish, and pasta; all of these are on the Passover contraband list, and most are typical cafeteria foods that I enjoy.

I should note that the dining staff was accommodating and helpful, whether it was putting out more matzah or making me a matzah pizza. I was pleased that Hillel even offered a week of kosher for Passover meals. One thing is certain—after craving it intensely during a week of deprivation, the cafeteria pizza has never tasted so good.

"Freedom of the press,
if it means anything at all,
means the freedom to criticize and oppose."

- Eric Arthur Blair

Write for Ops.
E-mail
mdippery@

Looking out through the eyes of an oboist

By Michael Dippery
Opinions Editor

Back in my high school days, I played oboe in my school's symphonic band. I like to tell people I was first chair oboe; what I generally neglect to mention is that I was second part first chair. We only had two oboists, so that put me on the bottom of the totem pole.

Playing the oboe is a great thrill, though not necessarily because the instrument is inherently amazing. Rather, many parts for the oboe are rip-roaring, adrenaline-pumping thrill rides. This is no exaggeration. Playing the oboe really keeps you on the edge of your seat.

Maybe it was just my band director's selections, but most of our oboe parts featured long periods where we essentially played nothing, following by brief bursts of frantic activity: sweeping solos, several measures of sixteenth-note runs and so forth. The tension of playing these parts harmoniously built throughout the piece. I was not a terribly good oboist (hence the "second part" labeling on my sheet music), so I was especially nerve-wracked, waiting silently until I had to play some part perfectly.

I remember one piece of music in particular, a piece from "The Nutcracker." We had 46 measures of rest; then we played a single eighth note, an F♯. Then we had about 30 measures of rest; then we played some crazy run or solo or something like that. Climactic? Yes indeed.

My playing was not aided by the fact that our band director seated the oboes directly in front of the trumpets. For those of you who may not have noticed, trumpets are loud, beastly instruments. They serve as little more than a distraction for classy, elegant instruments like the oboe. They are so boisterous that at times I could not even hear my own instrument over the roar of the trumpets.

It occurs to me that life is very similar to playing the oboe. A lot of times, you just cruise along without much to do. Sometimes you even have nothing to do. Then, suddenly, bam! You get hit with a stream of sixteenth notes. You realize you have two tests on the same day your engineering project is due, but you do not really have time to study because you have a pesky paper due the day before all that.

Just as with the oboe, I often wish that life came at me a bit slower, in smaller degrees; maybe a few measures of playing and a few measures of rest, rather than having all the exciting parts at the same time. Sure, it is nice to live life on the edge now and then, but who can handle such a gripping level of tension at peak times?

Now imagine for a second what life would be like if it were akin to a typical rock song. A bit too plain-Jane, maybe, but consider: life would have a standard, regular rhythm and would be utterly predictable, yet it would have amazing peaks of tension, like a guitar solo shredding through the air.

Then again, judging by the typical rock music fare of today's Billboard charts, maybe that would be a bit too boring and mundane.

At any rate, the bottom line is this: those bass instrumentalists do not know how easy they have it, sitting back and chugging out regular notes while still having the fun of watching chaos unfold before them, somehow coalescing into a beautiful symphony.

Of course, I am sure they wish they were in the high woodwinds section from time to time, too.

Campus lacks voice regarding University issues

By Matthew Saylor
Associate Editor of Content

There is no shortage of opinions on college campuses. Students and faculty members across America express themselves every day in classrooms, at forums, in cafeterias and every other nook and cranny that make up the locations of academia.

I believe the University comprises a population similar to most other universities. And I know there is no shortage of opinions here. So you can only imagine my surprise when the opinions editors told me that they will have no articles for this week's section other than what they can whip up themselves.

I am not surprised. It has been an ongoing problem to fill the two-page opinions section, and every week I pray we get some letters to the editor so we can at least fill the left-hand page.

I won't lie—many of the articles in past opinions sections have not said much about anything. Sometimes an article reads like a news piece, other times it is about a topic that no one cares about and, if the reader is really unlucky, the article may encompass both of those traits. Is there no one with an opinion on some of the more important issues on campus who is willing to share it?

Students have any number of things to complain about, and Lord knows we all spend a lot of time complaining. Does no one have an opinion about different University policies? Does no one want to say anything about housing or course selection? Is silence becoming the new way to make your voice heard?

A few weeks ago, University department heads received an e-mail from The Bucknellian giving them and the faculty members in their departments the opportunity to write for the opinions section. We know that many of our professors write letters and articles for various publications, and it would be fantastic to have them share their expertise with our readers. Students really enjoy when their professors make their opinions known, and having faculty members contribute to this part of the newspaper would be a great way to have faculty and students working on something together.

> "Does no one have an opinion about different University policies? Does no one want to say anything about housing or course selection? Is silence becoming the new way to make your voice heard?"

Only one professor wrote back to announce plans to distribute the e-mail within her department, and not one faculty member has expressed an interest in writing. Professors certainly have no obligation to write for us, but I am surprised that none of them has pursued this opportunity. Perhaps some faculty view writing for The Bucknellian as below their level of qualifications. I hope that is not the case.

As this semester winds down, The Bucknellian staff is in the process of determining what its needs are for next semester and how to improve the paper that its members take so much pride in producing. The biggest issue we have to deal with is the need for writers. There are too many weeks during which it is a struggle to produce the amount of content we want due to this problem. The problem with the opinions section is the most severe case of missing writers, but finding writers who will consistently produce work is also a problem in sections like news and arts & entertainment.

Different methods have been pursued to increase the level of participation of existing writers, as well as to bring in more writers. Some have worked, some have not, but everything we have come up with has been a temporary fix at best.

I do not know what the next step to take is, but I hope someone out there at least has an opinion on it.

Comment on this story! E-mail letters to bucknellian@bucknell.edu

Currently Untitled By Juliana Su

Sorry, you have zero new messages.
Sorry, you have zero new messages.
Sorry, you have zero new messages.
You STILL have zero new messages. Get back to work!

Attention!

Clubs, Organizations, Academic Departments, Fraternities and Sororities, Student Entrepreneurs:

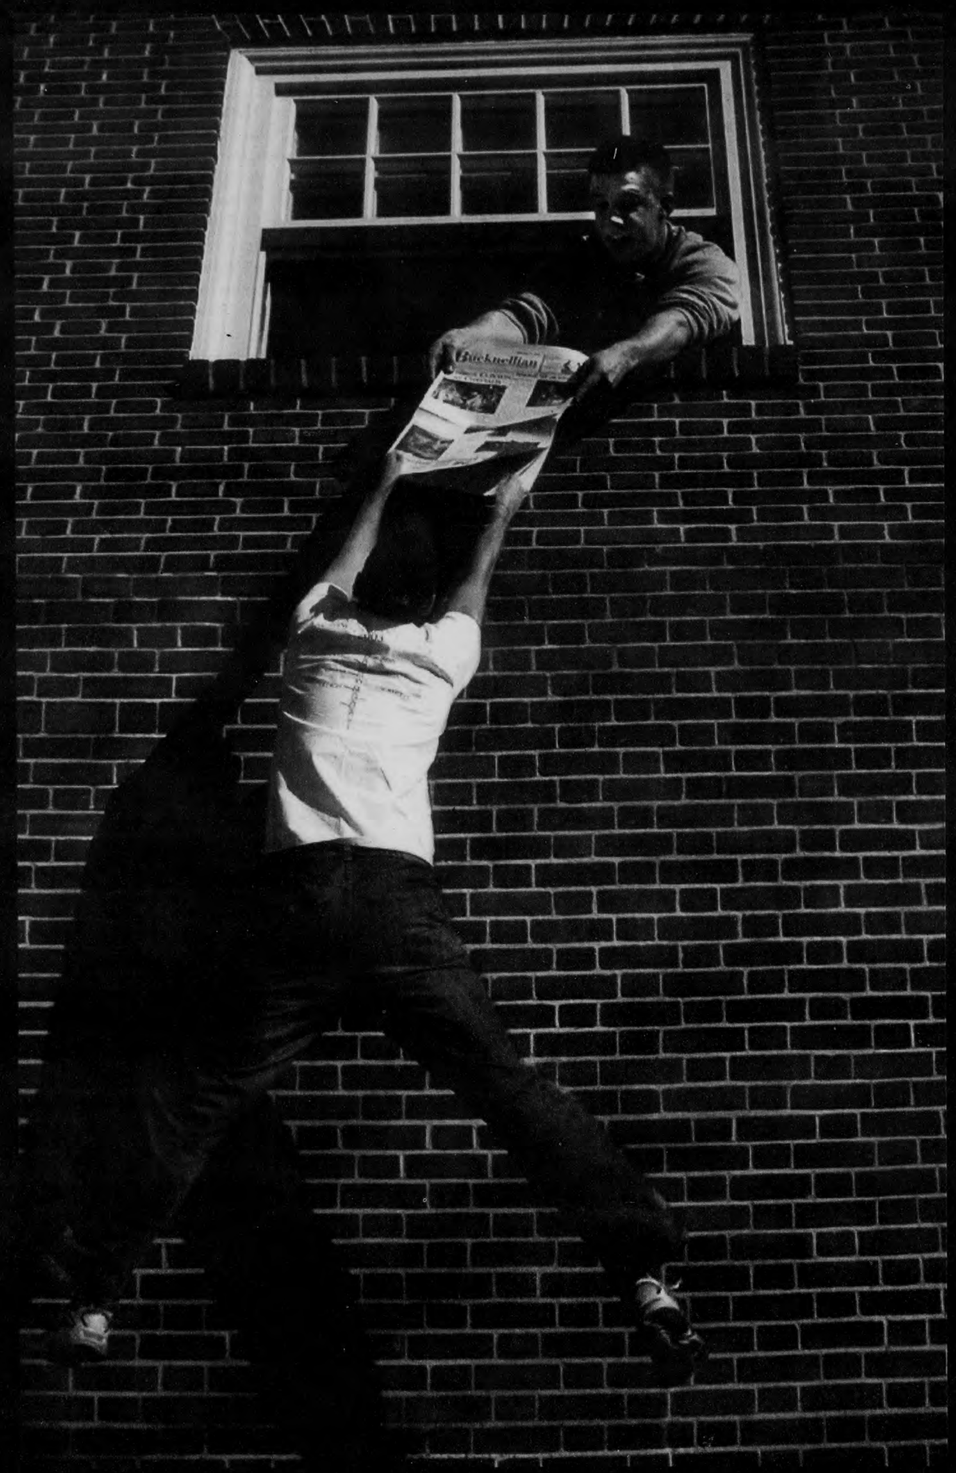
Greek Organizations: Looking to promote your upcoming philanthropy event?
Clubs: Trying to publicize new developments or recently received commendations?
Organizations: Hoping to increase membership via a new recruiting medium?
Student Entrepreneurs: Seeking a simple way to stimulate your business?

The Bucknellian currently circulates almost 6,000 copies per week, disseminated to on-campus hubs, off-campus businesses, and over 1,000 subscribing households nationwide. Few other platforms have the capability and level of efficiency that advertising your message in The Bucknellian provides.

With a new, low rate of only $3.50 per column-inch, it is now cheaper to reserve ad space in the recently Columbia Scholastic Press Association Gold Medal Recipient's weekly publication.

In order to place an ad, contact The Bucknellian Advertising Department by calling 570-577-1085 or e-mailing bucknellianads@bucknell.edu and an advertising manager will be happy to assist you.

THE Bucknellian



BECAUSE IT IS JUST THAT STRONG

'URINETOWN' cast lights up the stage

By Mandy Hart
Writer

It only happens once a decade. Those of us privileged enough to be here for the latest theater and dance department's Broadway-style musical number will not want to miss this unique choice. If you're in town, you should not pass up the opportunity to see "Urinetown."

"It's funny. It's ridiculous. It's emotional. It's enlightening. It makes you think. This musical is one of the few satires I've encountered that doesn't feel like a waste of time. The jokes range from slapstick, to subtle sarcasm, to innuendo. [...] There is something in the show for everyone to enjoy," actress Margaret Graham '09 said.

> "It's funny. It's ridiculous. It's emotional. It's enlightening. ... There is something in the show for everyone to enjoy."
> — Margaret Graham, '09

The show, which focuses on the environmental and economic crisis of a town which charges to urinate, contains satirical humor that is complemented by the song-and-dance routine required of the musical. "Urine Good Company" CEO Caldwell Cladwell, played by Alan Johnson-McNutt '08, ingeniously charges money for use of the toilet facilities, which also discourages water consumption and causes economic stimulation. Only the unlikely love between Cladwell's daughter and a poor toilet custodian can save this town from the ultimate corruption. Unforeseen plot turns and unexpected endings make this musical as exciting as it is hilarious.

This particular selection leaves room for many satirical nods to more classic Broadway musicals, with both lyrical and choreographic references—a perfect way for the department to include as much material from the classic high school productions that we know and love.

"The musical is really one big 'send-up' of musicals in general, so it's appealing to those who are familiar with musical theatre. But it is also a great production because it is just comedic in general, so I think a variety of people will find it entertaining," said Mallory Sweeney '07, who plays Mrs. Pennywise. For example, a team of tap-dancing cops represent the long arm of the law and regulates the town.

The appeal of "Urinetown" is magnified by its outstanding cast. Jon Ginn '07 stars as Bobby Strong, with female lead Julia Frieri '10 as Hope Cladwell.

This production marks the last show that the Class of 2007 will participate in. Most of these actors and dancers have participated in 10 or more University-sponsored productions, and their experience and leadership is evident in the show. Narrative roles from Andy Nogasky '07 and Shira Gasarch '07, who play Officer Lockstock and Officer Barrel, respectively, show undeniable talent and unparalleled energy. Even supporting roles from Peter Kelly '07 (Old Man Strong/Billy Boy Bill) and Chris North '07 (Tiny Tom) make this class a standout.

"This production means a lot to the seniors involved in it. It's our last go at Bucknell theatre after a long and fairly impressive four-year go at it. I'm very proud to have been a part of all of it. ... We're going out with a bang," Nogasky said.

Their involvement alone makes this production a must-see. The play opens tonight in the Harvey Powers Theater located in Coleman Hall. The show continues with 8 p.m. performances every night until the final performance on April 16. Tickets are $6 for students if purchached ahead of time, and $8 for senior citizens and $10 for everyone else at the door. They are available at the box office or can be purchased at the door one hour prior to the show.

To sum it up: you gotta go!

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Jon Ginn '07 and Julia Frieri '10 lead the outstanding "Urinetown" cast as Bobby Strong and Hope Cladwell. As a senior theater major, this production will be Ginn's, as well as many of his senior castmates', last show at the University.

Meg's mix: live and acoustic songs

By Megan McWhinney
Writer

Hi, my name is Megan and I'm an acoust-aholic (cue: "Hiiii Megannnn"). I'm also a sucker for covers and live recordings. I've seen what can be done in recording studios with digital effects, and I'm too much of a cynic to trust anything without some modicum of proof.

I believe my love of all things acoustic, live and covered stems from my obsession and addiction to creativity. Taking a song that is a classic, giving it a new spin and making it your own without insulting the original is a difficult task indeed. Attending a great live show is one of the best experiences I can imagine. Being completely in tune with 10,000 people is a pretty incredible and exceedingly rare occurrence. I love to hear someone who is a true master of guitar just go nuts on an electric, but there is something so intimate and personal about an acoustic performance. No gimmicks, no masking anything. It sounds like it's just the musician enjoying the instrument on a private level like there is no audience present.

I'm also reeling from last week's column where, my fellow students, I misled you. It seems that my advice to put away your North Faces was as premature as ... well, that's just too easy. As such, I need to inject some sort of legitimacy into this week's edition. Now, covering all the best acoustic or live performances of all time would be impossibly time-consuming, so forgive me if there is an obscure lost Jimi Hendrix recording or some other gross oversight. Just relax and be a sucker for all these acoustic songs ...

1. "Hallelujah" (live)—Jeff Buckley

One of my all-time favorite songs performed live with such passion that it tears into your soul. If you don't know this song, you would probably recognize it from, well, everywhere, as it's frequently used in film and television.

2. "King Without A Crown" (Live At Stubbs)—Matisyahu

This is an example of a live recording that is better than the studio version. The Hassidic Jew performer has an incredible voice and raps in a reggae style that is better than most rap out there. I imagine seeing him perform live would leave anyone with their mouth agape.

3. "Wonderwall" (Oasis Cover)—Ryan Adams

This is the live version that is also acoustic and a cover, so, naturally, I'm in heaven. He does a brilliant "bluesy" cover of Oasis' amazing song. There's another version on one of his albums that is also fabulous, but this one is so much cooler.

4. "Walk Away" (live)—Ben Harper

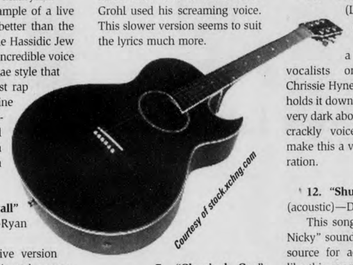
This is the version from his "Live on Mars" album. I would put this on every mix if I could. I've used it before, but that's more a testament to how unbelievable the song is than to my laziness. You can hear his heart break every time he performs it.

5. "Tears In Heaven" (live)—Eric Clapton

This is a song where knowing the background story helps to appreciate it more. When Clapton's son fell to his death from their apartment window, his style of music completely changed, and this song is an excellent example of his new sound. This song won numerous awards, but its performance at the Grammys remains one of the most touching performances I've ever heard.

6."Everlong" (acoustic)—Foo Fighters

The acoustic version of this song is infinitely more popular than the original, which was much faster and in which Dave Grohl used his screaming voice. This slower version seems to suit the lyrics much more.



7. "Classical Gas" (live)—Tommy Emmanuel

Watching this man play guitar is pretty surreal. Listen to the song and know that this is only one man playing. It sounds like three. He turns the guitar into every instrument necessary and plays beautifully.

8. "All Along the Watchtower" (live)—Dave Matthews Band

I love how this version starts out with a slow, simple and sinister quality, then ends with every person involved throwing every ounce of energy into the song. It sounds like an encore; they play like there's no tomorrow.

9. "In Your Eyes" (live acoustic)—Jeffrey Gaines

A cover of the Peter Gabriel classic. It's a pretty rendition, but the best part is how the audience gets into it and starts singing backup for him–and he thanks them. It's a cool moment.

10. "Pardon Me" (acoustic)—Incubus

The brief conversation before the song starts leads us to believe that this song has never been played acoustically before this moment. If that's true, it's pretty remarkable.

11. "The Difficult Kind" (Live)—Sheryl Crow and Chrissie Hynes

I'm usually not a big fan of female vocalists or guitarists, but Chrissie Hynes of The Pretenders holds it down. There's something very dark about this song. Crow's crackly voice and Hynes' grit make this a very tuneful collaboration.

12. "Shut Up and Drive" (acoustic)—Deftones

This song is from the "Little Nicky" soundtrack – not a likely source for acoustic Deftones. I like this song because the sound is so different from the rest of their music. Lead singer Chino Moreno has a very forceful and powerful voice which is stripped bare on this track, but it still totally works.

13. "Machine Gun" (Live at the Fillmore)—Jimi Hendrix

We watched a video of this performance in one of my classes, and I just sat there mesmerized, shaking my head at how unbelievably talented he was. It's 11 minutes and 35 seconds, and it's riveting the entire time.

14. "Rivers of Babylon" (acoustic)—Sublime

This is basically a jam session that happened to be recorded. I would kill to be one of the people who was sitting in on this. It just sounds like they're having the best time—to be around people that talented is very fortunate indeed.

These songs are available on iTunes under the category iMix, titled "Great Live and Acoustic Songs."

ANOTHER BUBBLE

By Ana Fullmer
Staff Writer

While I know Hollywood gossip may be the last thing on Bubblenellians' minds this week with all the talk of Homeland Security and conservatism, it is still my job to try to get you all juiced up on some of the more liberal things in life ... like sex tapes!

My absolute favorite girl of all time, Lauren Conrad of MTV's "The Hills," and formerly LC of "Laguna Beach," may or may not have her girly bits introduced to the world, or at least to the internet, in the form of a filmed tryst with her former boyfriend and "Laguna Beach" co-star, Jason Wahler. PerezHilton.com first broke the story last week that Wahler, who a few weeks ago was sentenced to jail for being an all-around d-bag, made a copy of the tape without telling Lauren, and, according to tmz.com, is getting offers from porno companies for over $500,000. Now ladies, we here at Another Bubble don't like to pull the "bitchy senior" card, because frankly, we've been bitchy since birth; but here is some advice for you spring chickens trying to impress that dreamboat of a frat boy who threw up on you last Wednesday ... don't make a sex tape. It's a bad idea. Everyone will laugh at you. Oh, and you'll forever be "sex tape girl," and neither you nor any of your friends will ever get into a sorority. Moving on.

"Sexy(back)" singer Justin Timberlake has a photo in this month's GQ magazine that shows him with hair clippers in hand, as if he is shaving his own head. Could this be a swipe at his ex-girlfriend, the follicularly challenged Britney Spears? Most of the gossip sites think so, but we say probably not, since that attack of a former pop star is most likely so far off his radar he doesn't even remember their matching denim jumpsuit days in the spotlight. The clippers were probably just the first thing he could grab in a frenzied effort to point something to his face in order to exemplify how hot he is. He should be careful though; my old roommate lost an eye that way.

According to J-Lo, ladies, size zero is so 2006! D-listed.com quoted the actress-turned-singer as saying "I have a butt, I have boobs and I have a woman's curves—there is no way I'd see them go to zero. I just don't see how I could get down to that size and still be healthy. It wouldn't work. For me, looking good is all about looking healthy, and the ultimate beauty secret is about being happy in yourself." Hooray Miss Lopez, we agree! And in the empowering words of the iconic Lil' Jon, "We all like to see a and tiies."

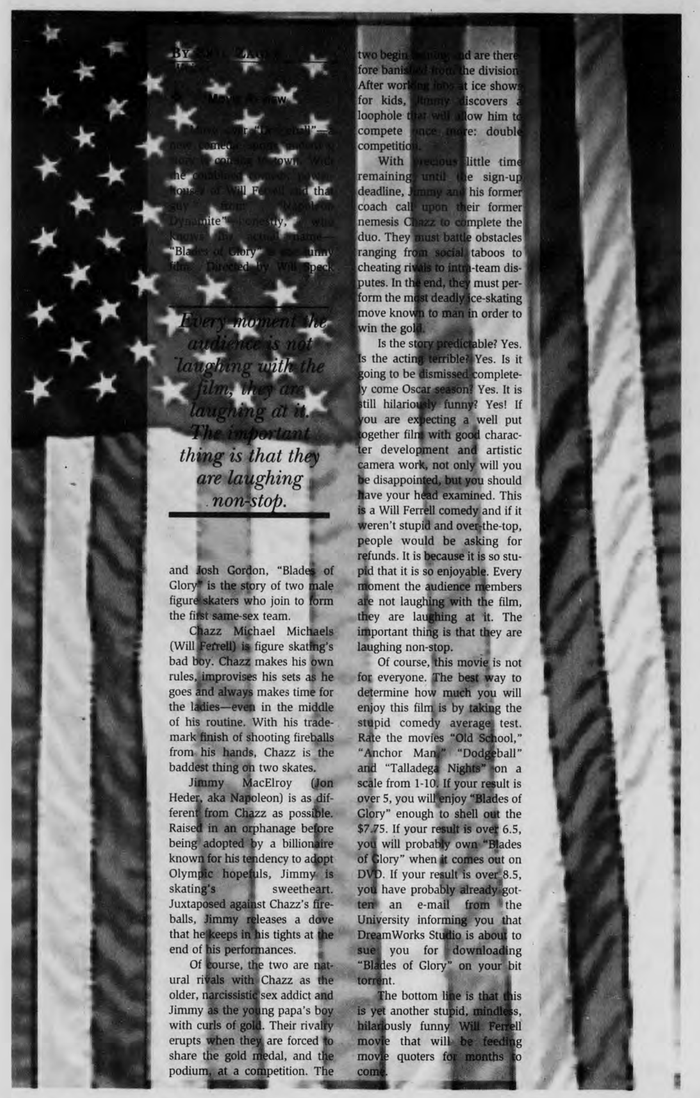
Fall Out Boy lead guitar Pete Wentz was seen making Ashlee Simpson wanna La La last weekend at the restaurant Parc in Los Angeles. The two were making people want to vomit all night in a private booth. This is after Wentz's recent admissions to The Advocate magazine that he has most certainly made out with other men because "above the waist is fair game." We wonder what Ashlee's father, former Southern Baptist preacher, Joe Simpson, thinks about all the gayness that his daughter might be catching! No word on whether there was any "sugar" or "goin' down swinging" later on that night.

Ziegler's Beauty Salon
38 N. 5th Street
Lewisburg, PA 17837
570-523-1250 570-523-1262
Book by Appointment
1 Beauty Chair & 2 Barber Chairs
PARKING AVAILABLE

DOES YOUR CAR NEED SERVICED?
Our Service Department has $25,000 in new upgrades, including a new alignment rack, brake lathe, tire machine, and hundreds of hours of training for the techs. We now offer shuttle service to and from work or home. We have become a complete service center that can perform any work on any model, from an oil change to engine replacement.
Lewisburg Ford Oil Change w/Multi-Point Inspection $19.95 Excludes Diesels. Must present coupon at time of service. Expires 12/31/06.
Lewisburg Ford Oil Change/Tire Rotation w/Multi-Point Inspection $34.95 Must present coupon at time of service. Expires 12/31/06.
Lewisburg Ford
2265 Old Turnpike Rd. (Route 45 West) Across From Brookpark Farm
Call Today! (570) 524-7267
Visit us on the web at www.lewisburgford.com

Blades of Glory

Skating's most unlikely pair makes for one hilarious comedy



Every moment the audience is not laughing with the film, they are laughing at it. The important thing is that they are laughing non-stop.

By [illegible]

[illegible] Will Ferrell and the [illegible] Dynamite" [illegible] "Blades of Glory" [illegible] Directed by Will Speck [illegible] two begin training and are therefore banished from the division. After working jobs at ice shows for kids, Jimmy discovers a loophole that will allow him to compete once more: double competition.

With precious little time remaining until the sign-up deadline, Jimmy and his former coach call upon their former nemesis Chazz to complete the duo. They must battle obstacles ranging from social taboos to cheating rivals to intra-team disputes. In the end, they must perform the most deadly ice-skating move known to man in order to win the gold.

Is the story predictable? Yes. Is the acting terrible? Yes. Is it going to be dismissed completely come Oscar season? Yes. It is still hilariously funny? Yes! If you are expecting a well put together film with good character development and artistic camera work, not only will you be disappointed, but you should have your head examined. This is a Will Ferrell comedy and if it weren't stupid and over-the-top, people would be asking for refunds. It is because it is so stupid that it is so enjoyable. Every moment the audience members are not laughing with the film, they are laughing at it. The important thing is that they are laughing non-stop.

Of course, this movie is not for everyone. The best way to determine how much you will enjoy this film is by taking the stupid comedy average test. Rate the movies "Old School," "Anchor Man," "Dodgeball" and "Talladega Nights" on a scale from 1-10. If your result is over 5, you will enjoy "Blades of Glory" enough to shell out the $7.75. If your result is over 6.5, you will probably own "Blades of Glory" when it comes out on DVD. If your result is over 8.5, you have probably already gotten an e-mail from the University informing you that DreamWorks Studio is about to sue you for downloading "Blades of Glory" on your bit torrent.

The bottom line is that this is yet another stupid, mindless, hilariously funny Will Ferrell movie that will be feeding movie quoters for months to come.

and Josh Gordon, "Blades of Glory" is the story of two male figure skaters who join to form the first same-sex team.

Chazz Michael Michaels (Will Ferrell) is figure skating's bad boy. Chazz makes his own rules, improvises his sets as he goes and always makes time for the ladies—even in the middle of his routine. With his trademark finish of shooting fireballs from his hands, Chazz is the baddest thing on two skates.

Jimmy MacElroy (Jon Heder, aka Napoleon) is as different from Chazz as possible. Raised in an orphanage before being adopted by a billionaire known for his tendency to adopt Olympic hopefuls, Jimmy is skating's sweetheart. Juxtaposed against Chazz's fireballs, Jimmy releases a dove that he keeps in his tights at the end of his performances.

Of course, the two are natural rivals with Chazz as the older, narcissistic sex addict and Jimmy as the young papa's boy with curls of gold. Their rivalry erupts when they are forced to share the gold medal, and the podium, at a competition. The

SPOILER ALERT!

By Matt Saylor
Associate Editor of Content

"Grey's Anatomy"—This Thursday marks the return of the show from hiatus and ABC will air new episodes each Thursday until the third season finale which will air in mid-to-late May.

This week's episode, "Time after Time," will explore many of the complicated relationships on the show, including Izzie and George. The fallout from the night the two slept together will continue and who knows where that road will end. Also, Cristina will continue to work on her relationship with Burke, with the ever suave Dr. Marlowe still hanging around. Meredith and Derek have plenty of their own issues to sort through. Perhaps the most interesting relationship on the show right now is between Alex and the pregnant patient known as Jane Doe. This will continue for the remainder of the season, but that does not mean that Addison and Alex are completely dead. The episode set to air on April 26 will take another look at the pairing of the two. Viewers should take note that this is one week before the two-hour episode which will serve to set up the potential spin-off for Addison. Alex is definitely staying in Seattle though.

Meredith will meet with her stepmother this week, and her family will be a big part of her life for the rest of this year.

"Scrubs"—NBC keeps changing its schedule around, but hopefully the network has everything set at least until the end of this television season. "Scrubs" will now air at 9:30 p.m. on Thursdays, switching time slots with the best comedy that you are not watching, "30 Rock." "Scrubs" is set in this slot at least through April.

This Thursday's episode will be from the perspective of someone other than J.D. In the past, the show has aired single episodes from the points of view of Elliot, Turk, Dr. Cox, Carla, Dr. Kelso and the Janitor. This time three different supporting players will get a chance to rule, as Jordan, Ted and the Todd take center stage. Don't worry though, none of them will meet the fate of Laverne.

On April 26, Elliot's sorority sister Melody, played by Keri Russell, comes to town.. J.D. wants to continue to be the top friend in Elliot's life, which of course means trying to split up Melody and Elliot. This becomes even more complicated because he wants to sleep with Melody who is scheduled to be around for at least two episodes. Does Zach Braff have it written in his contract that he needs to have physical relations with x number of beautiful female guest stars a year? Meanwhile, Elliot will have other relationship issues to consider regarding her future with Keith.

News and Notes—"30 Rock" has been renewed for a second season, so fans need not fear that the show will end in the next month. Right now "30 Rock" is the best comedy on television not named "The Office," and I recommend you check it out. NBC.com has full episodes of the show posted and will continue to post them after each original episode has aired. This is a great way to give the show a test run and to allow viewers to find out what they have missed.

"The Sopranos" has returned to HBO, beginning its last run of episodes before it is whacked. The second episode of its final (and this time it really is final) installment will air on Sunday. How many characters do you think will die over the next two months?

"Entourage" has also returned to Sunday nights on HBO. Ari is trying to woo Vince back as his client, Drama is preparing for his new television career, Eric is trying to sort everything out and Turtle is still Turtle.

Artist's debut album showcases falsetto voice and colorful style

Courtesy of www.mikasounds.com

United Kingdom recording artist Mica Penniman, known by his stage name Mika, released his debut album "Life in Cartoon Motion" in the United States last month. Boasting originality and creativity, the album contains such sure hits as "Grace Kelly", and "Big Girl (You Are Beautiful)".

By Caitlin Kinger
Contributing Writer

❖ CD Review

There is a large group of artists that make it big in Europe and other parts of the world, but fail to make a name for themselves in the United States. The U.K.'s latest import is the very talented Mica Penniman, otherwise known by his stage name Mika. The Lebanon-born singer was recently named one of Rolling Stone's "10 Artists to Watch" and has gained popularity through the use of his songs in television commercials. Mika's debut album "Life in Cartoon Motion" was released in America last month to finally give us a taste of this new singer that's taking Europe by storm.

The album opens strongly with "Grace Kelly," the song that propelled him to the top of the charts and that made him a sensation in the U.K. It displays his powerful falsetto voice and flamboyant style that compares to the late Freddie Mercury of Queen. He criticizes the record companies that wanted him to change his style to become popular in mainstream music.

In "Grace Kelly" the lyrics describe trying to be like Grace Kelly, but finding "her looks too sad" and directly reference Mercury in "So I try a little Freddie." This song, like most on the album, is fun and catchy while presenting the themes of trying to remain true to one's self. It questions "Should I bend over?/Should I look older just to be put on your shelf?/Why don't you like me?"

The campy "Lollipop" follows, complete with handclapping, a talking child and an overly-cheery chorus repeating "Sucking too hard on your lollipop/Love's gonna get you down." The music is bubbly and can be annoying to those who can't see the amusement in the lyrics.

Mika brings a 180-degree shift in tone with "My Interpretation." It is a mid-tempo track and one of the weaker songs on the album. His songs on more serious subjects seem to work better masked as fast-moving, fun songs such as "Grace Kelly."

"Love Today" is another carefree song that boasts the message that "Everybody's gonna love today/…/Anyway you want to, anyway you've got to," and to "Love love me." This song wouldn't seem out of place on a Scissor Sisters album. It truly reflects the album's cover art: a flashy explosion of colors and lively cartoon characters.

If the next track "Relax (Take It Easy)" sounds like something out of the 80's new wave movement, you aren't far from the truth. It borrows the melody of Cutting Crew's hit "(I Just) Died in Your Arms" and sounds like a lost Bee Gees song.

"Ring, Ring" is one of the faster tracks on the album and is a high contrast to the slow "Any Other World." Where "Any Other World" suffers in its lack of enticing lyrics, the melody is only hampered by being surrounded by a strange and barely audible voiceover.

The atmosphere is heightened again when the songs turn back to his campy style in "Billy Brown" and "Big Girl (You Are Beautiful)." Any limits to the subjects of his songs are quickly erased. "Billy Brown" tells of a man who "had lived an ordinary life; two kids, a dog, and a cautionary wife," before falling in love with another man.

Another similarity to Freddie Mercury can be heard in "Big Girl," Mika's own form of Mercury's "Fat Bottomed Girls." The lyrics are just as ridiculous as the song before it, with lines such as "Diet coke and a pizza please/Diet coke I'm on my knees" and "You take your girl/And multiply her by four/Now a whole lotta woman/Needs a whole lot more."

The next two tracks come and go without making as much of a bang as other songs on the album. While far from terrible songs, "Stuck in the Middle" and "Erase" don't have the same effect as the songs they follow.

Closing out the album is "Happy Ending" and a hidden track "Over My Shoulder." "Happy Ending" is a slow ballad that brings out an entire choir and a solo female singer. It melds well with "Over My Shoulder," where Mika sings solo, accompanied only by his piano. It brings a nice close to the album, as it completely clashes with the "Life in Cartoon Motion" theme of the other tracks.

While uneven at times, "Life in Cartoon Motion" is a great debut album for a young artist. It is largely a "love, love it" or a "hate, hate it" album with generally no middle group. Mika has much potential and I look forward to his future work.

Key Tracks: "Grace Kelly", "Love Today", "Big Girl (You Are Beautiful)"

Courtesy of www.mikasounds.com

The Bucknellian
April 13, 2007
Sports

Volume 139, Number 10 | Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue | www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

A night of hope

The Light the Night walk successfully raised over $27,000. See more pictures from the event in Features.

See page B8

Bison net 6-5 win over Army

Strong fourth-quarter rally gives Orange and Blue second ever win at West Point

Ryan Winn — The Bucknellian

Perry Menzies '09 blows past a Holy Cross defenseman in the Bison's last home victory. The Orange and Blue's win over Army catapulted them to No. 12 from last week's ranking in the United States Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association coaches' poll.

By Wes Trowbridge
Writer

Bucknell 6
Army 5

After losing five contests against Army in the last four seasons, all by just one goal, the men's lacrosse team ended the drought Saturday, defeating the Black Knights at Michie Stadium in West Point, N.Y. With five minutes and nine seconds remaining, Perry Menzies '09 scored his league-high, third game-winning goal of the season to secure the 6-5 victory.

Army entered the game ranked No. 17 in the United States Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association (USILA) coaches' poll and claimed the most efficient defense in the country, holding opponents to a paltry 5.44 goals per game. The Bison defense proved superior on Saturday, allowing just two goals in the second half and making crucial stops to preserve an ominous one-goal lead for the final 5:09 of regulation.

"The defense as a whole played incredible all afternoon," goalkeeper Nick Sciubba '09 said. "Any time you can hold a team to five goals, especially a talented team like Army, you've got something to be proud of."

Sciubba recorded 10 saves and remains first in Division I with a save percentage of 0.673. Sciubba was also named Patriot League Goalkeeper of the Week for the third time this season.

First-year attackman Austin Winter '10 and Tim Brandau '10 scored five of the Bison's six goals, continuing their spectacular play since leading scorer Joe Mele '09 went down with a torn ACL. Winter recorded two goals and one assist and Brandau scored the first three goals of the game. Winter was named the Damon's Bison Athlete of the Week for the second time in his young career.

"It would be better to have [Mele] in the lineup, but the offense has really stepped it up since his departure," said Head Coach Frank Fedorjaka. "John Togneri ['09], Brian Gargan ['07] and Tim Brandau have all stepped it up considerably."

With three minutes left in the third quarter, the Bison faced a 4-2 deficit thanks to the outstanding play of Army goalkeeper Adam Fullerton, who posted 16 saves. Over the next 11 minutes, the Bison scored four goals against the most efficient defense in the country.

Brandau scored his third goal of the game off of an assist from Togneri with 1:16 left in the quarter and Winter scored an unassisted goal with just five seconds left in the period to tie the game at 4-4. Army scored again early in the fourth quarter to make the score 5-4 but Winter answered with an unassisted equalizer at the 7:47 mark.

Less than three minutes later, Togneri passed to Menzies and the gunner fired a shot past Fullerton to take back the lead for the Bison

See MLAX page B2

Saylor Says

By Matthew Saylor
Associate Editor of Content

The sporting world has slowed down some in the past few weeks. The excitement of college basketball in March has given way to the last few days of the regular season in the NBA, where teams are either positioning themselves for the playoffs or the draft lottery. The Stanley Cup Playoffs are underway in the NHL, and while playoff hockey is exciting, it lasts for the next two months. The NFL is still gearing up for the draft, and baseball season is just underway at least in those places where it is not snowing. The Masters is over, leaving two months until the next major golf event and in tennis, the French Open does not begin until the last weekend in May.

In other words, sports (on a national level) has hit a bit of a lull. This is especially unfortunate in the wake of the incident surrounding the racist comments of radio host Don Imus regarding the women's basketball team from Rutgers. There is not a lot to talk about in the sporting world in terms of events, so off-the-field issues have received more attention.

See SAYLOR page B2

Women's golf heads south

Amy Loughney '08 breaks into individual top 10

By Barbara Perlman
Sports Editor

The women's golf team escaped the unseasonably cold weather as they headed down to Charleston, S.C. to compete in its last tournament of the season: the Big South Championship. In what would be the culmination of a year's hard work and training, the team posted a three-day combined score of 992, highlighted by a top-10 individual performance by Amy Loughney '08, placing them seventh in a talented field of eight.

Courtesy of Athletic Communications

Amy Loughney '08 follows her shot in the air. Loughney shot a three-day combined score of 233, producing a top-10 performance at the Big South Championship.

We performed well at the Big South but not as well as we had hoped," captain Teri Schlang '07 said. "Had we played out best we could have finished in fifth. We got off to a very rough start on day 1 but fought our way and played the best in the third round."

The first day of competition started off slowly for the Bison. Loughney led the way, shooting a 77 with two birdies, putting her merely two strokes behind the tournament leader and six over par. Despite Loughney's impressive performance, her teammates lagged behind, unable to shoot anything lower than an 85. Deidre Moran '09 shot the next best score for the Bison with an 85, followed by Schlang who shot 90 and Emily Chiodo '08 with a 91. The Orange and Blue finished the day with a total of 343, 68 behind leader Birmingham Southern.

Later that night, Schlang was honored with a spot on the Big South Academic All-Conference Team, a fitting reward for the team's leader in her last collegiate tournament. Schlang lived up to the honor, shooting a team low the next morning with a 79.

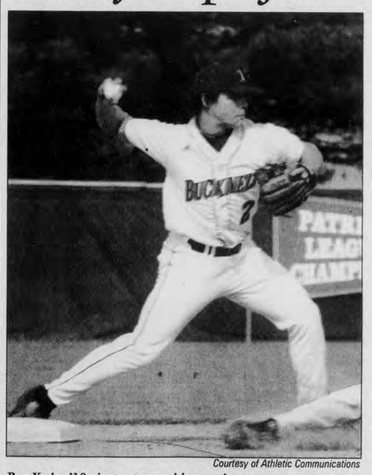
The Bison stepped up their game on the second day, trimming 15 strokes from the 343 total of the day before. Loughney faltered slightly after an impressive start, concluding the day with an 81. Moran and Chiodo also held their own, shooting a pair of 84s. Birmingham Southern not only boasted a field low of 598 overall, but also had the first, second and third individual golfers at the conclusion of day two.

Despite dropping to 13th overall, Loughney made her presence known on the final day of the tournament shooting a Bison low 75, catapulting her to seventh best overall. Her performance matched her career-best, and her seventh-place finish would mark the second time that Loughney would place in the top 10 at the Big South in three years.

The Orange and Blue continued to lower their team score, this time posting a 321 overall. Schlang finished with an 81 while Moran and Chiodo shot 82 and 83, respectively. Birmingham Southern claimed both the top individual score as well as the best team score with an 897.

See WGOLF page B3

First-year profile: Ben Yoder



Courtesy of Athletic Communications

Ben Yoder '10 pivots at second base as he attempts to convert a double play. Yoder has made an instant impact on the team, boasting a batting average of .329.

"Ben is one of the best players in the league right now. If he continues to play like he is this year, he will certainly be Patriot League Player of the Year in the future."
— Matt Curry '07, co-captain

By Connie Barko
Senior Writer

If you were to look at the overall statistics of the baseball team, you would expect to see a line of '07s, '08s, maybe even an '09 or two. Instead, you see the name Ben Yoder '10 amongst the top five in almost every category. He is ranked third among his peers in runs scored and fourth in batting average, runs batted in, total bases, doubles, hits, slugging and on-base percentage.

"Ben is one of the best players in the league right now," co-captain Matt Curry '07 said. "If he continues to play like he is this year, he will certainly be Patriot League Player of the Year in the future."

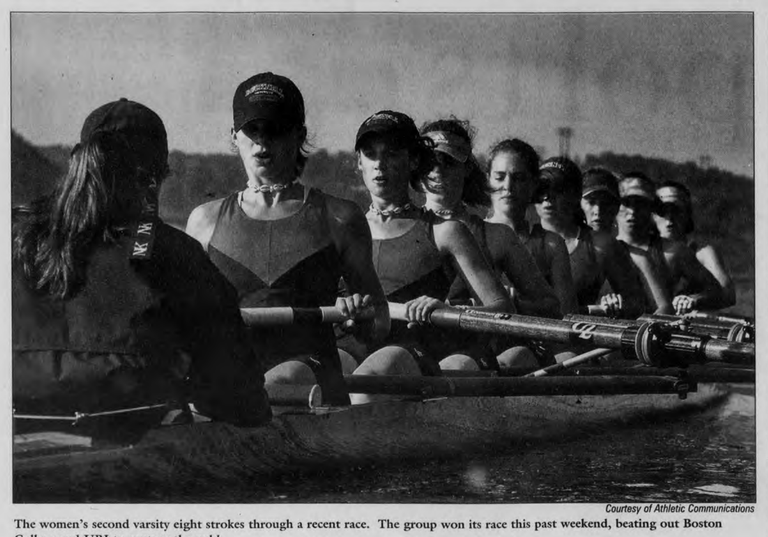
Yoder, who plays second base and has a batting average of 0.329, is a well-rounded player and has been an offensive and defensive threat throughout the season.

When asked how Yoder has contributed to the team this year, Coach Gene Depew '71 said, "By being one of our best and most consistent players. He has played solid defense and been an offensive leader from the number two batting slot."

Among his teammates, Yoder is known for his leadership, not only because he has stepped up with big plays on the field, but also for his work ethic during practice. Yoder's quality play has helped push his teammates to perform at a higher level.

"This year, more than ever, we needed the freshmen to provide a spark for the upperclassmen, to essentially push them harder to be better players," co-captain Ryan Gryskevicz '07 said. "Ben has definitely done that. His defensive skills have been a breath

See YODER page B4



Courtesy of Athletic Communications

The women's second varsity eight strokes through a recent race. The group won its race this past weekend, beating out Boston College and URI to capture the gold.

Rowing pulls past competition

Women's and men's teams combine for seven wins over nine races

By Brian Mulligan
Sports Editor

The men's and women's rowing teams continued their successful spring campaign this past weekend in Kingston, R.I. on the Narrow River. Both squads competed against the University of Rhode Island (URI) and Boston College, while the women's team also faced Radcliffe. The women took four of five races with the varsity eight, the second varsity eight, the second varsity four and the lightweight eight winning their events. The men's novice eight posted an impressive weekend, winning both races in the second varsity eight and novice eight events.

"We raced hard and fearless," men's Head Coach Paul Bugenhagen said. "We executed our moves and pushed out on the crews we wanted to move away. It was a very solid morning of races for the men."

On the men's side, the novice eight had to row in back-to-back races on Saturday against strong boats from both URI and Boston College.

In the novice eight event, the Bison posted a time of six minutes and 47.27 seconds, beating the top URI boat by almost 30 seconds. The second race of the day threw bigger challenges at the novice crew. The Orange and Blue edged out Boston College by eight seconds in the second varsity eight event.

"I think our biggest strength was our mindset going into the race," stroke Kyle Lafferty '10 said. "Everyone in the boat knew that we needed to be focused in order to perform at our best. I think our boat is always on the same page on and off the water, and that's what makes this such a special group."

> "We raced hard and fearless. We executed our moves and pushed out on the crews we wanted to move away. It was a very solid morning of races for the men."
>
> —Paul Bugenhagen, men's head coach

The varsity four notched a solid win over two URI boats and a Boston College crew. The team had a photo finish against the URI's "A" boat, finishing only two seconds ahead of it. The Orange and Blue grabbed an early lead over the other crews and managed to keep the lead throughout the race with some strategic moves.

The women's varsity eight remained undefeated in the season with five straight wins. The varsity eight posted a time of 7:22.47 in the two-kilometer race, crossing the finish line six seconds before URI and 13 seconds in front of Boston College. In the second varsity eight event, the Bison beat out three squads to win the race in 7:48.13.

"The strong competition was URI," women's Head Coach Steve Kish '92 said. "I was pleasantly surprised by the way our women overcame a challenging week of practice and did such a great job on race day."

The second varsity four won by the largest margin of the weekend, edging out Boston College by 26 seconds and posting a time of 8:52.65. URI was no match for the Bison in the lightweight eight event. The Orange and Blue won the event with a time of 7:15.31, while URI finished the race in only 7:30.78.

The women's team will be hosting William Smith this weekend in their home opener on Saturday at 8:20 a.m. in Shamokin Dam. Amanda Gallina '08 has high hopes for this weekend.

"I think we are definitely ready. It will be nice not to have to travel and be able to represent on our own race course," Gallina said.

As for the men, they will be back in action on April 21 against Patriot League rivals Lehigh, Lafayette and Army in a Patriot League preview in Bethlehem, Pa. The meet will be a great indicator of how the Bison will fair in the Patriot League Championship.

"Lehigh and Army are dominant men's programs in the Patriot League. They are at the top of the League and right now we're looking up at them," Bugenhagen said. "I'm not comfortable in that position and neither are our guys. The only thing I can guarantee is there will be some intense and ruthless racing next Saturday."

Bison make a comeback in league play

By Ellis Hudes
Senior Writer

The women's tennis team began its Patriot League schedule earlier this week with a tough 4-3 opening loss to Colgate, but followed it up with a 5-2 victory over Lehigh. After a bumpy first half of the season, the Bison look to bounce back against some familiar rivals.

The Orange and Blue kicked off league play with a real dog-fight against the Raiders. In doubles play, Colgate grabbed the two necessary matches to earn the point. Ashley Globerman '09 and Tania Varela '10 fell to Colgate's duo of Jackie Couture and Elise Derose by an 8-2 margin, while Samantha Inacker and Cameron Thaney snuck by 8-6 over Carlin Calcaterra '10 and Paulina Gamboa '09. Even though the point was lost, a third Bison tandem consisting of Caitlin Baffa '08 and Camille Simonetti '09 came out on top in an 8-7(7-4) thriller over Colgates' Erin Fenn and Jackie Stimmel.

Colgate 4 Bucknell 3

Both teams exchanged blows in subsequent singles action. For the Orange and Blue, Gamboa triumphed 6-1, 6-4 over Derose, and Globerman also kept the Bison in contention with 6-4, 6-3 against Fenn. The Raiders held onto their lead with the help of Couture who secured a crucial win over Varela 7-6(4), 7-6(3) and Inacker who dispatched Calcaterra 4-6, 6-3, 6-4. Thaney finally stopped the Bison comeback by defeating Baffa 6-1, 3-6, 6-1, clinching the match win for Colgate.

The Bison quickly bounced back and defeated Lehigh 5-2 in their second league match. Gamboa and Calcaterra executed an 8-3 win over Gwen Dwyer and Allie Schwartz in No. 1 doubles. In the No. 2 slot, Varela and Globerman toppled Lehigh's Julie Arthofer and Ruthie Furman to wrap up the doubles point for the Orange and Blue.

Bucknell 5 Lehigh 2

In singles the Bison players stepped up their intensity to take four of six matches on their way to the overall match win. Varela, Gamboa, and Globerman all looked their dominant best in respective straight set wins over the Mountain Hawks. Kirstyn Sotak '10 was made to work against Furman but eventually prevailed 7-6, 7-5.

"I am very proud of the way our team has played in our first two Patriot League matches," said Globerman. "The win over Lehigh last night was a huge victory for the team and we hope to build on that success in our upcoming matches against Army and Lafayette."

The Orange and Blue will host Army this Saturday in a rematch of the last two Patriot League title matches.

Ryan Winn — The Bucknellian

Chris McNaughton '07 received the Patriot League Scholar-Athlete of the Year Award for men's basketball on April 6. This is the third consecutive year that he has won the award, becoming the first men's basketball player to win the award three times. He is an electrical engineering major and is a member of the All-Patriot League First Team for men's basketball.

MLAX From page B1

with 5:09 remaining.

The final five minutes was a display on the Bison's suffocating defense. Sciubba made two key saves in the closing seconds and picked up a ground ball with under a minute left to preserve the win.

While the Orange and Blue offense and defense both played well, the game may have been won at midfield. Rick Carolan '08 took all 14 faceoffs for the Bison, winning eight of them.

Midfielder Steve Case '07, who was named Patriot League Defensive Player of the Week, collected a team-high six ground balls, all from the wing on faceoffs. In the opening faceoff of the second quarter, Case scooped up the ground ball, drove downfield and assisted Brandau to give the Bison an early 2-1 lead.

The Bison are now ranked No. 12 in the USILA coaches' poll and are 9-2 for the season and 3-1 in league play. They are tied in second place with Colgate in the Patriot League standings, behind No. 8 Navy.

The Orange and Blue will next see action when they host Lehigh at 8:00 p.m Saturday night at Christy Mathewson-Memorial Stadium.

Ryan Winn — The Bucknellian

Nick Sciubba '09 (left) and Billy Haire '09 regroup in front of the goal in a recent game. Sciubba was recently named Patriot League Goalie of the Week for the third time this season and leads the nation in save percentage with an outstanding .673 and allows only 5.9 goals per game.

SAYLOR From page B1

NFL players Adam "Pacman" Jones and Chris Henry each received suspensions for the upcoming 2007 season due to their off-the-field conduct. Jones will miss the entire season, while Henry has been suspended for eight games, or half of the season. Additionally, news of a fight at a Las Vegas casino between Joey Porter and Levi Jones, also of the NFL, continues to make the rounds as Porter is now publicly reaching out to Jones to try to put the problem behind them.

Charges have been dropped against players from the Duke men's lacrosse team stemming from rape allegations made this time last year. The charged players are now taking this opportunity to speak out and more legal action is expected because of the three-ring circus that incident became.

The LSU women's basketball team has named a new head coach, but it is only a matter of time before more information is made known about the reasons behind the resignation of its former head coach for inappropriate conduct between herself and a former player.

The list goes on and on about all of the problems in the sporting world. Sports Center has become like the evening news with all of the depressing events of the day first and the nice stories saved for the last few minutes of the broadcast.

That's the thing though—there still are nice stories and just like in the "real world," the nice stories are overshadowed in the sporting world as well. There are more athletes who do nice things than do wrong, just as there are more people in this world who do good things than bad.

Maybe I am naïve to believe that, but it has to be true. Otherwise what is the point in believing in the good in anything? I know the good is out there, and it probably is not that hard to find. It is time we start looking.

Do you feel lost now that March Madness has ended?

Write for Sports!

blp004@

Baseball splits series with Black Knights

By Ty Clark
Senior Writer

The baseball team split its four game series with Army, Sunday and Monday, winning two contests 4-3 and 5-4, while losing the other two 3-0 and 4-3. On Wednesday the Bison continued to roll defeating Susquehanna Valley neighbor Susquehanna University 10-3.

After this week's play, the Bison sit at 5-3 in Patriot League play and are tied for second with twelve Patriot League contests and two other matches remaining this year.

"We obviously would have liked to win the series," Head Coach Gene Depew '71 said, "but I am pleased we were able to fight back and win the second game both days in some pretty tough weather conditions. It may become significant down the road that Army doesn't hold the head-to-head tie breaker over us due to these games."

In the first game on Sunday, the Bison only managed one hit against Army pitcher Nick Hill. Jason Buursma '08 singled with two outs remaining in the game as the Black Knights took the contest by a 3-0 tally. Hill was dominant, striking out 11 batters and allowing a walk and a hit in his complete game to pick up the win against Matt Curry '07 (3-4), who also went the distance.

Army 3 Bucknell 0

"Splitting with Army was good considering how well their pitchers threw," Shawn Hirsch '08 said. Hirsch would play a big part in the second game on Sunday, a 4-3 win in 10 innings for the Bison.

The team erased their offensive struggles from the previous game immediately by scoring two first inning runs on a pair of RBIs from Buursma and Ryan Gryskevicz '07.

Bucknell 4 Army 3

The Black Knights battled back, knotting the game at three apiece on a wild pitch in the seventh. Although the Bison would strand runners in each of the next three innings, Hirsch would come through with a two-out single to right in the home half of the tenth inning to plate Gryskevicz as the winning run.

The series ended on Monday, since Saturday's games were postponed by bad weather. In the first game it was Army who jumped out to a quick lead, but saw the Bison tie in the same inning, and then post three runs in the fourth to take a 4-1 lead—a score which would remain unchanged into the seventh and final inning.

Army 4 Bucknell 3

After a pair of Bison singles to begin the inning, Dane Grandizio '09 would plate both to cut the Army lead to one. There would be no more scoring as Army closer Milan Dinga finished the game by pitching the seventh inning for his first save of the year.

Bucknell 5 Army 4

"Nick Hill and Cole White were very tough," Hirsch said. "When that happens, you need to battle as a team. We did just that and came away with the other two games."

In the final game of the four-game set with Army, the Bison offense came alive with four runs in the bottom of the third, turning a 3-1 deficit into a 5-3 lead thanks to strong hitting from the heart of their lineup. With one out, Buursma walked and Gryskevicz reached on an error. Chris Pieper '08 then singled to bring in the first run, which was followed by a walk to Ed Rubbo '08, an RBI groundout by Mark Angelo '08 and a two-out, two-run single from Hirsch to round out the scoring. Although Army would add another run in the top of the sixth, Buursma would come through for his fourth save of the year and fourteenth of his career, tying a Bison record.

On Wednesday, the Bison would win another contest, a road match in Selinsgrove against Susquehanna, 10-3. The Orange and Blue put the game out of reach with a five-run second inning, three of which came on a Buursma home run. The Bison would expand their lead to as many as nine before Susquehanna would put up two in the eighth to close out the scoring. Both teams substituted liberally, the Bison played 19 position players and eight pitchers.

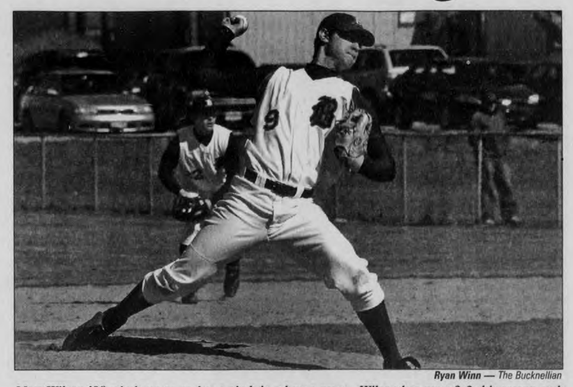
Bucknell 10 Susquehanna 3

As the season begins to wrap up, Depew likes his team's chances.

"I think we are prepared to play our best baseball during the next two and a half weeks. We work year round for what amounts to a five week Patriot league season and now is the time for us to produce. We have the same 5-3 league record that we had last year at this point and I hope we can finish as strong as we did last year," Depew said.

That will be a tall order though, as Lafayette, who returned most of their starters, will come to Lewisburg this weekend with a 7-1 league record, good for first in the Patriot League. This is the last series the Bison will have on their home field this year.

"I think playing at home will benefit us and I believe our team will be successful given the right intensity and attitude," Hirsch said.



Ryan Winn — The Bucknellian

Matt Wilson '08 winds up to rocket a pitch in a home game. Wilson has gone 3-2 this season and is an integral part of the successful Bison pitching staff.

WGOLF From page B1

The tournament marked the finale of an impressive season, which began in early fall. During the 2006 portion of their season, the Bison claimed the top spot in the Bison Fall Classic for the first time in team history. The Orange and Blue also garnered various awards throughout the season, and despite the loss of team leader Schlang, will head into next year with incredible potential and ability in one of the strongest women's golf programs the University has ever seen.

"I am looking forward to a strong incoming class to bring some needed competition to the team and I hope that we are able to see some of the success that we were able to achieve this past season," Chiodo said.

DO YOU LOVE THE EARTH?

THEN RECYCLE THIS NEWSPAPER

NATIONAL SECURITY AGENCY NSA

Interview for an Exciting New Opportunity with NSA

NSA has exciting career opportunities available for entry level Contracting Specialists and Budget Analysts. Your business knowledge and skills will support the internal infrastructure of a federal agency comparable in size and budget to the top 10 percent of Fortune 500 companies, as well as assist in impacting the future of our Nation.

Interview with NSA
To interview with NSA, you must first submit your resume online by Thursday, April 19, 2007.

If your qualifications match our needs, you will be contacted directly with an invitation to join us at our Career Invitational, or visit NSA for a personal interview at another time.

For additional details and to apply online, visit www.NSA.gov/Careers/Invite

U.S. citizenship is required for all applicants. NSA is an equal opportunity employer and abides by applicable employment laws and regulations.

WHERE INTELLIGENCE GOES TO WORK

Saint Peter's College

invites you to our campus this summer!

We are the Jesuit College of New Jersey and want to help you accelerate your degree program with summer courses.

This summer, we are offering:

- More than 100 undergraduate and graduate courses
- Affordable tuition rates
- A specialized "Risk Management" series of courses for business majors (courses include Sarbanes Oxley, Enterprise Risk Management, Risk Management and Insurance and Business Ethics and Liability)
- Day and Evening courses at our two campus locations in New Jersey (Jersey City: 201. 761. 6042 and Englewood Cliffs: 201. 761. 7480)

EDUCATION. ONE STUDENT AT A TIME.

www.spc.edu

SAINT PETER'S COLLEGE

Visit www.spc.edu for summer class schedules.
Three and five-week courses offered.
The first Summer Session begins May 21st!

THE JESUIT COLLEGE OF NEW JERSEY

Orange and Blue light up the track

Coming off a successful weekend, the track and field teams prepare to host the Bison Outdoor Classic

Courtesy of Athletic Communications

Mel Buczko '07 effortlessly soars over the bar in the pole vault. Buczko has qualified for the NCAA Regional meet and the ECAC Championship for the fourth straight year.

By Brian Mulligan
Sports Editor

For a second consecutive weekend, the track and field squad split ways as a 14-person team traveled to Auburn, Ala., to compete in the Tiger Classic, while the rest of the team battled frigid temperatures at the Sam Howell Memorial Invitational in Princeton, N.J.

The team added three more NCAA regional qualifiers to its growing list. At the Tiger Classic, Josh Kaehler '07 made the mark with a throw of 204 feet and nine inches in the javelin, while Christa Sawko '07 qualified in the 800-meter dash with two minutes and 9.35 seconds. Matt Forys '07 won the 3,000-meter steeplechase by over 16 seconds at Princeton to qualify for the regional meet.

"I was pleased with my performance. It was my first steeplechase in a year and I was able to qualify for regionals," Forys said. "Now I will be able to concentrate on training and preparing for leagues."

The Tiger Classic gave the Bison a chance to compete against the top competition on the East coast.

Mel Buczko '07 continued her successful spring season with another win in the pole vault. She cleared a height of 12-5 1/2 to qualify for the NCAA Regionals and ECAC Championship. Erin Crahmer-Hart '08 posted a personal best in the 1,500-meter run in 4:40.45, while Catherine Trentacoste '07 had a successful meet with strong finishes in the 100-meter hurdles and 400-meter hurdles in times of 14.86 and 1:02.87, respectively.

"Some of us were happy with our performances and some of us were not, but it was a great opportunity for everyone to go to such a competitive meet at this point in the season," Sawko said.

Kyle Anthony '10 had a great showing in the triple jump, placing fourth overall. He spanned a distance of 48-9 1/2 to qualify for the IC4A Championship and enter the record books as second all-time. In the 100-meter hurdles, Kevin Macleod '09 had a solid finish, placing 13th in 15.05.

Tyler Hoffman '07 carried over his success from the winter season to place 7th in the hammer throw with a hurl of 182-1, while Marjorie Grap '07 was back in action, qualifying for the ECAC Championship in the hammer throw.

"Overall, we did a wonderful job representing Bucknell at the Tiger Classic and competing against some of the nation's best teams," Head Coach Kevin Donner said.

The Sam Howell Invitational posed a major threat to the Bison with frigid temperatures and wind. The team showed its strength against the odds with impressive finishes all-around.

> "Overall, we did a wonderful job representing Bucknell at the Tiger Classic and competing against some of the nation's best teams."
>
> —Kevin Donner, head coach

Amanda Mockbee '08 qualified for the ECAC Championship in the discus with a throw of 152-1 and entered the record books as second all-time, while Ann Doty '07 grabbed first place in the triple jump with a leap of 37-1 1/4, making her an ECAC qualifier.

"With the temperatures in the 30s, I think the team did a great job at Princeton focusing and didn't allow the weather to affect them," Donner said.

Jennifer Pierce '10 had a standout meet with solid finishes in the 400-meter dash, the long jump and the 4x400-meter relay. She finished third in the 400 and fifth in the long jump. Pierce teamed up with Mariel Fink '07, Allison Janda '10 and Offeibea Hanson-Hall '08 in the 4x400-meter relay to capture second place behind a first-place Dartmouth team. Andrew Yehl '10 posted a great finish in the 110-meter high hurdles with a time of 15.55 to place third against a strong headwind.

In the javelin, Steven Pierce '10 continued to improve with a 200-5 toss in the event, finishing third overall. Nick De Gregorio '07 broke into the record books at tenth all-time in the shot put with a throw of 49-5 3/4, placing fifth overall.

The Bison will host the Bison Outdoor Classic this weekend at Christy Matthewson-Memorial Stadium, which is one of the best meets on the east coast this season. The meet will showcase over 30 teams including American, Cornell and Duquesne. The field events will begin at 3 p.m. today, while the running events will kick-off at 5 p.m. On Saturday, the events will begin at 9 a.m. and will run all day.

Winter weather hinders golf's success

By Jared Napolitano
Business Manager

Fierce and wintry conditions once again dictated a spring men's golf event. January-like weather resulted in a cancelled round two at the Navy Invitational, but the Bison still finished in eighth place out of a 25-team field at the U.S. Naval Academy Golf Course Saturday.

Keita Aoki '08 led the Orange and Blue for the first and only round of the event, notching a 75 (+4) and helped the Bison (309, +25) edge all other participating Patriot League opponents.

The team finished round one nine shots behind the winner, St. Bonaventure (300). In addition to Aoki's 14th-place effort, Charlie Waddell '07 (76) and Kyle Moran '07 (77) achieved mid-70s scores, which left them in ties for 23rd and 31st place, respectively, in the 129-player field. Also participating for the Bison were Andrew Cohen '10 (81) and Ryan Schneiter '10 (86).

The individual title went to the only sub-par finisher, Kyle Morris of Seton Hall, who had a score of 69 (-2).

Unfortunately for the squad, an early tee time hindered the players' abilities, as the harshest conditions were in the early hours.

"The story about Navy was once again the weather," Moran said. "Unfortunately, we were unlucky and had morning tee times. The wind was blowing very hard [and] the greens were lightning fast—not to mention, it felt like 30 degrees."

"Winds of 25 miles per hour and subfreezing wind chills made low scores very difficult to come by," Waddell said.

> "Obviously, the goal all year has been to repeat as Patriot League Champs. I think everything is starting to click and we will be very sharp for the Patriot League tourney in two weeks."
>
> —Kyle Moran '07

Fortunately, the Bison maintained their composure and dealt with the severe conditions well.

"I was proud of the way we hung in there and shot the lowest team score for the morning groups," Moran said.

On the bright side of the Invitational, the Bison shot lower than the five other Patriot League teams. Navy Gold finished one stroke behind the Orange and Blue (310), while Navy Blue (316), Colgate (324), Lehigh (325) and Lafayette (327) distanced the Bison more.

Behind St. Bonaventure were top five finishers Longwood (301), Penn (303), Loyola (304) and Seton Hall (304). Delaware and George Washington B finished four strokes and one stroke better than the Bison, respectively, to capture sixth and seventh place.

Like last year, the team does not seem too rattled despite another abrasive early spring season.

"All in all, I think we're coming together right now," Waddell said. "Everyone is piecing together their games element by element."

Even though many of the teams benefited from kinder afternoon conditions, the Bison still managed to place in the top 10 in a strong field.

"I think we need to build on the positives coming from this weekend, because there were a lot," Moran said.

The team resumes spring competition at the Lafayette Invitational Saturday and Sunday in Center Valley, Pa.

"Obviously, the goal all year has been to repeat as Patriot League Champs," Moran said. "I think everything is starting to click and we will be very sharp for the Patriot League tourney in two weeks."

Courtesy of Athletic Communication

Keita Aoki '08 lines up a put. Aoki shot an impressive four over par to lead the Bison on the first and only day of play at Navy.

YODER From page B1

of fresh air for us and his offensive output is consistent."

Despite his impressive statistics and the respect of his teammates, Yoder's disposition is unassuming and he sees himself as a work in progress.

"Always improve everything. Keep working hard. There is always room to get better," Yoder said.

Family is an important component of Yoder's sports history. Since he is from nearby Belleville, Pa., Yoder's family can attend most of his games.

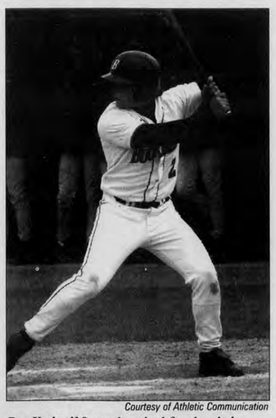
His father, who played division one football, encouraged his family to engage in sports early. At age five, Yoder played on his first organized baseball team. Throughout his career, he has excelled at other sports and earned varsity letters, all-conference recognitions and other awards in football, basketball and baseball at Indian Valley High School.

Yoder also has an older brother who plays division one baseball at Virginia Military Academy.

"Growing up with an older brother was sometimes a little rough," Yoder said. "We didn't always get along as well as our parents would have liked, but as we got older we became closer. There was always friendly competition between us. It definitely helped me work harder."

But what really drives Yoder to succeed both on the field and in life is his grandfather.

"He has dealt with a lot of illness in the past and persevered in everything. He makes me realize that things will get better," Yoder said.



Courtesy of Athletic Communication

Ben Yoder '10 stands poised for the pitch against Army. Yoder is currently ranked in the top five in all categories for the Bison.

With the support of his family and teammates, Yoder's future in the University's baseball program looks promising. He has encountered a lot of success early in his career and he continues to raise the bar higher for himself and his teammates.

"When you're doing things like he is as a freshman, the sky's the limit for the next three years," Curry said.

WEEKEND SCHEDULE

Friday

WOMEN'S TRACK & FIELD - Bison Outdoor Classic, 3 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
MEN'S TRACK & FIELD - Bison Outdoor Classic, 3 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
WOMEN'S WATER POLO - No.16 Princeton, 7:30 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.

Saturday

BASEBALL - Lafayette, 12 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa. ; Lafayette, TBA, Lewisburg, Pa.
SOFTBALL - Lehigh, 1 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa. ; Lehigh, TBA, Lewisburg, Pa.
WOMEN'S ROWING - William Smith, 8:20 a.m., Shamokin Dam, Pa. (Susquehanna River)
WOMEN'S TRACK & FIELD - Bison Outdoor Classic, 9 a.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
MEN'S TRACK & FIELD - Bison Outdoor Classic, 9 a.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
MEN'S TRACK & FIELD - Susquehanna Invitational, 10 a.m., Selinsgrove, Pa.
WOMEN'S TENNIS - Army, 10 a.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
WOMEN'S LACROSSE - American, 1 p.m., Washington, D.C.
WOMEN'S WATER POLO - George Washington, 5 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
MEN'S LACROSSE - Lehigh, 8 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
MEN'S GOLF - Lafayette Invitational, All Day, Center Valley, Pa.

Sunday

BASEBALL - Lafayette, 12 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa. ; Lafayette, TBA, Lewisburg, Pa.
SOFTBALL - Lehigh, 12 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa. ; Lehigh, TBA, Lewisburg, Pa.
MEN'S TENNIS - Lafayette, 1 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
WOMEN'S TENNIS - Lafayette, 1 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
MEN'S GOLF - Lafayette Invitational, All Day, Center Valley, Pa.

Raiders overpower Bison

By John Mlodzinski
Senior Writer

The men's tennis team suffered a tough loss to Colgate, as they fell to the Raiders 5-2 on Sunday, April 8th. After their match on Saturday against Fairleigh Dickinson was cancelled due to adverse weather conditions, the team hoped the extra day of rest would provide them with an extra push to pick up their first Patriot League win of the season. The team played very well and kept most of the matches' close; however, they were not able to pull out the victory.

Colgate 5
Bucknell 2

"Once again the match could have gone either way," said Daniel Bednarek '09.

Colgate struck first and picked up the doubles point, winning two of the three doubles matches. In the No. 1 doubles spot, Jonathon Brenner '09 and Ryan Sandburg '09 picked up the lone doubles victory for the Bison by beating Chris Innes and Marshall Wheeler, 8-4.

Ira Reibeisen '08 and Ben Young '08 teamed up in the No. 2 doubles spot, but were not able to overcome the duo of Martin MacIntyre and Tyler Deck, as they fell, 8-6. In the No. 3 doubles spot, Bednarek and Zach Hascoe '10 fell to John Nogueras and Michael Yassky, 8-4.

Although the Bison played very well in the singles matches many went to a third set they were only able to muster two points. Reibeisen and Bednarek recorded the only points for the Bison, as Reibeisen defeated Innes, 6-4, 6-3, in the No. 1 singles spot and Bednarek beat Yassky, 6-2, 3-6, 10-3, in the no. 6 singles spot.

Sandburg, Brenner and Young all took their matches to a third set, but were not able to secure a point in any of them. Sandburg fell to MacIntyre, 2-6, 6-3, 6-4, in the No. 2 singles match. Brenner lost his match to Deck, 6-7(4), 6-3, 6-4, in the No. 4 singles spot and Young was defeated by Nogueras, 6-4, 4-6, 10-6, in the No. 5 singles spot. Hascoe's match was the only Bucknell loss that didn't go to three sets. He fell to Wheeler, 6-2, 6-4, in the No. 3 singles spot.

The team realizes that they probably should have beaten Colgate and that they need to work on closing out the matches.

"We just had trouble closing out most of our individual matches...We can definitely beat them, and I really hope that we get the opportunity to in the Patriot League tournament," Bednarek said.

The Bison return to action this Thursday, April 12th, when they face Lehigh on the Varsity Tennis Courts. The match is slated to begin at 3:30 pm.

Softball standout smashes records

By Jake Meyers
Contributing Writer

Lauren Litts '07 is one of the best athletes at the University. She has the school home run record under her belt, and the RBI record too. Every game she will get a hit, hug a teammate or demoralize her opponent; most of the time it is all three. But when Litts walks through the cafeteria her peers do not recognize her. She is the best kept secret on this campus.

It is Litts' own fault really. Polite and respectful, Litts is quick to say please and thank you and to constantly return to the abilities of her teammates, even when asked to talk about her own accomplishments. One just cannot act like that if one wants to be a campus celebrity.

But it is that lack of ego that makes her such an endearing sports figure. In an age of Prima Dona athletes who preen and primp their egos for the public, Litts strikes a marked contrast. Against St. Francis, Litts did not know she had broken the home run record until her teammates embraced her at home plate. The same thing happened when she broke the RBI record.

"I was sitting in the car with my dad and he said, 'Congratulations.' We had lost the game so I was wondering why he was congratulating me," Litts said. "Then I finally realized what had happened."

The former record holder happened to be Litts' old teammate and friend Lauren Wible '06. Litts says that she felt no conflict over breaking her former mentor's run total.

"Wible told me that I better break her record. She's a great friend," Litts said.

That support from her teammates, both current and former, made Litts a clubhouse favorite.

"She's a great hitter, a great teammate," classmate Monica Grinage '07 said.

This description seems to be the team consensus.

Raised in Pennsylvania (when she gets excited one can hear a slight accent) Litts remains close to her family. They still follow her athletic career, sometimes even closer than she does.

"I don't worry about my stats, I let my dad do that," Litts said.

But overall Litts credits her family with a lot of her success, even saying that her parents were always bigger heroes to her than any professional athlete.

"I know everyone says that, but I don't care. It's true," Litts said.

When pressed for more information about her record, Litts just said, "I'm not about stats. I'm about the team. If you play like that, the records will come."

And yes, she is right. It is about the team. But right now it is all about her.

Ryan Winn — The Bucknellian

Lauren Litts '07 follows through against the Drexel Dragons. Litts currently holds the home run and RBI record for the Orange and Blue.

Softball succumbs to Bloomsburg

By Barbara Perlman
Sports Editor

BU 2
Bucknell 0

After its two-game stint at Colgate was postponed due to wintry conditions, the softball team headed back into action as it fell to Bloomsburg 2-0. Despite holding the Huskies to only two runs and seven hits, Bloomsburg's pitching proved too strong as the Bison were held to only two hits.

Pitcher Christie Wiest '08 started the game strong, striking out two in only the first inning. She would go on to strike out two more and allow only three hits. The Huskies would fail to score until the fourth when Missy Bachert blasted one out of the park to put Bloomsburg ahead 1-0.

The Bison finally managed a hit in the fifth as Kristin Frick '09 singled. The Orange and Blue did reach base again with a hit by Erin Curatola '08, but yet another Bison would be stranded on base. Bloomsburg responded with a pair of hits in the bottom of the sixth, scoring another run, which proved to be enough to secure the win.

Despite two more Bison reaching bases in the seventh, the effort would prove to be too little too late as the Bison fell in a well-pitched 2-0 decision.

Bison struggle through stiff competition

By Kyle Barndollar
Writer

Holy Cross 16
Bucknell 6

The women's lacrosse team dropped their fourth straight contest last weekend, falling to the visiting Holy Cross team 16-6. The Bison kept it close for the first 25 minutes, but six Crusader goals in the final six minutes and 33 seconds of the first half put the game out of reach for the home team.

"We did not play our best lacrosse on Saturday," Head Coach Jess Spadafora said. "At this level and in this league we always have to be at our best, every single minute of every game."

The season can only be described as an up and down affair for the Orange and Blue so far. After losing their first three games, the Bison came back strong to win four straight, before losing their last four games to bring them to 4-7 overall, and 1-2 in the Patriot League. Holy Cross, on the other hand, are 8-4 overall in the season and have won seven of their last nine games. The Crusaders currently sit at first place in the conference with a 3-0 record in league games.

It took six minutes and four seconds for Cara O'Sullivan of Holy Cross to score the game's first goal. Bonnie Buechel '09 tied the game at 1-1 seven and a half minutes later, but Kristine Corkum answered for the Crusaders with two goals in 19 seconds to push the score to 3-1. Chelsea Peters '10 scored the first of her two goals to bring the Bison within one goal before Holy Cross began their crippling run that all but decided the game.

The Crusaders would score 10 of the game's next 12 goals to stretch their lead to 13-4 by the 22 minute mark of the second half. Six different players scored for the visitors during the run, while the Bison received goals from Alison Heffernan '10 and Peters during the run, with Peters' goal coming just before the halftime buzzer.

Peters has now scored six goals in three games, while Heffernan looks to have fully recovered from an early season head injury and has cracked the starting lineup.

Buechel and Sarah Collins '09 scored consecutive goals to slow the barrage of goals from the defending Patriot League Champions. Collins' goal came off of a Shauna Weinstein '07 feed, which was the only assist registered by a Bison player all game. Buechel's goal was her second of the game, and a team-leading 25th of the season.

The final 18:58 saw only three goals, all of which came from the Crusaders, who seem to be picking up some of the slack provided by their men's lacrosse team that managed just two wins in their last 18 Patriot League games.

The Bison are currently in fourth place in the conference, owning the tie-breaker with Colgate thanks to overall winning percentage, despite having played two less games than the Raiders and losing in their head-to-head match up.

The Bison will have to finish with a better league record than Colgate if they hope to retain the fourth seed and earn a spot in the conference tournament, where they would likely face Holy Cross again, who beat second place American by 10 earlier in the year. Lehigh, who the Bison defeated by one in Bethlehem, Pa. on March 24, currently sits in third place with a 2-1 record in the Patriot League.

The Bison host a 2-8 Wagner squad on Thursday, before traveling to Washington D.C. on Saturday to battle American in a tough league game. A Bison win in the nation's capital would be a big step towards a playoff berth.

"This is a talented group, we have every aspect of the game—the athleticism, the speed, and the other things that you can't recruit and teach," Spadafora said. "Heart and desire."

Ryan Winn — The Bucknellian

Lauren Deitrich '08 avoids a defenseman against Robert Morris. Deitrich has scored eight goals on the season and has a .400 shot percentage.

BORED WITH YOUR USUAL ROUTINE?
Get on the ball & write for Sports
contact blp004@

La Primavera
Rt. 45 West Lewisburg
523-1515
Sun, Tues-Thurs 11-10
Fri-Sat 11-11
Weekly Specials
Tues: Chicken & Veal $12.95
Wed: Seafood Night $12.95
Thurs: Steak Night $12.95
Sun: Pasta Special $8.95
-Pizzas to go! $16.95 for 2 large pizzas
-Full Liquor Bar
-Available for Formals, Graduation Dinners, Reunions
-Lunch Buffet 11-3
COUPON: Buy one entree, get 2nd one half off!
COUPON: 10% off total purchase!
Coupons cannot be used on weekly specials

Nancy's Nu-Wave Salon
look your best
Wax Specials
Eye Brows $7
Upper Lip $5
Chin $5
Sideburns $5
Full Legs $25
Knees Down $15
Under Arms $10
Back $20
Main Street (Rte 45) Montandon
524-2315
www.nancysnuwave.com

STEIN'S
FLOWERS & GIFTS
220 Market Street
Lewisburg, PA 17837
(570)-524-9933
www.steinsflowersandgifts.com

Ellacinders
Jewelry & Bead Bar
Classes...Birthday Parties...Weddings...Girls' Nite Out
566 North Derr Drive
Lewisburg PA 17837
Phone 570 522 0880
cjreed@dejazzd.com
HOURS – Mon-Fri 11 am - 7 pm Sat 10 am - 4 pm
Create Your Own Designs!

COLDWELL BANKER
PENN ONE REAL ESTATE
Thank You, Bucknell!!
For thirty years of calling Bucknell and Lewisburg home.
Susan Warner-Mills, Sales Associate
Competence, Integrity, Service
524-7500; swm@coldwellbanker.com

Mer Cares

Dear Mer:

I've started to freak out lately because I'm at a loss of what to do this summer. My parents really want me to make this summer count and do something "worthwhile for my future," but I sort of just wanted to sit by the pool and relax or go to the beach with my friends for a few weeks. But now it seems as if they are all getting jobs somehow. It's too late for an internship probably so I don't know what to do. I suppose since I'm in college I should be doing something educational for my resume during the summer but I don't want this summer to be a total bust either.

—Jobless Procrastinator

Dear Jobless:

Your summer doesn't have to be a waste—you can improve your resume and still have some fun on the side. Let's face it—once we get out into the "real world" it certainly won't be fun and games anymore as we struggle to pay various bills and rent, along with going to our jobs. College should be the best time of your life and you should have fun to a certain extent, but it does help to put yourself out there early so you can get more experience in a field of work you may enjoy, which will help you later on when you try to secure a good job.

You have many options for the summer. For example, you could take classes at a nearby university in your hometown to get extra credits and then you could come back to school next year with the opportunity to take electives you may not have been able to take before. You could also have your parents look in the newspapers where you live and see if there are any good summer jobs available. Sometimes there are even advertisements for jobs on the bulletin boards in shopping centers, etc. You could go online and go nuts on Google; type in all sorts of ideas for summer jobs or internships in your area or field of work. If you're lucky, you'll have relatives or friends near potential internship locations and then you've got your housing covered.

Most jobs will give you a stipend to use to spend on food, gas, etc. If you're looking to save more money, you could always take public transportation or make meals instead of going out to restaurants. I'm sure if you look around your hometown as soon as you get home, or kindly ask your parents to be on the lookout for opportunities, you are likely to find something. While many internship application deadlines have passed, there may still be some open that have rolling deadlines, so I would check those out ASAP.

If you can't find a highly "prestigious" job to brag about, so what? You'll just have to be more on top of things for next year. As for this summer, if worst comes to worst, you might have to be a waiter or shelve books at the bookstore all day long, but you will earn a lot of money. Or you could work part time during the day and take classes in the evening or baby-sit in the evening (always easy money) and then go to a late movie with friends. If you are working a full-time job from 9-5, you will still have plenty of time to hang out with friends at night and usually with a job like that you get a week or so of vacation leave, which you could spend with your family or even take that trip to the beach with your friends.

Love,
Mer

Please send questions regarding any topic to marc001@Bucknell.edu with subject line reading "advice" or you may send a letter via campus mail to box number C1099. I look forward to hearing from you!

Thrifty Threads motivates kids

By Nilanjana Saha
Features Editor

Bison Corps collected a wide variety of items on Monday for Thrifty Threads, a store established to reward students in Linntown Elementary School.

Thrifty Threads collects items for inventory at the school store where students receive vouchers for academic excellence, acts of kindness, helping their peers and community and various other reasons.

"It motivates the kids to behave in school which is not an easy task, especially for that age group," said Jennifer Bowers '09, who helped organize and collect items for the program.

Bison Corps received stationary, school supplies, books, costumes, jewelry, hats, clothes, trinkets and other items for the store.

Students from any socio-economic status can shop at the store and often, the school has more than a hundred students shop for items daily.

"It is really using resources wisely," said Vanessa Hershberger '08, who first heard about the program through her job at the Listening Post in local schools.

> "It motivates the kids to behave in school which is not an easy task, especially for that age group."
> —Jennifer Bowers '09

"Everybody has stuff that they don't like. And think about what you appreciated when you were in fourth and fifth grade."

Students can learn that when they work hard, they can earn some of what they want. "This program really gives value to their efforts," Hershberger said.

Hershberger presented the idea to Bison Corps after she had learned that the store needed more items for Christmas.

"Students use the store to buy presents for their families, or supplement them," she said.

Bison Corps picked up the project as a means to establish a stronger relationship between the community and residential halls. They sent out emails requesting items from the campus community. They also put out door hangers and collected the items by going door to door.

"This is something we saw direct results for. The items are going directly to the kids," Bowers said.

Although Bison Corps has already collected donations from the campus, Thrifty Threads is always looking for donations.

"I would definitely like to see it done in the future," Hershberger said. "Anytime anyone has a bag of things, I can always be contacted and I will always take it to the school."

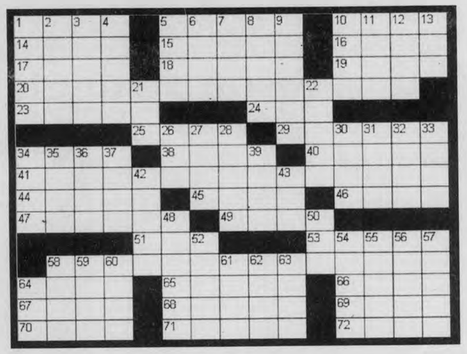
"Writing is a struggle against silence."

—Carlos Fuentes

Write for Features

E-mail ns022@

The Bucknellian Crossword



Across

1. Maternity ward women
5. Burp
10. Glasgow guy
14. Heroic tale
15. Gem State
16. Home to the Buckeyes
17. Italian male name
18. Resurrected
19. Dryer fuzz
20. Continuously
23. Disgusting
24. Greek letter P
25. Bottle tops
29. Socket
34. Belonging to Bond's creator
38. Microwave
40. Treasure __
41. Continuously
44. Type of power or system
45. Transportation fee
46. Fictitous newsman Clark
47. Completely wrong
49. Parking places
51. Curved line
53. Gives off
58. Continuously
64. Body part
65. LI x XII
66. Joy
67. Small insect
68. Aristocratic
69. Kansas, to Dorothy
70. Prohibits
71. Alarm clock option
72. __ the line

Down

1. Talk show host Mullally
2. Phantom's musical hangout
3. Famed king of Crete
4. Friend to Boo Radley
5. Penguin or pelican
6. Rework a draft
7. Whip
8. Show support at a sporting event
9. Boss
10. Unaccompanied
11. Fashion forward
12. Sty cry
13. Small child
21. Manhattan (abbr.)
22. Troublemakers
26. In __ event
27. Rapper Daddy, before his name change
28. Smokeless tobacco brand
30. Difficult journey
31. Can't Buy Me __
32. Divisible by two
33. Circus shelter
34. __ long story
35. Off-duty, illegally (abbr.)
36. Foster film (1994)
37. Snow, to Scots
39. Continental currency
42. Groove, down in one's sole
43. Collecting a pension (abbr.)
48. Merchant
50. Congressional VIP
52. Ride a bike
54. Strength
55. White house
56. Main melody
57. Stallion
58. Tolstoy's __ Karenina
59. Slant
60. Allows
61. Germany, Japan and Italy, once
62. Nick at __
63. Lose weight
64. Soviet org.

ByVo Crosswords

March 30 Answers

Book Your Graduation Party!

BROOKPARK STATION Cafe

"Casual dining with a gourmet flair"

Fresh Sushi & Vegetarian Items

Catering & Takeout Platters

B.Y.O.B.

Wireless Internet

Mon-Sat 8:00-8:00 Sun 8:00-2:00

1 Mile West of Town on RT. 45

542-FOOD (3663)

BRYNWOOD Rentals 535 Inc.

In Lewisburg Since 1969

Your search begins..... and ends here.

Professional 24/7 Maintenance Staff

Apartments (furnished & unfurnished)

Houses for professionals students families

Rental Garages Also Available

Office & Retail Space 300—3,000 sq ft

brynwoodrentals.com

611 Market Street, Lewisburg

ph: 570.524.2121 x 3

INDIGO HAIR & NAIL STUDIO

106 Market Street
Lewisburg, Pennsylvania 17837
570-524-7888

How to jazz up your room

By Samantha Kantor
Writer

Courtesy of Samantha Kantor

Dollar stores sell bright, colorful utensils for affordable prices that could be used to entertain guests and brighten up the dorm room.

With priority numbers out and with the block-booking bonanza inching closer, everyone has housing on their minds. The higher order concern is, of course, leaving for the summer with somewhere to live. But it's never too soon to start thinking about interior décor.

Whether in a dorm room or an off-campus house, any University student can tell you that his or her room is a far cry from luxurious.

Many students accept defeat when attempting to make their living space the least bit creative; a dorm room will always be a dorm room, regardless of the tedious effort for some kind of aesthetically pleasing result. To those students, I say this: there is always hope in the realm of dorm room décor, and it doesn't have to take a chunk out of that summer job salary, especially once you know where to start.

Here are some ideas on how to easily and affordably jazz up your living space.

Pictures: What else could make your room look more exuberant than hundreds of pictures of you and your friends?

CVS.com allows you to upload pictures from your digital camera straight to the store for only 19 cents per print. You can pick them up at the store an hour after the upload, or you can have them mailed straight to your campus mailbox. What should you do once you have them?

Rachael Bulmer '10 came up with a creative idea of her own.

"My roommate and I bordered our entire room and taped captions we cut out from magazines on them. It made the pictures even more fun," Bulmer said. "We literally get compliments from every single person who comes in our room.

Plus, at the end of the year, we are going to use them to make a scrapbook."

Bedding: since wall space and surface space often exist minimally in a dorm room, your bed, an essential and most favored piece of furniture, can be a great place to liven up your room.

Stray away from conventional sheets and go for something bright. For girls, lime green sheets and a pink comforter are colors that really stand out in a room. For boys, a sharp contrast between a white comforter and dark navy, red or green sheets can work wonders.

Bedding can be pretty pricey, so if you want to forego a new sheet set, but still want to make a statement with your décor, throw those dull sheets in some dye and be creative. You can buy dye for your project at artistcraftsman.com for only $3.14 per bottle of color!

Curtains: not only can curtains keep away the peeping Toms, but they can also add a homey element to your living space. Wal-Mart has curtains priced between $10 and $20 that can give your room the lift it needs.

Also, look into curtain scarves; they are usually priced in the same range as curtains and can create a tranquil atmosphere in your living space.

Area Rugs: an entire dorm usually has one type of carpet, and generally the University carpet tends to be on the drab side. So why not be the person whose feet wake up to a plush and bright carpet every morning when they step out of bed? Area rugs, though they can be expensive, are worth the price in the long run because they are investments that can be used year to year.

When picking one out, make sure you pick out a color that won't get dirty (no whites, creams or pastels). Also, make sure it is a carpet that is both fun and timeless. If you are going to invest, invest in something that won't go out of style.

Blue and Orange Pride: whether it's pom-poms you still have from basketball season or an invitation to a party, keep it all. Make yourself a wall of memories.

"I keep everything, whether it's a basketball ticket or something I bring home from a themed event," Stephanie Needell '10 said. "I hang things anywhere I can find the room, and it makes my room look so much more fun. Plus I get to remember all of the stuff I've done this year."

> There is always hope in the realm of dorm room décor, and it doesn't have to take a chunk out of that summer job salary, especially once you know where to start.

Dollar General: "You got all of that for eight dollars?" Katie Kessler '10 said when I showed her several purchases I made at Dollar General, just off Route 15 North.

Though not everything in the store is a dollar, there is a purple dot system that creates huge savings on almost every item.

Dollar General has great Tupperware and baskets in bright colors that you can use to store your books, shoes, clothes, etc.

If you are looking to entertain guests, Dollar General carries all different kinds of utensils, bowls, plates and cups in exciting and bright colors.

It also sells accent pieces such as picture frames, lamps and decorative wreaths for as little as $.60.

I wouldn't recommend relying on Dollar General for all of your room needs, but it's definitely a good place to pick up odds and ends that you wouldn't necessarily be buying if the prices weren't so low. It's definitely worth a visit come next semester.

Hopefully, some of these suggestions have pointed you in the right direction to a homier living space. Once you begin your room transformation, you'll see an increase in the amount of compliments you receive, as well as the amount of guests you have.

So once your housing status for next year is set, start putting some effort into making your room as fabulous as possible. Remember, any living space has the potential to be sophisticated, fun and impressive; just add a little creativity.

Another tantalizing edition brought to you by ...

Ms. Love and the Bubble

Dear Ms. O,

I am having a bit of a hard time at work lately. Please pardon the pun, but I've come to find my boss extremely attractive. She's only a couple of years older than me, and has a significant other, but I still can't seem to get my mind off her.

I can do nothing but think about her while I'm at work, and every time I see her I just keep getting more and more excited. I dream about her day and night, and have mentioned "doing her" to my work buddies. I'm afraid that if I keep this up, I may get fired, or worse, I might force myself on her. What should I do to curb my passion for my boss?

- Hard at Work

Dear Hard at Work,

You're not the only person who has wanted to get down and dirty with a teacher, a friend's parent, or in your case, your boss. Many people are attracted to these authority figures who have a large presence in their lives.

But these situations need to be handled delicately because they can have a large impact on a lot of peoples' lives if you make the wrong choice. They have the capacity to ruin families and careers, and in serious cases, can land you with a sexual harassment suit that could follow you for the rest of your life.

It seems your feelings are pretty serious, and it's good that you are attempting to address them because they're probably not going to go away on their own. Your options vary, but you need to take some sort of action.

First, try to distract yourself. Spend time with friends so you're not dwelling on your emotions.

Make yourself available for meeting new people. You might find someone who's worth a second glance and won't be a detriment to your future career. If you find someone relationship-worthy, your attention toward your boss may fade away.

You may need definitive closure. Take the time to sit down with your boss and confess your feelings for her. Most importantly, do not come onto her. Don't even consider it.

You need to be professional but honest. Don't expect your boss to return your sentiments. You need to be prepared for rejection.

Clarify that you don't expect your feelings to be reciprocated but you needed to get it out in the open.

When explaining your feelings, don't cross the employer-employee line. Wording something inappropriately may result in the termination of your employment.

At the same time, if your desires are distracting you from doing your job and draining your potential, maybe not working with your boss anymore will help you get back on track.

No matter how well the conversation goes, there is still a possibility that your boss will feel uncomfortable working with you and you could lose your job. No one can tell exactly how she will react.

If you don't feel you're emotionally capable of taking rejection from this person or if telling this person is truly not an option, then don't reveal your feelings. Your best option, then, is to seek professional help. You need to get these feelings under control so you can move on and not jeopardize your future.

Time for some tough love.

You need to keep your feelings solely between you and your boss. You shouldn't be sharing your sexual fantasies with colleagues, especially concerning a co-worker. It undermines authority and can create discomfort in the workplace—not to mention, it's also extremely inappropriate.

Most significantly, I can't stress enough the importance of self-restraint. In your letter you said that you worry you may try to force yourself on your boss, and that is not acceptable in any situation. You need to be able to control your urges. If you feel that you can't, you should seek help. Contact Psychological Services on campus for more information and assistance.

If you don't resolve this issue, an impulsive action could lead to any number of predicaments, including losing your job, losing friendships or even spending time in prison.

Keep your cool, be smart and don't let your attraction take over your life.

- Ms. O

E-mail me your questions at MsOintheBubble@yahoo.com or send them through campus mail to Ms. O, The Bucknellian, C-3952. All authors of questions will remain anonymous.

"Turn your Power ON and Add LIFE to your Years!"

MORRISON'S ADVANCED CHIROPRACTIC CARE

Michael D. Morrison D.C.
1205 W Market Street
Lewisburg, PA 17837
Office: 570-523-1221

A Healthy Spine Equals a Healthy YOU!

Bucknell Students may receive a free exam and x-rays (if needed) with mention of this advertisement.

GREAT HOUSES FOR RENT

3 AND 4 BEDROOMS

AVAILABLE 2008 - 2009

WASHERS - DRYERS - DISHWASHERS

WHIRLPOOL TUBS

"The best houses available!"

570-524-5745 570-490-2922

CABROLLERMILLS@hotmail.com

Guitar Center

The Musician's Choice

5082 Jonestown Rd.
Harrisburg, PA 17112
717-652-7399

Shipping Available!

BRING IN THIS COUPON AND SAVE!

10% OFF!

THE BEST GEAR
THE BEST DEALS!

* some restrictions apply, see store for details

Red, Smoked BBQ!
Beef Brisket, Pork, Chicken, Ribs!
Sandwiches, Wraps, Salads, Platters!

NO RESERVATIONS NEEDED!

Call in for TAKEOUT!

SKEETER'S PIT BBQ

ON THE BLUFF
OVERLOOKING THE SCENIC SUSQUEHANNA RIVER

AT THE INTERSECTION OF ROUTES 11 & 15
SHAMOKIN DAM

570.743.2727

Daily 11:00am - 10:00pm
Sundays till 9:00pm

www.SkeetersBBQ.com

Students Against Multiple Sclerosis hosts dance to raise awareness

By Liz Stein
Staff Writer

Students Against Multiple Sclerosis (SAMS) will hold its annual fundraising dance, a 24-hour event, at the University to increase awareness about Multiple Sclerosis (MS) and to raise money for the National MS Society. This year's SAMS dance will begin at 5 p.m. on April 20 in the Bison.

For a 24-hour period, different campus groups, including fraternities, sororities and other student organizations, will sponsor an hour. The entire dance, featuring food, arts and crafts, music, and games, is open to everyone and is free to attend.

According to Alejandro Sanchez '07, president of the organization, SAMS has been in operation for over five years at the University. Last year, SAMS raised more than $400 which will be donated to the National MS society, combined with the money raised after this year's dance.

"While fundraising is a component of SAMS, its primary purpose is to raise awareness about MS," Sanchez said. "Surprisingly, while many can name rare cancers and viral diseases with ease, if you ask someone about MS, they may just shrug their shoulders at you."

Students like Sanchez who realize the extent to which Multiple Sclerosis affects its victims are also aware of the lack of attention paid to the disease.

"It is easy to overlook MS since it doesn't affect any particular demographic nor are its causes known with certainty," Sanchez said. "Some of its triggers are known, true, but it's not one of those 'flashy' diseases that catch media attention or movie plots. Thus, it goes largely overlooked. We try to educate our peers because the knowledge is important and meaningful."

According to the National MS Society website, "Multiple Sclerosis is a chronic, unpredictable disease of the central nervous system (the brain, optic nerves, and spinal cord)."

Loss of myelin in the axon leads to its inability of nerves to communicate with each other through electrical stimulation and causes symptoms of MS to appear.

It is believed to be an autoimmune disorder, which means the immune system incorrectly attacks the person's healthy tissue. Effects of MS include blurred vision, slurred speech, poor coordination, loss of balance, numbness, tremors, problems with memory and concentration, extreme fatigue, paralysis, blindness and more. These problems may come and go or, in some cases, are permanent.

Courtesy of Alejandro Sanchez

The majority of people who are diagnosed with MS are between the ages of 20 and 50, though individuals as old as 75 and as young as two have developed it. Experts do not consider MS to be a fatal disease because most people who have it live a normal lifespan.

"They may struggle to live as productively as they desire, often facing increasing limitations," according to the National MS Society Web site.

Approximately 400,000 Americans live with MS and every week around 200 new people are diagnosed. MS affects about 2.5 million people world-wide. Though it is difficult to determine who will develop the disease, studies suggest that genetic factors are important to some extent, though there is no proof that MS is directly inherited.

However, according to the National MS Society Web site, women are affected twice as much as men and it occurs more frequently among people who are of northern European descent.

Unfortunately, MS is difficult to diagnose because in the early stages, indicating symptoms of the disorder often come and go. Since a singular laboratory test to prove or rule out MS is still not available, people have to "wait and see" until their symptoms can be more easily interpreted by physicians.

As of today MS is not a curable disease, though there are FDA-approved medications that can retard its effects. In addition, "many therapeutic and technological advances are helping people manage symptoms," according to the National MS Society Web site.

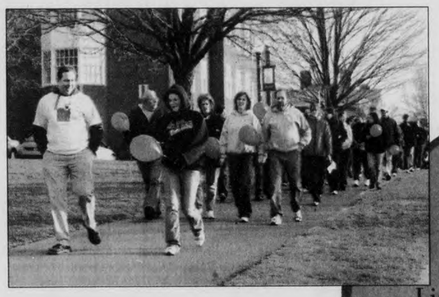
Each year advances are made in understanding and treating MS. With the help of organizations like SAMS, progress in research to find a cure is very encouraging. For more information about Multiple Sclerosis, visit the National MS Society website at www.nationalmssociety.org.

Facts about Multiple Sclerosis

Symptoms
- -Blurred vision
- -Slurred speech
- -Poor coordination
- -Loss of balance
- -Memory problems
- -Extreme fatigue
- -Paralysis

Who is likely to get it?
- -People between the ages of 20-50
- -Women are twice as likely to develop MS than men
- -People of Northern European descent

Who has it?
- -400,000 Americans
- -2.5 million worldwide
- -200 new diagonosis every week



Light the Night Walk raised $27,110.73 for the Leukemia & Lymphoma Society. Online donations will add to that amount.

Light the Night

Ellyn Ercolano—The Bucknellian

Illustration by Lily Beauvilliers

The Bucknellian

April 20, 2007

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

Volume 139, Number 11 | Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue | www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Towering timepieces

Features takes a look at the history and beauty of the University's three clock towers.

See page A10

Localized dining options would provide:

-A solution for the overcrowded current dining areas

-Convenience for students by creating flexible dining options

-A more pleasing dining experience with a wide variety of choices

-Maximized space efficiency

-Increased campus appeal to prospective students

-Necessary adaptation for our growing community

-Atmosphere for a living, learning environment

Breakfast in bed?

University students ask for more localized dining options in dorms

Ellyn Ercolano—The Bucknellian

Just two years ago, students could walk down the stairs of Larison Hall for a convenient cafeteria breakfast. The dining room closed in fall 2005 when Parhurst took over Dining Services.

Courtesy of Melissa Duffy

Greg Sutton '08, Mike Ambrosi '08, Kunan Gidwani '08 and James Nelson '08 enjoy a free dinner in Larison Dining Hall.

By Sara Roth
Writer

The Residence Hall Association (RHA) has submitted a tactic about localized dining options to the Campus Master Planning Committee.

A dinner held Wednesday in Larison Hall by the RHA promoted the tactic. Over 200 people attended the event.

"We are starting in Larison because it was the most recent place [where there was an alternate dining option], and we think it's a good starting ground," RHA director of communications Robert Hallinan '09 said. "We also hope to get people used to eating there again."

Student organizations such as the RHA were invited to submit tactics to the Campus Master Planning Committee. The committee will review them and decide which tactics fit best into President Brian C. Mitchell's Plan for Bucknell.

"We believe that [localized dining options] are a need that residents have in campus housing," Hallinan said.

RHA is in the process of completing a petition survey to determine the size of this need among students. Currently, Hallinan has eight and one-half pages of signatures of students.

"There are lots of people thrilled that the issue [of localized dining options] is coming to light again," Hallinan said.

Last year, a petition project was launched to re-open Larison Dining Hall, which closed in the spring of 2005. This dining hall was a local option for students living downhill and downtown. It offered, among other options not available at the Bostwick Cafeteria, make-your-own personal pizzas as well as many other made-to-order foods.

Christine Miller '08, a member of the Larison/Harris delegation for RHA, is involved in this petition project.

"Initially, our delegation had decided to undertake this project, so we wrote a petition to bring it back. But somewhere during those initial stages, we realized that it was going to be a much big-

See RHA page A2

Colleges scam students

By Kelly McGaw
Writer

A nationwide student loan probe is indicting universities and private student loan companies involved in unethical loan agreements that come at the expense of students. New York Attorney General Andrew Cuomo is leading the investigation of the $85 billion student loan industry into the potential conflicts of interest between private lenders and university officials.

At the heart of the investigation are the methods by which lenders have attempted to place themselves at the top of universities preferred lender lists. A preferred lender is one that receives most of a university's business because it is recommended to students and parents by the financial aid office.

"To our knowledge, Bucknell has never been involved with these particular lenders or these kinds of alleged practices," David Surgala, vice president for finance and administration, said. Nor does the University have a preferred lender list, Surgala said.

At universities that do utilize a preferred lender list, "more than 90 percent of borrowers select a lender from [it]," Attorney General Cuomo said.

The University does give recommendations. The Financial Aid Office recommends PNC Bank and Key Bank to students and has for the last 12 years "because of excellent customer service and loan processing efficiency, and not because of any kind of benefit the school might receive from those lenders," said Andrea Leithner, director of financial aid.

The University participates in the Federal Family Education

See LENDER page A2

University Pledge instituted

By Sophia Leong
Writer

The Office of the President and Bucknell Student Government (BSG) formally announced the approval and adoption of the University Pledge of Responsibility after an extensive two-year process of revision and review last Friday.

The pledge is a promise from the University to uphold certain standards of respect in an intellectual environment to allow for free exchange and advocacy of ideas.

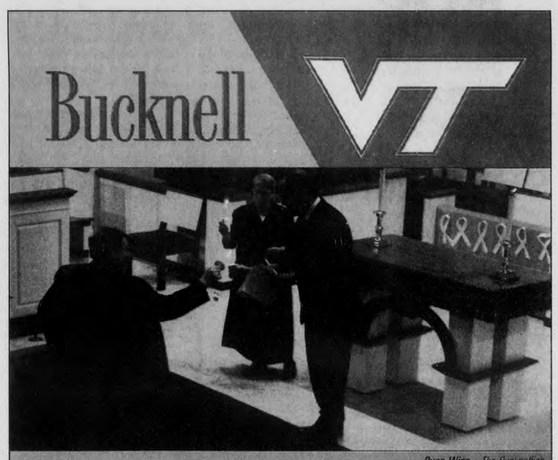
Originally drafted as the free speech pledge, the initial pledge was abandoned and restructured following the model of the Student Pledge of Responsibility.

On behalf of the student body, BSG President Sarah Cummings '08 felt that if students must take a pledge of responsibility upon matriculation, the University should likewise pledge to uphold the same responsibility.

"Every student signs a Student Pledge of Responsibility, but we currently receive nothing parallel in return," Cummings said. "To clearly articulate University responsibility is of paramount importance to a mutually respectful relationship between students and the University. We feel strongly that this document will help ease many common misconceptions and confusions surrounding current university policies and procedures."

Similar to the Student Pledge of Responsibility, the document affirms the students' freedom and right to learn in a safe and

See PLEDGE page A2



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Father Marty Moran lights his candle as Rev. Ian Oliver and Rabbi Serena Fujita look on. The University held a vigil Tuesday night for those whose lives were lost in the Virginia Tech shootings on Monday.

University mourns VTech

By Michelle Laxer and Evan Unger
News Editors

Days after the Virginia Tech tragedy, members of the University campus community are coming together to discuss the incident that left 32 dead and many wounded in Blacksburg, Va. on Monday.

Rev. Ian Oliver, the University's chaplain, has received a steady stream of e-mails and phone calls from members of the community with a connection to Virginia Tech.

"There is a temptation to try to explain [the tragedy]. It is much better to talk about your fears, feelings and questions," Oliver said. "There is a rush to figure out who is to blame for this, which is perfectly natural."

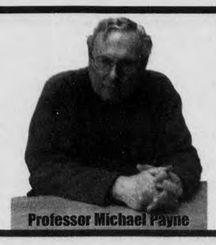
See VTECH page A2

Spotlight Profiles

The Bucknellian highlights professors and students whose contributions to the University will not soon be forgotten.

A3

INSIDE THIS ISSUE



Professor Michael Payne

Mandy Hart

Father Marty Moran

Ben Portman

Public Safety Log

Tuesday, April 10

HARASSMENT BY COMMUNICATIONS—McDonnell Hall: Harassing call and Internet message received.

ALARM - INTRUSION—Bertrand Library: Caused by employee.

SUSPICIOUS PERSON—McDonnell Hall: Gone on arrival.

Wednesday, April 11

ALARM - FIRE—Malesardi Hall: Unknown cause.

PROPERTY FOUND—7th Street Café: Bike recovered.

ALARM - INTRUSION—Coleman Hall Sound Booth: Accidental activation.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Harris Parking Lot: Vehicle damaged.

ALARM - FIRE—Malesardi Hall: Cause by candles left burning unattended.

Thursday, April 12

ALARM - INTRUSION—Special Collections, Bertrand Library: Employee activated.

THEFT—Demosthenean Hall: A barbeque grill was removed.

ALARM - INTRUSION—Computer Center, Taylor Hall: Unknown cause.

Friday, April 13

ALARM - FIRE—Vidinghoff Hall: Caused by cooking.

DISORDERLY CONDUCT—Campus: Follow-up investigation.

ALARM - FIRE—Bucknell West: Caused by cooking.

Saturday, April 14

DISORDERLY CONDUCT—Vedder Hall: Follow-up investigation.

PROPERTY FOUND—Coleman Hall: Recovered personal property.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Swartz Hall: Disciplinary referral.

LIQUOR LAW—McDonnell Hall: Disciplinary referral.

THEFT OF SERVICES—Trax Hall: Follow-up investigation.

ALARM - INTRUSION—West Fields Concessions Building: Unknown cause.

LIQUOR LAW—Larison Hall: Disciplinary referral.

LIQUOR LAW—Smith Hall: Disciplinary referral.

Sunday, April 15

LIQUOR LAW—Sigma Alpha Epsilon Fraternity: Disciplinary referral.

Monday, April 16

ALARM - INTRUSION—Procurement Services: Caused by employee.

PROPERTY DAMAGE—Trax Parking Lot: Vehicle damaged.

ALARM - FIRE—Edwards House: Caused by cooking.

Tuesday, April 17

ALARM - INTRUSION—O'Leary Center: Caused by employee.

ASSIST OTHER AGENCY—Gateway Malesardi: Assist Pennsylvania State Police.

ATTEMPTED FRAUD—Coleman Hall: Attempt to get personal information.

ALARM - INTRUSION—Computer Center, Taylor Hall: Employee activated.

EMS TRANSPORT—Field Hockey Field: Student transported to Evangelical Emergency Room for treatment.

Pledge to protect student rights respectable environment at the University.

PLEDGE From page A1

Articles of the pledge include the freedom of expression, the protection of student confidentiality, freedom of student associations and most importantly, the inclusion of students in policy-making decisions.

"The study of liberal arts provides an opportunity to engage openly in a free exchange of ideas within the context of a thoughtful and respectful university community," University President Brian C. Mitchell said. "This pledge helps to further articulate the determination of Bucknell to uphold this principle, which is at the core of the liberal arts tradition and the learning experience Bucknell provides."

Cummings said that BSG feels students should be informed and knowledgeable about their rights both as citizens in the United States and as students at the University. The pledge will help "illustrate the expectations students can have about their role within the University."

"I think it's great that the University is taking this responsibility," Hilary Casper '09 said. "I think that it will further bridge the gap between faculty and students. But I'm interested in seeing how the pledge will be enforced."

According to Cummings, the pledge is unenforceable. The University urges professors, administrators and staff to uphold the same standards of respect.

"Through the creation of this document, BSG hopes to ensure an environment of mutual respect and responsibility within the Bucknell community now and in the future," she said.

The pledge will be found in reading materials such as the Student Handbook or pre-orientation brochures for the incoming class of 2011.

Lenders giving colleges kickbacks

LENDER From page A1

Loan Program (FFELP) and primarily processes Federal Stafford Loans and Federal Parent Loans for Undergraduate Students (PLUS).

About 60 percent of students receive financial aid and most of them use the recommended PNC Bank as an intermediary.

The Financial Aid Office will process these loans through any bank a student or parent would like.

Clinton Orloski '09 is one of the many students employing PNC Bank. During the loan process, he chose this bank not only because the school recommended it, but also because it is his home bank and one that he trusts. The recent probe has raised his suspicions.

"If the school asked me to use a different bank I had never heard of I would be very skeptical," Orloski said.

Financial aid officers and private lenders all over the country have been caught in multiple ethically questionable acts. Officials at the University of Texas and University of Southern California, as well as a Department of Education official, were placed on leave recently for owning stock in the private lending company Student Loan Xpress.

This year, three University families are borrowing from Student Loan Xpress, and five are borrowing from the nation's largest student loan lender, Sallie Mae, according to the Financial Aid Office.

Sallie Mae has been at the forefront of the student loan investigation for major discretions including offering Indiana University $3 million dollars to leave the direct loan program in 2004. Sallie Mae has also been paying financial aid officials to serve on its advisory boards.

These types of inducements, including exotic trips and sports tickets, have been offered to financial aid officials around the country. Until now, the legality of these arrangements has been left unquestioned.

Fordham and St. John Universities engaged in revenue sharing with their private lenders, and have agreed to reimburse students. Boston, Long Island and Clemson Universities were all offered this incentive as well, according to the New York Times.

Helen Nunn, director of financial aid at Susquehanna University, told USAToday that lenders occasionally bring food and office supplies when they visit but that does not influence which lenders make the school's preferred list.

"No lender has tried to persuade me or the Office of Financial Aid to include them on any kind of lender list," Leithner said.

Lenders occasionally bring pens and notepads to the Financial Aid office, but they are supplies "which we can do with or without," she said.

Protection against this type of situation is written into university policy.

"We have an individual conflict of interest form that all administrators sign annually and are therefore required to advise us of any business relationships or personal relationships that they think may have an impact on our business decisions" Surgala said.

A multi-million dollar settlement has been reached in which schools and lenders such as Sallie Mae have agreed to reimburse students. Citibank, which loans to students at over 3,000 schools, will donate $2 million dollars to set up a fund to educate students about financial aid, according to CNN.com.

"My heart goes out to the parents [of the deceased students] for what kind of loss they must be going through. As a parent, you are never the same after losing a child."

— Polly Trawitz,
Dining Services employee

Vigil held for shooting victims

VTECH From page A1

Oliver said that people have told him how they appreciate the University community more because they realize how fragile it is.

Being on a college campus, "We are a trusted community. When that's violated it makes us wonder, 'What about us?'" Oliver said.

Bucknell Student Government has created a memorial in the Elaine Langone Center mall where students can write their thoughts in binders and create their own maroon and gold ribbons in memoriam. There is also a similar display on the second floor of the LC, where 32 white ribbons are placed on a field of maroon and gold cloth, created by Director of Service Learning Janice Butler.

"This is a memorial to pay respects to Virginia Tech and to show support for those of the Bucknell community [that may have been affected]," President of BSG Sarah Cummings said. "We planned the memorial after the candlelight vigil, where we saw how many people were affected and how close to home this tragedy has hit," she said.

For some students, Monday's tragedy hit too close to home. David Iselin '10 explained that he knows a set of twins and a girl from his high school class who attend Virginia Tech.

"I received a text message from one of the twins telling me that there had been a shooting in her sister's dorm, but that she was OK," Iselin said in an e-mail. "As I was talking to her, she heard shots from outside, and there was a helicopter landing outside of her room on the drill field. She seemed really shaken up."

Iselin's friends remained in their dorms and were not harmed. He said he is doing the best he can to comfort his friends but the distance makes it difficult.

"I was scared all day, not knowing how my friends were, and not being able to comfort them," he said. "I am trying to be supportive of all of my friends who go to school there, but it is hard to do that over IM or over the phone."

Iselin hopes the administration will begin taking the necessary steps to ensure such a thing does not happen at the University.

"I am worried about our own campus, here at Bucknell. I have not heard anything about our own emergency plan, and hope that one has been put in place following this tragedy," he said.

Sarah George '09 was "shocked and horrified" when she first heard the news from her father. George's brother graduated from Virginia Tech last year.

"I have visited VT many times and it's such a great university with an overwhelming sense of Hokie pride. However, I can't imagine the grief that they are going through right now," she said.

Students are not the only ones feeling the effects of Blacksburg. Four or five members of Dinning Services were pinning maroon and gold ribbons to their blue shirts on their break in the Bison Thursday morning.

"All you need is love. We are all human beings and have feelings, if we all recognize that we can prevent this from happening again," said Eric Masden, a worker in the Bison.

Polly Trawitz, another worker in the Bison, lost her 18-year-old son in a drunk driving incident five years ago.

"My heart goes out to the parents [of the deceased students] for what kind of loss they must be going through. As a parent, you are never the same after losing a child," Trawitz said.

SERV stages drunk driving accident

By Ahmed Kodouda
Writer

Student Emergency Response Volunteers (SERV) hosted a mock drunk driving accident to simulate the effects of drunk driving on victims Sunday in the Smith Parking Lot.

Stephen Dewey '09 played the part of the bicycle rider who was struck by the drunk driver.

"Basically, [the event] is providing a mock vehicle accident for ... faculty, students, staff and the general Lewisburg community to give them an idea of what actually happens in a drunk driving situation and how the EMTs handle it," Dewey said.

Maureen Gleason '10, a member of SERV, portrayed the drunk driver and had to be removed from the vehicle in a stretcher.

"Sitting in the car previous to the accident was one of the creepiest experiences of my life," Gleason said.

She said it was very surreal trying to act out the accident.

"As a victim, it felt very real because the EMTs were completely in character and it seemed that I was really in an accident," Gleason said.

Pamela Cohen '10 attended the event and felt that she gained a lot of insight regarding what happens during a drunk-driving accident.

"I found the mock drunk-driving accident put on by SERV to be very real and informative," Cohen said.

According to Cohen, the simulation was very realistic.

"The mock accident turned something that we normally only hear about into a reality. I personally feel that seeing the wrecked cars and the ambulance response made me much more aware of the consequences that one stupid mistake can have on my life," Cohen said.

Weslee Berke '10 agreed with Cohen that the accident was very educational.

"The mock motor vehicle accident was quite insightful. I thought that Maureen Gleason's portrayal of a drunk-driver was quite realistic. Her screaming was fabulous. It was slightly over the top, but besides that it was done quite well," Berke said.

Several ambulances and two fire trucks from the William Cameron Fire Station were present during the simulation. There were also paid emergency personnel in attendance in case a real incident occurred.

"I thought it was a little unnecessary for every vehicle from the fire department to be at the scene," Berke said.

Dewey was very surprised by how many people attended the event.

"For a mildly rainy afternoon, I was very impressed with the turnout by Bucknell students," Dewey said.

Recycle this paper!

RHA hosts free dinner

RHA From page A1

ger project than we had anticipated, so I volunteered to start a sub-committee," Miller said.

The RHA has been working hard to develop this tactic for some time. Last year Miller spoke with administrators about the fate of Larison Dinning Hall.

"[Last year] we [petitioned] and decided that we wanted to ultimately present a case to the administration, so we made surveys to find out exactly what students wanted back," Miller said.

Miller's RHA sub-committee eventually gathered 150 completed surveys as well as a petition signed by over 500 students.

The committee met with Dennis Swank, associate vice president of finance, as well as David Surgala, vice president of finance and administration.

"When the topic of re-opening Larison Dining Hall came up, it was immediately shot down by Dennis Swank, various other administrators of Bucknell, as well as BSG. I was appalled," Miller said. "By the end of the first meeting, it had been decided that the re-opening of Larison Dining Hall was not an option."

Swank did not respond to a request for coment by press time.

While Miller and her committee were not able to re-open Larison Dining Hall last year, the RHA is hoping that with the revised Plan for Bucknell and the option to submit formal tactics to the Campus Master Planning Committee, the re-opening of Larison Dining Hall will be considered more seriously.

The RHA hopes that localized dining will start in Larison Hall, with dining options following in the McDonnell Hall/Swartz Hall area and the Roberts, Trax, Kress (RTK) area. These options would undoubtedly benefit many students.

Some student-athletes echoed a different sentiment.

"The place I wish [Bucknell] would add food again is in the fieldhouse," Tanya Roth '09 said.

Corrections

In the April 13 issue, the news brief "Public Safety recognized nationally" should have said that Public Safety dispatchers have a combined 60 years of experience, not 60 hours.

Also in that issue, the date for the Janet Weis Fellowship reception should have said Tuesday, Oct. 9 at 7:30 p.m.

SPOTLIGHTS

Individuals leaving a mark at Bucknell

Martin O. Moran

University's Catholic Priest

By Anna Juan
Assistant Chief Copy Editor

Whether he is hiding 600 Easter eggs in the Newman House backyard, showing off his culinary talents at the famous Thursday night dinners or belting out "Praise Jesus!" just to keep you on your toes, Father Martin O. Moran III is a dynamic presence. Father Marty, as he is affectionately called, has presided over the University's Catholic Campus Ministry (CCM) program for nine years. He has touched many people's lives, both on and off campus.

College, not typically defined as the most "religious" time of life, marks a quest not only of self-discovery but perhaps also of spiritual identity. Moran's approach to campus spiritual life is a refreshing new take on how to tackle the question of religion and its role on college campuses.

Many students find refuge in the comfortable atmosphere of Newman House.

"Adjusting to college is a difficult process, but knowing that every Thursday there would be a warm, home-cooked meal and Father Marty greeting you with a smile and a joke reassured me that it would all be OK," Emily Haley '09 said.

"One of Father Marty's greatest strengths is his ability to recognize students who are looking to expand their Catholic background and provide an environment where they can grow in their faith," Derek Rice '08 said. "Coming from an area where very few kids my age actually care about their faith or got involved in their religion, it's great to see so many other kids getting involved here. I think a lot of it is because of Father Marty."

Moran has made great leaps for CCM during his time at the University, increasing involvement from about 90 students to more than 1,000. He makes lasting connections not only with current University students, but with alumni as well. Moran said the majority of his e-mail correspondences come from alumni.

"He's touched literally thousands of people's lives. He's done so much as an individual," Liz Lorson '07 said. "Throughout my four years, he always made me feel like a part of what he was doing. He always has a way to make you

See MORAN page A5

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Ben Portman '07

Former Inter-Fraternity Council President

By Brian Mulligan
Sports Editor

What comes to mind when you think of a student leader? The usual suspects come up such as students in Bucknell Student Government or Activities and Campus Events. Ben Portman '07 is not your typical leader on campus. He changed the face of so many different programs and blazed his own path during his four years here. The minute he stepped on campus he knew that the University was the place for him.

"Like most students, when I got on campus I fell in love with the place," Portman said. "It was only reinforced when I met people and felt the sense of community. Bucknell felt like the right place; it was more welcoming and comfortable."

Portman had the opportunity to work closely with Lewis Marrara, assistant dean of students and director of fraternity and sorority affairs, in the recolonization of Chi Phi Fraternity in fall of 2004 during his sophomore year. Portman was one of the eight founding fathers of Chi Phi and had the chance to define a fraternity. He served as the president from fall 2004 through fall 2005 and shaped the face of Chi Phi during its first year on campus.

"He is simply the best student we have at Bucknell in terms of leadership," Marrara said. "He is the best student I have ever had the privilege of working with in my 16 years in higher education."

A reflection of his work for Chi Phi was shown through the massive growth of the brotherhood during his three years in the fraternity. Just a year after recolonization, the fraternity had jumped to 40 brothers and currently membership is at 62 brothers. Additionally, Chi Phi has become one of the premier fraternities on campus in terms of risk management and programming.

Portman used his Chi Phi experience to springboard into the Inter-Fraternity Council (IFC) president position for the 2006 calendar year. He played an integral role in assisting Delta Upsilon in their recolonization on campus through strong recruitment in fall 2006. Also, he helped coordinate Greek Week which led to House Party in the spring.

"He has taken the IFC to a level it has never seen before by providing incredible leadership,

See PORTMAN page A5

Ellyn Ercolano—The Bucknellian

Michael Payne

Professor of English

By Nilanjana Saha
Features Editor

It's hard to imagine that when English Professor Michael Payne entered Berkeley as an undergraduate, he wanted to be a chemical engineer.

For the past 37 years at the University, Payne has been a devout scholar of Shakespeare and renaissance literature, a leading organizer of critical theory and served as an advocate for children's rights.

Payne remembers falling in love with Shakespeare's plays while working at the Renaissance Fair in Ashland, Ore., where he went trout fishing as a child. "It was the experience of seeing the plays," Payne said.

Payne has served as the director of Bucknell University Press, published more than 50 scholarly articles and several books, wrote more than 300 professional book reviews and served as the department chair of history and English.

English Professor and current department chair Harold Schweizer has worked with Payne for the past 20 years.

"Nobody in the English department has been as accomplished as him," Schweizer said. "He has been an extremely popular teacher and his Shakespeare and children's literature classes have been legendary."

Payne was awarded the Bucknell class of 1956 Lectureship for inspirational teaching, the John P. Crozer Professorship of English Literature, the Bucknell Presidential Professorship and two Bucknell Alumni Fellowships, to list a few. He has also given lectures all over the world.

Payne estimates he has taught approximately 6,000 students over the years.

"Every other week, I hear from someone I haven't heard from in years," Payne said.

"He makes it clear to his students that he is truly interested in what they think by inviting them to plumb the depth of a text,"

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Christina Phillips '06 said. "He is always there to support and guide us, quiety, humbly, generously helping us to fashion our own sense of self."

When Payne first came to the University, he already had experience teaching kindergarten, 10th grade English and college level Shakespeare courses. It was the opportunity to integrate knowledge from different fields that amazed him.

"The main difference was that you really get to know the faculty members and make connections between classes," Payne said.

It is this passion for interdisciplinary studies that led Payne to play a major role in the establishment of the Humanities Residential College and serve as the Senior Fellow, allowing further integration of academics and residential life.

"It encouraged faculty cooperation from [those] who worked on the project and it lasted for more than 20 years. For a curriculum initiative to last that long is pretty amazing," Payne said.

About 10 years ago, when a former colleague in children's studies retired, Payne found himself teaching courses in children's literature as well as Shakespeare, which eventually led to his deep commitment to children's rights and literacy.

When he retires, Payne plans to attend the University of Sheffield in England to train in psychoanalysis. He considers it to be a continuation of his current scholarly endeavors. After the two-year residency in England, Payne plans to return to Lewisburg to work with Head Start Programs.

Payne started the London semester program five years ago and has spent several semesters in England over the past 20 years. He is looking forward to the change.

"When you study the literature and history of a country and you finally get there, you want to compare what you know to what

See PAYNE page A5

Mandy Hart '07

Activities and Campus Events President

By Shannon Pitsch
Sports Editor

Walking across the quad or through the Kenneth Langone Athletic & Recreation Center, you will rarely see Mandy Hart '07 without a smile on her face. It is hard to believe that behind such an exuberant personality is a person who turns the wheels at the University. Responsible for bringing Jack's Mannequin, Kanye West and Bill Nye to campus, and a long list of other accomplishments, Hart is a student on most people's radar at the University.

As the president of Activities and Campus Events (ACE), the hospitality chair of the Lectureship Committee and a member of the Fall Fest and Concert Committees, Hart has a hand in the majority of concerts, lectures and events that take place every weekend. ACE receives the largest endowment from BSG and uses it to offer students an assortment of activities, including Chrysalis, regular concerts at Uptown, entertainment at 7th Street Café and trips to New York City and Baltimore, Md.

"Under her leadership this year, ACE has blossomed and developed in incredible ways," said Christy Kobus '07, vice president of advertising for ACE. "Her quiet leadership has guided ACE to not only provide the campus with fun and exciting entertainment, but she has also made sure that, as an organization, we are not accepting of the status quo."

When she is not working long hours in the ACE office or at the Campus Activities and Programs (CAP) center, Hart can be found in the athletic center as a student athletic trainer for the women's volleyball and softball teams.

"Without having any previous experience in the training room, Mandy stepped right in, always asking how she could help and using me as a guinea pig to practice the new tapings," Assistant Athletic Trainer Elise Kramer said. "In addition to working two sports, she helped out at swim meets, track meets, lent a helping hand during end of the year screenings and was a leader towards the younger student athletic trainers."

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Despite her hectic schedule, Hart usually walks around campus with a cheery smile and unbounded energy. She doesn't just use her activities as items to list on her résumé; she uses them to make a difference on campus for students.

"She never complains, always has a good attitude, is very responsible and goes the extra mile to help out," Kramer said.

"Mandy never does anything halfway," Kobus said. "She puts her whole heart, all her time and her seemingly endless energy into all commitments."

When asked how she had time to accomplish everything, Hart said, "You make time for the things that are important to you."

Entering her senior year of college, she was determined to leave a lasting impact on the Class of 2007. She helped make 100 Nights a success, worked on the senior gift drive and made getting Kanye West to come to Lewisburg the goal of her summer.

"The one thing about Bucknell that I really appreciate now that I am a senior is that I have had countless opportunities to develop myself as a role model," Hart said. "In the training room the athletes look to me for advice, and after being a peer alcohol instructor and a TA for the linguistics department, I believe that the leadership roles available on this campus are invaluable."

After graduation, Hart will seek a master's degree in the College Personnel Program at Miami University in Ohio. Considered the top program in the country, Hart chose Miami for its incredible opportunities, despite her desire to move closer to her family in Florida.

"I am most excited to really devote myself to something that I have been passionate about the

See HART page A5

BSG releases 2007-2008 budgets for all student clubs

For full details on how club budgets were calculated, visit the BSG-Finance public folder on Netspace

Organization	Requested	Approved	Fall 2007	Spring 2008	% Approved
ACE	26,700.00	26,700.00	13,800.00	12,900.00	100.00%
Adventurers Wanted	1,795.48	1,651.48	778.48	873.00	91.98%
Alliance for Community Education and Services	560.00	560.00	430.00	130.00	100.00%
Alpha Phi Omega	2,840.00	1,453.00	1,076.50	376.50	51.16%
American Chemical Society	2,178.75	777.00	672.00	105.00	35.66%
American Institute of Chemical Engineers	4,784.17	2,685.27	2,358.48	326.79	56.13%
American Society of Civil Engineers	7,157.75	6,462.75	5,785.25	677.50	90.29%
American Society of Mechanical Engineers	4,019.75	2,460.00	2,275.00	185.00	61.20%
Animal Behavior Club	3,816.25	3,636.25	3,297.00	339.25	95.28%
Army ROTC	2,418.20	1,335.80	700.60	635.20	55.24%
Art Acquisition	764.80	539.80	166.80	373.00	70.58%
Art Collective	1,720.00	1,720.00	860.00	860.00	100.00%
Association for Computing Machinery	770.90	200.00	100.00	100.00	25.94%
B.R.A.I.N.	1,664.00	-	-	-	0.00%
Be Fashion Magazine	4,858.07	1,207.59	1,027.59	180.00	24.86%
Best Buddies	2,230.00	660.00	322.50	337.50	29.60%
Beyond Unison	1,735.00	1,460.00	940.00	520.00	84.15%
Big Brothers Big Sisters	1,078.50	1,053.50	528.00	525.50	97.68%
Biology Club	2,094.68	1,824.67	1,086.37	738.30	87.11%
Biomedical Engineering Society	640.20	640.20	-	640.20	100.00%
Bison Abroad	1,655.66	1,497.16	553.66	943.50	90.43%
Bison Chips	350.00	350.00	175.00	175.00	100.00%
Bison Girls Dance Team	2,560.00	210.00	30.00	180.00	8.20%
Brothers and Sisters Empowered	12,743.00	1,885.50	1,168.00	717.50	14.80%
Bucknell Afrian Student Association	3,015.00	761.25	761.25	-	25.25%
Bucknell Anime	1,730.00	1,290.00	725.00	565.00	74.57%
Bucknell Anthropology and Sociology Club	110.00	110.00	55.00	55.00	100.00%
Bucknell Brigade	17,920.00	15,980.00	8,080.00	7,900.00	89.17%
Bucknell Business Leaders	925.80	180.00	105.00	75.00	19.44%
Bucknell Rifle Association	119.44	109.96	56.89	53.07	92.06%
Bucknell Swing	3,509.00	710.00	355.00	355.00	20.23%
Bucknell University Conservatives Club	7,259.02	7,099.02	4,676.51	2,422.51	97.80%
Burmese Cultural Organizations	3,834.20	819.60	394.60	425.00	21.38%
Calvin and Hobbes	5,657.69	5,657.69	2,974.91	2,682.78	100.00%
Caribbean Club	5,986.90	234.80	129.80	105.00	3.92%
Catholic Campus Ministry	15,710.00	8,934.60	5,335.30	3,599.30	56.87%
Caucus for Economic Justice	3,550.00	3,400.00	1,700.00	1,700.00	95.77%
Chess Club	1,099.90	99.90	99.90	-	9.08%
Chinese Cultural Association	4,294.00	3,694.00	465.00	3,229.00	86.03%
Circle K	1,287.75	1,065.76	505.38	560.38	82.76%
Climbing Club	2,815.52	2,815.62	1,582.22	1,233.40	100.00%
College Bowl	2,210.00	1,160.00	830.00	330.00	52.49%
College Democrats	368.72	368.74	143.74	225.00	100.01%
Colleges Against Cancer	4,719.00	4,200.00	240.00	3,960.00	89.00%
Comedy Improv	4,102.77	2,452.77	398.88	2,053.89	59.78%
Culture Couture	3,094.97	2,602.24	869.14	1,733.10	84.08%
Debate Team	4,710.00	2,505.00	1,405.00	1,100.00	53.18%
DiscipleMakers Christian Fellowship	1,628.10	638.09	404.16	233.93	39.19%
Do Random Acts of Kindness	626.58	626.58	266.48	360.10	100.00%
EIDOS	2,790.38	2,790.38	20.00	2,770.38	100.00%
Elephant in the Room	645.00	440.00	167.50	272.50	68.22%
Engineers without Borders	3,585.89	2,686.99	2,096.99	590.00	74.93%
EQUUS	1,097.40	947.40	464.40	483.00	86.33%
Fantasy Literature Club	470.00	470.77	235.77	235.00	100.16%
Fire and Ice	6,280.00	5,746.00	100.00	5,646.00	91.50%
FLAG&BT	3,640.00	3,085.00	1,490.00	1,595.00	84.75%
French Club	3,919.25	3,619.25	1,122.85	2,496.40	92.35%
Geological Society	666.00	541.00	402.00	139.00	81.23%
German Club	3,132.02	2,257.02	524.22	1,732.80	72.06%
Habitat for Humanity	4,592.17	2,912.16	856.08	2,056.08	63.42%
Hillel	3,813.24	2,153.50	1,281.00	872.50	56.47%
Hoodwink and Hooey	904.89	98.40	68.40	30.00	10.87%
Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers	2,040.00	980.00	675.00	305.00	48.04%
Interfraternity Council	11,180.00	9,435.00	1,225.00	8,210.00	84.39%
International Council	4,439.15	3,354.55	510.00	2,844.55	75.57%
InterVarsity	6,514.88	1,891.20	856.20	1,035.00	29.03%
Italian Club	1,715.00	550.00	475.00	75.00	32.07%
Jelani	1,937.20	332.50	103.00	229.50	17.16%
John Marshall PreLaw Society	557.82	497.82	277.82	220.00	89.24%
Korean Cultural Association	625.90	605.90	235.90	370.00	96.80%
KRAID: Videogamers at Bucknell	1,835.00	1,835.00	1,092.50	742.50	100.00%
Le Cubmre/OHLAS	3,185.00	1,810.00	1,660.00	150.00	56.83%
Mathematical Association of America	650.00	345.00	75.00	270.00	53.08%
Mirth Grinder	6,400.00	4,545.00	2,272.50	2,272.50	71.02%
Model UN	5,482.20	5,158.20	4,054.95	1,103.25	94.09%
Multicultural Council of Presidents	7,676.00	1,610.00	555.00	1,055.00	20.97%
Musical Theatre Club	1,557.69	658.94	500.00	158.94	42.30%
National Society of Black Engineers	3,535.00	335.00	80.00	255.00	9.48%
Omicron Delta Kappa	645.00	645.00	630.00	15.00	100.00%
One in Four	670.00	420.00	170.00	250.00	62.69%
Order of Omega	641.65	557.15	90.00	467.15	86.83%
Orthodox Christian Fellowship	980.30	510.30	255.15	255.15	52.06%
Outing Club	6,648.50	5,243.85	2,338.85	2,905.00	78.87%
Panhellenic Council	2,165.00	1,165.00	1,165.00	-	53.81%
Photography Club	1,618.54	890.09	728.78	161.31	54.99%
Piston Heads	322.40	322.40	71.20	251.20	100.00%
Pre-Health Society	2,932.32	1,922.32	807.32	1,115.00	65.56%
PSEA	482.00	442.00	96.00	346.00	91.70%
Psi Chi	946.00	575.00	173.00	402.00	60.78%
Psychology Club	641.46	483.21	337.26	145.95	75.33%
Rooke Chapel Congregation	2,337.88	2,025.38	875.13	1,150.25	86.63%
SERV	11,806.71	1,725.00	1,725.00	-	14.61%
Shotokan Karate Club	3,957.10	3,657.10	2,502.35	1,154.75	92.42%
Silhouettes	1,630.60	1,630.60	785.60	845.00	100.00%
Society of Physics Students	1,114.44	601.40	60.70	540.70	53.96%
Society of Women Engineers	1,928.00	1,628.00	1,428.00	200.00	84.45%
South Asian Students' Association	7,679.32	6,294.32	4,422.16	1,872.16	81.96%
Spanish Club	310.00	-	-	-	0.00%
Student Environmental Action Coalition	1,805.00	1,745.00	445.00	1,300.00	96.68%
Student for Asian Awareness at Bucknell	3,261.30	1,263.25	584.25	679.00	38.73%
Students Against Multiple Sclerosis	1,137.50	855.00	130.00	725.00	75.16%
Students for Fair Trade	1,363.35	1,013.35	273.35	740.00	74.33%
Students Helping Animals	890.00	890.00	465.00	425.00	100.00%
The Gathering	1,626.40	1,076.40	256.40	820.00	66.18%
Turkish Cultural Organization	5,201.28	74.04	-	74.04	1.42%
Two Past Midnight	1,120.00	210.00	165.00	45.00	18.75%
Vday	3,169.30	2,152.50	225.00	1,927.50	67.92%
Voices of Praise	658.60	168.60	75.00	93.60	25.60%
WVBU	11,109.64	1,900.44	1,900.44	-	17.11%
Gross Total	367,087.19	232,265.27	117,349.41	114,915.86	65.17%

'07 B. S. G. '08 Election guide

Class of 2008

President

Lauren Berninger
Hometown: Hyde Park, N.Y.
Activities: Class of 2008 Representative, Community Affairs Committee, CCM co-director of music, Traditions Committee, Orientation Assistant, Delta Gamma, SERV
Comment: Senior year is a time filled with uncertainties and endless expectations. As president I would like to facilitate better communication between BSG and the senior class by keeping the student body informed. In addition, I'd like to continue to develop stronger relations with the surrounding community and achieve a firm grasp on graduation and senior class event concerns early on.

Sarah Simmons
Hometown: West Friendship, Md.
Activities: Class of 2008 Representative, Student Affairs Committee, Student Calling Program, Club Soccer
Comment: In addition to planning and preparing senior year activities, I would like to improve the lines of communication between the CDC and Bucknell students. Improved communication will increase students' understanding of the available programs and opportunities as well as the CDC's ability to address the diverse needs of students.

Vice President

Connie Low
Hometown: Singapore / Annandale, N.J.
Activities: Class of 2008 Vice President, Orientation Assistant, Alumni Weekend Student Ambassador, Commencement Student Ambassador, Tour Guide, Alumni Career Services Specialist (CDC), Latino Dance Corner, ILTM Participant, Global Residential College
Comment: I would like to see an increased interaction between International and American students through a program called TALK Bucknell. My goal is to facilitate cultural exchange between students of all backgrounds. Not only do I hope to give the International students a sense of belonging and contribution to the Bucknell community but also to broaden more students' horizons. This program will build more bridges between Bucknell students and develop lifelong relationships that will sustain the Global Bucknell network.

Zachary Frenzel
Hometown: Mahopac, N.Y.
Activities: President of Phi Gamma Delta, Student Art Initiative Committee
Comment: If elected, I would like to work with the CDC to help them better understand the needs and concerns of the student body. More students should actively provide information that can help them better suit the needs of each student.

Secretary/Treasurer

Catharine Driever

Representatives

Lauren Berninger, Emily Chiodo, Kalani Cowles, Catharine Driever, John Elrod, Nate Humberston, Rosy Kim, Andrew King, Connie Low, Katie Metzler, Scotty Mohr, Sarah Simmons, Zachary Frenzel

Class of 2009

President

Harry Kastenbaum

Vice President

Katsie Calhoun

Alison Cutting
Hometown: Ithaca, N.Y.
Activities: Class Representative for Class of 2009, Traditions Chair for ACE, VP of Finance of Delta Gamma, Club Volleyball, BOF, Social Justice Residential College
Comment: As many of our classmates travel abroad, I would like to make sure their connection to Bucknell is never lost. To accomplish this, we can open a link of communication, through celebrations, creating an open forum to share experiences our class has had from around the world, which in turn will aid in fostering a sense of identity and common purpose among the class of 2009.

Keaton Thomas Wright
Hometown: Highland, N.Y.
Activities: Bucknell Club Ice Hockey
Comment: I would like to push the campus to make more student parking spaces available.

Secretary/Treasurer

Stephanie Rink

Representatives

Katsie Calhoun, Vicki Cohen, Alison Cutting, Eric Diamond, Zaf Kamar, Stephanie Karcher, Alice Lakiam, Josh Lercher, Matt Masone, Stephanie Rink, Erin Williams

Class of 2010

President

Scott Teagarden
Hometown: Chapel Hill, N.C.
Activities: BOF, Class of 2010 BSG President, We Brake For Nobody, Tour Guide, Internal Affairs Committee Member
Comment: This past semester I have worked to clear up the misconceptions about downtown laws and citations. I will continue to work with the Magistrate, Lewisburg Police, BSG's Exec board, and the Deanery to represent students and their rights both downtown and on campus.

Vice President

Justin Alsop
Hometown: Plano, Tx.
Activities: BSG, RHA, BOF Counselor, Tour Guide
Comment: Fall activities promote friendships. Activities during the spring could promote the same. A week of "Spring Festivities" (barbeques, water games, etc) spread across campus would be a relaxing way to end the year; reinforcing friendships to begin the summer with fond memories of Bucknell. The week could conclude with Chrysalis.

Alexandra Costa
Hometown: Barrington, R.I.
Activities: BSG (Academic Affairs Committee), RA 2007-2008, ACE, Society & Technology Residential, College
Comment: As your Vice President / Representative, I will build a strong sense of unity as we embark on a new year as Bucknellians. I will also work to implement the "One Card Project" where your BU ID can be used for laundry! VOTE FOR ALEX COSTA.

Natasha Vedage
Hometown: Bethlehem, Pa.
Activities: Class of 2010 BSG Vice President, CCM Member and lector, emerging Leaders, South Asian Students Association, American Medical Students' Association, Habitat for Humanity, BOF
Comment: One initiative I will take on as Vice President is the 2010 Alumni Mentor Program. Under this program, members of the Class of 2010 will have the opportunity to exchange contact information with alumni in their respective fields. Students will be able to personally meet their alumni mentor at a concluding dinner. My goal with this initiative is to create better and more personal relationships between alumni and current students.

Secretary/Treasurer

Heather Brake
Hometown: Baltimore, Md.
Activities: BSG Representative, BOF Counselor
Comment: If elected back into BSG, one initiative I will take on is creating an alternative way for students to work off points under the University's alcohol policy. Students should be given the chance to prove that they have learned from their mistake through some form of community service.

James DePaoli
Hometown: Danbury, Conn.
Activities: BSG Representative, Global Residential College, Global Committee, CCM Community Service Director
Comment: The biggest problem facing BSG is that the student body does not know how effective it can be. As Secretary/Treasurer, my main focus will be communication with the entire class of 2010. My goal is to effectively keep communication lines open throughout the entire year by allowing students to bring their issues directly to the 2010 Congress and through periodic updates to the entire class.

Randy Gowat
Hometown: Peckville, Pa.
Activities: ASCE, BOF Counselor, ACE, MAA, BC, BSG
Comment: If elected, I hope to help expedite the implementation of the one card initiative. The one card initiative would allow students to use Bucknell I.D.'s to enter dorms and pay for laundry. I feel that being locked out of dorms is a big problem that this initiative would help prevent.

Peter W. Lansinger
Hometown: Villanova, Pa.
Activities: BSG Representative, Golf, Intramural Sports
Comment: My biggest goal for next year is to organize more class-wide activities. Between fundraisers, picnics, and community service events, I will strive to bring our class closer together.

Representatives

Justin Alsop, Cassie Andreychik, Heather Brake, Alexandra Costa, Kevin Cooper-Smith, James DePaoli, Josh Douin, Zak Elmanakhly, Josh Goodman, Haakon Gould, Randy Gowat, Peter Lansinger, Emily Lind, Kevin McAlister, Jess Sturzenegger, Catherine Trieu, Natasha Vedage, Megan Wark, Katie Williamson

Due to space limitations, there will be no "News Briefs" this week. The column will return next week. Thank you for your understanding.

Portman leaves imprint on campus

BEN From page A3

accountability, new programming, energy, intelligence, vision and mentoring," Marrara said. "I cannot say enough great things about Ben."

Portman kicked off his senior year as an orientation assistant. He was the first face for over 30 first-year students on his hall and excelled in the position. He went above and beyond the call of duty by planning events for his first-year hall and visiting his hall throughout the school year.

During his senior year, he was voted by the campus to be the face of the University for the alumni during Homecoming as a host. He had the opportunity to meet with the board of trustees and be the liaison between the students and the administration and important alumni.

"In many ways it was an eye-opening experience, to see how much Bucknell has meant to alumni that come back for the first time in many years," Portman said. "To hear their stories was inspirational and calming that you can still stay connected to Bucknell even after you leave."

If you think that this involved student could not extend himself even more, Portman has served as an intern and coordinator of the Undergraduate Executive Internship Program. He was the liaison between the student body and administration of the University. Additionally, he is the first student reactor to ideas and policies that are being proposed by the administration.

"Ben is a mature and seasoned young professional with a strong work ethic who has upheld well the requirements of accessibility, confidentiality, empathy, and decorum in his role within the president's office," University President Brian C. Mitchell said.

ACE excels with Hart's ambitions

HART From page A3

whole time I was at Bucknell," Hart said. "Here there is a li[illegible] between academics and activities, whereas at Miami my activities will become my academics."

But before leaving for Oxford, Ohio, Hart will continue her hard work as the chair of the Senior Gift Drive and the decorating coordinator for Reunion Weekend.

When asked what she would miss most about her college experience, Hart said, "My friends more than anything. I have had the opportunity to meet and work with some amazing people, and the social support I get from the people I am constantly surrounded by is something I will miss incredibly. I can proudly and honestly say that I have gotten the most out of this experience, and I have loved every second of it."

Father Marty, a paternal figure

MORAN From page A3

smile or feel good about yourself."

One of Moran's main objectives is to inspire young Catholics to be leaders in the evolving world.

"He really pushes us to become better leaders; ... to be organized, to plan ahead, to always have a vision and set goals," said Mike Rakszawski '08, ministry team director of administration.

"I always remember that line from John F. Kennedy, Jr., where he said, 'Ask not what your country can do for you—ask what you can do for your country,'" Moran said. "I say, 'Ask not what your church can do for you—ask what you can do for your church.'"

All business aside, Moran has been consistently described as friendly, caring and welcoming.

"He's always said 'hi' to me. He remembered my name the first day. He's just been a really good inspiration for me as a Catholic, and he's like a friend," Linda Kang '10 said.

"Father Marty is almost able to drop everything he does and give undivided attention to a student," Graduate Student Patrick Golden said. "He puts our beliefs into action in the most positive and uplifting way."

From the beginning, Moran was inspired by the church's compassion for the poor. He said he has always wanted to do something that would make a difference in the world.

"When I was doing my college search, I actually wanted to be a physical therapist," Moran said. "Or a mortician. It must be a hard time for people in their lives when they lose a loved one. It's good to have someone there who can give comfort and help them as they are grieving."

When asked what his biggest accomplishment was, Moran said, "The greatest gift that I've gotten is at 4 o'clock on Commencement Weekend when everyone has their bags packed and they walk here [to Newman House] and say, 'I couldn't leave here without saying good-bye.' ... [T]hat's worth everything."

"I love working with college students. I love their vibrancy. This generation loves the world," Moran said. "That's one thing I feared before I got this job—that I wouldn't be able to do this anymore and that a part of me would have died."

Moran's jovial nature and inclusive attitude towards college students is what he is known for. Many of the interfaith dialogues and strategic planning within the religious groups on campus can be attributed to Moran.

"There's so much information given to them in four years ... and I just love the fact that we can open our door and they're willing to ask what we think about it. We can give them the Catholic Church's approach," he said.

It was recently announced that Moran will be leaving the University for his new position as executive director of the Catholic Campus Ministry Association (CCMA) at the end of this school year.

"I'm excited for [the future]. It's an awesome responsibility to realize that I've been asked to do this," Moran said. "I also think it's humbling to realize that something I put into the hands of God worked, and I'll have to put it in his hands again."

Always a joker, Moran smiled and said, "I'm probably not going to miss the long hours, though."

Write for news!

E-mail etu001@

Payne retires after 37 years

PAYNE From page A3

you experience," Payne said.

Payne describes his relationship with his students as a counterintuitive experience. "As I have gotten older, relationships with students have gotten easier," Payne said.

Schweizer said, "[Payne] has been a generous mentor to his students and colleagues. He is proactive in creating and fostering conversations."

Payne said the most satisfying work he has done during his career was due to collaborative efforts. According to Payne, scholarship in humanities seems to be single-person work.

"The fun that scientists have [in integrating studies] is not that common [in the humanities field]," Payne said.

But at the University, he has found a small community that fosters a sense of collaborative and interdisciplinary learning.

Payne also combines two best things about being a professor, according to Nick Kupensky '07. "He is remarkably brilliant and one of the most caring, wonderful human beings I have ever met and this combination is extremely rare," Kupensky said.

Payne will be giving his last lecture as a University professor on April 23 at 7:30 p.m.

"I will miss his presence as a friend and his incomparable intellectual curiosity," Schweizer said.

According to Slava Yamstreski, associate professor of Russian, "[Payne] will always remain a dear friend with whom [he] shared adventures on their 'lecture' tour to Russia and endless discussions."

The Bucknellian
Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue
Volume 139, Number #
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu
http://www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Editor-in-Chief
Andrew Larson '08

Associate Editor of Content
Matthew Saylor '08

Associate Editor of Layout
Lily Beauvilliers '09

Business Manager
Jared Napolitano '08

Senior Editor
Catie Heverling '07

News Editors
Evan Unger '09
Julia Fuchs '09
Michelle Laxer '09

Opinions Editors
Michael Dippery '08
Hallie Stebbins '08

Sports Editors
Barbara Perlman '09
Brian Mulligan '08
Shannon Pitsch '09

Features Editors
Nilanjana Saha '09
Brianna DelValle '10

Arts & Entertainment Editors
Janna Shapiro '08
Genna Jerrard '10

Photography Editors
Ryan Winn '08
Ellyn Ercolano '09

Chief Copy Editor
Molly Clay (grad)

Asst. Chief Copy Editor
Anna Juan '08

Advertising Managers
Meredith Reighard '07
Katie Casteel '08
Elaine Teng '09

Office Manager
Kate Wood '07

Circulation Manager
Adam Kahler '07

Subscriptions Manager
John Ostrow '09

Cartoonist
Juliana Su '09

Adviser
James F. Lee

Op-Ed Policy

The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editor-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 600 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

Publishing Information

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

Subscription Information

Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Bucknell University, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print office.

Advertising Policy

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements it deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577-1085. Copyright © 2007 The Bucknellian

The Bucknellian
Editorial

Compassion helps to overcome tragedy

You didn't even have to know anyone at Virginia Tech to shed a tear for the 33 lives cut unforgivably short in the shootings Monday.

But it's hard to find anyone at the University who doesn't have a connection to the school with an enrollment of 26,000. Three-quarters of students and the vast majority of staff remember Richard Ferraro, who left his post at the University as dean of students to become assistant vice president of student affairs at Virginia Tech.

Another University staff member's son, who is about to graduate from Virginia Tech, could have been in Norris Hall when the shots rang out. A first-year student lost one of her high-school classmates.

At the candlelight vigil Tuesday night, a reading of the victims' names brought the tragedy even closer: an environmental engineer, a student from Bellefonte, Pa., a first-year student who was still undecided about her major, a 76-year-old professor who blocked the door with his body while his students escaped through the window.

The tragedy doesn't just resonate as the largest-scale shooting in U.S. history; we can envision a friend, a roommate, a classmate, a professor or even ourselves in such a horrific situation.

To assuage these painful thoughts we begin to place blame. What can we do to prevent future attacks? Was Virginia Tech's response after the first shooting satisfactory? Should we strengthen gun laws?

While such questions should be asked, it's naïve to think we can rid the world of tragedy. The biggest lesson here is of the transience of life.

The overarching response to the shootings should be compassion. So take the time to say the things you want to say, to do something nice, to spend time with someone who means the world to you.

And take the time to pray for the victims of the shootings, and for their friends, families and classmates for whom no words can express enough sympathy.

Letters to the Editor

Fight for gender equality goes on

To the Editor:

I wish to raise an issue that is particularly close to my heart—the issue of women's rights. When I came to the United States, I looked forward to being able to speak my mind and never having to downplay my acumen or my competency. I come from Zimbabwe, a beautiful country with a largely patriarchal society. Women typically have no voice and can make no real contributions to the way things are run in the home, in the work place or in the political arena.

I realize the significance of the belief in women's rights because I am here as a result of the women in my life who decided that it was no longer enough to merely exist in subservience to men. I am here because of the women in my life who had nothing to call their own except for their dreams of my success. They believed in the value of women in an environment where it was both dangerous and often futile to do so. It is their dignity, strength of belief and strength of character that has shaped my life.

My ideas about the importance of the rights of women, whether politically, socially or economically are reinforced by my ideas of my own self-worth. I know that I am capable, competent and intelligent. I know that inequality should not exist for any reason, least of all on the basis of X and Y chromosomes. Unfortunately, this knowledge is not accessible to the majority of women in my country. Many women grow up thinking that their purpose in life is only to serve men. They are taught to be good wives—docile and meek. They are taught that education is not as important for women as it is for men and that it is more acceptable to commit themselves solely to their homes and husbands than it is to seek employment opportunities. It hurts me that there are so many women with so much more potential than I have who will never realize or maximize that potential.

It disappoints me more that there are so many young women here at the University who have been given the chance to maximize their own potentials but fail to do so. The young women here have been given gifts that so many others don't even dare to dream about. Yet, we continue to downplay our capabilities, competence and intelligence. We fail to appreciate the gift that we are fortunate enough to have been given.

The journey for us is unfinished. There is still much more that needs to be done in order for us to reach a point where we can truly celebrate the fact that we are women. As women, we need to seek out our own beliefs of self-worth and appreciation. We need to embrace our womanhood and take up the challenge to make it possible for other women around the world to realize that they are valuable and that they too have rights. We should encourage them to embrace and celebrate their womanhood.

Sincerely,

Jacquelin Katanekszа '09

Campus leaders speak on Diversity Week

Speaking out a necessity

To the editor:

This past Sunday was Yom HaShoah, Holocaust Remembrance Day. In honor of Yom HaShoah, the Anti-Defamation League hosted a workshop on campus about the hate and anti-Semitism that are prevalent in today's society. The last activity in the workshop focused on our need for allies. A poem inscribed at the New England Holocaust Memorial states the importance of allies:

They came first for the Communists, and I didn't speak up because I wasn't a Communist.

Then they came for the Jews, and I didn't speak up because I wasn't a Jew.

Then they came for the trade unionists, and I didn't speak up because I wasn't a trade unionist.

Then they came for the Catholics, and I didn't speak up because I was a Protestant.

Then they came for me, and by that time no one was left to speak up.

If the allies of the Jewish people spoke out during the Holocaust, thousands of innocent lives could have been saved. We have to look at past mistakes and learn from them so we can create a safe world for all people to live in today. This starts right here, right naow, with each individual person accepting the responsibility of speaking out. It may seem like a daunting task, but a little bit goes a long way. So wear your "gay? fine by me" t-shirts, eat dinner with Rooke Chapel Congregation (RCC) and Catholic Campus Ministry (CCM), celebrate diversity and support each other in any way possible. No one person or group of people can do everything, but together we can all do something.

I would like to thank the entire campus community for the support they have given to Jewish life on campus. This year, nearly 90 Bucknellians attended Passover Seder, many of whom were not Jewish. Our Shabbat dinners have grown so much that we had to knock down a wall in the Berelson Center in order to expand our dining room. As the University Jewish community is on the rise, it is a wonderful feeling to know we are surrounded by people who want to see us flourish. I am excited for the great things Hillel and all the multicultural and minority groups are going to accomplish. I am so proud to be a member of such a supportive, compassionate and understanding community.

Sincerely,

Morgan Newman '09

Campus supports diversity

To the Editor:

This letter regards diversity on campus, but I am not writing to complain that the University is too white, or that the Women's Resource Center is too liberal. I am writing to thank you, the campus community, for everything you have done to make this a safer and more comfortable place for students who do not fit the campus norm (whatever that means).

The University can be a very difficult place to be different, but I have seen a lot of positive change in the four years I have been on campus. The Jewish population has grown and become more visible on campus, almost 3,000 "gay? fine by me." t-shirts have been given away since April 2004, enhancing diversity is included as one of the five primary strategies in the Plan for Bucknell and this year we welcome Rolando Arroyo-Sucre as our new chief officer of diversity and equity. While systemic changes such as these are commendable and of great significance, I want to emphasize that the smallest personal actions are just as important. A passing racist joke or chauvinist comment can dramatically affect a minority student's feeling of safety and his or her judgment of you as a friend.

Of course, this also works in a positive sense. Displaying a sign of support on the door of your room or office might be enough to encourage a closeted student to come out to you or another ally, which can make that student's time at the University more pleasant and more productive. You just touched a life! While I appreciate the steps the University is taking to enhance diversity, small gestures like these are what have really made it possible for me to get through the dark and frustrating times and to get involved. My work with the Office of Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender Awareness has required stepping outside my comfort zone, but it has also given me some of my most eye-opening and fulfilling experiences at the University.

Small, personal gestures of support for "diverse" students, in conjunction with institutional initiatives, give me hope for the University and its minority populations. Of course, there is much room for improvement, but with the commitment of the entire campus community, we will see some dramatic positive changes in the coming years. So thank you, Bucknell, and keep up the good work!

Sincerely,

Heather Riebeling '07

Accuser should be protected

By Liz Stein
Writer

On April 11, after a 13-month legal ordeal, rape charges were dropped against three men on the varsity lacrosse team of Duke University in Durham, N.C., terminating a case that sparked debates over race, sex and economic privilege. Though the case has been closed, two important issues have yet to be addressed. It is necessary to determine whether or not the original district attorney (DA) should be punished and whether or not the accuser's identity should remain anonymous.

Yes, the DA should be punished, and yes, the accuser should remain anonymous.

In March 2006, one of two women hired as strippers to entertain the lacrosse team at its spring break house party accused three men with charges of rape, sexual offense and kidnapping, according to The New York Times. The only one who witnessed the assault was the accuser. Neither the other dancer nor any of the nearly two dozen men at the party said they were aware of the attack, according to Attorney General Roy Cooper, as reported in The New York Times.

The 28-year-old unmarried mother of three and student at North Carolina Central University in Durham also made a rape complaint in 1996 which did not lead to any charges. In addition to inconsistencies in her story, DNA tests did not reveal evidence consistent with her accusations. In fact, her accounts of the event were so contradictory that there was no credible evidence that such an assault had occurred, Cooper said according to The New York Times.

"The woman changed a key detail in the case, saying she could not be sure what had penetrated her when she said she was gang raped," Duff Wilson of The New York Times said.

The fallout of this case has been growing since Dec. 28, 2006, when the North Carolina State Bar filed charges against Durham County DA Michael B. Nifong on the basis of unethical conduct, including manipulation of evidence and obstruction of justice.

As a result of the ethics charges, Nifong removed himself from the case and turned it over to Cooper.

If this woman's name is no longer protected, real rape victims will be even more reluctant to come forward and accuse their perpetrators.

According to The New York Times, the bar accused Nifong of making "false and inflammatory public statements that prejudiced the rights of the accused." Additional charges alleged that he withheld DNA evidence from the defense, lied to judges about it and directed the police line-up used by the accuser to identify the three players.

These charges could be the foundation for a civil lawsuit against the lawyer. It seems as though Nifong had ulterior motives to win the case for the accuser, a poor, local black woman who was battling against out-of-state, relatively affluent white males. This racial factor may have contributed to Nifong's victories in both the primary and general elections that took place last spring and fall in the midst of the legal whirlwind surrounding the case.

Nifong's conduct was immoral and should be addressed. Justice will not be found when attorneys are unable to serve their clients ethically. In this criminal case, the futures of three innocent men were at stake, and Nifong's behavior perpetuated a nightmare which was extended for many unnecessary months.

Had Nifong included other non-lacrosse players in the police line-up and been completely honest with the results of DNA testing, it is probable that the case would have been closed much sooner, with less controversy. Nifong jeopardized the lives of innocent people for what quite possibly was an attempt to secure his position as DA.

Another issue at hand is the discrepancy over whether the accuser's identity should be made public by the media. Victims of rape and sexual assault are protected under the law from having their identities revealed during and after legal proceedings. But in this case, since no crime was committed, there is no victim.

If this woman's name is no longer protected, real rape victims will be even more reluctant to come forward and accuse their perpetrators. They will fear that, in the event that their case does not bring them justice, their identities will be disseminated throughout the Internet, television and newspapers.

In a rape case, the dynamic of truthful testimonies and factual evidence is questionable. It is important to ensure that victims of sexual attacks are not further victimized by "naming names." Even though the accused were not found guilty in this case, it is important to protect the identity of the accuser. Our criminal justice system must reassure all potential and actual victims of rape that they will be shielded from further humiliation, disrespect and victimization.

Comment on this story! E-mail letters to bucknellian@bucknell.edu

Tragedy creates new perspective

By Christy Totten
Staff Writer

Perspective is like a fingerprint: no two are exactly the same. Everybody comes from a different background, with different norms and traditions, different skills and passions.

It is the way these things come together to form our view of life that defines our perspective. The uniqueness of our perspective shapes the world around us.

No matter your outlook on life, it is hard not to get bogged down by the rigors of academia come April.

Between the papers, exams and rapidly approaching finals, it is easy to feel like we are no longer breathing air, but schoolwork. Then something like the Virginia Tech shooting happens, and we are all issued a fast and furious gut check amidst the comfort of our lives in the Bucknell "bubble."

As I sat at my computer, trying to find sense somewhere amongst the loss of life, I came back to a question I seem to be asking myself all too often lately: what is going on inside us as human beings that could possibly lead us to this point, and what can be done to stop it?

It is so easy to feel helpless; to convince yourself you are the victim and the world is so bad and woe is you. But what does feeling that way really accomplish? As I sat at my computer thinking, I was reminded of a documentary called "Rough Cut" that I saw on campus a few weeks ago.

It takes place in Northern Uganda, where three recent college graduates traveled together and came across a horrific war, 20 years old and yet virtually unknown in the United States.

They taped scenes of the violence, which eventually became the documentary "Rough Cut."

This documentary, coupled with the Virginia Tech massacre, reminds me that we cannot change the things that have already happened. But like the guys who filmed "Rough Cut," we can always look to the future.

Since producing this documentary, they have garnered support from millions through the group they started, "Invisible Children," and gained national recognition in the process.

There was another screening of "Rough Cut" this past Wednesday and a group is forming on campus to do something about the horrific phenomenon of child soldiers.

Whether or not this is the type of thing you are into, I encourage you to think about life.

The world outside of the University does not slow down simply because we are holing ourselves away, burrowed in our academics. How's your perspective today?

'Cheers' ad shows lack of tolerance

By Chris Opiela
Contributing Writer

A Management 101 company called Cheers recently used Leonardo da Vinci's painting "The Last Supper" in an advertisement for its beer mugs. For those who did not see the advertisement, Cheers used the painting with images of mugs on the table in front of Jesus and the disciples. The advertisement was displayed on the LCD screen in the Langone Center Mall.

I am sure that many of the readers do not find this advertisement ploy particularly upsetting. In fact, I am positive that some find it amusing. But I do not, and neither do the people who contacted the company which placed the advertisement. In a nation that tries to be considerate and act as the savior of people who live in countries that are undemocratic, where is the consideration, the "tolerance" for the people here in this country, in this state, in this town, on this campus? How can we truly serve the people across the seas before we serve those we walk with across the paths of this campus?

Cheers had every right to place that ad. They had every right to create it and plan it and post it. But Cheers overlooked a group of people who will stand up for what they believe, who will not stand down or respond apathetically.

There will always be those who can distinguish the right thing to do before popularity makes it the right thing to do. They have the heart to stand beneath a burden, even if it is by themselves, knowing that as long as there is one person beneath it, there is always the chance that a second, a third, a tenth, a hundredth person will come along and stand beneath it, too.

So what it comes down to is the amount of consideration that we pay to people. Did Cheers consider the people that they walk next to and converse with? Did they look deep within the human heart and make sense of all the jumbles which should have warned them about the advertisement? Or are Christians overlooked as a party that can defend itself?

I cannot save the world. I cannot help everyone. But I can dedicate myself to a specific belief and cause. I am a Christian and I will stand for God.

So more than I thank the people at Cheers for taking the action to apologize and remove the advertisement, I thank the people who stand with me in their belief in God and standing for that belief, taking offense where offense need be taken, whether for God, Darfur, the war in Iraq, the homeless of America, the poverty-stricken, the starving and sick, the lost, the suffering, oppressed, misled, underrepresented, underappreciated, underpaid sweatshop worker. Whatever it is that you deem worthy of faith and protection, stand up. For humanity's sake.

The F Word

On rural women in China

By Lenore R. Flower
Writer

Traditional foot-binding techniques were banned in China almost a century ago. For poor peasant women, this fashionable crippling technique was the only way a mother could ensure a future husband for her female child; without this "beautiful" malformation, no man would have her. The four-to-six-inch-long feet made everyday life excruciating and walking nearly impossible. Despite the debilitating and destructive nature of foot-binding, the tradition continued to be practiced beyond the confines of the law until 1949, when the Communists ended the practice for good, according to Louisa Lim, a commentator for National Public Radio.

Today, a host of other traditions cause continued suffering for many rural Chinese women. From early childhood, a rural female's mind is limited by a lack of education. With no opportunities to better herself or seek employment beyond the farm, she is bound to traditional village life. When the time comes for a woman to marry, her husband's family will "buy" her for an arranged marriage (which is technically illegal). It is almost understandable that a woman's parents would seek profit from her marriage—according to MSNBC, there will be a shortage of 30 million women in China in 15 years for people of marriageable age, so demand for wives is high. The concept of "buying" a wife is especially disturbing because it implies that she is property. This assumption leads to a woman's further degradation in marriage.

According to the British Broadcasting Corporation, there is a popular and horrific male saying in rural China that "marrying a woman is like buying a horse: I can ride you and beat you whenever I like." This phrase speaks louder than any statistics about the role of rural women. After her marriage, a woman leaves her family and friends—her entire support group—for an alien environment. If a wife is extremely lucky, her husband and in-laws will treat her with respect and consideration. Because her role in her husband's family is beneath all of her in-laws and her husband, she may become little more than a servant to them.

With no economic or social power, she has little control over her life or the role that has been assigned to her. She may be bullied, beaten and belittled. Though she could seek a divorce, a woman with few connections and no education may not have anywhere to go. If she is fortunate, she will find employment in one of China's many sweatshops, though she may face sexual abuse from her employer. Many rural women who have no voice or means of escape will protest their position the only way they can: suicide.

China is the only country in the world where the women's suicide rate is higher than that of men. The People's Daily, a Chinese publication, attempted to explain this by pointing out that urban women often juggle multiple stressors of work, home and children. While this is undeniably the case, rural women nonetheless have a successful suicide rate three times higher than their urban counterparts. Some villages have organized support groups and vocational schools to aid rural women. They are not nearly widespread enough to provide support to the millions of women who have been abused, marginalized and trapped by the confines of tradition.

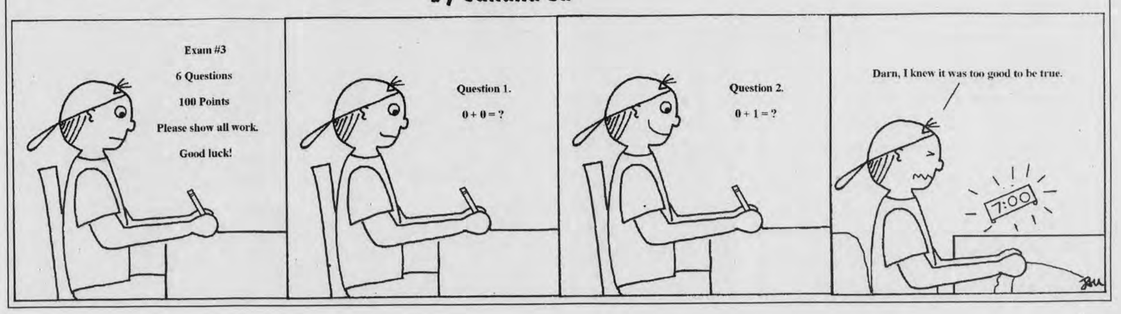
Traditions can be a beautiful part of any culture, provided they do not cripple the women, promote domestic abuse and lead to the misery of half of the population.

It is so easy to get caught up in the excitement that surrounds China's burgeoning economy or the Beijing Olympics. As westerners, we tend to forget that some rural parts of China are worlds away from the urban progress on which new sources generally report.

Every four minutes, a woman in China commits suicide. Do not forget her.

Write for Ops.
E-mail
mdippery@

Currently Untitled
by Juliana Su



Mer Cares

Dear Mer:

I'm in the middle of a difficult but somewhat trivial dilemma. I got asked to a fraternity formal by two guys in the same fraternity on different days. I didn't say yes to the first invitation because I wasn't sure if I could even go and said I would get back to him, but since a bit of time has passed, one of his fraternity brothers asked me as well and I want to go with him more than the first guy. I think the first guy kind of expects me to go since he's waited for me to say yes and he asked me first, of course. My conscience tells me to be up front with myself and do the right thing and go with the guy who asked me first, but I really want to go with the second guy more! Help!

—Lost

Dear Lost:

I hate to be the bearer of bad news but that darn old conscience is right yet again. In my opinion, you owe it to the poor first guy to go with him—if he's waited this long and not asked another girl, he deserves to go with you because 1) he asked you first and 2) he probably thinks you're worth waiting for and how can you go wrong with that kind of thinking?

What's worse is that if you were to say yes to the second guy, you would really hurt the first guy's ego if he saw you at his fraternity formal with one of his brothers, especially after asking you first. If you really want to go out with the second guy, you should apologize to him and say that you were asked a few days before but that you'd love to hang out with him later.

Promise to save a few dances for him. Saying this will help make it easier to ask the second guy to hang out later and possibly have it lead to something since you like him. It will score some points and show you're interested, but that your good morals come first since you did get asked out by his brother first.

Good luck with the guys and try not to make bad decisions and have it result in a messy love triangle.

Love,
Mer

Please send questions regarding any topic to marc001@Bucknell.edu with subject line reading "advice" or you may send a letter via campus mail to box number C1099. I look forward to hearing from you!

DOES YOUR CAR NEED SERVICED?

Our Service Department has $25,000 in new upgrades, including a new alignment rack, brake lathe, tire machine, and hundreds of hours of training for the techs. We now offer shuttle service to and from work or home. We have become a complete service center that can perform any work on any model, from an oil change to engine replacement.

Lewisburg Ford
Oil Change w/Multi-Point Inspection
$19.95 Excludes Diesels. Must present coupon at time of service. Expires 12/31/06.

Lewisburg Ford
Oil Change/Tire Rotation w/Multi-Point Inspection
$34.95 Must present coupon at time of service. Expires 12/31/06.

Lewisburg Ford
2265 Old Turnpike Rd.
(Route 45 West)
Across From Brookpark Farm
Call Today! (570) 524-7267
Visit us on the web at www.lewisburgford.com

La Primavera
Rt. 45 West Lewisburg
523-1515
Sun, Tues-Thurs 11-10
Fri-Sat 11-11

Weekly Specials
Tues: Chicken & Veal $12.95
Wed: Seafood Night $12.95
Thurs: Steak Night $12.95
Sun: Pasta Special $8.95

-Pizzas to go! $16.95 for 2 large pizzas
-Full Liquor Bar
-Available for Formals, Graduation Dinners, Reunions
-Lunch Buffet 11-3

COUPON: Buy one entree, get 2nd one half off!
COUPON: 10% off total purchase!
Coupons cannot be used on weekly specials

Water pump to improve life in El Porvenir

By Susan Misur
Contributing Writer

Courtesy of Susan Misur

Faculty members and students involved the project gather in front of the model water pump. The pump will help the 250 residents of El Porvenir who have limited access to water.

Think of all the water you use every day to shower, drink, go to the bathroom, clean and cook. Now imagine being limited to only two gallons each day for all of those activities.

For citizens living in the community of El Porvenir, a mountainous region in northern Nicaragua, such extreme water conservation is a way of life—a way of life a small group of University engineering students are trying to improve.

Mechanical engineering students Laura Roberts '07, Rob Gradoville '07, Adam Donato '07 and Julie Jakoboski '07 have been developing a senior design project to pipe water to the community of El Porvenir since last September under the supervision of Charles Kim, associate professor of mechanical engineering.

Civil engineering major Meghan Feller '07 has been working on other aspects associated with the project as an independent study under Mike Toole, associate professor of civil and environmental engineering.

Typically, senior design projects are suggested by professors and voted on by students. After seeing poverty firsthand in Nepal and Thailand during a semester abroad, Gradoville wanted to create a project that utilized his engineering skills to help an impoverished country.

"When I came back from being abroad, I realized I wanted to do a senior design project on sustainable and appropriate engineering in third world countries," Gradoville said.

"Adam and I started going to Bucknell Brigade meetings and asking if there was something we could do. Eventually we heard back that the most urgent project was to get water up to El Porvenir."

The 250 residents of El Porvenir are each allotted only two gallons of water per day during the six-month dry season, according to Kim.

In an effort to aid the community in getting more water in an efficient and affordable manner, the students designed a system to pipe water up the mountain with help and information from contacts in Nicaragua.

"One of the most important guidelines in developing appropriate technology is to see what a community actually needs, rather than providing solutions that we think they need," Kim said. "I am confident that the water project is the most urgent project that the community needs at this time."

Currently, residents ride a tractor down a two-mile-long path to a water tower, where they put water in huge barrels to take back up the mountain with them.

"They're hauling water back to about 40 families using such a time-consuming and inefficient method. The goal of our project was to get this community more water more efficiently," Roberts said.

Both Kim and Toole traveled to Nicaragua last October to investigate the area where the pipeline will be installed and to meet members of the community.

Gradoville, Jakoboski and Feller then visited the area with the Bucknell Brigade in January and collected information about the path of the pipeline, which Kim said has been instrumental in designing the whole system.

Donato went on the Brigade's second trip in March and collected information pertinent to the distribution of electricity to the residents of El Porvenir.

Members of the design team will again be traveling to Nicaragua in June, this time to install the water pump and motor and build a pump house to protect the machinery.

If weather allows, an attempt will be made to dig the two-mile ditch that will hold the pipeline.

The rainy season for El Porvenir usually begins in June and lasts until December. Once the dry season begins again, the senior design team hopes that members of the El Porvenir community will continue with the pipeline installation.

According to Kim, the entire project should be completed by January 2008.

"We're planning to hold off on the pipeline installation part of the project until the dry season and hopefully will put the El Porvenir community in charge of it.

That way they will get a sense of ownership and will understand how to fix it should it break at some point," Gradoville said.

The entire project will cost around $60,000 according to Gradoville. The University is not providing any funds for the project, but "it goes without saying, of course, that we have received encouragement from various members of the administration and faculty," Kim said.

The group submitted a grant proposal written with the help of environmental studies major Saskia Madlener '08, which secured a $10,000 grant from the 100 Projects for Peace initiative, funded by the Davis Foundation.

One stipulation of the grant was that the project must be completed by the end of 2007, which is why the proposal to 100 Projects for Peace is a subsystem of the complete pumping system.

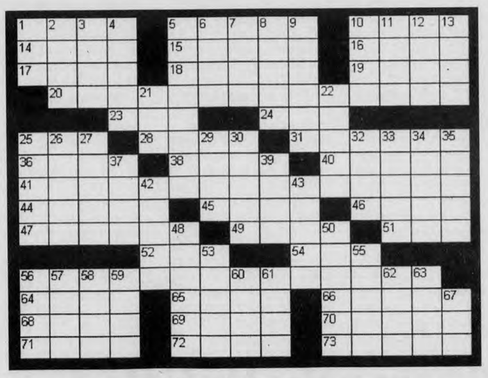
The pump, motor and pump house that the grant is funding will be finished by the end of this summer while the installation of a pipeline and extension of the electrical grid will be completed later.

"When we signed onto the project at the beginning of the year we were told that it was envisioned to be a continuing senior design project for three years, which meant that nothing was going to be built or finished until three years later," Gradoville said. "So when we saw a flyer for the 100 Project for Peace grant opportunity we knew that it was meant for us. It would push us to finish up by the summer."

And the sooner the project is finished, the better for the people of El Porvenir.

"I love the concept that the work we do on this project will improve the quality of people's lives," Roberts said.

The Bucknellian Crossword



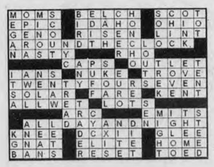
ByVo Cosswords

Across

1. Bunny bounces
5. No longer a couple
10. Use a sledgehammer
14. Actor Stoltz
15. Upper crust
16. Repeat
17. Spouse
18. ___ the house (2 wds.)
19. Cupid
20. Rebound
23. Dine
24. Cul-de-__
25. Alphabet string
28. The King and I country
31. Seat of power
36. "Til death __ part." (2 wds.)
38. Milk companion
40. Commandment carrier
41. Play dirty
44. Ms. DeGeneres
45. Concerning (2 wds.)
46. Relinquish
47. Kilt-wearing kid
49. Yelp
51. Novelist Rand
52. Lennon lover
54. Pickpocket
56. Punish
64. Sign a lease
65. How much worse __ get? (2 wds.)
66. Rosemary Clooney, to George
68. Though
69. Nimble
70. Meal of humility
71. Fashionably elegant
72. For __ sake
73. Migrant worker

Down

1. Tailor a skirt
2. Tough test
3. Flat bread
4. Crime __
5. Setback
6. First American in space Shepard
7. Retired Yankee Martinez
8. Belonging to a particular English prep. school
9. Declare victory
10. Hamburger
11. Land measurement
12. Sneaker or sandal
13. Game show persona
21. L&O jobs
22. Joe __
25. Famed automotive failure
26. Christie quote: "Any woman can __ man if she wants to..." (2 wds.)
27. Screen actors' group
29. Geometric space
30. Untidy
32. Student-soldier prog.
33. Common Irish surname
34. Requiring assistance
35. German city
37. "Snow day" transportation
39. Pus prefix?
42. Vidalia, for one
43. Popular loan promise (2 wds.)
48. Supermarket display location
50. Nearly depleted
51. Legal (2 wds.)
55. Spring break setting
56. Hold
57. Try again
58. Snake eyes
59. Western state
60. Ready to act (2 wds.)
61. Anger
62. Continental currency
63. Drawer handle
67. Deuce



April 13 Answers

A particular mystery solved

Results revealed from 10 years of work by University prof and others

By Lily Beauvilliers
Associate Editor of Layout

Picture this: a three-story tall hollow sphere, 1,200 glass bulbs and over 250,000 gallons of mineral oil. No, this is not some sort of intergalactic Easy Bake Oven—it's the recipe for the Mini Booster Neutrino Experiment, called MiniBooNE.

After over 10 years, the work of 77 physicists including Physics Associate Professor Sally Koutsoliotas and several of her past students, has finally been revealed. Although the result isn't a piece of cake, it's just as sweet.

Scientists have categorized particles through the Standard Model, a method of understanding the interactions between the fundamental building blocks of matter, for over 30 years.

Neutrinos, or incredibly light particles, are among such components of matter. There are three types of neutrinos—the muon neutrino, the tau neutrino and the electron neutrino.

The Los Alamos National Library experiment in the 1990s seemed to indicate that another type existed, dubbed the sterile neutrino.

Scientists knew that any type of neutrino could change into any other type, but the Los Alamos experiment indicated that if any of the original three changed into a sterile neutrino, it would never change back. Such inconsistency indicated a need for theorists to seriously re-think the Standard Model.

The Department of Energy's Fermi National Accelerator Laboratory (Fermilab) began building MiniBooNE in 1997 to try to re-create the Los Alamos results. Building was a long process.

"On a big experiment like this, everyone pitches in building detectors, testing equipment," Koutsoliotas said. "That took about half of the 10 years we've been working on this project."

Koutsoliotas brought a total of 14 students to Fermilab, 11 specifically to work on MiniBooNE. Jeremy Urban '02, who received his PhD in Physics from Cornell and is currently working for an IT consulting firm, remembers the preliminary testing he and Melanie Novak '03 did in the summer of 2000.

"In 2000, MiniBooNE was still in the construction stage ... so what we were doing was testing and characterizing the performance of every single one of the ultimately 1,200 photomultiplier tubes.

Melanie and I personally tested a couple hundred of those tubes ... " Urban said in an e-mail.

So how does a sphere full of oil and glass detect anything, let alone a particle so small people once believed it to have no mass?

The answer comes down to a simple idea—if you smash things together, they'll break.

Neutrinos are one of the most abundant particles in the universe. A stream of neutrinos from the sun is constantly barraging you. However, due to their tiny size and lack of charge, they rarely interact with anything.

In the MiniBooNE experiment, a beam of muon neutrinos was specifically shot at a tank of oil and occasionally one neutrino would strike an atom. The collision of a muon neutrino yields a muon, and the collision of an electron neutrino yields an electron.

Because light travels slower in oil than it does in a vacuum, these muons and electrons actually travel faster than the speed of light. This motion leads to a blue cone of light trailing behind them, analogous to the sonic boom behind an airplane when it breaks the sound barrier.

The light can be detected by the MiniBooNE photo sensors. Since electrons lose energy faster than muons do, the cone behind them will be fuzzier—so if the detector sees an in-focus circle, it indicates a muon neutrino, and an out-of-focus circle indicates an electron neutrino.

Scientists working on the MiniBooNE project could predict how many muon neutrino collisions to expect, and how many of their muon neutrinos would turn into electron neutrinos. After subtracting away background noise from the constant rain of neutrinos from outer space, they were able to see if the experiment met the prediction or fell short, indicating that the sterile neutrino might just exist.

The final results? The number of neutrinos observed and the number predicted matched closely enough that the MiniBooNE scientists felt confident announcing an end to the sterile neutrino's reign. The Standard Model holds.

On Monday, MiniBooNE scientists presented their work at a meeting of the American Physical Society in Florida. Although Koutsoliotas was unable to attend, she was still excited by the results.

"We knew this was coming for a long time," Koutsoliotas said. "We thought it would happen last summer, then we thought January, then it finally happened. It was a shame I couldn't be out there, but the escalation to the point of 'opening the box' was truly exciting."

"Opening the box" refers to the point when scientists first looked at the data surrounding the mysterious sterile neutrino. The MiniBooNE scientists did not look at these results until all the data had been collected to avoid skewing the experiment.

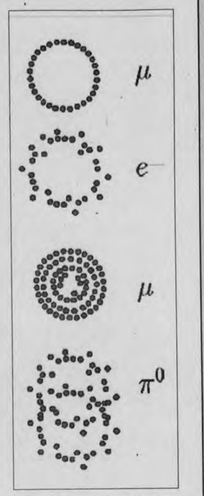
"I am happy for the success of all the collaborators on the experiment because I personally know many of them and saw how hard they worked and how dedicated they were to making MiniBooNE happen even way back in 2000," Urban said.

Although the preliminary results are out, work remains to be done. At the lowest energy levels, the number of neutrinos predicted and observed does not match up, a phenomena yet to be explained, although it probably indicates an error in predicting the background neutrinos.

The MiniBooNE beam was also switched from producing neutrinos to producing anti-neutrinos in January 2006. That box has yet to be open.

In addition, Koutsoliotas has work she personally hopes to continue.

"I want to look for the prediction of exotic particles that don't fit into the Standard Model. These particles may or may not exist, but if we find them then we know that the Standard Model is wacky."

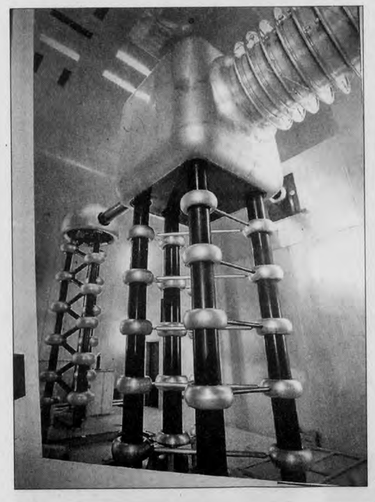


Courtesy of Fermi Laboratories

The MiniBooNE detector sees different kinds of particles as different sorts of rings. A muon (top and third down) looks like clear rings, whereas an electron (second down) looks fuzzy.

Courtesy of Fermi Laboratories

About 1,200 photo detectors, like the one pictured, line the walls of the MiniBooNE. They record when even very small amounts of light hit them, allowing scientists to "see" different kinds of particles.



Courtesy of Ben Reiter

The Fermi National Accelerator Laboratory houses the MiniBooNE project. Robert Wathbun Wilson Hall (above) holds the Fermilab administration as well as a cafeteria and 830-seat auditorium. Particles begin the acceleration process for several experiments, including the MiniBooNE, with a Cockcroft-Walton generator (left), first designed in 1932.

"Writing is a struggle against silence."

—Carlos Fuentes

Write for Features
E--mail ns022@

Another tantalizing edition brought to you by ...

Ms. Love and the Bubble

Dear Ms. O,

My anniversary with my boyfriend is coming up soon and I want to do something special for him. I'm thinking about buying some sexy lingerie to surprise him with, but I'm not too sure what to get.

I feel self-conscious about going into a store without having a clue about what I'm looking for. And I want to make sure that I'll get something that will really turn him on. Can you fill me in on my outfit options?

- Looking for Lingerie

Dear Looking for Lingerie,

Honestly, pretty much any sexy outfit you buy will turn on your boyfriend. Let's face it, you scantily clad in some lacy, slinky or see-through lingerie will be an instant eye-pleaser and will get him revved up for some between-the-sheets action.

Get what makes you feel sexiest. It's really up to you.

Here's a low down on some of the different styles of lingerie available.

If you're looking for something innocent and feminine, you might want to think about getting an outfit in the babydoll style. This type typically has skimpy spaghetti-strap tops with underwear to match.

Depending on the color, you can portray different attitudes. Whites and pastels typically increase the innocence factor. Darker colors are sultry and alluring.

Teddies are one-piece outfits that connect the bra and panties, typically with very little fabric in between. It's a really hot style that not everyone can pull off, but if you can, go for it.

Corsets are a little binding, but they tend to make boobs look bigger and waistlines look trimmer. A corset may be what you're looking for if you want something a little more bad-ass. It has a "bad girl" feel to it. To complete this look, choose a black one, or if you're feeling it, red. Add tall boots or some fishnets and you've got a very sexy, naughty combination.

Chemises and slips can take on an in-between role. They can be very revealing or conservative (for lingerie) depending on what you're looking for. They are similar to baby-dolls, just longer, and can be both elegant and provocative.

An option that could really spice things up for your boyfriend is crotchless panties. These provide an all-access pass with a lacy visual that will absolutely drive him wild. Just make sure he knows he doesn't have to take them off.

Other easy-access outfits are available. Some lingerie bottoms have Velcro attachments ready to be ripped at any moment.

If none of these options seem to fit your tastes, you can always get a sexy matching bra and panty set. Push-up bras speak for themselves. Look for something lacy or silky, and to mix it up, get the bottoms in the "boy shorts" style. They're sexy because they accentuate the curves of your butt. Or, there are always g-strings.

A great store to check out is Frederick's of Hollywood. They specialize in lingerie and have many different styles to choose from. Frederick's also has "slippers"—high heels—to go with the outfits if that fits what you're looking for. Victoria's Secret has some options as well.

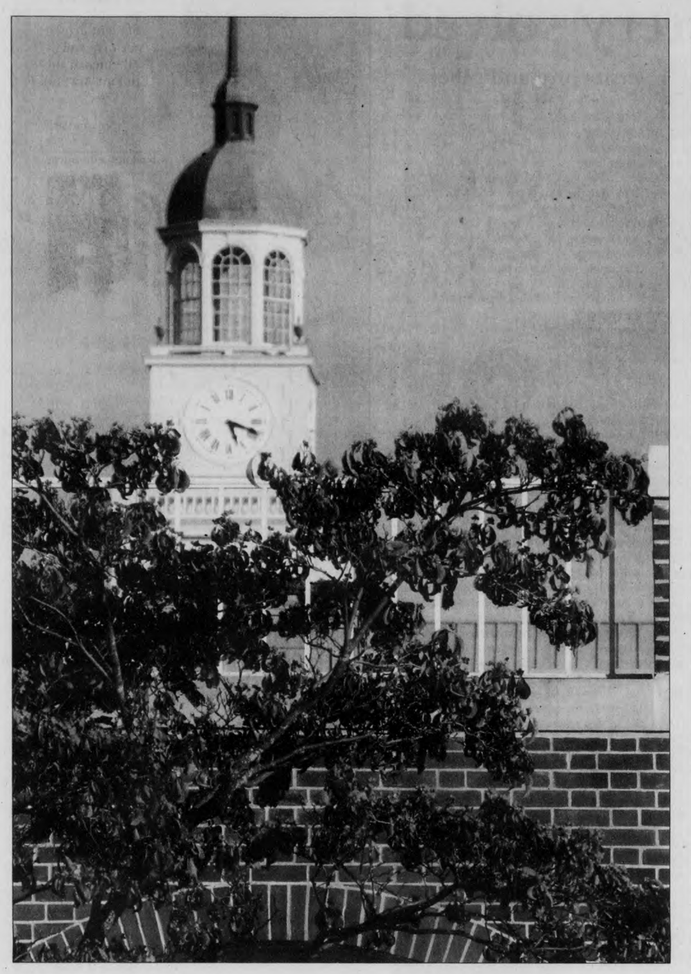
Both stores have fitting rooms so you can try on whatever you pick out and make sure you love it.

The stores don't always carry everything from their lingerie lines so you may want to look at their Web sites. Both sites have sizing charts, so if you feel confident in your style choice you'll be able to get the right size. You may want to keep a tape measure handy in case you need to take some measurements.

No matter what you choose, have fun picking something out. And have even more fun surprising your boyfriend with it.

~ Ms. O

E-mail me your questions at MsOintheBubble@yahoo.com or send them through campus mail to Ms. O, The Bucknellian, C-3952. All authors of questions will remain anonymous.



Explore the historical clock towers on top of Kress Hall and Ellen Clarke Bertrand Library and the carillon in Rooke Chapel.

Clock Towers

The carillon system on top of Rooke Chapel was established in 1995. The music is pre-recorded digitally on an electronic circuit chip.

"There are literally hundreds of pre-recorded sounds we could use, as well as the option to custom record our own music," said Jeffrey Loss, senior associate director for maintenance.

Currently, the system echoes "Westminister Chimes" every 15 minutes and the alma mater, played by Director of Choral Studies William Payn, at 5:30 p.m. every day. The music resonates across campus after being fed through eight speakers in the Rooke Chapel loft.

The clock towers on top of Kress Hall and Ellen Clarke Bertrand Library are both driven by a servo motor. The clock hands are attached to a gearbox which links to the motor. Kress Hall was dedicated during the commencement in 1900 and the clock tower was finished in 1905. The clock tower on the library was built with the library in 1951. The tower was damaged in a fire in 1960 along with the roof.

—Nilanjana Saha

Photos by Chris Stokes The Bucknellian

The Bucknellian

April 20, 2007

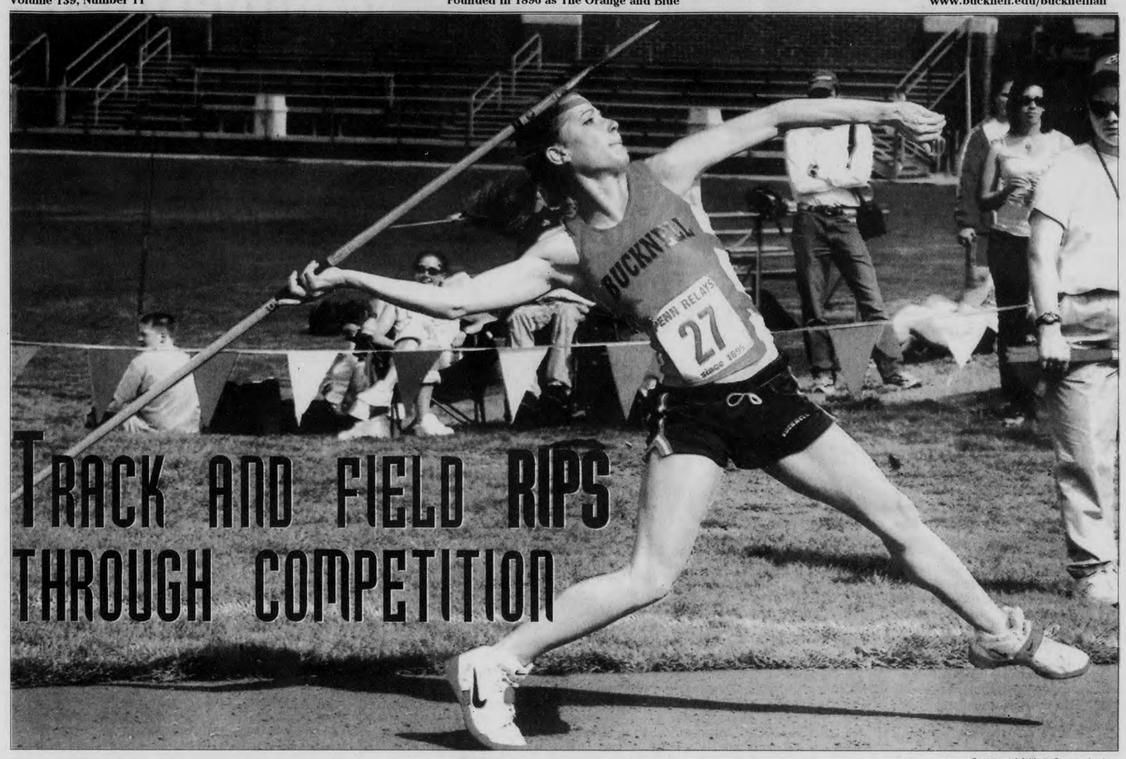
Sports

Volume 139, Number 11 | Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue | www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

License for creativity

Student artwork portrays weighty themes at the Student Art Show.

See page B8



Track and field rips through competition

Courtesy of Athletic Communications

Beverly Rogers '08 launches the javelin. Rogers qualified for the NCAA Regional meet with a throw of 142 feet and eight inches along with four other Bison athletes from the men's team. The Orange and Blue will be home this weekend, hosting their first scored meet of the season, the Bucknell Team Challenge. The meet will begin Saturday at 10 a.m. at Chirsty Mathewson-Memorial Stadium.

By Brian Mulligan
Sports Editor

The men's and women's track and field teams were firing on all cylinders this past weekend at the Bison Outdoor Classic against some of the best competition on the east coast. The squad notched a total of five NCAA Regional qualifiers over the two days of competition with four men and one woman qualifying for the national meet. Steven Pierce '10 qualified for the meet in the javelin along with teammate Josh Kaehler '07. Pierce threw an impressive 216 feet and nine inches, putting him second in the all-time Bison list and winning the event. Kaehler finished a close second with a toss of 210-1.

"I thought that the team performed exceptionally well," Head Coach Kevin Donner said. "We as a team produced quality performances all around and the NCAA regional qualifications were unprecedented."

In the hammer throw, Tyler Hoffman '07 made an NCAA Regional mark with a toss of 195-9, placing him third on the all-time Bison list. Matt Forys '07 had a sensational performance in the 5,000-meter run, finishing in a time of 14 minutes and 07.83 seconds. His second place finish put him fourth in the Bison record books and qualified him for the NCAA Regional meet.

Ryan White '10 had a standout performance in the decathlon, notching a total of 5809 points, while Brian Mooney '08 clocked a personal best in 800-meter run in 1:53.99. In the pole vault, Jason Inzana '10 cleared a height of 15-3, which was good enough for fifth overall and fourth all-time in Bison history. Nick DeGregorio '07 broke into the record books in the shot put with a heave of 49-9, putting him at ninth all-time and placing seventh at the meet. Mark Caroleo '07 crossed the finish line in the number seven spot in 3:53.22 in the 1,500-meter run.

The women's team had similar success with one NCAA regional qualifier and record breakers across the board. Beverly Rogers '08 had an amazing performance in the javelin, qualifying for the NCAA regional meet and winning the event with a throw of 142-8. In the 1,500-meter run, Christa Sawko '07 crossed the finish line in a time of 4:32.85, while Leanna Nastase '07 placed ninth in the 5,000-meter run in 17:21.94. Both qualified for the ECAC championship meet.

"The team is very supportive of each other, when one person falls, another is there to pick up the slack," Rogers said. "Our team spirit is part of what drives us to push ourselves."

In the discus event, the Bison produced a 2-3-4 finish with Amanda Mockbee '08 in second with a heave of 141-8. Kathleen Hart '07 and Marjorie Grap '07 finished third and fourth behind Mockbee with throws of 139-9 and 139-8 respectively. Grap also had an ECAC qualifying performance in the hammer throw with a toss of 172-5.

Kati Dempsey '09 made her comeback after a devastating ankle injury, spanning a distance of 17-8. In the 3,000-meter steeplechase, Nichole Smith '09 broke into the top five all-time in the event and fourth overall in 11:20.7.

The Orange and Blue placed two athletes in the top five in the heptathlon. Nina Reinhardt '07 and Amy Mantush '10 placed fourth and fifth respectively with Reinhardt notching 4491 and Mantush scoring 4434. Mantush broke into the all-time record book at fifth all-time.

The Bison will be hosting their first scored meet of the outdoor season, the Bucknell Team Challenge, with teams from Penn State University, University of Maryland Baltimore Country, Binghamton, St. Francis, Duquesne, Lock Haven and the Colgate women's team.

"We are looking forward to our first scored meet of the outdoor season," Donner said. "It will be a great test of the team's overall depth."

The meet will begin promptly Saturday at 10 a.m. at Christy-Matthewson Memorial Stadium.

Men's golf preps for another Patriot League Championship

Courtesy of Athletic Communications

Charlie Waddell '07 chips onto the green. Hel propelled the Bison to a second-place finish last weekend, capturing his fourth career individual title.

By Jared Napolitano
Business Manager

One time is an occurrence. Two times is a coincidence. Three times is a trend. For a third straight season, it appears that Charlie Waddell '07 has entered the prime of his game at just the right time. The two-time defending Patriot League Champion captured his fourth career individual crown this past weekend at the Lafayette Invitational, shooting a two-under-par first round at the shortened event at the Center Valley Golf Course in Center Valley, Pa.

"My game finally felt complete and I was definitely firing on all cylinders," Waddell said. "I putted very well and had a couple of great par saves."

Waddell's performance, propelled by a three-under-par 33 on the "Scottish Links" front nine, led the Bison to a second-place team finish in a 24-team field comprised of five Patriot League schools. Lehigh won the team event on its archrival's host course, shooting a 300 composite score and edging the Bison (307) by seven strokes. Siena (309), St. Francis (Pa.) (310) and Long Island University-Brooklyn (313) finished third, fourth and fifth respectively. The other Patriot League teams, Colgate (12th place), Lafayette B (16th) and Lafayette A (tie-17th) did not fair as well as the Mountain Hawks and Bison.

Besides Waddell, Rahul Desai '08 also shot very well and carded a 75, capturing a share of fourth place.

"I was very happy to see Rahul play well," Waddell said. "He's one of the hardest workers on the team and will play a huge role for us at the Patriot League Championship."

Also for the Bison, Keita Aoki '08 (80), Jeff Pike '10 (82) and Brian Bartow '10 (83) participated in the event. Only 10 players completed the round in 75 or less strokes, an effect of the less than ideal weather conditions that ultimately led to the cancellation of the Invitational's second round.

"I think all of our games are peaking at the right time. Hopefully we will be able to get the job done for the second straight year."
— Charlie Waddell '07

See GOLF page B3

Saylor Says

By Matthew Saylor
Associate Editor of Content

Do you want to fight? That appears to be the popular question being asked in sports right now.

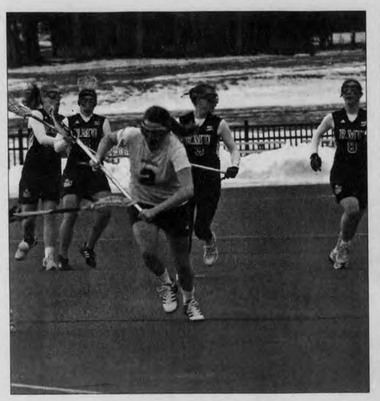
Veteran NBA referee Joey Crawford challenged Tim Duncan of the San Antonio Spurs to rumble, and then ejected him from the game for sitting on the bench and laughing at the way the game was being officiated. Crawford has been suspended by the league and is not allowed to finish out the regular season or participate in the playoffs. It is unclear if he will be allowed to return to his job next year.

Charlie Manuel, manager of the Philadelphia Phillies, exchanged heated words with radio personality Howard Eskin and was ready to go toe-to-toe with Eskin over his repeated criticism of how he has handled his job the past three seasons. Manuel had to be restrained by members of his coaching staff. Eskin wanted to know why Manuel did not yell more at his players for the team's poor play this season.

There appears to be no clear explanation for why Crawford acted as he did. He has a history for having a short fuse as a referee, but so do many others. Duncan believes that Crawford has a vendetta against him. Maybe so. I don't understand why Crawford said what he did, but I also question why the two other referees working the game did not intervene.

As for Manuel, he certainly acted inappropriately as well. He let his frustrations get the better of him and took them out on

See SAYLOR page B2



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Sarah Collins '09 (left) and Kendall Thibeault '10 (right) compete in a game against Robert Morris University earlier this season. The Orange and Blue will host Patriot League rival Lafayette this Saturday at 1 p.m. at Graham Field.

Bison rack up the goals

Women's lacrosse matches scoring record, netting 23 goals at home

By Kyle Barndollar
Senior Writer

A 23-5 domination of St. Francis (Pa.) was the highlight of a successful week for the women's lacrosse team, who won two of three games and scored 48 total goals in the last week. The team scored the final six goals of the game to take down Wagner 19-12 last Thursday, but fell to Patriot League foe American 17-6 on Saturday.

It was an emphatic rebound for the Bison, thoroughly abusing the winless Red Flash from start to finish. The Orange and Blue are now 6-8 on the year, but fall to 1-3 in the Patriot League.

Bucknell 23
St. Francis 5

Chelsea Peters '10 scored a career-high six goals against St. Francis, living up to the Patriot League Rookie of the Week honors she earned just a day earlier. Alison Heffernan '10 continued her hot streak with four goals, and Paige Kasschau '10 added three goals and an assist for the Bison, who tied a school record for goals and margin of victory in the game.

The game was all but decided after the Bison jumped out to an 8-0 lead over the first 13 minutes 51 seconds. St. Francis never shrunk the margin to less than seven from that point forward, as they were outshot 54-10 while committing 35 turnovers.

Goalie Katie Hartsock '10 only needed to make three saves in the win, while defender Lauren Deitrich '08 has as much of an effect on the offensive side of the field than the defense.

Deitrich scored two goals, and added two assists. Katie Fox '10 and Erin Turner '10 each scored their first collegiate goal, contributing to the 16 total goals scored by Bison first-years on that day.

American 17
Bucknell 6

It was a tougher battle in Washington, D.C. on Saturday, as the Orange and Blue fell to American 17-6, despite being only one goal behind at halftime. After falling behind 4-1, the Bison battled back with consecutive goals from Carol Donohue '10, Heffernan, and Sarah Collins '09 to tie the game at 4-4. American's Jackie Lane scored with just 46 seconds remaining in the half to give the Eagles the lead at the break.

American would score the first three goals of the second half and would not look back from there. Peters and Deitrich would score the only two goals of the second half for the Bison, who did not have a multiple goal scorer for the third time this year. Hartsock made 11 saves on the day for the Bison, who committed 31 turnovers and were doubled up in shots, 42-21.

"American was a setback," said Head Coach Jess Spadafora after the loss. "But there is still a week left in the regular season and three more very important games."

Bucknell 19
Wagner 12

Last Thursday, Peters had four more goals against Wagner, rounding out the 11 she scored this week. Bonnie Buechel '09 added four goals and two assists, and Heffernan netted a hat trick. Donohue also had two goals, showing that the Bison first-years once again put up big numbers, combining for nine goals.

"Wagner was a game that showed how much talent we have on our offense," Spadafora said.

Down 10-6 at halftime, Wagner managed to pull the game to within one with 11:35 left. The Orange and Blue turned it back from there, scoring the game's final six goals, handing the Seahawks their 10th loss of the year. Nikki Chacosky '09 and Hartsock combined for 10 saves for the win.

At 1-3 in the Patriot League, the Bison need a lot of help to make the conference tournament, and keep their slim postseason hopes alive. They host Lafayette in their final league game this Saturday.

"A lot can happen within the conference and we are still very much alive," Spadafora said.

Men's tennis aces league competition

By John Mlodzinski
Senior Writer

On Wednesday the men's tennis team defeated Bloomsburg, 6-1, in non-league play. The Bison have won three in a row and improved to 9-11 overall and 2-3 in the Patriot League. The team seems to be peaking just in time for the Patriot League playoffs.

"We feel great. It is a great position to be in, going into the playoffs with two key Patriot League victories in a row," Zach Hascoe '10 said.

The Bison struck first by going 3-0 in the doubles matches. Daniel Bednarek '09 and Hascoe teamed up to defeat Mike Marra and Geoff Whitely, 8-1, in the No. 3 doubles match. In the No. 2 doubles spot, Ira Reibeisen '08 and Ben Young '08 dropped the pairing of Dan Phillips and Wil Biddle, 8-2. Finally, in the No. 1 doubles match, Jonathan Brenner '09 and Ryan Sandburg '09 came up with the victory over Dan Gal and Ryan Glubo, 8-4.

Bucknell 6
Bloomsburg 1

In singles action, the Bison played well, going 5-1 on the day. In the No. 4 spot, Brenner picked up the victory over Biddle, 6-0, 6-0. Sandburg defeated Glubo, 6-3, 6-1 in the No. 2 singles match, while Young dropped Whitely, 6-0, 6-0 in the No. 5 spot. Hascoe handled Phillips, 7-5, 6-1 in the No. 3 spot and Bednarek easily defeated Marra, 6-0, 6-0. The only lost of the day for the Orange and Blue came when Reibeisen dropped a close, hard fought match to Gal, 6-1, 5-7, 11-9 in the No. 1 spot.

On Sunday the Bison picked up their second Patriot League victory in a row as they defeated Lafayette, 7-0. The Bison picked up the first point of the day by sweeping the doubles matches. In the No. 1 singles match, Brenner and Sandburg defeated Paul Guarino and Brett Kraft, 8-4. Reibeisen and Young picked up the victory over Matt McGranaghan and James Murphy, 8-1 in the No. 2 doubles match. Bednarek and Hascoe completed the doubles sweep as they dropped Eric Wiley and Lee Kojanis, 8-3 in the No. 3 doubles match.

Bucknell 7
Lafayette 0

The team continued its stellar play as they took the singles matches, 7-0. In the No. 4 singles match, Brenner defeated Kojanis, 6-1, 6-2. Reibeisen picked up the victory in the No. 1 singles spot, defeating Guarino, 6-0, 6-3. In the No. 2 spot, Sandburg secured the match for the Bison, beating Wiley, 6-4, 6-4, while Young dropped Steve Benezra, 7-6(4), 6-2, in the No. 5 spot. First-year sensation Hascoe faced a tough opponent in Kraft, but was able to handle everything Kraft could come up with and recorded the victory, 5-7, 6-4, 10-5 (SB). Bednarek clinched the sweep for the Orange and Blue as he defeated McGranaghan, 8-1 in proset match.

On April 12 the Bison squared off against rival Lehigh. Although they fell behind early, they kept their cool and eventually secured the victory, 4-3, their first Patriot League victory of the season.

Bucknell 4
Lehigh 3

The Bison started off slow, dropping two of three doubles matches, thus losing that point, then losing two of the first three singles matches. The team showed its great resiliency as it was able to etch out three straight wins and pick up the match victory.

Lehigh picked up the first point, taking two of three doubles matches. Brenner and Sandburg were defeated by Alfredo Fernandez-Concha and Brad Nelson, 8-4, in the No. 1 doubles spot. In the No. 2 doubles match, Reibeisen and Young were dropped by Drew Balshi and Brent Herbert, 8-5. The lone victory in the doubles matches for the Bison came from Bednarek and Hascoe, dropping Jon-Michael Caminiti and John Nespoli, 8-6, in the No. 3 doubles spot.

Things began to look bleak for the Bison as they dropped two of the first three singles matches. After Hascoe defeated Drew Balshi, 6-1, 6-4 in the No. 3 singles spot, Reibeisen fell to Fernandez-Concha 6-3, 6-4 and Sandburg dropped his match to Nespoli, 7-6(5), 7-5, in the No. 1 and No. 2 singles matches, respectively.

The team responded and secured wins in the last three matches to take the match. Brenner defeated Nelson, 6-2, 6-2 in the No. 4 singles match. In the No. 5 singles spot, Young defeated Mike Gordon, 7-5, 6-4, while Bednarek picked up the No. 6 spot victory over Caminiti, 6-2, 6-3.

The Orange and Blue are playing well heading into the Patriot League Playoffs this weekend. They feel they are a threat to be reckoned with and know they have a chance to do well this weekend.

"I know that we can cause some damage in the tournament if some of the other teams underestimate us. It finally seems that everyone is starting to play well at the exact right time. It should be a great weekend and hopefully we can play to our potential," Hascoe said.

SAYLOR From page B1

Eskin. As a person from the Philadelphia region, I have listened to Eskin's mid-afternoon show countless times.

He is extremely controversial and very focused on his own publicity (he made the rounds on ESPN the morning after his confrontation with Manuel).

Eskin baited Manuel, and Manuel bit. As of the time I'm writing this there has been no word on whether Manuel will receive punishment from either the Phillies organization or Major League Baseball.

I find it reprehensible that so many public sports figures are using the suggestion of fighting as a means to solve their problems (outside of boxing that is). These cases are especially interesting because they involves managers, officials and members of the media, when usually players are the focus of these sorts of issues. I would think that these three figures (all experienced in their fields), would know better how to conduct themselves, and that they should be setting the examples for others.

There is so often talk of the deplorable behavior of athletes, but when the authority figures surrounding them act out, what does that say?

There are too many problems out there that need to be solved, and I believe that these two issues, like many others, could be solved without fighting.

Maybe I am wrong though. And if I am, then the only thing to say is, do you want to fight?

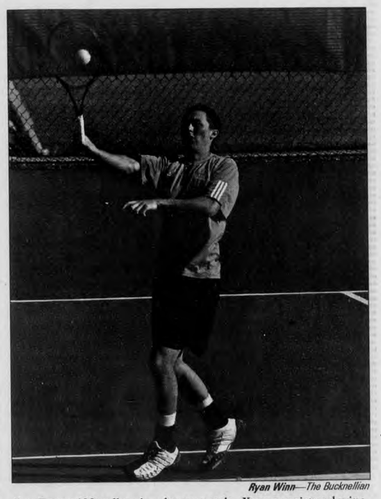
WEEKEND SCHEDULE

Saturday

WOMEN'S TRACK & FIELD - Bucknell Team Challenge, 10 a.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
MEN'S TRACK & FIELD - Bucknell Team Challenge, 10 a.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
ROWING - Princeton/Penn/Dartmouth, 10:30 a.m., Princeton, N.J. (Lake Carnegie)
WOMEN'S WATER POLO - Maryland, 11:30 a.m., College Park, Md.; Southern Championships, TBA, College Park, Md.
BASEBALL - Holy Cross, 12 p.m., Worcester, Mass.
WOMEN'S TENNIS - UMBC, 12 p.m., Baltimore, Md.
WOMEN'S LACROSSE - Lafayette, 1 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
MEN'S LACROSSE - Colgate, 3 p.m., Hamilton, N.Y.
SOFTBALL - Army, 4 p.m., West Point, N.Y.
MEN'S GOLF - Patriot League Championship, All Day, Lewisburg, Pa.
MEN'S TENNIS - PL Tournament, TBA, Annapolis, Md.

Sunday

BASEBALL - Holy Cross, 12 p.m., Worcester, Mass.
SOFTBALL - Army, 12 p.m., West Point, N.Y.
WOMEN'S LACROSSE - Ohio State, 1 p.m., Lewisburg, Pa.
MEN'S TENNIS - PL Tournament, TBA, Annapolis, Md.
MEN'S GOLF - Patriot League Championship, All Day, Lewisburg, Pa.



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Ben Young '08 volleys in a home match. Young registered wins in both doubles and singles play against Bloomsburg.

Men's lacrosse stays hot

No. 12 Bucknell reaches 11 wins for second time in program history, beating out Lehigh and Penn State

Courtesy of Mark Brandau

(From left to right) Paul Stansik '07, Brian Gargan '07, Greg Sowyrda '07, Steve Case '07, Kirk Klett '07, and Danylko Kulczycky '07 pose with family and friends at their last home game of their career as Bison. The team defeated ECAC threat Penn State to come within one victory of the program record.

"To beat a team like Penn State in our last game at Christy Mathewson was an incredible feeling All of the seniors really wanted to win and it showed."

—Brian Gargan '07

By Wes Trowbridge
Staff writer

On Senior Night at Christy Mathewson-Memorial Stadium Tuesday, Brian Gargan '07 and Greg Sowyrda '07 led the men's lacrosse team to a thrilling victory over rival Penn State, 7-5. The Bison were 2-0 on their final home stand, also defeating Lehigh 11-5 on Saturday to clinch a spot in the Patriot League Tournament.

Bucknell 7
Penn State 5

The Bison are now 11-2 on the season, 4-1 in conference play, and ranked No. 12 in the United States Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association coaches' poll. They are one victory shy of the program single-season record for wins, set by the 1996 squad that finished 12-0, and have one game against Colgate remaining before the postseason begins.

It certainly was Senior Night for the Bison as co-captains Gargan and Sowyrda anchored the offense and defense respectively in a hard fought victory. They were honored in a pregame ceremony along with fellow seniors Steve Case '07, Paul Stansik '07, Danylko Kulczycky '07 and Kirk Klett '07.

"To beat a team like Penn State in our last game at Christy Mathewson was an incredible feeling," Gargan said. "All of the seniors really wanted this win and it showed."

After scoring the Bison's first two goals of the game Gargan struck again, scooping up a ground ball while running away from the cage and scoring on a behind-the-back shot that baffled the Nittany Lion goal keeper. Gargan, coming back this year after missing all of last season with a torn ACL, equaled his career-high with three goals and added an assist to Tim Brandau '10 to make the score 4-2.

"I think it's the best game I have ever seen him play," said Stansik, fellow co-captain and long-stick midfielder. "[Gargan] was absolutely possessed out there."

Early in the third quarter, Case made one of the hustle plays that he has practically trademarked over the last four years. Case fought through a Penn State player, won the ground ball, outran his pursuers across midfield, and threaded a pass to Brandau burying it for a 5-3 lead.

Penn State answered with a goal of its own and the Bison were clinging to a tenuous one goal lead early in the fourth quarter when the Austin Winter '10 forced an errant pass from his defenseman. Sowyrda ran upfield to win the ground ball and sprinted past several Nittany Lions near midfield before assisting Winter who ripped a hard shot into the top left corner of the net.

Penn State responded by bringing the lead to one goal once again, but with five minutes 25 seconds remaining, Winter, the Patriot league's leading scorer, found net again to settle the scoring at 7-5. A slew of late penalties on Penn State secured the victory.

In addition to his assist on the game-winner, Sowyrda collected a game-high six ground balls, leading a dominant Bison defense that now ranks second in the nation, allowing a miniscule 5.77 goals per game. The Bison have allowed more than six goals just twice in 13 games.

On Saturday night the Bison defeated Lehigh in another strong defensive showing. The Bison pulled away with five goals in the fourth period for an 11-5 victory. Winter, who was named Patriot League Rookie of the Week for the second time this month, had a game-high four points on one goal and three assists. Brandau, John Togneri '09 and Perry Menzies '09 each added two goals apiece and Gargan tallied one goal and one assist.

Bucknell 11
Lehigh 5

Goal keeper Nick Sciubba '09 continued his breakout season, combining for 24 saves while allowing just 10 goals in the two games and collected his fifth Patriot League Goal Keeper of the Week award of the season. Sciubba now ranks first in Division I in both save percentage (0.676) and goals-against average (5.6). Billy Haire '09 was also honored by the league as Defensive Player of the Week for his performance against Lehigh.

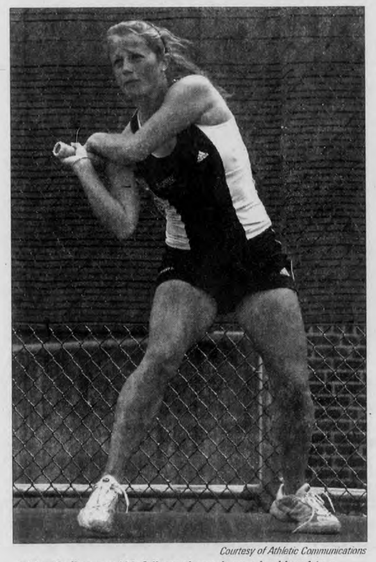
The Bison will now face league rival Colgate on back-to-back weekends. At 3 p.m. on Saturday, they will play in Hamilton, N.Y. to close out the regular season and on April 27 they will meet again in the first round of the Patriot League Tournament in Annapolis, Md. The two-day tournament will be broadcasted on College Sports Television (CSTV).

Bison split pair of league games

Women's tennis sweeps Lafayette and falls to Black Knights on the week

By Ellis Hudes
Senior Writer

The Orange and Blue won two of three matches over last week to bring its record to 6-13 overall and 2-2 in the Patriot League. Following a loss to Army, the team bounced back by winning decisions against Lafayette and Bloomsburg. This young team has been faced with adversity all season long, but now things are starting to come together as the end of the season draws closer.



Courtesy of Athletic Communications

Ashley Golberman '09 follows through on a backhand in a recent match. Golberman posted a second singles win against Lafayette, winning her two games, 6-1 and 6-2.

"The reality of what this team has gone through this spring, with the accident involving three of our starters, our top player being out for more than half the season, learning to work together as a very young team ... I couldn't ask to be in a better position than where we are right now," said Head Coach Rebecca Helt.

The Bison got off to a slow start against the two-time defending Patriot League champs. The Black Knights jumped ahead by collecting all three doubles matches. Army's Niki Flach and Brooke Jones handed Paulina Gamboa '09 and Carlin Calcaterra '10 an 8-6 loss. In the No. 2 slot, Tania Varela '10 and Ashley Globerman '09 fell short by another 8-6 score to Sarah Giles-Madden and Jessica Shurtz. Army made it three for three as Paige Ford and Kristin Beehler won 8-3 over Caitlin Baffa '08 and Camille Simonetti '09.

Army 5
Bucknell 2

Despite a rough start, the Orange and Blue made a mini-run at the Black Knights to start singles play. The team took the first two matches with the help of Varela's 6-3, 6-4 victory over Flach and Gamboa's 5-0, (Ret.) abbreviated win versus Jones. But the Bison could not extend their overall lead after the Black Knights hit their stride and took four consecutive singles matches to end the contest. This stretch of the match saw all of the Bison players go down routinely in straight sets, save Globerman who managed to push Beehler to a second set tiebreak in the No. 4 singles slot.

The Orange and Blue brought its Patriot League record back to .500 with a resounding 6-0 win against Lafayette. The Leopards did not take a single off the Bison during the afternoon. Gamboa defeated Ansley Scudder 6-4, 6-1 while Globerman, who also showed good form, took care of Sarah Sykes 6-2, 6-1. Tania Varela contributed another one of her stellar performances in a 6-2, 6-0 victory over Danielle Bailey. Simonetti registered a lopsided 6-0, 6-0 win against Kim Sialiano. Calcaterra and Sotak put the finishing touches on the sweep with the final pair of wins against an overwhelmed Lafayette squad.

Bucknell 6
Lafayette 0

The team showed its resilience after losing the doubles point and pulled off a 4-3 win over Bloomsburg. All of the doubles matches were tight, each decided by four points or less. Calcaterra and Varela kept the Bison in contention as singles play wore on. But down the stretch it was the individual gutsy performances of Baffa and Sotak that carried the day.

Bucknell 4
Bloomsburg 3

"Every day we are playing better. Our goal since the beginning of the season has been to play in the championship match for the third straight year and to win it," Helt said. "That is still our goal. We believe it is well within our reach."

The Bison will play a non-league match against University of Maryland Baltimore County this weekend before concluding their regular season against Delaware.

GOLF From page B1

With two straight team finishes in the top third of competing fields, the Bison are certainly riding a strong wave of momentum entering the Patriot League Championship, now scheduled to be held at the University Golf Course Saturday and Sunday.

While Army and the West Point Golf Course were expected to host the season-culminating event, heavy rainfall in New York has rendered the course unsuitable and unplayable for the Championship.

"Our depth is our greatest asset. We really want to win this year to get revenge on Army for winning the trophy on our course two years ago."

— Kyle Moran '07

"It is absolutely a significant advantage to now play at home," Kyle Moran '07 said. "We do need to change our mindset though, as we had been practicing shots as if we would be playing at Army's course."

In the past two years, the Bison have finished in second (2005) and first place (2006) in the Patriot League Championship. Waddell edged teammate Ben Pellicani '06 in 2005 by one stroke and blew out the competition in 2006, finishing ten strokes ahead of the second-place finisher, Austin Luher '06 of Army.

"I'm looking forward to this weekend," Waddell said. "I think all of our games are peaking at the right time. Hopefully we will be able to get the job done for the second straight year."

In addition to the familiar venue, the Bison will also enjoy home fan support and preparation free of travel as a result of the Tuesday decision to move the event. As the pre-season favorite to repeat, expectations for the team will intensify.

"I don't think there's added pressure, though," Moran said. "There's pressure everywhere we play."

Moran, who won the Bucknell Invitational in 2004 and has played 13 tournament rounds at the Bucknell Golf Course, believes that the confidence level of the team resulting from not only finishing second at the Lafayette Invitational, but also capturing the league crown on the road last year, is extremely important to succeeding again.

"If you're not confident in your game, you're not going to play well," Moran said. "It's a huge mental game and all about state of mind."

With another year of experience under the belts of Waddell, Moran, Aoki and Desai, the Bison's chances look ripe for a second straight team title.

"Our depth is our greatest asset," Moran said. "We really want to win this year to get revenge on Army for winning the trophy on our course two years ago."

Women's crew sweeps William Smith

By Brian Mulligan
Sports Editor

The women's crew team had a perfect weekend against the women of William Smith, claiming all three races. This was the team's first home meet and marked the sixth-straight win for the varsity eight this spring season. The seniors on the team were recognized during the meet, as well.

> "This weekend's race will be a true testament to the hard work everyone on the team puts in on a daily basis."
> — Devon Mitchell '10

"In addition to hosting William Smith, we were also able to honor our senior class. Laura Roberts, Christine Drasba [grad], Susan Shadle, Lauren Olsen and Erin Henry are graduating from the program this year as one of the most successful classes in our program's history," Head Coach Steve Kish '92 said. "With three weeks left in the season, the team is looking to send them off with even more accomplishments under their belts."

The winning varsity boat consisted of coxswain Jewellet Yost '09, stroke Kelly Henkler '09 , 7-Jennie Trayes '08, 6-Katherine Brewster-Duffy '08, 5-Christine Drasba (Grad), 4-Besty Schneider '10, 3-Page Kannor '09, 2-Caitlin Doolin '09 and bow Whittney Henry '09 clocked a time of 5 minutes 41.58 seconds, edging out William Smith by over 12 seconds.

"This weekend's race will be a true testament to the hard work everyone on the team puts in on a daily basis from the noyice all the way up to the V8," Devon Mitchell '10 said.

In the second varsity eight event, the boat of coxswain Katie Kessler '10, stroke Olsen, 7-Roberts, 6-Sophie Bird '08, 5-Renee Alemi '10, 4-Brittany Kaplan '08, 3-Meghan Murphy '10, 2-Olivia Knodt '10 and bow Mitchell won its race by over 23 seconds. The Bison finished the 2,000-meter race in 6:22:15.

The third race of the day showcased two Bison and one William Smith boat. The novice eight won the event, finishing 2.71 seconds ahead of the Herons. The Bison varsity four also competed in the event and finished a mere 2.38 seconds behind William Smith to take third place.

"Racing on the Susquehanna was fun because we were on our turf, something that doesn't happen very often," Kannor said. "The women from William Smith were great, and I hope we can host them again soon."

The novice eight was made up of coxswain Lauren Lesko '10, stroke Kerry Sullivan '10, 7-Diana McCullough '10, 6-Megahn O'Reilly '10, 5-Sarah Germani '10, 4-Kim Weaver '10, 3-Chrissy Friedlander '09, 2-Justine Bailey '10 and bow Lauren Hallanan '10, while the varsity four consisted of coxswain Lauren Yee '10, stroke Gillian Carter '09, 3-Henry, 2-Elizabeth Regan '10 and bow Susan Shadle '07.

The Orange and Blue will travel once again to Carnegie Lake in Princeton, N.J. to take on Ivy League powerhouses Princeton, Dartmouth and the University of Pennsylvania. The weekend will allow the Bison to test their prowess against these top teams.

"This is a very competitive field," Kish said. "It will be exciting to see our women rise to the occasion."

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Elizabeth Jensen '07 hurls a shot towards the net. The team captain currently ranks seventh in career points and 10th in career goals for the Orange and Blue, notching 179 and 81, respectively.

Win over GW secures Bison's third seed

By Shannon Pitsch
Sports Editor

The women's water polo team ended its final weekend of regular season league competition with a 12-9 loss to Princeton University Friday and a 13-7 victory over George Washington Saturday. The win helped the team earn the third seed in the Southern Championships.

On Friday evening in Kinney Natatorium, the Bison fell to a 4-0 deficit in the first five minutes of play against No. 16 Princeton. Two goals from Aubrey Rowe '09 and Valentina Rozas '10 cut the lead in half, but the team would never get closer; the score was 8-3 before the end of the half.

Princeton 12
Bucknell 9

After an early goal in the third quarter from the Tigers, Rozas and Rowe responded by leading the team to a 6-4 run in the second half.

Meagan Gins '08 contributed to the offense and matched a career high with seven ejections drawn in 32 minutes of play. On defense, Mandy Bynum '07 compiled four saves in the first half while Alison Carter '10 led with seven saves in the second half.

"We were disappointed with our first half against Princeton," Head Coach John Ziegler said. "But we showed in the second that we are capable of beating them when we put together that complete game."

In their last home match of the season, the six seniors Sadie Abuhoff, Mandy Bynum, Elizabeth Jensen, Mallory Sullivan, Susan Kingerski and Jessica Trimis started the match beside Gins.

Bucknell 13
GWU 7

"It was great to see our seniors finish league play with a win at home, particularly where they all impacted heavily in the game," Ziegler said. "Sadie Abuhoff got the ball rolling by scoring the first two goals assisted by teammate Jess Trimis."

But it was Rozas who led the team offensively with three goals after two first-half goals from Abuhoff. Shana Palencia '10, Jensen and Gins each matched Abuhoff with two goals each.

In goal, Bynum compiled eight saves, including three in the first quarter, giving her 184 on the season.

After an incredible 5-0 first quarter performance, the Colonials came within two during the second but would never re-capture the lead. The Bison won 13-7, bringing them to 13-14 on the season overall.

On Saturday, the Bison face the University of Maryland in the first round of the Southern Championships.

"We knew all along there would be a showdown with Maryland to get to Princeton in the final game," Ziegler said. "Our last two games against Maryland have left us hungry for this contest. Improvements in our press defense, offensive awareness and counterattack should help as we head into championships. Most importantly, it will take a strong start and eliminating turnovers to reach our dream of a Southern Championship banner hanging in Kinney Natatorium."

The Orange and Blue are 1-2 against the Terrapins this year, but look for a victory to earn them a berth in the Eastern Championships.

Nancy's Nu-Wave Salon
look your best
Wax Specials
Main Street (Rte 45) Montandon
524-2315
www.nancysnuwave.com

Ellacindergs
Jewelry & Beads
Classes...Birthday Parties...Weddings...Girls' Nite Out
566 North Derr Drive
Lewisburg PA 17837
Phone 570 522 0880
cjreed@dejazzd.com
HOURS – Mon-Fri 11 am - 7 pm Sat 10 am - 4 pm
Create Your Own Designal

Saint Peter's College
invites you to our campus this summer!
We are the Jesuit College of New Jersey and want to help you accelerate your degree program with summer courses.
This summer, we are offering:
- More than 100 undergraduate and graduate courses
- Affordable tuition rates
- A specialized "Risk Management" series of courses for business majors (courses include Sarbanes Oxley, Enterprise Risk Management, Risk Management and Insurance and Business Ethics and Liability)
- Day and Evening courses at our two campus locations in New Jersey (Jersey City: 201. 761. 6042 and Englewood Cliffs: 201. 761. 7480)
EDUCATION. ONE STUDENT AT A TIME.
www.spc.edu
Visit www.spc.edu for summer class schedules.
Three and five-week courses offered.
The first Summer Session begins May 21st!
Saint Peter's College
The Jesuit College of New Jersey

INDIGO 5 HAIR & NAIL STUDIO
106 Market Street
Lewisburg, Pennsylvania 17837
570-524-7888

Education Graduates
Get a Teaching Job and Then Stay Home!
Earn a Master of Education Degree ONLINE from Lock Haven University
Earn Permanent Teacher Certification
Increase Your Annual Salary
Enhance Your Job Security
A member of the State System of Higher Education
Lock Haven University does not discriminate in its programs and activities
For More Information:
570-484-3869 gradadmissions@lhup.edu

Brookpark Golf
410 Farley Circle
Lewisburg, PA 17837
Phone: (570) 522-9900
PRESENTS...
DEMO DAY
SUNDAY, APRIL 22, 2007
1PM – 5PM
at
FAIRGROUND GOLF DRIVING RANGE
Phone: (570) 742-8390
LOCATED ON ROUTE 405 – JUST NORTH OF MILTON (NEAR TURBOT HILLS CC)
"COME OUT AND TRY THE LATEST EQUIPMENT FROM SOME OF GOLF'S BIGGEST NAMES!"
PING Callaway Titleist Taylormade Adams
 Door prize drawings  Refreshments will be served **
SPECIAL DISCOUNTS
WILL BE OFFERED ON MANY ITEMS PURCHASED OR ORDERED AT DEMO DAY!
THESE SPECIALS WILL BE VALID ONLY AT THE DEMO DAY EVENT AND WILL NOT BE REPEATED!
DON'T MISS OUT – PLAN TO JOIN US!!!
COUPON
$10.00 OFF
ANY PURCHASE OF REGULAR PRICE APPAREL, SHOES, OR GOLF BAGS
VALID 4/23/07 THRU 12/31/07

THE Bucknellian

A subscription is just the prescription you need.

Enclose this form and a check (made out to The Bucknellian) and mail it to:

The Bucknellian, Bucknell University C3952, 701 Moore Avenue, Lewisburg, PA 17837

Name _____ __ ONE YEAR: receive an issue each week of the 2007-08 academic year for only $45, a $15 savings!

Address _____

_____

Phone _____ __ ONE SEMESTER: receive 12 issues during the fall or spring semester for $30. Please specify semester: _____

E-mail _____

For more information contact The Bucknellian at 570-577-1520 or bucknellian@bucknell.edu

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Sherry Finkel '10 smashes the ball as it reaches home plate. Finkel boasts a .292 batting average and has one home run and eight RBIs in her first season for the Orange and Blue.

Softball drops two versus Lehigh

By Jake Meyer
Contributing Writer

Despite the University softball team dropping two games at home against Lehigh 6-2 and 10-2, this weekend was about more than hits, steals and scores. It was senior night for the class of '07 and it was a tear-filled ceremony.

Monica Grinage '07, Lauren Litts '07 and Jennifer James '07 all waved goodbye to a home crowd filled with parents and well-wishers. All three were team captains who had spent their college careers contributing in very different ways. Grinage was the loud, gregarious walk-on, working her way into the leadership position that she held this year. Freshman and sophomore year she saw very little playing time. Instead of quitting, she showed up every spring in good shape and ready to play. The coaches noticed her dedication and eventually gave her a chance to shine. She responded with a career year in almost every statistical category. Her teammates further honored her commitment by electing her to be a captain this year.

Litts went a different road. Quiet and thoughtful, she didn't share Grinage's extrovert personality. She demonstrated her leadership through her actions by staying a little later at practice or helping a teammate with her batting stance. It didn't hurt that she had one of the most incredible careers of any softball player in University history. Both the home run and RBI records were shattered by her bat this year. Even more, her hits have come when they count. Tenth-inning heroics and tiebreaking home runs litter her résumé.

James had been hurt for the duration of the season, but for her last game the audience saw her jog out to second base and remain there for the rest of the first inning. James, who may have one of the best names in the Patriot league, was an instant contributor. Her freshman year she was fourth in batting and third in walks on the team. Since then, she's been named to the second team All Patriot League and the Dean's List several times, a rare combination.

Lehigh 6
Bucknell 2

Lingering winter weather hampered both games with rain and severe wind. The 6-2 loss was highlighted by the bat of Ashley Carlson '09. She got off two hits and was able to keep her batting average above .400. Meg Muirhead '09 provided excellent relief pitching, keeping the Hawks scoreless for six innings over the two-game series. Sherry Finkel '10 hit two doubles and scored graduating senior Litts. Erin Curatola '08 matched her teammate with two hits of her own. Lehigh's bats proved to be too strong though. They jumped out to a 6-0 lead after the third inning that was too much for the drenched Bison to overcome.

Lehigh 10
Bucknell 2

The second game was a tough 10-2 loss that was shortened to five innings due to the mercy rule. Despite being down 10-0, the Bison proved resilient. Grinage and Carlson both batted in runs to decrease the gap. Down eight and needing to score another run to lengthen the game, Alyssa Okita '10 was able to draw a walk. The Bison were soon retired after another one of Lehigh's Tiffany Curtis' strikeouts.

The team returns to the field at 1 p.m. on Saturday in West Point, N.Y. as it takes on the Army Black Knights.

Baseball weathers tough week

By Ty Clark
Senior Writer

The baseball team was swept by Patriot League leader Lafayette this weekend before losing to Temple on Wednesday to complete its home weekend schedule.

On Senior Day, the Bison ran into a Lafayette juggernaut, losing by scores of 11-3 and 13-3. Last week, Shawn Hirsch '08 had cautioned about Lafayette, noting that they returned most of their starters from last year and had jumped out to a 7-1 Patriot League record. That record improved as Lafayette swept the series with the Bison.

Lafayette 11
Bucknell 3

The first game began with the Bison taking a 1-0 lead in the second inning on a Dustin Kapson '07 RBI single, but the lead would not last. Lafayette put up three in the next inning against starter Matt Curry '07 to grab the lead, but the Bison would tie it up in the fourth. Again, Kapson and Mark Angelo '08, who went three-for-six with three runs on Saturday, were in the middle of it; Kapson's second RBI single plated Kapson while Ed Rubbo '08 would come around on an error during the play to tie the game.

But Lafayette would pull away in the fourth, tacking on five runs on four hits and an error to go ahead for good, before adding runs in each of the next two innings to finish the game with an 11-3 victory. Curry would take the loss (3-5) after allowing eight runs—three unearned—on eight hits, two walks and one strikeout in four and two-thirds innings.

Lafayette 13
Bucknell 3

Things would not change in the second game. After two innings without a tally, Lafayette would plate six in the third inning and five in the fourth inning to take the lead for good. Although the Bison would chip away at the lead and threaten in the ninth, they were no match for Lafayette pitcher Matt Kamine.

The next doubleheader was postponed two days because of weather, and the Bison fell again in their next action, 3-2. The loss was particularly painful for since only one run was earned. A throwing error on a stolen base attempt in the first plated the first run, an error allowed the second run to score in the fourth, and a wild pitch in the fifth gave the Leopards a 3-0 lead.

Lafayette 3
Bucknell 2

But the Bison would fight back, tallying two on two singles, an error, an RBI groundout, and a fielder's choice to cut the lead to one in the home half of the fifth. The game belonged to the pitchers. Mathew Wilson '08 (3-3) took the hard-luck loss despite giving up four hits and three walks against five strikeouts over the full seven innings while Lafayette's Kevin Reese would scatter his four hits over the same seven innings.

The fourth game started off well for the Leopards' Mike Raible, who drove in three runs in the first and second to help Lafayette to a 4-0 lead before the Bison would score their first run in the third. But Lafayette would prove too strong, adding three in the fourth and one in the sixth to open up an 8-1 lead. Although the Bison would pull within 8-4 and threaten, Lafayette did not look back as they won, 10-6.

Lafayette 10
Bucknell 6

The Bison's frustrations continued the next day, when they traveled to Philadelphia for a single game against the Temple Owls. The Bison started off extremely well, drawing three consecutive walks to start the game and scoring four runs in the frame on only two hits before Temple would pull starter Eric Fritz after two thirds of an inning. They would add one in the second on a Ryan Gryskevicz '07 RBI single and two in the sixth and seventh on sacrifice flies to take a 7-1 lead. Temple put up one in the seventh to cut the lead to five before roaring back with a seven-run eighth inning to take a 9-7 lead, which would be the final tally.

Temple 9
Bucknell 7

The Bison hope to reverse their recent results when they travel to Holy Cross this weekend for a four-game set with the Crusaders.

Igniting Creative Ideas
On Fire Promotions
by trautman associates, inc.
promotional products · fundraising items
embroidered & screenprinted caps & apparel
awards · trophies · business gifts
800-538-8009
Lewisburg Showroom 434 Market 570-522-8009
www.onfirepromotions.com
Bring in this ad for one FREE SCREEN!!!
GOOD ON ANY APPAREL ORDER
(minimum 36 pieces)

COLDWELL BANKER
PENN ONE REAL ESTATE
Thank You, Bucknell!!
For thirty years of calling Bucknell and Lewisburg home.
Susan Warner-Mills, Sales Associate
Competence, Integrity, Service
524-7500; swm@coldwellbanker.com

Get on the ball and write for Sports!
Contact
E-mail blp004@

Ziegler's Beauty Salon
38 N. 5TH STREET
LEWISBURG, PA 17837
570-523-1250 570-523-1262
Book by Appointment
1 BEAUTY CHAIR & 2 BARBER CHAIRS
PARKING AVAILABLE

Book Your Graduation Party!
BROOKPARK STATION Cafe
"Casual dining with a gourmet flair"
Fresh Sushi & Vegetarian Items
Catering & Takeout Platters
B.Y.O.B.
Wireless Internet
Mon-Sat 8:00-8:00 Sun 8:00-2:00
1 Mile West of Town on RT. 45
542-FOOD (3663)

GREAT HOUSES FOR RENT
3 AND 4 BEDROOMS
AVAILABLE 2008 - 2009
WASHERS - DRYERS - DISHWASHERS
WHIRLPOOL TUBS
"The best houses available!"
570-524-5745 570-490-2922
CABROLLERMILLS@hotmail.com

A MATCH MADE IN HEAVEN
THIS MVP IS NEVER WITHOUT HIS MVP.

PATRIOT LEAGUE MOST VALUABLE PLAYER CHARLES LEE &
BUCKNELL'S MOST VALUABLE PAPER, THE BUCKNELLIAN

Take a time out once a week and go one-on-one with The Bucknellian to stay up to date with all of the action happening on campus.

Enclose this form and a check (made out to The Bucknellian) and mail it to:
The Bucknellian, Bucknell University C3952, 701 Moore Avenue, Lewisburg, PA 17837

Name _____
Address _____
_____
Phone _____
E-mail _____

__ ONE YEAR: receive an issue each week of the 2007-08 academic year for only $45, a $15 savings!

__ ONE SEMESTER: receive 12 issues during the fall or spring semester for $30. Please specify semester: _____

For more information, contact The Bucknellian at 570-577-1520 or 570-577-1085 or e-mail bucknellian@bucknell.edu.

Spoiler Alert!

By Matthew Saylor
Associate Editor of Content

"Grey's Anatomy"—Lots of information is beginning to leak out about the proposed "Grey's Anatomy" spin-off, along with some storylines for the remainder of this season. This Thursday will split the doctors of Seattle Grace up as interns and attendings. The interns have a test coming up that they need to prepare for, while the attendings continue to fight for the position as the next chief of surgery. When the interns and attendings collide this week, it will be over their complicated personal lives.

The following week will feature the two-hour episode "The Other Side of This Life," that will introduce us to the characters we will see if the spin-off is to happen in the fall. Addison ventures to Los Angeles to meet up with some former colleagues and their friends, including characters played by Taye Diggs, Tim Daly and Amy Brenneman among others. While there, Addison will deal with the choice of whether to leave Seattle Grace for a life in L.A. The potential name for the future show is "Private Practice."

This episode will also feature Cristina planning her wedding to Burke, but she will not be conducting the planning alone: her mother and Burke's will be around to lend a hand. Remember Burke's mother is the one who walked into her son's hospital room earlier this year to discover Cristina stripping and climbing on top of her son.

Alex continues to stick by Jane Doe and she will need him now more than ever before as she could be undergoing another surgery. Finally, Meredith and her step-mother will spend some more time together, but the future might not be so bright for them.

"Lost"—There are five episodes left this season, including the two-hour season finale. Jin and Sun, Locke, Ben, Charlie and Jack will all receive flashbacks before the year is out. The flashbacks include events that have happened both on and off of the island. Speculation is high that Charlie could be another character to bite the dust before the season's end, so be sure to watch the May 16 episode containing his flashback. Hurley, Desmond, Juliet, Kate, Sawyer and Claire may not be receiving their own flashback episodes before the year is out, but will all play prominent roles before the end of the year. Upcoming questions to be answered include who is the father of Sun's baby and what is the story behind Ben's past.

"The Office"—There are four more new episodes of "The Office" with the one-hour finale scheduled to air May 17. The episode set for May 3 will be 40 minutes, and there is a chance that the one on May 10 will be as well. The relationship between Michael and Jan will be a big part of the show's plot down the stretch, as well as the relationship between Jim and Karen. No one is quite sure exactly how much longer Karen will be in Scranton, especially if she is given a chance to further her career. As for Jim, he too will have to face decisions regarding his future, not only with Karen, but with Pam as well. Also, watch how hard Andy/Drew works to get himself back in the good graces of the Scranton crew.

Creativity and originality showcased at student art show

By Janna Shapiro
Arts & Entertainment Editor

Artists are commonly perceived as wacky eccentrics with a chip on their shoulder and an egocentric message to express. The University's students showed that they are anything but egomaniacal at the Samek Gallery's cramped but intriguing Student Art Show. The show opened Friday to a mass of enthusiastic students, prospective students, alumni and parental admirers.

A student show cannot be put together in a particularly cohesive manner. After all, there is no cohesive message amongst such a diverse group of undergraduates and teaching assistants. Similarly, it would not be fair to impose Chelsea Art Gallery standards of craftsmanship on student artists.

Displayed were a number of truly jarring and moving works that were worthy of our admiration and attention. Bucknellians have talent, and they may soon have their first paychecks to prove it.

Courtesy of David Wingate

The student art show in the Samek Art Gallery is an opportunity for artists around campus to share their art with the rest of the community. Shown here is a lighting installation designed by print-making teaching assistant John Adimando.

The initial photography set the tone for the first part of the show. Graduate Student Rachel Bee Porter's 14 photos titled with names like "Donald," "Tulu" and "Elizabeth" conjured images of portraiture. The subjects are chairs. Porter arranged the chairs in rooms decorated to compliment each chair's design and personality, so to speak, as, according to a photo caption, an homage to "the polished women of her family."

Courtesy of David Wingate

This photo is part of a three photo series entitled "Anatomy Lesson" by Kathryn Brownstone '09. Brownstone uses a Vandyke printing process to create the image of scientific drawings superimposed onto a human body.

Each of Porter's compositions shows a unique chair that compliments the prominent women in her life. Looking at the series, one cannot help but think of ideas of conspicuous consumption. Is Porter suggesting that objects can represent her loved ones' personalities, or is she questioning such a notion?

The first alcove of the gallery evoked wide-eyed expressions from nearly every visitor. Print-making Teaching Assistant, John Adimando designed a wonderfully colorful organic-looking installation. Adimando used screen-printing techniques to create cellular semi-translucent two-dimensional shapes. Adimando then assembled them into a complex form reminiscent of a multi-appendaged creature. He used a box light underneath the "center" of the piece to create an eerie amorphic quality. Does the image resemble a mouth, or is it sea kelp?

Adimando's written caption said, "I fully intend for each and every viewer to see a piece of my mind, my heart and my soul momentarily contained within the confines of the stark whiteness of the gallery walls."

Sophomore Kathryn Brownstone's three-photo series entitled "Anatomy Lesson" was jarring. According to her written explanation, the set featured a "historical photographic process" whereby Brownstone superimposed drawings of human anatomy over black and white photos using a Vandyke printing process. For all the nerds out there, the Vandyke process is named for the deep brown color that the Flemish painter, Van Dyke, used in his works.

Brownstone's images are indeed beautiful but oddly reminiscent of the introduction to the popular medical drama, "House." Her work juxtaposes the chill of indisputable science and the warmth of a live person.

Sandra Jung '07 also showed work relating to human mortality. Her photo entitled "Body Bag" shows a model in severe, perhaps theatrical makeup lying in a body bag, zipped to the neck. The triumph in the piece is not so much in showing a woman in a body bag. In the art world, that would be far from original. Rather, the blank expression on the model combined with her geisha-like appearance summons forth the idea of a struggle within the artist against antiquity and perhaps against cultural traditions.

"I've heard alumni interest in some of the students' art. Make sure you don't undersell," Helena Grubesic, assistant director of Debra Force Fine Art said.

Grubesic was the guest speaker at the annual Association for the Arts luncheon in the Refectory on Saturday afternoon.

"Turn your Power ON and Add LIFE to your Years!"
MORRISON'S ADVANCED CHIROPRACTIC CARE
Michael D. Morrison D.C.
1205 W Market Street
Lewisburg, PA 17837
Office: 570-523-1221
A Healthy Spine Equals a Healthy YOU!
Bucknell Students may receive a free exam and x-rays (if needed) with mention of this advertisement.

Ellacinders
Jewelry & Beads
Classes...Birthday Parties...Weddings...Girls' Nite Out
566 North Derr Drive Phone 570 522 0880
Lewisburg PA 17837 cfreed@dejazzd.com
HOURS – Mon-Fri 11 am - 7 pm Sat 10 am - 4 pm
Create Your Own Designs!

Guitar Center
The Musician's Choice
5082 Jonestown Rd
Harrisburg, PA 17112
717-652-7399
Shipping Available!
BRING IN THIS COUPON AND SAVE!
10% OFF!
THE BEST GEAR
THE BEST DEALS!
* some restrictions apply, see store for details

Red Smoked BBQ!
Beef Brisket, Pork chicken, Ribs!
Sandwiches, Wraps, Salads, Platters!
RESERVATIONS NEEDED!
Call in for TAKEOUT!
SKEETER'S PIT BBQ
ON THE BLUFF
OVERLOOKING THE SCENIC SUSQUEHANNA RIVER
AT THE INTERSECTION OF ROUTES 11 & 15
SHAMOKIN DAM
570 743 2727
Daily 11:00am – 10:00pm
Sundays till 9:00pm
www.SkeetersBBQ.com

STEIN'S
FLOWERS & GIFTS
220 Market Street
Lewisburg, PA 17837
(570) 524-9933
www.steinsflowersandgifts.com

BRYNWOOD Rentals
535 Inc.
In Lewisburg Since 1969
Your search begins..... and ends here.
Professional 24/7 Maintenance Staff
Apartments (furnished & unfurnished)
Houses for professionals students families
Rental Garages Also Available
Office & Retail Space
300—3,000 sq ft
brynwoodrentals.com
611 Market Street, Lewisburg
ph: 570.524.2121 x 3

New comedy dripping with British humor

Courtesy of www.imdb.com

Many have called it the British version of "Super Troopers," but this comedy has a witty style of its own. "Hot Fuzz," filled with plenty of action and refined dialogue is a welcome alternative to the typical Hollywood hits.

By Erik Zager
Writer

❖ Movie Review

According to the rumors, the theaters are about to be hit with a British version of "Super Troopers" called "Hot Fuzz." The truth of the matter is the only way this movie is at all similar to "Super Troopers" is that it is about policeman—or "bobbies" as they are called across the pond. Other than this trivial subject similarity, the movies do not share much in common.

"Super Troopers" was an achievement of American humor. The hilarity of being harassed by egotistical highway patrolmen who have nothing better to do than give you a hard time is probably lost on most foreigners. It also could be easily argued that the humor of "Super Troopers" was aimed for the slightly lower brow.

"Hot Fuzz," on the other hand, is an achievement of British humor (or "humour"). There are references made that will leave American audiences scratching their heads. British comedy is slightly more dry and subtle than its American counterpart; our fart jokes are replaced by jokes about breaking wind in the United Kingdom.

It is because of its British humor that "Hot Fuzz" is a refreshing change from the typical Hollywood comedy. The mix of buddy cop and Monty Python creates a unique feeling. The most interesting part of this film is its duality: the first and second halves are done in very different styles.

The first half has a more laid-back storyline. We join Sergeant Nicholas Angel (Simon Pegg), one of London's best cops, as he is forced to take a position in the suburbs due to his outstanding job performance making other city police officers look bad. He has trouble adapting to life in Sandford—winner of the "Best City in Britain" award—where life moves at a slower pace and allowing the teenagers into the bar for a few drinks is not so bad. Angel is teamed up with Inspector Frank Dan Butterman (Jim Broadbent), the fat, slow-witted son of the police chief who has a proclivity for American police action movies.

Sandford has its secrets, though. People are being murdered, and the town simply turns a blind eye. Even the police chief decides to dismiss the deaths as mere accidents, despite plenty of evidence to the contrary. Only Officer Angel, with his wealth of experience dealing with the crime of London, believes it important enough to track down the real cause of these so called "accidents." Once he finds out the lurid truth, that the movie kicks into high gear. Taking lessons from his partner's American cop action movies, Angel kicks it up a notch, arms himself to the teeth and gets down to business.

The movie is directed by Edgar Wright, who co-wrote it with star Simon Pegg. This is the same writing and directing team that brought us "Shaun of the Dead," and it's in the feel of the movie and the degree of funniness, though the movie does have its share of weirdness. In fact, it has a type of weirdness that will leave some people scratching their heads, wondering what just happened to their last two hours. This group, though, will probably be the minority. For the rest of us—especially those who live off of British humor—"Hot Fuzz" is a safe bet for a hilarious Friday night.

Courtesy of www.imdb.com

Simon Pegg and Nick Frost star as Sergeant Nicholas Angel and PC Danny Butterman in this year's "Hot Fuzz." After teaming up in the small town of Sandford, both cops suddenly find themselves in the midst of a series of horrible events, prompting them to try to uncover the dirty laundry behind a seemingly virtuous town.

Student open-mic night displays original talent

By Kyle Winslow
Writer

Friday's Open Mic Night at 7th Street Café provided students and parents with a range of contemporary, pop and coffee-house sounds.

Due to Accepted Students Weekend, the crowd was composed of current University students, along with prospective students and their parents. First-timers at the Café initially appeared overwhelmed by the lively environment, yet quickly settled into the relaxed crowd.

Ian Rawhauser '07 offered a Jason Mraz-influenced set. His song selection consisted of Mraz covers like "On Love, In Sadness," along with other songs of similar style. Many of Rawhauser's selections featured his well-trained voice, his ability to imitate and recreate Mraz's wide range of vocal ornamentation and a developed guitar playing style that complemented his songs' melodies.

Rawhauser playfully treated the crowd to teases of an eclectic mix of pop and funk, briefly covering Sheryl Crow's "The First Cut Is the Deepest" and Stevie Wonder's "Superstition." Along with getting some laughs, the crowd participated and sang along from their seats.

Still more diverse, Rawhauser closed his set rattling off lines in a rap-like style to a Josh Kelley cover.

Darren Mastropaolo '08 joined Rawhauser for a duo performance between sets of two additional Mraz covers: the intimate "Life is Wonderful," and the energetic "I'm Yours." Despite having just practiced the songs for the first time together during sound check, both performers displayed their superb musicianship through beautiful vocal harmonies and the ease of their collaboration. The audience was again captivated, clapping through the songs' choruses.

Mastropaolo displayed a slightly different style than Rawhauser, drawing more influence from artists such as Jack Johnson or G Love than Mraz. Mastropaolo's voice was smooth and easy to listen to, offering a mellow vocal style and laid-back strumming.

A brave and talented performance of Dave Matthews Band's "Dancing Nancies" broke the mellow mood. Other relaxed song selections and Mastropaolo's subtle, yet soothing, vocal quality carried the pleased 7th Street crowd early into Saturday morning.

Courtesy of stack.xchng.com

Meg's mix

Songs for Friday relaxation

By Megan McWhinney
Writer

Well Bucknellians, it's been tough and it's going to get tougher. This time of year is never a walk in the park, but at least we can usually spend those hours of studying outside, soaking up the sun. So before the panic sets in and you realize that finals are sneaking up and that you have to pack up your life, take a day to relax. That day is Friday.

Regardless of what you do for fun, just commit to having it. And while you're doing whatever you choose, here is a playlist of songs that make unwinding that much more enjoyable (except watching movies—your fellow moviegoers will not be thrilled). Most of these are songs for when you're at your peak of relaxation. So Bucknellians, take this Friday to be your guilt-free day of chilling out, calming down and cutting loose. Just try to keep it legal.

1. "Ai Du"—Ali Farka Touré with Ry Cooder
I promised myself I'd get this song in one of these lists. Touré was from Mali (he died this year), and this song is just incredible. When you expect the words to begin, the guitar keeps going, and when you think the song is about to end, the lyrics keep going.

2. "Karma Police"—Easy Star All-Stars and Citizen Cope
The original by Radiohead is wonderful, but this reggae version is just so cool. It makes you want to sit back and just absorb the song.

3. "Bèrekeké"—Geraldo Azevedo
This is lovely Brazilian music that flows so beautifully. Azevedo's voice is so in tune with the music, and there are so many interesting instruments throughout the song. It's sexy without being overt.

4. "Coconut"—Harry Nilsson
This song is so weird it makes me smile every time I hear it. Kooky is a good description. It's hard to take yourself seriously when this song is playing.

5. "Aqueous Transmission"—Incubus
One element that lends this song its unusual sound is "pipa," a Chinese plucked instrument that was introduced by someone outside of the band. The last minute of the song is croaking frogs from outside the Malibu mansion where the band was recording. Brandon Boyd, the lead singer, said that they wanted this song to be so "atmospheric and vibratory, it would make those who listened to it doze off into a land of rivers, kung fu and unicorns." Sounds good.

6. "Purple Haze"—Jimi Hendrix
No chill day is complete without some Jimi.

7. "When the Levee Breaks"—Led Zeppelin
Another wonderfully long song (five of the songs this week are over seven minutes) that you just get lost in. The lyrics repeat quite a bit, so you lose track of time within the song, which is pretty cool.

8. "Free Bird"—Lynyrd Skynyrd
If you aren't taken aback every time you hear the guitar on this song, get your head checked. And if you're with your friends, sing along.

9. "Champagne and Reefer"—Muddy Waters
An oh-so-fun live recording of the blues at its best. And it's always cool to hear an old guy make his case for legalization…

10. "Speak to Me/Breathe"—Pink Floyd
Try something new: The Dark Side of Oz. You've probably heard that Pink Floyd's album "The Dark Side of the Moon" syncs up with "The Wizard of Oz".But have you seen it done? Few have. Start the album when the black-and-white lion (some versions have a color one too) roars for the third time. It's a trip…

11. "You Don't Know How It Feels"—Tom Petty and the Heartbreakers
This song is always being played at the Bull Run on Friday and Saturday nights. Pockets of people sing along and it's a fun little moment. "So let's get to the point…"

12. "Ball and Biscuit"—The White Stripes
Oh, Jack White. So strange, so talented. This song always makes me stop whatever I'm doing, sit down and listen. You've got to love a modern band keeping old-school blues alive.

13. "Sunshine Superman"—Donovan
Apparently this song is known as one of the first examples of the genre that became known as psychedelia. "I can make like a turtle and dive for your pearls in the sea." Oh, really?

14. "Iga Bani"—Ali Farka Touré and Toumani Diabate
I usually don't like too much representation of one performer on a playlist, but this song is so cool it made the cut. One of the guitar melodies flows throughout the song, and the other string instrument is the kora, from West Africa (see how much you're learning?) This album was recorded without rehearsals, which is a true testament to the talent of these artists. The album, "In the Heart of the Moon," received a Grammy in 2006.

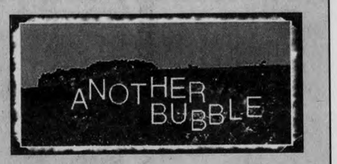
15. "Take Five"—Dave Brubeck
If only all music was this good. This is a song I could listen to on repeat for hours and hours. The piano holds the song together and the drums and saxophone are lovely. It was the first song of importance in the United States to use quintuple time, which is where the piece got its name.

These songs are available on iTunes under the category iMix, entitled "Songs for Friday Relaxation."

THIS PROVIDENCE:

Courtesy of www.thisprovidence.com

This Providence came together in the suburbs of Seattle and released its debut album, "Our Worlds Divorce," in 2004. In the band's newest album, "This Providence," it produces an energetic full-on rock record, which stays true to its indie roots.



By Ana Fullmer
Staff Writer

It's been a rough week for everyone, and this Virginia native knows all too well that celebrity gossip is the last thing on anyone's mind. That said, I hope all my Bubblenellians are taking some time to appreciate their family, their friends and all that they have.

While everyone is going about one of the final weekends of the semester worrying about finals, relationships, housing or grades, remember to give your loved ones a hug, a phone call or remind them that you care … because that's what this Bubble is all about.

A LESSON IN POP-PUNK BREVITY

UPCOMING TOUR LOCATIONS

1. 04.20.07 | FT. LAUDERDALE, FL
Venue: Revolution
With: w/ Paramore, The Almost, Love Arcade
www.paramore.net/tickets
Other Info:
$14 Adv/ $16 DOS
6:00 PM

2. 04.23.07 | ORLANDO, FL
Venue: The Social
With: w/ Paramore, The Almost, Love Arcade
www.paramore.net/tickets
Other Info:
$14.75ADV/$16.75DOS
6:30 PM

3. 04.24.07 | ATLANTA, GA
Venue: The Masquerade
With: w/ Paramore, The Almost, Love Arcade
www.paramore.net/tickets
Other Info:
$15ADV/$16DOS
8:00 PM

4. 04.26.07 | NORFOLK, VA
Venue: The Norva
With: w/ Paramore, The Almost, Love Arcade
www.paramore.net/tickets
Other Info:
$15
6:00 PM

5. 04.27.07 | TOWSON, MD
Venue: The Recher Theatre
With: w/ Paramore, The Almost, Love Arcade
www.paramore.net/tickets
Other Info:
$15
7:00 PM

6. 04.28.07 | WASHINGTON, DC
Venue: 9:30 Club
With: w/ Paramore, The Almost, Love Arcade
www.paramore.net/tickets
Other Info:
$15
5:00 PM

7. 04.30.07 | PHILADELPHIA, PA
Venue: Theatre of Living Arts
With: w/ Paramore, The Almost,
www.paramore.net/tickets
Other Info:
$14.50 ADV/ $15.50 DOS
8:00 PM

8. 05.01.07 | BOSTON, MA
Venue: Avalon Ballroom
With: w/ Paramore, The Almost, Love Arcade
www.paramore.net/tickets
Other Info:
$14.75
6:00 PM

9. 05.03.07 | NEW YORK, NY
Venue: Bowery Ballroom
With: w/ Paramore, The Almost, Love Arcade
www.paramore.net/tickets 16+
Other Info:
$15
8:00 PM

10. 05.08.07 | CHICAGO, IL
Venue: House Of Blues
With: w/ Paramore, The Almost,
www.paramore.net/tickets
Other Info:
$14 Adv/ $16 DOS
8:00 PM

11. 05.09.07 | DETROIT, MI
Venue: St. Andrew's Hall
With: w/ Paramore, The Almost,
www.paramore.net/tickets
Other Info:
$15
6:00 PM

12. 05.17.07 | LOS ANGELES, CA
Venue: The Avalon
With: w/ Paramore, Quietdrive,
www.paramore.net/tickets

By Alex Hay
Writer

❖ Concert Review

In recent years, Uptown has hosted a number of up-and-coming bands that have gone on to achieve impressive careers including: Northstar, Straylight Run, and most notably, Fall Out Boy. Last Saturday night, Uptown presented another young and talented band called This Providence.

The band, hailing from Seattle, is a lively pop-punk quartet with Dan Young on lead vocals, Gavin Philips on the guitar, Phil Cobrea manning the bass and finally Ryan Tapert banging on the drums. Their music, though not entirely unique, is catchy and infectious, which is not at all surprising, considering they belong to a popular record label, Fueled by Ramen, whose band list also includes punk favorites Panic! at the Disco, The Academy Is... and Punchline.

This Providence's newest CD (and debut on Fueled by Ramen) is a short yet enjoyable foray into the pop-punk arena, which was exactly the case with their show Saturday night. Slated for a 9:30 p.m. start time, This Providence kept the audience waiting for over 45 minutes until finally taking the stage around 10:20 p.m.

The small yet energetic crowd grew restless with anticipation for the show. Their patience was rewarded with a memorable but disappointingly brief performance. The band rocketed through their set list and only played for a fleeting 30 minutes which seemed unjustifiably short considering the delay of the start of the show.

David Geiman '08, a This Providence enthusiast, was disappointed in the length of the show.

"I'm not sure why it was so short. I had a really good time, but I just wish they had played longer," Geiman said.

Nonetheless, the time This Providence spent on stage was certainly put to good use. Every member of the band hit the stage with energy, while lead singer Dan Young successfully turned the front row of the audience into a jumping frenzy. Young also repeatedly slapped the hands of fans dancing in front of the stage and even got right in the faces of the crowd members while singing his songs. Many people sang every song and clapped their hands along with the beat.

The music was definitely loud enough (almost too loud), but did not at all detract from the quality of the show. Young sounded great with the microphone, and with the rest of the group meshed perfectly to create a passionate and inspiring presentation of their music.

Mike Carroll '08 said, "I thought it was a great show. The music was loud but clear and was definitely not overbearing."

Young prefaced most of the songs with a brief explanation of the meaning of the lyrics which helped in the understanding of This Providence's material and provided insight into the band's inspiration for much of their music.

This Providence has a slight religious undertone, seen in such songs as "The Road to Jericho is Lined with Starving People" and "Walking on Water." In the middle of the show, Young gave the crowd a short speech on the "never-ending search for God." The band did not press its religious beliefs on the audience, which was refreshing.

Courtesy of stock.xchng.com

The highlight of the show was undoubtedly a tie between the songs "My Beautiful Rescue" and "Anything is Possible." The former, presented in the middle of the show, is a wonderful acoustic piece about salvation achieved through love. The crowd belted out the lyrics ("I've been dancing on the tops of building/At the tops of my lungs I'm singing you a song") with Young encouraging everyone to join in. The latter is a fiery plea for a new beginning with heavy guitar riffs and powerful drum work. The crowd responded by frantically jumping in front of the stage and screaming the lyrics back at the band which was quite a sight to see.

"It was a spicy show, in my opinion. A lot of energy and enthusiasm, which I like," Tom Caro '08 said

Upon completion of its show, This Providence received strong applause and cheers from the audience and offered to meet backstage with anyone who wanted to converse with them.

This Providence will return to Pennsylvania on April 29 to do a show at The Theater of Living Arts in Philadelphia and then continue on their North Atlantic tour. For more information on This Providence, visit their Web site at www.thisprovidence.com.

The Bucknellian

April 27, 2007

Volume 139, Number 12 | Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue | www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Memorable Moments

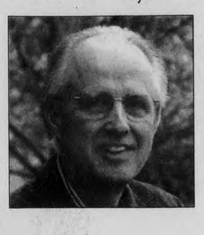
Take a look back at some of the year's most notable events in this special photo spread.

See page A4-5

2005

John Miller

Robert Taylor

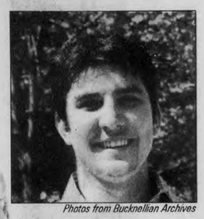


Lee Cromwell

2006

Gary Sojka

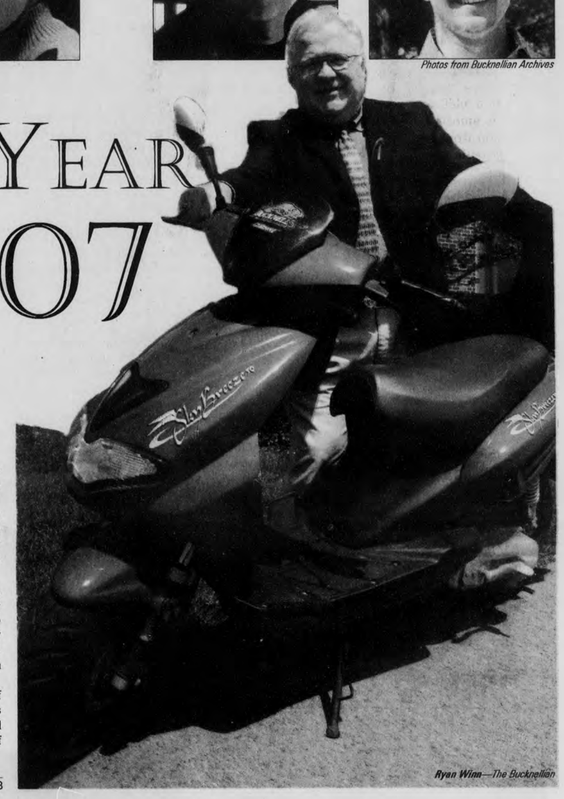
David Van Wagener



Photos from Bucknellian Archives

PEOPLE OF THE YEAR 2007

The Bucknellian recognizes two individuals for their achievements in and beyond their roles at the University



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Gerald Commerford

Acting Dean of Students

By Andrew Larson
Editor-in-Chief

On his desk sits a House Party mug filled with coffee, used as a paperweight for a manila folder containing a student's alcohol citation. Soon the student caught drinking underage will be summoned to his office to receive "points," consequences based on the severity of the offense.

As acting dean of students, Gerald Commerford's dual role as an advocate for students and an arm of the University's policy enforcement may seem like an oxymoron, two conflicting interests competing for his favor.

But Commerford says his jobs are really one and the same.

"My approach to discipline doesn't focus on sanction or punishment—although it's a part of it—but what's going on with a person that resulted in their finding their way to my office," Commerford said.

Even though Commerford knows the importance of enforcing the rules, he also believes in second chances—and with good reason. Often he develops close relationships with the students he's had to punish.

A year ago, teaching a first-year student alcohol class, Commerford reprimanded a student for talking out of turn.

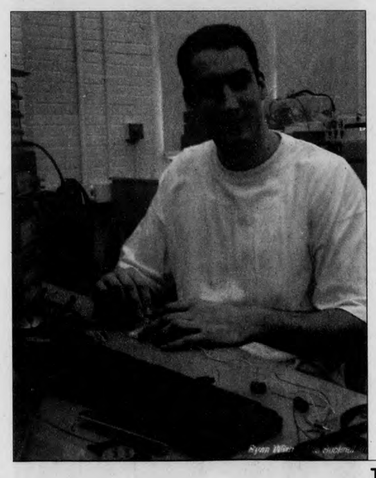
"When he confronted me about it, I showed a complete lack of respect for his authority," Chris Hennings '09 said. "He called me out on my act of stupidity and ignorance, sent me to the back the classroom in the corner and set up a meeting with me after class."

At first, Hennings saw his act of defiance as a joke, a callow slap in the face to authority. But after meeting with Commerford, his outlook changed.

"In [Commerford's] words, my high school experience allowed me to gain entrance into the University—and only entrance," Hennings said. "Everything after I step foot on this campus has to be earned."

Now, Hennings, a member of the soccer team, is a teacher's assistant for that same alcohol class and works in the Dean of

See COMMERFORD page A3



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Chris McNaughton

Student-athlete

By Matthew Saylor
Associate Editor of Content

The term Big Man on Campus has become cliché in the world of sports. Any collegiate athlete bound for a professional career after an abbreviated stay at college has received the title, from SportsCenter, teammates, his agent, his entourage, anyone. It is misused.

It is time to redefine the word. There is no better person to represent this—both figuratively and literally—than Chris McNaughton '07.

McNaughton has become the face of the University over his four years here. He is known as much for his 3.34 cumulative grade-point average as an electrical engineering major as for his basketball accomplishments of 1,529 career points scored and the game-winning jump hook shot with 10.5 seconds left against Kansas in the 2005 NCAA Tournament.

"[McNaughton] epitomizes what we look for in all respects. He became a poster child for scholar-athletes at Bucknell," John Hardt, director of athletics & recreation, said.

The Recruitment

Pat Flannery '80, men's basketball head coach, recognized that McNaughton was special. Unintentionally.

"Chris jumped out at us because of his background academically," he said. "He has good feet, good hands, an ability to run. But we were actually looking at another kid, but saw him on tape and wanted to know more."

> "He was always confident in the classroom. That confidence level eventually transferred to the basketball court and kept rising, too." —Pat Flannery '80, head basketball coach

McNaughton recalls visiting the campus while the University was on winter break and Sojka Pavilion was being built. The arena was different from what the Leutershausen, Germany native was used to at home.

"Compared to the gyms in Germany, this was very impressive," he said as his eyes light up at the memory.

McNaughton said that he

See MCNAUGHTON page A3

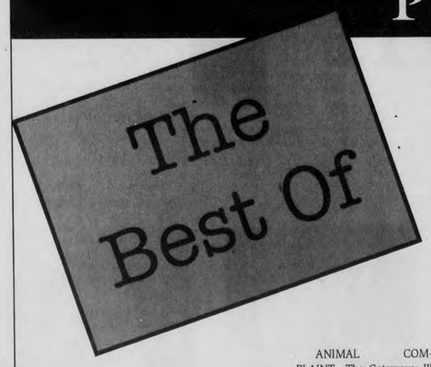
INSIDE THIS ISSUE:

ChemE Car Competition
See page B5

The smallest dorm room
See page C5

Men's crew heats up
See page D4

Public Safety Log



Wednesday, August 23, 2006

Theft—Chi Phi fraternity: Student reports several personal and fraternity items taken from Chi Phi and put up for sale on Ebay.

Saturday, August 26, 2006

DISORDERLY CONDUCT—Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity: Students using a sling shot to shoot water balloons at McDonnell Hall.

Sunday, September 3, 2006

INFORMATION—Phi Kappa Psi fraternity: Individual threatened to damage vehicles after denied entrance into Phi Psi. Person was located and identified.

FIRE ALARM—The Mods: Fire alarm caused by cooking (burnt bacon). No one was in residence. Food was removed from stove and residence secured.

Wednesday, September 6, 2006

MISSING PROPERTY—Roberts Hall: Custodian supervisor reports that a Savoy two-seater couch is missing form the lobby of Roberts Hall.

Saturday, September 9, 2006

ANIMAL COMPLAINT—The Gateways: Ill raccoon in area. Game Commission contacted and handled the incident.

Sunday, September 10, 2006

SUSPICIOUS PERSON—Lower Taylor lot: Employee reported seeing a suspicious male near the parking lot. Public Safety found that the male was waiting for an employee to get off work.

Wednesday, September 13, 2006

PROPERTY RECOVERED—RB Winter State Park: Park signs recovered from Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity storage shed.

Saturday, September 16, 2006

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—St. George Street: A student reported that unknown person(s) at Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity threw bottles at him as he was walking on St. George Street.

Thursday, September 21, 2006

DISORDERLY CONDUCT—Roberts Hall: Student reported a suspicious male at the Writing Center.

Friday, September 29, 2006

DISORDERLY CONDUCT—Sigma Alpha Mu fraternity: Unknown person(s) entered the fraternity and urinated on a radiator.

Sunday, October 1, 2006

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Roberts Hall: Unknown male dumped a trashcan in the stairwell and tore papers off the wall. Under investigation.

Saturday, October 7, 2006

THEFT—Christy Mathewson-Memorial Stadium: Caramel apples taken from Dining Services.

Thursday, October 12, 2006

INFORMATION—Ellen Clarke Bertrand Library: Empty bullet casings found outside.

Sunday, October 22, 2006

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Elaine Langone Center: Unknown Person(s) pulled plants out of pots, left beer cans on the patio of the Bison and tried to start a fire in the dumpster.

Sunday, October 29, 2006

DISORDERLY CONDUCT—Vedder Hall: Large recycling can full of water poured into a room.

Thursday, November 9, 2006

SUSPCIOUS VEHICLE—Bucknell West: Vehicle in the area harassing students. It was gone on arrival.

Thursday, November 16, 2006

ASSIST AGENCY—Public Safety Office: Fugitive surrendered to Public Safety officer.

Saturday, November 18, 2006

ASSIST OTHER AGENCY—Route 15 and 45 intersection: Student urinating in public at the intersection.

Sunday, November 26, 2006

THEFT, LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—McDonnell Hall: Christmas tree taken from a student's room and two students cited for underage consumption.

Monday, January 29, 2007

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Recreational Center: Soap removed from dispensers in the men's bathroom.

Saturday, February 3, 2007

DISORDERLY CONDUCT—Trax Hall: Dead Canada goose found in the fourth floor hallway.

Friday, February 9, 2007

THEFT—Breakiron Engineering Building: Smoke station removed from building.

Thursday, February 22, 2007

WATER SPILL—Swartz Hall: Trash can full of water spilled when room door was opened.

Monday, March 5, 2007

SUSPICIOUS CIRCUMSTANCES—St. George Street: Vehicle had its lug nuts loosened.

Friday, March 30, 2007

VEHICLE ACCIDENT (NON-REPORTABLE)—Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity: Vehicle drifted into another vehicle.

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—Bertrand Library: Student arrested for underage consumption.

Saturday, March 31, 2007

LIQUOR LAW VIOLATION—7th Street and Snake Road: Alumni welfare check.

Sunday, April 8, 2007

LIQUOR LAW—Route 15 Tunnel: Disciplinary referral.

2007 SPRING CONCERT

THE ROOKE CHAPEL RINGERS

Rooke Chapel
Bucknell University

SATURDAY
APRIL 28, 2007
8:30 p.m.

The performance is open to the public free of charge.

Bucknell

This is the last issue of the Bucknellian.

Recycle it!

La Primavera
Rt. 45 West Lewisburg
523-1515
Sun, Tues-Thurs 11-10
Fri-Sat 11-11

Weekly Specials
Tues: Chicken & Veal $12.95
Wed: Seafood Night $12.95
Thurs: Steak Night $12.95
Sun: Pasta Special $8.95

-Pizzas to go! $16.95 for 2 large pizzas
-Full Liquor Bar
-Available for Formals, Graduation Dinners, Reunions
-Lunch Buffet 11-3

COUPON: Buy one entree, get 2nd one half off!

COUPON: 10% off total purchase!

Coupons cannot be used on weekly specials

THE ROOKE CHAPEL CHOIR
Spring Concert
WILLIAM PAYN, conductor
DAVID COVER, accompanist
MARY HANNIGAN, flute
and the VIVALDI CHAMBER ORCHESTRA
Sunday, April 29, 2007
7:30 p.m.
Rooke Chapel
Bucknell University
open to the public free of charge

Bucknell

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Commerford a teacher, administrator and friend

COMMERFORD From page A1

Students Office. His dedication to his classes has improved, and so has his sense of accomplishment.

"Really only myself, my coach and Dean Commerford know how close I may have been to turning down the wrong road," Hennings said.

The learning experience renewed Hennings' own interest in being a high school teacher.

"It has been my dream to have my own history classroom since I sat in one during my senior year," Hennings said. "Without Dean Commerford's guidance, I can almost certainly say I would have failed in that endeavor and be in a different field of study now. He reminded me of what it means to teach."

Although Commerford's job sometimes exposes him to student ire, many come to see him differently through the distance of time. Even students he suspended from the University have returned to tell him influenced their lives for the better.

"Time and time again students will come back and thank Dean Commerford because they needed a wakeup call," said Kari Conrad, associate dean of students and director of campus activities and programs.

In fall 2006, Commerford, formerly an associate dean of students, took the helm of the Dean of Students Office, filling the vacancy left by Richard Ferraro, now working at Virginia Tech.

This year, in addition to his job with students, Commerford has taken on additional supervisory and administrative roles. He now sits on a number of committees, including the University Management Group, Personnel Committee, Committee on Campus Activities and Town-Gown Relations Committee.

At a time when the University is searching for a permanent dean of students, Conrad said Commerford has been "the glue that held the department together."

"He can sit down and handle a crisis better than any person I know," said Conrad, who has worked with Commerford for 18 years. "If I can think of anyone who consistently creates win-win situations, it would be Dean Commerford."

Commerford, who lives in Lewisburg, about a mile from campus, has been at the University longer than any other administrator. He started as assistant dean of men—there was a comparable dean of women—at a time when the University was gender segregated, with men living uphill and women downhill, and curfews on when they could intermingle.

He also has worked as director of housing and residential life and director of fraternity and sorority affairs.

"He understands Bucknell over the course of time and he's able to look at decisions and the impact of decisions with that in mind," Conrad said.

Commerford's initiatives as acting dean of students included improving communication between his many constituencies. He spearheaded a luncheon for new professors, asking them, "How can we help you help students, and how can our jobs complement one another," said Lewis Marrara, assistant dean of students and director of fraternity and sorority affairs.

"In my five years here, this was the first time we did that," Marrara said.

There's hardly a person on campus who wouldn't recognize Commerford, a husky man with rosy cheeks, and a familiar face seen everywhere from sporting and Greek events to the Terrace Room eating lunch with students.

But Commerford is perhaps best known for his trademark scooter, which he rides to work every day. He purchased the Moped during an oil shortage in the 1970s, hoping to cut down on his use of gasoline.

"I thought I was starting a trend, but no one picked up on it," Commerford said with a chuckle.

This year, he asked Bucknell Student Government to auction off his original scooter, with proceeds going to the Million Penny Project, a philanthropy drive benefiting local organizations. Commerford purchased a new scooter, a Sea Breeze—"the Mercedes Benz of scooters," he said—featuring an electric, rather than kick, start mechanism.

Commerford, who earned his bachelor's degree from Colgate and went on to George Washington for his master's, has worked at the University for 38 years. He said choosing a career in education meant personal sacrifices, but no regrets.

"I decided in the 1960s what was more important: professional success or personal satisfaction," Commerford said. "I decided you couldn't find a better environment than the University. It cost me professionally, but not personally. I never look back at that decision."

Next semester, Commerford plans to move back to his previous job as associate dean. He said he likes the job too much to retire just yet.

"A lot of people ask, 'How can you deal with meeting with students in trouble?' But I look at it as developmental," Commerford said. "I enjoy working with students and caring about students."

That's why it's the people, not their problems, that stick with him.

"The best experience is at Reunion Weekend, when I run into alumni and I remember faces and names, not incidents," Commerford said.

McNaughton excelled on and off the court was leaning toward attending Bucknell, and it helped that Bryan Goodman, former men's assistant basketball coach, made the trip to Germany to meet with him. The Bison were the only team to send a representative overseas to meet with him.

MCNAUGHTON From page A1

The Voyage

Journeying thousands of miles from home is difficult for anyone when attending college, especially when there is a culture change. McNaughton found that he had an immediate advantage though over many other students.

"Being part of a team was a great help," he said. "I had 15 instant friends. From day one you have these guys you can count on and it makes the transition so much easier."

One part of that group was Abe Badmus '07, who marveled at the accomplishments of a classmate, teammate, and most importantly, friend.

"His family is thousands of miles away, and he doesn't show one ounce of homesickness," Badmus said. "He's considerate and mature, and has given me so much great advice over the past four years."

McNaughton's strengths started with his academics.

"He was always confident in the classroom," Flannery said. "That confidence level eventually transferred to the basketball court and kept rising, too."

Rich Kozick, professor of electrical engineering, has enjoyed his time teaching McNaughton.

"In the classroom he is a hard-working and serious student, and his performance has been outstanding," Kozick said. "He is very bright, and he has excelled in the demanding electrical engineering curriculum at Bucknell. He is a pleasure to teach in class and work with in the engineering labs."

Samuel Craig, visiting assistant professor of electrical engineering, also spoke of McNaughton's excellent performance in his class, but brought up a story about him outside the classroom that reflects his character.

"Some time last year I attended a Bucknell Symphony Orchestra concert in the Weis Center," he said. "As people were entering the auditorium I happened to look to my right and saw Chris come in and take a seat on the side. Then I noticed a young woman in the violin section catch his eye and give him a little wave. He waved back. Maybe Chris really likes classical music, but I'll bet he was there to support his girlfriend. He earned a point or two with me as well."

That young woman was Ashley Glasgow '07. She and McNaughton are engaged and set to marry this summer.

> "To others it looks easy, but it wasn't. There were a lot of late nights, and he made a lot of sacrifices. He couldn't study as much as he wanted to."
> —Ashley Glasgow '07

The Fiancé

Glasgow has been cited by McNaughton's teammates and coach alike as a pivotal influence in his life.

"His relationship with Ashley has been wonderful," Flannery said. "It is great for him to have someone outside of basketball and academics, just to get away from it."

McNaughton is thankful for the impact that Glasgow has had on his life in Lewisburg.

"She has been so great to me," he said. "Her whole family has been. I would go to their house for Christmas. They would even buy me a present. They treated me like a family member from day one."

Glasgow described McNaughton as "laid back and kind," friendly with anyone who comes his way.

"You wouldn't even know he plays basketball. He is so friendly and so humble," she said.

Of course Glasgow knows that McNaughton does play basketball, as she is seen at every game wearing his No. 32 jersey and heard around Sojka as the most vocal of his supporters. Especially when she feels the Big Man is getting fouled.

"I don't know how he deals with it," she said. "I get really mad. I've seen it for so long now, and it really bothers me how [opposing players] get away with it."

Flannery agrees with Glasgow's assessment.

"We'd have ice on the front and back of his knees, on his ankles," he said. "People wanted to be physical with him because it was the only way to stop him, and at first it really upset him. Then over time, he learned to give it back. He was ready for it and adapted to it."

Another adaptation that McNaughton had to make was to the rigors of balancing engineering and basketball.

The Balancing Act

"Watching Chris balance both basketball and engineering was crazy to see," teammate Donald Brown '07 said. "I'd have my one homework assignment that I'd complain about to Chris after practice, and then he'd tell me all the projects he had to put together that night because they were due the following morning. He's made me a better person in the sense that I needed to buckle down and focus more academically because of the way I saw him focus academically."

Badmus chimed in with similar sentiments.

"I tried to be an engineer freshman year along with playing basketball. He and I used to go to class together all the time," he said. "After the first semester I realized it was too strenuous and overwhelming for me, so I went into the liberal arts college while he remained."

Juggling basketball, school work and time with his fiancé, McNaughton kept a positive attitude.

"He has excelled tremendously in all these parts of his life and still can smile and joke around in his German accent," Badmus said.

So what was the key for McNaughton?

"Time management is everything," he said. "I didn't know about all the requirements of doing what is a five-year program in four years. But you have to learn how to balance your time. I'd have to do my homework before practice because I would be too tired afterward. I would run down hill to practice because I might be coming late from some lab. It was not easy for me."

Glasgow agreed.

"To others it looks easy, but it wasn't. There were a lot of late nights, and he made a lot of sacrifices. He couldn't study as much as he wanted to," she said.

However, McNaughton was certainly dedicated to his studies. Hardt remembered one specific time where he noticed the 6'11" center not at practice.

"I remember the day we were hosting the Patriot League [Tournament] championship game," he said. "I went to a walk-through that morning and the big fella was nowhere to be seen. He was at a lab he needed to finish. He achieved that balance his entire career."

McNaughton hopes that his playing days are not over, but knows he cannot play forever.

"I hope to get some NBA tryouts for the experience," he said. "Then go play in Europe. I would like to play for as long as I can."

After that though McNaughton plans to attend graduate school, perhaps to get a business degree to complement his engineering degree.

"You have to have goals," he said. "I had something both academically and on the court. If you lose track, then you can get lost."

McNaughton also stressed the importance of having a social life to go along with his academic and athletic demands.

"When you are in college you have to take advantage of it," he smiled.

Flannery said that he hopes all of his players take away the experience of being in college as the greatest thing. He'll be happy to know that McNaughton concurred.

"I had a great experience and wouldn't trade it for anything," he said. "The best thing is the people, the friends that you make. I'll remember the basketball stuff, but the guys you play with are what is important. All the things we have done together... I may never see them again, but I'll never forget them, especially [Badmus and Brown]."

Brown echoed McNaughton's sentiments.

"He was my not only my teammate for four years, but my best friend, who I always counted on," Brown said.

McNaughton became the person that the University counted on, as a student, an athlete and its top representative. He did not let them down.

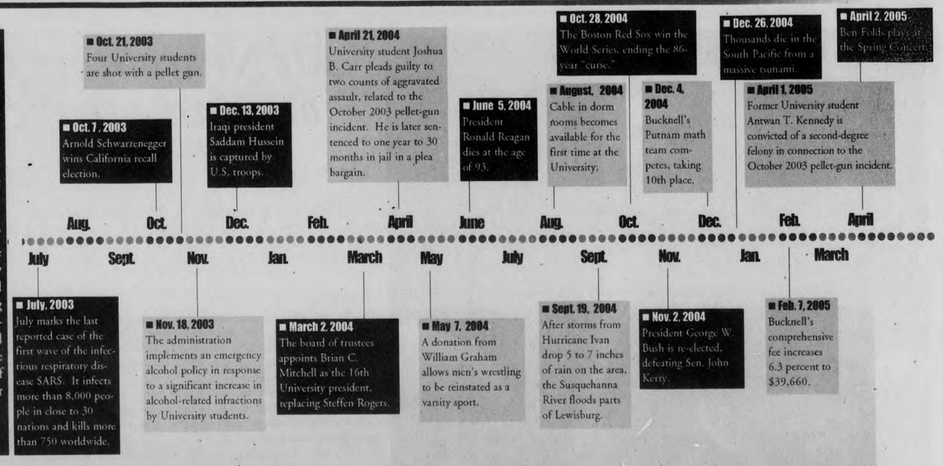
BRYNWOOD 535 Inc.
Rentals
In Lewisburg Since 1969
Your search begins..... and ends here.
Professional 24/7 Maintenance Staff
Apartments (furnished & unfurnished)
Houses for professionals students families
Rental Garages Also Available
Office & Retail Space
300—3,000 sq ft
brynwoodrentals.com
611 Market Street, Lewisburg
ph: 570.524.2121 x 3

The Bucknellian would like to thank everyone who contributed to the paper this year. See you in the fall!

Memorable Moments

Over the last four years at the University, major campus and world events, from the emergency alcohol policy to the capture of Saddam Hussein, have framed the lives of the graduating seniors.

As the Class of 2007 walks through the gates of the Christy Mathewson Memorial Stadium during Commencement, it symbolically leaves behind the University. But the students' memories of those events will never fade.



■ Oct. 21, 2003
Four University students are shot with a pellet gun.
■ Oct. 7, 2003
Arnold Schwarzenegger wins California recall election.
■ Dec. 13, 2003
Iraqi president Saddam Hussein is captured by U.S. troops.
■ April 21, 2004
University student Joshua B. Carr pleads guilty to two counts of aggravated assault, related to the October 2003 pellet-gun incident. He is later sentenced to one year to 30 months in jail in a plea bargain.
■ June 5, 2004
President Ronald Reagan dies at the age of 93.
■ Oct. 28, 2004
The Boston Red Sox win the World Series, ending the 86-year "curse."
■ August, 2004
Cable in dorm rooms becomes available for the first time at the University.
■ Dec. 4, 2004
Bucknell's Putnam math team competes, taking 10th place.
■ Dec. 26, 2004
Thousands die in the South Pacific from a massive tsunami.
■ April 1, 2005
Former University student Antwan T. Kennedy is convicted of a second-degree felony in connection to the October 2003 pellet-gun incident.
■ April 2, 2005
Ben Folds plays at the Spring Concert.
July Sept. Nov. Jan. March May July Sept. Nov. Jan. March
■ July, 2003
July marks the last reported case of the first wave of the infectious respiratory disease SARS. It infects more than 8,000 people in close to 30 nations and kills more than 750 worldwide.
■ Nov. 18, 2003
The administration implements an emergency alcohol policy in response to a significant increase in alcohol-related infractions by University students.
■ March 2, 2004
The board of trustees appoints Brian C. Mitchell as the 16th University president, replacing Steffen Rogers.
■ May 7, 2004
A donation from William Graham allows men's wrestling to be reinstated as a varsity sport.
■ Sept. 19, 2004
After storms from Hurricane Ivan drop 5 to 7 inches of rain on the area, the Susquehanna River floods parts of Lewisburg.
■ Nov. 2, 2004
President George W. Bush is re-elected, defeating Sen. John Kerry.
■ Feb. 7, 2005
Bucknell's comprehensive fee increases 6.3 percent to $39,660.

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

The University commemorates 9/11 five years after the attacks.

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Students perform the controversial German play "Spring Awakening," dealing with teenage sexuality.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Lewis Black entertains students with his politically minded humor.

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

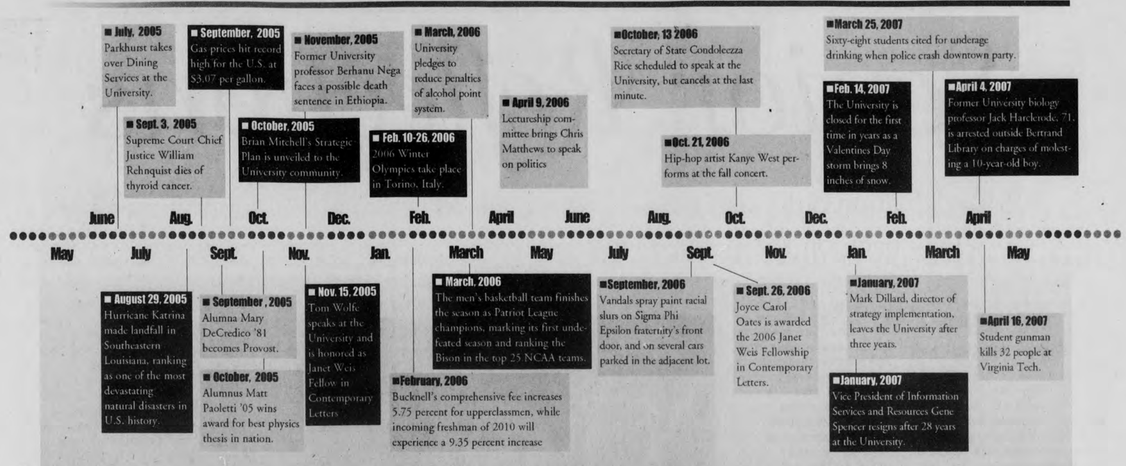
Kanye plays Sojka Pavilion for the Fall Concert.

Bucknellian Archives

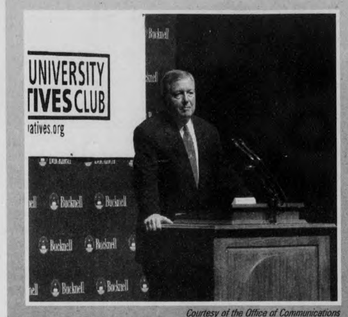
Students share their deepest secrets through The Bucknellian's PostSecret series.

2 memorable moments 6

Memorable Moments

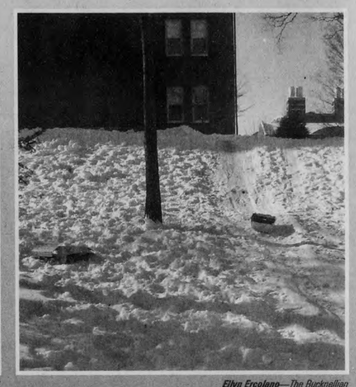


■ July, 2005
Parkhurst takes over Dining Services at the University.
■ Sept. 3, 2005
Supreme Court Chief Justice William Rehnquist dies of thyroid cancer.
■ September, 2005
Gas prices hit record high for the U.S. at $3.07 per gallon.
■ October, 2005
Brian Mitchell's Strategic Plan is unveiled to the University community.
■ November, 2005
Former University professor Berhanu Nega faces a possible death sentence in Ethiopia.
■ Feb. 10-26, 2006
2006 Winter Olympics take place in Torino, Italy.
■ March, 2006
University pledges to reduce penalties of alcohol point system.
■ April 9, 2006
Lectureship committee brings Chris Matthews to speak on politics
■ October, 13 2006
Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice scheduled to speak at the University, but cancels at the last minute.
■ Oct. 21, 2006
Hip-hop artist Kanye West performs at the fall concert.
■ March 25, 2007
Sixty-eight students cited for underage drinking when police crash downtown party.
■ Feb. 14, 2007
The University is closed for the first time in years as a Valentines Day storm brings 8 inches of snow.
■ April 4, 2007
Former University biology professor Jack Hardcrode, 71, is arrested outside Bertrand Library on charges of molesting a 10-year-old boy.
May June July Aug. Sept. Oct. Nov. Dec. Jan. Feb. March April May June July Aug. Sept. Oct. Nov. Dec. Jan. Feb. March April May
■ August 29, 2005
Hurricane Katrina made landfall in Southeastern Louisiana, ranking as one of the most devastating natural disasters in U.S. history.
■ September, 2005
Alumna Mary DeCredico '81 becomes Provost.
■ October, 2005
Alumnus Matt Paoletti '05 wins award for best physics thesis in nation.
■ Nov. 15, 2005
Tom Wolfe speaks at the University and is honored as Janet Weis Fellow in Contemporary Letters
■ February, 2006
Bucknell's comprehensive fee increases 5.75 percent for upperclassmen, while incoming freshman of 2010 will experience a 9.35 percent increase
■ March, 2006
The men's basketball team finishes the season as Patriot League champions, marking its first undefeated season and ranking the Bison in the top 25 NCAA teams.
■ September, 2006
Vandals spray paint racial slurs on Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity's front door, and on several cars parked in the adjacent lot.
■ Sept. 26, 2006
Joyce Carol Oates is awarded the 2006 Janet Weis Fellowship in Contemporary Letters.
■ January, 2007
Mark Dillard, director of strategy implementation, leaves the University after three years.
■ January, 2007
Vice President of Information Services and Resources Gene Spencer resigns after 28 years at the University.
■ April 16, 2007
Student gunman kills 32 people at Virginia Tech.



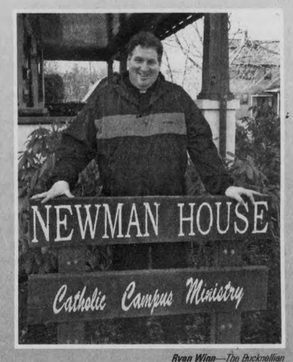
Courtesy of the Office of Communications

John Ashcroft speaks at the University, defending the Patriot Act.



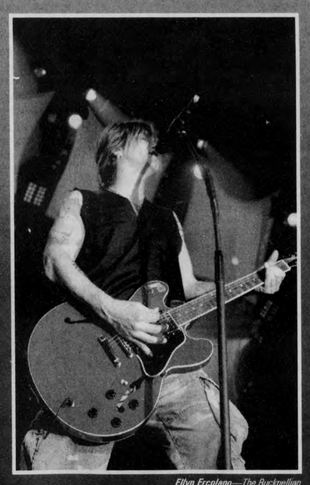
Ellyn Ercolano—The Bucknellian

For the first time in recent memory, the University officially closes for a snow day.



Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Marty Moran leaves campus for a top position in the national Catholic Campus Ministry.



Ellyn Ercolano—The Bucknellian

Goo Goo Dolls play at the Spring Concert.

Courtesy of Amy Mantish

Women's track wins the Patriot League Championship for the sixth straight year.

2 memorable moments 7

Senior Reflections

With graduation only weeks away, The Bucknellian's graduating staff members look back on their college experiences in and out of the newsroom

Catie Heverling
Former Editor-in-Chief

When I was five years old, my family and I used to visit my grandfather once a week. Each time, I would take a storybook along with me to read with him while I was there. Because my grandfather had moved to the United States from Portugal, he didn't speak English very well, so instead of him reading to me, I would sit on his lap and read to him. Not too long ago I found a picture of us together—my feet dangling from his lap as my face peeked out from over the top of the book. Behind it, I looked so small.

I take comfort in knowing that some day, an editor-in-chief will sit in that comfy swivel chair and get lost in the yellowed pages I helped to create.

In June of last year when I moved into the editor-in-chief's office, I spent an entire day rooting through the contents of the bookshelves that cover the right wall. The shelf, which nearly reaches the ceiling, contains about 40 oversized hardcovers that nearly reach my waist. I paged through bound copies of Bucknellian archives dating back to the 1960s. I read editorials about Watergate and women's rights, articles about the student riots downtown and an announcement from the year The Bucknellian's staff shortage caused it to temporarily shut down. And then I picked up a book whose spine read "Fall 2003" and inside I found my first staff picture, my first concert review and the first page I ever laid out on my own. It was at this moment that I realized that what we do each week in Roberts basement is so much more than making a newspaper. We create a chronicle of not only our generation, but also of ourselves.

Looking through issues of my four years at the University, readers would find articles covering the Emergency Alcohol Policy that went into effect my first year, the arrival of a new University president in 2004 and the effects of a national tragedy just last week. But I see layouts thought up just before falling asleep, articles written just hours before deadline and staffers who stayed up all night completing them.

When I look back on my four years here, I remember many—perhaps too many—nights like that. Sometimes it feels as though my college career was just one long night in the newsroom, interrupted by visits to class and the cafeteria and, occasionally, my bed. But even in such a small and hot space, The Bucknellian was able to survive on Domino's pizza, Diet Coke and a revolving door of dependable editors who understood the amount of dedication required to print a weekly newspaper.

To all of these editors, thank you for always being a mutual force of encouragement. I want to thank those upperclassmen who welcomed me into the newsroom as a first-year layout editor—especially Michelle Dombeck '05, who taught me how to put text on a page my first day in the newsroom. Her encouragement and positive attitude strongly affected my development as a leader and has made her a lifelong friend.

Sarah Gainer—The Bucknellian

Also, thanks to Liz Salemme '06, who truly understood the role of the student press and its obligations to the student body. I will never forget our trips to Dunkin Donuts every Tuesday and our weekly schemes to appear taller than each other.

And I cannot say enough to thank our adviser, Jim Lee, for being a source of advice, support, wisdom and comfort. After two years of weekly meetings in his office, I probably owe him something equal to a therapy bill. Jim has been my constant in four years of an evolving staff, and every semester I was relieved by the certainty of his support.

To our current staff—I will miss all of you. It's hard to imagine a life where I won't be catching roaches with you at 3 a.m. and watching the same episode of "The Daily Show" twice in one night. I have known all of you since you began here and I am so proud of what The Bucknellian has become in light of your contributions.

To our rising seniors who have served as executive editors— Jamie Jacobson, Rina Van Orden, Drew Larson, Matt Saylor and Jared Napolitano—you have all impressed me with your readiness to become leaders and the excellence and dedication you have demonstrated in your respective positions. I trust that with your guidance and the leadership of our upcoming executives, Lily Beauvilliers '09, Brianna DelValle '10 and Nilanjana Saha '09, The Bucknellian will continue to successfully tell the story of the University for years to come.

As I step foot off this campus in a few weeks, I know that it will be easy for my name to get lost in the vast history of the University. But I take comfort in knowing that some day, an editor-in-chief will sit in that comfy swivel chair and get lost in the yellowed pages I helped to create. Bucknellian staffers—past, present and future—remember that you are behind the stories you tell and to those who hear them, you are anything but small.

Melanie Caughey
Former Asst. Chief Copy Editor

Sometimes, I miss the fearlessness I had as a child. When I was at the playground, I was invincible. Last year, I wanted to recapture that feeling. I got on a swing wondering how high I could go, and I found myself clutching the chains with a white-knuckle grip. I was terrified of getting hurt. I used to be able to swing until my back was parallel to the ground. I used to let go of the chains and fly through the air without wondering how I would land. I started to wonder when I became so scared.

I pushed my fear aside when I first came to the University. I focused on getting good grades and making friends. My first year went well. Sophomore year, I moved in with my friends and I was promoted to assistant chief copy editor of The Bucknellian. After winter break, I became a resident assistant (RA). I accomplished everything I wanted. At the end of the year, I was a little stressed out and decided to leave the newspaper. When I left that year, things were oddly perfect.

But the beginning of junior year was difficult. Many of my friends went abroad. A childhood friend died in Iraq. I was in my first car accident. I struggled to figure out what I really wanted from life. I always thought I would major in English, teach for a while and return to get a Ph.D. in English literature, but that idea had begun to make me nauseous. My personal struggles led me to end two close friendships, and I threw myself into my classes and my jobs. The fear had come back, and it was controlling me.

Over Christmas break I did some soul-searching. I had to start over again. I made new friends and reconnected with older friends. I began to take more education classes, and I discovered that I had a real passion for teaching. I refused to let that fear rule my life. I began to focus on being happy.

This year has been wonderful. I have fantastic and supportive friends. Student teaching was an incredible experience, and I am excited about my future as an educator. I would thank people, but this is not the proper place for me to do so. I would rather tell them in person. I am excited that I am ending my undergraduate career on a high note. The University has served me well, but I know that it is time to move on.

I may not be invincible, but I can still be fearless. I have faith in myself. I can swing until I touch the sky. I can let the chains slide through my fingers. I can fly through the air without worrying how I land. I can get back on my feet, no matter what.

So I am letting go.

Ryan Wood—The Bucknellian

Sarah Gainer
Former Photo Editor

Courtesy of Sarah Gainer

You can go home again. It is at this very moment that I realize I will graduate twice on University turf—once from high school on the Weis Center stage, and in May on the academic quad, a University tradition that I have witnessed since I was an infant.

Growing up in Lewisburg, the University was the last place I thought I wanted to or would end up. As gradeschoolers, we're taught that in order to succeed, we must go far. Our measure of success comes not only from an expansion of mind but also from the miles traveled from home. As a senior in high school, I played into that preconception and sought out new territories at an out-of-state school. I quickly learned it was not the right place for me and found myself back at the University.

Within two days after my arrival at McDonnell Hall, I knew I had found my home a second time. The group of people I met in the Arts Residential College was such a diverse one, and the talent and camaraderie that my newfound friends exhibited was incredible. For the first time, I saw what every other prospective student recognized when first pulling onto campus.

This newborn enthusiasm has driven my devotion to the following people and groups: The Bucknellian—thank you for giving me the skills needed to pursue my dreams and the friendships to pursue them with compassion; Beyond Unison—I pour my heart out; Chi Omega—you all have done more than you can imagine; my parents—you have taught me how to love life; all former residents and resident assistant peers; all of my English, art and theater professors, as well as my advisors, Meenakshi Ponnuswami and Tulu Bayar. I must give final thanks to the person without whom I would never be writing my senior reflection: Tyler Kidder—thank you for being your crazy, quirky, risk-taking self and roping me onto The Bucknellian staff.

During my second semester on campus, I started taking photographs for the paper. Not only did these photo assignments allow me to work in a medium I already loved, but they also permitted me to capture the University through a new perspective.

By the time I became photo editor at the beginning of sophomore year, I had realized the level of talent and perseverance of The Bucknellian's dedicated staff. Although many Tuesday through Thursday nights were spent proofreading, snacking, crying, obsessing, calling, apologizing and stressing, I truly felt in my element when with this group of individuals. As an English major, I am so overjoyed to see a piece of print media flourish as The Bucknellian has.

Over the past four years, I've had the pleasure of meeting and working with more talented students, faculty and staff members than I could have ever imagined. I have also learned that while my identity has evolved from Lewisburgian to Bucknellian, it is impossible for me to completely distance myself from my childhood. Perhaps I should have already moved across the country and never looked back but one thing is now clear. Because of the University, I am now simultaneously ready to depart from this place, while also left feeling very attached to the friends I have made.

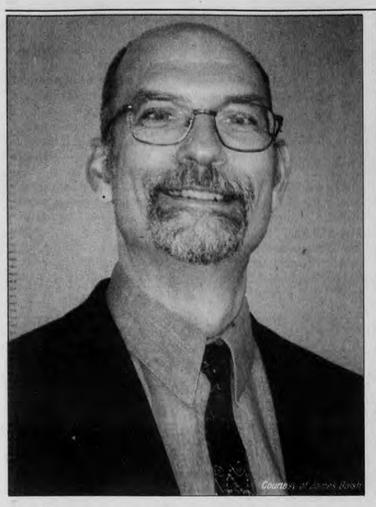
It is with bittersweet feelings that I say goodbye to Lewisburg and even Pennsylvania for some time. While this is a huge transition for me and for all my classmates, I look forward to the change with an overall sense of readiness and excitement for what's to come. I extend my warmest wishes to the entire Class of 2007.

The Bucknellian
NEWS
April 27, 2007

The new faces of BSG

Elections are over and the winners have been announced. Check out next year's new BSG officers.

See page B3



Courtesy of James Baish

Courtesy of

Three faculty members receive honor from University president

By Kelly McGaw
Writer

This spring President Brian C. Mitchell has named three faculty members Bucknell Presidential Professors. In the past three decades only 22 other professors have been awarded this title.

The three professors, James Baish, professor of mechanical and biomedical engineering, Manuel Delgado, professor of Spanish and Jean Shackelford, professor of economics, are diverse in their fields yet have all been recognized for their outstanding contributions to the University.

"Each of these faculty members has exhibited to a remarkable degree of high achievement in teaching, research and other scholarly activities and professional accomplishments," Mitchell said in the press release last week.

On being named a Presidential Professor Baish said, "It's primarily an honor, a nice recognition. It's nice to be recognized by my peers as well."

Baish is currently the chair of the department of mechanical engineering. He was drawn to a job at the University after graduating in the class of '79.

"There aren't too many places like it; a place with good students and good academics and a focus on undergraduate teaching, particularly in the engineering department," Baish said.

Baish believes his biggest distinction as a faculty member is the broad range of subjects he teaches within the engineering department. His research interests range from biological heat and mass transfer to tumor physiology.

Professor Manuel Delgado is currently leading the Bucknell en España program in Granada, Spain, and was notified by his wife, Associate Professor of Spanish Alice Poust, of his appointment. Delgado co-created the Bucknell en España program in 2005 and has witnessed the growth of the program in the last four years. The best thing about the program is "students' immersion into Spanish culture and life," he said.

Delgado also makes a big impact on students when he is here on campus. Luke McGuire '08 describes Delgado as an engaging and energetic professor.

"He is really interested in all the material he's teaching, and he is always happy; never in a bad mood," McGuire said.

Delgado's specialties include Spanish Golden Age literature and the art, theatre and film of contemporary Spain.

As an educator he most enjoys "being able to communicate what I know to people who want to learn." He also appreciates the commu-

See RECOGNITION page B2

Judge Crawford discusses detainee controversy

By Sophia Leong
Writer

Judge Susan J. Crawford '69, the chair of the University Board of Trustees, examined the question of whether the law of war is an appropriate legal framework to respond to a terrorist attack, in a speech entitled "Military Commissions: Rhetoric vs. Reality," on Wednesday in the Elaine Langone Center Forum.

Judge Crawford is a former U.S. Court of Appeals Judge for the Armed Forces and was most recently appointed as the Convening Authority for military commissions.

"Our legal system draws its unique strength from the participation of our nation's citizens," Crawford said. "Just as we empower our youth through education to be better informed citizens of our communities—likewise we strengthen our democracy by empowering all citizens through education to engage constructively in the debate over national policy issues."

Crawford spoke about the misconceptions and confusion about the law of war used towards captured enemy combatants detained at Guantanamo Bay in Cuba.

"Much of the media coverage and commentary has been negative, questioning our legal authority to hold detainees without a trial in U.S. Federal Courts," Crawford said. "Under the law of war, the detainees at Guantanamo Bay are not held pending criminal charges. While detainees may be tried for violations of the law of war, there is no obligation to so charge them."

Crawford explained that most detainees are held until the end of the hostilities simply to assure that they are not released to return to the battlefield to fight against America again.

She also enumerated the history of military commissions and its processes to establish a better understanding of how the US formulated the current national policy.

Using the United States' response to the September 11 attacks in 2001, Crawford illustrated the application of the legal framework to justify our nation's military response to the attacks from al Qaeda and the Taliban forces.

She discussed the capture of the Al Qaeda and Taliban fighters in Afghanistan, "some of whom are currently held at Guantanamo Bay under the law of war."

Crawford also spoke about Congress's passing of the Military Commissions Act (MCA) and its signing into law in October 2006.

"While we have employed military commissions since our Revolutionary War, their creation and procedures have historically been the province of the executive branch," Crawford said. "Thus, the creation of a detailed set of statutory procedures to govern military commissions is unprecedented in our history."

The act included provisions such as, "establishing a detailed framework governing the procedures and conduct of military commissions," "codifying substantive offenses traditionally tryable by military commissions," and "establishing an appellate review process with ultimate appeal being to the Supreme Court of the United States."

See CRAWFORD page B2

Grant hopes to bring League closer to Ivies

By Carly Whitehead
Writer

A $40,000 grant has been made available to study the academic index of Patriot League schools, and the league may be expanded and linked academically. Such an expansion may legitimize the league's nickname of "The Alternative Ivy."

"As you know, for some time, the Patriot League has been open to the idea of expansion should there seem an especially strong fit with another institution of higher education," President Brian C. Mitchell said. "Bucknell supports exploring such possibilities. In July, I assume my role as chair of the league, and I look forward to it. I expect Bucknell and our fellow institutions in the league will continue to explore and be open to such opportunities."

While certain types of institutions have been identified to invite into the league, no specific names of schools have been made available at this point.

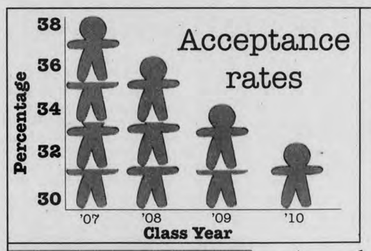
The study of the academic index at league schools focuses on the representation of student-athletes.

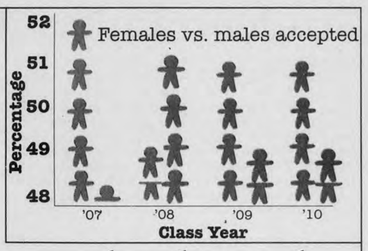
"Past year trends help determine if the academic index is serving its purpose of insuring that student-athletes are representative of the entire student body at the institutions they attend. We also are seeking advice on the feasibility of establishing more standard, league-wide implementation of the academic index formula," said Kurt Thiede, vice president for enrollment management and dean of admissions. Currently, the study only monitors men's and women's basketball and football.

"Representatives from each institution recently met to discuss the preliminary findings of the research group," Thiede said. "There is still much work to be done, but the presentation by the researchers and the discussion generated by this provided a number of insights that will guide further discussion and possible policy decisions in the near future. This study should be completed and the report available to the presidents of league institutions in the coming months." As for the prospect of linking the schools academically, ideas for possible inter-college projects are still in the early stages.

"Provost Mary DeCredico has initiated conversations with her Patriot League col-

See GRANT page B2





Bucknell

A closer look at the past four years

By Kevin Petersen
Writer

Upperclassmen have been reporting that the profile of University students has begun to change. The seniors maintain that the average University student is now more academically focused and less well-rounded than in previous years.

"The quintessential Bucknell student was well rounded in both academics and extracurricular activities," Rick Donovan '07 said. "Too many kids now say: 'I don't do anything but school.'"

Students have seen noticeable changes in the academic environment, especially in the Ellen Clarke Bertrand Library. Some changes mentioned were the overcrowding in the library, extended hours and the difficulty of finding a computer in the Technology Courtyard. Seniors have suggested several explanations for these changes.

"There was an immediate change after the alcohol point system was introduced," Donovan said. "I don't know if my class ever fully recovered."

The point system was initially perceived as unnecessarily strict. Some students have still found that the effects the policy have been alleviated by the introduction of the modified point system. This new system reduces the number of points students receive for a variety of infractions.

Another change the senior class witnessed while at the University was the introduction of Facebook, the popular social networking Web site.

Since the graduating class entered the University, Facebook has grown nationally. It is the sixth most-trafficked site in the United States and now has 19 million active members, according to Facebook's Web site.

Some have suggested that the increased use of Facebook has begun to change the way students interact on campus.

"People are using Facebook messaging and text messaging more frequently now. This may be a reason students have been interacting on a less interpersonal level," Stuart Cubbon '07 said. "I mean, when was the last time you called someone on their room phone?"

Seniors also noticed that the Office of Admissions has become increasingly selective. Some have suggested this has resulted in a higher number of underclassmen who are strictly focused on academics.

The acceptance rate for the Class of 2007 was 38 percent, compared to the Class of 2010, having a 33 percent acceptance rate.

Some administrators have warned against jumping to conclusions about whether students are actually participating less in extracurricular activities.

"Multiple offices are interested in good, reliable information on the extent to which students participate in different activities on campus," Assistant Vice President of Planning & Institutional Research Jerry Rackoff said. "We have formally begun to collect that data with this year's senior class."

The National Survey of Student Engagement will also be administered to both seniors and first-years next year. The survey examines the academic and the extracurricular interests of students.

"The survey is a good predictor of positive educational outcomes," Rackoff said. "It's a good indicator of the skills and values students hold."

As more research becomes available about the activities of students, administrators might be changing and if such changes actually warrant a response.

Public Safety Log

Wednesday, April 18

ALARM-INTRUSION—Langone Gallery: Unknown Cause

ALARM-INTRUSION— Golf Course: Unknown Cause

ALARM-FIRE—Langone Center Food Service Area: Caused by steam

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Craft Center: Key box damaged

Thursday, April 19, 2007

ALARM-FIRE—Langone Center Food Service Area: Unknown Cause

CRIMINAL TRESPASS—Trax Hall: Unauthorized Entry

Friday, April 20

ALARM-INTRUSION—President's House: Caused by employee

VEHICLE ACCIDENT—Stadium Drive: Non-reportable vehicle accident

PARKING ENFORCEMENT—Finance Office: First Year parking Violation

PROPERTY-FOUND—Langone Center: Keys found and returned to owner

ALARM-FIRE—Bucknell West Mod 23: Caused by cigarette smoke

ALARM-INTRUSION—Computer Center Room 204: Cause unknown

ASSIST-PUBLIC— Public Safety Office: Office used for interview

ASSIST-PUBLIC—Lambda Chi Alpha: Tampering with University property

SUSPICIOUS PERSON—Gateways Parking Lot: Unfounded

Saturday, April 21

LIQUOR LAW—Public Safety Exterior: Disciplinary Referral

TAMPERING WITH FIRE EQUIPMENT—Dana: Pull station

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Breakiron and Dana: Overturned furniture

ASSIST-EMS—Outside Carnegie: Fall victim with head injury. Treatment refused

ALARM-INTRUSION—Swartz Uptown: Cause unknown

MOTOR VEHICLE THEFT—West Fields: Golf Cart moved and keys removed

ASSIST-PUBLIC—Demosthenean Hall: Student transported by Student Health Driver to Hospital for treatment of an injury

ALARM - Fire—BUWT Mod 25: Caused by cooking

Sunday, April 22

LIQUOR LAW—Smith Hall: Disciplinary Referral

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Harris Hall: Broken Window

ALARM-INTRUSION—West Fields: Caused by employee

THEFT—Trax Hall: Bicycle taken

PROPERTY-LOST– Seventh St. Café: Lost wallet

ALARM-INTRUSION—Computer Center: Cause unknown

Monday, April 23

ALARM-INTRUSION—Botany: Cause unknown

ALARM-FIRE—Bucknell West Mod 17: Caused by a hair dryer

ALARM-INTRUSION—Stadium: Employee activated

DISORDERLY CONDUCT—Phi Gamma Delta: Damaged Guitar

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF—Gateway lot: Unlocked Vehicle entered

ALARM-FIRE—Botany: Cause unknown

Tuesday, April 24

ALARM-FIRE—Spratt House: Caused by a bug in the detector

DISORDERLY CONDUCT—Fieldhouse: Investigation pending

INTRUSION ALARM—Library: Caused by an employee

MOTOR VEHICLE ACCIDENT—Moore Avenue: Traffic citation issued

THEFT—Rec Center: Investigation pending

Courtesy of Melissa McBrayer

Eight new student ambassadors have been chosen to work during Renuion Weekend. Pictured are Alison Shaffer '08, Dave James '09, Heather Dempsey '07, Andrew King '08, Justin Greenly '08, Mary Kellam '07, Liz Banerjee '09 and Elizabeth Cavallari '08.

Student ambassadors announced

By Jessamy Little
Contributing Writer

From May 31 to June 3 the University will celebrate the first reunion for the class of 2002, with events held throughout campus.

The event is organized by the Alumni Relations office at the University. They assign student ambassadors to each returning class as tour guides through the reunion experience.

"[Alumni] like to talk to students to get an inside perspective on what has changed at Bucknell aside from the physical transformations," said Jason Bush '07, ambassador for the class of 2002.

The ambassadors are a great source for alumni who want to learn about what has been going on at the University since they've been gone. They bridge the gap between the alumni and the University as it is today.

The reunion is not only held for the class of 2002, but for all prior classes in 5-year denominations: 1997, 1992, 1987 …

The Class of 1957, celebrating its 50th reunion, will be given special recognition with a reception and banquet on Saturday, June 2. After alumni celebrate their 50th year reunion, they will be honored with an invitation to return every year, instead of just every 5 years.

"It is interesting to see the different personalities of each class year returning and their perspectives," Bush said.

The classes return to the University to reminisce over old times, reunite with old friends and commemorate the achievements of one another and the University community.

The Alumni Relations Office has gone to great lengths to carefully plan the weekend with highlights such as an alumni golf tournament, a canoe trip down the Susquehanna River and a tent party with fireworks and a jazz band.

Greeks, sports teams, the Office of Lesbian Gay Bisexual Transgender Awareness and the individual classes also have planned dinners or receptions for their alumni members. The lacrosse team will enjoy a friendly alumni match.

The tent party is the most popular event with a 40-piece jazz band, several different bars each with different themes, a dance floor and fireworks.

"My favorite event is the tent party. The older couples get onto the dance floor and have a great time," Brendan Ryan '08, another ambassador for the class of 2002, said.

"The weekend is for those who were die-hard Bucknellians and those who are just now re-embracing their time here, to come together and enjoy all that Bucknell still has to offer them as alumni," Bush said.

President Brian C. Mitchell recently decided to increase the funding that went into the reunion planning, in an effort to increase the amount alumni give back to the University.

"By donating, you are showing gratitude for what Bucknell has done for you," Bush said.

The focus of alumni relations during the year is on gaining donations to the University. The weekend event, "Reunion Rally," congratulates the classes on their donations during the year and compares them to one another; the older alumni tend to be the bigger givers.

The Reunion weekend is a time for alumni to applaud all the positive changes that the University has made, but also to voice concern about the handling of other matters, such as Greek fraternities being removed from campus. The event allows for conversation between alumni and the current administration.

"A sense of tradition that is forgotten … can be re-embraced on this weekend," Ryan said.

The reunion is expected to have a great turnout this year, due to the added attention that the administration has given it.

Mitchell honors professors with award

RECOGNITION From page B1

nity of teachers and scholars of which he is a part.

"Their dedication and commitment have inspired and helped me during the years," Delgado said.

His biggest accomplishments beyond his ability to connect with students are "becoming an American citizen, having an American family and being a professor at Bucknell," Delgado said.

Jean Shackelford's recent research has been centered on economic education and pedagogies in economics. She and some of her colleagues at the University have written an economics textbook entitled "Economics: A Tool for Critically Understanding Society," and are currently working on revisions of an edited manuscript for its eighth edition.

The Presidential Professor Award will provide funding and time off from teaching to allow for continued research for all three professors.

"For me, it is a tremendous honor to be recognized along with Professors Baish, and Delgado. We join an impressive group of teachers and scholars who have served Bucknell over the years," Shackelford said.

The subject matters she is most interested in teaching include economic principles, money and financial institutions and the history of economic thought. What she most enjoys about teaching is "challenging [her students] to critically explore, assess, evaluate, examine and ultimately recognize the power of ideas."

Shackelford has directed the Bucknell in London program three times in the past and will be participating again in the fall of 2007.

Much of Shackelford's work has been in researching early feminist economists, including founding the International Association for Feminist Economists. A feminist economist works to bring feminist ideals into economic theory and analysis. Shackelford said, "I am an economist. I am a feminist. I am also a feminist economist."

Patriot League recipient of $40,000 grant

GRANT From page B1

leagues about ways in which some (or all) of the Patriot League schools might collaborate on academic projects that will enhance the learning experiences of our students, broaden research and teaching opportunities for our faculties and, in doing these, establish a more broad-based identity for the league and its members," Thiede said. "The conversations have just begun, but there appears to be some excitement amongst the member schools at this early stage."

This academic linkage makes sense considering the Patriot League's collective commitment to the idea of the scholar athlete.

"This type of public profile supports many of the other messages we at Bucknell wish to send to our constituents—in our particular case, prospective students and those who assist them with their college selection," Thiede said. "It makes perfect sense that our association with these strong institutions should grow beyond the playing fields, stadiums, pools and gyms found on our campuses."

"Empower yourself with the reality of facts and knowledge … do your part as an informed citizen to assure our democracy."
— Susan Crawford,
Chair of Board of Trustees

Crawford warns against war bias

CRAWFORD From page B1

Much of the controversy has arisen from rhetoric about the rights withheld from detainees at Guantanamo Bay under the Military Commissions Act.

"Here is the reality," Crawford said.

Crawford explained that the enemy combatants at Guantanamo Bay "have an array of statutory procedural protections available…that are unprecedented in the history of warfare."

Some of the rights include a right to counsel, proof beyond a reasonable doubt, protection against double jeopardy and even appellate review.

Crawford also mentioned some evidentiary differences that arise from the Military Commissions Act that are not found in regular court-martials or federal court trials.

"No statements obtained by torture will be admissible," Crawford said.

She also discussed her current position of Convening Authority and its efforts to oversee the military commission process to ensure its validity and efficiency.

Crawford addressed the fact that the war on terror is treading a "new territory" and that the United States is using a new type of fighting to combat the idea of terror.

She also suggested that a possible step in fighting this war on terror may include amendment of the Geneva Convention to cover the "new territory that will be with us for quite a while."

Judge Crawford concluded her speech by heeding the audience to beware of passionate rhetoric on the controversial issue.

"Before you draw conclusions, engage in a serious legal analysis of the issues," Crawford said. "Empower yourself with the reality of facts and knowledge. By so doing you will not only fulfill your responsibility as students, but also do your part as an informed citizen to assure our democracy."

Students who attended found Crawford's words to be a valuable addition to their experiences gained at the University.

"I thought it was very interesting because there is very little precedent in the commission and position that she has been appointed to," Sarah Friedman '09 said. "It was very nice to be able to listen to her speak and definitely very insightful for her to answer all of our questions."

The lecture was hosted by the University's John Marshall Pre-Law Society.

John Marshall Pre-Law Society President Amanda Stewart '08 was also very pleased with the event.

"This is the first event hosted by the Pre-Law Society as we have just started again this semester," she said. "To have Judge Crawford come is really great because not only is she an alumna of Bucknell but she has accomplished so much more than we as Pre-Law students can ever imagine pursuing."

Ryan Winn - The Bucknellian

BSG Officers for 2007-2008

Class of 2008
President: Lauren Berninger
Vice President: Connie Low
Secretary/Treaurer: Catharine Driever

Congress: Emily Chiodo, John Elrod, Nate Humberston, Rosy Kim, Andrew King, Katie Metzler, Scotty Mohr, Sarah Simmons

Alternates:
Kalani Cowles
Zachary Frenzel

Class of 2009
President: Harry Kastenbaum
Vice President: Alison Cutting
Secretary/Treasurer: Stephanie Rink

Congress: Katsie Calhoun, Vicki Cohen, Eric Diamond, Zaf Kamar, Stephanie Karcher, Josh Lurcher, Matt Masone, Erin Williams

Alternates:
Alice Lakian

Class of 2010
President: Scott Teagarden
Vice President: Natasha Vedage
Secretary/Treasurer: Randy Gowat

Congress: Justin Alsop, Heather Brake, Kevin Cooper-Smith, Josh Goodman, Peter Lansinger, Kevin McAlister, Jess Sturzenegger, Katie Williamson

Alternates:
Josh Douin
Zak Elmanakhly

Matthew Saylor—The Bucknellian

Jenna Shapiro—The Bucknellian

Elections for this year's Bucknell Student Government (BSG) organization kept Harry Kastenbaum as the president for the Class of 2009 but welcomes Lauren Berninger '08 and Scott Teagarden '10 as newly elected presidents.

Bull Run Inn welcomes new owner

By Sara Roth
Writer

Mike Purcell, former director of housing and residential life, officially purchased the Bull Run Inn, Rusty's Restaurant and Brynwood Catering from the Gardner family on April 17.

Purcell plans on improving the area institution in many ways. Purcell has closed Rusty's Restaurant, attached to the Bull Run, and will erect an Irish pub called "Purcells," in its place. He also took over the catering company, now called Parkview Catering, which is connected to the Bull Run Inn and seats 130 people. The catering company will be available for on-site functions, as well as off-site events and is hosting the University's Senior Nights. The Bull Run will also offer a different late-night menu to its patrons.

Purcell is in the process of hiring new staff to accommodate these new enterprises, and he will keep all of the staff who currently work at the Bull Run Inn.

"Everybody is staying," Purcell said.

Susan Newton, a bartender at the Bull Run, is optimistic about the change.

"Everything, I think, is going to be positive," Newton said.

Purcell's decision to buy the Bull Run Inn was simple.

"It was for sale. The opportunity was there," Purcell said.

Purcell received his undergraduate degree from Widner College in restaurant and hotel management. He has spent the last six years as the director of housing and residential life and was also the director of dining services for four years prior to that.

While he has never owned a restaurant, Purcell has managed restaurants and hotels before.

"I have been in the restaurant and hotel business for 33 years," Purcell said.

See INN page B4

Courtesy of Karen Gardner

Kevin Gardner (front), former owner of the Bull Run Inn, poses with Mike Purcell (back left), who recently bought the restaurant.

BRING IN THIS COUPON AND SAVE!
Guitar Center®
The Musician's Choice
5082 Jonestown Rd.
Harrisburg, PA 17112
717-652-7399
Shipping Available!
10% OFF!
THE BEST GEAR
THE BEST DEALS!
*some restrictions apply, see store for details

Ellacinders
Jewelry & Beads
Classes...Birthday Parties...Weddings...Girls' Nite Out
566 North Derr Drive Phone 570 522 0880
Lewisburg PA 17837 cjreed@dejazzd.com
HOURS – Mon-Fri 11 am - 7 pm Sat 10 am - 4 pm
Create Your Own Designs!

Steiningers Laundry & Dry Cleaning
230 N 7th St
Lewisburg, PA 17837
570-374-4496
M-F 7:30AM-5:30PM
Sat 8:00AM-1:00PM
-Drive-thru
-Wash and Fold Services
-Pick-up and Delivery
COUPON
Bring in formal wear, and receive $2.00 OFF additional dry cleaning!
Doing business since 1955

News Briefs

Mother of University president dies unexpectedly

The mother of University president Brian C. Mitchell passed away Saturday morning. Doris McEvoy Mitchell was 87 when she died unexpectedly in the St. Joseph Hospital in Nashua, New Hampshire. She was born in Amsterdam, N.Y. and lived in Lowell, Mass.

According to the Dumont-Sullivan Funeral Home obituaries, she spent about 25 years as a secretary at the Lowell Police Department. She is survived by her four children and their families and five great-grandchildren. She is to be buried in the St. Patrick Cemetery in Lowell.

2007 Alumni Awards

The University's Alumni Association chose four alumni to be recognized for their achievements "in service to humanity, profession, and loyalty to Bucknell." They will be honored at the Reunion Rally on Saturday, June 2 during Reunion Weekend at the Weis Center for the Performing Arts.

Loyalty to Bucknell: Eric Allgaier, Class of 1982 (25th Reunion)

Service to Humanity: Beverly Dunston Scott, Class of 1952 (55th Reunion)

Outstanding Achievement in a Chosen Profession: Bruce Lundvall, Class of 1957 (50th Reunion)

Young Alumni: Doug Lebda, Class of 1992 (15th Reunion)

Alumni start indoor shrimp farming business

Two University alumni partnered with a third to create an innovative business firm in the field of indoor shrimp farming. Scott Fritze '02, Andrew Hanzlik '02, and Guy Furman are the co-owners of Marvesta Shrimp Farms, an indoor aquaculture facility in Maryland. Most shrimp is imported from Asia, and according to the environmentalists, these coastal farms are damaging the coastlines and harming the sea life around the farms.

The three men developed a way of "producing a sustainable supply of fresh shrimp year-round in a non-polluting environment," The Washington Post reported. They did not want to disclose any details on the specifics of their farm and its technology.

Last year, Marvesta produced about 10,000 pounds of medium and large shrimp, which were then sold to 15 high-end restaurants at about $10 per pound. Both Fritze and Hanzlik graduated from the University with business degrees.

Former Russian president dies

Former Russian president Boris Yeltsin died Monday, reported CNN.com. Alexander Smirnov, a Kremlin spokesman, was able to confirm Yeltsin's death but did not provide any more details. Yeltsin was 76 years old.

"The Interfax news agency [the main news provider for leaders in Russian and former Soviet Union states] cited an unidentified medical source as saying he had died of heart failure," CNN.com reported.

He will be remembered for generating the final collapse of the Soviet Union and bringing Russia to democracy and a market economy. He resigned from the presidency on New Year's Eve 1999 due to severe heart problems. His prime minister, Vladimir Putin, served as interim president until he was elected to the position in the spring.

College professor fired after classroom discussion about Virginia Tech

An adjunct professor at Emmanuel College in Boston, Mass. was fired for leading a classroom discussion about the Virginia Tech shooting, reported the Associated Press. The discussion covered topics such as gun control and whether or not to handle violence with violence.

During the discussion, which was held two days after the shooting, professor Nicholas Winset instigated a reenactment of the shooting by pointing a marker at his students. Another student responded by "shooting" Winset to demonstrate that the gunman could have been stopped if a student or faculty member had been armed.

"A classroom is supposed to be a place for academic exploration," Winset told the Boston Herald.

On Friday, he received a letter from the administration informing him of their decision to fire him. The college said that their actions were in response to Winset's "insensitivity to the students who were murdered at Virginia Tech" and had nothing to do with the issue of academic freedom.

First desegregated dance for Georgia students

Saturday night was the first time that the students of Turner County High School in Ashburn, Georgia attended an integrated prom. In previous years, the parents organized separate, segregated proms, one for the white student body and another for the black student body. The high school is 55 percent black and 43 percent white, CNN.com reported.

The separate dances were not associated with the school and Saturday night marked the first official prom for the Turner County High School students. The senior class voted to hold one official integrated prom. Their decision still did not stop the unofficial proms. The "white prom" was still held and some parents did not allow their children to attend the integrated prom.

"Prospective faculty often go pale when you mention a teaching load of six courses per year, and we have lost many superb candidates over this issue, This will help us to attract the best faculty candidates."

—Tom Solomon, associate professor of physics

New professors and rising utility costs increase budget

The hiring of 15 professors will cost $1.5 million

By Kevin Petersen
Writer

The University's annual operating budget will increase by approximately $4 million next year to pay for 15 new professors and to combat the rise in fuel costs.

"In order to provide the same services ... to students every year, expenses typically increase by about inflation," said David Surgala, vice president for finance and administration.

But the University budget will be increasing more this year than it has in the past few years.

Approximately $1.5 million is needed for the hire of 15 new professors. These hires are part of a three-year strategic initiative to hire new faculty and reduce professors to a five-course load.

"Because our faculty will have five courses rather than six to teach, they will be able to focus more intensely on their five courses and their advising, scholarship and service to the campus," President Brian C. Mitchell said last October.

Tom Solomon, associate professor of physics and chair of the committee of planning and budget, explained the reasoning behind decreasing the course load.

"Prospective faculty often go pale when you mention a teaching load of six courses per year, and we have lost many superb candidates over this issue," Solomon said. "This will help us to attract the best faculty candidates."

The University's budget is also increasing due to a large rise in the price it will have to pay for fuel. After the University's 10-year fixed contract for oil at low prices runs out later this year, the cost of fuel and utilities will increase from $3.7 million to $8.3 million.

Solomon recognizes how the combined increases will affect the University.

"The new contract takes effect next year," Solomon said, considering that fuel prices have basically doubled since the previous contract was negotiated, this results in a huge increase in our costs, over $4 million per year. That is a major blow to the University's budget," Solomon said.

Despite these new expenditures, the budget the finance office is proposing remains balanced. Surgala and Dennis Swank, associate vice president of finance, were greatly responsible for the submission of a balanced budget.

"Every year the budget is made up of hundreds of departments that submit budgets. Many ask for increases," Surgala said. "We have to cut certain requests and work individually with department managers to talk through their requests for budget monies and reallocate resources."

Funds to protect against unforeseen expenses are also built into the University's budget for next year.

"Bucknell's budget always includes a 'contingency' line of a couple million dollars to account for unexpected expenses. This helps keep the University from suffering from deficits," Solomon said.

The University will continue to see rises in its budget as the five-course load plan and other aspects of the Plan for Bucknell begin to be implemented.

The finance office has been preparing to embark on a seven-year fundraising campaign with the University to help build resources for the Plan for Bucknell and help build up the endowment.

Former director of housing takes over Bull Run Inn

INN From page B3

When asked how long he plans to own the Bull Run, Purcell said, "Until I die."

With a tone of seriousness, he said, "Really, for life. This isn't a weekend thing. My family is involved."

Purcell, who lives in Lewisburg with his wife and daughters, seems to be continuing the tradition of this family-owned business that Russell and Marie Gardner started in 1968.

"[Mike and Lois Purcell] are about the same age that my parents were when they bought the place, and my sister and I were in high school and college—just like the Purcell's daughters. There's really a lot of similarities in how it all started," Kevin Gardner, the former owner of the Bull Run Inn, said.

R. and M. Gardner purchased the property, originally called the Lewisburg Village Steakhouse and Campus Bowling Lanes, from Jack Dunkle in 1968. The Gardners then changed its name to the Bull Run Inn, after the creek that flows down Sixth Street.

"We all worked in the business," K. Gardner said. "My mother cooked in the kitchen lots of times and baked the pies for years."

The Gardner family opened Rusty's Restaurant in 1983, which featured antiques collected by R. Gardner. The family also opened Brynwood Catering. According to Bull Run Inn's April 17 press release, the company grew strong during the 1980s.

While K. Gardner sold the institution, he will retain ownership of Brynwood Rentals, Lewisburg, which leases and manages residential and commercial properties in the immediate area.

"I thank the local communities and Bucknell communities over the years for their support and friendship. It's been a fun ride," K. Gardner said.

Baccalaureate speaker Jewelnel Davis

Courtesy of Office of Communications

Columbia University Chaplain Jewelnel Davis will speak at the 2007 Inter-religious Baccalaureate Service held during Commencement Weekend. She will speak at the Weis Center on Saturday, May 19 at 7:30 p.m. Tickets are required for this event.

The Bucknell Writing Center thanks the following graduating seniors for their excellent work as peer tutors.

Congratulations, Class of 2007!

Writing Tutors	Math/Science Tutors
Stu Cubbon	Casey Derbyshire
Brianna Evans	Todd Dowling
Chessa Forer	Kirsten Elzer
Karen Grabowski	Angie Hall
Eric Harbison	Kathleen Hart
Catie Heverling	Kelley Kidwell
Emily Hurd	Katie Kumpan
Jeesoo Park	Pete Morrison
Tinecia Repard	Jason Nyrop
Christa Sawko	Oliver Schipper
Carolyn Wakulchik	Jeff Ultee
Kearah Westerman	Tracey Wright
Daniel Winer

Saint Peter's College

invites you to our campus this summer!

We are the Jesuit College of New Jersey and want to help you accelerate your degree program with summer courses.

This summer, we are offering:

- More than 100 undergraduate and graduate courses
- Affordable tuition rates
- A specialized "Risk Management" series of courses for business majors (courses include Sarbanes Oxley, Enterprise Risk Management, Risk Management and Insurance and Business Ethics and Liability)
- Day and Evening courses at our two campus locations in New Jersey (Jersey City: 201. 761. 6042 and Englewood Cliffs: 201. 761. 7480)

EDUCATION. ONE STUDENT AT A TIME.

www.spc.edu

SAINT PETER'S COLLEGE

Visit www.spc.edu for summer class schedules.
Three and five-week courses offered.
The first Summer Session begins May 21st!

The Jesuit College of New Jersey

ChemE car team places first

By Bronwen Durocher
Writer

The University's nine-member team placed first in the Chemical Engineering (ChemE) Car Competition hosted on campus Saturday. The Car Competition was a part of the Mid-Atlantic Regional Student Conference hosted by the University student chapter of the American Institute of Chemical Engineers.

In the ChemE Car Competition, team members from over 20 schools in the mid-Atlantic region construct a vehicle using calibrated chemical reactions. These reactions allow the car to travel over a certain distance.

The University students were eager to explain the construction and calibration of their vehicles since a majority of the mathematical equations used on the posters were very complex.

"Our car is powered by a zinc copper battery, and the stopping mechanism is dissolved in sulfuric acid. When the magnesium is put in sulfuric acid, it dissolves. The stronger the acid, the faster it dissolves," Brian Smith '09 said.

"If we want the car to travel a long distance, we use diluted acid, and a strong acid for a shorter distance."

Other teams were less willing to explain the car's complicated processes.

"There's nothing to know about chemical engineering," Sauvabh Kohli of the University of Buffalo said. "We're a bunch of nerds."

The most exciting part for many of the students was the actual test.

"The coolest part of this competition is that we get a distance and a weight, and we have less than an hour to use our calculations to make sure the car moves exactly the way we want it to," Kohli said. "We have to have perfect calibrations."

The University team was composed of electrical engineers and mechanical engineers as well as chemical engineers.

"It's pretty neat to see how other schools, such as Bucknell, have used the help of other branches of engineering," Rogalt Shafi of Carnegie Mellon University said. "There is a lot of diversity in solutions."

One car, built by members of a team from Cooper Union in Manhattan, included a K'Nex monster on the base of the car.

"The planning took weeks ... We wanted to streamline the car, and we wanted to have this monster driver," Mukauvam Razvi of Cooper Union said.

"The purpose of the ChemE Car Competition is to challenge students' problem solving ability and to enhance creativity," Smith said.

The University team placed first, followed by the University of Buffalo in second, Carnegie Mellon in third, Rowan University in fourth and Cooper Union in fifth place. These five schools will be advancing to the national competition in the fall at Salt Lake City, Utah.

"It went remarkably smoothly. Last year at nationals we had a hard time getting it to work," Pete Baughman '08 said. "We haven't had any all-nighters yet, so I think that's a good sign."

The keynote speaker of the event was Jeffrey Siirola, a technology fellow at Eastman Chemical Company. His lecture, "Sustainablitiy in the Chemical and Energy Industries," was well received by students.

The world's growing demand for energy and raw materials will have to be addressed in a sustainable manner, according to Siirola.

"It will require unique solutions from engineers of multiple disciplines," Smith said.

In his presentation, Siirola explained sustainability in the context of long term raw material and energy availability, energy intensity, global warming threats and the desire for strong economic growth.

"A sustainable future path may be feasible," Siirola said.

Courtesy of Office of Communications

A University engineer tinkers with his chemical engineering car during the Mid-Atlantic Regional Student Conference.

Courtesy of Office of Communications

The University's team prepares their vehicle for entry in the ChemE Car competition Saturday. The team placed first over teams from over 20 different schools.

Engineering professor influences PennDOT decision

By Carly Whitehead
Writer

Civil and Environmental Engineering Professor Richard McGinnis presented a study investigating the traffic patterns of the proposed location of a new Giant Supermarket, which may have influenced the Pennsylvania Department of Transportation (PennDOT) to give Giant notice of "intent to revoke" the developer's highway occupancy permit (HOP) in late March.

In March of this year, McGinnis, chairman of the Lewisburg traffic advisory committee, went to a meeting of a group looking to revamp the Sixth and Seventh Street areas. The group has members from East Buffalo Township, the University and Susquehanna Economic Development Association-Council of Governments (SEDA-COG), an economic development group. At that meeting, McGinnis sat next to the East Buffalo Township supervisor, who asked about the safety of traffic lights on steep hills. After the meeting, McGinnis presented an updated version of his 2003 traffic safety report to both East Buffalo and PennDOT. The groups took the report very seriously, and PennDOT has even conducted additional research on the topic.

McGinnis said, "I do work in national and international safety issues, so when something like this happened in my own backyard, I had to try to do something about it."

On March 26, McGinnis presented his final comments on the situation at the East Buffalo Supervisors meeting. Brian Grayburn '07 also attended the meeting.

"Dr. McGinnis discussed a previous traffic study from 2003 and said that it was inadequate. He performed his own analysis based on regional population," Grayburn said. "Dr. McGinnis's study suggests a much greater number of cars will be making a left onto northbound SR 0015 than predicted in the previous traffic study."

As of now, PennDOT has given Giant notice of "intent to revoke" the developer's HOP, The Daily Item reported. PennDOT has not officially revoked the HOP, and Giant's developers will be given 30 days to respond and give PennDOT additional information.

Ryan Winn—The Bucknellian

Although McGinnis's efforts have not resulted in a concrete decision regarding Giant's plan to build at this moment, his work on the topic has inspired both his students and colleagues.

"Overall, Dr. McGinnis said that this intersection will destroy a very safe stretch of highway and endanger the lives of motorists. He insisted that not only will there definitely be a greater number of accidents at the new intersection, but there would likely also be many deaths that accompany the accidents," Grayburn said. "Professor McGinnis's role in this meeting was a great learning experience to the students in attendance."

Of McGinnis's work on the Giant decision, Civil and Environmental Professor Jeff Evans said, "He has a long history of working with students in the local region to address highway safety and this work on the Giant supermarket traffic issue is another example of his dedication to his work as a professional civil engineer."

In 2003, McGinnis started his work, along with members of his Transportation Engineering class, with the current debate over the installation of a traffic light on Route 15 as an entrance to a new Giant supermarket. The light would make drivers stop on the incline of the hill.

"Students looked at the Giant site and its issues with pedestrian and vehicular safety. They presented their findings at a community meeting," McGinnis said.

The findings presented independent observations on both sides of the traffic safety debate, including Rural Route Neighbors, a group of community members who oppose the building of the supermarket and the Giant developers.

In April, 2003, McGinnis followed-up the University students' presentation with the submission of his own report of professional observations on the situation. He sent the report to East Buffalo Township and PennDOT. The report included his concerns about safety, traffic forecasts and impact analysis. In response, he heard nothing, and the situation remained dormant until this year.

McGinnis became a faculty member in 1970 and is currently in his 38th year teaching at the University. His highway safety research began in 1977.

MARTHA MITCHELL, STUDENT, CITIZEN, AND SECOND LIEUTENANT, U.S. ARMY.

STUDENT CITIZEN OFFICER

Graduate Loan-Free

The Army Health Professions Scholarship (HPSP), pays for Medical or Dental School. A few of the Many benefits are: 100% full Tuition, Over $1300.00 per month Stipend, and reimbursement for cost of required books and equipment. If you're in or about to enter a professional school find out how the Army HPSP can help you achieve your career goals.

Contact SFC James E. Wright at 877-230-2501 or email james.wright@usarec.army.mil

©2005 Paid for by the United States Army. All rights reserved.
Benefits based on qualifications. Information subject to change. See your local U.S. Army Health Care Recruiter for the latest information.

U.S.ARMY

Recycle this newspaper!

The Bucknellian
Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue
Volume 137, Number 12
C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu
http://www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Editor-in-Chief
Andrew Larson '08

Associate Editor of Content
Matthew Saylor '08

Associate Editor of Layout
Lily Beauvilliers '09

Business Manager
Jared Napolitano '08

Senior Editor
Catie Heverling '07

News Editors
Evan Unger '09
Julia Fuchs '09
Michelle Laxer '09

Opinions Editors
Michael Dippery '08
Hallie Stebbins '08

Sports Editors
Barbara Perlman '09
Brian Mulligan '08
Shannon Pitsch '09

Features Editors
Nilanjana Saha '09
Brianna DelValle '10

Arts & Entertainment Editors
Janna Shapiro '08
Genna Jerrard '10

Photography Editors
Ryan Winn '08
Ellyn Ercolano '09

Chief Copy Editor
Molly Clay (grad)

Asst. Chief Copy Editor
Anna Juan '08

Advertising Managers
Meredith Reighard '07
Katie Casteel '08
Elaine Teng '09

Office Manager
Kate Wood '07

Circulation Manager
Adam Kahler '07

Subscriptions Manager
John Ostrow '09

Cartoonist
Juliana Su '09

Adviser
James F. Lee

Op-Ed Policy

The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editor-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 600 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

Publishing Information

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

Subscription Information

Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Bucknell University, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print office.

Advertising Policy

The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements it deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577- 1085. Copyright © 2007 The Bucknellian

The Bucknellian
EDITORIAL

Tragedy shouldn't dictate preparedness

Now that the initial shock of the Virginia Tech massacre has subsided, schools are reevaluating their emergency preparedness procedures.

Knowing what to do in case of an emergency is never a bad idea. Yes, at the University we should have a plan in case of an attack or other disaster. Yes, there should be a means of sending a message to the entire campus in an instant. In fact, it's scary that we don't know if one already exists.

But as with most tragedies, people aren't wasting any time overreacting to the perceived lack of emergency response at Virginia Tech.

Tragedy strikes the most unsuspecting people in ways that are almost impossible to prevent.

Luckily, we live in a society that is relatively safe, where terrorism and mass killings are rare. Bucolic Lewisburg is even safer than the average college town, with students saying they can walk alone at night without feeling threatened.

But there will always be disturbed individuals who try to harm other people for no reason at all. It's safe to say that they won't be deterred by a Public Safety officer patrolling the Academic Quad or an instant cell phone notification system. Anyone who acts on ideas as appalling and brutal as Cho Seung-Hui will find a way.

Sad as it is to say, we can't rid the world of tragedy. We can't read minds and we can't control the future. So emergency preparedness is really just a euphemism for risk management.

The real question is, why is emergency preparedness suddenly so important now? In theory, the University could have been locking dorms and academic buildings during the day for years. The Virginia Tech killer was a student and had access to all the dorms and buildings. Maybe it's a good idea to tighten our security, but it wouldn't have prevented a Virginia Tech.

Many students say the heightened level of emergency response awareness after the worst mass killing in U.S. history puts them on edge. Didn't we have a plan in place before?

Letters to the Editor

Global change starts with students

To the Editor:

As a graduating senior, I'm deep in that phase of remembering all the experiences, wonderful and challenging, that I've had while at the University. I've been able to spend a lot of time abroad, and I've been fortunate to have so many experiences that were great escapes, culturally invigorating and just plain fun.

But recently, I fully underestimated how difficult it would be to spend last summer in one of the most desperate humanitarian crises in the modern world and then jump back into campus life. It was easy to come back from displacement camps in a war zone in East Africa and want to cry (and actually I did, sometimes having to leave the library in the middle of trying to do assignments), looking around campus at our luxuries.

Other than moving slowly through layers of culture shock, I was looking around campus and perceiving an intense lack of awareness. What scared me most was that I saw our lifestyles as one that could prevent us from wanting to be aware. Still, I refused to believe in willful ignorance. I also refused to believe that such educated college students were simply apathetic or too entrenched in privileged lives to come together and promote change for those suffering around the world.

My perception of the campus was wonderfully shattered this semester in the most exciting of ways. I was right to refuse to believe that University students wouldn't want to learn, wouldn't want to be aware, wouldn't care. In April I gave two lectures on child soldiers in Uganda, screening the documentary "Invisible Children," which was given to me in the war zone by the filmmakers. The response from campus was impressive, with over 100 people in attendance.

The lectures were supported by the Office of the Dean of Students and many academic departments and campus organizations. A large chunk of students in attendance were eager to form a group and begin planning for more events next year. Unfortunately, Flory Perez, Laura Reardon and I are all seniors about to be shooed away after graduation. We will no longer have the opportunity to be as active with these initiatives, but campus will be served well by Christy Totten '08, Shelley Wang '08, Betsy Harrington '10 and many others who have already begun to step into leadership roles.

When I consider the state of the world—think of Darfur, political violence, global poverty, alleged terrorist suspects in secret detention cells all over the world and on and on—the feeling is naturally overwhelming. What reassures me of the prevailing good that could exist is that I have seen such a strong, mobilized, compassionate response to the travesty of child soldiers and the atrocities they face. There are tons of issues to focus on, and the point is to find which ones inspire you.

We have so many examples to follow on campus: Habitat for Humanity, Bucknell Brigade, Alliance for Community, Education & Services (ACES) and the incredible members of Students for Fair Trade. I don't know of a handful of kids more dedicated to issues of social justice and poverty eradication than this group. But all have to find their own passion and niche as they begin to shift their focus outward.

In the four years I've spent here, I've seen some wonderful forward-moving changes and compassion on campus—it's not just talk. So many students are affecting so many lives in their communities and around the world for the better. If the University continues to pursue social justice and to grow philanthropically, perhaps it will become a model for other universities to do the same.

To be able to graduate inspired by our campus is the greatest of honors, and I can't wait to see what will continue to develop. Look for child soldier readings, lectures, guest speakers, events and fundraisers from an upcoming group next year, but more importantly, create your own ways to strive for awareness and inspire those around you to act. I'll be watching over my shoulder as I take steps forward, and I fully expect to be proud of the campus community that raised me.

Sincerely,

Janelle Nodhturft '07

BUCC thanks alumni for support

To the Editor:

While we appreciate that the Bucknellian was able to cover the Bucknell Conservatives Club's (BUCC) Fourth Annual Alumni Lecture featuring Attorney General John Ashcroft, we were disappointed that there was no mention of the alumni who made this event possible. As we mentioned in our press release, dozens of University alumni from each decade dating back to the 1950s donated to this event and provided most of the funds necessary for the BUCC to bring Ashcroft to the University. Their contributions to our event certainly merit recognition and all Bucknellians ought to join us in thanking them for their continued support of bringing conservative voices to this campus.

Sincerely,

Nick Mozal
President, Bucknell University Conservatives Club

Graduates in perfect position for start-up

By Chris Burroughs
Contributing Writer

Senior year is spent by many students scrambling to figure out what to do. As time progresses, questions like "What are you going to do with the rest of your life?" become increasingly annoying. There are lots of options: continue your schooling, do "Teach for America," join the Peace Corps, backpack across Europe, slack off and do nothing, move back in with your parents or get a job. There are many good reasons to do all of those things. Most of the senior class has probably already decided what to do. Congratulations and good luck! For the rest, I suggest you don't do one of them. Don't get a job.

What to do instead? That depends of course on what you want. If you were considering a job, you probably wanted to do something interesting (or at least not like "Office Space") that makes money. Finding a job that meets both of these requirements is difficult. A better and more direct way to satisfy those two goals is to make your own job; in other words, start a company.

The economics of starting your own company have changed drastically; creating what is now called a start-up was not financially feasible until recently.

In 1953 after completing his work on the invention of the transistor, Nobel Prize-winner William Shockley moved to Palo Alto, Calif., to continue his work with the silicon transistor. Shockley's transistor would eventually facilitate the emergence of Silicon Valley. The Shockley Semiconductor Laboratory was a wholly owned subsidiary of Beckman Instruments, which Shockley was appointed to run based on his prestige.

Now things are different. The main costs for starting a Web-based company (like Facebook) are food and rent. In other words, starting a multi-million-dollar company isn't significantly more expensive than sitting around and doing nothing. It's probably cheaper when you stop buying so many video games and so much beer.

Young people in general are underrated at established companies. No matter how skilled and capable a contribution, a new hire will make substantially less than someone who has been there for a while. This isn't necessarily a bad thing; it is just an example of how skill and contributions are exceedingly difficult to measure. But it is no fun to be underpaid. Young people also have the advantage of ignorance; they do not easily recognize what everyone else sees as impossible.

You are also most mobile right after graduation. Need to move to a startup hub to get investments? Cut living expenses and live on Ramen? Work 80 hours a week? This is the time you are best able to do those things.

It's also the best time to find co-founders. In five years the members of the class of 2007 will be established in their lives doing great things. Few are going to want to quit their jobs and live cheaply just to pursue a crazy new idea. But right now, ask them to be your co-founders. The worst case scenario is that your company fails, you learn a lot, you gain a tremendous amount of experience that almost no one your age has and you replace the line on your résumé that reads "Made Widgets (TM) for Big Company" with "co-founded a company doing something no one else thought of and tried to change the world."

There are legitimate reasons not to start a new company at this time. The most important is that you simply don't want to. The major factor of success here is determination. If you don't want to, you won't be determined, and that will not end well.

Another important reason is if you already have large financial obligations to your family or student loans.

If any of these reasons apply to you, that's OK. A start-up isn't the only rewarding thing you can do. Graduate school, the Peace Corps or the job at that company you always wanted to work for can all be great things. But starting your own company right out of college is a new opportunity for our generation. I suggest that some University students seize it.

Anti-plagiarism service violates the copyright laws it seeks to protect

By Robin Lynn Stevenson
Contributing Writer

At some point in my education, I was taught the fundamentals of how to cite sources for research papers. I remember my teachers telling me how important it was to give credit to the authors whose thoughts we were reproducing. I was told that it's rude and illegal to take something from an author without giving them credit for it.

Now, a Web site that markets itself as a tool against plagiarism is doing just what I was told not to do in grade school. TurnItIn.com allows professors and teachers to submit student papers to it in order to detect plagiarism. The online service is facing lawsuits from students claiming TurnItIn.com has allegedly violated copyright laws, and they have stolen the same kind of work that they claim to protect.

In case you are not familiar with the service, here is how TurnItIn.com works, according to the University Web site: The University buys a license and then any professor can sign up to use the service. By creating a faculty account, your professor can submit all or part of your paper to generate a report. This report details any online sources that your paper might have come from. TurnItIn.com's database is enormous, which is part of what has makes it so successful. The Web site search includes Internet pages and published work as well as papers that students have already submitted, according to the TurnItIn.com's Web site.

After your professor (or you, if your class is signed up for the service) turn your paper into the Web site, it archives your paper for future use. It will be used for comparison against future papers that will be turned in. Essentially, the Web site takes your work, sometimes without your knowledge, uses it for profit without your permission and does not pay you any royalties. Again, this sounds strangely similar to what my teachers warned me against doing in grade school.

Essentially, TurnItIn.com takes your work, sometimes without your knowledge, uses it for profit without your permission and does not pay you any royalties.

Because of this ethically questionable practice, TurnItIn.com has faced several lawsuits alleging its violation of copyright laws. According to The Washington Post, two students from McLean High School have filed a $900,000 lawsuit against iParadigms LLC, TurnItIn.com' parent company.

Their case is not the first to oppose TurnItIn.com's services. According to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, Jesse Rosenfeld, a Canadian student, refused to submit his papers to TurnItIn.com, and a Canadian court ruled that his papers had to be graded without the service.

Beyond the obvious copyright issues, this service has nasty implications. First, it compares your paper with every other student paper that has been submitted before yours. Just think of how many history teachers or professors assign papers on World War II—some of them are bound to be strikingly similar. This can lead to a lot of aggravation for a student who actually did his own work, but has been dragged down under the watchful eye of TurnItIn.com. Not to mention that an enormous database of student thought is just tantalizing for the government to utilize under the USA PATRIOT Act. Perhaps more importantly, it degrades the student-professor relationship by promoting the idea of "guilty until proven innocent."

There is no easy way to tell if you even have a paper archived at TurnItIn.com. The service is concerned primarily with its subscription holders, and the features of its Web site are accessible only to them.

So when you're turning in your final papers, just keep in mind that you might have just made a little more money for TurnItIn.com. I know I am keeping my eyes open for my royalty check to come in the mail.

Montana right to be wary of clampdown on freedoms

State government refuses to comply with national ID law

By Liz Stein
Staff Writer

Nearly two years ago the Real ID Act was signed into law by the U.S. federal government. Since then the legislation, intended to prevent terrorism, has not made headlines with tremendous frequency.

On April 17, Montana passed a law denying its implementation. This move could be the spark that sets into motion a much-needed sweeping rejection of the law, which demands a national standard for driver's licenses and links together all states' record systems into national databases.

According to the American Civil Liberties Union, as reported by the Associated Press, "though several states have either passed or are considering resolutions or bills against the act, Montana is the first state to outright deny its implementation."

One of Montana Governor Brian Schweitzer's central arguments in his decision to dismiss the bill was his concern that his constituents' privacy rights would be jeopardized.

"We don't think that bureaucrats in Washington, D.C., ought to tell us that if we're going to get on a plane we have to carry their card, so when it's scanned through they know where you went, when you got there and when you came home," Schweitzer said in an interview with the Associated Press last week.

Schweitzer has every reason to be concerned.

It is a fearful possibility that someday soon we will not be free to go where we please without government approval and knowledge of our whereabouts.

The Real ID Act will produce many unwanted effects. The way it will affect our privacy rights as American citizens is the most frequent grievance of those who oppose the legislation.

According to Declan McCullagh of CNET News.com, all U.S. citizens will need the ID card to drive, travel on an airplane, visit a federal government building, obtain Social Security payments, open a bank account "or take advantage of nearly any government service." In effect, it would be near impossible to live without one.

While the law is believed to be able to hinder the ability of terrorists and criminal foreigners to travel freely throughout our country, it will also have undesirable and unnecessary negative impacts on the lives of innocent, lawful American citizens.

The information provided on the mandatory Real ID will include the individual's name, date of birth, sex, Social Security number, principal residence and a photo. This could cause problems for people who fear for their personal safety, such as victims of domestic violence, police officers or judges, because the information, which will be stored in various federal databases, may be given, sold or leaked to outside third parties.

The IDs will be equipped with a common machine-readable technology, as required by the Department of Homeland Security. It is also believed that radio frequency identification (RFID) tags will be placed in the cards.

These RFID tags emit signals that, according to Anita Ramasastry of CNN.com, "would allow the government to track the movement of our cards and us." In addition, private businesses may have the ability to use scanners that read the RFID tags, without the individual even knowing.

Furthermore, implementation of the bill will be extremely costly and time consuming. The estimated cost is between $80 and $100 million, according to CNN.com, which the states will have to pay. The states will also have to ensure that extensive cross-checking is done in order to verify the authenticity of each of the documents necessary for the card.

Over 600 organizations have expressed concern over the Real ID Act, including the American Association of Motor Vehicle Administrators, the American Immigration Lawyers Association, the Association for Computing Machinery and the National Governors Association.

As a result of the tragic events that have pushed our government to tighten U.S. homeland security, American citizens continue to suffer the consequences of an intrusion of their privacy rights. While most federal policies do serve the best interests of the American people, this bill is going too far. It is a fearful possibility that someday soon we will not be free to go where we please without government approval and knowledge of our whereabouts.

The F Word
On Feminism

By Lenore R. Flower
Writer

I have a confession to make: I have a crush. He is handsome, considerate and I walk past him every day. Who cares if he is a two-dimensional poster? He is a feminist who believes that the women's movement is about respect. For that, I can forgive him for almost anything.

Merriam-Webster defines feminism rather innocuously as "the theory of the political, economic and social equality of the sexes." Yet so many people in our society who have benefited from the efforts of our fore-mothers and fore-fathers to create such an equal society demonize feminism and feminists. There are even some individuals who laughably believe, as Pat Robertson does, that "The feminist agenda is not about equal rights for women. It is about a socialist, anti-family political movement that encourages women to leave their husbands, kill their children, practice witchcraft, destroy capitalism and become lesbians," as cited in a USA Today article.

Few women and even fewer men seem willing to recognize feminism according to its dictionary definition. The result is obvious: when we no longer define feminism according to its standard meaning, we inevitably abuse the word.

Of course, the Merriam-Webster definition of feminism is broad enough that there is room for a person to adapt it to their own definition. The primary problem (among many) that I have with Robertson's bastardization of feminism is it suggests that the women's movement is a singular, brainwashing force. His unique definition ignores the fact that feminists are male, female, straight, gay, Christian, Wiccan, Muslim, conservative, liberal and a host of other subgroups of humanity. Most importantly, Robertson reveals the misogyny at the root of his outburst against equality. He assumes that the women making up this movement are both evil and incapable of thinking for themselves. This is ironic: the most basic feminist concept is that women have brains of their own.

A well-known pop culture icon, Lois Griffin of "Family Guy," once said, "feminism is about choice. I choose to be a wife and mother." For me, this is the crux of modern feminism. Women now have (and continue to fight for) the freedom to choose when and with whom to have children, to marry and to work. In college, women have the choice to engage in sexual activity without traditional rules or sanctions. Sexual exploration is expected, even encouraged, within the walls of college dormitories (much to the chagrin of whoever shares those walls).

Yet in every one of those choices lies a risk. After decades of use, contraceptives are expensive and can lead to dangerous complications. A wife and mother can become economically dependent on her husband, making it even more difficult to leave him if he is abusive. In the workforce, women are still short a quarter for every dollar a man makes. And with the increased "freedom" to explore sexuality comes the assumption that every female wants to go exploring. Behind closed doors, this can lead to confusion for both parties and to danger for the woman.

Internationally, the risks for simply being born female are much higher. The systematic rape and gang rape used as tactics of war in Liberia continue now that the country is at peace. In Iran and Afghanistan, some women abused by their husbands find it less painful to kill themselves by self-immolation than allow the beatings and misery to continue. The slave trade known as sex trafficking lures women, often of college age, from developing European countries such as Lithuania, Russia, Albania, Romania and the Ukraine, or from the Far East, South America and Africa. The enslaved end up working 16 hours a day, servicing as many as 30 men. According to the United Nations, they can be found in 137 countries, in any nation where some men are willing to support the slavery of women.

Even if we choose to pretend that we have perfect equality in the United States, millions of women across the world suffer from vast inequality. Women who are not free to choose an education, who cannot speak out for themselves except through a violent death, who are blamed for the abuse and assault they receive, need those developed nations that believe in women's equality to help instigate change. If we as a society do not embrace the "political, economic and social equality of the sexes" as a basic moral conviction, these women will continue to suffer, unaided.

I yearn for a time when I can tell people I write a feminist column without getting a response of veiled shock. I hope that one day, when a male politician is asked if he considers himself a feminist, he bristles slightly, as if someone has questioned his opinion on racial equality. I dream of an era when all members of the male sex are as enlightened as my favorite poster boy, so when I ask "Are you a feminist?" they laugh slightly and respond "Well, of course, aren't you?"

Take note, boys: that may be the ultimate aphrodisiac.

Currently Untitled by Juliana Su

Man, I am so ready for the Diff. Eq. exam. I was up until 3 a.m. studying.
What are you talking about? Diff. Eq. is tomorrow. Today's Comp. Sci.!
Hey guys! Ready for Diff. Eq.?
It was just a joke!

"Welcome to Hokie nation"

"The VT community is working hard to deal with a situation that is unprecedented. Our belief in Virginia Tech, our commitment to each other, and our resolve to make for a brighter day, even in the darkest moments, sustain us. We are also strengthened by the expressions of support and solidarity from many individuals and institutions, both in the region and across the country. And I personally was touched by the recent gathering at Bucknell in support of VT—which was shared with me by Rev. Ian Oliver. Thanks for thinking of us in this trying time."
—Richard Ferraro, assistant vice president for student affairs, Virginia Polytechnic Institute

The emotional the rational

By Evan Unger
News Editor

The University's response to the Virginia Tech tragedy has been deliberate and well-thought out by members of the administration.

Public Safety Director Jason Friedberg was one of the first to react to the situation in Blacksburg, Va and described Public Safety's initial reaction.

"I didn't want it to be a knee-jerk reaction. It needed to be a balanced and thoughtful reaction," Friedberg said.

Friedberg, whose wife is a third generation graduate of Virginia Tech, was notified of the second shooting almost immediately after it happened since his wife's family was actually visiting last Monday.

Friedberg said he called Captain Douglas Lauver to alert him of the shooting at another university and to put Public Safety on notice.

"I am always cognizant that [an incident like this] is part of a coordinated attack," Freidberg said.

He said that Public Safety was in an atypical state of readiness and that all available officers were out in patrol cars around campus. Friedberg wanted Public Safety to assume a state of high visibility and to look for suspicious activity

Friedberg also made phone calls to the chiefs of the Lewisburg Police Department, East Buffalo Township Police Department, the Union County Sheriff's Office and to the Pennsylvania State Police to make certain that these departments were ready to respond if there was a problem at the University.

These departments would also be the first responders in the event of a firearm call since Public Safety officers do not carry firearms.

"It's where we stand. It's the nature of what we do," Friedberg said regarding Public Safety's lack of firearms.

Within hours, Public Safety assigned an extra uniformed patrol to the academic quad to increase visibility and to deter hoaxes, jokes or a copycat attack. This patrol will be on duty for the reminder of the year.

The Lewisburg Police Department and East Buffalo Township Police Department have also placed extra paroles around campus in order to be ready to assist Public Safety and assure that nothing like Virginia Tech happens at the University.

Meanwhile, the administration needs determine the correct response to the campus community.

Chief Communications Officer Pete Mackey said that the University's response needs to be a balancing act, especially with a student population of around 3,500 people.

President Brian C. Mitchell sent a campus e-mail late in the afternoon, detailing the resources that were available to students, including the Department of Psychological Services, the Chaplain's Office and the Dean of Students, which was also posted on the University's Web site.

Mitchell sent another e-mail to the campus Thursday, explaining the University's various responses throughout the week. In this second email, Mitchell mentioned that the University will review its emergency preparedness and crisis management plans.

"The University regularly and thoroughly reviews its comprehensive emergency preparedness and crisis management plans, as most recently conducted last fall. As you can imagine, as we prepare to review these plans again with recent events in mind, we will be taking a particularly close look at the plans we have in place to deal with violence on campus," Mitchell said in the email.

Mackey discussed the University's plans to review its plans.

"The University will use this as an opportunity to comprehensively look at a variety of circumstances that may confront the campus, including natural, national, campus violence or health and medical issues," Mackey said. "We know that everyone's mind is on campus violence, and so will be ours, but we will look at a variety of situations."

Mackey also said, "We know the protocols to follow in an instance of campus violence."

According to Friedberg, the University is re-prioritizing rather than searching out new solutions. All of the possible solutions have been researched or fleshed prior to the incident Friedberg said.

The biggest change to be implemented by next fall, which has always been in the works, is a cell phone messaging system.

"[We are] currently looking at systems of cell phone alerts that we could use to inform the campus of an emergency," Mackey said.

Mackey said that the University is looking into a system that will work with all providers, can change as technology changes and is proven to work in a campus environment or has the clear capacity to do so.

Friedberg said that access control to buildings may be re-evaluated in the future.

"To lock down [the buildings] of this campus is a task. [New remote access controls] could be very quick to lock exterior doors," Friedberg said.

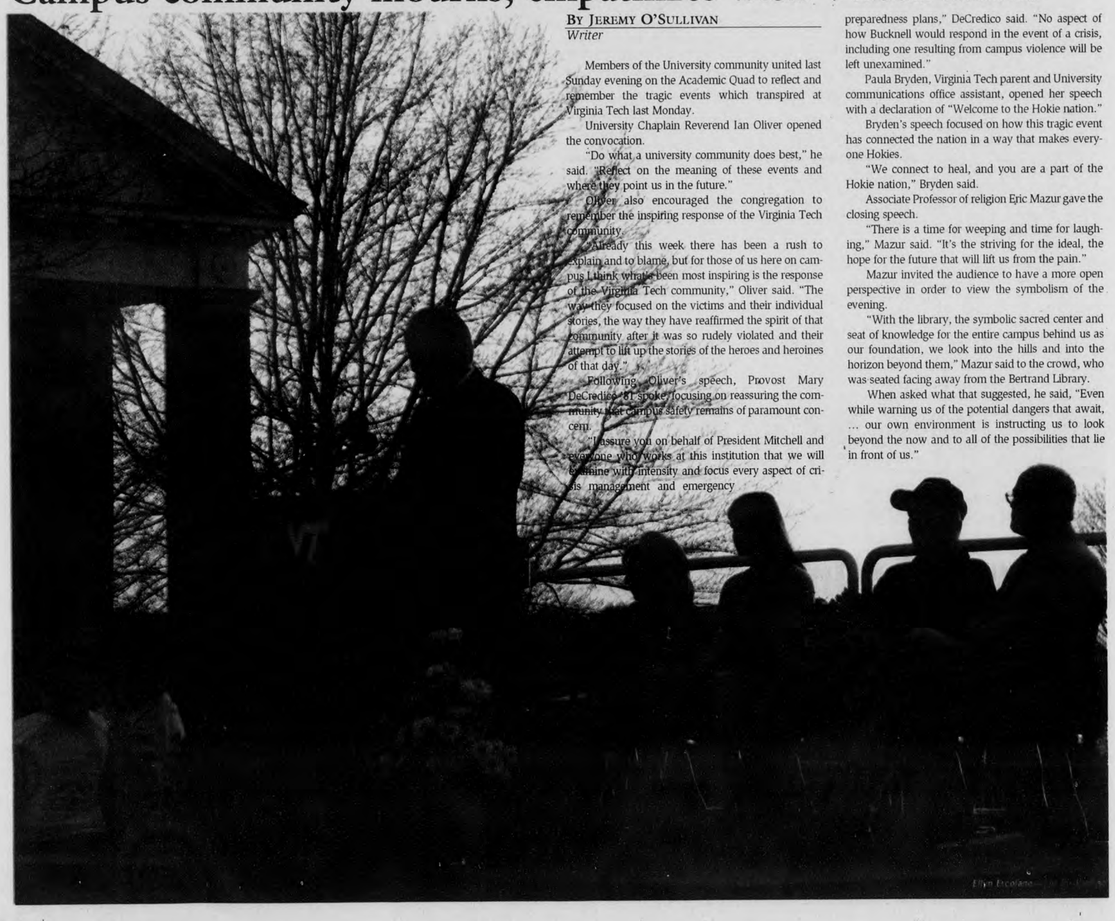
The University will be urging students in the very near future to provide their cell phone numbers to a database. Members of the class of 2011 will most likely be required to own cell phones and submit their numbers to the database as a part of the registration process.

Other systems, such as using the Rooke Chapel Bell or a siren system have also been evaluated.

Besides investing in new technologies, the University has in place emergency contact systems such as a program that sends an alert to all campus connected Windows computers, which pops up on screen. The administration also has the capacity to send mass e-mails and voicemails to the entire campus.

The University continued its effort to provide support for students by hosting an open forum Wednesday to discuss the emotional and tactical responses to the incident.

Campus community mourns, empathizes with VTech losses



By Jeremy O'Sullivan
Writer

Members of the University community united last Sunday evening on the Academic Quad to reflect and remember the tragic events which transpired at Virginia Tech last Monday.

University Chaplain Reverend Ian Oliver opened the convocation.

"Do what a university community does best," he said. "Reflect on the meaning of these events and where they point us in the future."

Oliver also encouraged the congregation to remember the inspiring response of the Virginia Tech community.

"Already this week there has been a rush to explain and to blame, but for those of us here on campus I think what's been most inspiring is the response of the Virginia Tech community," Oliver said. "The way they focused on the victims and their individual stories, the way they have reaffirmed the spirit of that community after it was so rudely violated and their attempt to lift up the stories of the heroes and heroines of that day."

Following Oliver's speech, Provost Mary DeCredico III spoke focusing on reassuring the community that campus safety remains of paramount concern.

"I assure you on behalf of President Mitchell and everyone who works at this institution that we will examine with intensity and focus every aspect of crisis management and emergency preparedness plans," DeCredico said. "No aspect of how Bucknell would respond in the event of a crisis, including one resulting from campus violence will be left unexamined."

Paula Bryden, Virginia Tech parent and University communications office assistant, opened her speech with a declaration of "Welcome to the Hokie nation."

Bryden's speech focused on how this tragic event has connected the nation in a way that makes everyone Hokies.

"We connect to heal, and you are a part of the Hokie nation," Bryden said.

Associate Professor of religion Eric Mazur gave the closing speech.

"There is a time for weeping and time for laughing," Mazur said. "It's the striving for the ideal, the hope for the future that will lift us from the pain."

Mazur invited the audience to have a more open perspective in order to view the symbolism of the evening.

"With the library, the symbolic sacred center and seat of knowledge for the entire campus behind us as our foundation, we look into the hills and into the horizon beyond them," Mazur said to the crowd, who was seated facing away from the Bertrand Library.

When asked what that suggested, he said, "Even while warning us of the potential dangers that await, ... our own environment is instructing us to look beyond the now and to all of the possibilities that lie in front of us."

The Bucknellian

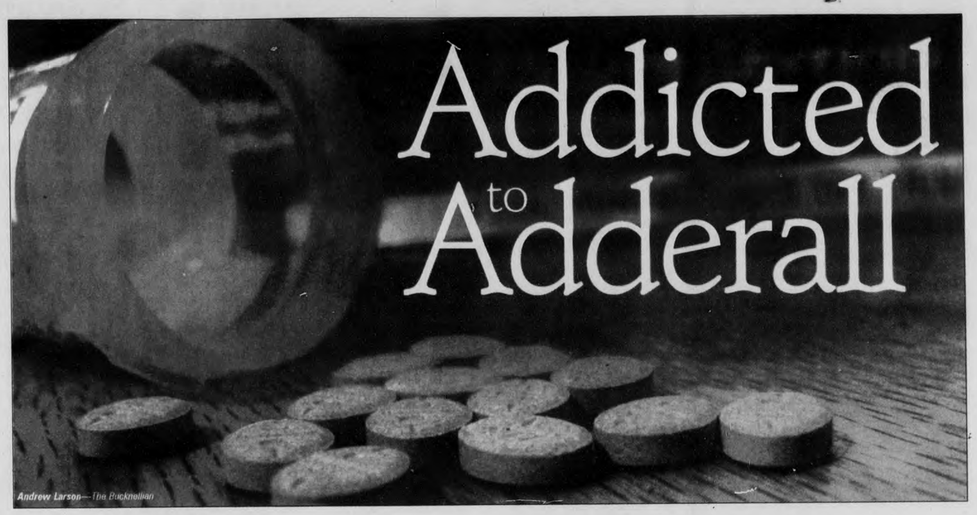
DIVERSIONS

April 27, 2007

Fighting fare

Students for Fair Trade tried living in a tent and eating rice and beans to raise University awareness about poverty.

See page C4



Addicted to Adderall

Students take risks in order to study and party harder

By Samantha Kantor
Staff Writer

With finals just around the corner, some students are working harder and adhering to a strict schedule while others are slacking off until the last minute and cramming the night before, sometimes with a little friend named Adderall.

A poll taken at a first-year hall on campus suggested that students are relatively unaware of the potential consequences of Adderall usage. The poll included 23 students, 12 females and 11 males.

Out of the 12 females, only one, Denise, admitted to taking Adderall in pill form as a non-prescribed user when she was 18, with the hopes of concentrating harder while she studied for a test. Denise told me that she achieved the desired effect.

"I studied for six straight hours without a single break," she said.

Of the 11 males, four admitted that they were non-prescribed users who "dabbled" with Adderall.

The four men were between the ages of 13 and 17 when they took Adderall for the first time. One, Mike, had taken Adderall to study; Mark had taken Adderall to party, and Peter and Robbie, had taken the drug for both reasons.

The usage of Adderall on college campuses by non-prescribed users is an increasing and life-threatening issue.

Adderall is commonly taken as a party drug in order to be able to "party harder and longer," Peter said.

When consuming Adderall for this purpose, it is often snorted rather than taken in pill form, which is the method Peter and Robbie chose when using. Since the drug enters directly into the bloodstream through this method, the drug's strength and influence over the user dramatically increases. The effects of snorting Adderall are frequently compared to the effects of snorting cocaine.

Many of the students who confessed to taking Adderall considered the drug to have positive effects.

Of those polled, most were not aware that the consumption of Adderall by non-users could result in a stroke, permanent brain damage or death from as little as 5mg (a common pill size is 10mg).

Adderall is a prescription drug used to treat Attention-Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder (ADHD) or Attention-Deficit Disorder (ADD), one of the most common developmental disorders in young children.

> ... One in every five prescribed users of Adderall misuses the drug either by selling to a non-prescribed individual or taking improper doses under inappropriate circumstances.

Children and adults with ADHD or ADD have difficulty concentrating for long periods of time, sitting still or controlling impulses.

Treating ADHD and ADD with this medication has proven to be effective and safe, with mild and non-frequent side effects.

This drug is also commonly used by an increasing number of non-prescribed individuals, especially among college students.

In a survey taken at the University of Wisconsin, it was concluded that one in every five prescribed users of Adderall misuses the drug either by selling to a non-prescribed individual or taking improper doses under inappropriate circumstances.

The statistics for Adderall deaths are generally low because the cause of death is usually attributed to an Adderall side effect such as heart attack or stroke, and not directly to Adderall consumption.

According to U.S. News and World Report, the number of people showing up in emergency rooms due to non-prescribed stimulant use increased by 33 percent between 2004 and 2005.

For the Adderall advocates out there who live by the "I am in college therefore I am invincible" mantra, it should be understood that Adderall is not especially safe unless it is legally prescribed and taken appropriately for a specific condition.

According to www.add-adhd-help-center.com, non-prescribed Adderall usage can lead to heart arrhythmia, circulatory and respiratory problems, psychotic episodes, increased aggression and toxic shock.

What is also important to remember is that when your body tells you that it needs a break, give it one. Do not resort to tricking it into performing at a level of which it is naturally incapable.

For healthy ways to reduce stress during finals week, you can visit the Student Health Services Web site.

If you or someone you know is currently using Adderall improperly or illegally, Student Health Services and Psychological Services are ready and willing to help you or your friends in any way necessary.

Adderall Abuse Side Effects:

- Motor and phonic tics
- Hypertension, heart palpitations
- Appetite loss, anorexia
- Sudden death
- Restlessness
- Dizziness
- Insomnia
- Dysphoria
- Depression
- Drug interactions
- Rashes
- Headache
- Tremor
- Seizures
- Stroke
- Drymouth
- Unpleasant taste
- Diarrhea
- Constipation
- Impotence
- Personality changes
- Irritability
- Psychosis
- Dependence/tolerance
- Toxic symptoms (overdose) at low doses

Source www.fda.gov

Spoiler Alert!

By Matthew Saylor
Associate Editor of Content

With this being the final issue of the school year, it is time to take a look at how your favorite shows will finish out the year. The next month is going to be a busy one for all of you television fans.

Bob Barker is set to retire as host of "The Price Is Right" this June, so you will want to take advantage of any opportunity to see him. Monday he will be appearing on "How I Met Your Mother" as Barney is called on down as the next contestant. CBS will be airing a special on Barker on Thursday, May 17.

Luka and Abby's wedding will air Thursday on "E.R.," but as usual, things will not go smoothly. NBC will also air 40-minute long episodes of "My Name Is Earl," "The Office" and "Scrubs." On "Scrubs," Keri Russell will be concluding her two-episode arc at Sacred Heart. Thursday will also feature the two-hour "Grey's Anatomy" special, with spin-off potential for Kate Walsh's character, Addison.

Monday, May 7 will be a big night for "24" as the show promises that a significant character will meet his or her demise. The next night "Law & Order: Criminal Intent" will showcase its fictional version of what happened to Anna Nicole Smith.

On May 9, we will meet Ben's parents on "Lost," which happens to be the same night that tennis legend John McEnroe guest stars on "CSI: New York." They air at 10 p.m. (University time), so be sure to set the VCR (yes, I am old school) if you want to watch both.

Stanley Tucci begins his turn as a doctor on "E.R." on May 10, the night of the extended season finale of "My Name Is Earl," featuring previously-seen guest stars Giovanni Ribisi and Christine Taylor (a.k.a. Mrs. Ben Stiller). As the night continues "The Office" gang heads to a local lake for some "fun" at the beach, as things will be set up for the one-hour season finale set to air the following week. It promises to be a doozy, and it looks like someone might be getting a new job.

Sunday, May 13 will be a busy night, as "Survivor: Figi" will pick its winner in a three-hour special, and someone will bite the dust on "Desperate Housewives." That Wisteria Lane is one messed up, upper-class development.

That same night "7th Heaven" will have its series finale (yes, we think it is for real this time) after 11 seasons of sometimes wholesome family entertainment. Tuesday, May 15 may mark the series finale of another show on the CW, "Gilmore Girls." It has not been announced if the show will return for one more season. Negotiations are still taking place, with the possibility of fewer episodes than normal airing next year if the show returns.

"America's Next Top Model" picks a winner on Wednesday, May 16, and both "Medium" and "Criminal Minds" will conclude their seasons. This could also be the night that Charlie fulfills Desmond's visions of the future on "Lost."

There are way too many viewing options on the next night, with finales set for "Ugly Betty," "Grey's Anatomy," "CSI: Crime Scene Investigation," "Smallville," "Supernatural," "The Office," "Scrubs" and "E.R." This will be Goran Visnjic's last episode as a series regular on "E.R.," but his character will be a lot better off than a couple of other doctors on this night.

Sunday, May 20 will mark the season finales for the ABC duo of "Desperate Housewives" and "Brothers & Sisters," while "24" and "Heroes" will end the following night. Tuesday will be the final night of competition on "American Idol," and a winner will be announced the next evening. "Dancing with the Stars," "NCIS," "Boston Legal" and a guest-star filled "Law & Order: SVU" will end on May 22 as well.

"Lost" will conclude its season with a two-hour finale on Wednesday, May 23, and will include another Jack flashback.

Some shows air episodes on-line after they air on television, so be sure to take advantage of this option. Also, summer reruns will soon follow for some shows, but not all. Plan carefully, and happy television watching.

COLDWELL BANKER

Penn One Real Estate

Thank You, Bucknell!!

For thirty years of calling Bucknell and Lewisburg home.

Susan Warner-Mills, Sales Associate
Competence, Integrity, Service

524-7500; swm@coldwellbanker.com

Quacking for a cause

Habitat sponsors Rubber Duck Derby with help of local community

By Susan Misur
Writer

Over 1,000 rubber ducks will be sent floating down the Bull Run Creek Saturday in a fundraising event sponsored by the University chapter of Habitat for Humanity.

Club members have been selling duck sponsorships for the Rubber Duck Derby to the University community as well as citizens of Lewisburg.

"Money raised will go toward co-sponsoring a Habitat house in the area with the Union-Snyder Counties Habitat affiliate," said Chapter President Tom Wagner '07.

A single duck sponsorship goes for $5 and a "6-quack" is $20. All ducks are numbered and will be launched off a ramp into the Bull Run Creek on Market Street to "race" to the finish line by the St. Louis Street Bridge.

Sponsors of the first ducks to cross the finish will win top prizes—but these are not just "run of the mill" gift certificates or gift baskets.

"Bucknell's Dining Services came through in a huge way and actually donated the first cash prize of $500. You can do anything you want with it since there are no restrictions, which is why it's our top prize," Lauren Krznaric '09, co-coordinating fundraising chair said.

The second prize is a Hershey Resort prize pack that includes a room for two at the Hershey Lodge and two single-day passes for the 2007 Hershey Park season. Third prize is an autographed L.J. Smith jersey and $50 cash, and fourth is a $200 gift certificate to BJ's Steak and Rib House in Selinsgrove.

Many more prizes will be given away, including raffle prizes donated by local businesses. Sponsoring a duck automatically enters you into the raffle.

"Most local businesses were happy to give some gift certificates, and those are the prizes we raffle off," Krznaric said.

As the chapter's biggest fundraiser, it's vital to have a lot of participation, said Krznaric. "It costs anywhere from $25,000-$35,000 to build a house in the local area. By this, I mean we must give that money as a donation in order to be allowed to help sponsor and work on it."

> "The more money that we are able to raise, the more frequently we can sponsor a house and host builds for the Bucknell community."
> —Tom Wagner '07

Because so much money is required to participate, the chapter can only build a house every year to a year and a half, according to Wagner. But the rapidly increasing demand from University students, clubs and departments to help build a Habitat house has the club trying to raise as much money as possible.

"During our last build we had a huge waiting list of volunteers that we were never able to completely use. The more money that we are able to raise, the more frequently we can sponsor a house and host builds for the Bucknell community," Wagner said.

The idea for the Rubber Duck Derby fundraiser is specific to the University's chapter, and came from past chapter member Ryan Bower '06 who found the idea on a Web site.

"We expanded the idea by having a logo developed for us, creating t-shirts to sell, and partnering with Lewisburg Arts Festival to make the event as huge as possible," Wagner said.

Since the actual duck race takes place during the Lewisburg Arts Festival, the club will continue selling duck sponsorships the day of the event in Hufnagle Park.

As of last Sunday, the club had sold around 500 ducks, according to Chapter Member Noelle Hawthorne '10.

"We have 2,000 ducks but we aren't necessarily aiming for that goal. The reason we got so many this year was because we ran out of 1,000 ducks we had last year," Hawthorne said.

It may be a challenge to sell sponsorships for all 2,000 ducks, but Hawthorne is optimistic.

"I think we shouldn't have a problem selling out this year, since we sell right up until 2:30 [p.m.] on Saturday right before the race starts," Hawthorne said.

"Last year's fundraiser generated over $5,000 for the club by selling 1,000 duck sponsorships and 60 t-shirts," Wagner said.

This year, a local radio station will be broadcasting from the festival, which Wagner hopes will generate publicity and awareness for the Rubber Duck Derby.

"Radio Station 94.1 WKQX will be at the derby broadcasting live from the race, which usually lasts around 15 to 30 minutes," Wagner said.

As for who will win the coveted top prizes—"It's any duck's game," Hawthorne said.

Rubber Duck Derby Prizes:

- First Prize: $500 cash donated by Dining Services
- Second Prize: Hershey Resort prize pack including a room for two at the Hershey lodge and two single-day passes for the 2007 Hershey Park season.
- Third Prize: autographed L.J. Smith jersey and $50 cash
- Fourth Prize: $200 gift certificate to BJ's Steak and Rib House in Selinsgrove
- Raffle prizes such as gift certificates donated by local businesses

Sweeten up your summer

From classic to classy: Eight desserts that will make your mouth water

By Liz Stein
Staff Writer

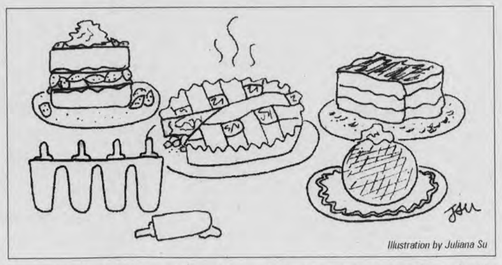

Illustration by Juliana Su

With the temperature rising every day now, we can all safely say that summer is just around the corner. How else do you enjoy the shimmer and glow of the sunny summer months than with a tasty treat? Keep reading for some delicious recipes to start off your dessert frenzy.

1. There is no better way to enjoy a summer barbeque than with old-fashioned strawberry shortcake. For this traditional American favorite, you'll need two cups flour, two teaspoons baking powder, 1/2 teaspoon salt, 1/3 cup butter, 7/8 cup milk, whipped cream, fresh strawberries, and strawberry sauce. After mixing all of the dry ingredients together, gradually add the milk and blend to make soft dough. Lightly roll the dough and cut into two seven inch circles. Bake in a preheated 450-degree oven until the shortcakes are crisp (approximately 15 to 20 minutes) and allow it to cool. Coat one cake in whipped cream and top with strawberry sauce and fresh strawberries. Layer second cake on top and repeat the toppings. Enjoy!

2. If you're a coffee fan, you'll love this scrumptious Italian original. To put together Tiramisu, you'll need 1 2/3 cups sugar, six egg yolks, 1 1/2 packages cream cheese, two cups whipped whipping cream, two teaspoons Kahlua, two packages lady fingers, espresso and shredded chocolate. Mix together sugar and egg yolks. Cut cream cheese into small pieces and whip together with sugar and egg mixture. Add whipping cream and Kahlua and beat with electric mixer. Soak lady fingers in espresso and line a 9x13-inch pan with half of them. Spread mixture on top and repeat layers until you have used all of the mixture. Cover top with shredded chocolate and refrigerate for four to six hours. Serve cold.

3. An excellent way to cool off on those hot summer days is with a yummy frozen fudge pop. In a blender, combine three cups milk, 1/2 cup chocolate milk powder, two tablespoons malted milk powder and two tablespoons light corn syrup. Blend well. Pour mixture into Popsicle molds with lids and insert wooden sticks. Freeze overnight and voilà!

4. Spice up your childhood favorite with a new bread pudding plan: raspberry pudding. With raspberries in full bloom this season, this is an excellent recipe for a fresh, sweet delight. First, lightly butter eight thin slices of white bread. Line a small baking dish with half of them. In a sauce pan simmer five cups raspberries, 2/3 cups sugar, one tablespoon lemon juice, and 1/3 cup water for 10 minutes. Pour mixture over bread and layer the remaining four slices on top. Using another dish, press down and pour off excess liquid. Cover with plastic wrap and keep weight on top. Chill in refrigerator for seven hours. Serve with removed berry liquid.

5. For ice cream lovers, this Mexican take on the creamy frozen treat is right up your alley. To make your own fried ice cream, scoop out five balls of vanilla or chocolate ice cream and return to freezer. Mix together 1/2 cup crushed corn flakes, one teaspoon cinnamon and two teaspoons sugar. Roll frozen ice cream balls in half of the crumb mixture and return to freezer. Dip frozen balls into one beaten egg and roll in remaining crumbs. Freeze until ready to eat. Place ice cream ball into hot oil for one minute. Remove and drizzle with honey and top with a spoon of whipped cream. Repeat with each ice cream ball.

6. A great way to enjoy one of the best seasonal fruits is with a freshly baked peach pie. Blend well two tablespoons flour, one egg, one cup sugar and 1/3 cup melted butter. Pour mixture over six medium peeled and sliced peaches in a nine-inch unbaked pie shell. Bake in a preheated 400-degree oven for 15 minutes, then reduce heat to 300 degrees and bake for 50 minutes longer. Serve warm or cold with vanilla ice cream or Cool Whip.

7. Before heading off to the beach, freeze your own homemade piña colada ice pops for a refreshing way to cool down while lying under the sizzling hot sun. In a blender, blend until smooth three cups 1/2-inch cubes of fresh pineapple, 1/2 cup Malibu rum and 1/2 stirred canned cream of coconut. Pour liquid into Popsicle molds, add wooden sticks and freeze for 24 hours. Just make sure you have enough for everyone!

8. Satisfy your sweet tooth with a healthy fruit salad. Mix together one tablespoon sugar and one package of Jello. Stir in three cups boiling water until dissolved. In a medium-sized bowl, mix in one cup drained canned fruits of pineapple and peaches. Pour in 1/2 drained syrup and one cup each of grapes, chopped apples, apricots, strawberries, and mangoes. Sit in Jello mixture and refrigerate for three hours. Serve with Cool Whip.

For more summer dessert recipes, log on to www.foodnetwork.com and www.cooks.com.

Meg's Mix: Saying goodbye

By Megan McWhinney
Writer

This time of year is a strange one indeed. Conflict is in the air. The weather is beautiful and while you know you should be locked in the library studying away, you can't resist the lure of the sunshine.

Instead of studying you spend two hours on a blanket on the quad, reading the same page over and over. You are unspeakably excited for summer, but are devastated that you won't be with your friends for three months.

Then there are those anticipating graduation. No more pencils, no more books, perhaps, but you are also facing the real world. It's all seniors talk about. The dreaded job search, apartment search, sanity search.

You begin to realize all the little things about the University you're going to miss (I believe Bull Dip is actually the thing I hear most), and everything you do could be the last. Last meal in the cafeteria, last register, last massively regrettable hookup, etc. And this is the last "Meg's Mix."

I searched the iMix category on iTunes and it seems that the only songs associated with graduating are Vitamin C's "Graduation Song," Green Day's "Good Riddance," and Eve 6's "Here's to the Night." Yes, "Good Riddance" made the cut, but if you want Vitamin C, try an orange—it's not making it on my list.

I've assembled a list of songs about farewells, the future and friends. And try as I might to write something poignant yet comical, I keep coming back to Dr. Seuss, who said it best in "Oh, The Places You'll Go":

You have brains in your head.
You have feet in your shoes
You can steer yourself in any direction you choose.
You're on your own.
And you know what you know.
You are the guy who'll decide where to go.

1. "Lean On Me"—Bill Withers

Classic. Doesn't it make you want to get around a campfire, throw your arms over your friends' shoulders and rock back and forth?

2. "School's Out"—Alice Cooper

For some of us, school is out forever! But don't worry—Alice throws a bone to those for whom school is only out for summer...

3. "Leaving on a Jet Plane"—Chantal Kreviazuk

Yes, John Denver has his folksy appeal, but so help me God I almost break into tears every time I hear this version of the song. We always sang this on the last night of summer camp, so it's always associated with saying goodbye to people you might never see again.

4. "More Than This"—Charlie Hunter Quartet ft. Norah Jones

"It was fun for a while / There was no way of knowing / Like dream in the night / Who can say where we're going." This is a nice latin-y version of the 10,000 Maniacs song.

5. "Waiting for my Real Life to Begin"—Colin Hay

A very pretty song about, well, you saw the title. I think that sums up the feeling for seniors everywhere.

6. "All the Money or the Simple Life Honey"—The Dandy Warhols

This is just a fun song about keeping a certain amount of perspective in regards to your happiness versus your paycheck.

7. "The Bare Necessities"—Phil Harris

Yes, this is from the Disney version of "The Jungle Book." Listen to it and dance around. This song is paired with the previous one ... do what makes you happy and get in touch with your inner child every now and again.

> Class of 2007, let's not let this be the best time of our lives. The best is yet to come...

8. "Do You Realize?"—The Flaming Lips

A wonderful song about realizing how amazing life is right now and not letting that appreciation wait until the end of your life. "And instead of saying all of your goodbyes - let them know / You realize that life goes fast / It's hard to make the good things last / You realize the sun doesn't go down / It's just an illusion caused by the world spinning round."

9. "Young At Heart"—Frank Sinatra

"You can go to extremes with impossible schemes / You can laugh when your dreams fall apart at the seams / And life gets more exciting with each passing day / And love is either in your heart or on its way... Then here is the best part / You have a head start / If you are among the very young at heart." Frank says it all.

10. "Don't Stop Believing"—Journey

Nothing brings people together like screaming this song at the top of their lungs. This song was played almost non-stop by two guys on my freshman hall, so it has added significance from the beginning to the end of college.

11. "What a Wonderful World"—Joey Ramone

I love Louis Armstrong, but I think this version is a little closer to the tastes of college students.

12. "Ain't No Mountain High Enough"—Marvin Gay and Tammi Terrell

When saying goodbye to friends there is always that lingering fear that you won't keep in touch. This song (in the friend context) expresses that sentiment you feel for the family you choose for yourself.

13. "Float On"—Modest Mouse

"Bad news comes don't you worry even when it lands / Good news will work its way to all them plans" And the sentiment we're all trying to tell ourselves ... it will all be okay.

14. "Bittersweet Symphony"—The Verve

This song isn't really about goodbyes, but somehow resonates as a goodbye song nonetheless. This is indeed a bittersweet time in our lives, so it seems appropriate.

15. "Good Riddance"—Green Day

Yes, I sold out. But come on, I think we all sang this at either our grade school or high school graduations.

16. "You've Got A Friend"—James Taylor

This is in the same vein as "Ain't No Mountain High Enough." Besides, you'll feel like an idiot when you come back to a reunion and realize you didn't keep in touch with these incredible people.

17. "These Are Days"—10,000 Maniacs

The graduation mixes I saw also used this song very frequently. Lyrically, it is very appropriate. In terms of sound, Natalie Merchant still drives me nuts.

18. "Forever Young"—Youth Group

Yes, the Rod Stewart version is better, but I'm trying to keep it young.

19. "Landslide"—Fleetwood Mac

An incredibly beautiful song about change. It speaks for itself.

20. "(I've Had) The Time of My Life"—Bill Medley and Jennifer Warnes

The last song might as well be a fun one and also a little bit silly. The title repeats what so many people say about college. Class of 2007, let's not let this be the best time of our lives. The best is yet to come...

These songs are available on iTunes in the iMix category under the title "Songs to Say Goodbye."

Courtesy of stock.xchng.com

Another Bubble

By Ana Fullmer
Staff Writer

Say it ain't so! Due to circumstances beyond my control, (graduation ... gross!) this is the last time I'll be addressing you, my beloved Bubblenellians. Fortunately for everyone, the wild world of celebrities has provided me with an exhaustive amount of things to tell you. The most important of those things being the saddening news that Britain's Prince William and his girlfriend of four years, Kate Middleton, are no longer a couple.

Us Weekly magazine reported that the couple has remained tight-lipped about the split, but friends of the pair say that William was not ready to promise the kind of commitment that Middleton wanted. With the prince training for his future position as the head of the Royal Military, he had increasingly less time to spend with his girlfriend. Shortly after the breakup, the future monarch was spotted (and photographed) boobie-grabbing some ladies at a nightclub. So for those girls who don't yet have summer plans and are impervious to occasional uninvited over-the-sweater-action, the UK has an opening for a new princess. Go forth and conquer!

In other breakup news, noted burlesque dancer Dita Von Teese spoke out to Telegraph recently about her divorce from shock-rocker Marilyn Manson.

She said, "I wasn't supportive about his partying or his relationship with another girl and as much as I loved him I wasn't going to be part of that."

The 38-year-old freaky '90s megastar is now dating 19-year-old actress Evan Rachel Wood who apparently was supportive of the "lifestyle" that Von Teese disapproved of. That's the thing about teenagers—Manson keeps getting older, and they stay the same age. Excuse me while I vom all over my black wardrobe and glass eye.

Speaking of unhealthy lifestyles ... Karma seems to have caught up with Girls Gone Wild founder Joe Francis. The entrepreneur first drew contempt charges during a court hearing last month where he made false statements to a judge about the filming of underage girls in 2003. Since that first snafu, he was found to be evading taxes in Nevada, then avoiding arrest. Once they finally got him in jail, he tried to bribe an officer and was found with illegal contraband, including controlled substances, in his cell. Francis seems to finally be learning that he is not above the law, and according to PerezHilton.com, he has not been doing so well in lockdown.

According to the Web site, Joe's lawyer said, "He can't sleep. He hasn't eaten properly. He's prone to anxiety attacks. I know if it was me, I'd be cold and frustrated. Joe has been breaking down, and Joe Francis does not break down. He came back to his cell from a lawyer visit this past week and was told that he wouldn't get his Xanax anti-anxiety pill because he'd missed the medication cart that day. He went into a full-blown anxiety attack." Inmates gone wild!

On to minor celebrities who earn their money the honest way ... by whoring themselves out to Us Weekly! "The Hills" stars Heidi Montag and Spencer Pratt spoke out in last week's issue about their "perfect" relationship. Controversy over the pair has been brewing since the reality TV show began portraying both of them in a negative light by showing the rift between Montag and the star of the show, her former best friend Lauren Conrad, as the fault of Spencer's controlling behavior.

Pratt is quoted in the interview as saying "[Heidi] has the world's best boyfriend," and, "Who wouldn't want to be in a flawless relationship? Heidi is as happy as she's ever been." Sounds to me like Heidi has been brainwashed by the evil Spencer and needs to get out fast. It also sounds like the two are just trying to get some publicity beyond the show that Lauren Conrad happens to be the star of. It's all just a shameless attempt to get a job, something that a certain unemployed celebrity gossip columnist (who just adores fetching coffee and making copies for very reasonable wages and whose contact information is in the directory) would never think of doing.

On that note, this is my final farewell. In the months ahead my faithful readers will just have to scour the Internet for their own celebrity gossip while they should be reveling in the grey-cubicled glory that is their coveted financial internship. Goodbye and good luck.

Kinsey Sicks' offbeat humor drags in big crowd, big laughs

By Erik Zager
Writer

There are not many performances on campus where one can be serenaded with songs about pubic hair. The Kinsey Sicks' performance, "Dragapella" just so happened to be one of them. The Kinsey Sicks is a group of four male performers who dress in drag and sing a cappella—just in case the show's title didn't give it away. With four distinct characters, the Sicks use a combination of singing and skits to entertain their audience. It was hard not to laugh, cringe or be outright offended at least once in their show.

The leader, Winnie (Irwin Keller), is a proper 60s-style woman who struggles to keep the other girls in line and out of trouble. She does have somewhat of a wild side though. The Kinsey Sicks Web site describes her as being born into a proper family before being, "...come upon and taken in by a band of radical lesbian Tupperware ladies who raised her as one of their own pups."

Rachel (Ben Schatz) is somewhat of a ditz who seems to have lost any ability whatsoever to censure what she says. She is the one that sang the song about pubic hair at the beginning of the show, along with props. Laughter, mixed with groans of horror and disgust, was heard throughout this number.

Then there is Trampolina (Chris Dilley), the sweet woman that is still a kid at heart. Her innocence was demonstrated with her yell of "Glory hole-alluya" during her spiritual song about god. Her personality complimented the fourth member of the group, Trixie (Jeff Manabat). Trixie is a self-described label queen who works tirelessly in Venereal Disease (VD) clinics all around the country. She passed her knowledge onto the audience during her VD ballad, in which she explains that despite sleeping around, she has never caught anything because she always wears a condom.

Courtesy of www.kinseysicks.com

Kinsey Sicks performed Friday in the Harvey Powers Theatre to a full crowd. The four members sang offbeat a cappella while dressed in drag.

In addition to the songs about VD, pubic hair and God-endorsed sex, there were songs about lesbian love, masturbation, drag queens and even a love song sung entirely in Yiddish. The eclectic style of songs provided constant entertainment that didn't get dull. The Sicks even managed to work in a serious song about a former group member they lost to crystal-meth addiction.

The show climaxed during the final song-and-dance routine when they pulled Robert Midkiff, associate dean for academic affairs, on stage, dressed him in drag and did a group can-can dance.

Once the show was over, the singers signed merchandise in the hall. The audience was then invited back into the auditorium to see a comedian, followed by a question-and-answer session with the men behind the women. The audience was told about some of the protests that the Sicks have had to deal with in the past, in addition to where they get their inspiration and stories about kids shows that they have done.

The show was generally kept apolitical. The group explained that since they performed their show "I Want to be a Republican" at the University just two years ago, they felt that they should focus more on other topics. Only one person seemed to be seriously offended by the show, walking out with two young children at the beginning. In the end, most people seemed quite pleased with their experience. With any luck, the Kinsey Sicks will be back at the University in another two years.

Book Your Graduation Party!

Brookpark Station Cafe

"Casual dining with a gourmet flair"

Fresh Sushi & Vegetarian Items

Catering & Takeout Platters

B.Y.O.B.

Wireless Internet

Mon-Sat 8:00-8:00 Sun 8:00-2:00

1 Mile West of Town on RT. 45

542-FOOD (3663)

Mer Cares

Dear Mer:

I am a first-year and I just went to the sororities' "Open Suites" on Tuesday evening, and it was so overwhelming. We went to each sorority and heard their songs and then we talked with a few sisters. I only went because my friend didn't want to go alone and my views towards joining a sorority are still up in the air. But after that experience, I don't know what to think about what recruitment will be like, whether I should even go through it or if it's worth having a whole weekend of nights like this one, trying to awkwardly make conversation. Can you shed some light on Greek life and advice you have towards recruitment in the fall?

- Flustered and Confused

Dear Flustered and Confused:

Recruitment can sometimes be an intimidating process, but you should just go with the flow. Don't expect certain things to happen because sometimes people are disappointed in the end.

Choose where you'd be comfortable being a member, rather than allowing yourself to be put in a sorority that may have judged you based on your appearance.

Please don't be superficial though—it's hard enough for sororities to decide which new girls they want to join their sisterhood based on a handful of five-minute conversations over a few days, without you pretending to be who you're not.

During recruitment, which starts in the first week of school, you first hear different songs and skits of each sorority. Then if the sorority calls you back, you visit it again and see what type of philanthropy activities they do within the chapter. Then the sororities have a final round called "prefs" and you participate in a sisterhood ritual to help you finally decide if you'd like to join that sorority. Again, I realize that Open Suites may be overwhelming, but in my opinion, it might be worth it just to go through recruitment.

Rush might be a good opportunity for you to meet new girls in the sororities and in your class. You learn to socialize with people better, even in awkward situations. You should ask plenty of questions to see if that sorority and its goals are right for you. Being a part of a Greek organization might give you leadership skills, new friendships and networking opportunities after college.

According to the University's Panhellenic Recruitment statistics, 77 percent of sophomore women registered for recruitment and 60 percent pledged in fall 2006. Over 745 women out of 1,861 female undergraduates and 688 men out of 1,745 male undergraduates are involved in Greek life, which goes to show you that a significant part of the campus is Greek.

It's perfectly alright if you just want to stay with your close friends and do activities with them. There's nothing wrong with being an independent. You still get to keep all your friends, join in social activities and enjoy the remainder of your college years.

Even if you choose not to join a sorority, you may regret never trying it out and seeing what a sorority is like during those few days of recruitment. At least you can say you tried and it just didn't fit. Simple as that, and no harm is done.

Whatever you choose, you should have the opportunity to form your own ideas through experience.

Love,
Mer

Send comments to marcel01@Bucknell.edu or via campus mail to box number C1099.

DOES YOUR CAR NEED SERVICED?

Our Service Department has $25,000 in new upgrades, including a new alignment rack, brake lathe, tire machine, and hundreds of hours of training for the techs. We now offer shuttle service to and from work or home. We have become a complete service center that can perform any work on any model, from an oil change to engine replacement.

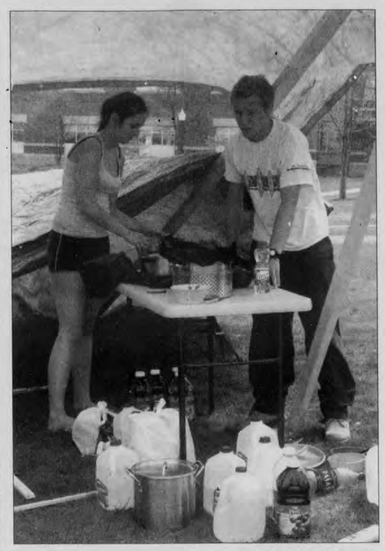
Lewisburg Ford
Oil Change w/Multi-Point Inspection
$19.95 Includes 5 quarts. Most power options at time of service. Expires 12/31/06.

Lewisburg Ford
Oil Change/Tire Rotation w/Multi-Point Inspection
$34.95 Most power options at time of service. Expires 12/31/06.

Lewisburg Ford
2265 Old Turnpike Rd.
(Route 45 West)
Across From Brookpark Farm
Call Today! (570) 524-7267
Visit us on the web at www.lewisburgford.com

Demonstration encourages reflection

Students for Fair Trade raises awareness about world's poverty



Sarah Gainer—The Bucknellian

Fair Trade members Alex Bernshteyn '07 and Keith Kolakowski '08 are shown preparing lunch on the quad. Every day, the students take turns preparing humble meals of rice and beans on the grill to try to simulate the dietary conditions faced by so many of the world's poor.

1 out of every 7 children in Pennsylvania lives in poverty.

3 billion people (half the world's population) live on less than $2 a day.

1.3 billion people do not have access to clean water.

Over 800 million in the world go hungry every day.

Africa's infant mortality rate is 15x that of the developing world.

Information taken from signs posted by the Student's for Fair Trade Organization

By Nilanjana Saha
Features Editor

Three billion people in the world live on under $2 per day. While camping out on the Elaine Langone Center quad with limited resources for a week can't possibly replicate what half of the world lives through every day, 15 members of Students for Fair Trade are trying to gain an understanding of poverty by living on $1 a day.

"Raising awareness about poverty is a big part of [the demonstration]," Saskia Madlener '08 said. "We are also giving up some of our everyday luxuries."

Students set up camp with borrowed tarp and donated wood on Sunday and has since took turns cooking rice and beans on a grill for every meal.

"Most people are worried about consuming too many calories, but it is a completely different perspective when you are wondering where your next meal is coming from," Amy Bruno '09 said.

"Some people are quick to criticize," Keith Kolakowski '08 said. Some students have been skeptical of the demonstration because participants had to adapt some amenities like using computers, grills and adequate water supplies, especially to attend classes and keep up with assignments.

"We realize we are students first," Becky Kosowicz '07 said. "We are not trying to simulate poverty ... but trying to understand the conditions that a lot of people in the world live in."

Throughout the week, the organization held "lunch-time chats" to discuss the reasons behind the demonstration and teach students more about fair trade. There were also vendor exhibitions from local businesses and a micro financing presentation from Kiva to discuss methods of combating poverty.

"We just wanted to get a good dialogue going and give people who are interested an opportunity to talk to us and see how they can participate," Bruno said.

There was also a movie screening for "Wal-Mart: The High Cost of Low Price" and Fair Trade coffee sales to encourage students to think about how their daily consumptions have an effect on the rest of the world.

Around the camp site, signs bore stories of locals who have struggled under the grip of poverty.

"What most people don't realize is that poverty is not something that happens far away," Kosowicz said. 12.7 percent of the U.S. population is impoverished, according to the U.S. Census Bureau.

Monday, strong winds tore the tent down and blew signs away, leaving participants to rebuild the camp.

Having a limited amount, no variety in their meals and the lack of proper sleep was also difficult, Bruno said.

Besides supporting the Fair Trade coffee sales, members of the organization are hoping to get the University bookstore as well as dining services to carry more fair trade products. It has also been involved in a divestment campaign to convince the University to withdraw investment from any companies that are providing revenue for the Sudanese government to carry on genocide in Darfur.

According to Kolakowski, one of the biggest challenges that Students for Fair Trade faces is the lack of a large enough supply chain to make Fair Trade products available to students and locals.

"[Fair Trade items] ... can often be more expensive and therefore there is simply not the willingness, or sometimes even the ability to pay the premium price for justice," Kolakowski said.

"A lot of University students don't realize that a small percent of the world's population is using a large portion of resources," Kosowicz said. Participants hope that the demonstration will provide another perspective to these issues.

"We hope that everyone at the [University] will leave with a better understanding of how the global market works ... and more students [will be] excited to buy Fair Trade," Kolakowski said. "Their money is going to be spent [by] the communities that receive it on sustainable development, education and a higher quality product."

Sarah Gainer—The Bucknellian

Becky Kosowicz '07, along with other demonstration participants, spend nights sleeping in sleeping bags under a tarp. The camp site was set up on the quad last Sunday, and was utilized as a shelter until Thursday when the demonstration ended.

Sarah Gainer—The Bucknellian

Alex Ufier '10 and Saskia Madlener '08 are shown hammering a sign into the ground. The sign, which displays the number of children around the world who die as a result of poverty, is just one of the many standing outside the Langone Center lawn.

Think your dorm room is small? Think again!

The Leo room in Edwards House is the smallest room available on campus

By Erica Schiffres
Writer

College dorms are small, but the Leo Room in 201 Edwards House is the smallest dorm on campus.

According to current Leo Room resident Tim O'Neill '07, "Cramped does not even begin to describe it. The small space was terrible. There was no layout that worked, where the bed, desk, and dresser could all be on the floor. A lofted bed seemed to be the only option."

The room measures 8 x 13.5 feet, and that includes the closet.

The Edwards House, a University-owned special interest house, is on St. George Street across from Vedder's "Beach." It is occupied primarily by juniors and last year was blocked for Asian-interest Housing, said resident Naomi Hossain '08.

Prior to O'Neill, who is on a leave of absence for the semester, the Leo Room had been occupied in turn by two others this year, Alex Lee '09 and Lee Markison '09 (who relocated after only short stays). Residency in this unit is one bragging right surely no one envies—so why would anyone opt for it?

"I decided to live there because I returned to school second semester as somewhat of a fifth year senior and wanted to get away from the normal dorm environment, as well as be downtown. Most friends that I still had at Bucknell were seniors living downtown," O'Neill said.

Director of Housing and Residential Life Daniel Remley said that students may choose rooms in order to bunk with friends. Others may have drawn a higher number in the room lottery process, leaving less desirable options available.

Deciding between the Leo Room or even a gateway becomes a matter of personal preference (a gateway, in comparison, measures 7.1 x 10.1 feet).

This is not an isolated problem, but instead it is one that affects a larger percentage of University students than in previous years.

The Modular Homes, previously intended for a total of eight persons per house, have been redesigned to accommodate ten.

"In the past, students have endorsed the five-person mod ... it seems like a new arrangement to this class, but there were triples in the Mods in 2002, when construction was being done in Hunt," Remley said. He also said that students retreat into the living areas if they need space.

The dorm dilemmas faced this year included new fraternity housing, renovation displacements and second semester study abroad departures, Remley said.

At this time, there are no plans for "off line decompression" for the Leo Room—a term for removing a living space from rooming selection, which means the smallest room is still up for grabs.

Tall students and claustrophobics may want to investigate some of the more luxurious living spaces on campus.

Sarah Gainer—The Bucknellian

The Leo Room, the smallest room on campus, is located in the Edwards House and measures 8 x 13.5 feet. Because of the housing shortage this year, the room is still up for grabs to homeless students. Any takers?

'Shadows' for a sunny Sunday afternoon

Two a cappella groups combine to deliver an end-of-the-year show

By Kyle Winslow
Contributing Writer

Two of the University's a cappella groups, Two Past Midnight and the Silhouettes, sang to an audience of students and parents on Sunday in Trout Auditorium. The joint spring semester concert was titled "Shadows After Midnight," showcasing both groups individually in two sets and alternating between groups. The concert also featured a combined selection, Billy Joel's "And So It Goes," which concluded the show.

The younger of the two a cappella groups, Two Past Midnight, featured many of its 13 male and female members early on, opening the show with Three Dog Night's "Joy to the World" and continuing with The Olympics' "Good Lovin'," made popular by The Rascals.

Two Past Midnight also performed arrangements of newer pop songs, like Ben Harper's "Steal My Kisses," and Kelly Clarkson's "Beautiful Disaster," featuring Karen Grabowski '07. Other highlights included various members' beat-boxed rhythms and the spontaneous and energetic, often high-pitched vocalizations of Kevin Mathes '07.

A departure from the pop style of their other songs, the a cappella group performed Ray Charles' "Georgia on My Mind" with careful attention to balance, blend and dynamics, highlighting the group's vocal cohesiveness.

The Silhouettes a cappella group was formed at the University around 1980 as the all-female Sem Gems. As the group evolved and grew through the '80s, they changed their name finally to the Silhouettes.

The Silhouettes' set list consisted of various pop and rock songs arranged for the group, including songs from Guster, Tom Petty, Ben Folds and Billy Joel. Their performance of Ben Folds' "Gone" displayed the complexity of the group's arrangements through a well-performed and intricate post-chorus and beautiful harmonization during the song's bridge.

On arranging and selecting songs, Silhouettes member Jenn DeLuca '09 said, "We generally first talk about songs we would like to do. Then members volunteer to arrange them, and we vote on what we want to sing."

... At various points the crowd started clapping along to the groups' beat-boxing, and many members of the audience endorsed individual singers from their seats with yells of encouragement.

Keeping audiences interested and excited about the group's repertoire is a priority for both a cappella ensembles. Songs are retired when seniors graduate or after the a cappella group has performed them on many occasions. Selecting, arranging and introducing new songs into the repertoire of regularly performing vocal groups happens on a yearly basis.

The audience's energy was audible throughout the performances; at various points the crowd started clapping along to the groups' beat-boxing, and many members of the audience endorsed individual singers from their seats with yells of encouragement.

Combining both groups for the performance's finale, Two Past Midnight and the Silhouettes were conducted by Alan Johnson-McNutt '08 in a beautiful arrangement of Joel's "And So It Goes."

Throughout their individual performances, both groups' members were visibly having fun onstage. That excitement was again shown at the end of the closing selection, as members of Two Past Midnight and the Silhouettes congratulated each other on their performances, laughing and embracing as they remembered some of their finer moments.

Respect and admiration between the a cappella groups is common, DeLuca said.

"It was fun to sing with them because they put emphasis on different performance techniques," DeLuca said.

On the differences in the groups' repertoires, she said, "We thought our audience would appreciate variety. We wanted them to see both groups."

Two Past Midnight has a number of CDs available, such as the self-titled "Two Past Midnight," and "Can You Hear Me Now?" featuring arrangements of songs by various artists, from Jars of Clay to the Beatles.

The Silhouettes' newest release is 2005's "Little Black Dress," with favorites such as The Verve's "Bittersweet Symphony" and "At Last." Both groups' CDs are available through the bookstore or individual members.

Because Sunday's performance marked the last spring concert for many student performers, both a cappella groups recognized and honored senior members for their dedication of time and talent.

Beyond Unison Spring Concert

Courtesy of Sarah Gainer

Beyond Unison held its spring concert on Saturday at Bucknell Hall. The group gave a formal farewell to its four graduating seniors, Jon Backhaus, Alex Numeroff, Lauren Brian, Mark Ulbrect and Sarah Gainer.

Another tantalizing edition brought to you by ...

Ms. Love and the Bubble

Dear Ms. O,

My boyfriend doesn't seem to have gotten the memo that foreplay is important. Often, he heads straight for the real deal, without helping me get warmed up. I don't want to have to do all the work, and I want to be able to really enjoy our time in bed together. Is there any way to let him know that he needs to step up the pre-sex pleasure?
- He's Forgetting Foreplay

Dear He's Forgetting Foreplay,

Some people are into foreplay, other people get straight to the point. And some people just don't know what the magical world of foreplay actual holds.

It's important to let your partner know where you stand on the subject, and if need be, clue him in. Communication is an essential part of every aspect in a relationship and many times, you can't have great sex without it.

Remember that your boyfriend can't read your mind. When your sex life is frustrating you, it's really important that you talk about your sexual desires. Explain to your guy that while you love your intimate moments together, you don't simply have an "on switch" and that you require a little effort on his part in order to enjoy your experience to the fullest.

He may not realize that he's not fulfilling your needs, and think that he's already doing the job well. Be careful not to insult your partner when you discuss any sexual issue. If you come on too harsh and shatter his ego, it could result in a few days of abstinence, or worse if your relationship can't recover.

Try dropping small hints or bringing the subject up in conversation. Ask your boyfriend what he thinks about foreplay and better yet, what he likes. This will help open up the entire conversation and let you know what you can do to help him better enjoy time in the bedroom. It also gives you the opportunity to bring up things that you would like to try or have him try, and most importantly gets him in the mindset that foreplay is something you appreciate. You can also talk about anything either of you may be uncomfortable with.

To get his attention, you can also be a little on the naughty side. Whisper into your unsuspecting lover's ear exactly what you want him to do to you. This will be exciting for your man because he will know that he's about to hit the jackpot, but it also sends him a message: foreplay, then sex. If you try this turn-on tactic while you're out and about, your idea may make him anxious to get home and get right on top of that.

If your significant other has no experience with foreplay, you should take a subtle approach to the entire situation. Take it slow and be understanding. Most of all, help him out by telling and showing him exactly what you like.

Guide him through the motions. Even just showing him how to do it with your own hands can make a world of difference. It's like driving a car: you learn by watching and then trying it yourself. So give him something to look at and let him know you enjoy it when he makes the effort. Seeing what turns you on might very well light a fire under his ass and get him excited to try to please you in new and different ways.

And you know what that means: Wash, Rinse, Repeat!

Remember your relationship should be about giving and taking. Let your partner know that the more you enjoy yourself, the more you'll be inclined to repay the favor. I'm betting he'll feel the same. Be generous with each other, and take the time to fully enjoy each other's bodies.

~ Ms. O

E-mail me your comments at MsOintheBubble@yahoo.com or send them through campus mail to Ms. O, The Bucknellian, C-3952.

Red, Smoked BBQ!
Beef Brisket, Pork, Chicken, Ribs!
Sandwiches, Wraps, Salads, Platters!
No Reservations Needed! Call in for Takeout!
SKEETER'S PIT BBQ
On the Bluff
Overlooking the Scenic Susquehanna River
At the Intersection of Routes 11 & 15
Shamokin Dam
570.743.2727
Daily 11:00am - 10:00pm
Sundays till 9:00pm
www.skeetersBBQ.com

"Turn your Power ON and Add LIFE to your Years!"
Michael D. Morrison D.C.
1205 W Market Street
Lewisburg, PA 17837
Office: 570-523-1221
Morrison's Advanced Chiropractic Care
A Healthy Spine Equals a Healthy YOU!
Bucknell Students may receive a free exam and x-rays (if needed) with mention of this advertisement.

DANCE

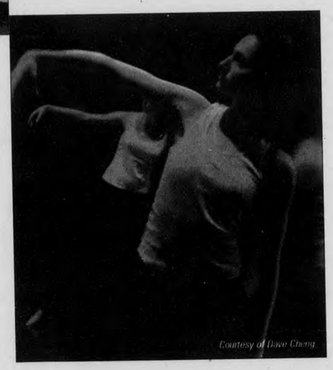
Senior dancers say farewell with a multiplicity of styles and rhythms at this year's spring concert

Courtesy of Dave Cheng

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian

Chris Stokes—The Bucknellian



Courtesy of Dave Cheng

By Ty Clark
Senior Writer

The Bucknell Dance Company (BDC) will perform its spring 2007 concert tonight and tomorrow, featuring choreography from a variety of sources. This show will include seniors who will be participating in their last show.

"It is very surreal to think that this is my last performance, possibly ever," BDC President Michelle Wirkus '07 said. "While I am ultimately excited to perform one last time in the beautiful Weis Center and to offer the audience an entertaining show, I am also filled with a sense of sadness that I may not be offered the same opportunities as I enter the next stages of my life."

Wirkus, like many other members of the company, has participated in the group for four years, and has noticed the ways her perspective has changed, both as the BDC President and as a University dancer.

"I have so many wonderful memories at Bucknell with BDC '07. As a senior, it is really cool to look back on my four years here at Bucknell and see how much I have changed and really grown as an individual and a dancer," Heather Esckilsen '07 said. "This last show is definitely going to be bittersweet."

Esckilsen was one of three seniors who choreographed routines for the show. Her piece, a tango featuring vibrant turquoise and lavender costumes, was inspired by Cirque du Soleil's "O" show, which she saw over winter break in Las Vegas.

"I decided to challenge myself to attempt to capture a bit of the unique 'Cirque du Soleil charm' in my piece for BDC's spring concert," Esckilsen said.

Uniqueness is not just the theme of the routine—it is one thing that constantly marks the dancers' repertoire for the event.

"'Eclectic' is the term I'd use," said Dustyn Martincich, a visiting professor of dance who has worked with BDC this semester.

"There's a little bit of everything for everyone," Yabei Chen '09 said. "A comedic ballet, a sexy tango, a fun Fosse jazz, an alluring contemporary—it brings such a variety and represents the seniors very well."

"Even though all the seniors have various dance talents, they are all equally amazing and each of their unique personalities will be missed," Chen said.

Another senior who will showcase his talent throughout the night is Jamie Haseltine '07. Haseltine dances in four pieces, including his own work, a piece inspired by legendary choreographer Bob Fosse.

"Fosse developed his own style, and I haven't done anything with a strong Fosse emphasis in four years, so some of the choreography became quite difficult," Haseltine said. "However, with three sections, a bit of comedy, and a lot of subtle Fosse movements, I'm very happy with how it turned out."

Haseltine also noted that there is a large jazz emphasis to the concert.

"Between my piece, Dustyn's piece, and Cathy Young's piece there are a lot of jazzy elements," he said.

The mood of the concert is reflected through the pieces. Opening with a dramatic classical score, there is a lot of energy in the dancing from the very start, and it continues all the way to the end of the program. The jazz songs fuel the choreography, never letting the tempo slide. As a result, the dances are very brisk; there is rarely a moment of rest for any performer in the middle of a routine.

"This style, an overwhelmingly physical and virtuosic one, really demonstrates and requires a sustained energy throughout," Wirkus said. "As a dancer, it requires an extreme level of endurance, but in light of that, it is sure to entertain and exhilarate the audience with its high intensity."

Instead of many slow, ballet-inspired movements, the dancers seem to be smoothing the corners off of lines. Quick motions, shoulder movements and general technicality to all the physical demands of the choreography keep every piece moving. And while some are more dramatic, such as the opener, arranged by Guest Choreographer Peter Anastos, many seem to be more pensive ruminations on the frantic pace of life.

The costume design reflects this as well. Black is often contrasted with white, turquoise is accented with other shades of green and lavender, and in Martincich's work, a variety of modern outfits contrast with each other in a fast-paced jazz piece using chairs and shoes.

Yet while the pace of the show is fast, it is instantly familiar.

"The average person who has never seen a dance performance should really enjoy this one as some types of modern dance that might make the audience feel strange are not too present," Haseltine said. "It's also a pretty feel-good show, not too much dark dancing or dark themes."

As a fellow senior, Wirkus hopes to finish her career well with a seniors-only piece choreographed by BDC alum Vita Lamberson '06.

"I just hope to leave the stage with a sense of accomplishment, knowing that I gave the audience the best performance I could have offered them, bringing some life and personality to each piece that I am in," Wirkus said.

The show will be performed at 8, April 27-28 in the Weis Center for the Performing Arts.

May 20, 2007

The Bucknellian

The weekly campus newspaper of Bucknell University

special graduation issue

K.I.T.

Worried about losing contact with college friends? The Alumni Relations office can help.

See page 8

On-campus supplement | Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue | www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian looking back . . . the past four years

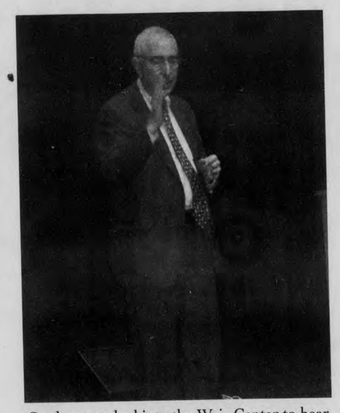
As members of the class of 2007 prepare for their futures, The Bucknellian revisits the people, places and things of the past.

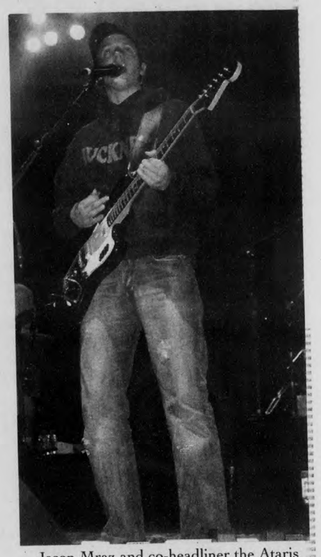
2003-2004

• • • freshman year • • •

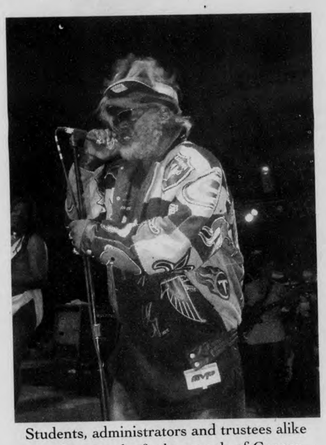
The Bucknell University Conservatives Club protested the new alcohol policy by organizing root beer pong on the uphill LC lawn Nov. 21, 2003.



Students packed into the Weis Center to hear a few wise words from multi-talented Ben Stein.



Jason Mraz and co-headliner the Ataris rocked Gerhard Fieldhouse at the Fall Concert.



Students, administrators and trustees alike got down to the funky sounds of George Clinton at Chrysalis.

The University said goodbye to Former President Steffen Rogers and his wife, Athena, when Rogers retired in the spring.

More than 500 students gathered in the LC Forum and the halls leading to the room on Nov. 19, 2003 to attend a forum about the emergency alcohol policy.

The Bucknellian

You've caught up on the last four years. See what unfolds in the next one.

Enclose this form and a check (made out to The Bucknellian) and mail it to:

The Bucknellian, Bucknell University C3952, 701 Moore Avenue, Lewisburg, PA 17837

Name _____ __ ONE YEAR: receive 24 issues for the academic year for only $45, a $15 savings!

Address _____

_____

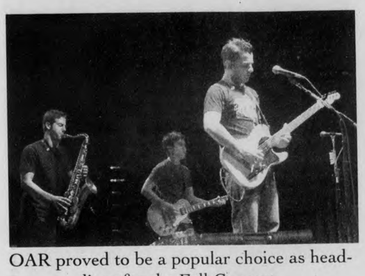
Phone _____ __ ONE SEMESTER: receive 12 issues during the fall or spring semester for $30. Please specify semester: _____

E-mail _____

For more information contact The Bucknellian at 570-577-1520 or bucknellian@bucknell.edu

2004-2005

• • • sophomore year • • •

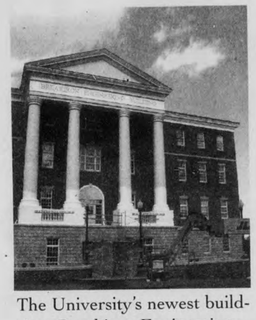


OAR proved to be a popular choice as headliner for the Fall Concert.

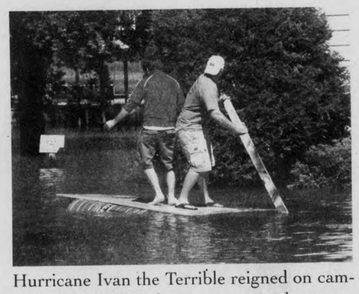
The University appointed Mary DeCredico '81 to the position of Provost.

The men's basketball team captured the Patriot League title and advanced to the second round of the NCAA Tournament.

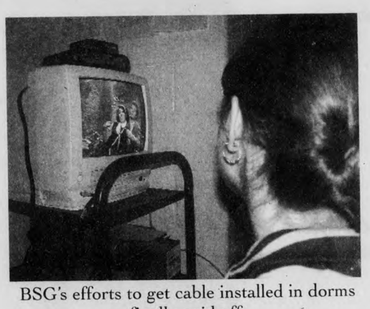
University President Brian Mitchell presented author Salman Rushdie with the Janet Weis Fellowship in Contemporary Letters.



The University's newest building, Breakiron Engineering, opened its doors in the fall.

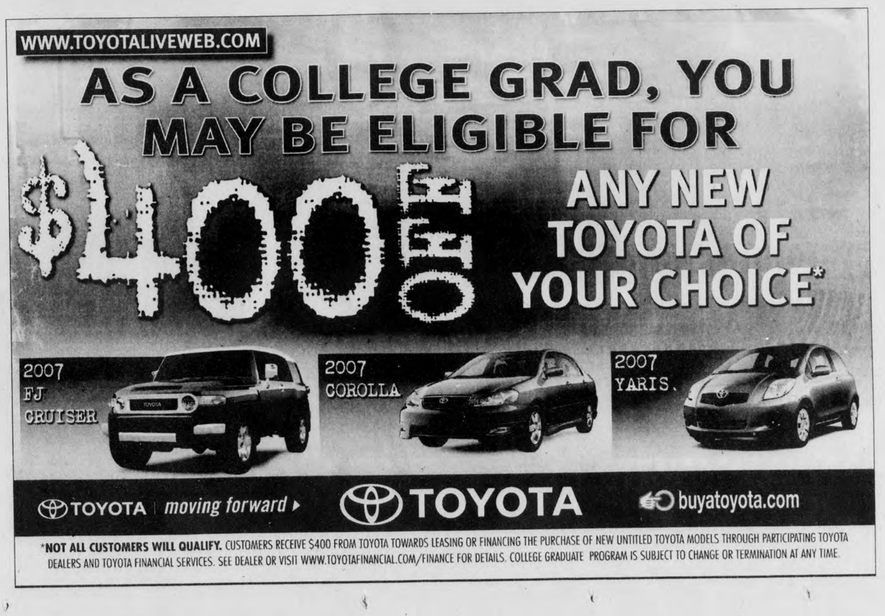


Hurricane Ivan the Terrible reigned on campus in fall 2004, forcing some students to evacuate their downtown houses.



BSG's efforts to get cable installed in dorms finally paid off.

Following Rogers' retirement, the University welcomed President Brian Mitchell and his wife, Mary Jane.



WWW.TOYOTALIVEWEB.COM
AS A COLLEGE GRAD, YOU MAY BE ELIGIBLE FOR $400 FED
ANY NEW TOYOTA OF YOUR CHOICE*
2007 FJ CRUISER
2007 COROLLA
2007 YARIS
TOYOTA | moving forward
TOYOTA
buyatoyota.com
*NOT ALL CUSTOMERS WILL QUALIFY. CUSTOMERS RECEIVE $400 FROM TOYOTA TOWARDS LEASING OR FINANCING THE PURCHASE OF NEW UNTITLED TOYOTA MODELS THROUGH PARTICIPATING TOYOTA DEALERS AND TOYOTA FINANCIAL SERVICES. SEE DEALER OR VISIT WWW.TOYOTAFINANCIAL.COM/FINANCE FOR DETAILS. COLLEGE GRADUATE PROGRAM IS SUBJECT TO CHANGE OR TERMINATION AT ANY TIME.

The Bucknellian
Founded in 1896 as The Orange and Blue

C-3952 Bucknell University
Lewisburg, Pa. 17837
(570) 577-1520
bucknellian@bucknell.edu
http://www.bucknell.edu/bucknellian

Contributors to the Graduation Issue:

Contributing Editors
Lily Beauvilliers '09
Nilanjana Saha '09
Michael Dippery '08
Molly Clay (grad)

Business Manager
Jared Napolitano '08

Advertising Managers
Meredith Reighard '07
Katie Casteel '08
Elaine Teng '09

Cartoonist
Juliana Su '09

Adviser
James F. Lee

Content and photos were gathered from the Bucknellian archives unless otherwise noted.

Op-Ed Policy

The editorials of The Bucknellian reflect the consensus of the Editorial Board as to the topics and general position. If a consensus could not be reached, the opinions expressed are those of the editor-in-chief. All other opinion material represents the views of the author and not necessarily those of The Bucknellian.

Letters to the editor must be received by noon on the Tuesday before publication. Letters may not be longer than 600 words and the Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny or edit any letter to the editor. Letters must contain the writer's name and phone number (used for verification purposes and not to be printed). Mail or e-mail letters using the addresses above.

Publishing Information

The Bucknellian is written, edited and published on 12 Fridays during each academic semester entirely by Bucknell students. All published material is chosen by the paper's Editorial Board without prior review by the Advisory Board, its adviser, the University or Bucknell Student Government.

Subscription Information

Subscriptions are available for $45 per year or $30 per semester. To subscribe, send payment and address information to: The Bucknellian Subscriptions, Bucknell University, Box C-3952, Lewisburg, Pa. 17837. Subscriptions are mailed first-class on the Monday of publication. Please send change-of-address information to the above location as well.

Members of the local community may pick up a complimentary issue each week, with the understanding of one free issue per person. If you would like more for a nominal fee, contact the print office.

Advertising Policy

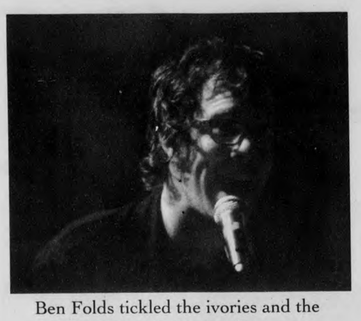
The Editorial Board of The Bucknellian reserves the right to deny any advertisements if deemed offensive, illegal or in bad taste. Advertisements reflect the opinion of the advertiser and not necessarily that of The Bucknellian. For advertising rates and information, please contact the advertising department at (570) 577-1085.

Copyright © 2007 The Bucknellian

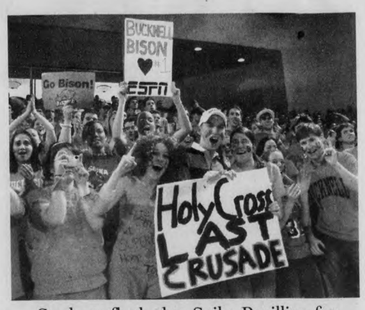
E-mail us your comments on our graduation issue. We appreciate your feedback.
bucknellian@bucknell.edu

2005-2006

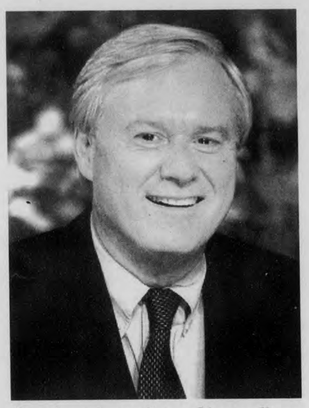
• • • junior year • • •



Ben Folds tickled the ivories and the audience at the Spring Concert.



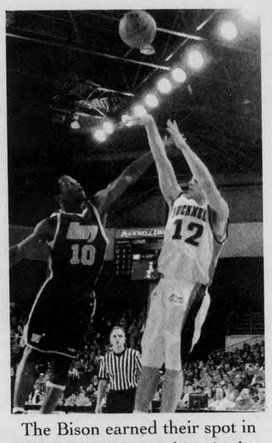
Students flocked to Sojka Pavillion for home basketball games and cheered on the Bison through the NCAA tournament.



Broadcast journalist and best-selling author Chris Matthews visited campus to speak on politics.

Fall Fest was headlined by singer-songwriter Josh Kelley, whose upbeat music had the crowd on their feet.

Members of Students for Fair Trade camped out to raise community awareness about poverty.



The Bison earned their spot in the spotlight by ranking in the Top 25 men's basketball teams in the nation for the first time in University history.

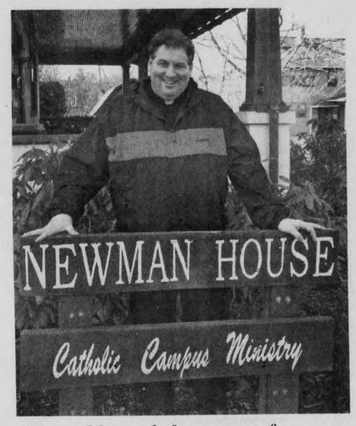
Pat Flannery, head men's basketball coach celebrated winning the patriot league championship.

Students assisted hurricane victims in Mississippi over winter break.

2006-2007

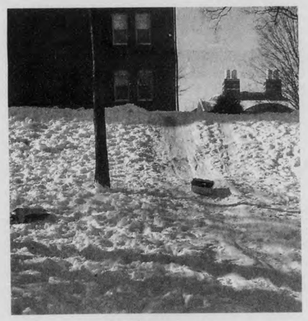
• • • senior year • • •

The University commemorated 9/11 five years after the attacks.



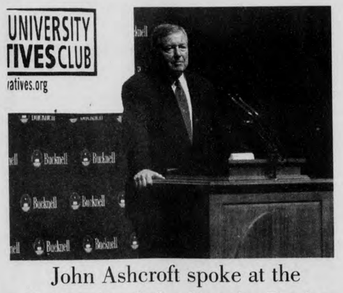
Marty Moran left campus for a top position in the national Catholic Campus Ministry.

Students performed the controversial German play "Spring Awakening," dealing with teenage sexuality.

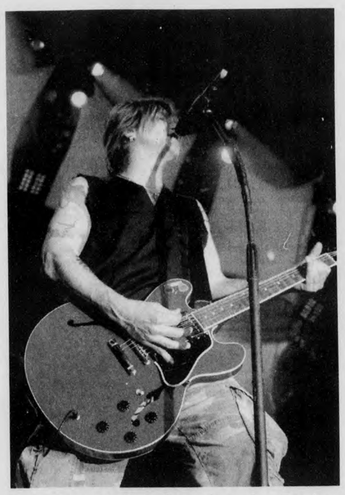


For the first time in recent memory, the University officially closed for a snow day.

Lewis Black entertained students with his politically minded humor.



John Ashcroft spoke at the University, defending the Patriot Act.



Goo Goo Dolls played at the Spring Concert.

Women's track won the Patriot League Championship for the sixth straight year.

Kanye played at Sojka Pavilion for the Fall Concert.

Saluting the Parents of the Class of 2007

It is with the highest gratitude that we recognize the parents of the Class of 2007, whose gifts help provide our students with the world-class educational experience that is Bucknell. As we approach the University's 157th commencement, the entire Bucknell community joins you in celebrating your senior's wonderful accomplishment.

The following parents have honored their students from the Class of 2007 through gifts to the University between July 1, 2006 and April 27, 2007.*

Daniel M. Abuhoff and Tamsen Granger in honor of Sadie Abuhoff
Robert G. and Monica Ahrens in honor of Gus
Belinda A. Anderson in honor of Britt
Donald N. and Jean Anderson in honor of Erik
Stewart K. and Lynn W. Anderson in honor of Russell
Ulysses A. and Bernice V. Andrews in honor of Samuel Steven R. and Laurie Anthony in honor of Michael Patrick F. and Patricia Archer in honor of Tara
Norman L. and Salita Armour in honor of Tiana
Theodore W. and Carol C. Arnold in honor of Will Peter K. and Christa Baltsch in honor of Elena Augustine
Antonio D. and Elenita A. Baccay in honor of Tanya
Edward R. Barnett and Janet Macnamara-Barnett in honor of Judith
Harry Bartley and Diane Klett in honor of Lauren Bartley
David A. and Anne E. Bastine in honor of Danielle
Cesar K. and Eliane Batista in honor of Guilherme
Dwight M. and Deborah Bayne in honor of Lauren
A. John and Bakki J. Becsey in honor of Joseph
Joan M. Bellistri in honor of Katy Simson
Russell C. '77 and Robin (Menzies) Bentzen '77 in honor of Laura Howard A. Berger '71 and Linda Goldsmith in honor of Ann Berger
Douglas R. and Patricia Bierbower in honor of Kurt Constance D. Biller in honor of Lindsey
Anthony and Kathleen Bisignano in honor of A. Bradford
Rudolph W. and Joanne Bohince in honor of Rudy
Robert A. and Ruth Bonelli in honor of Matthew Thomas W. and Donna Boruta in honor of David
K. Jan Bossart and Martha M. Vrana-Bossart in honor of Elliot Vrana
Roger E. and Pat Bove in honor of Jonna
Robert and Teresa Bowers in honor of Kelli
William C. Brady and Sandra A. Livingston-Brady in honor of Allison
Richard E. and Susan L. Brian in honor of Lauren
Michael C. and Linda Bricker in honor of William
Charles M. and Helene Bronfeld in honor of Traci
David B. and Elise Brown in honor of Sarah
Marvin T. and Tracy Bruen in honor of Matthew James W. and Carolyn E. Bryant in honor of Matthew Bernard L. and Phyllis Bush in honor of Jason
Roosevelt and Susan Bynum in honor of Amanda
Dale R. and Theresa Camens in honor of Sam
Kevin M. and Patricia Campbell in honor of Ryan
John D. and Meg Campoli in honor of Jaclyn
Robert F. and Carolyn Candela in honor of Kristen
Steven A. Cantner and Judith Shekmar in honor of Stephanie Cantner
Paul F. and Catherine Caroleo in honor of Mark
Peter D. '75 and Catherine E. Caruso in honor of Pamela
Mark S. Caughey in honor of Melanie
Milan and Nina Chakraborty in honor of Kiron
Marcel R. and Margaret Chandonnet in honor of Anne
Samuel G. and Caroline Chapin in honor of Megan
W. Y. and W. Y. Chen in honor of Shu
Joseph and Wendy (Dyson) '72 Clark in honor of Jacob
William J. and Sharon J. Clinton in honor of Victoria
H. Michael '74 and Linda Cohen in honor of Adam
Jeffrey R. and Denise C. Cohn in honor of Alan
Elliott M. and Barbara Coleman in honor of Craig
Robert E. and Judith Compton in honor of Lesley
Kenneth and Kathy J. Cooper in honor of Kristopher
Thomas S. and Cynthia L. Cosgrove in honor of Natalie Robert E. and Teresa Costa in honor of Matthew
William C. and Jill Costopoulos in honor of Callista
Albert W. and Melinda D. Courtney in honor of Tae
John S. and Pia S. Crandell in honor of Matthew Jeffrey J. Crooke in honor of Cody
Stuart F. '78 and Denise Cubbon in honor of Stuart
Stuart L. and Janet Cummings in honor of Jessica Nancy S. Curry in honor of Matthew
Walter E. and Deborah Curry in honor of Adam
John and Kathryn (Durfee) '80 D'Amanda in honor of Allis
Soleiman and Monique Darvish in honor of Philippe
Bradford R. Day and Rebecca Sapora-Day in honor of William Bart and Joyce De Gregorio in honor of Nicholas
John H. and Charlotte Dean in honor of John
Steven J. and Pamela DeFeo in honor of Nicholas
William J. and Janine DeMartini in honor of Lauren
Peter DeOteris and Marcia Herrera in honor of Alexander
Chester W. and Elizabeth Derbyshire in honor of Casey
Robert and Rita Detweiler in honor of James
Lawrence S. and elizabeth A. DeVan in honor of Elizabeth
Joseph J. and Susan E. Dezmin in honor of Joseph
Cathy E. Dietz in honor of Mark
Antonio and Rita Diez in honor of Brandon
James and Elizabeth DiMarco in honor of Christopher
Richard A. and Joan DiMichele in honor of Leslie
Michael I. and Patricia DiPaolo in honor of Jenna
James E. and Celeste D'Itri in honor of Elizabeth
Richard D. and Joyce J. Donovan in honor of Richard
Daniel L. and Carla d'Occhimont in honor of Charlotte
Debora A. Doty in honor of Ann
Michael A. and Katherine C. Doyle in honor of Kelly
W. Marks Dryden '70 and Yvonne Ericson-Dryden '70 in honor of Morgan
Michael and Jill Duncan in honor of Kelly
Peter and Andrea Dunlap in honor of Kimberly
Pierre C. and Mary D. duPont in honor of James
James E. and Karen M. Dusel in honor of Erik
David L. and Janet Dykstra in honor of Jeffrey
Joe D. and Jayne W. Edge in honor of Katherine
Brian M. and Margaret Egan in honor of Sean Sharron Eisenthal in honor of Andrew
J. Mark and Adelyn Elliott in honor of Adelyn
Susan K. Eveland in honor of Stevie
Michael A. Finio in honor of Benjamin
H. Robert and Laura E. Fischer in honor of Adrienne
Barry D. Fishkind and Judith Werbitt in honor of Loren Fishkind
Ronald G. and Sally Fleischer in honor of Allison
Michael S. and Nancy Foley in honor of Erin
Charles M. and Nancy Forys in honor of Matthew Giuliano and Lorraine Francisconi in honor of Ariana
James W. and Linda Fredrickson in honor of Katherine
David C. and Rosann Fry in honor of Gregory
Kathryn A. Fuhrer in honor of Charles
Daniel G. and Roseana R. Fullmer in honor of Anastacia
Mark A. Gasarch and Gail Hart in honor of Shira Gasarch
Thomas A. and Maria Gasewicz in honor of Adam
James M. Gerson and Debra Shein-Gerson in honor of Alex
John T. and Elizabeth Gianis in honor of Christin
Deborah Giannone in honor of James
Philip T. and Judy H. Gilbert in honor of Caitlin
Raymond E. '77 and Mary (Carter) '77 Ginn in honor of Raymond
David and Karen Glazer in honor of Anne
Michael B. and Jean Goldstein in honor of Jenna
Joyce Gommel in honor of Katie
Lawrence Gommel in honor of Katie
David F. and M. Diane Good in honor of Megan
Jane R. Goodman in honor of Alexander
George J. '74 and Deborah (Scott) '74 Grabowski in honor of Karen
Robert T. and Lyndle C. Gradoville in honor of Robert Hans U. and Bonnie J. Grap in honor of Marjorie Laurence P. Greenberg and Deborah Shipkin in honor of Daniel Greenberg
Jennifer S. Griffin in honor of Daniel
John T. Groendyke in honor of Emily
George E. and Pamela Grossmann in honor of Amanda
Judith A. Gruseck in honor of Rebecca
Eva J. Guarino in honor of Karen
Laura Haferd in honor of Robert
Roger C. and Kendra (Asplundh) '80 Haines in honor of Robert
Jack and Susan M. Hall in honor of Kerri
Ronald A. and Rhonda B. Hall in honor of Angie
Bret L. Halpern and Kimiko Ishiguro in honor of Aaron Halpern
Ira J. and Mary Hanlon in honor of Megan
Mark and Susan Harabedian in honor of Laura David H. and Lois J. Harbison in honor of Eric
Kenneth H. and Jennifer Harrison in honor of Gillian David M. and Patricia Hart in honor of Kathleen Bruce P. and Sandra Hartshorn in honor of Ian
Robert and Kristine Hatch in honor of Benjamin
Dan Henry and Sunny Lindamood in honor of Christine Henry
Patrick W. and Doreen M. Henson in honor of Christopher Robyn S. Hescock in honor of Brian Matthews
Robert A. and Sheila A. Hesser in honor of Matthew Jerry L. and Shirley A. Hetrick in honor of Chelsea
James H. and Mary Heverling in honor of Catherine
Nathan D. and Linda Hicks in honor of Daniel
Steven E. and Elizabeth Hirsch in honor of Michael David A. and Mona Hoadley in honor of Travis
Jed S. and Kim Hoffer in honor of Joel
Daniel L. and Marcia (Kutz) M'89 Hoffman in honor of Tyler
Charles H. '78 and Gay (Fischetti) '78 Hollowell in honor of Jonathon
Gina K. Holzman in honor of Edward Steven D. Holzman in honor of Edward Ronald and Bette Horner in honor of Allison
William and Rebecca Hoover in honor of Nathaniel
John and Pat Horn in honor of Justin Ceil W. Horowitz in honor of Mattan
Wen Chow and Shuet Ming Hou in honor of Chia Yi
James J. and Mary Houlihan in honor of James
Kevin D. and Elizabeth Howard in honor of Kathryn
James V. '74 and Ellen (Mitchell) '76 Hughes in honor of Bryan
Geoffrey R. and Patricia L. Hurd in honor of Emily
Barry L. and Marilyn Hurley in honor of Colin Laurence J. Hutt in honor of Amanda
John U. Ingard and Anne Roberts-Ingard in honor of Benjamin
Louis P. and Elaine Ioanilli in honor of Tamara
John V. and Patricia Irion in honor of Hannah
Dermod and Jane H. Ives in honor of Todd
Boris G. and Susan Ivovich in honor of Daniel
Louis F. and Cheryl L. James in honor of Jennifer
William A. and Margaret Jensen in honor of Elizabeth
Gerald E. and Cynthia Johnson in honor of Emily
Kenneth K. and Pamela G. Kalapay in honor of Daniel
Thomas J. and Karen Kalinske in honor of Ashley
David J. and Deborah W. Kalman in honor of Meredith
David G. and Gail Kapson in honor of Dustin
Roger G. and Mary H. Kathol in honor of Austin
Mark C. and Paula Kaufman in honor of Peter
Richard C. and Charlene Keen in honor of Jeremy
H. Kenneth and Kathy Keener in honor of Kaley
James and Bronwen (Barry) '74 Kelly in honor of Peter
Kenan and Veronica Kelly in honor of Lauren
Bradford S. and Mina Kerr in honor of Haley
Dongsoo and Miae Kim in honor of Narae
Cyndie A. King in honor of Erica
David C. and Patricia King in honor of Victoria
Phillip N. '75 and Leigh (Miller) '76 Kirchner in honor of Kelly
Andrew J. '76 and Cheryl (Black) '78 Kisiday in honor of Tricia
Edwin L. '57 and Janis Klett in honor of Kirklin
Duane L. and Cathleen Kling in honor of Katrina
Thomas A. and Christine M. Kobus in honor of Christy
Richard E. '69 and Christine S. Koch in honor of David
James R. and Christel Kohler in honor of Mark
David N. and Karen Konker in honor of Neal
William G. '61 and Shauna Kopit in honor of Laurgn
David H. and Rachel Koppenhaver in honor of Kristen
James F. and Maureen H. Kosa in honor of Jay
Martha M. Koscinski in honor of Emily Groendyke
Michael R. and Patricia Kremer in honor of Lauren
Richard and Elizabeth (Haak) '73 Krochalis in honor of Joanne
Theodore G. and Olga Kulczycky in honor of Danylo
John F. and Megan Kuntz in honor of Caitlyn
Donald and Nina Kurtz in honor of Sarah
Jacqueline P. Kyzmir in honor of Alexandra
Peter J. Kyzmir in honor of Alexandra
Joseph E. '76 and Katherine (Winters) '77 LaBarca in honor of Russell
Arthur LaFrance and Margaret S. Rowland in honor of Meagan
John C. and Dawn Lambert in honor of Joseph
J. Willard and Yvonne Landis in honor of Michael Kenneth J. and Patricia A. Latzy in honor of Sarah
Albert and Cynthia Lemieux in honor of Brenna
Bruce W. and Beth W. Lesko in honor of Julie Leonard H. and Susan Levitt in honor of Michael Edward D. and Bess Lewis in honor of Molly
John V. Linetty '71 and Jill D. Adams M'84 in honor of John Linetty
Randall C. and Lorrie Litts in honor of Lauren
James R. and Sally Lutz in honor of Anne
David F. and Barbara MacInnes in honor of Gavin
Bruce J. and Nancy Magee in honor of Jacqueline
Chester K. and Denise Maleszewski in honor of Chester
Carmine C. and Janie Marchioli in honor of Carlo
Joel and Rochelle Margolis in honor of Jennifer Marianne E. Markey in honor of Douglas
Thomas G. and Barbara Marquis in honor of Philip Frederick F. and Linda J. Martin in honor of Jeffrey
Reed K. Maryott in honor of Lacey
Joseph B. and Norma Mateer in honor of Marcus
Stanley W. Mathes and Janice Terry-Mathes in honor of Kevin
Walter T. and Deborah A. Mayo in honor of Daniel
James G. and Ellen McCormick in honor of Megan
Jody and Diane M. McCourt in honor of Amanda Forsburg
Paul J. and Suzanne McGuire in honor of Michael John A. and Diane McLaughlin in honor of Kyle
John G. '76 and Holliday McManigal in honor of Michael Stephen R. and Barbara Means in honor of Kyle Sidney N. and Catherine Mendelsohn in honor of David
Donald and Tamara Mikolasy in honor of Taylor
Thomas and Sandra Miller in honor of Matthew
Robert D. and Lisa Mino in honor of Melissa
Jeffrey R. and Allison Mirkin in honor of Stephanie Barry B. and Susan Mittag in honor of Nathan Van and Barbara Mlynarski in honor of Laura Matthew R. and Marianne Moeller in honor of Daniel
George A. and Estrella Molinet in honor of Michael Donald H. and Kim L. Monteverde in honor of Danielle
David E. and Kathleen E. Moran in honor of Kyle
George and Susan (Nielsen) '68 Morrison in honor of Peter
Deborah Mukrone in honor of Meghan
Susan M. Mulloy in honor of Megan
Dennis M. and Amy Munson in honor of Katherine
Anne Murphy in honor of Douglas
Thomas J. and Ellen Murray in honor of Patricia Mark L. and Jamie Myers in honor of David
Jeff and Wendy Nach in honor of Ryan
Kenneth R. Nadler '77 in honor of Kathryn
Gary P. Nastase in honor of Leanna
Deborah W. Neff in honor of Garrett
Wheeler K. '70 and Carol Neff in honor of Garrett
Karen J. Nelson in honor of Merete
Robert P. and Wenonah (Huston) '78 Nelson in honor of Alexander
William A. and Darlene Newhard in honor of William
Austin S. and Yei-Hei Ni in honor of Cynthia
Leon M. and Ann Niebrzydowski in honor of Michael Stephen P. Neimczyk and Jeanette Abboud-Niemczyk in honor of Stefan
Charles W. and Deborah J. North in honor of Christopher Richard R. and Linda N. Northrop in honor of Heather
Peter D. Novotny in honor of Nicholas
Jan P. and Jerryvonne Nyrop in honor of Jason
Deborah (Jacobs) '73 Oberst in honor of Kevin and Leigh Allen
JoAnn O'Brien in honor of Darcy
Thomas P. '75 and Cheryl A. O'Hara in honor of Meghan
John W. and Virginia W. O'Leary in honor of John
John V. and Kristie Olsen in honor of Lauren
Paul and Patricia O'Neill in honor of Steven
James G. '75 and Nancy Orbison in honor of Ryan
James A. '76 and Barbara (Stoudt) '76 O'Rourke in honor of Matthew Thomas B. and Maryellen O'Rourke in honor of Bryan
David E. and Martha Osborn in honor of Deborah James R. Ostroski and Denise Pauser-Ostroski in honor of Cassandra
James L. and Kathleen Otway in honor of Devin
Nicholas and Lynne Paindiris in honor of Charles
George V. and June Palomba in honor of Jennifer
James M. and Nancy Palumbo in honor of Tyler
Jeannette R. Papciak in honor of Lauren
James N. and Patricia Paprocki in honor of Neil
Thomas E. '76 and Nancy (Henshall) '77 Patton in honor of Brittany
Charles R. and Patti Penwill in honor of Charles
Richard and Margo Perl in honor of Emily
Gary M. and Lois N. Pess in honor of Matthew Stephen C. and Beth Pickard in honor of Colin Gerard J. and Donna J. Pierotti in honor of Rebecca
Thomas C. and Susan Porter in honor of Kelly
William H. and Mary Ann Portman in honor of Benjamin
Robert S. '75 and Jill (Campana) '76 Potdevin in honor of Lauren Bartley
Laurence O. and Beverly U. Pratt in honor of Leigh
Todd T. and Ellen Pretz in honor of Kimberly
Allen R. and Cynthia N. Purdy in honor of Megan
James A. and Anna Marie Quinn in honor of Kevin Maripat J. Quinn in honor of Alexandra
Richard S. '74 and Johanna (Crawford) '74 Rakauskas in honor of Ryan
Robert N. and Gale Read in honor of Kendra
Timothy E. and Rebecca Reighard in honor of Meredith
Keith W. '73 and Annette Reitz in honor of Trevor
Heinz A. and Robin A. Retzlaff in honor of Jesse Retzlaff
Michael C. Reynolds and Kathleen Conners in honor of Kara Reynolds
Curt G. Riebeling in honor of Heather
J. Edward and Janet Riggs in honor of Brian
Donald S. and Nancy I. Rimai in honor of Benjamin
Paul E. and Leni R. Roberts in honor of Laura Jack E. and Susan Robinson in honor of Sean
Neil E. Rockwell in honor of Jeffrey
Mark E. and Kelly Rosendale in honor of Kyle
Paul A. and Sandi Rosso in honor of Michael Elizabeth Y. Rump in honor of Adelaide
Brian K. and Karen S. Ruppert in honor of Nathaniel
Rolf and Katherine Rupprecht in honor of Dominic
Edmund and Kathleen Saunders in honor of Eileen
Robert E. and Barbara Savron in honor of Beth Mike J. and Patricia Sawko in honor of Christa
William S. and Elizabeth B. Sayen in honor of Elizabeth and Margaret
H. William '73 and Kathleen F. Schaaf in honor of William Valentine H. and Mary A. Schaeffer in honor of Andrew
Kenneth E. and Barbara Scheffler in honor of Rebecca Christopher G. and Dudley Schipper in honor of Oliver
Val A. and Juliana L. Schissler in honor of Valerie
David H. and Dayna Schlang in honor of Teri
Peter and Agnes Schlanger in honor of Rita
Clarence T. and Dawn Schmitz in honor of Geoffrey
Mary A. Schmitz in honor of Geoffrey
Bruce E. and Donna L. Schneider in honor of Kristi
John J. and Maria Schneider in honor of John
Norman L. and Margaret Schroeder in honor of Amanda and Dustin
Bruce C. '72 and Kathy Schuessler in honor of Allisori
Robert E. and Patricia Schwarz in honor of Timothy
Thomas R. and Ester Seawright in honor of Jacqueline
James R. and Leslie M. Sebo in honor of Stephen
Gary K. and Janet S. Segall in honor of Marc
Jeffrey Y. and Jenelle Selleck in honor of Brody
Steven S. and Amy Seltzer in honor of Adam
Chester A. and Elizabeth Shadle in honor of Susan
Jeffrey L. and Joan Shafer in honor of Lauren
Helen M. Shafir in honor of Gil
S. Fred and Vivien Shahrabani in honor of Jonathan
Jacques and Louise Shapiro in honor of Holly
David Shepstone and Jo Ellen Krumm in honor of Ellen Shepstone
Dwight W. and Patricia A. Sherbondy in honor of Angela
Robert B. and Nancy Shoemaker in honor of Patrick
Bruce R. and Chyrill E. Simpson in honor of Bruce
Thomas H. and Dorothy Sirolly in honor of Benjamin
Steve F. and Diane Sivak in honor of Jacob
James G. and Claire N. Skidmore in honor of Matthew Brian C. and Elaina Skovira in honor of Alexandra
Nancy L. Smodic in honor of John
Edward L. and Lisane Snyder in honor of Alan Dennis J. and Nancy L. Soberl in honor of Ryan
G. John and Mary Sowyrda in honor of Gregory
James G. and Sally Stansik in honor of Paul
David A. and Diane Staph in honor of Lauren
David M. and Pamela Steighner in honor of Melisa
Alan M. and Carolyn Stern in honor of Jonathan
Gary M. and Deborah K. Stevens in honor of Jennifer
Robert M. and Mary P. Stewart in honor of Eleanor Jay M. Straight and Alexandra E. Johnson in honor of Adam Straight
John K. and Crystal E. Sullivan in honor of Mallory
John A. and Ellen Surdo in honor of Alexandra
John J. and Cathy Sweeney in honor of Mallory
David A. and Gale Sydlowski in honor of Kristen
Stephen and Kathleen Szwec in honor of Stephen
Edward V. and Odette Tarlecky in honor of Rachel Bradford and Cynthia Thiel in honor of Emily
Claudette A. Thompson in honor of Jonathan
Judson H. and Karen C. Thuerk in honor of Lindsay
John and Merrianne Timko in honor of John
Raymond D. and Diane Topkis in honor of Zachary
Phong N. and Le Thi Kim Tran in honor of Chinh
Athanosios and Haralambra Tsombanos in honor of Vasiliki
Roy P. and Denise Vaccaro in honor of Lisa
Peter W. '78 and Mischelle VanBuskirk in honor of Kyle Donald L. and Barbara L. Vanden Brook in honor of Sarah
Peter J. and Jane Verderame in honor of Thomas
Edward V. and Beverley C. Vienckowski in honor of Alexander
Frederick H. and Catherine Waddell in honor of Charles Charles J. Wagner '76 in honor of Charles
John L. and Nancy Wagner in honor of Thomas
Grace Wakulchik in honor of Anna
Grace Wakulchik in honor of Carolyn
Louise A. Wakulchik in honor of Anna and Carolyn
S. David Wakulchik in honor of Anna and Carolyn
R. Curtis and Theresa C. Waligura in honor of Megan
Thomas P. and Connie M. Walk in honor of Thomas
Susan E. Walsh in honor of Cynthia
Leroy E. Watson and Terry Ann Wise-Watson in honor of Dana Wayne B. and Darlene Weidner in honor of Darren
David A. and Judith Weinberg in honor of Adam
Albert A. and Roseanne Weinstein in honor of Erin and Shauna
John D. and Rita Whitler in honor of Melissa Anselmo
Gordon T. and Nan Wilcox in honor of Mara
Mark D. Winer and Bette Winer in honor of Daniel
Jeffrey M. and Deborah Witmer in honor of John
Francis E. and Diane Wolf in honor of Stephen
Richard C. and Frances Wolf in honor of David
Chris J. and Janet Wright in honor of Tracey
Dennis R. Yastro in honor of Erin
William B. and Gay Yeatts in honor of Andrew
Kenneth E. and Lisa E. Yingling in honor of Jenna
Michael G. and Georgiana Yingling in honor of Michael Zi Ren Yuan and Mu Li Huang in honor of Jia Lin
Joseph and Elizabeth Zarko in honor of Beth Ann
Bernard B. and Jennifer Zielinski in honor of Rachel

*There is still time to support Bucknell's Parents Fund by making your gift online at www.bucknell.edu/x1001.xml. Please call 577-3125 regarding corrections or additions to this list.

Fun facts about Woodward

Bob Woodward, the guru of investigative journalism and commencement speaker at this year's graduation, has won nearly every American journalism award, including two Pulitzer prizes for the Washington Post for his reporting of the Watergate scandal and Sept. 11 aftermath. But here are some things you might not know about Woodward.

1. Woodward first met "Deep Throat," now known to be Mark Felt, a former top FBI official, in a waiting room in the west wing of the White house. Woodward, then a Navy Lieutenant was bringing documents to the White house for the chief of naval operations. "We had two connections—graduate work at [George Washington University] and work with elected representatives from our home states," Woodward wrote in a Washington Post article in 2005.

Courtesy of the Office of Communications

2. In 1970 after being discharged from the Navy, Woodward was given a two-week trial at the Washington Post and was turned down afterwards due to lack of experience in journalism. None of the dozen stories he wrote during those two weeks was published.

3. Woodward turned down Harvard Law School in 1970 to work at the Montgomery Sentinel, a small weekly newspaper in Maryland for $115 a week.
—Washingtonpost.com

4. Woodward and Bernstein sold their Watergate archives, including notes, interviews with anonymous sources and fan mail to University of Texas for $5 million.
—Dailytexanonline.com

5. Woodward has published 11 non-fiction bestsellers and is currently the assistant managing editor of the Washington Post.

6. As a teenager, Woodward worked as the janitor in his father's office.
—Washingtonian.com.

7. Woodward is married to a writer for the New Yorker, Elsa Walsh, and has two daughters.

Weekend Calendar

Friday, May 18
5 p.m.
Shabbat Services, Berelson Center
9—11 p.m.
Presidential Wine and Cheese Reception, under the tent on Sojka Pavilion lawn
11 p.m.
Fireworks, viewing from Sojka Pavilion lawn

Saturday, May 19
10 a.m.
President's Senior Awards Ceremony, Rooke Chapel (reception immediately following)
1 p.m.
ROTC Commissioning Ceremony
Bucknell Hall (reception immediately following)
1—4 p.m.
Departmental Receptions
4:30 p.m.
Catholic Mass, Rooke Chapel (reception immediately following)
7:30—8:30p.m.
Inter-religious Baccalaureate (tickets required), Weis Center for the Performing Arts
9 p.m.
Senior Class Candlelighting Ceremony, Academic Quadrangle
9:30—midnight
Commencement Celebration, under the tent on Sojka Pavilion lawn

Sunday, May 20
8 a.m.
Protestant Worship Service, Rooke Chapel
10 a.m.
Commencement, Academic Quadrangle Rain location—Gerhard Fieldhouse
4 p.m.
Catholic Mass, Rooke Chapel

My Favorite Mistake

A very special graduation edition

By Michael Dippery
Contributing Editor

When I was asked to contribute a piece for the graduation issue of The Bucknellian, I leapt at the opportunity to resuscitate my old column from its semester-long hiatus. And what better time to bring back an analysis of past mistakes but graduation, when outgoing seniors are all but cleansed of their collegiate sins before moving on to that which naïve underclassmen like myself refer to as "the real world"?

For the average graduate, it has no doubt been a tempestuous four years at the University. S/he came into the University perhaps not knowing who s/he was, and in four years came out a stronger, more confident person. Along the way, s/he likely made a few mistakes. Maybe there was the occasional final or two that tripped him/her up, or maybe there was an underage drinking citation after a night of raucous partying. Maybe s/he even did something really crazy, like getting a tattoo of unknown Chinese characters on his/her bicep.

But now graduation is upon us, and students are absolved of these transgressions. Those final grades do not matter anymore—you have already been accepted into grad school or taken a job. That alcohol violation is moot—here at the University, we live in a utopian culture in which insignificant misdemeanors do not leave the "Bubble." And that Chinese tattoo? Well, that can always be removed with the help of a laser and a few thousand dollars.

Of course, not all mistakes should be forgotten. More often than not, mistakes make for excellent learning experiences, and that is why we come to university, is it not? There is certainly a lot of learning to be done by attending lectures, going to labs, and reading books, but spending four years at a university is not only about academic learning in the classroom. There is a lot to be learned from "extracurricular" activities, as well.

But I would be making a mistake in assuming that no one else has realized these points, and that I am stating something new. I am not. Certainly these points need reiteration from time to time, especially with the minds of graduates on myriad other things—the future being but one of them. Graduation, though, is an ideal time to reexamine the past, for both memories made and lessons learned, and reorient yourself on the next phase of your life.

Hopefully, this weekend's crop of fresh graduates will look forward with bright eyes at the path yet to be taken, but not forget how they arrived there in the first place.

Have a wonderful summer!

—The Bucknellian Staff

For Rent: One bedroom (available May 1st / $450/mo.) and three bedroom (available June 1st / $900/mo.) apartments
-One year lease-
Rent includes: High-speed internet.
Walk/bike distance from Bucknell.
Parking included.
212 Market St. Call 570-419-7643

Red Smoked BBQ!
Beef Brisket, Pork, Chicken, Ribs!
Sandwiches, Wraps, Salads, Platters!
NO RESERVATIONS NEEDED
Call in for TAKEOUT
SKEETERS PIT BBQ
ON THE BLUFF OVERLOOKING THE SCENIC SUSQUEHANNA RIVER
AT THE INTERSECTION OF ROUTES 11 & 15 SHAMOKIN DAM
570.743.2727
Daily 11:00am - 10:00pm
Sundays till 9:00pm
www.skeetersBBQ.com

Steiningers Laundry & Dry Cleaning
230 N 7th St
Lewisburg, PA 17837
570-374-4496
M-F 7:30AM-5:30PM
Sat 8:00AM-1:00PM
-Drive-thru
-Wash and Fold Services
-Pick-up and Delivery
Doing business since 1955
COUPON
Bring in formal wear, and receive $2.00 OFF additional dry cleaning!

Looking back

senior memories

The Bucknellian asked Seniors about their undergraduate memories and their feelings about graduation

Jeff Ultee

Fondest memory: "Waking up on Valentine's Day, also my birthday, to find out that classes were actually cancelled."

Thoughts on graduating: "I am happy to be finished with school and to be moving on with my life, but I am also sad to be leaving such a beautiful place and the people that I know."

Zoey Lu

Fondest memory: "My dearest Bucknell memory was the first day I transferred to Bucknell University. Paula and other students from International Student Services were helping me to adjust to the new environment patiently."

Thoughts on graduating: "Finishing up final Bucknell classes was sad but exciting because that means I will start a new chapter in life and I really anticipate the coming years."

Chet Maleszewski

Fondest memory: "Watching the basketball team in the NCAA tournament."

Thoughts on graduating: "I am certainly going to miss Bucknell."

Kate Ballantine

Fondest memory: "My daily activities, from running around Lewisburg with the track team to caring for 53 chickens to working countless hours at the Weis Center. I have met some truly amazing people and I have learned more than I can imagine."

Thoughts on graduating: "The idea of finishing up classes is still surreal to me. It is bittersweet in the purest sense of the word."

Jon Backhaus

Fondest memory: "Beyond Unison, from conception to the present, and as I await to hear about her bright future."

Thoughts on graduating: "A great relief (I'm an Electrical Engineer). I have a beautiful apartment and a great job; I look forward to life beyond the bubble."

Katie Klinger

Fondest memory: "My dearest Bucknell memory would have to be following the Candlelighting Ceremony during Orientation in Fall 2006. I've been involved in Orientation each year at Bucknell and it has been one of the most rewarding experiences of my life."

Thoughts on graduating: "Finishing up classes is somewhat a relief. It's the discussions and the insight of my peers and professors that I will miss."

Alex Keller

Fondest memory: "The fall semester of my senior year I took advanced conducting with Dr. William Payn and had the opportunity to conduct a great group of volunteer singers as well as working with a great professor and mentor."

Thoughts on graduating: "While it is a relief to finally finish college, the future holds uncertain possibilities, which can be frightening and exhilarating at the same time."

Keeping in touch

how the University can help

By Molly Clay
Chief Copy Editor

As friends and classmates disperse after graduation, keeping in touch can become a challenging task. Despite the avenues technology has afforded us, the natural fluctuations in life can impede our ability to connect with one another. New jobs and e-mail accounts, cell phone numbers and mailing addresses often create breaches in friendships. But staying in touch is not impossible. Here are a few suggestions that might help sustain many University friendships and connections.

MySpace and Facebook are two popular Web sites graduates might use to keep up with friends. Both are easily accessible and many graduates already use the sites to talk to friends, share information and keep in contact.

A less public route to take involves maintaining updated information with the University Alumni Relations office. Responsible for encouraging an active alumni network, Alumni Relations provides graduates with an alumni e-mail address and is in the process of establishing a myBucknell portal for alumni that would allow them to search through an online alumni directory. The directory allows alumni to maintain contact information, submit to Bucknell World and set-up an e-mail forwarding service.

Laura Denbow, executive director of alumni relations and career services, said that the best way to keep in touch with the University after graduation is by "making sure we [Alumni Relations] have current contact information, and letting us know how you want to be kept in touch with."

Denbow said that 300 students participated in this year's senior survey, which will allow graduates' new contact information to be shared with others in their class.

If possible, another great way to catch up with old friends is to actually visit the campus at Homecoming. The fun festivities of the weekend provide a great atmosphere for bumping into old friends and catching up on favorite memories, in addition to exchanging contact information.

Similarly, the Reunion Weekend in late spring provides an opportunity to run into former classmates and renew old relationships.

If you aren't able to visit the University, Alumni Relations has about 25 clubs established around the country and 15 clubs established internationally. The clubs help University alumni get together in their new geographic location and participate in various events, whether it be volunteering or attending a baseball game.

Keeping in touch can be challenging, but there are many outlets available to sustain contact with former classmates and friends. Throughout the many changes that life will bring, maintaining a few regular bases will always help to keep a strong network of friends and acquaintances.

Illustrations by Juliana Su